The like is in the next Section produced out of Irenæus l. 3. c. 3. concerning the Angel of the Church of Smyrna. Irenæus lived in the time of Polycarp that antient Primitive Martyr, and being a youth had the honour to see that venerable old Man, and of him he affirms, that he was * not only a Disciple of the Apostles, and converst with many that saw Christ, but that also he was sent to Asia, and constituted Bishop in the Church of Smyrna; And if there needed any more light after so clear and authentick a testimony (which again concludes either Polycarp, or some predecessor of his, to be the Angel of the Church of Smyrna, to whom Christ addresseth his Epistle) there is another added out of Tertullian, a Writer of great Antiquity and reputation for knowledge in the Records of the Church, in these words; † As the Church of Smyrna relates Polycarp to have been constituted there by John, as the 11.

Church

Church of Rome affirms Clement to have been ordained by Peter, so in like manner the rest of the Churches exhibite the Records of those whom they have had their Bishops constituted by the Apostles and conveyers of the Apostolical seed to them. And more particularly of the Churches of Asia, the subject of our present discourse, * We have the Churches fed by John, and the course of Bishops being driven to the Original, acknowledge John (the Apostle) to be the Author of them. Here certainly is light enough to make some confidence excusable in a Prelatist, and to make his wonder seasonable, that any that have eyes, should in so clear a sunshine want the use of them, and to think it no very auspicious omen that they do. Yet because I had much rather assist, than upbraid other mens infirmities, I have here given them an instance, how easie it had been for them to have informed themselves and their respective charges, of the grounds of the Prelatists confidence, that the Epistle of Christ to the Angels of the seven Asian Churches was an evidence of his approbation of the Order of Bishops, in our modern notion of that word for a single overseer in every Church.

* Habemus Johannis alumnas Ecclesias— Ordo Episcoporum ad originem recensus in Johannem stabit author. Adv. Marc. l. 4. c. 5.

12. And if there be any obscurity still remaining in the premises, because the Council of Chalcedon (and Polycrates) makes Timothy, who was ordained by Paul the first Bishop or Angel of the Church of Ephesus, but Tertullian devolves the Original of the course or Catalogue to S^t John; the answer is easie, that there were two sorts of Christians in Ephesus, and throughout all Asia, the first of Gentile converts, brought into the faith by S^t Paul the Apostle of the Gentiles, and over them it was that Timothy was by him placed in Ephesus their Bishop; the second of Jewish Proselytes converted by S^t John (by compact designed to go to the Jews, as his Province, Gal. 2. 9. and those peculiarly the Asian Jews, as appears every where in † Eusebius's story, and by the relation of his death in that place, given us by * Polycrates, an early Bishop there) and the Author of the constitution out of an antient tradition tells us that another of the same name, (Ἰωάννης ὁ καθ' ἡμᾶς Ἰωάννου κεχειροτονημένος) was by that Apostle ordained Bishop of the Jewish Christians there, as Timothy by S^t Paul of the other Congregation of Gentile Christians. An observation which is largely deduced and exemplified in the † Dissertations, and of which there is no small use for the dilucidating of obscurities in antient story, and the clearing of this Controversie betwixt us and the Presbyterians; but I must not here take liberty to inlarge on it unnecessarily, having been thus far forced to expatiate somewhat above proportion to the length of their own period, wherein my confidence and censoriousness were shortly accused; how deservedly I hope hath now been made manifest.

SECT. II.

Of Timothy, of Onesimus, of Polycarp.

Numb. 1. THE next period in their charge against me runs thus: It is farther added, that some of the Antient Fathers mention the very men that were the Angels of those Churches. Some say Timothy was Bishop of Ephesus, when John wrote his Epistle to it; others say Onesimus, others say that Polycarp was Bishop of Smyrna: And from hence they conclude with a great deal of plausibility, that the Angels of the Churches were seven individual Bishops.

2. Here is as yet no great charge offered, but a confession rather, that I had some temptation for the confidence, of which I was formerly accused, my conclusion being acknowledged by the adversaries to be inferred with a great deal of plausibility. But I have not so much reason to depend on their civilities, as to omit the inserting here, what may be useful to prevent mistakes, and shall therefore think it necessary to set down intirely, what it is which I have affirmed in this matter.

3. And 1. I have yet no where said that Timothy was Bishop of Ephesus when John writ this Epistle to that Church; my words are expresly otherwise, Ex quibus patet vel Timotheum ipsum, vel aliquem ei succedaneum, hunc ipsum Angelum fuisse, quem c. 2. 1. Christus alloquitur. By which it appears (having formerly set down my grounds to induce this conclusion) that either Timothy himself, or some body that succeeded him, was that very Angel to whom Christ addrest his speech, c. 2. 1. But that is not to affirm it of Timothy, but purposely to abstain from affirming any thing that could be denyed or doubted, and only to affirm it either of Timothy or some successor of his, which evidently and infallibly it must be, if there be truth in the premise from which it was inferred, the words of the Council, and the Father, that after Timothy, the first, there succeeded a continual series of Bishops there.

4. What my opinion is in this matter, I shall now freely tell them, though before I had not occasion to do it, together professing it to be only my opinion, and so still affirming nothing in a matter of some uncertainty, or farther than the grounds, on which my opinion is founded, shall appear able to support it. My opinion briefly is, that Timothy was then Bishop of Ephesus at the time of addressing that Epistle to the Angel of that Church; And the grounds are these: 1. That S^t John's banishment and prophesying are by Epiphanius twice expresly affirmed to have been ἐν χρόνοις Κλαυδίου Καίσαρος, in the times of Claudius Cæsar; Then secondly, that as it is by Chronologers set down to be in the thirteenth of Claudius, that Timothy was left by Paul at Ephesus, when he went into Macedonia, 1 Tim. 1. 3. Act. 20. so it is generally resolved that Timothy suffered at Ephesus under Nerva, and that agreeable enough with his age, who appears to be young when Paul first placed him Bishop of Ephesus. If these grounds have truth in them, then Timothy cannot be doubted to be Bishop of Ephesus, when S^t Johns vision was received; And though 'tis true, that Irenæus seems to assign another date of these visions, at least of some of them, πρὸς τῷ τέλει Δομετιανοῦ ἀρχῆς, at the end of Domitians Reign (which what it is to be deemed to signifie, is * elsewhere explained) yet still that is within the compass of Timothy's life, if he suffered not till Nerva's Reign. And so much for that of Timothy's.

Hær. Ἄλλογ.
Annot.* p. 906.

5. Secondly, That Onesimus was Bishop of Ephesus at the date of that Epistle, is no where so much as intimated to be my opinion, much less affirmed by me. And therefore I need reply no more to that. Yet because Ignatius in his Epistle to the Ephesians mentions Onesimus their Bishop (and that testimony is produced by me, Dissert. 2. Chap. 25. Sect. 9.) I shall here freely give them my opinion also of that matter.

First,

First, That there is little ground of question, but that one of that name, Onesimus was Bishop of Ephesus in the tenth year of Trajan, wherein Ignatius wrote that Epistle. 6.

Secondly, That by one indication there is some small reason to guess, that this Onesimus was then lately come to that dignity; I mean Ignatius his words of gratulation to that Church, that God had given them the favour to obtain or have such a Bishop; εὐλογητὸς ὁ χαρισάμενος ὑμῖν τοιούτοις ὄσι τοιοῦτον ἐπίσκοπον κεκτῆσθαι. 7.

Thirdly, That according to Epiphanius his setting down the time of John's banishment and visions, in the days of Claudius, there must be above fifty years distance between the date of this Epistle of Christ, and that of Ignatius, and consequently that it is not so likely that Onesimus, that was their Bishop in the latter, should be that very Angel in the former. 8.

Fourthly, That as I can have no cause to consent with Ado (in lib. de Fest. Apost. ad 14. Cal. Mart.) that this Onesimus in Ignatius was he that is mentioned by S^t Paul to Philemon, so nor to adhere to the Roman Martyrology, that he whom Paul mentions, was constituted Bishop of Ephesus after Timothy. 9.

And therefore, fifthly, it must be remembred, that both the Greek Menologies, and Simeon Metaphrastes (who celebrate his memory on March 13.) acknowledge not that Onesimus to have been at all Bishop of Ephesus, and that others also of the antients make him to have been Bishop of Beræa, and martyr'd in Domitian's Reign: and Dorotheus in Synopsi expresly affirmeth that Gaius succeeded Timothy in Ephesus. 10.

From all which it follows, that Onesimus mentioned by Ignatius, was some later Bishop of that City, who bare that ordinary Greek name, and so that his being Bishop of Ephesus no way belongs to that time of the Angel in the Revelation, nor interferes with their opinion, who think Timothy to have been that Angel; The appearing incompetibility whereof was it, I suppose, that brought in here the mention of Onesimus. 11.

This was here seasonable enough to be confronted to their words in this place, and will be of use to be remembred in the proces of their Discourse. 12.

Thirdly, For Polycarp's being Bishop of Smyrna, as there is left no place for the doubting of that (if either Irenæus, that lived in his time and saw him, or if Tertullian, who lived not long after, and was a curious Antiquary, way be believed in their joynt affirmations of a known matter of Fact) so it is again no where affirmed by me, that he was the very man, to whom that Epistle to the Angel of Symrna was sent, and if that were their meaning, they have again misreported my words. 13.

All that I had said, I think was proved irrefragably, that in two of those Churches mentioned in the Apocalypse, Timothy and Polycarp are by authentick testimonies affirmed to be constituted Bishops, the one by S^t Paul, the other by S^t John; and that is a competent argument added to others, to infer that the Angel of each of those Churches was a single person, and so a Bishop in the Prelatists, not in the Presbyterians notion of the word; an assertion which I need not fear will yield any advantage to the adversaries, and so I as briefly commit it to them. 14.

SECT. III.

Of the negative Argument from St. John's not using the word Bishop.
Of Πρεσβύτερος in the Revelation.

IN the next place by way of answer to this plea of the Prelatists, we are referred to three writings of their party, Smectymnuus, the Vindication of Smectymnuus, the Humble Addresses of the Divines at the Isle of Wight, wherein, say they, these things are fully, clearly, and satisfactorily handled. Numb. 1.

But it being certain that every one of these three was publisht some years before the Dissertations, I should think it strange that the particulars there insisted on by me, should by divination be thus answered before their conception, being able truly to profess, that though I am not unwilling to make use of any mans aid for defending truth, yet none of those writings, to which any of those three were given in answer, were by me made use of in those compositions. 2.

But we are superseded the trouble of examining any of these three, by the leave that is craved to borrow from them what may be useful for the turn, and then in like manner I shall more willingly receive from these, what shall appear to answer, or prejudge our plea, than undertake new troubles in farther unnecessary search of it. 3.

First, Then, they desire it may be considered, that St. John, the Penman of the Revelation, doth neither in it, nor in any of his other writings so much as upon the (by; I suppose, for the Printer fails me) name Bishop. He names the name Presbyter frequently in the Revelation, yea, when he would set out the Office of those who are nearest the throne of Christ in his Church, Rev. 4. he calls himself a Presbyter, Ep. 2. And whereas in St. John's days some new expressions were used in the Christian Church, which we c not in Scripture, as the Christian Sabbath began to be called the Lords day, and Christ himself the Word, now both these are found in the writings of St. John; And it is strange to us that the Apostle should mention a new phrase, and not mention a new Office erected by this time (as our Brethren say) in the Church, especially if we consider that Polycarp (as is related) was made Bishop by him; And no doubt if he had been made Bishop in a prelatical sense, we should have found the name Bishop in some of his writings, who lived so long as to see Episcopacy setled in the Church, as our Adversaries would make us believe. 4.

We are now to consider what degree of conviction, or Argument, to the prejudice of our pretensions, can be fetcht from this large consideration. And first it is most evident and notorious among all Artists, that an argument from Authority cannot conclude negatively that there were no Bishops in S^t John's time, because S^t John doth not mention Bishops. It is the same way of arguing, as if they should conclude that there was no God in the time of writing the Canonical Chapters of Hester, because God is not found once mentioned in those Chapters. And yet of this inartificial kind is the whole 5.

discourse of this Paragraph, the premisses barely negative throughout all the consideration; And so nothing is concludible from it to the prejudice of us, or benefit of our adversaries.

6. Secondly, All that this consideration pretends to, is terminated in the bare name of Bishop, that is it which they pretend is not to be found in St. John. But first, They knew that the word Angel is oft in St. John, and by us contested, by the singularity of the person, one Angel in each Church (and other Characters) to conclude the Office of Bishop as irrefragably, as if the word Bishop were there specified. Nay of this we have a competent experience, that if the word Bishop had been found there, it would by Presbyterians be as readily expounded to signifie a Presbyter, or Colledge of such (for so certainly they have done in other places) and truly with as much reason and satisfaction to any impartial judge, as they have affirmed the word Angel in each Church to denote such. And therefore

7. Thirdly, I shall demand, would the Apostle St. John's using the name Bishop, be at all useful to the Prelatists interests, to conclude that there was such an Office in the Church in his time, or would it not? If not, then sure it is not to our prejudice, that he hath not mentioned that name, and then this whole consideration is perfectly to no purpose. If it would, then sure St. Pauls and St. Lukes frequent mentions of them (I may adde St. Peter also) will supply St. John's omissions, and conclude there were Bishops in their time, and that was long before St. John's death, if it had been considered.

8. Fourthly, When it is said that St. John frequently names the name Presbyter in the Apocalyps, 'tis not imaginable that they should think the Author of the Dissertations could receive any prejudice from thence, when he hath avowed to believe that those Πρεσβύτεροι Elders, mentioned in those so many places of the Revelation, were the twenty four Bishops of Judea sitting in Councel at Jerusalem their Metropolis, encompassing James the Bishop there, together with the four living creatures, denoting the four Apostles that were joined with them in the councel, and the seven Lamps, the Emblems of the seven Deacons attending; Of which matter till they have disproved what is commodiously deduced Dissert. 4. c. 20. Sect. 10. I shall have no need farther to inlarge, it being perfectly useless to our present inquiry, that either the word Bishop or Elder should be used by St. John, for a single Prefect in the Christian Church, supposing (as now we do in the Objection, and 'tis but a begging of the question in the respondent to suppose the contrary) that the word Angel is a notation of it.

9. By this it appears fifthly, how little we are incommodated by the position of these Elders in the Revelation placed neerest to the throne of Christ in his Church; for supposing, as I do, that Christ is by way of vision represented there under the person of the Bishop of Jerusalem sitting in councel, and encompassed (on each side) with a Semicircle of Thrones, on which sat the twenty four Bishops of Judea, I can well allow these twenty four (call them Elders, or what you please) to be neerest to that middle throne, whereon Christ is seated. And truly if it should be otherwise interpreted of Presbyters in the modern notion of the word, it would be hard to make the other parts of the vision to bear proportion with that fancy; For I must suppose, according to St. John's words, that in the vision these thrones were set up in Heaven; And then I shall demand, was that a representation of any councel or Judicature on Earth, or not? If it were not, then nothing can be inferred thence in favour of Presbyters, more than of Bishops, for of both these we speak, as of Officers on Earth; But if it were, then applying it to Presbyters, it must follow, that in the midst of them there is some other (invironed on each side by them) καθήμενον ἐπὶ τῷ θρόνῳ, sitting upon that throne of principal dignity, before whom also they on the other thrones must fall down, v. 10. (or else the parallel will not hold throughout) and the least that can be signified hereby, will be superiority of dignity in him that sits on that middle throne above all the twenty four Elders, which will be deemed to exceed the case of a Prolocutor or Moderator of an Assembly, which is the utmost that the Presbyterian Ἰσότιμία or equality can admit of, but much more commodiously agrees to the Metropolitan of all Judea, sitting in a National Councel with the Bishops about him, for of these we doubt not to affirm that they were as much inferior to him, as this representation doth pretend them to be.

10. As for the sence affixt to it by the Assemblers, that the Πρεσβύτεροι are Presbyters in the modern notion, and that he that sits in the midst of them is Christ, this is against all analogy, and rules of interpreting, a mixing and confounding the Original with the Copy, the type with the Antitype, interpreting one part of the vision, as if it were in Heaven (for it was there where Christ did sit as Judge) and the other as if it were on Earth, for sure the Presbyters in this notion are to be considered as there; And this is a very sufficient prejudice against their interpretation (if there were not enough besides), and such as no way presseth our way of setting it, as hath been already manifested.

11. Sixthly, for his calling himself a Presbyter Ep. 2. I answer, that as far as this allegation hath truth, it hath no force in it at all against our pretensions. He doth indeed call himself ὁ πρεσβύτερος (the Elder, we fitly render it) noting thereby (according to analogy with the solemn notion of the word both among sacred and prophane Writers, set down at large Dissert. 4. c. 19.) a person of authority in the Church of Christ, an Apostle first, and then the supreme Governour of the whole Jewish Church in Asia, which is but proportionable to Saint Pauls beginning his Epistles with Paul an Apostle (or Commissioner) of Jesus Christ (placed in that power in the Church by Christ himself) and with the same style in the front of Saint Peters Epistles, only with this Characteristick note peculiar to Saint John in his Gospel and Epistles, of omitting the expression of his own name; And then all that this text is of force to do, is to prove that the word Πρεσβύτερος doth not import a Presbyter (in our modern use of the word) governing in common with other Presbyters, but rather a singular Governour of the Church, such as Bishops are by us contested to be; And so the Greek Scholiasts have expressed it, διάκονον ἑαυτὸν καλῶν διὰ τῆς Πρεσβυτέρου, By the word Elder he calls himself Bishop. And this, 'tis certain, is for the interest of the Author of the Dissertations, and no way to his prejudice, if it had been adverted by them that produce it.

12. Seventhly, when 'tis said that in Saint John's days some new expressions were used in the Christian Church, which were not in Scripture, as the Lords day, and the Word, I profess not to comprehend what advantage to their pretensions could be designed or aimed at in this part of the consideration: For first, how can it truly be said, that the word Κυριακὴ, Lord's day, which is in the Revelation, and ὁ Λόγος, the Word, Word, which is in S. John's Gospel, were not in Scripture? I must suppose the meaning is, that they were not in any other writings of Scripture, except S. John's: But then 2. that doth not infer them to be new expressions in S. John's days, as these days are distinguisht from the days of the other Apostles, whom John survived, but only that they were idioms or characters of speech that S. John delighted to make use of.

Thus indeed 'tis ordinarily observed of his expressing of Christ by ὁ Λόγος the word, which yet is taken from the Ancients of the Jewish Church (the Chaldee Paraphrase being known frequently to use מימר דוי the word of the Lord, and Plato seems to have been acquainted with the expression, which caused Amelius to swear at the reading the beginning of S. John's Gospel, that that Barbarian was of their Plato's mind, that the word of God was in order of a Principle) and perhaps not peculiarly to him appropriate, for * Budæus a very learned Critick in Greek, affirms S. Luke to have used it in this notion, Cap. 1. 2. and if he doth not, yet still 'twill be but a peculiar part of S. John's style, which if he had written his Gospel in the same year that S. Matthew did his, he would doubtless have made use of the phrase being certainly in the world before that time (and so not new, as they would have it) and the usage of it in the Church being in all reason to be derived from S. John's use of it (who was from thence called θεολόγος the Divine) not S. John's use of it from the new admission of it into the Christian Church. 13.

* In Pandect. pag. 31.

And for the word Κυριακὴ, Lord's day, as it is not certain that it is the Christian Sabbath (I mean the weekly Lord's day,) which is meant by that title once used in the Revelation, but as probably the feast of Easter, the annual commemoration of Christ's rising from the dead (and accordingly Andreas Cæsariensis sets it indifferently, yet so as it seems rather to incline to the latter, Κυριακὴ τῆς ἀναστάσεως χαιρεῖ μνημόσυνον φέρουσα, the Lord's day bearing the memorial of the resurrection of Christ) so in what notion so ever it be taken, it was again S. John's use of the word that gave it authority in the following dialect of the Church, not the Churches usage (that we any where can discern) from whence S. John derived it; And so this will be an instance as ineffectual as the former, to infer the conclusion to which it is designed: For indeed bating the unskilfulness of the argument, ab authoritate negativè, already mentioned, what a strange way of concluding would this be? S. John useth the words [ὁ Λόγος, the word] and [Κυριακὴ, Lord's day] (supposing also, that 'tis true which is added) and no other writer of the Scripture useth them, but instead of them, [the Son of God] (Messias, Christ) and the [first day of the week] therefore if there had been any office of Bishops erected in the Church in S. John's time, it is strange that S. John should not mention the name Ἐπίσκοπος Bishop: 'Tis at the first hearing clear enough, that there is no strangeness in this, both because S. John undertook not to set down a Dictionary of all words or customs which were in his time in the Church, and because there is no proportion held betwixt the members of the comparison, as hath been shewed. And it will yet be less strange, because 1. it is easily supposeable and not strange, that he should have no occasion at all to mention that office, or that mentioning it, he should do it in his own chosen expression, Ἄγγελος Angel, or πρεσβύτερος, Elder (as in other greater matters he is acknowledged and allowed to do) by either of those signifying the same thing as expressly, as the using of Ἐπίσκοπος Bishop would have done: And 2. It is otherwise as manifest by S. Paul and S. Luke, that the word Ἐπίσκοπος Bishop, and the office belonging to it, were before the time of S. John's writings used in the Church, as it could be, if S. John had made express mention of it 14.

And lastly, for the highest round in the κλίμαξ, the special part of the consideration, our affirmation that Polycarp was made Bishop by S. John, that doth not (any more than all the rest) infer it necessary, that S. John should mention the name Bishop: S. Jude, I hope, is supposed by the Assemblers to have constituted some Presbyters in the Church, and yet he in his Epistle hath made no mention of any such name or office. And so much for that first consideration. 15.

SECT. IV.

Of Saint John's Writings. And in them, of Diotrephes.

A Second consideration now follows to be added to this, That there is not any the least intimation in all S. John's writings, of the superiority of one Presbyter over another, save only where he names and chides Diotrephes, as one ambitiously affecting such a Primacy. Numb. 1.

A consideration of the same unhappy constitution with the former, 1. à testimonio negativè again; S. John had no occasion to mention it, therefore there was in his time no such thing; and 2. In respect of the matter, just the same again, put only in other words; there 'twas, [No mention of Bishop in all S. John's writings,] here, [No superiority of one Presbyter over another in all S. John's writings] And so it can add no accumulation of weight to the former. 2.

But then 2. (Bating again those two infirmities in discourse) what if it were granted that at the time of S. John's writing, there were not in the whole Church of Christ any one Presbyter, superior to another Presbyter, what hath the Author of the Dissert. lost, or they gained by this? He makes no doubt willingly to yield to any inforcing reason that is or shall be produced to conclude that at that time, there was above Deacons but one degree in the Church, and yet to be never the less qualified to maintain his pretensions; Nay he is known to have expressed it as his opinion probably inferred, and not easily confuted (and that by which, if it be true, or because there is no evidence to the contrary, all the Presbyterian pretensions, founded in the doubtfulness of words in Scripture, are utterly excluded) that there were not in the space within compass of which, all the Books of the New Testament were written, any Presbyters in our Modern notion of them, created in the Church, though soon after, certainly in Ignatius's time, there were; and then if the consideration now before us were of any force at all, this would be the one direct and proper use of it, to add more confidence to this opinion, and so to confirm, not to invalidate our pretensions. 3.

4. Thirdly for Diotrephes, and S. John's chiding of him for ambitiously affecting a Primacy over other Presbyters, there will appear to be more than one misadventure in it. For 1. it is apparent in the Text that this Diotrephes (whom * Walo Messalinus, a good friend to the petensions of the Assemblies, describes so, as will conclude him a meer Presbyterian. Noluit, saith he, agnoscere superiorem aliquem in Presbyteros habentem potestatem, he would not acknowledge any superior having power over Presbyters) contended for superiority, not only over his equals, but over S. John himself, ὐκ ἐπιδέχεται ἡμᾶς, saith that Apostle, he receiveth not us, yields no obedience, gives no heed to our letter of directions; This certainly belongs not to the superiority or dignity of Bishops, which reserves the Primacy to the Apostles intire, and no way clasheth with it, and only pretends to that power and office of duty, which for the preserving of unity, and the good of the flock, the Apostles thought fit to intrust and commit to them.

* Pag. 24.

5. Secondly, Diotrephes was not (as far as appears, or we have reason to conjecture) ordained to any office of power in the Asian Church, committed to that Apostles care, but of himself without any mission, nay expresly against the Apostles consent, was willing to assume and exercise this power, and is but an example of Corah's sedition and presumptuous humour (and that is inevitably the case of the Presbyterian, unless he can shew his commission for the power he pretends to) all one with that of the Gnosticks censured by S. Jude under the style of ἀντιλογία Κορὲ the gainsaying of Corah, and this no way belongs, or is appliable to the practice of the Bishop, who by Commission from the Apostle, not by any ambition or presumption of his own, regularly ascends to this degree of office and dignity in the Church, and useth it as regularly also, in subordination to all his superiours.

6. On this Occasion the Dissertations have offered a Dilemma to these Disputants which I should be willing to hear answered by them, in this form, Either Diotrephes exercised in the Church the power of the Bishop, in the notion of a singular Præfect, assuming power over the Presbyters, or he did not; If he did not, then is this consideration presently at an end, Diotrephes is falsly accused, and the innocent Bishop unjustly wounded through his sides, who it seems was no Bishop: But if it be said he did, then I demand, Why is not Diotrephes checkt by S. John for that presumption of affecting a power over his equals? And why doth the whole charge lie another way, that he received not S. John's Letters, nor paid due obedience to them? Or why is that very thing charged so heavily on the Bishops in our age, and punisht so severely in them, which the Apostle living and seeing, and upon occasion taking notice of Diotrephes his insolence, doth not so much as reprehend or accuse in him?

7. For as to the Epithet which he bestows upon him, that he was φιλοπρωτεύων, one that loved the preeminence, supposing that were the title of his fault, yet that extends not the Apostles speech to censuring or blaming the use of that power, but only the ambition and affectation of it, which were otherwise lawful to be enjoy'd; as when tis noted in the Pharisees, that they did φιλεῖν πρωτοκαθεδρίας, love or affect the uppermost seats in the Synagogues, which otherwise simply to have sat in, had implyed no crime of theirs, for to this very end, that some body should sit in them, they were certainly erected, and 'tis known that there was among them a ראש הקהל head of the Consistory, an ἀρχισυνάγωγος Governor of the Synagogue, to whom that seat belonged by God's appointment.

8. Nay for the very desire, as far as is expreſt by ὀρέγεσθαι or ἐπιθυμεῖν 1 Tim. 3. 1. desiring and coveting, it is allowed by the Apostle to be terminated in ἐπισκοπὴ the office of a Bishop, καλὸν ἔργον, as a good, and consequently a desirable work; and if Diotrephes be supposed guilty of any other, it may safely be yielded to have been a fault in him, without prejudice to the good office which he so vitiously and criminously affected, according to that of * Theodoret, that the Apostle, ὐκ ἁπλῶς τῆς ἐπιθυμίας, ἀλλὰ τῆς φιλαρχίας κατηγορεῖ, accuses not the desire simply, but the desire of rule, καὶ διδάσκει μὴ τιμῆς ἀλλ' ἀρετῆς ὀρέγεσθαι, μὴ τὸ ἀξίωμα ποθεῖν, ἀλλὰ τῆς ἀξίας τὸ ἔργον ἐπιζητεῖν, and teacheth to desire not the honour, but the vertue, not to covet the dignity, but to seek the work of the dignity, the task to which it belongs. By all which, and much more added in the * Dissertations, it is evident, how little advantage hath accrued to the Assemblers from their mention of Diotrephes out of S. John, and by consequence, from their second consideration.

* Dissert. 1. cap. 13.

SECT. V.

Of S. John's being Bishop of Asia. Of the Apostles being Bishops.

Numb. 1. NOw succeeds a third consideration, viz. That the same Authors that say that S. John made Polycarp Bishop of Smyrna, and that S. Peter made Ignatius Bishop of Antioch, do also say that S. John himself sat many years Bishop of Ephesus, and was the Metropolitan of all Asia, which (say they) is an evident demonstration to us, that these Authors did not use the word Bishop in a Prelatical sense. For it is certain that the Apostles cannot be properly called Bishops; For though they do eminently contain the Episcopal Office, yet they were not formally Bishops. For this were to degrade the Apostles, and to make their Office Ordinary and perpetual, this were to exalt the Bishop above his degree, and make him an Apostle, and to make the Apostle a Bishop. It doth not much differ from madness, to say that Peter or any one of the Apostles were properly Bishops, as learned Whitaker saith, whom we shall have occasion to cite to this purpose hereafter.

2. Whether this consideration be likely to contribute any thing to their advantage, save only by amusing the Reader, and keeping him longer in expectation, that somewhat may possibly be produced to the disparagement of our plea, I desire may distinctly be considered by these degrees.

3. First, I acknowledge that stile [the same Authors——] to belong truly to antient Writers produced by me in the Dissertations, who, as they do affirm S. John to have constituted Polycarp Bishop of Smyrna, Diss. 4. c. 5. Sect. 5. and S. Peter to have placed Ignatius Bishop of Antioch. Diss. 5. c. 1. Sect. 18. so they consent also that S. John sat Bishop of Ephesus and Metropolitan of all Asia: so * Eusebius frequently, that after his return from his banishment τὰς ἀνὰ Δώτειν ἐκκλησίας, he administred ministred or governed the Churches there, i. e. in Asia; and (as he cites it lib. 3. cap. 31. out of Polycrates his Epistle) died there. So the antient Writer of the Martyrdom of Timothy, † in Photius Ψηφίαμαι δὲ Νερβᾶ τῆς βασιλείας ἀναληθεὶς τὴν Ἐφεσίων ἐπαρχίαν Μιλησίοις καὶ αὐτὸς δὲ ἑαυτῷ ἕπεσθαι συμπαραλαβὼν ἐπισκόπων τῆς Ἐφεσίων ἀντιλαμβάνεται Μιλησιάδος. Being recalled by Nerva's decree, he sat down at Ephesus, and himself personally, with seven Bishops his adsessors (those in all probability the Bishops of the seven Churches in the Revelation) he governed the Metropolitan City of Ephesus that prime Metropolis of all Asia, to the Bishop whereof, saith * Chrysostome, was intrusted ἔθνους ὁλόκληρου τῆς Ἀσίας, the whole Nation of Asia; These testimonies may suffice for the substance of the affirmation that St. John governed the Church of Ephesus, and under it all Asia, which is the notion we now have of a Bishop Metropolitane and Primate.

* Hom. 15. in 1 Tim. 5. 19.

As for the word Bishop, how can it be inconvenient to bestow that upon him, when he discharged the Office, nay when Christ himself that great exemplar and original of this power, is expressly called the Bishop of our Souls, as well as the Apostle; when the Office from which Judas fell, and to which Matthias is assumed, is by St. Luke out of the Septuagint, called ἐπισκοπὴ Bishoprick, Act. 1. 20. When accordingly, from the Scripture usage, the Fathers of the Church have continued the style; Apostolos, id est Episcopos & Præpositos Dominus elegit, the Lord chose Apostles, i. e. Bishops and Governours of the Church, saith † Cyprian; and ἐν Ῥώμῃ γεγόνασι πρῶτοι Πέτρος καὶ Παῦλος οἱ Ἀπόστολοι ἀμφοὶ καὶ ἐπίσκοποι, Peter and Paul were the first or chief in Rome, the same persons, Apostles and Bishops, saith * Epiphanius; and Apostoli Episcopi sunt, firmante illud Petro Apostolo — the Apostles were Bishops, as is confirmed by Peter in these words, His Bishoprick let another take, saith † Hilarius Sardus; and again, Are all Apostles? 'Tis true, saith he, quia in Ecclesia unus Episcopus, because in each Church there is one Bishop. And, Nemo ignorat Episcopos servatorem Ecclesiis instituisse; Ipse enim priusquam ascenderet, imponens manum Apostolis ordinavit eos Episcopos. No man is ignorant that our Saviour instituted Bishops in the Church; for before he ascended to Heaven, he laid his hands on the Disciples and ordained them Bishops; saith the * Writer of the questions on the Old and New Testament; and, Sanctus Matthæus Episcopatum sortitus est, St. Matthew was Bishop, saith Gildas. And to shut up all; φανερόν ἐστιν ὅτι οἱ Ἀπόστολοι ἦσαν ἐπίσκοποι. — It is manifest that the Apostles were Bishops, St. John in Asia, St. Andrew in Achaia, St. Thomas in India; saith † Gabriel Philadelph. And agreeably when St. John of whom we now speak, calls himself in the front of two Epistles ὁ Πρεσβύτερος, the Elder, the Greek Scholiast, resolves ἐπίσκοπον ἑαυτὸν καλεῖ διὰ τοῦ πρεσβυτέρου, by the word Elder he calls himself Bishop. And so there is no news in thus affirming. 4.

* L. 1. Cont. Carpocr.

† In Eph. 4. & 1 Cor. 12. 29.

* Quæst. 27.

But then secondly, when they take this for an evident demonstration, that these Authors did not use the word Bishop in a Prelatical sense, this is very far distant from a demonstration, having not arrived to the lowest degree of probability or credibility. For what is a Bishop in the Prelatical sense, but a single person governing in chief in a City or wider circuit? And such certainly was St. Peter at Rome, St. John at Ephesus, &c. as long as they continued to execute that power of the Keyes (the donation of which instituted them οἰκονόμοι Stewards in Gods House, Governours of the Church) in this or that City or Region, and ordained other Bishops there. 5.

Thirdly, Therefore when 'tis added, that it is certain that the Apostles cannot be properly called Bishops, I reply, that it is most certain they may, not only because these so many antient Writers, through several Ages have called them so, and may not, with any justice from us, be accused of impropriety, but because the donation of the Keyes did as properly make them Bishops, as the Commission to go preach to all Nations, being added to it, made them Apostles. To which purpose let these few things be considered, First, That it is here by the Assemblers acknowledged, that the Apostles did eminently contain the Episcopal Office; which though it be a little hastily expressed, and should be, I suppose, that the Apostolical Office did eminently contain the Episcopal; yet there is no doubt, but this is the meaning of it, that the Apostles had all the Episcopal power in their hands, and over and above, something more, and if they had Episcopal power, then sure in respect of that, they may as properly be called Bishops, as in respect of their Apostolical Commission, which they had also, they may be properly called Apostles. Thus we know, that they that have first the power of Deacons bestowed on them, and after of Presbyters, are questionless Deacons still, though they be also Presbyters, and they which from the Office of Presbyters are advanced to Bishops, are certainly Presbyters still, though they be also Bishops, and do not lose the former power by being advanced to the latter, are not lessened by this increase of their dignity. 6.

Secondly, That when an Apostle is differenced from a Bishop, it is either by his extraordinary power granted him for the planting of the Church, or by the Universality of his Diocese, the [all the World] to which his Commission extended, whereas the ordinary Bishop's power and Diocese are more limited. But then these differences are of no force in this matter, they only conclude that the Apostle is more than a Bishop in those two respects, not that in other sufficient respects he is not a Bishop. 7.

Thirdly, When the Apostles had each of them (not only all together in a consistory) that unlimited power, in respect of the extent to all the World, given to them by Christ, we know that after his ascent they parted and distributed this Province among them, assigned every one ἴδιον τόπον, or κλῆρον, his proper place or lot, to which he should betake himself for the planting of the faith of Christ; And then there will be no doubt but that he, who according to his line (in St. Paul's phrase) had planted the faith in such a City or Province, and sat down, and confirmed, and farther instituted (which is the meaning of labouring in the Doctrine, as well as in the word) and govern'd them, and exercised all Episcopal acts among them, might in so doing be stiled a Bishop in that City or Province, and that as truly and as properly as he that could do all the latter and not the former (building on another mans foundation, governing and instructing, where another had planted the faith) might be said to be. 8.

Nay fourthly, We know, that although by Canons of the Church there is provision made, upon prudential considerations, that no man shall be made a Bishop sine titulo, without a title or particular See, to which he is assigned, yet before those Canons forbad it, such Bishops there were, and those never doubted to be properly Bishops, though they were not affixt to any Diocese; And then nothing can hinder but that the Apostle, who had each the whole World for his Title, though he were never 9.

affixed to any particular Diocese or Province, might be most properly styled a Bishop for all that. But this is ex abundanti, more than is needful to our present pretensions of St. John, who, we know, was after his return from banishment, affixt to Asia, and seated at Ephesus the chief Metropolis there, to superintend in the Jewish part of the Asian Church over all the Bishops and Metropolitans there.

10. To this I might add fifthly, that the Bishops in every City were Successors of the Apostles, as is largely deduced Diss. 3. c. 3. Sect. 14. &c. which they could not truly be, if the Apostles, whom they succeeded, were not invested with that power, wherein they succeeded them, i. e. were not first Bishops before them. But I shall not inlarge of this, having no need of more evidences in this matter.

11. Fourthly therefore, when it is added, that if the Apostles be affirmed to be properly Bishops, this were to degrade the Apostles, and to make their office ordinary and perpetual: This is but a shortness of discourse, of which a very few words will suffice to admonish any; for there is no more strength in that consequence, than there would be in affirming that such an one is a Man, therefore he is not a living Creature, or that he that saith he is a living Creature, degrades him from being a man; For as to that of [ordinary and perpetual] 'tis no way inconvenient, that the Apostles, who had somewhat temporary and extraordinary for the first planting of Churches (in respect of which especially they were called Apostles) might also have somewhat, which was of ordinary perpetual use in the Church, wherein others might and should succeed them; and that is it unquestionably which we mean by the word Bishops, when we ascribe it to them or any of them, or to Christ himself, the source and original Copy of that power in the Church.

12. Fifthly, When another inconvenience is accumulated on this, (much to the former purpose, but in more words) this were to exalt the Bishop above his degree, and make him an Apostle, and to make the Apostle a Bishop: First, It is evident, that if the forementioned exception were true, viz. That it were the degrading the Apostle, it could not farther be truly said, that it were the exalting the Bishop above his degree, for supposing one to be above the other, the degrading one would make the other equal to him without any new act of exalting him; if the Apostle have already descended to the Bishop, sure the Bishop need not, cannot ascend to the Apostle; I cannot go up stairs to him who hath prevented me by his dignation or misfortune, and is already come or fallen down to me. Secondly therefore, this makes not the Bishop an Apostle, which is a degree higher than he, (though in respect of the Episcopal power common to them with the Apostles, it is nothing strange in the Antient Writers for the first Bishops of the Churches, James the Bishop of Jerusalem, Thaddæus, Luke, Barnabas, Mark, Timothy, Titus, Clemens, Ignatius, to be called Apostles, as is evidenced at large in the * Dissertations) but only supposes the Apostle to be a Bishop, which he may well be (as the greater containeth the less) though the Bishop be no Apostle, as it is confest that the less contains not the greater.

* Diss. 4. c. 3.

13. And lastly for the citation out of Dr. Whitaker, I have no directions to the place, which may inable me to examine it; And I know circumstances of the context, or the design of the speech, may much alter it, from what it signifies to me at my reading it thus cited; But if it be distinctly thus, and incapable of a more commodious interpretation, I cannot consent to the truth of it, or comprehend upon what grounds of reason he should so severely censure those Scriptures and Fathers, which have been produced to affirm that the Apostles were Bishops, and particularly St. John and St. Peter. And indeed when it falls out, that each of those two Apostles peculiarly calls himself πρεσβύτερος an Elder, or as they render it Presbyter, I shall demand, did either of those speak properly or no? If they did, were either of those little distant from mad-men? If so I shall be content to be under any censure in their company. And therefore if they spake not so properly, I shall be content with them to have spoken improperly also: But if Apostles may be called Presbyters without any of these inconveniences of degradation in them, any insolence in the Presbyter, or madness in the Speaker, my only remaining Quare is, why they might not, without all this ado, be called Bishops also, meaning by Bishops, as I now mean? For I am sure that is the same thing that I understand by πρεσβύτερος, Elder, in those three places; and they, who differ from me herein, do yet understand it of Presbyters (and so had said in the second consideration expresly, that S^t John calls himself a Presbyter) and then all the spice of madness consists in this, thinking a Bishop capable of that exaltation, that a Presbyter in perfect sobriety is capable of. And so much for the third consideration.

SECT. VI.

Of the word Angel, and Star, pretended to be common to all Ministers. Of Messenger, and Embassadour. The singularity of the word Angel.

Numb. 1. THE fourth consideration is, That the word Angel (which is the title given to those supposed Bishops) doth not import any peculiar jurisdiction, or pre-eminence, but is a common name to all Ministers, and so is used in Scripture. For all Ministers are Gods Messengers and Embassadors sent for the good of the elect, and therefore the name being common to all Ministers, why should we think that there should be any thing spoken to one Minister, that doth not belong to all? The same may be said of the word Star (which is also a title given to those supposed Metropolitans) It is evident that all faithful Ministers are called Stars in Scripture, whose duty is to shine as lights unto the Churches in all purity of Doctrine, and holiness of conversation; There is nothing in these titles that argue these Ministers to be Bishops in our brethrens sense: Insomuch as had they not been called Bishops by some authors that succeeded them, (who spake of former times in the language of their own times) this way of arguing would have been counted ridiculous.

2. To this consideration I might, if it were needful, reply, 1. That the word Angel is no where used for any other Officer or Minister in the Church, save only the Prophets (such as Haggai, c. 1. 13. and John Baptist, Mat. 11. 10.) and the chief Priest, Mal. 2. 7.

Secondly,

Secondly, that, as to the words Messenger, and Embassador, there is in ordinary speech some con- 3.
siderable difference between them, the latter having in it a connotation of dignity, sustaining the person of the King, from whom he is sent immediately, which is not applicable to the former; And agreeably when it is used of S. Paul and Timothy, in whose name that Epistle is written [πρεσβεύομεν, we are Embassadors, 2 Cor. 5. 20.] there is added ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ, for, or, in the name, and authority of Christ, and again we pray you ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ, which we well render, in Christs stead, as his Proxies, for so Embassadors are; which being there applied to S. Paul an Apostle, and to Timothy, one imployed by him immediately to preach and plant the faith, and after to govern, in the Church, may by proportion belong to the Bishops their successors peculiarly.

Thirdly, that as the word Ἄγγελος signifies a Messenger, or Nuntio, so the word Ἀπόστολος, Apostle 4.
(according to the origination of it from ἀποστέλλεσθαι to be sent) signifies also without any considerable difference, but yet is never thought fit, either in Scripture, or in the style of the Church, to be applied to ordinary Ministers, but only to those sent immediately by Christ, as he by his Father to plant and rule Churches, and to those who first succeeded them, or were imployed by them in that great Office.

But that which wholly frustrates the design of the consideration, is this, that the singularity of the 5.
person, (one Angel in each of the seven Churches) is all that we argue from in this matter; For as to the power and authority in each Church, That is certainly pretended to (and not declin'd) by the Presbyterian as well as the Prelatist, the only Question is, whether it be placed in one over the rest, or in more than one, ruling together in common; and from the style of Christs Epistle to the Angel of the Church of Ephesus, and the like in each of the seven, we think we conclude regularly, that it was one, it being certain that the singular number is not the dual or plural, and that [Angel] is a person, not an aggregate body or multitude.

And to the same purpose again, we conclude not from the mention of the Stars, not from their 6.
light or shining, but from their number, but seven in all, no more than there are Churches, i. e. one only in each Church; And we know there is difference between a Star and an Asterism or constellation, one single light, and a conjunction of many; And accordingly Mr. Brightman, that is resolved not to find this truth in that Text, is forced to deal plainly, and to tell us, that the Epistles are not each of them sent to any one Angel, but to the Colledge of Pastors, nec uni alicui Angelo mittuntur, sed toti, ut ita dicam, collegio Pastorum, in Apoc. c. 2. 1. which being sufficiently contrary to the evidence of the Text, which reads ἀγγέλῳ to the Angel, in the singular, he thinks fit to add his reason for it; Non enim unus erat Angelus Ephesi sed plures, nec inter istos aliquis Princeps, for there was not one Angel of Ephesus, but many; nor any one among those principal or chief; which is the begging of the Question, or proving his assertion only by asserting it; whereas Beza finding himself more prest by the force of the place, is forced to render it πρὸ ἀγγέλου, i. e. πρεσβύτῃ, to the Angel, i. e. to the president, quem nimirum oportuit inprimis de his rebus admoneri, who was in the first place to be admonished of these things

What the Πρεσβῦς in the use of the Antient Church properly signifies, is shown at large out of 7.
Justin Martyr, Dionysius Bishop of Corinth, Marcellus Ancyranus, and the Council of Ephesus, Dissert. 4. c. 17. directly the same that we mean now by Bishop; But that, I pretend not to think Beza meant by it (his Prolepses and espoused Principles leading him another way) All that I observe from the citation, is, that by the singularity of [Ἀγγέλῳ the Angel] not Angels, he was forced to confess a single person to be understood, which is contrary to Mr Brightman, and those that comprehend a Colledge of Presbyters under the title; which being yielded, I doubt not but our other evidences already produced (which must not be at every turn repeated) from the Catalogue of Bishops in the Church of Ephesus, &c. and the judgment of the Universal Church concerning those single persons, will conclude them indeed πρεσβῦτες, not in Beza's notion, but in Justin Martyrs (who was much a more competent judge) i. e. the very Bishops which we pretend them to be: And truly I cannot discern any weak part (which may hazard being counted ridiculous) in this way of arguing.

SECT. VII.

Of their exception to our arguing from Symbols: Of Bishop and Elder being the same.

THE last Consideration now remains in these words, These titles of Stars and Angels are mysteri- Numb. 1.
ous and metaphorical, It is said Rev. 1. 20. The Mystery of the seven Stars — And certainly it cannot be safe or solid to build the structure of Episcopacy by Divine Right upon mysterious and metaphorical denominations, Theologia Symbolica non est argumentativa, Especially if we consider that there are abundance of clear texts that make Bishops and Presbyters to be one and the same; and it cannot be praise-worthy for any men (though never so learned in the esteem of the world) to oppose certain allegorical and mysterious titles to so many expres testimonies of Scripture.

To this the Answer will be satisfactory, though it should be but brief, that we do not found our 2.
argument in an allegory. For 1. though the word Stars applyed to the Governors of Churches be only figuratively so applyed, yet the word ἄγγελος (if the Authors of this consideration may be believed in that which immediately preceded) signifies (not an Angel from Heaven, or incorporeal substance, but) a Messenger or Embassador, such as, say they, all Ministers are; And agreeably, in that which is here annexed to prove the allegorical or mystical phrases (from Rev. 1. 20. Mystery of the seven Stars) it is evident, that only the word [Stars] is Symbolical or Mystical, and as evident that the Angels are not, for it is in the explicating and not in the forming of the figure, that the Angels of the Churches are mentioned as the things which are signified by the mystery of the Stars, as the Churches themselves by the Lamps; and therefore as it would be absurd to say that a symbol is explicated by a symbol, one mystery by another, or proportionably that the Churches, by which the Lamps are exprest, are a mystical stical allegorical phrase, so it will be as unreasonable to affirm of the Angels, that they are a mystery or allegory, because of the Stars it is affirmed that they are such, when indeed the word Angel is the interpretation and unfolding of the mystery, which is as far from being the mystery, as the light is from being darkness, which it expels out of the horizon, and is purposely sent by God to do so.

3. But then secondly, 'tis yet more manifest, that if the word Angel were here used figuratively (as it is evident it was not, and was so confest, when it appeared useful to the Objectors that it should not) yet it being the singularity of the person, wherein our argument is founded, our argument is not founded on that which is mystical; For certainly this number is a plain Grammatical notation of a singular person, and that is proof enough that it was not a collective body, a Presbytery or Consistory, that is meant by it. And in this all the controversie betwixt us and the adversary consists, whether it was in many or in one in each Church, that the Ecclesiastical jurisdiction was vested, and that is sufficiently decided by that which is clear and unfigurative in this Text, and cannot be imagined otherwise, but by forcing some figure on it, by which one Angel may be set for more Ministers, which if it be done, would not by their rule be argumentative.

4. Thirdly, Whereas it is suggested, that this which we conclude from hence, is opposite to many expres testimonies of Scripture, I have no more to say in this place, where this is only affirmed, but not attempted to be proved, but to profess my perswasion and assurance (the truth of which must be in the process of this discourse contested) that there is no such thing, but on the contrary, that the whole Scripture, and practice, and writings of the first ages of the Church, and the succeeding through all the world, agree directly with what I conclude from the singularity of the Angel; And when in the following words, the testimonies are expressed to be those which make Bishops and Presbyters to be one and the same, This also will immediately vanish, when it is remembred, what is largely deduced in the Dissertations, that the word Bishop in the Scripture is never used for a Presbyter in our Modern notion of the word, but constantly for the one single Governour in a Church or City, and that if there be any truth in that which is here affirmed, Presbyters must be taken in a notion distant from that in which now we use it, and signifie, as Πρεσβύτερος hath already been said to do, the singular Bishop in each Church, and 'tis certain such an identity of the names, will never be deemed contrary to what we have concluded from the Angel, but directly confirm it for us.

5. And although here is no occasion in this place to prove and make good this assertion in each part of it, (the first positivè, that 'Επίσκοπος or Bishop in Scripture always signifies the singular Bishop; the second suppositivè, that if 'Επίσκοπος, Bishop, and Πρεσβύτερος Elder, be one and the same in Scripture, it must be by interpreting Πρεσβύτερος Elder, so as to signifie a Bishop in all places) yet 'tis certain, that this is already done at large in Dissert. 4. cap. 6. Sect. 19, 20, 21, 22. and shall here again be repeated and vindicated, when the proper place requires it, which I foresee it will speedily do.

6. In the mean, I must take leave to express my present sense, and hope that others will not think it too hasty, that no one of these five Considerations, nor consequently all of them together, have at all prejudged our Conclusion (now in hand) inferred from that of the Epistle of Christ to the seven Angels of the seven Churches.

SECT. VIII.

Of the singularity of each Angel. The objections from the use of the plural number.

Numb. 1. THese considerations being thus laid as their foundation, (and I suppose being already removed from superseding or hindring our superstructure) The next part of their method is, having mentioned our objection from the singularity of each Angel's person, to whom Christ's message or Epistle is sent, and the conclusion of an high Prelatist from hence, that these Angels are not only Bishops but Archbishops, to apply solid and every way sufficient answers to this Objection.

2. In this proposal of our Objection, I shall not need to inquire who this high Prelatist is; The former intimations and directions have perswaded me that I am lookt on as this Objector, though it be sufficiently known that the most Reverend Archbishop of Armagh, Lord Primate of Ireland, hath many years since deduced this conclusion in every part from this Text, and might, if they had pleased, have secured me from the opinion either of novelty, or singularity in the Assertion.

3. But I shall most willingly assume the burthen, and proceed to the view of the solid and every way sufficient answers, which are said to be given to this Objection; which though they be, it seems to be fetcht out of Smectymnuus, &c. yet it happens well, that we shall (without need of consulting those larger Volumes) find them here with more ease, reduced to two heads, One, that the word Angel signifies not a singular person, the second, that if it did, it will not at all advantage the Episcopal cause.

4. These two, I confess, if either of them be solidly proved, will utterly drive us from our hold: The only question at present is, whether in either part the proofs be solid, and of this we must now inquire, and first of the former of them.

5. This they thus propose, That the word Angel is not to be taken Ἰδιωτικῶς but συλλογιστικῶς, not individually, but collectively, for all the Pastors and Ministers of the respective Churches.

6. But before their proofs for such an assertion (that the Angel of such a Church, which is certainly an individual, as much as the Bishop of such a Diocese, is not yet to be taken individually) they first add their confession that this answer is called a poor shift, a vain conceit, &c. but promise such reasons for the justification of it, which cannot be answered.

7. To the view of these unanswerable Reasons therefore we shall now hasten; And the first reason is, because our Saviour speaks to the Angel often in the plural number, Rev. 2. 24. But unto you I say, and the rest of Thyatira, and so Rev. 2. 10. and 13. By which, say they, it is evident, that by the word Angel is not meant one singular person, but the collective body of Rulers.

8. To this first reason I shall answer, by separating that one text of Thyatira from the other two, and all all that are of the ſame nature with them, and ſpeak firſt of theſe two, and remind them firſt, that in an Epiſtle unqueſtionably addreſt to a particular perſon, others under his care and charge may be, and are occaſionally mentioned; ſo in that to Titus, Paul's own Son, i. e under the particular character of the beloved perſon converted by him; in the concluſion we find theſe words, Grace be with you all, i. e. not with him as he muſt ſignifie a whole Presbytery, but all the ſincere lovers of Chriſt, and Saint Paul, they that love us in the faith, in the former part of the verſe.

Secondly, That though the one Angel of the Church be the perſon to whom each part of the Epiſtle is addreſt, yet in it are ſet down the ſins and fate of the whole Church, i. e. of all the believers in it; Thus when the people of Iſrael or Judah were fallen into foul ſins and provocations againſt God, it was ordinary for God to ſend a Prophet to the King of either of them, and admoniſh him what reformations were to be wrought, and what judgments were a coming in caſe of neglect. In which kind of Meſſages of the Prophet delivered to the King, 'tis certain that the whole people were concerned; and ſo without queſtion was it here, Rev. 2. 10. the Devil ſhall caſt ſome of you, i. e. ſome Members of that Church, into priſon, &c. and ſo ver. 13. among you, i. e. among you of that Church or City. 9.

And indeed if each of thoſe Churches had been governed by a Conſiſtory of co-equal Preſbyters, and thoſe (as is pretended by our adverſaries) ſignified by the Angel, yet there would be as little reaſon to doubt, but the ſins of the people, as well as the Clergy were here reprehended by Chriſt, and the judgment threatned to one as well as to the other. And ſo this can be no reaſon to infer the Angel to be no ſingular perſon; the Church ruled by one, making up a multitude, as well as if it were ruled by a Presbytery. 10.

As for the place, cap. 2. 24. concerning Thyatira, that hath a different appearance. For the Greek copy ordinarily reading it [ὑμῖν δὲ λέγω καὶ λοιποῖς τοῖς ἐν Θυατείροις, But I ſay unto you (in the plural) and to the reſt which are in Thyatira] the [you] in the plural, is by the Objectors thought neceſſarily to belong to the Angel of that City, as [the reſt] to the community of the people. To this place therefore we have formerly anſwered, that the reading in the Antient Manuſcripts, particularly in that belonging to the Kings Library at Saint James's, leaves out the [καὶ, and] and reads thus, ὑμῖν δὲ λέγω τοῖς λοιποῖς, But to you I ſay the reſt which are in Thyatira] And this takes away all force from the objection; for the former part of the Epiſtle belonging to the Angel, who permitted Jezebel, and to them that committed fornication with her, the [But] in the front ſeparates the [ὑμῖν λοιποῖς, you the reſt] from the Angel, and thoſe other formerly ſpoken to, and therefore the ὑμῖν, you, cannot poſſibly be the Angel, wherein all the ſtrength of the Objection conſiſts. 11.

But this Anſwer, though taken notice of, is diſliked: For, ſay they, he that ſhall view the Antecedent and Conſequent, and conſider that ver. 23. it is ſaid, I will give to every one of you, &c. and then follows, but I ſay unto you, and then in the concluſion of the verſe, I will put upon you no other burthen, will confeſs that the old copies are better than that which is ſaid to be Tecla's Manuſcript. 12.

And here I ſhall deſire the Reader to bear me company in obeying their directions, and obſerve what the Antecedents and Conſequents can afford to the prejudice of that Antient copy. 'Tis moſt true, that v. 23. we read, I will give to every one of you, and that then it follows, v. 24. But I ſay unto you, and in the concluſion of the verſe, I will put upon you — But I demand, what will they conclude from hence? That by the word [you] in all theſe places the ſame perſons are to be underſtood, and that thoſe perſons are the interpretation of the Angel, v. 18? Theſe two things they muſt conclude, or elſe they will fail in their deſign, which is, to ſhew that by the word Angel the collective body of Rulers is meant. But the firſt of theſe is evidently falſe, whatſoever reading be retained, for beſides that the [δὲ, But] doth clearly ſeparate the ſecond [you] from the firſt, and makes them diſtinct perſons, The very matter of the ſpeeches will convince it: For in the 23. v the [you] are thoſe that were corrupted by Jezebel, v. 20. 22. who are now to be exemplarily puniſht and deſtroyed, I will kill her (i. e. Jezebels) children with death (as alſo thoſe that had committed Fornication with her, v. 22.) and all the Churches ſhall know that I am the ſearcher of hearts, and I will give to every of you according to your works; But the ſecond [you] and ſo alſo the third, are the quite contrary to theſe, As many as have not this Doctrine, and who have not known theſe depths of Satan, and conſequently, who are not to be puniſhed, nor ſo much as admoniſhed, but only confirmed in their preſent practice, to hold faſt what they have already. 13.

So contrary is it to all appearance of truth, that the Antecedent and Conſequent ſhould favour their pretenſion. 14.

This matter is ſo evident (the contrary conditions and fates of the [you] in v. 23. and the [you] in v. 24.) that if the ordinary reading were to be retained [ὑμῖν δὲ καὶ λοιποῖς] and that rendred [to you and the reſt in Thyatira] ſo as to difference [you] and [the reſt] another Antecedent to the Relative [you] muſt neceſſarily be ſought out, and then that can be no other but the Churches incidentally mentioned, v. 23. who had not been charged for this crime. For as for the Angel, v. 18. if he were not ſo remote (6. verſes off) and if the ſingular number could be the Antecedent to the plural [ὑμῖν, you] (as it cannot) yet ſtill he is charged for ſuffering the Woman Jezebel, and ſo is numbred among the guilty perſons, that are to repent or be puniſht, and not to have no other burthen laid on them, ſave only to hold faſt what they have, as is ſaid of the ſecond [ὑμῖν, you] v. 24. 15.

But the truth is, that of making the Churches the Relative is ſo inconvenient (and yet no other way imaginable to reconcile the ordinary reading) and the whole ſenſe is ſo much more clear and current in the reading of the King's MS. [But to you the reſt in Thyatira] (thoſe that had not been guilty of the misbehaviours cenſured, and threatned in the former Verſes) that I profeſs I cannot diſcern any appearance of reaſon to queſtion the truth of it, much leſs to conceive that the ordinary copies are better, which yet however they read it, muſt oppoſe the [ὑμῖν you] to thoſe before mentioned, and ſo cannot apply it with any appearance of probability to the Angel, or conſequently prejudge ours, or confirm their pretenſions. 16.

SECT.

SECT. IX.

Of the Elders at Ephesus Act. 20.

Numb. 1. A Second reason to prove the Angel to be a collective body, is this, because it is certain that the Church of Ephesus was a collective body, and that there were many Presbyters to whom S. Paul, at his final departure from them, committed the charge of that Church. And these Presbyters are called Bishops, and were all of them Stars of the same magnitude, and Angels of the same order without a difference or distinction.

2. But this is a way of proving a thing which is denied, by another which they know is equally denied by him, against whom they dispute, and therefore that argument can be of no force with us.

3. 'Tis most true indeed, what they begin with, that the Church of Ephesus was a collective body, for so 'tis certain every Church is, whether governed by one or more Rulers; But the Church is not the Angel, any more than the Candlesticks are the Stars, but punctually distinguished from them, Rev. 1. 20. But this I suppose was a mistake hastily fallen from them, and I shall not pursue it any farther.

4. Their argument, I conceive, depends upon the plurality of Elders [πρεσβύτεροι] which were at Ephesus Act. 20. when Paul takes his leave of them, and calls them Bishops. But to this they know I have answered clearly, that as in other places of Scripture, so in that, the word πρεσβύτεροι Elders, being all one with Ἐπίσκοποι, Bishops, denote (not the many Presbyters of the one City of Ephesus, but) the many Bishops of that and other Cities of Asia, which at that time by S. Paul's summons sent to Ephesus, the chief Metropolis of Asia, were called and met together at Miletus.

5. To this purpose * Irenæus is a witness beyond exception, who speaking of these Elders or Bishops,
* L. 3. c. 14. adds, ab Epheso & proximis civitatibus convocatos esse, that they were assembled from Ephesus and the next Cities, in which as the faith was planted, as well as in Ephesus (even in all Asia) so there is no reason to doubt but there were Bishops in them, as well as in Ephesus (seven such Churches we know are here mentioned in the Revelation) and that Paul was as careful to take his leave of them (as many as could conveniently come to Miletus in his hasty progress) as of the Bishop of Ephesus he is justly deemed to have been.

6. Other arguments and authorities I need not here accumulate for this notion of Elders Act. 20. because here is no appearance of reason offered to prove their, or impugne our Assertion. This perhaps will be afterward attempted, and then I shall, as occasion requires, farther enlarge: In the mean it sufficeth that it yet no way appears, that Ephesus was governed by many Presbyters, and not by one Bishop, and therefore this second offer of reason is as deficient as the first, to prove the Angel of that Church to have been a collective body.

SECT. X.

Of expressing a number by singulars. A Church by a Candlestick. Of the seven Angels Rev. 8.

Numb. 1. THeir third reason is, because It is usual with the Holy Ghost, not only in other Books of Scripture, but in this very Book of the Revelation, in mysterious and prophetick writings, and visional representations (such as this of the Stars and Golden Candlestick is) to express a number of things or persons, in singulars. And this in visions is the usual way of Representation of things, a thousand persons making up one Church is represented by one Candlestick, many Ministers making up one Presbytery by one Angel. Thus Rev. 8. 2. It is said that John saw seven Angels which stood before God. By these seven Candlesticks (I suppose it should be seven Angels) Dr. Reynolds doth not understand seven individual Angels, but all the Angels; For there are no seven individual Angels that stand before God, but all do, Dan. 7. there are many more instances brought in the Books forementioned.

2. To this third Reason I have no obligation or notice to give credit, any farther than the evidences perswade, for many of which, though we are referred to Smectymnuus, &c. yet having received promise from these, that they would borrow a few things from those others; I shall with reason hope that what they have upon choice borrowed, leaving, as they say, much more behind, is the most satisfactory and solid of any thing by them produced; and consequently if there be no force in these instances to oppugne our conclusion, we shall not expect to find more convincing ones by travailing farther, and gathering up out of those dispersions, what they have refused to take up and offer to us.

3. The thing they would prove is, that 'tis usual with the Holy Ghost in this (as in other mysterious prophetick Books) to express a number of things or persons by singulars. Their proofs are but three, and the first is of no force, because the word Church denotes a singular thing, as well as Candlestick that represents it; for though a thousand men make up one Church, yet one Church is but one thing, considered as a Church, and proportionably as one Candlestick in the singular is set to denote each Church, so there are seven Candlesticks to represent the seven Churches.

4. As for the second, that of the Angels, that that signifies many Ministers, that cannot be offered as a proof, being it self the matter of the question. And indeed, though Church be a collective body, and so one Church is known to consist of many men, yet Angel is not of that nature, one Angel neither signifies many men, nor many Angels.

5. And whereas the parallel is set betwixt the word Candlestick, and the word Angel, that they (each) are singular words, by which multitudes are represented, that is a mistake; for the parallel lies betwixt Church and Angel (and on the other side betwixt Candlestick and Star, as appears Rev. 1. 20.) and both both theſe are individual things, the Church an individual Church, and there be ſeven ſuch individual Churches, and the Angel an individual Angel, and there be ſeven ſuch individual Angels, and there can be no more pretence that one Angel ſhould ſignify many Miniſters, than that one Church ſhould ſignify many Congregations.

Laſtly, for the third proof, that of ſeven Angels, Rev. 8. 2. if that were granted to Doctor Reynold's authority, that the [ſeven Angels] there ſignifies all the Angels, yet would it not at all contribute to the proof of the point in hand, which is, that many ſhall be ſignified by a ſingular, for we know that ſeven are not a ſingular; but the cuſtom indeed being ordinary, to uſe a certain definite number, for an uncertain or indefinite, and the ſeptenary being a perfect number, and ſo fitteſt for the turne, 'tis more tolerable that the number of ſeven may repreſent ſome greater number, one plural a larger plural, than that a ſingular one ſhould do ſo. 6.

And yet ſecondly, there is no great reaſon to doubt, but that the ſeven Angels are indeed very ſeven Angels, and no more; This I collect, 1. from the ſeven Trumpets that were given them, ver. 2. and the ſpecifying them by that Character, the ſeven Angels, which had the ſeven Trumpets, ver. 6. Secondly, by the ſeveral employments aſſigned them in the ſubſequent parts of the Viſion which brings them upon the ſcene one after another, the firſt Angel. ver. 7. the ſecond Angel, ver. 8. and ſo to the ſeventh. Thirdly, by the diſtinction that is evidently made between thoſe ſeven Angels and another Angel, ver. 3. And another came and ſtood at the Altar: which makes it certain that the former ſeven did not ſignify all the Angels, unleſs after all, there could yet be one more. Fourthly, from the mention of the ſeven Spirits, cap. 1. 4. which are ſaid to be before Gods throne, that ſure is all one with ſtanding before him here, and it being certain that Angels are Spirits, I have no reaſon to doubt but that theſe ſeven Angels are thoſe ſeven Spirits, and ſo ſtill a definite number of ſeven, and no more. Fifthly, from the mention of the ſeven Eyes, Zach. 4. 10. which ſeem to be interpreted to this ſence, Rev. 5. 6. ſeven eyes which are the ſeven Spirits of God ſent into all the Land. 7.

And though in ſome of theſe places other men have had other notions, yet δοκιμώτερον τὰς ἀγγέλους ταῦτα νοεῖν, 'tis more to be approved that we underſtand Angels by that phraſe, cap. 1. ſaith Andreas Cæſarienſis; And of the whole matter, Ἑπτὰ μέν εἰσιν οἱ τῷ μεγίστῳ δυνάμιν ἔχοντες, πρωτόγονοι Ἀγγέλων ἄρχοντες, there are ſeven which have the greateſt power, the firſt-born Princes of the Angels, ſaith Clemens Alexandrinus. In which words of his, the firſt-born Princes are evidently taken from Dan. 10. 13. where the Hebrew reads שרים חד אשנים the Principal or firſt Rulers or Princes, of which Michael is the firſt, and thence called Archangel. 8. Strom. 6.

And ſo in Tobit, cap. 12. 15. we find ſeven holy Angels which preſent the prayers of the Saints, which deſcription of them and their office, to preſent the prayers of the Saints, if it be thought unagreeable to their ſtanding here before God or being before his throne, it will ſoon be reconciled by that ſpeech of Chriſt, that the Angels of the infant tender Chriſtians always behold the face of God, and by that means are qualified to make their wants known unto him, which is all one with preſenting of prayers. 9.

Sixthly, from the mention of the ſeven Lamps, Rev 4. 5. (ſtyled Lamps, in reference to the like number of Lamps on the Candleſtick in the Sanctuary) which burn before the throne, as cap. 1. they are before the throne, For of theſe it is added αἵ εἰσι τὰ ἑπτὰ πνεύματα τοῦ θεοῦ, which are the ſeven (by way of eminency, or the ſeven Principal) ſpirits of God. 10.

Seventhly, from the no appearance of the leaſt reaſon produced to the contrary; For as to that which is introduced with a [For] and ſupplyes the place of a reaſon, it is evidently a bare aſſertion of the contrary, [there are no ſeven individual Angels that ſtand before God] without any offer of proof; that teſtimony out of Dan. 7. that all do, being far from concluding that there are not ſuch ſeven principal Angels, which theſe ſo many evidences aſſure us there are. 11.

In that of Dan. 7. 10. upon that ſolemn occaſion of God's judgments expreſt by a fiery ſtream, thouſand thouſands are ſaid to Miniſter to him, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand to ſtand before him. But how doth that hinder, but at another time, ſeven principal Angels may be employed by him, and in order to that, ſtand before him too, and when we ſo oft read of ſuch ſeven, what queſtion but they were individual Angels? And ſo much for the third reaſon. 12.

SECT. XI.

Of the Epiſtles being ſent to the whole Church, not to the Biſhop only. Of Timothy, Oneſimus and Polycarp, being Biſhops of ſome of the Aſian Churches, without any charge of Apoſtaſie falling on them by this means.

THere is a fourth behind ſtill, that though but one Angel be mentioned in the fore-front, yet it is evident that the Epiſtles themſelves (though we are far from thinking that in formal denomination, the Angels and the Candleſticks are the ſame) are dedicated to all the Angels and Miniſters in the Church, and to the Churches themſelves, as appears, Rev. 1. 10. Rev. 2. 7. 11. 17. And therefore when it is ſaid in the ſingular number, I know thy works, This thou haſt, Repent and do thy firſt works, &c. All theſe and the like places are not to be underſtood as meant of one individual perſon, but of the whole company of Miniſters, and alſo of the whole Church, becauſe the puniſhment threatned is to the whole Church, Rev. 2. 5. 16. 2. Now we have no warrant in the word to think that Chriſt would remove his Goſpel from a Church for the ſin of one Biſhop, when all the other miniſters and Churches are far from thoſe ſins. Numb. 1.

To this I ſhall need make no reply, having done it ſufficiently already, by conceſſion that the Angel being the Ruler of a Church, the whole Epiſtle belongs to him and the Church promiſcuouſly, and agreeably thoſe expreſſions, which are uſed in the ſingular number, do not all belong to the Biſhop, but to the Church wherein he preſides: But certainly this is far from inferring that the Biſhop and Church are all one, or that the word Angel ſignifies the collective body of the Church, for, beſides 2.

that the Text is expres in making a signal difference between the Stars and the Candlesticks, the Angels and the Churches (and the Assemblers are here forced to confess that the Angels and Candlesticks are not the same) the confounding them will be as disadvantageous to them as to us, and I shall as regularly be able to conclude that the word Angel signifies not the Presbytery, but the whole diffusive body of the Church, as they can pretend to do upon their own postulatum, that the Angel denotes not the Bishop but the whole Church, it being as certain that they make a difference between the Church or multitude of believers, and the Presbytery that is set over them to rule, as we do between the same Church and the Bishop.

3. Thus have we viewed all the reasons produced by them to assert or confirm their first answer, and shewed divers wayes how no manner of validity there is in any one or all of them, to evidence it to be a solid and every way sufficient answer. And therefore there was some use of the next part of the Method, to call in the authority of other men to countenance this interpretation, Master Brightman, Master Perkins, Master Foxe, (who citeth Primasius, Haymo, Beda, Richardus, Thomas, &c.) Doctor Fulke, Master Meade, Gregory and Saint Austin; But although they have thought fit to set down these names, yet having omitted to add their Testimonies, and indeed having resolved to forbear, because Smectymnuus hath done it already, I shall confess my self willing to leave this chace, and in stead of leading the Reader so wearisome a walk, to examine the several comments here named (and but named) give him more shortly my conjecture what truth may be in them.

4. Master Brightman, I know (and some others 'tis possible) may have interpreted the Angel to signifie the whole College of Pastors, and truly I should much sooner take up an Interpretation upon the bare word of these Assemblers, than I would upon no better evidence from Mr. Brightman; He was one learned man, long known to be unkind to our Prelates, and here are many, for ought I know, as learned, though under the same prejudices.

5. Some others here cited, I cannot believe are brought to testifie this, but only that what is said to the Angel in each part of the Epistle, was said to the whole Church, and not only to the Bishop; and if that be all they say, it is that which we cannot doubt to affirm with them, and have oft confest to understand Christ's Epistle so, without any incommodity to our pretensions.

6. If I mistake in these conjectures, I desire pardon, and shall hope to give a better account, when I read the testimonies in the Authors from whence they are cited. For in these derivations of testimonies, the Assemblers citing them from Smectymnuus, Smectymnuus from Master Foxe, Master Foxe from Primasius, &c. there is great possibility of mistake, and therefore I shall follow the example before me, forbear adding any more of this matter.

7. In the next place they are pleased to take notice as of an objection against their interpretation, that some Authors say, Timothy was Bishop of Ephesus when our Saviour wrote this Epistle, others that Onesimus was Bishop, others that Polycarp was Bishop of Smyrna at that time, and therefore these Angels must needs be taken individually for so many single persons.

8. Of this Objection, which they have thus formed for us, there is only thus much of truth, that out of authentick Records we bring undeniable evidences for Timothies being constituted by S^t Paul Bishop of Ephesus, for Onesimus being placed in that See at the time of Ignatius's writing to the Ephesians, that Polycarp was constituted Bishop of Smyrna by S^t John, of all which we have spoken enough already.

9. But of all or any of these being Bishops in those Cities at the very time of Christ's addressing this Epistle to the Angels of each, this had no where been our affirmation, nor would it have been useful to us in any considerable degree, if we had grounds positively to affirm it. All that is needful to us is this, that by the Antient Records, which evidence them to have been so early Bishops in two of those Churches, to which Christ's Epistle was sent, and Bishops in the notion wherein we now use the word, we are secured of the truth of our collections, when from the mention of the seven Angels of the seven Churches, we assert the Ecclesiastical power in the hands of a single Bishop in each Church, to be owned and confirmed by Christ; And supposing some other persons, and none of these three, to have been those very numerical Angels to whom those Epistles were written, this conclusion of ours stands yet as firm, as if we could demonstrate it of those very numerical persons, there being no reason to doubt but the same manner of Government continued all the Scripture times; and so Timothies successour and Onesimus's predecessor, being as certainly Bishops, as either Onesimus or Timothy himself; when withal, we have already produced mentions from the Antients of the Catalogues of those Bishops which succeeded Timothy in that See

10. Having thus set right the Objection for them, so as it is owned by us to be an Objection against them, it will now soon appear what force there is in their answers to it, and those are three.

11. First, That they that say that Timothy was then Bishop, offer no little injury to him, for they thereby charge him to be guilty of Apostasie, and of losing his first love, and so out of a blind zeal to Episcopacy, they make that glorious Saint to stand charged as an Apostate. The like injury is offered by Objections to Onesimus.

12. But first you see, whatever our opinion is expres to be, we have not affirmed either of these, as to the person either of Timothy or Onesimus, but left it uncertain who the Angel of the Church of Ephesus was, whether either or neither of these, but some successor of the one, and predecessor of the other, and so what charge soever falls on that Angel, it falls not necessarily on either of these.

13. Secondly, It is already agreed betwixt the parties, affirmed by them, and acknowledged by me, that the Epistle being addrest to the Angel of Ephesus, the Church or diffusive body, the Christians in it, were concerned in the contents of it; And then whatsoever charge be found in the Epistle, of how heavy a nature soever, even of Apostasie it self, yet there is no necessity the Angel or Bishop should be personally guilty of it; and so whosoever the Bishop was, though Timothy himself, our zeal to Episcopacy hath not been so blind or transporting, as to put us on any uncharitable censure, to affix any unhandsome character upon so glorious a Saint.

14. Lastly, To remove this answer yet one degree farther from being satisfactory, it no where appears that Apostasie is in that Epistle laid to the charge, whether of the Church or Angel; The first part is all all in commendation of their former zeal, and the latter, wherein their charge conſiſts, v. 4. is only this [ἀγάπλω σε τλὴ πρώτλω ἀφῆκας] which is not (as is ſuggeſted) loſing their firſt love, but remitting it; Their love to Chriſt had formerly been ſtrong as death, pure and vehement, ſuch as had caſt out all fear of dangers, and evidenced it ſelf in couragious confeſſion; but now, though it were not quite loſt, yet it was remitted, leſſened in the degree, not ſo intenſe as formerly, and therefore when they are bid remember from whence they are fallen, that fall doth not neceſſarily ſignifie Apoſtaſy or renouncing of Chriſtianity (for then it had been an impertinent threatning to remove their Candleſtick v. 5.) but a falling from the former degree, a cooling of the intenſe heat, which had been ſo laudable in them. And ſo ſtill there is more invalidity in this firſt anſwer.

SECT. XII.

THE ſecond is, that they have already proved that Timothy was an Evangeliſt in a proper ſenſe, and therefore cannot be called Biſhop of Epheſus in their ſenſe. Numb. 1.

To this I reply, 1. That Timothies being an Evangeliſt no way prejudgeth his being a Biſhop in our ſenſe; An Evangeliſt is one commiſſionated by any of the Apoſtles εὐαγγελίζεσθαι to preach the Goſpel to any City or People; And a Biſhop is one commiſſionated by the like Apoſtle to preſide in, and govern a Church already planted. And what hinders but that he that hath been employed in the former capacity to plant, may elſewhere or in the ſame place be appointed to Govern, and ſo the Evangeliſt be a Biſhop? 2.

Whatſoever Objections can be brought againſt this, I ſhall not doubt will be eaſily anſwered, but there is no offer of any here, and therefore it will not be pertinent farther to treat it in this place. 3.

Secondly, It muſt again be remembred, that what is here ſaid of Timothy, is proper to his perſon, both from Oneſimus and Polycarp, and all other Angels, whether ſucceeding Timothy in Epheſus, or preſiding in the other ſeven Aſian Churches, and therefore though Timothy by being an Evangeliſt were rendred uncapable (which yet he was not) of being the Biſhop of Epheſus in our ſenſe, yet thoſe other ſeven Angels at the very time of the writing this Epiſtle of which none have been proved to be Evangeliſts, may ſtill be Biſhops in our ſenſe. 4.

Thirdly, I ſhall demand upon the Aſſemblers principles, who allow a Primus Presbyter, a Prolocutor in their conſiſtory or Councel of Presbyters, might Timothy be that firſt Presbyter in the Church of Epheſus. or did his being an Evangeliſt hinder him from being ſo, when he was by S^t Paul exhorted or appointed παραμεῖναι to abide in that City? I cannot imagine they will ſay he could not, who gave both S^t Peter and S^t John leave to call themſelves Presbyters; But if he could in their opinion, then why might he not be a Biſhop in our ſenſe (notwithſtanding that he was an Evangeliſt) as well as a Presbyter in theirs? I foreſee not what anſwer can be adapted to this Dilemma. 5.

SECT. XIII.

Of the Biſhops at Epheſus. Of the plural number in the Epiſtle to the Angel of Smyrna.

THere remains a third branch of the Anſwer, that it will not follow becauſe Oneſimus was Biſhop of Epheſus in S^t John's dayes, that therefore he was the only perſon to whom Chriſt wrote his Epiſtle; For S^t Paul tells us there were many Biſhops at Epheſus (beſides the ſuppoſed Oneſimus*) and Chriſt may very well write to him, and to all the reſt as well as him. The like may be ſaid concerning* Polycarp, for our Saviour ſpeaks to the Angel of the Church of Smyrna in the plural number, Rev. 2. 10. And therefore he may truly be ſaid to write to all the other Angels that were at Smyrna, as well as to one. Numb. 1.

Here is nothing in this branch but what hath been diſtinctly foreſtall'd, and ſpoken to largely already; it will ſuffice that we repeat the heads, and leave the Reader to view the places, where they are more explicitly handled. And firſt though S^t Paul ſhould tell us that there were many Biſhops at Epheſus, as there might be from other Cities occaſionally met there, yet it would not follow that there were more than one Biſhop of that City, or conſequently, that Chriſt in a peculiar addreſs to the Angel of that City, could write to more Biſhops there. 2.

But then ſecondly, the whole truth is this, that St. Luke (and not St. Paul) tells, that upon St. Pauls ſummons ſent to Epheſus, many Biſhops met him at Miletus; Epheſus being the chief Metropolis was the fitteſt means to convey the ſummons to the Cities near it, and from them and not only from Epheſus, came the Biſhops to him, as hath been declared out of Irenæus. 3.

Thirdly, For our Saviour's ſpeaking to the Angel of the Church of Smyrna in the plural number; that is not punctually true; for though the Letter be written and inſcribed to the Angel, yet, as hath oft been ſaid, the whole Church is concerned in the contents of it, and ſo ſpeaking to the Angel in the ſingular, he may yet ſpeak to the Church or any members thereof, in the plural number. And ſo much again to demonſtrate the ineffectualneſs of the firſt Head of Anſwers. 4.

SECT. XIV.

Of Beza's Interpretation, of the President.

Numb. 1. THE second follows upon a supposition (but not grant) that these Angels were personæ singulares, and that the word Angel is to be taken individually, yet they conceive this will not at all advantage the Episcopal cause. For 1. Mr. Beza (no great friend to Episcopacy) acknowledgeth that by these words to the Angel is meant πρὸς πρεσβύτερον to the President, as whom it behoved specially to be admonished touching those matters, and by him both the rest of his Collegues, and the whole Church likewise; but then he addeth, But that Episcopal degree which was afterward by humane invention brought into the Church of God, certainly neither can nor ought to be from hence concluded. Nay, not so much as the Office of a perpetual President should be of necessity as the thence arising Oligarchical tyranny (whose head is the Antichristian beast) now at length with the most certain ruine, not of the Church only, but of the word also, maketh manifest; By which quotation it is evident, that though Beza held the Angel to be a singular person, yet he held him to be Angelus Præses, not Angelus Princeps; and that he was Præses pro tempore, just as a Moderator in an Assembly, or as a Speaker in Parliament.

2. To this I reply, First, That Mr. Beza's interpretation, as it was foreknown and formerly mentioned by us, so was it not in reason to be of any force or authority with us, if it be but upon the score intimated here, that he was not only no great friend, but a known profest enemy of Episcopacy, and so was obliged to be, by the course wherein he was engaged at Geneva. All that his authority concludes, is, that to avoid a plain testimony, which is not for his turn, a man may be induced to affirm that confidently, for which he hath no ground of proof, nay, wherein all wayes of evidence, that the matter is capable of, are absolutely against him.

3. Thus 'tis certainly in this matter; for when Beza hath here acknowledged that the Angel was the πρεσβὺς President, Who will be the most competent Judge or Witness, to determine what was meant by the πρεσβὺς President] in the Primitive Church, what kind of Presidency he had, whether only of place or order, and that only for a time, or of superiority of power and office, and that perpetual? In all reason this is to be fetcht from those first Writers which speak of it, and either use the very word πρεσβὺς President, for such a Bishop, as we now assert (a singular person in every Church, having a power for life over all the Officers and Members of the Church, and succeeding some Apostle, or Apostolical person in that power) or else in other words affirm the same thing.

4. Of this, store of evidences are * elsewhere produced, in the explication of the several titles, by which this singular prefect was antiently known, whether of Apostle, in a secondary use of that word, of Angel, of Bishop, of Elder, of Ruler, of Pastor, of Doctor, of Steward, of President, of Priest; Against which the bare authority of Mr Beza's name, who hath fansied a temporary President or Prolocutor, and brought no manner of reason to confirm it, will have very little validity in it.

* Dissert. 4.

5. What is proved by the bare testimony of Beza, is farther confirmed by a like citation out of the Reverend Divines at the Isle of Wight, who by the example of the King sending a message to both Houses, and directing it To the Speaker of the House of Peers, which infers not that either the Speaker is always the same person, or the Governour, or Ruler of the two Houses in the least, conclude, that notwithstanding this direction of Christ's Epistle to the Angels, yet they might be neither Bishops, nor yet perpetual Moderators.

6. But the authority of those Divines, which had this answer from Beza, adds nothing of weight, because nothing of proof to it; As for their similitude, it concludes nothing but this, that these Divines thought fit to make use of this instance of a Speaker in Parliament, to shew the thing possible to have been, not to prove that so it was; And the matter of our present inquiry, is not, what a kind of president Christ and his Apostles might, if they would, have left in each Church, but what really they did; And that must be contested by the best Records of those times, not by a similitude of a Speaker in our Parliaments. And that is all I need to say to that Section.

SECT. XV.

Of Dr. Reynolds interpretation, of the Bishop in Cyprian. Of Ordination by Bishops not without Presbyters, from the Testimonies of Cyprian, and Fermilian.

Numb. 1. AFter the authority of Mr. Beza backt with that of the Divines at the Isle of Wight, is added, in the second place, the authority of Dr. Reynolds, who as he hath a Letter in print against the Divine Right of Episcopacy, so he acknowledgeth also in his conference with Hart, Dial. 3. That this Angel was persona singularis: For he saith,

2. The whole place of Dr. Reynolds is set down at large by the Archbishop of Armagh in the front of his learned Dissertation of the Original of Bishops and Metropolitanes, and I shall not need here to recite it, being of some length, and indeed nothing in it defined or expresst of his opinion, that the President, when he was made such, either continued to be equal with the rest of the Presbyters, or lasted but for a time, so as the Prolocutor of an Assembly doth; I am sure he affirms him to have had the Presidentship (not among, but) over Elders (which I suppose must imply some power) and that this was he that in the Primitive Church the Fathers called Bishop, and applies to him the mentions of Bishops made by S^t Cyprian (and Cornelius) of whose notion of Bishops, that it belongs not to a bare Prolocutor of an Assembly, nay, that in nothing it differeth from ours, I am sufficiently assured, and so will the Reader by what is cited from him Dissert. 3. c. 3. §. 13. And because from some other intimations in this Book

* Appnd. p. 229. † I see there is need of it, I shall here πρὸς πλείονα out of many, mention this one evidence more.

In

In the 60. Epistle to Rogatian a Bishop, who had been wronged and contumeliously used by a Deacon of his Church, and had written an account of it to Cyprian and the * annual Council of Bishops with him, Cyprian returns this Answer, that it was his humility to make this complaint to the Council, Cum pro Episcopatûs vigore, & Cathedræ authoritate, haberes potestatem, quî possis de illo statim vindicari, when by force of his Episcopal power, and by authority of his Chair, he had power himself to inflict punishment on him immediately, and that punishment afterwards specified, ut eum deponas vel abstineas, either to depose him or suspend him. 3.

Here it was a part of Rogatian's Episcopal power, without any joyning with him, to judge and censure the inferior Officers of the Church, and they were bound honorem sacerdotis agnoscere & Episcopo præposito suo — as it follows in that Epistle, to acknowledge the honour of their Priest, and with full humility make satisfaction to the Bishop which is set over them. All power in the hands of one set over all, call'd promiscuously, Priest and Bishop in Cyprian's stile. 4.

And therefore when in the Appendix to this Book, these men to prove that Ordination by Bishops without the assistance of Presbyters was always forbidden and opposed, tell us of Aurelius being ordained by Cyprian, and his Collegues, Ep. 33. and then assure us from Ep. 58. that by his Collegues he means his Presbyters (where yet there is no other proof of it, but the using of these words in the Inscription of the Epistle, Cyprianus cum Collegis, and Ego & collegæ, Cyprian with his collegues, and I and my Collegues.) This is a great but discernible fallacy put upon the Reader, as will soon appear, 1. If we but observe that the 33 Epistle, where he tells of Aurelius, was written by Cyprian to his Presbyters, and so they are the persons whom he advertiseth, what he and his Collegues had done, and so sure were not those Collegues that did it with him. Or secondly, if for the understanding Cyprian's notion of Collegues, Ep. 58. we shall but look forward to the next Epistle 59. for that will fully discover it, being this, Cyprianus & cæteri Collegæ qui in Concilio affuerunt numero LXVI. where Cyprians Collegues are evidently the 66. Bishops that were in Council with him. And so S. Austin in his 28. Epistle to S. Hierome, mentioning this very Epistle, saith, Cyprianus cum Coepiscopis suis, Cyprian with his fellow Bishops; An irrefragable evidence that these his Collegues were Bishops. 5.

The like might be also observed of the Testimony out of Firmilian, which they there subjoyn, of the Seniores and Præpositi that have power of ordaining, by whom, say they, the Presbyters as well as the Bishops are understood; But again 'tis clear by the express words of the Epistle, that by them are meant the Bishops in their annual Council; Necessario apud nos fit ut per singulos annos, Seniores & Præpositi in unum conveniamus — 'Tis necessary that every year we the Elders and Governors should meet together to dispose and order those things which are committed to our care; adding concerning the Church (in opposition to Hereticks) that all power and grace is placed in it, ubi præsident majores natu, qui & Baptizandi & manum imponendi & ordinandi possident potestatem, Wherein the Elders præside, and have power of Baptizing, absolving and ordaining, an evident description of the Bishops. But this by the way, as an essay, what their testimonies out of the Fathers, scattered sometimes in this Book, would be found to be, if this were a place to examine them. 6.

Lastly, Dr Reinolds acknowledges another President even among Bishops, the Bishop of the chiefest City in the Province, and so a Metropolitan. All which are contrary enough to the pretensions of the Presbyterians (what amends he hath made them in his Printed Letter, I know not.) 7.

Yet after all this, there lies no obligation upon us to regulate our Doctrine by Doctor Reinolds's Scheme in this matter, being sufficiently instructed by the Primitive Records and practice, what kind of power and dignity belonged to the Πρῶτος or President among them, the very same that we now pretend to be the Bishops due, And if Christ's Letter were addrest to the Angel, as to such a Πρῶτος or President, 'tis all that we desire, to erect our fabrick of Episcopacy on this one place, if there were not (as there are) others able to support the weight of it. 8.

And so we see what reasons have been brought to make good their second head of Answers, of which we had promise that they were solid and every way sufficient answers, and yet in the issue there is nothing so much as offered toward it, save only the testimony of Master Beza, the Divines at the Isle of Wight (which is by interpretation themselves) and Dr Reinolds, who yet is not perfectly of their party neither. 9.

SECT. XVI.

Of the Churches of Asia being Metropolitical. Of the paucity of believers.

HAving thus done, they say It is objected by some men that the seven Cities, in which these seven Asian Churches had their seat, were all of them Metropolitical, and so had relation to the rest of the Towns and Cities of Asia, as unto daughters rising under them, and that therefore these Churches were Metropolitical Churches, and their Angels Metropolitical Bishops. Numb. 1.

How this comes to be styled an objection, I cannot well guess, or what it is, against which it is thought to be objected. The truth of it, as far as any Episcopal person I know, is interested in it, is this; It is not only evident of the Angels of the seven Asian Churches, that they were Bishops, which is sufficient for us against the Assemblers, but there is over and above that, all reason to deem them Stars of a first magnitude, i. e. Bishops of Mother-Cities, Metropolitanes, and that very pertinent to be urged in this matter of the Asian Angels, not to secure the proofs of Episcopacy taken from thence, but to render a reason why in all Asia but seven Churches and their Bishops are named there. To this purpose the discourse is inlarged (above what it needed to have been) Dissert. 4, 5. to set down the nature of Metropolitans, the exemplars of them among the Jews, the expresses of the Institution in the Apostles writings, and the signal evidences of it in the Primitive Church, and the Ancient Canons in the Council of Nice and Antioch, and Ephesus, all owning them as Primitive and Apostolical Institutions, and all this exemplified in Jerusalem, in Antioch, in Rome, in Alexandria, in Gortyna of Creet, and at length in all the seven Churches of Asia. 2.

What

3. What is there thus set down, if it have not perfect truth in it, I shall be very glad to see the weak parts of that discourse discovered, and therefore though I never proposed or meant it as an Objection of ours against the Presbyterians, having no need of such auxiliaries, and the whole matter being sufficiently proved without it, and this only added ex abundanti, yet I shall most willingly attend their motions, and see what answers they will adapt to this Objection, as they call it.

4. And first they answer, that it will hardly be proved that these seven Cities were all of them Metropolitical Cities in S^t John's dayes, And the situation of most of them, lying near together on the Sea side, makes it very improbable.

5. To this I reply, that for five of them, Ephesus, Smyrna, Sardis, Pergamus, and Laodicæa, Pliny, Lib.5.c.29,30. that lived and wrote in the beginning of Vespasian's reign, is a competent witness, that they were Cities wherein the Roman Proconsuls fixt their Courts or Seats of Judicature, and administred justice there to all the Cities about them, and that is the interpretation of a chief City or Metropolis, in the secular account, and agreeably Ulpian mentions Ephesus as the chief of these Metropoles. And for the other Greg. l.5. c.21* two, Philadelphia and Thyatira, the latter of these by * Ptolomy, the former by the Council of Constantinople sub Menâ, is punctually affirmed to be a Metropolis. To these are added other evidences and reasons, and the Lord Archbishop of Armagh hath written (besides his Original of Metropolitanes) a very learned Dissertation of the Lydian Asia, on purpose to clear this matter.

6. And when a thing is so largely proved already, and when a satisfactory proof of it in any one of the seven Cities is abundantly sufficient to the asserting of Metropolitanes, (for then the Angel of that one was a Metropolitan) 'tis then certainly a very incompetent confutation barely to say, that it will hardly be proved, that these seven Cities were all of them Metropolitical Cities in Saint John's days, for if it be proved, it matters not how hardly, and if any one were so in St. John's dayes, it matters not, if possibly some other were not; that one was a Metropolitical Angel, which is all we need insist on.

7. And for the Argument to make it improbable, drawn from the situation of the Cities, that is as infirm; for this, as all other controversies of matters of fact, must be waged by authorities of those which were likely to know the truth, and to testifie aright, and to those we have all reason to adhere, and not to be moved by arguments that seem probable to those that live sixteen hundred years after, and are not perhaps so perfect Masters of the Geography of the place as duly to be able to judge even what is in that respect most probable.

8. Nay for the distances of these Cities, though I have not now Mr. Brightman by me, yet my notes out of him tell me, that in his scale of furlongs, Pergamus was distant from Smyrna five hundred and forty Furlongs, i.e. about sixty eight English miles, and Ephesus from Smyrna three hundred and twenty i.e. about forty miles, and Thyatira from Pergamus eighty English miles, which is a distance very reconcileable with their being Metropoles.

9. But they are content to suppose this was true, and then have answers ready another way, 1. That it is no good argument from the greatness of the Cities to infer the greatness of the Churches, for though the Cities were great, yet the Churches were but small, and the number of believers very few in comparison of the rest of the people.

10. To this I reply, First, By concession, that in all places and times the greatness of the Church cannot absolutely be concluded from the greatneß of the City, because it is possible that a great City may have utterly resisted the faith, and a lesser City received it; or again a greater City, that hath received the Faith in some of the Members, may yet have fewer believers in it, than another City, which is not so great. This therefore is not our way of concluding, from the bare greatness of the Cities, to infer the great number of believers in them.

11. Our way of concluding is this; Paul had spent three years, Act. 20. 31. in this Lydian or Proconsular Asia, ver. 18. In this time he had pursued his work very diligently and zealously, not ceasing to warn every one night and day with tears, and herein his harvest was proportionable to his labour; After two years space and upwards spent at Ephesus, it is said, ver. 19. that by the continuance of his preaching and gathering Disciples, all they that dwelt in Asia, heard the word of the Lord, both Jews and Greeks, and though many were hardned and believed not, and spake evil of that way, ver. 9. yet ver. 17. by some extraordinary works of his, which were made known to all the Jews and Greeks dwelling at Ephesus, fear fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified, a conversion in a manner general, and therefore it follows, and many that believed — ver. 18. and so mightily grew the word of God and prevailed, ver. 20. Whereupon Saint Paul himself speaking of these successes, calls it a great door and an effectual, 1 Cor. 16.9. which at Ephesus, v. 8. was opened unto him.

12. From hence we conclude, and sure safely may, First, That in Asia generally, and especially in Ephesus there was a great number of Christians, before this time of Christs Epistle, (which is not a concluding it barely from the greatness of that or any other Cities of Asia) Secondly from hence, together with Ephesus's being in the secular account (the Notitiæ Imperiales) a Metropolis, where the Assizes were kept, we conclude that Ephesus was in the Christian account also a Metropolis, and the chief of all Asia; and this I hope is not so improbable infirm a way of concluding, as the other imposed on us seemed to be.

13. Thirdly, From hence, and from other exemplifications of it (as that Trallis and Magnesia, which appear to be under the Metropolis of Ephesus, are by Ignatius written to as Episcopal Sees, in our present notion of the word Bishop) we conclude that other Cities of Asia beside these seven, had received the Christian faith, and were certainly taken care for by Paul, which had planted it among them, and agreeably had Rulers setled in them, i.e. Bishops subordinate to the Metropolitans. And all these inferences, I doubt not, will appear regular enough, and I should farther enlarge on them, if there were any thing in the answer, which could render it needful or seasonable.

14. As for the paucity of Christians in those times in comparison of the rest of the people, that cannot be pertinently opposed to our pretensions, because still the number of Christians in a great City, might bear the same proportion to the number of the Christians in the smaller Cities, that the people in the one did to the people in the other, one thousand bearing the same proportion to one hundred, that an hundred thousand doth to ten thousand.

And

And it being the affirmation of Clemens, that the Apostles in each City, where they received any pro- 15.
selytes, though never so few, before their parting constituted a Bishop (with his Deacon) who was to be governor ἀῦ μελλόντων πιστεύειν, of those that should after believe, it follows unquestionably from thence, that in the Cities which had but few Christians, Bishops might be and were constituted, and those very regularly depending on the greater (their Metropolitical) Cities, from whence the faith was derived to them, (as from Ephesus, where Paul chiefly resided, to the Cities about it) and all this without any need of ballancing the parties, or considering what comparison the number of the Christians in one, or the other, bore to the number of the unbelievers in either City. And let this serve by way of Reply to the first branch of the second Answer.

SECT. XVII.

Of modelling Churches according to the Government of the Roman state. Of exemplars of Metropolitans among the Jews. Testimonies of the Apostles instituting Metropolitans.

THeir second answer is, We do not believe that ever it can be proved that the Apostles did model the Go- Numb. 1.
vernment of the Church, according to the Government of the Roman state. This was the after policy of Christian Emperours and Bishops, but no part of Apostolical policy; And therefore it doth not follow, that because there were divers Cities under the jurisdiction of those seven Cities, that therefore there should be divers Churches subordinate to the seven Asian Churches.

That the Apostles, which designed to plant a Church in the Heathen World, should do it in that 2.
manner as would be most advantageous to their end, will not I hope be accounted strange. This generally was, by betaking themselves to the Cities, rather than the villages, and first to the greater Cities, unto which was the most frequent resort, that by that means the faith might be most compendiously and successfully propagated. If a greater City resisted their preaching, or fewer Saints were gathered there, I do not then pretend to prove, or to believe, that that was constituted a Metropolitan Church with superiority over others of greater antiquity, or larger growth in the faith, whatsoever the dignity of it were in the secular account; But when a whole Nation is converted, and the greatest and most populous Cities first, and from thence the sound gone out into all the Region, and lesser Cities in it, that then the Apostles, which certainly constituted Bishops in every believing City (and therefore what is reported to have been done κατ' ἐκκλησίαν in every Church, Acts 14. 23. is appointed to be done κατὰ πόλιν in every City, Tit. 1. 5. should set up the principal Sees in those most Christian Cities, which had formerly the priority in the Roman state, as it is the wisest method, and fittest for the wisest planters to take, so we have all reason to believe it was done particularly in the Lydian or Proconsular Asia, in which there being many more Christian Cities, than those seven, to whom Christ's Epistle is addrest, those are in all reason to be accounted the chief of that Region, and those which are not named, less principal than they; which concurring with what we find recorded in Pliny and Ptolomy, of the account of them in the imperial notitiæ, if it demonstrate not, is yet matter of exceeding great probability, and may perswade with any reasonable man, as long as there is nothing in any degree such, which is offered to be confronted against it.

If that which scandalizeth the Assemblers (for we are left to Divine what it is) be the unfitness that 3.
the Apostles should model the Church according to the Roman state; I shall first demand, how it is possible to imagine a plantation of a Church in any, whether Jewish or Heathen state, without doing somewhat equivalent to this? For suppose Joseph of Arimathea to have (as * Gildas saith) converted the Britannick Church in Tiberius's time, is it to be imagined that he should meddle with the civil power of this Nation, as it stood in respect of it's separation from other Nations, toto divisa Orbe, or with the divisions or distributions of this Nation within it self, into Cities, and Provinces, &c. or go about to innovate any thing in that matter? Is it not certain that it was no part of the Christian faith to be such a judge or divider; but on the other side, that all should remain as it did (in that respect) before the coming of Christianity? And therefore supposing first, That this Nation were governed by a King of its own; is it not certain that this national Church should follow the boundaries of the Nation, and so be model'd according to the government of the (formerly Heathen) Britannick state? And supposing again (what hath already been proved by the testimony of Clemens, and by comparing Act. 14 23. with Tit. 1. 5.) that a Bishop were constituted in every Church, in each City, will there be any reason of doubting but that those Cities being subordinate one to another, according to the customs of the Nation, the Churches in those Cities, and the Bishops in those Churches shall be so also? This I hope will not be deemed an impious compliance with heathenism, or conformity with the World, nay, though the Emperour of Rome (by his conquests here) were the author of these distributions.

* De excid. & Conqu. Brit.

But then secondly, It is already cleared in the Dissertations, that this Ecclesiastick division of Cities 4.
into Mothers and Daughters, Metropoles and inferiour Cities, was by the Apostle copied out from the Jews; as when God commands by Moses, that Judges and Officers should be ordained in every City, Deut. 16. 18. and that in matters of weight and doubt they should resort to Jerusalem, to the Judge and Sanhedrim there, according to which it appears that Jerusalem was the Metropolis of those other Cities, and so is evident, Act. 9. by the story of Saul carrying Letters of Commission from the Sanhedrim there, to the consistories in Damascus, and by many other evidences. So likewise Numb. 3. when three Families of the Levites, the sons of Aaron, were separated for the service of the Tabernacle, and an head or Prince or President of every of these, called נשיא v. 24. 30. 35. Eleazar Aaron's Son is constituted over all these, and styled נשיא נשיאו the head of the heads of the Levites. This is clearly a pattern of the Metropolitanes in the Christian Church, which may therefore own it's derivation from thence, and not from the Heathen models of Government, which yet it was not reasonable to disturb, being found so concordant to, and commodious for it.

And

5. And that what was done in this kind, was done by the Apostles themselves and Apostolical persons, the first founders of Churches, and not only by the after policy (as is suggested) of Christian Emperours and Bishops, might have appeared abundantly by these few testimonies, if they had been worthy to be taken notice of. First, of the Council of Nice, An. Domini 325. not many years after the conversion of Constantine, the first Christian Emperour; the sixth Canon which takes care for the preserving the priviledges of the Metropolitans (by name, that the Bishop of Alexandria should have power over the Churches in Ægypt, Lybia and Pentapolis, that in Antioch and the rest of the Provinces τὰ πρεσβεῖα σώζεσθαι ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις, the priviledges should be preserved to the Churches) begins with this rule τὰ ἀρχαῖα ἔθη κρατείτω, Let the ancient Customes continue in force, which certainly refers to that which was long before the Christian Emperours, and (without any reason of doubting) to the first constitutions of those Churches by S. Mark, and S. Peter, and then the Canon goes on to exact this by way of conformity with other places, with Rome it self, Ἐπειδὴ καὶ τῷ ἐν τῇ Ῥώμῃ ἐπισκόπῳ τοῦτο συνήθες ἐστιν, for this is the custom of force with the Bishop of Rome, and upon these grounds the Canon requires καθόλου universally, that if any man be made a Bishop χωρὶς γνώμης τοῦ Μητροπολίτου, without the judgement of the Metropolitan, he ought not to be Bishop ——

6. So in the 9. Canon of the Council of Antioch, in the year 341. which begins thus, that the Bishop, which presides in the Metropolis, ought to know the Bishops in every Province, and to take care of the whole Province, διὰ τὸ ἐν τῇ Μητροπόλει πανταχόθεν συντρέχειν πάντας τοὺς τὰ πράγματα ἔχοντας, because all that have business, resort from all sides to the Metropolis (which is the very thing we now contend, to be the reason of conforming the Ecclesiastick to the civil models) and then proceeds to forbid other Bishops acting any thing of such a nature without him; this is backt with these words, καλὰ τὸν ἀρχαῖον κρατήσαντα τῶν πατέρων ἡμῶν κανόνα, according to the ancient Canon of our Fathers, which hath been in force, referring again to the immemorial Custom of all Churches since the first Plantation, and not the after-policy of Christian Emperours and Bishops, as is here suggested.

7. Lastly, in the last canon of the Great Council of Ephesus, in the year 431. which is the defining a special matter of Metropolitical right) where the occasion of the controversy is rehearsed, how the Bishop of Antioch invaded the priviledges of the Cypriots, contrary to the ἀρχαῖον ἔθος the ancient Custom, and the Decree is made that the Bishops of Cyprus shall retain them inviolate, καλὰ τοὺς κανόνας τῶν ὁσίων πατέρων, καὶ τὴν ἀρχαίαν συνήθειαν, according to the Canons of the Holy Fathers, and the ancient Custom; The Canon extends it self to all other Dioceses and Provinces, that no Bishop shall meddle with another Province ἐκ ὅσαν ἄνωθεν καὶ ἐξ ἀρχῆς ὑπὸ τὸν αὐτὸν ἦγεν τῶν περὶ αὐτὸν χεῖρα, which was not upward and from the beginning, under his, i. e. his predecessors power, where it is most evident that the Metropolitical power, and primacy Ecclesiastical is derived from the beginning of the Plantation of each Church, and consequently that this was a part of Apostolical policy, and not only an after policy of Christian Emperours, &c.

8. And upon these grounds of probation, I shall be competently secured that this is proved, which they do not believe ever can be, and have no other argument to prove their negative, but their not believing the affirmative.

SECT. XVIII.

Of the objection against Metropoles from the seven Stars in seven Churches.

Numb. 1. OF the same temper is their third answer, that they are fully assured that it can never be made out, that any of these Asian Angels were Archbishops or Bishops over other Bishops, or Bishops over divers setled Churches. The seven Stars are said in Scripture to be fixed in their seven Candlesticks or Churches, not one Star over divers Candlesticks or Churches.

2. What they are already fully assured of, that it can never be made out, I shall have little confidence to perswade them was formerly done to their hands; Otherwise I should hope that by what had long since been said, and hath now been more largely deduced in Reply to their last answer, they might find cause to alter their judgments, and retract their so definitive sentence of full assurance.

3. As for the only appearance of reason, which is here superadded, viz. that the seven Stars are found fixed in seven, not one over divers Churches, this I conceive not to be of any force. For it being by us granted and presumed that each of the seven Asian Angels was Bishop of his particular Church, one of Ephesus, another of Smyrna, &c. it is perfectly reconcileable herewith, that in case these seven were not the only Cities and Churches in Asia (as it is certain they were not; all Asia, consisting of many more Cities, being before this converted to the Faith) all the other might have dependance on these seven.

4. For this we know, that two Bishops in England, that were each of them fixt in one City, for example in Canterbury or York, had yet each of them a superiority or Metropolitical power over divers other Cities, and when any Record styles one of them Bishop of Canterbury, as the Scripture doth Angel of Ephesus, we should sure acknowledge it a very infirm inference from the words of that Record, to conclude that being Bishop of Canterbury, he could not be Metropolitan of London, Rochester, &c.

5. And this is the very parallel to the present instance, and if it were not invalid enough, by being a bare negative argument [they are not said in Scripture to be one Star over divers Churches] (all things that are, are not said in Scripture; those Angels have not therefore no names, because they are not there recorded) this parallel instance, which supposes the contrary to their pretensions, would be sufficient to invalidate it.

SECT.

SECT. XIX.

Of the use of the word Bishop for Archbishop in Tertullian: Of Angel in Christs Epistle.

A Fourth Answer, or rather confutation, is added, That if this opinion were true, then Tertullian did not do well in saying that St. John made Polycarp Bishop of Smyrna, but he should rather have said that he made him Archbishop. And our Saviour Christ had not given to these seven Angels their due Titles, for he must have written to the Angel of the Church of Ephesus, together with all those Churches in the Cities subordinate to Ephesus. And so likewise of the other six. Numb. 1.

To this I reply, that the affirming the seven Angels to have been Metropolitanes, no way obligeth us to find fault either with Tertullians or our Saviour's style. Not with Tertullian's, for first an Arch-Bishop is a Bishop, though dignified above some others of that order. Secondly, Supposing Smyrna to be a Metropolis (as no doubt, if it were, Tertullian knew and supposed it to be) then his styling Polycarp Bishop of Smyrna, is equivalent to his calling him a Metropolitan or Archbishop, As, acknowledging Canterbury to be a Metropolitical See in England, the affirming William Laud to be constituted Bishop of Canterbury, is all one, as to affirm him Archbishop. 2.

Thus when * Chrysostome saith of Titus, that ὁλόκληρος νῆσος καὶ τοσούτων ἐπισκόπων κρίσις, an intire Island and the judgment of so many Bishops was committed to him, what is this but to affirm Titus Archbishop of Crete? And yet † Eusebius, who believed this, and adverted to it, as much as Chrysostome, uses this phrase, ἀφ' ὅτι Κρήτης ἐκκλησιῶν ἐπισκοπὼν ἐπίνευσα, that he was Bishop of the Churches of Creet, calling him Bishop distinctly, though by the mention of the Churches in the plural, 'tis evident he meant the same that we do by Arch-Bishop. 3. * In Tit. 1. Hom. 1. † *Lib.*3. *cap.*4.

So again * Eusebius of Irenæus, that he τὰς κατὰ Γαλλίαν παροικίας ἐπεσκόπει, was Bishop of the Provinces of France, which must needs signifie Archbishop of Lyons, for so he was. And 'tis certain that other of the Antients use the word Ἀρχιεπίσκοπος Arch-Bishop, of those which were no otherwise qualified for that title, as when Saint Cyprian the Bishop of Carthage, under which the whole Province of Africk is comprehended, is by the † Council of Constantinople called Ἀρχιεπίσκοπος τῆς Ἀφρων χώρας, Archbishop of the region of Africk. 4. * *Lib.*5.*cap.*23. † In Trullo. can. 2.

The same answer will competently suffice, for the reconciling Christ's style and ours; for supposing Ephesus to have been a Metropolis, the writing to the Angel of that Church, implies writing to those other Churches in the Cities subordinate to Ephesus, and need not be more fully expresst, as when the Apostle wrote to the Church of Corinth, and not only so, but to all the Saints (and so all the Churches) in all Achaia, 2 Cor. 1 1. 'tis certain that the former Epistle was written to those very same Churches (viz. all under the Metropolis of Corinth) and yet it is inscribed to the Church of God which is at Corinth, 1 Cor. 1. 1. without mentioning of Achaia, save only in a general indefinite phrase, with all that in every place call on the name of Jesus. 5.

Secondly, The word in Christ's Epistle being not Bishop but Angel, is not at all lyable to this exception; For why may not an Arch-Bishop be as fitly called an Angel, as a Bishop would be? nay if it be remembred what was formerly cited out of Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. 6. that there are seven Angels which have the greatest power, by him styled πρωτόγονοι Ἀγγέλων ἄρχοντες, the first-born rulers of the Angels; parallel to the phrase in Dan. 7. 10. 13. שרים הראשנים the head-Lords or chief Princes, or, as we ordinarily stile them, the Archangels, of which number Michael is there named to be one, There will then be more than a tolerable propriety of speech in Christ's style, a most exact critical notation of their being Arch-bishops; and withal, a farther account of Tertullian's calling Polycarp a Bishop of Smyrna, though he were Arch-Bishop, just as the Archangels in Daniel, are more than once called Angels in the Revelation. 6.

For a close of this matter they are pleased to add their Character, not over-benign of those by whom this device, as they style it, was found out for the honour of Archiepiscopacy, [that they did aspire unto that dignity.] 7.

If hereby be meant the Lord Primate of Ireland in his discourse of the Original of Bishops, this character can have no propriety in it, he having quietly enjoyed that dignity many years before the writing hereof. If it be designed for a reproach to me, I shall elude the blow by not thinking it such. For as at a time when Episcopacy it self was by the Parliament abolisht, (and that Act of severity actually put in execution) it had been a great folly in any to hope that he should ever attain to that Office of Dignity in the Church, (and what ever other follies I have been guilty of, truly that was none of them) so I think there could not a point of time more commodiously have been chosen in the space of above sixteen hundred years, wherein a man might have better secured a Discourse for Bishops and Metropolitanes, from the Censure of aspiring to either of those Dignities, than was that, wherein that Book was published. 8.

To this if I add by way of retortion, that it is evident that they which write this Jus Divinum Ministerii Evangelici do aspire every one of them to their part of a Ruling Presbytery, which their brethren that have not those Ambitions, are far from thinking to have any Divine Stamp upon it, I shall have given an account of the unskilfulness of their Reproaches, as well as of the invalidity of their Answers. 9.

As for the fear which their Discourse on this matter suggests to their more moderate brethren, that if a Jus Divinum be stampt on Archbishops and Primates, and Patriarchs, they may be forced by the same proportion to put a Divine stamp upon the Pope himself, I perswade my self that I have given the ingenious Reader a satisfactory account of the inconsequence hereof, in a Discourse of Schism, to which I shall refer him, if he need, or desire farther trouble or direction in this business. 10.

SECT. XX.

Of Division into Parishes, and Union into Dioceses. Of Diocesan Bishops in the Apostles dayes. Elders in every Church, Act. 14. Elders of the Church, Act. 20. That place vindicated from exception.

Numb. 1. After all this, they add a fourth (whether Answer or suppletory Consideration) for the conclusion of this Discourse concerning the Asian Angels, and I shall follow them to that more cheerfully, because it looks like a conclusion.

2. It is this, That it can never be proved that these Asian Angels were Bishops in a Prelatical sense, much less Arch-Bishops and Metropolitanes. For it is believed upon all parts, that believers in great Cities, were not divided into set and fixt Congregations and Parishes, till long after the Apostles dayes, and that Parishes were not united into Dioceses till two hundred and sixty years after Christ. And therefore sure we are that there could not be Diocesan Churches and Diocesan Bishops formally so called in the Apostles dayes; These Angels were Congregational, not Diocesan. In the beginning of Christianity the number of Believers, even in the greatest Cities were so few, that they might well meet ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ in the same place. And these were called the Church of the City, and therefore to ordain Elders κατ' ἐκκλησίαν and κατὰ πόλιν, are all one in Scripture.

3. To the Preface of this conclusion, that it cannot be proved ——] it is again very sufficient to answer, that when a proposition hath already been proved so far, that no answer hath been rendred, which at all satisfies, or invalidates the force of the proofs, it is very unlike Artists to say, that it cannot be proved. Nay, although some inconvenience were producible, which would press our assertion yet the old rule would require it's place, incommodum non solvit argumentum, the mention of an inconvenience insuing, doth not take off the force of an argument.

4. But we need not that warines here; the reason which is here annext to prove that it cannot be proved, is of no force against us; For first, As Congregations and Parishes are synonymous in their style, so I yield that Believers in great Cities were not at first divided into Parishes, while the number of the Christians in a City was so small, that they might well assemble in the same place, and so needed no partitions or divisions.

5. But what disadvantage is this to us, who affirm that one Bishop, not a College of Presbyters, presided in this one Congregation, and that the Believers in the Region and Villages about, did belong to the care of that single Bishop of the City-Church? May not these be ruled by a Bishop as well before, as after the division into Parishes? Or is this division more necessary to the Government by one Bishop in each City, than to the Government of more Presbyters in every City? In all reason the division of this one into several Parishes, should make Presbyters more necessary after than before such division, that each Parish might have one Presbyter, to officiate among them in things of daily use; and upon that account I suppose it was, that when the number of Believers was so far increased, that all the Christians of a City could not meet commodiously in one place, and when the Regions and Villages so abounded with Proselytes, that in respect of them also it was necessary, then the Bishop of each City thought fit to constitute Presbyters, in our modern notion of them, many in every City, and many in every Region, one in every Village, though as yet the word Parish, in our modern sense, was not come into the World.

6. And so this is far from being Argumentative against us; it is rather useful to confirm what is asserted by us, that it is against the whole Scheme which the Scriptures or first Writers give us of Churches, to imagine that in every City there was by the Apostles a College of Presbyters constituted, when as they agree to assure us, a Bishop and his Deacon were sufficient at the first (so thin) Plantations.

7. So again when they take it for granted, that Parishes were not united into Dioceses till two hundred and sixty years after Christ; I shall ask first, whether they were sooner divided into Classes, &c. and if not, what they have gained to their Jus Divinum by this observation?

8. But then secondly, 'Tis clear that there might be Dioceses before this division into Parishes, in our modern notion; For what is a Diocese but a Church in a City with the Suburbs and Territory or Region belonging to it? And this certainly might be, and remain under the Government of a single Bishop, as well before, as after any more minute distributions into such, as we now call Parishes.

9. For it is one thing for the Church of this City to be divided from the Church of every other City, another thing for the same Church to be divided into many Assemblies; The first is it which is required for the setting up of Government; and of any such Church so bounded, there may be a Bishop, and that whole Church shall be his Diocese, and so he a Diocesan Bishop, though as yet this Church be not subdivided into more several Assemblies.

10. And therefore when they add, that there could not be Diocesan Churches and Bishops formally so called in the Apostles dayes, unless they have some little equivocation in the word Diocesan, it is most certain they have no reason on which to found their confidence; For that there was a Church in each City, and it's territory (howsoever governed by one or more) is most certain, and equally affirmed by them and us, and equally their interest and ours, that it be affirmed. As for the use of the word Διοίκησις, that hath oft varied, and hath sometimes been of a larger, sometimes of a narrower signification, and so hath Παροικία the original of our Parish also; but I hope our contentions must not be always about words, when the matter is sufficiently agreed on among us, and the words sufficiently explained to express that matter.

11. And therefore when they add, these Angels were congregational, not Diocesan, the reply is obvious, they were every of them Angels of a Church in a City, having authority over the Region adjacent, and pertaining to that City, and so as Church and Congregation are all one (as in ordinary use in all languages they are) they were Congregational and Diocesan also.

12. What follows of the paucity of believers in the greatest Cities, and their meeting in one place, as also of of a Church and City being all one, is willingly granted by us, and hath not the least appearance of being useful to their pretensions, or hurtful to ours, and therefore I have no temptation to make any the least Reply to it.

That which next follows, though it concern us not to examine it, our interest being equally secured, be it true or false, yet I cannot but take some notice of it in passing, because it is a little extraordinary. 13.

Afterwards, say they, we conceive that belivers became so numerous in these great Cities, as that they could not conveniently meet in one place; Thus it was in the Church of Jerusalem, Act. 2. 41. and 4. 4. and 5. 14. and thus possibly it might be in most of these Asian Churches in S. John's time. 14.

Here certainly the word [Afterwards] is relative, and refers to the Antecedent in the former Paragraph, and that is, [In the beginning of Christianity] Hereupon I demand, what time is that which they call [the beginning of Christianity?] Is it that wherein Christ continued on the Earth? If so, they will easily believe us, that we do not think, that Diocesan Bishops were placed in the Church, within that period. If it be the time immediately following the Resurrection of Christ, when the Apostles began to preach and propagate the Faith, then how come they to divide that time, which is spoken of, Act. 2. 41. from that time of the beginning of Christianity, by this word [Afterward] for tis certain what is there storied of the 3000. Converts, is the effect of the first Sermon preached by any of the Apostles immediately upon the descent of the Holy Ghost upon them, and the gift of Tongues, the wonderment whereof brought those so many Auditors together. 15.

So secondly, when they say of this point of time, Act. 2. 41. The believers were so numerous that they could not conveniently meet in one place, This is contrary to the evidence of the Text, which saith expresly v. 44. That all the believers were ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, which in the last Paragraph, they interpreted, meeting in one and the same place. The like might be said of the other places Act. 4. 4. and 5. 14. for certainly, as yet, though the number of Believers increased, yet they were not distributed into several Congregations. But this by the way, being assured that this disquisition is perfecty extrinsecal to the matter in debate between us, because as at Jerusalem the antients are clear in affirming, that soon after Christ's Ascension, * Peter and James and John chose James the just, the Brother of the Lord, and constituted him Bishop of Jerusalem, which is all that we need pretend to from the story of that Church, so it matters not much, at what point of time that was done, whether at the very beginning or afterwards; much less, how soon it was that that Church was distributed into several divided Assemblies, the Creation of the Bishop not at all depending on that, as hath formerly been shewed. 16.

* Πέτρον, καὶ Ἰάκωβον τὸν Ἰωάννου — μὴ ἐπιδικάζειν δόξης, ἀλλ' Ἰάκωβον τὸν Δίκαιον ἐπίσκοπον Ἱεροσολύμων ἑλέσθαι. Euseb. Eccl. Hist. l. 2. c. 1. Exc. Clem. Hypotyp. 5.

Hence will it appear to how very little purpose are those cautions added, and observations made in the remaining part of this sixth Chapter. 17.

Thus, say they, possibly it might be (i. e. the believers be so numerous in great Cities, that they could not conveniently meet in one place) in most of these Asian Churches in S. John's time. But yet notwithstanding all this, there are three things diligently to be observed; First, that these meeting places were frequented promiscuously and indistinctly, and that believers were not divided into set and fixed Churches or Congregations in the Apostles days. 18.

But first I demand, Is there any truth in this observation? was not the Church of Jerusalem in the Apostles days a set and fixed Church, so as to be perfectly severed from the Church of Alexandria and Ephesus? Was not James the Brother of the Lord Bishop of the one, and not of the other? 19.

Secondly, why was this for the Presbyterians interest to be so diligently observed? If one of these Churches were not thus divided and severed from others, how could it be governed by a Presbytery, as they pretend it was? Must it not be a determinate fixed body that is governed by any whether Bishop or Presbyters? I profess not to be able to discern by my most diligent observation, why this was so necessary to be so diligently observed. 20.

Secondly, (say they, it must be as diligently observed) that notwithstanding these different meeting places, yet the Believers of one City made but one Church in the Apostles days, as is evident in the Church of Jerusalem, which is called a Church, not Churches, Act. 8. 1. & 15. 6. & 22. 16. And so likewise it is called the Church of Ephesus, and the Church of Thyatira, &c. not Churches, &c. 21.

This Observation I acknowledge to have perfect truth in it, and not to be confutable in any part (save only that the two latter Texts are certainly misquoted, and not rectified in the Errata) and therefore instead of rejecting, I shall imbrace it, and from thence conclude, that there is no manner of incongruity in assigning of one Bishop to one Church, and so one Bishop in the Church of Jerusalem, because it is a Church not Churches, being forced to acknowledge that where there were more Churches there were more Bishops, and so likewise one Angel of Ephesus, and of Thyatira, &c. This I suppose was not the thing they meant to infer from hence, nor indeed do I conceive it necessarily inferred from (only very agreeable to) the oneness of each Church, without other arguments to joyn with it. But I am still to seek, and demand, what advantage accrues to their cause, or disadvantage to ours by this observation? 22.

But then thirdly they add, that this Church in the City was governed in the Apostles days by the Common Council of Presbyters or Bishops. 23.

This indeed were worth their diligent observing, if it could be descried, and would abundantly recompence them for the no profit their two former observations brought them in, if it could be obtained by all their diligence. But this being the τὸ ζητούμενον, the only thing in question betwixt us, whether the Church in each City was in the Apostles days governed by the Common Council of Presbyters or Bishops, or by one single Bishop, called sometimes πρεσβύτερος Elder (as that signifies simply a Governor, not with restriction, a member of a Colledge of Governours) this I say being the only question in debate between us, it must not be any farther yielded to them, than their proofs and evidences will enforce it: And these of what virtue they are, must now appear by the view of them. And the first they produce is this. 24.

The Apostles went about ordaining Presbyters in every Church, Act. 14. 23. 25.

26. But surely this is an infirm argument. Every Church signifies without question more Churches than one, viz. Derbe, Lystra, Iconium, Antioch, v. 20. 21. And if in each of those, one Πρεσβύτερος be supposed to be ordained, that certainly will satisfie the importunity of that Text, and the mention of πρεσβυτέρους Elders in the plural, viz. four Elders in those so many Churches. And if, because ἐκκλησίαν is in the singular number, they therefore think that those plural Elders must be ordained in each of those Churches; This is too gross a mistake for Scholars to be guilty of, it being certain that that is not the importance of the phrase καθ' ἐκκλησίαν, any more than of the English [Church by Church] or [in every Church] i. e. more Elders in more Churches, one in every one.

27. Their next proof is from Act. 20. 17. Paul called for the Elders of the Church of Ephesus (one of these seven Churches) and calls them Bishops, and commits the whole government of the Church to them; The like may be said of the other six Churches.

28. What may be said of Ephesus, I grant may be said of the other six Churches, but the Text no where affirms it of Ephesus, and so the analogy will no way prove it of the rest. All that the Text saith, is this, And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the Elders of the Church. This is not to say the Elders (as that signifies Presbyters in our modern notion) of the one City, and so Church of Ephesus, but the Elders, i. e. Bishops either of the Asian Church of that whole Region, or at least of the Ephesine Province, the neighbouring Bishops of the Churches or Cities that were under that Metropolis of Ephesus, who by St. Paul's sending his summons to Ephesus, the chief City of the one, and chief Metropolis of the other (which consequently had daily means of communicating intelligence to those other Cities) might thus most commodiously be advertised of St. Paul's coming, and provide to meet him at Miletus.

29. That this is no strain'd interpretation or answer, is elsewhere evidenced, and may summarily appear by these two testimonies; one of Irenæus here formerly mentioned, l. 3. c. 14. ab Epheso & reliquis proximis civitatibus convocatos esse, that they were called from Ephesus and the rest of the neareſt Cities adjoining to it; This is an expres evidence, which being allowed puts the whole matter out of question. And although in a matter of fact, a testimony of so credible a person that lived so near the times, being an auditour of Polycarp the first Bishop of Smyrna, and is not contradicted by any contemporary, is of a competent authority, and need not any other Topicks to assist it; yet for the removing all possible prejudices from it, and rendring it yet more indubitable. I shall a little farther enlarge for the confirming of it.

30. And first the Apostle at his meeting with them, v. 18. begins in this style, ye know from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons; An address to them, either as to the Elders of Asia indefinitely, as many as could conveniently come to Miletus at that time, or at least as to more than to the Elder (or Elders, if that could be truly pretended) of one City of Asia, peculiarly, or exclusively to all others.

31. So again v. 25. And now behold I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the Kingdom of God, shall see my face no more; This evidently addresses the speech not only to the inhabitants of one City, but to all those (as many as were then present) among whom he had gone preaching the Faith of Christ, and that we know was done by him to the other Cities, and not only to that of Ephesus, καὶ τὸν παρόδον τὸν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ διαπορεύων κύκλον, in passage (though not so solemnly as at Ephesus) going through all the Region and preaching the Gospel to all, saith Oecumenius on 2 Joh. And so 'tis expressly said Act. 19. 21. that after the two years and three months spent at Ephesus, ἐπέσχε χρόνον εἰς τὴν Ἀσίαν, he staid and spent some time in Asia, And accordingly v. 26. Demetrius truly saith, that not only at Ephesus but almost throughout all Asia, Paul had perswaded and turned away the people.

32. Secondly then, the Faith being before this time successfully propagated through all Asia, and not only in this one City of Ephesus, there were without question Churches accordingly gathered and compacted in many other Cities, as well as in Ephesus, before this time of Paul's parting never to see them again. And not only in the other Metropolis, (six more of which are owned by the Objectors, Smyrna and the rest Rev. 1.) but also in the lesser Cities, which were not Metropolitical, and yet more especially in those Cities which were neareſt Ephesus, and which as belonging to that Metropolis, had frequent resort thither to the Assises which were there kept, Act. 19. 38. and so must be supposed to have received special influences from the Apostle's residing there for the space of two years and three months, Act. 19. 8. 10.

33. To which purpose it must again be remembred, that as Timothy is by Eusebius styled τῆς ἐν Ἐφέσῳ παροικίας ἐπίσκοπος, Bishop of the Province that belongs to Ephesus, l. 3. c. 4. which is all one as to make that a Metropolis over other Cities, and accordingly in the order of Metropolitical Sees at the end of Codinus, the Bishop of Ephesus is called ὁ Ἐφέσου ὑπέρτιμος, ἢ Ἐξαρχος πάσης Ἀσίας, Primate of all Asia, so Ignatius in Trajan's time is by joint consent of the antients affirmed to have written Epistles to two Churches, Magnesia and Trallis, which are known to be Cities under this Metropolis of Ephesus, and to have named the Bishops of each, Damas of the one, and Polybius of the other.

34. And as there is no question among any, but that Ignatius wrote such Epistles to those Churches (Salmasius cites that to the * Trallians expressly as the Epistle of Ignatius, which certainly he would never have done, if he had doubted whether ever Ignatius wrote to them; and indeed, all that is questioned by him and D. Blondell is but this, whether the Epistles now extant under his name, be genuine or no, not whether Ignatius, as all Writers accord, wrote seven Epistles, of which these which we now speak of, are two) so there is no ground of imagining that they were of a later plantation, than that which is here recorded to be wrought by St. Paul, Act. 19. All Asia having then heard the Faith, v. 10. and received it in a remarkable manner, v. 20. and a great door, saith St. Paul, being opened to him at Ephesus peculiarly, which must needs have influence on the Cities next adjoining to it in a special manner.

* Anacletum & Clementem Petri Ministros facit Ignatius in Epistolâ ad Trallenses Wal. Mess. p. 222.

35. To this I shall add thirdly, that as † Aristides saith of Ephesus, that it was ταμιεῖον κοινὸν τῆς Ἀσίας, the common magazine or store-house of Asia, ἢ τῆς χρείας καταφυγὴ, their refuge for all wants, so it must needs be the fittest way of conveying intelligence speedily to all the Cities of Asia, especially the proxima civitates, as Irenæus said, the Cities next adjoining, and so most commodious to assemble those other other Bishops to Paul at Miletus, and not only him, or those that are supposed to have resided at Ephesus.

And accordingly we find in Eusebius, that the Epistle of Antoninus Pius concerning the Christians, 36. which was to be communicated to all Asia, προεκλήθη ἐν Ἐφέσῳ ἐν τῷ κοινῷ τῆς Ἀσίας, was proclaimed ✱ Eccl. Hist. l. 4. divulged at Ephesus, in the common meeting of Asia, as the readiest way to make it universally c. 23.

All which being premised, and withal that there is no reason to imagine, that St. Paul at the time 37.
of his final parting, (taking his solemn last leave) of them v. 38. should not so much consider, as to call for, or desire to see any of the rest of his Sons, the Governours of the Inferiour Churches, to whom he had committed that numerous flock (which was now so universally in such danger of Wolves) save only those of the one Church, of that one City of Ephesus (supposing there had been more than one there :) This will be a very competent confirmation of Irenæus his testimony, that indeed thus it was, as he hath delivered, that the Bishops of the Cities nearest adjoining to Ephesus (as many as by summons from thence could speedily be called together, in all reason the Bishops of the Cities which were under that Metropolis) were sent for to meet the Apostle at Miletus, and accordingly met him there.

The second testimony is that maxime of the Greek Scholiast on 1 Pet. 1. 5. Πρεσβυτέρους γὰρ τοὺς ὁπισκόπους ἡ τῶν Πράξεων βίβλος οἶδε λεγομένους. The Book of the Acts calls the Bishops Elders; which being 38.
avow'd by me in the Dissertations, and cleared through all the places in the Acts, they ought, by all Laws of disputing, either to have endeavoured the refuting of what is there said, or the proving that Πρεσβύτεροι Elders must needs there signifie Presbyters in the modern notion, which having not here attempted to do, there is no kind of force in what is here dictated, nothing said but what had been long since largely and clearly answered.

Yet because in the next Chapter, where this place of the Acts is viewed again, one argument I see 39.
produced in favour of their pretensions, which they found in an observation of mine, I shall think my self concern'd to give an account of it.

It is this, Pag. 85. If the Apostle by the Elders of the Church had meant the Bishops of the Church of all 40.
Asia, he would have said, not the Elders of the Church, but of the Churches. It is an observation made use of by one of those that makes use of this answer we are now confuting, That when the Scripture speaks of Churches in Cities, it always useth the singular number, as the Church of Jerusalem, the Church of Corinth, &c. but when it speaks of Provinces where there are many Cities, then it uses the plural number, as the Churches of Judæa, and the Churches of Asia, Rev. 1. 11. According to this observation, if the Apostle had meant of the Bishops of all Asia, he would have said the Elders of the Churches, whereas he calls them Elders of the Church, v. 17. and so must mean the Elders of the Church of Ephesus, and so meer Presbyters, not Bishops.

But herein is a manifest mistake; For the observation is not made as is here suggested, of Churches 41.
in Cities and Provinces, that the former of them are constantly to be understood, where there is mention of a Church in the singular number (without any name of particular City added to it) and that when a Province is mention'd, 'tis always done by Churches in the plural number; This is the sense on which their argument is founded. But if the Reader consult the Dissertations, p. 190. He shall find there is no such thing, 'tis only this, That in the New Testament there is mention made of Churches in the plural number, the Churches of Judæa, of Samaria, of Galilee, of Syria, of Cilicia, of Galatia, of Asia, of Macedonia, whereas in other places there was as frequent mention of a Church in the singular, the Church in Jerusalem, in Antioch, in Cenchrea, in Corinth, of the Thessalonians, of Ephesus, of Smyrna, of Pergamus, of Thyatira, of Sardis, of Laodicea.

The cause of that difference is there said to be this, that Judæa, &c. was the name of a Province, 42.
in which there being many Cities, there were consequently many Churches and Bishops in them; whereas one City with the territory adjoining to it, being ruled by one single Bishop, was to be called a singular Church, and therefore that which is said to be done in every Church, Acts 14. 13. is said to be done in every City, Tit. 1. 5. The sum of which observation is only this, that one City, with the territory adjoining to it, never makes above one Church in the Scripture style, whereas a Province or Country, or Nation consists of many Cities, and so of many Episcopal Sees or Churches.

This was all that was said in that place, or that was useful to be said in order to the end (to shew 43.
the Original of Metropolitanes) there. And what a wresting of a plain obvious observation is it, to conclude it from hence to be my assertion, that when (that must be, whensoever, or else the conclusion cannot be deducible from it) the Scripture speaks of a Province, it is in the plural number? It doth sometimes do so, and that was all that was useful to me. If it had done so but once, though twenty times it had done the contrary, it had been sufficient (for some reasonable account there must be, for the doing it once, and what could that be, but the number of the Cities and so of Churches in each Province or Nation) much more when there were so many examples of it.

But this is not to affirm that it always doth so, especially when being left at large without any re- 44.
straint, not the Church of Ephesus, or the like, but indefinitely the Church, it is very capable of another interpretation. For sure when I wrote that, I had not forgotten my Creed, or in it the name Church in the singular number, which by the adjunct of Catholick must needs be more than the Church of one City. And having read Mat. 16. where the whole Church of Christ is called my Church in the singular, a like phrase to that of the Church of God, which the Bishops here are commanded to feed, and in the one Epistle to the Ephesians having six examples of the word Church in the singular, each signifying evidently the universal Church, I might very well be allowed to discern the word Church in the singular, without any addition of Ephesus or the like, which restrains it in all the examples there produced, to be appliable to a far larger body, than the Church of one City, and consequently be quit from all obligation of making the Elders of the Church, Act. 20. 17. the Elders of the one City of Ephesus.

There is little doubt I suppose, but the Church of the whole World, consisting of many Churches, 45.
as the parts thereof, may be, and is in Scripture called the Church in the singular, and so certainly may the Church of a Nation or a Province, especially if it be united together under one Primate or Metropolitane, politane, as it is certain the Churches and Cities neer Ephesus, nay over all Asia were, according to the plain words of S. Chrysostome, who when * others affirm of Timothy that he was by Paul ordained Bishop of the Metropolis of Ephesus, expresseth the same thing thus, Δῆλον ὅτι ἐκκλησίαν λοιπὸν ὁ Παῦλος ἐπιτετραμμένος ὁ Τιμόθεος, ἢ μᾶλλον ὅλον τὸ τῆς Ἀσίας, It is manifest that Timothy had a Church committed to him, or indeed an intire Nation, that of Asia. The like is ordinarily observable of Crete, a whole Island with an hundred Cities in it (in each of which Titus was appointed to ordain a Bishop or Elder) which yet is stiled in the subscription of the Epistle to Titus, ἡ τῶν Κρητῶν ἐκκλησία, the Church of Crete, and the subscription never questioned upon that score by any, that it spake improperly herein.

* Τιμόθεος ὑπὸ τοῦ μεγάλου Παύλου χειροτονεῖται τῶν Ἐφεσίων μητροπόλεως Ἐπίσκοπος. Anon. ap. Phot. num. 254.

46. And consequently there can be no harshness in this interpretation, Paul sent to Ephesus and call'd the Elders of the Church to come to him to Miletus, and in his Oration addrest to them, called them Bishops of the flock and of the Church of God, meaning them singular prafects of several Cities of the Church of Asia, especially of those which were nearest Ephesus, the chief Metropolis of the whole Nation.

47. And so much in answer to that Objection, in defence of their argument from the Elders of Ephesus, as they call them.

48. Another proof of the same is there added Pag. 85. Thus, The Syriack translation reads it, he sent to Ephesus, and called the Elders of the Church of Ephesus, so Hierome, Presbyteros Ecclesiæ Ephesinæ, so Concilium Aquisgranense.

49. What authority S. Hierome's testimony is to carry with us in this matter, hath been elsewhere largely shewed, and we may hereafter have farther occasion to declare it, and our reasons of it. At the present it is willingly confest, that S. Hierome on Tit. 1. doth indeavour to prove that in Scripture, Bishop and Presbyter is the same, and from him Isidore Hispalensis de officiis Eccl. l. 2. hath the same, and both have according to that prolepsis changed the words of the Text in the Acts, and instead of what there we read, sent to Ephesus and called the Elders of the Church, they read, sent to Ephesus and called the Elders of the same Church, expressing themselves to mean of the Church of Ephesus. And the Council of Aken (Aquisgranense) having transcribed nine Chapters from Isidore verbatim, consequently do the like. So that the authority of Isidore and that Council being as great as S. Hierome can make it, from whom evidently it proceeds, may yet be allowed to yield to the far greater authority of Polycarp's Auditor Irenæus who hath sufficiently cleared it to the contrary.

50. As for the Syriack translation, it is not here recited exactly accordingly, to the truth, For in that, thus the words lie: ומנה מז מיליטוס שרר איתי לקשישא רעדתא דאפסוס And from Miletus he sent and called for the Elders of the Church of Ephesus, where is but one mention of Ephesus, not two, as is here suggested from the translation, that it reads, he sent to Ephesus and callell the Elders of the Church of Ephesus. The short of it is, Ephesus being but once named in that verse, the Greek placeth it in the beginning Ἀπὸ Μιλήτου πέμψας εἰς Ἔφεσον, from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and this being the Original must certainly over-rule all translations, and accordingly all translations but one so read it, only the Syriack hath mis-placed the word Ephesus, put it in the latter part of the period, quite against all Syntaxis, and for doing so, are here cited, and their testimony made use of to assist Presbytery, when the manifest truth in the Original, and by all other translations acknowledged, would not allow them any the least advantage.

51. After they had produced these two arguments, to prove that the Church in the City was governed in the Apostles days by a Common Council of Presbyters, the Reader would hardly expect that which now next follows in these words.

52. From all this we gather, that the Asian Angels were not Diocesan Bishops, but Congregational Presbyters, seated each of them in one Church, not any of them in more than one.

53. This Conclusion, as the words lie, consists of two parts, 1. That each of these Asian Angels, under the title of Congregational Presbyters, was seated in one Church; This, if it were meant, as the words sound, were the granting to us all that we contend for, and would hardly be reconciled with the third observation, that the Church in the City was governed by the Common Council of Presbyters; For sure each of those Presbyters is not a Common Council; But I rather believe they have not so soon disclaimed their premisses, and therefore that it is more reasonable to interpret their words by their principles, than their meaning by their words, and so that by Congregational Presbyters they meant so many Colledges of such Presbyters, seated each of them, i. e. each of those Colledges in one Church; And if that be their Conclusion, I must acknowledge it to accord perfectly with their premisses, which being already answered, there remains no force in the Conclusion.

54. And for the second part, that not any of them was seated in more than one, understanding it again as the words sound, it is no way contrary to our pretensions, for we do not think that the Angel of Ephesus was seated in Smyrna, or in any Church but that of Ephesus, and the territory thereof; and although as that was a Metropolis, other Cities were under it, and so other Bishops subordinate to the Bishop of Ephesus, yet was not any other City the Seat of that Metropolitane, but only Ephesus, whereof he takes his denomination, as although Rochester be under the Metropolis of Canterbury, yet the Archbishop of Canterbury is not seated at Rochester, but some other Bishop affixt to that City and Diocese. As for any other meaning of it, proportionable to that which we were fain to affix to the former, I confess my self ignorant what it can tend to; For it is as if they should say, not any Council of Presbyters was seated in more Churches than one. Which is as if they should say, no one body is in several places. And I know no Prelatist that either directly or by consequence hath affirmed it is.

55. What remains in the last Paragraph of this Chapter, is only to state the Question betwixt us, which is all the while no more but this, whether Tertullian and Irenæus that call Polycarp and Onesimus Bishop of Smyrna and Ephesus, mean Bishops, διαιρετικῶς in a peculiar sense, or in a general phrase, as all Presbyters are called Bishops. And this I acknowledge to be the only question between us, and if Bishops do signify Bishops, I cannot doubt but the cause is by them adjudged on our side; And why it should not, they have, to conclude, only this offer of argument, that Bishops and Presbyters had all one name in the Apostles days, and long after in Irenæus's time.

I am

I am truly weary of the length of this Chapter, and cannot but by conſent have ſome compaſſion on the Reader, and therefore I ſhall bring the matter to this ſhort iſſue. This reaſon of theirs is no reaſon, unleſs the word Biſhop, both in the Apoſtles dayes and long after Irenæus's time, ſignified a Presbyter in our modern notion; For if both ἐπίσκοπος and πρεσβύτερος Biſhop and Elder ſignified Biſhop in our notion, this again gives the cauſe to us from them. And upon theſe terms I am content to leave it; if ever they find in Irenæus that Epiſcopus ſignifies a Presbyter in our modern notion, I will confeſs them Conquerours; but this they have not offered here to do, and I have ſome moderate aſſurance they never will. 56.

And ſo much for that Chapter.

CHAP. II.

Of the equivalence of the words Biſhop and Elder in the New Teſtament.

SECT. I.

Four ſorts of equivalence of theſe words propoſed.

THE next place where I find my ſelf called forth, is about the midſt of their ſeventh Chapter, toward the bottom of pag. 92. Only for the concluſion of this Diſcourſe, &c. for although in the former part of that Chapter they undertake to vindicate their chief proofs of Scripture, Act. 20. 17. 28. Phil. 1. 1. 1 Tim. 3. 1 Pet. 5. and to make replies to the Anſwers given to them, and although it is moſt certain that in the Diſſertations every of thoſe places are anſwered, and ſhew'd to be fully reconcileable with our pretenſions for Prelacy, yet they have not pleaſed to take any notice of what is there ſaid, which if they had done, I might, without inſolence, undertake to ſhew, that it had prevented all appearance of force in any of their Replies; And therefore being by this means perfectly freed from all obligation to view any Paragraph of that former part of the Chapter, and having already ſaid ſomewhat to the chief of their places, Act. 20. and foreſeeing a fit opportunity for the reſt, I ſhall for my own, and the Readers eaſe, punctually expect and obey the Summons, appear when I am call'd before them, but no ſooner, avert their charge, and not multiply debates above what is neceſſary. Numb. 1.

Thus then they begin, that there is a Doctor, a high Prelatiſt, &c. That in a late Book of his hath undertaken to make out theſe two great Paradoxes, 1. That whereſoever the word Biſhop is uſed in the New Teſtament, it is to be taken in a prelatical ſenſe. 2. That whereſoever the word Presbyter is uſed in the New Teſtament, it is to be underſtood, not of a meer Presbyter, but of a Biſhop properly ſo called. And whereas we ſay that the Scripture-Biſhop is nothing elſe but a Presbyter, and that there was no Biſhops diſtinct from Presbyters in the Apoſtles dayes, this Author on the contrary ſaith, that the Scripture-Presbyter is a true Biſhop, and that there were no ſingle and meer Presbyters in the Apoſtles dayes. For our parts we do not think it neceſſary to take a particular ſurvey of all that is ſaid in juſtification of theſe Paradoxes, only we deſire it may be conſidered. 2.

There is ſo much of the ſenſe of ſome paſſages in the Diſſertations ſet down in theſe words, that I am forced to believe, that I am the Author here charged for theſe two Paradoxes. That they are ſo ſtyled by thoſe who are contrary minded, and who have aſſumed a power, which, if either of theſe propoſitions be true, they muſt be obliged to part with, I cannot think ſtrange; And if I ſhould ſtyle their aſſertions as perfectly Paradox (i. e. as contrary to all the antients ſenſe or Doctrine in this matter) when they ſay that the Scripture-Biſhop is nothing elſe but a Preſbyter, &c. this were certainly an introduction fit to be confronted to theirs, as being equally argumentative. But becauſe this verbal eloquence hath little of efficacy in it, and will never be a means of evincing the truth of our pretenſions, by affirming the contrary to be errours or Paradoxes, and becauſe what is affixt to me, is not intirely my ſenſe, though it recite it in ſome part, and approach near to it, I ſhall here begin with a brief relation of what is affirmed by the Diſſertations in this matter, and then inquire what is here produced to invalidate it. 3.

Diſſert. 4. c. 6. the method leading to the conſideration of the word [Biſhop] and [Elder] in the Scripture, the firſt thing taken notice of was the ἰσοδυναμία or equivalence of theſe words in the opinion of many. To which purpoſe Theodoret, Chryſoſtome, Oecumenius, and S^t Hierome are cited, as favourers of this opinion, but this with ſome difference of the one from the other. And for the diſtinct ſtating of the Queſtion, four ſenſes were ſet down, wherein it was poſſible that this equivalence of the words might be underſtood. 1. That both Biſhop and Elder ſhould ſignifie one and the ſame, viz. a Biſhop in our modern notion. 2. That both ſhould ſignifie the ſame thing, viz. a Preſbyter. 3. That both of them ſhould ſignifie promiſcuouſly, ſometimes a Biſhop, ſometimes a Preſbyter, i. e. that the word Ἐπίσκοπος ſhould ſometime ſignifie a Biſhop, ſometime a Preſbyter, and in like manner Πρεσβύτερος ſignifie ſometime a Biſhop, ſometime a Preſbyter. 4. That the word Biſhop ſhould always ſignifie a ſingular Biſhop, and the word Elder ſometimes a Biſhop, and ſometimes a Presbyter. 4.

Of theſe four ſenſes of the equivalence of theſe words, it was ſure no error to conclude, that they were not all of them true, each being excluſive of the other three; and although ſome of the antients might be brought in favour to one, more than to the other, yet this was eminently obſervable, that thoſe that favoured that ſpecies, which is moſt for the Presbyterians intereſt to be accepted, do yet aſſert the cauſe of the Prelatiſts as confidently as any. So Theodoret, who ſeems moſt to aſſert the ſecond ſpecies, doth yet propugn the μείζων τιμὴ, the ſuperiour dignity of Biſhops above Presbyters, and affirms, * Thoſe who were in his time called Biſhops (the ſingular prefects of Cities) to have been ſtyled Apoſtles in the Scripture-times, and that Epaphroditus was called ſo by S^t Paul, 5.

as being Biſhop of the Philippians, and ſo ſaith he, Titus was Apoſtle of the Cretans, and Timothy of the Aſiaticks.

6. So when Chryſoſtome, and Theophylact, and Oecumenius approve of the third ſpecies, and affirm Biſhops to be called Presbyters (and Deacons alſo) and on the contrary Presbyters to be called Biſhops, yet of each of them it is notorious, that they aſſerted the ſuperiority of Biſhops over Presbyters, not only in their own, but in the Apoſtles time. And to that purpoſe the conceſſion and teſtimony of Peter Moulin was produced, that the moſt famous Biſhops of the antient Church, Chryſoſtome, &c. did not think it any diminution to their dignity that the words Biſhop and Elder were at firſt conceived to be uſed in the ſame ſenſe; which obſervation being premiſed, and thereby the Prelatiſts pretenſions competently ſecured, which ſoever of thoſe ſenſes ſhould be accepted, ſo long as they that were authors of the aſſertions be permitted to give their own interpretation of them; It was then, I thought, perfectly ſeaſonable and ſafe to diſcuſs the queſtion freely, and to ſet down what to me appeared moſt probable, without prejudice to any other Diſſenter, and upon thoſe terms, and not otherwiſe, theſe two propoſitions were offered to farther conſideration of learned men.

In Phil 1. and Act. 20. and 1 Pet. 5. 1.

7. 1. That the word Ἐπίσκοπος in Scripture conſtantly ſignifies a ſingular Biſhop.

2. That the word Πρεσβύτερος either conſtantly ſignifies a Biſhop alſo, or elſe commonly a Biſhop, and ſometime, but rarely, a Presbyter.

8. Theſe are ſomewhat different from the two paradoxes affixt to me, and in theſe terms I ſhall now reſume them again, and clear them to be no paradoxes. And begin firſt with the former of them, concerning the word Ἐπίσκοπος Biſhop. And this is already done, Firſt, By conſidering the original notation, and uſe in the Old Teſtament, of the word Ἐπίσκοπος, then by going over every place in the New Teſtament, where the word Biſhop is uſed.

SECT. II.

Of the word Ἐπίσκοπος.

Numb. 1. THE word Ἐπίσκοπος naturally ſignifying an overſeer, and uſed by Ariſtides for ἡγεμὼν the Governour, the ſame that Juſtinian calls Ἄρχων ἐπαρχιῶν ἢ Μητροπόλεως, the Ruler of Provinces and Metropoles, and by Cicero ad Atticum rendred ſpeculator & cuſtos, one that looks to, and guards a Province (and ſo fitly ſtyled Angel, who is generally deemed to have thoſe two Offices, and is in the Scripture called an eye, and vulgarly a Guardian) doth in the Greek of the Old Teſtament ſometime render the Hebrew אֵר, which is common to God, Lord, Angel, and generally denotes Dominion; ſometimes מִמְכָּר a Prefect or Commiſſary, intruſted with the adminiſtration of ſome affair, whether in Army, as a Commander, Numb. 31. 14. in Mechanical working, as a Maſter-workman, 2 Chron. 34. 12. 17. in a City, a Ruler, or Prince, Nehem. 11. 9. peculiarly the chief of the Prieſts, v. 10. in the Miniſtery of the Temple as Eleazar (the Ruler of the Levites) Num. 4. 16. and laſtly in the Houſe of the Lord, the Ruler ſet over that, 2 Kin. 11. 18. And the reſult of all this is, that it generally ſignifies an office of charge and dignity and power and ſuperiority over others, all one with ὑπασπίστης, πρεσβύτης, ἄρχων, κωμάρχης, τοπάρχης, which are all uſed to render the ſame word that Ἐπίσκοπος doth, and ſo is moſt fitly qualified to ſignifie the like, viz. a prefecture in the Chriſtian Church under the New Teſtament.

2. Accordingly there we find it applied, Firſt, To Chriſt himſelf, the Biſhop of our Souls, who though he miniſtred to his Diſciples, yet owned the title of Lord and Maſter, as that which from them belonged to him, Joh. 13. 13. Secondly, To the Apoſtles Act 1. 20. And for all other places where it is uſed, it is evidently capable of a ſenſe very agreeable to theſe premiſſes, being never once uſed in the New Teſtament, but where it will be very commodious to render it Biſhop in our modern notion of the word, for a ſingular prefect in each Church, not a Collegue in a Presbytery.

3. This is at large ſhew'd by a ſurvey of every of thoſe places; Firſt, That of Act. 20. 28. where the Apoſtle takes leave, and exhorts the Biſhops ſet over the flock by the Holy Ghoſt: They are there bid to feed the Church of God, i. e. the Chriſtians of the ſeveral Cities of Aſia, or near about Epheſus, as was in the laſt Chapter evidenced out of Irenæus, Auditor to Polycarp, made Biſhop of Smyrna by S^t John, and therefore may well be reſolved to be the ſingular Biſhops of thoſe Cities, and not only of the one City of Epheſus, as was largely ſhewed in the laſt Chapter.

4. The ſecond place is that of Phil. 1. 1. where after the mention of all the Saints in Chriſt Jeſus which are at Philippi, is added, with the Biſhops and Deacons; where although ſome of the Greek Commentators, which at the ſame time aſſert Epiſcopacy, do for that very reaſon, becauſe there could not be many Biſhops in one City, underſtand that place of Presbyters in our modern notion, and add that the words * Biſhop and Presbyter, yea and Deacon too, were not as yet diſtinct, but promiſcuouſly uſed, the one for the other; here the word Biſhops for Presbyters, as elſewhere the Presbytery is uſed for Biſhops, 1 Tim. 4. 4. adding this reaſon †, becauſe Presbyters ordained not a Biſhop; And although many expedients were ready at hand to keep the Text from being uſeful to the Presbyterians, in caſe it were granted that by Biſhops the Presbyters were meant, as that Epaphroditus their preſent Biſhop (as is acknowledged by Theodoret, Chryſoſtome and Theophylact, who are moſt favourable to that interpretation) was with S^t Paul at the writing that Epiſtle, c. 4. 18. yet I have the authority of Epiphanius to affirm, that ἐπίσκοποι there ſignifies peculiarly Biſhops, and I doubt not but it may do ſo, referring it to all the Biſhops of the ſeveral Cities belonging to that Metropolis.

* Εἶπε τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους, ἃ γὰρ δὲ ἐν μιᾷ πόλει πολλοὶ ἦσαν ἐπίσκοποι, ἔπω γὰρ ἦσαν διακεκριμένα τὰ ὀνόματα, Theophyl. in Phil. 1. 1.

† Οὐ γὰρ πρεσβυτέροις τὸν ἐπίσκοπον ἐχειροτόνουν.

For ſuch was Philippi, both as the Firſt-fruits of all Macedonia, firſt converted to the Faith, Act. 16. 9. and πρώτη τῆς μερίδος Μακεδονίας πόλις, a prime City of that Province of Macedon, v. 12. of it ſelf, before it's converſion, and ſo ſaith * Photius diſtinctly, Ἡ Φιλίππων πόλις τῆς Μακεδόνων ἐπαρχίας μητρόπολις ὅσα, and accordingly Polycarps Epiſtle to them is inſcribed τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ παροικούσῃ Φιλίππους to the whole Province that belongs to Philippi; In which there being diverſe Cities, and Biſhops in them,

5. * Epiſt. 247.

them, the Epiſtle to S. Paul is to be conceived written to them all, (as the Epiſtle to the Corinthians appears to have been written to the Saints of all Achaia) and being inſcribed to Philippi, was to be communicated to thoſe others, as the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians was to be communicated to the Laodiceans, Col. 4. 16. and that which the Laodiceans had received (whether, as Tertullian ſeems to believe, that to the Epheſians, or any other) in like manner to be communicated to the Colloſſians, and the Epiſtle of the Church of Jeruſalem to the Church of Antioch did belong and was communicated to all the Churches of Syria and Cilicia, Act. 16. 4.

And then all that the immediate ſubjoyning of the Deacons in that place, will conclude, is only this (which is far from yielding the Presbyterians any profit) that as * Epiphanius ſaith, νέᾳ ὄνϑ κτεύγματϑ, the Churches being but newly planted, there were not Presbyters as yet conſtituted among them, only a Biſhop with one Deacon or more in each City, in like manner as it was at Jeruſalem Act. 6. where after James's aſſumption to the Biſhoprick, which the Eccleſiaſtical writers tell us of, the ſeven Deacons are ſoon inſtituted, no Presbyters being created in the middle, betwixt the Biſhop and them, that either Scripture or antient Record inform us of. 6.

* πλήθους μὴ ὄντ]ϑ ἐν εὑρέθησαν ἐν αὐτοῖς πρεσβύτεροι καθεσθῆναι, ἀ ἠνέῳθησαν ὅτι τῷ χῳ τόπον μόνῳ ἐπισκόπῳ, ἄνευ ϑ διακόνου ἐπίσκοπον εἶναι. l. 1. Contr. Aër.

And † Clemens, S. Pauls fellow Labourer, mentions it as the general practice, that the Apoſtles preaching through Regions and Cities conſtituted their firſt-fruits into Biſhops and Deacons of thoſe which ſhould come into the faith. 7. † Clem. Rom. Ep. ad Corinth.

Thus far is this from being a forced interpretation being perfectly regular, and conformable to what we read of thoſe times, out of the beſt and antienteſt Records of them; And if in any circumſtance we ſhould be lyable to miſtake, yet for the main, the Reader will hardly think it poſſible, when he remembers this very Church of the Philippians to be one of thoſe expreſly named by Tertullian, among whom in his time, Apoſtolorum Cathedræ ſuis adhuc locis præſidebantur, The Chairs of the Apoſtles were yet extant preſiding in their due places, which concludes ſome Biſhop or ſingular prefect to have ſucceeded the Apoſtles in this Church (as in thoſe other, Theſſalonica, &c.) and by Theodoret, whoſe authority is moſt uſed againſt us in this matter, to prove that the Biſhops were Presbyters here, Epaphroditus is expreſly affirmed to be that Biſhop. 8.

The next place is that of 1 Tim. 3. 1, 2. If any man deſire the Office of a Biſhop he coveteth a good work: A Biſhop therefore muſt be blameleſs — where there is no reaſon of doubting, but the Biſhop is the ſingular prefect or Governour of the Church; For the only appearance of the contrary being again (as in that to the Philippians) the immediate ſubjoyning of Deacons and their qualifications, v. 8. that preſently vaniſheth, if again we remember the obſervation of Epiphanius, which he had out of the moſt antient Records, and was found exactly conformable to the expreſs words of Clemens Romanus, the contemporary of the Apoſtles, that at the beginning of the Church τὰ πληρώματα τῆς οἰκονομίας ἔτω λαβόντες, before the government was compleat in all the Offices, the Apoſtles and Apoſtolical perſons placed in the Church by them, ſuch as Timothy to whom here he gives the directions, created no more but a Biſhop and Deacon (one or more) in each Church, the preſent ſtate of things neither requiring nor being well capable of any more, in reſpect of the paucity of the Chriſtians to be governed or inſtructed, and of thoſe which were fit to be made Presbyters. 9.

And although Theodoret again (with ſome few others) interpret the place of Presbyters, yet 'tis as evident, he doth it not to the diſadvantage of Biſhops, adding in the ſame place, that the Biſhops eſpecially ſhould obſerve theſe Laws ἅτε ϑ κ μείζονϑ μεταλαχόντας τιμῆς, as thoſe which had attained to a greater honour. 10.

Mean while S. Chryſoſtome interprets it diſtinctly of * Biſhops, as I have done, and in that notion of Biſhops which ſevers them from Presbyters, ſuch as govern in each City, and addeth the qualifications to be ſuch, as being ſpoken of Biſhops, κ Πρεσβυτέροις ἁρμόττει, do agree to Presbyters alſo. And accordingly Theophylact interprets it of the ἡγεμὼς and ἄρχων, the Preſident and Ruler, without any mention of Presbyters. 11.

* Ἐπισκόπῳ ἔδει πόλλων καθ' ἑκάστην πόλιν προηγησαμένων.

There remains but one place, and that of the very ſame nature with this laſt, and muſt certainly be regulated by it, Tit. 1. 7. For a Biſhop muſt be blameleſs, as the ſteward of God (anſwerable to that notion of the word Biſhop in the Old Teſtament for the Ruler ſet over the Houſe of the Lord, 2 Kin. 11. 18. i. e. the Steward, to whom the Keyes of the Houſe were committed, Iſa. 22. 22.) That this is the ſingular Biſhop in every City, ſignified before v. 5. by the Elders, which Titus was left in Crete to conſtitute, is the joynt affirmation of S. Chryſoſtome, Theophylact and Oecumenius on thoſe words of v. 5. Elders in every City, Ἐπισκόπους ἔτως εἰλαῦθα φήσι, ὡς κ ἐν τῇ πρὸς Τιμόθεον, &c. By Elders he there means Biſhops, as in the Epiſtle to Timothy, appointing them to be conſtituted in every City, for he would not have the whole Iſland adminiſtred by one, but that every City ſhould have it's proper Paſtor (or Biſhop) that ſo the labour might be the lighter, and the care more exact. In Crete there were certainly many Cities, Euſebius mentions an hundred, of all which, * ſaith he, Titus was made Biſhop by S. Paul, that under him, ſaith † Theodoret, he might ordain Biſhops: to which * Chryſoſtome and Theophylact add τῶ κεῖσιν ἐπισκόπων, that he might have power to judge or cenſure thoſe Biſhops, as a Metropolitan and Primate over them. 12.

* L. 3. c. 4. † Arg. Ep. ad Tit. In tit. 1. Hom. 1. * τοσούτων ἐπισκόπων κεῖσιν κ χειροτονίαν, Arg. Ep.

There is now no other place wherein the word Biſhop is uſed, and by this brief view of theſe, I hope the firſt propoſition is competently reſcued from meriting the cenſure of Paradox, whether that ſignify novel or ſtrange; this being ſo conformable both to the nature and uſe of the word, to the tradition of the ancient Church, and the importance of each Scripture, where it is uſed, that Biſhops ſhould ſignify ἴδιϑ ποιμὴν the ſingular Paſtor or Governour in each City or Church. 13.

SECT. III.

Of the word Πρεσβύτερος Elder.

Numb. 1. NOW to the second Proposition, which pretended not to so much positiveness, but is set down in a greater latitude of defining, that the word πρεσβύτερος either constantly signifies a Bishop also, or else commonly a Bishop, though sometimes, but most rarely a Presbyter. Of this I shall now need to premise but these few things.

2. First, That the nature of the זקן commonly rendred πρεσβύτερος Elder in the Old Testament, doth denote most properly, and signifie most constantly (as in all Languages the word is found vulgarly to do) a Ruler or Governour. This is so largely deduced and demonstrated in the Annotation on Act. 11. 30. that I shall not indeavour farther to manifest it.

3. Secondly, That as in some places of the New Testament the word is necessarily to be understood of Bishops, so in every other place it is very fitly capable of that interpretation; This is again so particularly evidenced to the Latine Reader Diss. 4. c. 19, 20, 21, 22.) and to the English Reader Annot. on Act. 11. b. and 14. a. that I cannot deem it reasonable to tire my self further with transcribing it.

4. Thirdly, That if any one or more places shall be thought by any man to belong to Presbyters in our modern sense, as that of Jam. 5. 14. or the like, I shall only desire, that he will bring any convincing proof or authentick Testimony, that in that or those places it so signifies, and I shall most willingly grant it to him, and be so far from thinking it, in the least degree, disadvantageous to our pretensions, that I shall not doubt to evidence it a demonstrative argument to confirm them, but shall not need to insist on that, till such proof be offered.

5. Fourthly, That by this it is already most evident, that my assertion was not truly cited, p. 92. in these words, that whereſoever the word Presbyter is used in the New Testament, it is to be understood not of a meer Presbyter, but of a Bishop properly so called; Certainly neither my words nor sense extended to the whereſoever — and, it is to be —] being only in a disjunctive form, either constantly so, or sometimes but rarely otherwise.

6. Fifthly, That if I were not misreported, and the Paradox were as high and as positive, as it is represented, yet I conceive not the reason why they that have with great confidence affirmed that both Bishops and Elders do alway signifie in Scripture their Presbyters and no more, (for if either of those words do but once signify a Bishop, their Jus Divinum, and whole cause falls to the ground irrecoverably) should be so much at leisure from excusing themselves, to accuse that for a Paradox in others, which is not imaginable to be more an extreme on one side, than theirs is on the other.

7. Lastly, That if they do not think it necessary to take a particular survey of all that is said in justification of these (which they thus please to style) Paradoxes, which is in effect, as if they should profess to deny and declaim against the conclusion, without attempting to satisfie any reason, by which it is inferr'd; It might be as just in me to tender them answers of the same making, and so to supersede any farther dispute in this matter.

8. But I shall not imitate their method, but rather prepare to attend them in it, and having thus far served them, by undertaking the task which was due to them, in giving the Reader a brief view of the grounds of my Assertions, which were too long for them to take notice of, I shall now trace their steps, and follow them which way soever they lead.

SECT. IV.

Of Reverence to Antiquity, and the Interpretations of the Antients. Of Prelatists disagreement among themselves.

Numb. 1. FIrst then, say they, we desire it may be considered, that these assertions are contrary to antiquity, which yet notwithstanding our Brethren do so highly magnifie and boast of it in this controversy, and for receding from which, as they say we do, they do most deeply charge us.

2. That these Assertions, as far as they are owned by me, and are Assertions, are so distant from being contrary to antiquity, that they are founded in the Records of the most antient reverend authority, hath appeared most plainly by what hath now been said, and had before been laid, as the ground of the interpretations, in the fourth Dissert. if they, which gathered the conclusion from thence, would have vouchsafed to take notice of the premisses.

3. The utmost that can be with truth pretended, is, that some of the Texts, which we have insisted on here, and so likewise some of those where πρεσβύτεροι Elders are mentioned, are not by all the antients interpreted just in that manner, as I think they may safely and most probably be interpreted, and so as they will best accord with the opinions which those very antients appeared to have concerning the Original of Episcopacy.

4. In this I hope I have not offended against the antient Church, or if I had, as I should have expected other accusers, than those I have, so should I wait for no other judge but my self, and immediately submit to any penance for it.

5. But they which truly reverence antiquity, discern also wherein this Reverence is terminated, not in adhering to every interpretation of each Text of Scripture given by any antient Commentator or Interpreter, for truly that is absolutely impossible, several of them being known in interpreting of Texts very frequently to differ one from the other; This can be no news to any man, who hath but lightly viewed them, or but occasionally consulted Tirinus, or such like later Commentators, who have collected the Interpretations terpretations of the Antients, and marſhalled their names, and told us how many have been for one, how many for another ſenſe of ſuch a Text.

And in affairs of this nature, wherein they have neither taught Doctrines, nor teſtified Traditions, 6.
but only expreſt their ſingle opinions, or conjectures of an Apoſtles meaning in words capable of more ſenſes than one, I know no Prelatiſt that ever denied later Writers liberty to recede from one, and adhere to ſome other of the antients, or if more convincing reaſons appeared for any freſh interpretation, never given before, the like liberty hath been allowed; Thus among the Romaniſts which pretend ſo much to tradition and reverence to Antiquity, Baronius, for example, when about S^t Pauls reprehending S^t Peter, Gal. 2. the antients are found divided, and their diſtant interpretations ſet down by him, An. Ch. 52. n. 32, &c. he himſelf takes a third way different from both, n. 40. and applauds himſelf much in it, n. 46. And indeed if it were not ſo, our ſtudying of the Originals, inquiry into the nature of words and phraſes, obſervation of cuſtoms amongſt the antients, and all wherein learned men differ from unlearned, conſideration of the context and argument, τὸ λογικὸν as well as τὸ ῥητὸν of each difficult place, and all the other skills and advantages of a good Interpreter, would all be unuſeful firſt, and then dangerous, would tempt one oft to recede from ſome former Writers, to forſake the road and method (ſo ordinary) of tranſcribing other mens labours, and by inciting him to ſay any thing which had not oft been ſaid before, (which if it have, why doth he again trouble himſelf and others to repeat it?) would infallibly involve him under the burthen and guilt that is here laid on me, of being contrary to Antiquity.

But I am unwilling to diſcourage them from any ſort of degree of reverence to antiquity, and on 7.
condition they will be fairly tried by it in any notion by which they can imagine to define that Reverence, or the word Antiquity, I will forgo all my novel interpretations, and ſay no one word which the Antients have not diſtinctly ſaid before me, and refer the whole fate of the cauſe to this judicature.

Their ſecond conſideration is, that they are contrary to all that have ever written in defence of Epiſcopacy, 8.
from whence they conclude that till their brethren (i. e. we Prelatiſts) agree among themſelves, they need not ſpend time to anſwer the private Opinions of one Doctor.

To this I anſwer, that it hath always been deemed lawful to any man, which hath undertaken the 9. defence of a Chriſtian cauſe, aſſerted conſtantly by the Church, to chooſe his arguments (as combatants do their weapons) ſuch as he thinks are fitteſt for his managery, and will moſt probably (in his opinion) convince the gainſayers; No obligation lying upon him by the Laws of theſe agones, to uſe thoſe arguments (and no other, nor otherwiſe improved) which all other writers of that ſide have done before him; For if this were the manner of the νομιμὸς ἆθλησις, the legal combate, to what end ſhould any ſecond writing on the ſame ſubject ever appear to the World? That which had been formerly ſaid, needed not to be tranſcribed and ſaid again, but either the book might be Re-printed, or tranſlated into a language more intelligible (as I have here been fain oft to do.) And though I might truly ſay, that for thoſe more minute conſiderations or conjectures, wherein this Doctor differs from ſome others, who have written before him (as to the manner of interpreting ſome few Texts) he hath the ſuffrages of many the learneſt men of this Church at this day (and as far as he knows, of all that imbrace the ſame cauſe with him) yet I do not think it neceſſary to prove my agreement with others of my brethren by this only medium; It being certain that they who believe the ſame concluſion upon ſeveral mediums or ways of inferring it, are in that, and may be in all other concluſions at perfect accord and unity among themſelves.

All that I can conclude from this and the former conſideration (the double charge laid on me of con- 10. trariety to antiquity, and other aſſerters of Epiſcopacy) is only this, that the authors of them are ill pleaſed, that I uſe any other arguments, or anſwers but what they were willing to aſſign me: otherwiſe if there had been leſs, not more truth, or evidence in my way of defending the cauſe, they would have had the greater advantage againſt me, and I doubt not, have been, in the ſpace of three years, at leiſure to have obſerved it.

SECT. V.

Inconveniencies objected, and anſwer'd. Of more Biſhops in one City. No Presbyters in the Apoſtles dayes. The no Divine right of the Order of Presbyters.

BUT they are, in the third place, pleaſed to object ſome inconveniences which the defending of Numb. 1.
theſe Paradoxes muſt neceſſarily bring upon me; And to theſe I ſhall more diligently attend.

Firſt, ſay they, he that will defend theſe Paradoxes muſt of neceſſity be forced to grant that there were 2.
more Biſhops than one in a City in the Apoſtles dayes, which is to betray the cauſe of Epiſcopacy, and to bring down a Biſhop to the rank of a Presbyter.

To this I reply by abſolute denying of this conſequence (for ſuppoſing the Scripture-Biſhop to be al- 3. ways a Biſhop, and ſo the Scripture Elder alſo, how can it follow from thence that there are more ſuch Biſhops in any one City?) 'Tis moſt evident that this is no way inferr'd upon either, or both of my aſſertions; nor is here one word added to prove it is, to which I might accommodate any anſwer. Tis on the contrary moſt manifeſt, that whenſoever I find mention of Biſhops or Elders in the plural, as Act. 20. Phil. 1. &c. I interpret them of the Biſhops of Aſia, and the Biſhops of Macedonia, Biſhops of Judæa, &c. (and render my reaſons of doing ſo) and conſequently affirm them to be the Biſhops of divers (ſure that is not of one) Cities.

The ſecond inconvenience is, that I muſt be forced to grant that there were no Biſhops over Presbyters 4.
in the Apoſtles dayes, for if there were no Presbyters, there could be no Biſhops over Presbyters.

Here is an evident miſtake; for I no where ſay, that there were no Presbyters in the Apoſtles dayes, 5.
but only that in the Apoſtles writings the word. [Biſhops] always ſignifies Biſhops, and the word [Elders]

[Elders] either never, or but rarely, Presbyters; Now beſides that it is poſſible for thoſe to be in the time of the Apoſtles writing, which yet for want of occaſion are not mentioned in thoſe writings (and I that love not negative arguments à teſtimonio, ſhould never have thought fit to conclude there were no Presbyters within the time wherein the ſeveral Books of Scripture were written, upon that one argument, becauſe I could not find them mentioned there) beſides this, I ſay, Tis certain that the Apoſtles times are ſomewhat a larger period than the time of the Apoſtles writings, and therefore that what is ſpoken only of the latter, was not meant to be extended to the former.

6. For Firſt the Apoſtles continued alive ſome time after writing their Epiſtles, and Secondly, ſome of the Apoſtles ſurvived others; John, of whom Chriſts will was intimated, that he ſhould tarry, and not die till after the coming of Chriſt, and that Kingdom of his, commenced in the deſtruction of the Jews, did accordingly live till Trajans time, and by that time I think it probable that the number of believers daily increaſing, there were, as the wants of the Church required, Presbyters ordained in many Churches: And accordingly in the Diſſert. p. 229. when I ſpeak of this matter, I expreſly except S. John, and p. 211. I make uſe of a teſtimony of Clemens Alexandrinus, on purpoſe to conclude that this Apoſtle ordain'd Presbyters in Aſia, after his return from the Iſland, to which he was baniſhed, ὅπου μὲν ὁπουδήπως καλαστήσων, ὅπου δ' ὅλας ἐκκλησίας ἀεμόσων, &c. and to the ſame mat-
* Diſſert. 4. c. 19. Sect. 4, 5. ter I * elſewhere apply that of Epiphanius, out of the profoundeſt, i. e. antienteſt Records, that as Moſes and Aaron took to them firſt the Princes of the people, and at length the Sanhedrim of the ſeventy Elders, ſo the Apoſtles firſt conſtituted Biſhops, and in proceſs of time Presbyters alſo, when occaſion required, as the Biſhops Aſſiſtants, and Council, and that upon account of this Analogy with the Sanhedrim, they were ſtiled πρεσβύτεροι Elders.

7. And Ignatius making mention of Presbyters, as of a middle degree in the Church betwixt Biſhops and Deacons in his, i. e. in Trajan's time, and that in his Epiſtles to ſeveral of thoſe Aſian Churches, Smyrna, Epheſus, Magneſia, Philadelphia, Trallis, I think the argument of great validity to conclude, that in that Province that Apoſtle had in his life time inſtituted this middle order. And therefore I that had ſo carefully prevented, was not to be charged with this crime of affirming there were no Presbyters, or Biſhops over Presbyters (which certainly there were, if there were Presbyters under them) in the Apoſtles days.

8. A third inconvenience they add, that by conſequence I muſt affirm that Ordo Presbyteratus is not Jure Divino.

9. But that is no more conſequent to my aſſertion, than it was my aſſertion, that there were no Preſbyters in the Apoſtles days, and therefore I that am guiltleſs of the aſſertion, cannot be charged with the conſequents of it; John I know was an Apoſtle, and John, I believe, ordained Presbyters, and thence I doubt not to conclude the Apoſtolical inſtitution, i. e. in effect, the Divine right of the order of Presbyters, though not of the government of the Church by Presbytery; and ſo I am ſtill clear from the guilt of that crime which the worſt of Papiſts would abominate, which they are reſolved I muſt have layen under, if I had queſtioned the Divine Right of Presbyters, though they can more than queſtion the Divine Right of Biſhops, and never have remorſe or compunction, or dread any charge or ſentence for it.

SECT. VI.

A firſt confeſſion objected and vindicated. Of the Epheſine Presbyters being all the Prelates of Aſia; Elders, Aldermanni.

Numb. 1. After theſe inconveniences briefly touched (and almoſt as briefly by me averted) they proceed to take notice in the fourth place, of ſome confeſſions of mine, which the juſtification of my opinion have forced from me. By this method thinking (as at length they ſay) to render Epiſcopacy, that is thus maintained, or elſe my way of maintaining it, odious and contemptible to all ſober, and godly, and moderate Chriſtians, i. e. to all thoſe, who for the attaining of thoſe titles, good opinion, and good words from them, ſhall be invited to contemn, or hate thoſe, whom they are yet pleaſed to call their brethren. And this I confeſs is the moſt compendious way of confuting that which would not otherwiſe be confuted.

2. What thoſe confeſſions of mine are, which are like to render my aſſertions ſo odious, I muſt next take a view, and conſider with what juſtice this is ſaid by them.

3. The firſt is, that the Epheſine Presbyters, whom Paul ſent for to Miletus, were all the Prelates of Aſia.

4. To ſay that the Epheſine Presbyters, in their ſenſe of the phraſe, are Prelates of Aſia, were, I confeſs, a ridiculous, and ſo, if they pleaſe, a contemptible confeſſion; but I have yet been under no ſuch torture from their arguments, as ſhould conſtrain ſuch confeſſion from me. What I ſay, is ſufficiently known to be my free opinion, (and no forced confeſſion, ſuch as the neceſſity of a deſperate enterpriſe might extort from me) that the πρεσβύτεροι τῆς ἐκκλησίας, Elders of the Church, who by ſummons ſent to Epheſus, the chief Metropolis of all Aſia (and by that convenient way communicated to other Cities) were aſſembled to Paul at Miletus, Act. 20. 17. were, as Irenæus aſſures me, the Biſhops of the other Cities in thoſe parts, and not only of the one City of Epheſus.

5. What harſhneſs there can be in this aſſertion, to be rejected as odious at the firſt hearing, I confeſs I divine not; That thoſe Cities had Biſhops, as well as Epheſus, cannot be ſtrange, or that Paul deſired to ſpeak with them before his final parting. And that the Biſhops may be called Elders, will be as little ſtrange, if it be but remembred, what is at large ſhewed in the Diſſertations, that the word Elder had in the Old Teſtament denoted dignity and Prefecture in ſingle perſons, as when Eleezer Abraham's Oeconomus, who was ſet over his ſervants, is ſtyled πρεσβύτερος τῆς οἰκίας αὐτῦ, ὁ ἄρχων πάντων τῶν αὐτῦ, the Elder of his houſe, and Ruler of all that was his (by Elder and Ruler ſignifying the ſame ſame thing) and ſo the Elders πρεσβύτεροι, of the Moabites, Num. 22. 7. are the Princes of Moab, v. 8. and the Elders of Iſrael are the heads, or Prefects of the principal Families of Iſrael, Exod. 6. 14. the Rulers of the people, c. 16. 22. the Elders of the Tribes, Deut. 31. 28. and all this, and much more, before they were called into a Council, or Senate, to aſſiſt Moſes, as appears Num. 11. 16.

And proportionable to this, hath been the uſe of the word among all Nations, ὁ πρεσβύτερος ἀεὶ τῶν ἡγεμονίαν ἔχει, καὶ τούτῳ πάντες πείθονται, the Elder always hath the Rule, and all obey him, ſaith * Diodorus Siculus, and ſo Seniors] in all languages is a title of honour and dignity. 6. * L. 2.

And peculiarly among us, as when Æthelſtane the half King (as he was called) of the Eaſt Angles, was ſaluted by the title of † Aldermannus, i. e. Πρεσβύτερος, Elder of all England, and ſo Æthelwod and Ælwin, ſo in King Ælfred's Laws, c. 34. there is mention Regis Aldermanni and Presbyteri Regis; And accordingly, Mat. 20. 25. thoſe words of the Princes of the Nations exerciſing dominion over them, are by the Saxons interpreted Ealdormen pealdaþ þira ðeoda, Elders have dominion over their Nations, and Luke 9. 22. the Elders and chief of the Prieſts are by them rendred Ealdrum and Ealdormannum. All taking the word Elder for a title of Dignity and prefecture (and from that notion of it the Preſbyterians are not obſerved to decline.) 7. † Vid. Autho. lib. Rameſ. Sect. 4. and 33. and Sir Henry Spelmans Gloſſary, p. 28, 29.

And then finally, that the addition of τῆς ἐκκλησίας the Church, though in the ſingular, cannot make it unfit for theſe Elders to denote the Biſhops of Aſia, or near Epheſus under that Metropolis, hath been already accounted for at large. And ſo ſtill I hope they, and all godly and moderate brethren need neither hate, nor contemn Epiſcopacy, nor the defenders of it, upon pretence of this (ſo far from incommodious or inconvenient) confeſſion. 8.

SECT. VII.

A ſecond confeſſion of the Biſhops, Phil. 1. 1. being Biſhops of that whole Province, Philippi a Metropolis, and a Colony.

Like unto this firſt, is the ſecond which they take notice of, That the Biſhops of Philippi, whom St Paul ſalutes Ch. 1. were not the Biſhops of that City only, but of the whole Province, whereas Theophylact ſaith that Philippi was μικρὰ πόλις ὑπὸ μητροπόλεως Θεσσαλονίκης τελοῦσα, a little City ſubject to the Metropolis of Theſſalonica. Numb. 1.

That the word Ἐπίσκοποι Biſhops, Phil. 1. 1. denotes the Biſhops of the Cities of Macedonia, which were under this πρώτη πόλις, chief City, or Metropolis, as S. Luke calls it, Acts 16. 12. is already evidenced to be no ſtrange or violent (I hope as little odious) confeſſion. I need not farther repeat, or inlarge on that, but bear in good part, whatſoever fate is decreed by them to attend that Confeſſion. 2.

As for the Objection which is here ſubjoined, and to which they were directed by Diſſert. 4. c. 10. Sect. 12. they might, if they had been ſo pleaſed, have taken the antidote with the poyſon, obſerved, and tendred to the Reader the anſwer, which in the five following Sections is ſolemnly rendred to it, and confuted that anſwer, if they had diſcern'd any infirm part in it. 3.

Firſt then, the anſwer is, that that deſcription of Philippi in the argument prefixt to Theophylact's notes on that Epiſtle, was taken out of an antient Geographer, and belonged to that City, as it was built by Philip, having been formerly called Κρηνίδες, then Δάτος, not to the later times, under the Roman Empire; and that it is no new, or ſtrange thing, that under the Romans thoſe Cities ſhould become Metropoles, which formerly had not been ſuch; to which agrees that of the Council of Chalcedon, Can. 12. which mentions, πόλεις διὰ γραμμάτων βασιλικῶν τῇ τῆς μητροπόλεως ὀνόματι τιμηθείσας, Cities honoured by the imperial Letters with the name and dignity of Metropoles. 4.

And indeed the ſaying of * Strabo is of evident truth, ordinarily experimented, that Provinces were often confounded διὰ τὸ τὰς Ρωμαίους μὴ κατὰ φῦλα διελεῖν αὐτὰς, ἀλλ' ἕτερον τρόπον διαλαξαι διοικήσεις, ἐν αἷς ἀγοραίους ποιοῦνται, by cauſe of the Romans diſtributing them not according to the diſtributions of Regions or Nations (ſuch as the Geographers antiently had made uſe of) but after another manner, according to the Cities, in which they kept their Courts or Aſſiſes, as before was ſaid of the Cities of Aſia. 5. * Geogr. l. 13.

Accordingly when St. Paul firſt comes to Philippi, St. Luke mentions it under the title of the prime City of the Province of Macedonia; and is not that more to be heeded, ſpeaking ſo expreſly of that City at that time, than that Geographers deſcription, which no way diſcovers to what time it belongs, and cannot belong to this time of the planting the faith at Philippi, if St. Luke may be believed? 6.

Secondly, The ſame St. Luke ſaith of it at that time, that it was κολωνία a Colony of, i. e. a City repleniſhed by the Inhabitation of the Romans; And of thoſe Colonies in chief Cities, there is no queſtion but they were eſpecially choſen to be places of their Aſſiſes, whither the Neighbouring Cities reſorted for Juſtice, and ſo were Metropoles in the civil accounts. 7.

Thirdly, Of this City of Philippi 'tis as evident, that it was the firſt converted of all Macedonia, and that from thence he went after to Theſſalonica; And ſo the right of Primogeniture, which ordinarily gave claim to the Metropolitical dignity in the Eccleſiaſtical account (as in the caſe of Antioch and Jeruſalem appears) belonging to Philippi, over and above the foremention'd precedence thereof in civil account, there is no reaſon to doubt, but this was a Metropolitical Church, an Elder Siſter to Theſſalonica, and each a Mother to the Churches of leſſer Cities of Macedonia that belonged to them. 8.

According to which it is, that Polycarp in his Epiſtle, mentions St. Pauls Epiſtles in the plural, written to theſe Philippians, which learned men interpret of the Epiſtles to the Theſſalonians, and it cannot commodiouſly be underſtood any other way. 9.

SECT.

SECT. VIII.

A third Confeſſion, of Timothies being an Archbiſhop. Of the qualifications, 1 Tim. 3. 2. belonging to Biſhops. Of the Biſhops being worthy of double honour, though he never preach. Of the word, and Doctrine. Of the Presbytery, 1 Tim. 4. Of Rebuking and receiving accuſation againſt an Elder.

Numb. 1. THE third Confeſſion is, that Timothy was Archbiſhop of Epheſus, that when Paul ſets down the qualifications of Biſhops, though he mention none but ſuch as are common to a Presbyter with a Biſhop, yet he is to be underſtood to ſpeak of Biſhops in a Prelatical ſenſe, and not at all of Presbyters; And when he ſaith the Elders that Rule well are worthy of double honour ---, this is, ſaith this Author, the Biſhops that Rule well — thereby holding out this great errour, that a Biſhop that Ruleth well is worthy of double honour, though he never preacheth; And when St. Paul bids Timothy not neglect the gift that was given him by the laying on the hands of the Presbytery, that is, ſaith he, of Epiſcopacy; And when the Apoſtle chargeth him not to rebuke an Elder,--- and not to receive an accuſation againſt an Elder, --- this is to be underſtood of Biſhops, ſaith he, and not of meer Presbyters.

2. To this accumilative crime affirmed to be confeſt by me in ſo many particulars, I anſwer by avowing my Confeſſion thus far, firſt, that I take Timothy to have been Biſhop of Epheſus, and conclude it from 1 Tim. 1. 3. then that Epheſus was a prime Metropolis of Aſia, from the teſtimonies of Pliny and Ulpian, and generally the Antient Church-Writers: And from thoſe two put together, I hope I may gain liberty to confeſs, that Timothy was Archbiſhop of Epheſus.

3. Secondly, That Paul, 1 Tim. 3. 1, 2. ſpeaking of Epiſcopacy, as of a good work or office, and the qualifications required in the perſon to be promoted to it, ſpeaks of a Biſhop in the Prelatical ſenſe; ſo I am ſure Chryſoſtom doth underſtand him, and the teſtimony was lately cited out of him; and Theodoret, that underſtands it otherwiſe, yet applies it firſt to Biſhops, and ſaith on that occaſion, that their degree in the Church is ſuperior to that of Presbyters. And if no higher qualifications be required of a Biſhop, than are fit to be required of a Presbyter (which yet I no where ſay, and the argument taken from the no-other qualifications here ſpecified, than only for the Biſhop and the Deacon, are of no force to induce it, both becauſe it is a negative argument, and there is another reaſon for the omitting Presbyters, becauſe in this infancy of the Church there was not any ſuch need of them, the Biſhop with his Deacon, one or more, were ſufficient in every City; and beſides, the qualifications aſſigned the Deacon, may be common to him with the Presbyter, as well as thoſe aſſign'd the Biſhop) yet that is no prejudice to the ſuperiority of the office, or to my interpreting that Text of the Biſhop; For ſure I may as conveniently ſay, that the Biſhop is named without the Presbyter, at a time when there were Biſhops, but as yet no Presbyters in the Church, and that when there were Presbyters inſtituted, their qualifications were to be regulated by the rules given of Biſhops, as it can be imagined to be fitly ſaid by them, that the place is meant of Presbyters (when the Apoſtle names Biſhops expreſly, and when by many other evidences we know, that then there were Biſhops, but by no footſteps can diſcern that then there were Presbyters) upon no other reaſon, but that the qualifications are common to Presbyters.

4. Thirdly, For the mention of the Elders that rule well, 1 Tim. 5. 17. I doubt not but it may very commodiouſly be interpreted of the Biſhops through all his Province; for as there the ſtyle is πρεσβύτες, preſide or rule, ſo 'tis certain, that in the uſe of the Church, this was the title of the Biſhops, as hath formerly been ſhewed out of Juſtin Martyr and others, and the διπλὴ τιμὴ double honor פי שנים the priviledge of Primogeniture, being aſſigned as his portion, is an evidence thereof.

5. And the inconvenience that is here urged againſt that interpretation, is perfectly of no force. For firſt, if from hence it might be concluded that a Biſhop is worthy of double honour, though he never preacheth, then from their interpreting it of the Presbyter, it will as much follow to be their opinion, that the Presbyter is worthy of double honour though he never preach.

6. But then ſecondly the truth is, that neither of theſe concluſions follow either the one or the other interpretation; for the firſt phraſe of labouring in the word, and the other of labouring in the doctrine (which by theſe are confounded, and ſo expreſt undiſtinctly by preaching) denote two ſeveral things; the former, the planting of the faith where it is not yet received, which is conſtantly expreſt by εὐαγγελίζεσθαι, κηρύσσειν, and λόγῳ, preaching the Goſpel, and the word; the latter ſignifies taking pains in a Church already gathered, for the confirming and farther inſtructing of believers. And then, as he that doth one of theſe, may yet poſſibly not do both, occaſion not requiring, and ſo not be ſo eminently worthy of the double honour, as he that actually doth both; ſo certainly, he that rules well in any Church, and beſide the care belonging to rule, undergoes that other double hard travel (ſo κοπιῶν ſignifies) of preaching the faith to Infidels, and confirming, and inſtructing believers, doth very highly deſerve the double honour and alimony; And this as it is the exact meaning of that Text, ſo it utterly ſuperſedes all force of this objection or exception againſt our underſtanding it of the Preſidents or Biſhops in the Prelatical ſenſe.

7. Fourthly, For the word Presbytery, 1 Tim. 4. 14. by which they ſay, I underſtand Epiſcopacy, I anſwer, that I interpret it of ſome combination either of Apoſtles or Apoſtolical perſons and Biſhops, τῶν τῆς ἀποστολικῆς χάριτος ἀξιωμάτων in Theodoret's phraſe, ſuch as were vouchſafed the Apoſtolical grace, i. e. of Paul aſſuredly, 1 Tim. 2. 6. and perhaps of Barnabas, perhaps of ſome other Apoſtolical perſon with him, in like manner as both Peter and John ſtyle themſelves πρεσβύτεροι Elders, and * Ignatius ſtyles the Apoſtles πρεσβυτέριον ἐκκλησίας the Presbytery or Elderſhip of the Church, and as of Ignatius himſelf St. Chryſoſtome affirms, μακαρίων Ἀποστόλων χείρας, that the hands of more Apoſtles than one were laid on him, in his ordination to the Biſhoprick of Antioch.

* Ep. ad Philad.

8. To which matter the Scholion of Chryſoſtome is expreſs, ὃ περὶ πρεσβυτέρων φήσι ταῦτα, ἀλλὰ περὶ ἐπισκόπων, κόπων, he ſpeaks not here of Presbyters but Biſhops, adding the reaſon, becauſe Presbyters did not ordain Biſhops; and ſo Theophylact and Oecumenius.

Laſtly for the other two places of not-rebuking and receiving an accuſation againſt an Elder, though in thoſe places it were clearly for my intereſt to interpret πρεσβύτερος a Presbyter in our modern ſenſe, for then as † Epiphanius ſaith, there is an evidence of proof that the Biſhop hath power over the Presbyter (ὅτι ὁ πρεσβύτερον ἐξουσίαν ἔχει) Timothy over the Elder, ſaith he, but never the Elder over Timothy: Yet I confeſs my ſelf inclined by other conſiderations to forego that advantageous ſenſe of the place. 9. † Cont. Hær. l. 3. t. 1.

Becauſe Timothy being placed in the prime Metropolis had power over the Biſhops of leſſer Cities, and that, as hath oft been ſhewed, κρίσιν as well as χειροτονίαν, power of judging as well as of ordaining Biſhops, which is * elſewhere evidenced to be the opinion of S. Chryſoſtome, in order to the underſtanding of this place. And ſo ſtill the crime is not very great or reproachful, which I am ſaid to have confeſt, it amounts no higher than the former confeſſion had done, that Timothy was Archbiſhop of Epheſus; and yet this you ſee without any neceſſity to extort it from me, ſave that of ſpeaking freely what I conceived moſt probable; For otherwiſe nothing could be more for the advantage of the main cauſe I defend, than that πρεσβύτεροι Elders ſhould ſignifie Presbyters in theſe two places. 10. * Diſſert. 4. c. 19. Sect. 11, 12.

SECT. IX.

A fourth confeſſion of Titus being Archbiſhop of Creet.

THeir fourth charge is, that I am forced to confeſs that Titus was Archbiſhop of Creet, and that he received no commiſſion from S^t^ Paul to ordain ſingle Elders, but only for ordaining Biſhops in every City. It ſeems, ſay they, this Author ſlights the Poſtſcript, where Titus is called the firſt Biſhop of Creet, and ſlights all thoſe antient Fathers that are cited by his own party, to prove that he was Biſhop of Creet: But he muſt be an Archbiſhop, and ſo muſt Timothy alſo, or elſe theſe aſſertions of his will fall to the ground. Now that they were neither Biſhops nor Archbiſhops hath been ſufficiently proved (as we conceive) in the former diſcourſe. Numb. 1.

That Titus was Archbiſhop of Creet, I confeſs again that I cannot but believe, till I am ſhewed how the contrary were poſſible, i. e. how he that was faſtned in (and, as * Euſebius ſaith, had ἐπισκοπὴν the Epiſcopacy of) a whole Iſland, which had an hundred Cities in it, and was there placed, that he might ordain Biſhops under him in each of thoſe Cities, Tit. 1. 5. 7. and, as the antients add, exerciſe juriſdiction over them, ſhould be other than an Archbiſhop. 2. * Lib. 3. c. 4.

That this was his condition, hath been ſhewed already; And for the inconveniences that it is preſt with, they will prove very ſupportable. For I ſhall not at all be obliged thereby to ſlight either Poſtſcript or Fathers, but give the diſputers example to pay them all reverence, being very well able to diſcern the Biſhop through the Archbiſhop, and having never imagined that the ſtyling Michael an Archangel, was denying him to be an Angel. He certainly was an Angel, and that of an higher degree, or elſe could never have been juſtly called an Archangel; and 'tis juſt ſo with Titus, if I had not thought him a Biſhop, I could never have affirmed him an Archbiſhop, and they that in common ſpeech give him the title of Biſhop, do no way intimate their thoughts to be contrary to mine, for every Archbiſhop is certainly a Biſhop, though every Biſhop be not an Archbiſhop. 3.

And therefore if all the danger of my aſſertions falling to the ground, be conſequent to this of Titus or Timothies proving to be no Archbiſhop I ſhall deem them competently ſafe, for each of them were unavoidably ſuch, Timothy Archbiſhop of Epheſus, the prime Metropolis of all Aſia, and Titus of the whole Iſland of Creet, and accordingly to thoſe two, peculiarly as ſuch, directions are given for the ordaining Biſhops and Deacons in every City. 4.

And the proofs which were offered to the contrary, have I ſuppoſe already been anſwered, and being not here thought fit to be recited, the replies ſhall not be ſo impertinent, as to appear without their antagoniſts. Only becauſe it is here inſerted as part of my inconvenient confeſſion, that Titus received no Commiſſion from Saint Paul to ordain ſingle Elders (which I believe I no where ſay, any otherwiſe than that the Commiſſion, cap. 1. 5. was to create Biſhops in every City) I ſhall freely tell them my opinion of that, viz. that a greater power may very fitly be ſaid to comprehend under it the leſſer of the ſame kind, and conſequently that both Timothy and he, which had Commiſſions to ordain Biſhops in every City, had alſo by the ſame commiſſion, power to ordain ſingle Presbyters, where thoſe were uſeful to be ordained, as is evident by the qualification of Deacons and Widows after-mentioned in one certainly, and, as I conceive, in both Epiſtles, for that ſuppoſeth their Commiſſion to extend to the ordaining of thoſe, who yet had not been named in them, if we may gueſs by that of Titus, cap. 1. 5. And ſo much alſo of that part of my confeſſion, which is as free and unforced, as the former had been, and I believe as ſafe to the affirmer. 5.

SECT. X.

A fifth charge of contrariety to Scripture anſwered. Of viſitation of the ſick, belonging to Elders, James 5.

BUT the fifth and laſt charge is more ſevere than any of the former, that theſe Paradoxes, as they ſtile them, are contrary to the very letter of the Scripture, as we have made it evident in our arguments againſt the Jus Divinum of Epiſcopacy, and would farther manifeſt it, if we thought it neceſſary. Numb. 1.

This

2. This I confeſs of contrariety to the very letter of the Scripture (rightly underſtood) I lookt upon as ſo high a charge, that I verily expected ſomewhat extraordinary to bind it on me, and I ſuddenly reſolved (as I read the firſt words of that Section) to examin thoſe Scriptures that ſhould now be produced, ponderingly and exactly, and either confeſs my own conviction, or give competent reaſons why I was not convinced by them.

3. But I ſoon found my expectations fruſtrated; for as here is no one ſuch Scripture mentioned, ſo for their arguments againſt the Jus Divinum of Epiſcopacy, I know not where to ſeek them, and never heard (and verily believe there is no ſuch thing) that they had formerly written any ſuch Book againſt Biſhops, wherein the Diſſertations or any aſſertions of mine therein, were ſo much as arraign'd by them, much leſs evidenced to be contrary to the very letter of Scripture: If I had, I aſſure them I ſhould then have been as ready to have made my reply, as now I have been to attend them thus far.

4. And for their evidencing this in any tract publiſht by them before the Diſſertations were written, by which notwithſtanding the Diſſertations were to be concluded, I have no reaſon to think that to be their meaning, becauſe theſe aſſertions of mine are by them affirmed to be Paradoxes, contrary to all that have ever written in defence of Epiſcopacy, and therefore could not, unleſs it were by divination, be taken notice of, and prevented by them.

5. After they had expreſt their opinion that it was not neceſſary for them farther to manifeſt the contrariety of my Paradoxes to the very letter of the Scripture, they yet farther proceed in theſe words,

For when the Apoſtle ſaith, James 5. 14. Is any man ſick among you? let him call for the Elders of the Church — who is there that can be perſwaded to believe that all theſe Elders were Biſhops (in the ſenſe that Biſhops are taken in in our days) Is this the proper work of Biſhops to viſit the ſick? And beſides, if the Apoſtle by Elders had meant Biſhops in that ſenſe, he would have ſaid, let him call for the Elders of the Churches, not of the Church, unleſs our brethren will ſay that there were divers Biſhops in every Church in the Apoſtles days, in which there were many ſick perſons.

6. What the [For] in the front here ſignifies, I ſhall not go about to conjecture, The antecedents would incline me to believe that it pretends to introduce a reaſon, which might make it evident that my aſſertions are contrary to the very letter of Scripture: But that ſure it doth not any way attempt or appear to do, unleſs the πρεσβύτεροι Elders of the Church be ſuppoſed here to ſignify Preſbyters in our modern Notion of the word: But then that is ſo far from being granted, that it is known to be the only ζητούμενον, the matter of queſtion betwixt us all this while, and ſo was to be proved not ſuppoſed or preſumed in this matter.

7. But bating them this begging of the Queſtion, I ſhall proceed to ſatisfy their wonderment, that I ſhould go about to perſwade any, that πρεσβύτεροι Elders, in this place of S. James, were Biſhops in that ſenſe that we now underſtand and uſe the word.

8. And Firſt, I ſhall not doubt to avow, that for all that ſpace, that in any Church there were no other officers ordained, but only the Biſhop and Deacon, it muſt of neceſſity be reſolved the proper work of Biſhops to viſit the ſick. That there was at the firſt, when the Faith was but thin planted, ſuch a time, hath already been evidenced out of Clemens Romanus, and the profoundeſt antiquities that Epiphanius could meet with, And that then this office muſt either be neglected, or performed by either Biſhop or Deacon, will not need any farther proof.

9. As for the Deacons, in their inſtitution, we find not that to be any part of their Office, and indeed the ſuitableneſs of abſolution to that ſtate of dangerous ſickneſs, and the mention of κἂν ἁμαρτίας ᾖ πεποιηκώς, his having committed ſins, and the command of giving it (in caſe he be qualified for it) ἀφεθήσεται αὐτῷ, abſolvetur ei, abſolution ſhall be given him, doth render the Deacon incompetent for that work, and ſo, where there are no Preſbyters, muſt needs devolve it on the Biſhop.

10. And this account hath more than probability, no leſs than perfect evidence in it, if we only ſuppoſe what hath been ſo oft cleared from the Antients, to be matter of fact, that where the number of believers was ſmall, and none qualified for the Office of Preſbyters, there the Apoſtles conſtituted no more but a Biſhop and a Deacon in each City. For whilſt this was the ſtate of that City, I ſhall ſuppoſe a man ſick, and by the force of S. James's exhortation, deſirous of Abſolution, &c. Who is there ſuppoſeable in that City to give it him but the Biſhop? And whom elſe can he call to him for this purpoſe? And then, who can doubt but this is the work, in it ſelf very agreeable, and in this ſuppoſed caſe peculiar and proper to the Biſhop? ſo that unleſs this ſuppoſition be falſe, nay impoſſible to be true, I may ſafely ſay, this was or might be the Biſhops work, to viſit the ſick, &c.

11. And indeed, if it were not, how could it be by the Biſhop, when other parts of his Office became his fuller employment, committed to the Preſbyter? For firſt he could not commit this to others, if he firſt had it not in himſelf; and Secondly, this was the only reaſon of ordaining inferiour Officers in the Church, that part of the Biſhop's task might be performed by them (as when the whole burthen, which was too heavy for Moſes, was diſtributed among other men) which in this particular could not be, if before this aſſignation of aſſiſtants, it were not originally the ἔργον work or proper task of the Biſhop.

12. To this may be farther added the real dignity, becauſe neceſſary charity of this performance of viſiting the ſick, &c. and this ariſing both from the intimation of Gods own finger, pointing out this a moſt agreeable ſeaſon for all ſpiritual admonition and comfort, a molle tempus fandi, wherein a word ſeaſonably ſpoken, may moſt probably find the due reception, and wherein the prayers and bleſſing of the moſt Apoſtolical perſon, or the moſt highly and juſtly dignified in the Church, and in the favour of God, may come in moſt opportunely, and in this reſpect we ſee in that place, that the prayers of the great Prophet Elias are made uſe of by S. James, to exemplify the practice, which in this particular he recommended to the Church.

13. And I muſt needs tell the Objectors, that as mean an opinion as they ſeem to have of this work of viſiting the ſick, I cannot but affirm on the contrary, that if it were duely and advantageouſly managed it were extreamly uſeful and beneficial to the good of Souls, and as proper for a Biſhop perſonally to perform, when his other publick neceſſary tasks (wherein many more are concern'd, and wherein he hath hath no proxies to ſupply his place) permit, as any one part of his divine office, differing from the reſt only in this, (and in that reſpect yielding the precedence to them) that other parts of his office are, or may be at the ſame time extenſive to many, whilſt each act of this is terminated in ſome one, whoſe ſoul yet ought to be more pretious in his eyes, than all other acquiſitions in the world.

Accordingly it is in the * Diſſertations evidenced out of Polycarp's Epiſtle (who was ſomewhat after the time of James the author of this Epiſtle) that part of the Biſhop's office it was then eſteemed to be, ἐπισκέπτεσθαι πάντας ἀσθενεῖς, to viſit all the ſick, in like manner as in Juſtin Martyr he is made the Curator of all that are in want, the grand diſtributer of all the liberalities of the Church. 14. * Diſſert. 4. 21, 22.

As for the only objection that is here tendered againſt this interpretation of the place, from the ſingular [ἐκκλησίας of the Church] not of the Churches, the anſwer is obvious, that this Epiſtle of James being written to all the Jewes in diſperſion, Jam. 1. 1. theſe could not make up any one particular Church of any ſingle denomination, but yet all conjoin very fitly in that one Univerſal ſtyle of ἐκκλησία, the Church. In this reſpect we know 'tis called the Catholick Epiſtle of James, becauſe written to the whole Church of the Jews, all the believers of that nation, whereſoever diſperſt out of their Countrey. 15.

Now theſe inhabiting in divers Cities, it is as certain there were divers Biſhops in this circuit, and ſo the πρεσβύτεροι τῆς ἐκκλησίας, the Elders of the Church, are moſt commodiouſly ſet to expreſs theſe ſeveral Biſhops, belonging to this complex body, the Church of the diſperſion. 16.

Not that there were more of theſe in one City, for that conſideration would never have cauſed the plural expreſſion, becauſe were there never ſo many, the ſick perſon needed not have called more at once (and upon that ſcore I ſhall demand of them that argue from the number, was every ſick man in their opinion, to call for the whole Preſbytery?) nor again, becauſe there were not as many Churches as Elders, but only becauſe theſe many particular Churches, of which there was an equal number of Elders, were very fitly comprehended under the one general ἐκκλησία, the Church in the ſingular number. 17.

SECT. XI.

A laſt objection from Act. 21. 18. and 14. 3. and 11. 30. anſwered.
Elders for Rulers or Biſhops.

THere yet remains one ſort of Objections more againſt theſe Paradoxes, in theſe words. Numb. 1.

Beſides, when it is ſaid, Act. 21. 18. Paul went in with us unto James, and all the Elders were preſent. It is ſuppoſed by our Epiſcopal men, that James was at this time Biſhop of Jeruſalem. Now we demand, who were theſe Elders? were theſe alſo Biſhops of Jeruſalem? will this anſwer conſiſt with our brethrens judgment? ſo likewiſe when it is ſaid, Act. 15. 4. And when they were come to Jeruſalem, they were received of the Church, and of the Apoſtles and Elders, we demand, what is meant by the Church? Is it not meant the Church of Jeruſalem, to which place they are ſaid to come? And if ſo, then we ask farther, what is meant by the Elders? Muſt it not be anſwered, that by Elders are meant the Elders of Jeruſalem? And then let any man tell us, how theſe Elders can be ſaid to be Biſhops in a Prelatical ſenſe, eſpecially according to the ſenſe of our brethren, who make James to be at this time the only Biſhop of Jeruſalem. Add farther, It is ſaid, Act. 14. 3. When Paul and Barnabas had ordained them Elders in every Church, Act. 11. 30. They ſent relief to the Elders, &c. Can any imagine that this relief was ſent only to Biſhops, and that Paul and Barnabas ordained no Presbyters in any Church, but only Biſhops? Is not this to offer manifeſt violence to the Scriptures? and inſtead of upholding of Epiſcopacy, is not this ſufficient to render it odious and contemptible to all ſober, and godly, and moderate Chriſtians? But we forbear.

It ſeems we have ſtill remaining another heap of inconvenient Confeſſions that we labour under; And upon them, more Socratico, they make their demands; And although I might juſtly wonder why they which have read the Diſſertations, and know what anſwer I give to every of their demands, ſhould be at the trouble to ask them again; yet becauſe I am reſolved not to be weary of attending them, I ſhall anſwer them as punctually as they could wiſh, and patiently ſupport all the odium that will reſult from thence, among all ſober, and godly, and moderate Chriſtians. 2.

Here only I deſire two things may be remembred, which have already been evidenced, firſt, that the word πρεσβύτεροι Elders, in the ſtyle of the Old Teſtament, in the continued uſe of all languages, being an expreſſion of power and dignity, is in the New Teſtament upon all reaſonable accounts as properly applicable to the Rulers and Governours Eccleſiaſtical, as the word Apoſtles, or Biſhops, or Preſidents, or Rulers, or any the like would be thought to be, and withal very fit to expreſs ſingle Rulers in each particular Church (in caſe any ſuch may otherwiſe appear to be mentioned in Scripture) there being no propriety in the word, or peculiarity in the uſage of it, to incline it to joint power of Collegues ruling in common. 3.

Accordingly, evidences have been produced in the Diſſertations to ſhew the continuance of this uſage among Authors after the Scripture-time, that it long remained in the language of the Antients, Polycarp, Papias, Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus and Tertullian, many of which are known and by the adverſaries acknowledged to aſſert Epiſcopacy in our modern ſenſe, and yet uſe the word Πρεσβύτεροι Elders, to denote ſometimes the Apoſtles, ſometimes the ſingular Biſhops in each Church. 4.

And therefore the affirming this one thing, ſo atteſted and confirmed, viz. that the word Πρεσβύτεροι may very conveniently be interpreted Biſhops, as oft as the circumſtances of the Text will bear it, will not, I hope, ſtill be ſo unfortunate as to fall under the cenſure of Paradox and odious, being indeed a plain obvious obſervation, which hath nothing of difficulty or harſhneſs in it. 5.

Having premiſed this, I ſhall only add, that the Apoſtles being by all Prelatiſts (I hope convincingly) affirmed and proved to have ordained Biſhops in every City of Converts and Proſelytes to the Faith, and there being many ſuch Cities in Judæa, beſides Jeruſalem, and conſequently many Biſhops in thoſe 6.

Cities, one in each, it can be no new thing to conclude, that when we read of Biſhops in the plural within that pale of Judæa, theſe are the Biſhops of Judæa; and ſo in like manner, when we find the Biſhop of Jeruſalem mentioned ſeparately, and then thoſe others with him, (expreſt by any title which ſignifies Biſhops, be it Ἐπίσκοποι or Πρεσβύτεροι it matters not) and withal, theſe never expreſt to be Πρεσβύτεροι ἐκκλησίας Ἱερουσαλὴμ, Elders of the Church of Jeruſalem, but either Elders ſimply, or elſe ἐν or εἰς in or at Jeruſalem, denoting only the place, where, at that time, they were preſent, it will be as little harſh to infer, that at ſuch time there were aſſembled or met together at Jeruſalem, James the Biſhop of that Metropolis, and the other Biſhops of the whole Region, the Biſhops of Judæa with him.

7. From hence there will now be no difficulty to make a brief anſwer to each of their demands, firſt, that Act. 21. 18. the Elders which were preſent with James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, were the Biſhops of Judæa which were then, upon the emergent affairs of the Church, preſent at Jeruſalem, whether all of them aſſembled in Councel, to receive an account of Saint Pauls tranſactions and ſucceſſes among the Gentiles, v. 19. or many of them on any other Eccleſiaſtical concernment.

8. But that which puts it out of queſtion, that it was all of them in Councel, is, what follows, v. 25. where they refer to the decrees which had been conciliarly delivered, v. 15. by them, who are now there preſent, we have written and concluded. And what Paradox can there be in this, that all the Biſhops of Judæa ſhould be in Councel at Hieruſalem, and S^t Peter and St. John with them, and that St. Paul ſhould come and give an account of his travails and actions in their preſence?

9. The ſame anſwer certainly belongs to the place next mentioned, c. 15. 4. where after mention of their Reception by the Church, follows [and of the Apoſtles and Elders] by the Church is meant the Believers that were at Jeruſalem, whether inhabiting there continually, or now occaſionally preſent there. By the Apoſtles, James the Brother of the Lord, the then Biſhop of the Metropolis, together with Peter and John the known Apoſtles of Chriſt, this James by them ſet over that Church, ſaith * Clemens and † Hegeſippus, and by St. Paul himſelf reckoned among the Apoſtles, Gal. 1. 19. and ſo in the title of his Epiſtle, and named before Peter and John the two prime Apoſtles, as being in this his See, Gal. 2. 9. and expreſt to pronounce the decree in the Councel, Ἐγὼ κρίνω, I judge, Act. 15. 19. and this confirm'd by the teſtimonies of thoſe Antients that the Preſbyterians make the moſt frequent uſe of, Theodoret and * St. Hierome; the former expreſly affirming of thoſe times, that they which were after ſtyled Biſhops, were then called Apoſtles, and the latter ſtyling this James particularly, Apoſtolum decimum tertium, the thirteenth Apoſtle.

* Τῶν ἀποστ. l. 6. † Τῶν μνημ. ε.

* Commen. in Iſa.

10. And then what can be more agreeable to the Context (to make the Councel compleat, a Councel for the Churches of Syria, &c. to appeal to) than to render the Elders the Biſhops of all Judæa, which were certainly fitter for the turn to join in the Councel, and give Law to other Cities, than the bare Presbyters of the one City of Jeruſalem could have been eſteemed, if any ſuch there had been in the Church ſo early?

11. For though of the Apoſtles, who had an univerſal juriſdiction, and of the Biſhop of Jeruſalem (as that was the prime Metropolis not only of Judæa, but Syria alſo) with the Biſhops of the whole Province in Councel with him, ſome reaſonable account may be given, why they ſhould be conſulted by the Church of Antioch, and give binding decrees in that matter, to all that were ſubject to that Metropolis; yet ſuppoſing the Church of Jeruſalem to be governed by Preſbyters, and that (as theſe ſay) the Elders mentioned in the Councel were none but the Preſbyters of that particular Church, there could no reaſonable account be given, why they ſhould join with the Apoſtles in this work, wherein not Jeruſalem, of which alone they were Preſbyters, but Antioch and other Cities of Syria and Cilicia were immediately concerned, and concluded by the ſentence of James, that muſt be, (according to their opinion) of one of the Presbyters of Jeruſalem.

12. In the next place what is ſaid of Act. 14. 23. and Act. 11. 30. is ſomewhat unhappily put together, and yet not rectified in the Errata. For firſt, the ordaining Elders in every Church to which Act. 11. 30. is affixt, is not mentioned there, but Act. 14. 23. and the ſending relief, which in the Syntaxes muſt be affixt to Act. 14. 23. is not to be met with there, but Act. 11. 30. But this were imputable to ſome haſte either of Scribe or Compoſitor, were there not a ſecond incongruity interweaved in it, viz. that when Paul and Barnabas had ordained them Elders, &c. (which was not done till Act. 14. 23.) They ſent relief to the Elders, (which was done, Act. 11. 30.) which is an evident πρωθύστερον, which I cannot diſcern how it was uſeful for them to be guilty of.

13. As for their Quæres raiſed on theſe two Texts, the Anſwers are obvious, and here to be tranſlated out of the Diſſertations as formerly, that the πρεσβύτεροι Elders, Act. 11. 30. are the Biſhops of the ſeveral Cities of Judæa, not the Preſbyters of that one City Jeruſalem.

14. For firſt the famine that occaſioned this charity of the Antiochians, was ἐφ' ὅλην τὴν οἰκουμένην, not upon Jeruſalem alone, but all the World, i. e. in the Scripture-ſtile, Lu. 21. 26. Rom. 10. 18. over the whole Land of Judæa, according to the manner of the ſeptuagint, who oft render הָאָרֶץ the Earth or the Land, when it ſignifies the Land of Judæa, by οἰκουμένη the World, As Iſa. 10. 23. and 13. 5. 9. and 24. 1. and accordingly Joſephus ſaith of this time of Claudius's Reign, μέγαν λιμὸν κατὰ τὴν Ἰουδαίαν γενέσθαι, that there was a great famine over Judæa.

15. Secondly, The charity is diſtinctly ſaid to be deſigned by the Donors, τοῖς κατοικοῦσιν ἐν Ἰουδαίᾳ ἀδελφοῖς, to the brethren that dwelt in Judæa, in no wiſe confined to Jeruſalem, nor conſequently can the Elders to whom it was ſent, and in whoſe hands it was put, be any others than the Elders, i. e. ſay we, Biſhops of all Judæa.

16. Thirdly, It is very agreeable to the office of Biſhops, as we find the practice in the Primitive Church, to be the receivers, and ſtewards, and diſpenſers of the wealth of any ſort, which was brought in to the Church, whether by the offertory of the faithful in the Sacrament, or by the liberality of other Churches, inlarged to thoſe that were in want. It being Juſtin Martyr's affirmation of the firſt times, that all the offerings were brought to the Προεστὼς or Preſident, and that he was thereby made κηδεμὼν the Curator of all that were in want.

17. And when what is ſent to the Biſhop, is ſuppoſed to be ſent to him, as the Oeconomus or ſteward of the the Church, not for the inriching himſelf, but to provide for thoſe that wanted; I cannot imagine why this may not be as conveniently ſuppoſed, as that it ſhould be ſent to the Preſbyters only.

So in like manner the Πρεσβύτεροι, Act. 14. 23. are Biſhops again, and ſuch and only ſuch (as far as 18.
we have any footſteps of it) were at that time ordained in the Churches, one in every City where the Goſpel was received, with one or more Deacons to attend him.

And to this as the words ſo often mentioned out of Clemens Romanus are moſt evident, that the 19.
Apoſtles of Chriſt preaching through Cities and Regions, conſtituted their firſt-fruits εἰς ἐπισκόπους καὶ διακόνους for Biſhops and Deacons, ſo the context in this place of the Acts is very agreeable: For here when Paul and Barnabas had preacht and converted a competent number at Derbe, v. 12. and returned to the Cities of Lyſtra, Iconium and Antioch, v. 22. confirming the ſouls of the brethren, i. e. the faithful, there it follows, before their parting, that they ordained Elders κατ' ἐκκλησίαν in every Church, that ſure is, in every of the Churches here named, not many in each, but Elders in all, one Biſhop in every Church; which again is no news for me or any Prelatiſt to affirm, when in the Epiſtle to Titus, S^t Paul's direction is conformable to his practice, appointing him to ordain Elders κατὰ πόλιν, City by City, or in every City, c. 1. 5. and preſently calling the Elder ſo to be ordained, Biſhop, as in the Epiſtle to Timothy he is alſo called.

Thus much pains I ſhall not grudge to have taken, if it be but to reſcue a ſmall Book, very inno- 20.
cently meant, from the charge of two ſuch Paradoxes, as they are called by thoſe, who have not thought fit to believe them, and are as unwilling that others ſhould, and therefore conclude their diſcourſe againſt them with tragical expreſſions of offering manifeſt violence to the Scriptures, of being ſufficient, inſtead of upholding Epiſcopacy, to render it odious and contemptible, &c. And when they have ſaid ſo much with ſo little weight of reaſon to juſtifie it, they will then part with all meekneſs and perfect temper [but we forbear] i. e. abſtain to add more, when they had ſaid as much ill as could be. I am ſorry there was ſtill any more bitterneſs within, to be ſuppreſt, when there was ſo much vented. However it is, we are now at end of a ſecond poſt, and ſo have time to breath a while after ſome laſſitude.

CHAP. III.

Concerning the Opinion of Antiquity in this Queſtion.

SECT. I.

The Teſtimonies of Clemens Romanus. Biſhops and Deacons the only offices at the firſt. Corinth Metropolis of Achaia. What χώρα ſignifies. The Apoſtles care to prevent contentions about Epiſcopacy. Hegeſippus's teſtimony of the contentions at Corinth. Clement a Biſhop.

SOme things there are yet behind in their Appendix, wherein I diſcern my ſelf to be concern'd, in Numb. 1.
ſome directly and immediately, in others by remoter obligation; as when ſome of thoſe teſtimonies of Antiquity, which are in the Diſſertations manifeſted to be perfectly reconcileable with our pretenſions, and ſome of them evident confirmations of them, are yet by theſe Writers crudely taken up, and made uſe of, as Teſtimonies on their ſide, without ever taking notice of that which is ſaid in the Diſſertations to clear the contrary.

Of the former ſort, wherein I am more immediately pointed at, there are four things. Firſt, Con- 2.
cerning one teſtimony of St. Hierome. Secondly, Concerning Ignatius his Epiſtles in general, and the appeals that I make to his authority, which they will not allow to have force with them. Thirdly, Concerning one teſtimony cited by them out of St. Ambroſe on Epheſ. 4. and anſwered by me, but that anſwer diſliked and rejected by them. Fourthly, Concerning the Chorepiſcopi. Of the ſecond ſort, are the teſtimonies out of Clemens Romanus, Polycarp, Irenæus, and Tertullian, eſpecially the two former of them.

I ſhall therefore briefly ſurvey every one of theſe, and I ſuppoſe I have pitcht on the moſt conve- 3.
nient Method (and that which will give the Reader the cleareſt view both of the judgment of Antiquity concerning Epiſcopacy in general (to which their Appendix profeſſeth wholly to be deſigned) and more particularly of the truth of thoſe two propoſitions which have been accuſed as Paradoxes in me, but will now appear not to be ſuch) by taking theſe teſtimonies, as they lie in the order of time, wherein the Authors lived, and then that of S^t Hierome, which happens to be firſt mentioned by them, p. 102. will fall to be one of the laſt to which we ſhall make reply.

Firſt then for Clemens, they thus begin, ſure we are that Clemens, who lived in the firſt Century, [illegible] 4.
his famous Epiſtle to the Corinthians (an undoubted piece of Antiquity) makes but two Orders of Miniſtery, Biſhops and Deacons. And having ſet down the place which teſtifies this, * Καὶα χωρὰς οὖν καὶ πόλεις κηρύσσοντες, καθίσανον τὰς ἀπαρχὰς αὐτῶν δοκιμάσαντες τῷ πνεύματι, εἰς ἐπισκόπους καὶ διακόνους τῶν μελλόντων πιστεύειν, and rendered it thus, Chriſt Jeſus ſent his Apoſtles through Countries and Cities, in which they preached and conſtituted the firſt-fruits (approving them by the ſpirit) for Biſhops and Deacons to thoſe who ſhould afterwards believe. From hence they obſerve, p. 105. That Biſhops and Deacons were the only orders of Miniſtery in the firſt Primitive Church. And that the Apoſtles appointed but two Officers (that is Biſhops and Deacons) to bring men to believe, becauſe when he had reckon'd up three Orders appointed by God amongſt the Jews, High-Prieſt, Prieſts, and Levites: coming to recite Orders appointed by the Apoſtles under the Goſpel, he doth mention only Biſhops and Deacons. p. 104. * Clem. ad Corinth. p. 54.

And here one would think were little for the Preſbyterians advantage, even no more than one of 5.

my Paradoxes would have afforded them, which, from this very teſtimony and ſome other, concluded that which was then ſo ſtrange for them to hear (yet now can be confeſt by them) that the Apoſtles at their firſt plantations contented themſelves with Biſhops and Deacons, one of each, or perhaps more of the latter in every City.

6. But when theſe men thus grant the concluſion from this place, which I inferr'd, I have yet no reaſon to boaſt of their liberality, becauſe I ſuppoſe it their meaning, that by Biſhops Clement meant Preſbyters, though this they do not ſo much as ſay in twice repeating of their concluſion.

7. And yet certainly it needed more than ſaying, proving by ſome evidence or argument, that Ἐπίσκοποι Biſhops in that place ſignifies any thing elſe but Biſhops. All that they offer towards a reaſon for this, muſt be contained in theſe words of theirs that follow in the former place.

8. The occaſion of that Epiſtle ſeems to be a new ſedition raiſed by the Corinthians againſt their Presbyters, p. 57. 58. Clemens to remove their preſent ſedition tells them how God hath always appointed ſeveral orders in his Church, which muſt not be confounded; in the Jewiſh Church he appointed High-Prieſt, Prieſts and Levites, And then tells them for the time of the Goſpel that Chriſt Jeſus ſent his Apoſtles, as before citing the words of Clement already ſet down.

9. But certainly this doth not prove Biſhops in that Epiſtle to be no more than Preſbyters, but may as fitly be argumentative for me, that Πρεσβύτεροι Elders in that Epiſtle ſignify Biſhops. The only imaginable medium of proof, which can be uſeful for their turn, I ſhall ſuppoſe to be this, that Corinth was but one City, and therefore Πρεσβύτεροι Elders at, and of Corinth, muſt needs be Preſbyters, becauſe according to our opinion there were not more Biſhops in one City.

10. But to this I anſwer, Firſt, That what Clemens ſaith in the teſtimony now produced, he ſpeaks not of Corinth peculiarly, but of the Cities, and Regions in general, which the Apoſtles converted, and of them in the plural number, κατὰ χώρας καὶ πόλεις, through Regions and Cities, and then in thoſe many Cities, there may well be many Biſhops, and yet certainly no more than one in one City.

11. Secondly, that this Epiſtle of Clemens to the Corinthians was not to the Chriſtians of that one City, but to the whole Province of Achaia, of which Corinth was the Metropolis, and wherein the Proconſul of Achaia reſided, and kept his Courts, Act. 18. 12. 15. So the Title of the Epiſtle inclines, being inſcribed to the Church παροικοῦσαν Κόρινθον, which denotes the whole Province, then called παροικίαν, as when in Polycarps Epiſtle, the Church παροικοῦσα Φιλίππους [is not only that of the City Philippi, but of the Province belonging to it, and in the other part of the title of this Epiſtle, Ἐκκλησία θεοῦ παροικοῦσα Ῥώμην, the Church of God dwelling about Rome,] in the Church of Rome, and all that belonged to that Metropolis, called by Ignatius τόπος χωρίου Ῥωμαίων, the place of the Region of the Romans, i. e. the City, and the whole Region about it; And ſo when Euſebius mentions Dionyſius the famous Biſhop of Corinth, he calls him Biſhop τῆς ἐν Κορίνθῳ παροικίας, of the Province of, or about Corinth. v. 4. c. 23.

12. And that this is the truth of it, and no conjecture of mine, may appear by one Character in the Epiſtle; He tells them that they had formerly received Epiſtles from S. Paul: This directs to reſolve, that theſe to whom this Epiſtle was addreſt, were the ſame to whom S. Paul's were formerly ſent; And it is evident, that thoſe were the Saints or Chriſtians in all Achaia, 2. Cor. 1. 1. And the ſame is doubtleſs implied by the phraſe in every place, 1 Cor. 1. 2. not in every place ſimply of the World (for it was no Catholick Epiſtle, but a particular admonition for particular faults, inceſt, &c.) but in that whole Province or Region of Achaia. So that which Apollos is ſaid to have done among them (Apollos hath watered) 1 Cor. 3. 6. appears by the ſtory, Act. 18. 27. to have belonged to all Achaia. And ſo what the Apoſtle writes to them of ſending their offertory to Judæa, 1 Cor. 6. 1. 2 Cor. 8. and 9. doth appear by Rom. 15. 26. to appertain to all Achaia; Macedonia, ſaith he, and Achaia have pleaſed to make a contribution, and 2 Cor. 9. 2. I know your forwardneſs, that Achaia hath been ready above a year ago. Where the [ὑμῶν you] and [Achaia] muſt needs be of the ſame latitude, and ſo again it is c. 11. 9. comparred with v. 18. And ſo thoſe of S. Paul, and conſequently this of Clement was not to the City of Corinth alone, but to all the Churches of Achaia; and if among them there were more Biſhops than one, there will certainly be no news in that, and if thoſe Biſhops (according both to the nature of the word, and the uſe of it in thoſe days, before and after Clement) were ſtyled ſometimes ἐπίσκοποι ſometimes πρεσβύτεροι alſo, then all is very agreeable to all that we contend for, that there was one Biſhop, not a College of Preſbyters in Clements days in every City.

13. And this is directly the importance of Clements words, as they lie in the Epiſtle, ἐξεπέμφθη, ſaith he, ὁ Χριστὸς ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ, καὶ οἱ Ἀπόστολοι ὑπὸ Χριστοῦ, Chriſt was ſent out from God, and the Apoſtles from Chriſt (As my Father ſent me, ſo ſend I you) and then to ſhew that the Biſhops were in the ſame manner ſent, i. e. commiſſionated by them, he adds, that they, i. e. the Apoſtles ἐξῆλθον εὐαγγελιζόμενοι went out Preaching κατὰ χώρας καὶ πόλεις, &c. therefore Preaching through Regions and Cities they conſtituted their firſt-fruits—for Biſhops and Deacons; Cities and Regions in the Plural, and Biſhops and Deacons proportionable thereto.

14. And when he adds, that they were thus made of their firſt-fruits, i. e. of thoſe that were firſt converted by them, and to this end, that they might be officers of thoſe which ſhould after believe (ſuppoſing that there were not many now that did ſo) this is directly a deſcription of thoſe times, of which Epiphanius ſpeaks, ſaying, that when the Goſpel began to be Preacht, there was yet no need of Presbyters, but Biſhops and Deacons ſerved the turn.

15. And accordingly Deacons in thoſe dayes were immediately made Biſhops, as is ſufficiently known of Clement the Writer of this Epiſtle, who was S^t Peters Deacon, and Biſhop after him, as is cleared in Diſſert. 5. c. 1. Sect. 11. And ſo much for that firſt teſtimony.

16. One thing only more frome hence they are deſirous to conclude, that in the firſt and pureſt times the cuſtom was to chuſe Biſhops in Villages, as well as in great Cities, grounded upon this, that here the Apoſtles are ſaid to have appointed Biſhops κατὰ χώρας, as well as κατὰ πόλεις.

17. But there is no ground of this concluſion in this teſtimony; For firſt, here is no mention of villages, χῶραι is not Greek for them, but κῶμαι, and 'tis the former, not the latter which here we find. It is evident what is meant by χῶραι, when it is joined with πόλεις Cities, viz. Provinces, which have each of them many Cities in them, and when it is joined with κῶμαι Villages, it fitly denotes Regions, in which there are many Villages.

So

So ſaith * Strabo of Aſia, Ῥωμαῖοι ἐπαρχίαν ἀπέδειξαν τὴν χώραν, the Romans made that Region a Province; and ſo in the Eccleſiaſtical writings χώρα is a Province made up of many Cities, each of which had a Biſhop over them; as when in the † Council in Trullo, Κυπριανὸς Ἀρχιεπίσκοπος τῆς Ἀφρων χώρας, Cyprian is ſaid to be Archbiſhop of the Region of the Africans, Region there ſignifying the whole Province under that Metropolitane, and ſo * Cyprian himſelf makes it his obſervation, Jampridem per omnes provincias & ſingulas urbes inſtituti ſunt Epiſcopi. Antiently through all the Provinces and each of the Cities, Biſhops were inſtituted. Where the Biſhops in the ſeveral Provinces, as thoſe differ from the Biſhops in each City, are undoubtedly Archbiſhops. 18. * Geo. lib. 13. † Can. 2. * Ep. 52.

And if that place, ſo very agreeable to this of Clemens, may be allowed to give us the meaning of it, we ſee what it will be, and how diſtant from theſe mens concluſion, that the Apoſtles inſtituted Biſhops in every City, and in each Region or Province, and in the Metropolis or chief City of it, a Metropolitane or Archbiſhop. 19.

But then ſecondly, if χώρα ſhould ſignifie, as they would have it, a company of villages or little towns lying near together, ſo as to be here uſed in oppoſition to the Cities, yet could it not be from hence concluded, that the Apoſtles conſtituted Biſhops in thoſe villages. The words are, they preached through Regions and Cities, and conſtituted their firſt-fruits (earlyeſt converts) into Biſhops and Deacons, which will be perfectly true, though all the Biſhops and Deacons conſtituted by them, had their fixt ſeats of reſidence in the Cities; For that they conſtituted Biſhops in the Regions, is not here affirmed. 20.

Much more might be ſaid in this matter, to ſhew that the utmoſt conceſſions that the adverſaries could demand from hence, would no way hinder or diſadvantage our pretenſions, but only give the Chorepiſcopi a greater Antiquity in the Church, than either they or we have reaſon to think they had, of which whole matter the Reader may ſee a full diſcourſe, Diſſert. 3. c. 8. Sect. 25, &c. and of it ſomewhat we ſhall anon have occaſion to repeat from thence. 21.

The ſecond Teſtimony of Clemens is ſet down by them in theſe words, That the Apoſtles knowing by Jeſus Chriſt, that there would a contention ariſe, περὶ ὀνόματος τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς, about the name of Biſhop, and being indued with perfect foreknowledge, they appointed the aforeſaid (that is, the aforeſaid orders of Biſhops and Deacons) &c. Here they require two things to be noted, Firſt, That by name is not meant the bare name of Biſhop, but the honour and dignity, as it is taken, Phil. 2. 9. Epheſ. 1. 21. Heb. 1. 4. Rev. 11. So that ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόματι, is ἐπὶ ἀξιώματι ἐπισκοπῆς, The controverſie among the Corinthians was not about the name, but dignity of Epiſcopacy; for it was about the depoſition of their godly Presbyters, pag. 57, 58. Secondly, That the only remedy appointed by the Apoſtles for the cure of all contentions ariſing about Epiſcopacy, is, by committing the care of the Church to Biſhops and Deacons: Afterwards the Church found out another way, by ſetting up one Biſhop over another; But Clemens tells us, that the Apoſtles indued with perfect foreknowledge of things ordained only Biſhops and Deacons for a remedy of Schiſms. 22. Pag. 57.

To this they add (to ſuperſede farther citations out of this Epiſtle) It would be too long to recite all that is ſaid in this Epiſtle for the juſtification of our propoſition, let the Reader peruſe pag. 57. 62. 69. 72. and take notice that thoſe which are called Biſhops in one place, are called Presbyters in another, and that they are ἰσοδυναμοῦντα throughout the whole Epiſtle. 23.

What this whole Epiſtle will yield toward the proof of their propoſition, which is, [That after Chriſts Aſcenſion the Church of God for a certain ſpace of time, was governed by a Common Council of Presbyters without Biſhops.] I think it reaſonable for any that hath not read it, to conjecture by theſe two teſtimonies, which theſe, who aſſert the propoſition, and here undertake to prove it, have thought fit to cull out of it, having withal nothing more to collect for their turn from the reſt of the Epiſtle, particularly from the comparing thoſe four pages, 57. 62. 69. 72. but only this, that they which are called Biſhops in one place, are called πρεσβύτεροι Elders in another. 24.

Now this laſt they know is the very thing that I contend (as from the Scripture, ſo) from this and other antient writings, that Ἐπίσκοπος and Πρεσβύτερος, [Biſhop and Elder] are words of the ſame importance; all the queſtion is, whether at the firſt both imported Biſhops, or both Preſbyters, in our modern notion. That there is no one circumſtance ſo much as offered by them to conſideration, which may incline it their way, is evident by their own words, neither of their two notes pretending to it, only their concluſion affirming, that they are ἰσοδυναμοῦντα, words of the ſame importance. The whole matter therefore will ſtill devolve to this one Quare, whether, when Clement ſaith of the Apoſtles that they conſtituted none but Biſhops and Deacons, by Biſhops a College of Presbyters in every City be to be underſtood, or rather one Biſhop, with his Deacon or Deacons in every City. 25.

For the clearing of this one difficulty (for this being evinced, all that their two notes affirm, is directly on our ſide againſt them) I ſhall here intirely ſet down the whole place laſt produced, of which they have left out one half. It is thus, Οἱ Ἀπόστολοι ἡμῶν ἔγνωσαν διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ χριστοῦ, ὅτι ἔρις ἔσται ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόματι τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς: διὰ ταύτην οὖν αἰτίαν, πρόγνωσιν εἰληφότες τελείαν, κατέστησαν τοὺς προειρημένους (ἐπισκόπους καὶ διακόνους τῶν μελλόντων πιστεύειν) καὶ μεταξὺ ἐπινομὴν δεδώκασιν, ὅπως ἐὰν κοιμηθῶσι, διαδέξωνται ἕτεροι δεδοκιμασμένοι ἄνδρες τὴν λειτουργίαν αὐτῶν. Our Apoſtles knew by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt (that muſt be by revelation from him) that there would contention ariſe upon the name or dignity of Epiſcopacy (i. e. about the authority of Biſhops in the Church, ſome oppoſing it, and caſting them out of their Offices, as here in the Church of the Corinthians, and through all Achaia, was actually come to paſs at this time, and occaſioned this Epiſtle to them) For which cauſe therefore the Apoſtles having received perfect foreknowledge (that there would be ſuch contentions on this occaſion) did (for the preventing of them) conſtitute the forementioned (Biſhops and Deacons of thoſe which ſhould come in to the Faith in their new plantations) and after them (ſo μεταξὺ ſignifies in Barnabas's Epiſtle, Sect. 10. λαὸς ὁ μεταξὺ, the people that ſhould be after, and εἰς τὸ μεταξὺ, Act. 13. 42. that which ſhould follow, the next after) gave a Series or Catalogue, or manner of ſucceſſion (i. e. ſet down a note of them which in each Church ſhould ſucceed the preſent Incumbent) that when they died, other approved men might ſucceed to their office or miniſtery. 26.

What can be more manifeſt, than that the dignity, which the Apoſtles conferred on the Biſhops in each City and Province, which in the former Teſtimony hath been cleared to belong to ſingle Biſhops, not to any College of Presbyters, was by them foreſeen, that it would be matter of Contention, occaſion 27.

of Sedition in the Church: for the prevention of which, they uſed the probableſt means imaginable, named ſucceſſors to the preſent Biſhops in every Church, who ſhould ſupply the vacant places, as ſoon as they fell, and ſo prevent ſuing and contending for them, and were by the ſpecial ſpirit of God directed, who thoſe ſucceſſors ſhould be; ſo that the oppoſing their ſucceſſion, or caſting them out afterwards, muſt be a great ſin, even of reſiſting the ſpirit of God, who had deſigned them to this inheritance. Which, next to Chriſt's bearing them in his right hand, Rev. 1. 20. is the greateſt character of dignity, and evidence of Chriſt's approving of the Order, and care of continuing it, as the original of union (not diviſion) in the Church.

28. There is not by theſe men one word of objection offered againſt this concluſion, thus formerly deduced in the Diſſertations, and therefore I need add no more for the vindicating this teſtimony; yet will it not be amiſs here to interpoſe the words of Hegeſippus, one that was preſent at the time of that ſedition, and gives an account of it in * Euſebius, ἐπέμψεν, ſaith he, ἐν τῷ ὀρθῷ λόγῳ ἡ ἐκκλησία ἡ Κορινθίων μεχρὶ Πείμου ἐπισκοπεύοντος ἐν Κορίνθῳ, The Church of the Corinthians continued in the right, until Primus was Biſhop of Corinth. Which is a teſtimony as antient as that of Clement, and tells us what Biſhops they were which Clement ſpeaks of, ſuch as Primus was at Corinth, i. e. one ſingular Governour in a City.

* L. 4. c. 22.

29. The ſame will be yet more manifeſt, if we conſider what by all Authors is affirmed of Clemens himſelf, the writer, at the time of writing this Epiſtle, that having been Saint Paul's Fellow-labourer, Phil. 4. 3. Saint Peter's Deacon (Ignat. in Ep. ad Trall.) he was now Biſhop of Rome, by the joint ſuffrage of Irenæus and all the Antients, even of Saint Jerome himſelf in his Catalogue, and by him ſtyled an Apoſtolical perſon, on Iſa. 52. a companion of the Apoſtles (in Interp. Com. Orig. in Rom.) and by Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. lib. 4. an Apoſtle in the ſenſe that Theodoret ſaith, thoſe whom in his time they called Biſhops, had been at firſt called Apoſtles.

30. Accordingly of him, ſaith Irenæus in his Catalogue of the ſucceſſive Governours of the Church, τέτῳ τόπῳ ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀποστόλων τὸν ἐπισκοπὴν κληροῦται Κλήμης, in the third place from the Apoſtles Clemens came to the Biſhoprick; Which how it is eaſily to be accorded with thoſe who truly make him Peters immediate ſucceſſor, ſee Diſſert. 5. c. 1. Sect. 6. &c.

31. Other teſtimonies there are producible from this Epiſtle of Clement, which are all to the ſame purpoſe with the former; As when he finds an image of the Eccleſiaſtical ſtate under Biſhops and Deacons, in the prophecy of Iſaiah, cap. 60. 17. where in the Greek tranſlation, then in uſe, he had read καταστήσω ἐπισκόπους αὐτῶν ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ, καὶ τοὺς διακόνους αὐτῶν ἐν πίστει, I will conſtitute their Biſhops in righteouſneſs, and their Deacons in faithfulneſs, ſpeaking of the Judges and their Miniſters and officers in every City.

32. And ſo again when he exhorts them to give due honour to the Elders among them, talks of their ſedition againſt their Elders, and caſting them out of their Epiſcopacy, in one place (ἐπισκοπῆς ἀποβάλλειν) and removing them from that honoured office (τελειμεθύμης λειτουργίας μεταγαγεῖν) in another, and the like; All of the ſame importance, and to be interpreted by the former.

SECT. II.

The Teſtimony of Polycarp. That he was himſelf a Biſhop. His mention of Ignatius's Epiſtles, fit to give authority to them, being ſo confirmed as it is by a ſeries of the Antients.

Numb. 1. IN the next place follows their teſtimony out of Polycarp, introduced in this manner.

The like Record we have of Polycarp that famous Diſciple of John the Apoſtle, who lived alſo within the firſt Century, and wrote an Epiſtle to the Philippians, in which he makes alſo but two Orders of Miniſtery, Biſhops and Deacons, and perſwades the Philippians to be ſubject to their Presbyters and Deacons, as to God and Chriſt.

2. To this Teſtimony from Polycarp there is no reaſon I ſhould deny any part of my aſſent, being ſo perfectly ſuch, as the cauſe which I defend requires; If there be with him but two orders of Miniſtery, Biſhops and Deacons, and he perſwades the Philippians (i. e. that whole Province, the ſame to which Saint Paul had written, conſiſting of many Churches, all under that Metropolis of Philippi) to be ſubject to their πρεσβύτεροι and διάκονοι, Elders and Deacons, and ſets the former of them, in the compariſon, to anſwer God the Father the ſupream Monarch of Heaven, and the latter to be the parallel to Chriſt who came out from Heaven upon his Fathers Meſſages; then what reaſon have I to doubt, but that theſe Elders and Deacons are the very ſame which Saint Paul had called Biſhops and Deacons, Phil. 1. 1. which that it belonged to the ſeveral Biſhops of that Province of Macedonia, hath before been ſufficiently vindicated.

3. And therefore without farther debating this Teſtimony, I ſhall add ſome few things concerning this Polycarp, which will help conveniently to clear the whole matter.

4. Firſt, That as it is moſt true, that is here ſaid of him, that he was a famous Diſciple of John the Apoſtle, ſo this is added to his titles by the authentick Epiſtle of the Church of Smyrna, Οὗτος γέγονεν ὁ θαυμασιώτατος ἐν τοῖς καθ' ἡμᾶς χρόνοις, διδάσκαλος Ἀποστολικὸς καὶ προφητικὸς γενόμενος. This was the moſt wonderful perſon in our times, being an Apoſtolical and Prophetical Doctor, and that he was a moſt glorious Martyr, is the deſigned matter of that whole Epiſtle.

5. Secondly, That this famous, moſt admirable Apoſtolical Doctor and Martyr, was the Biſhop of Smyrna, and ſo conſtituted by the Apoſtles, as will appear by three Teſtimonies, each of them irrefragable. Firſt, By the Epiſtle of that Church of Smyrna, written on purpoſe concerning his Martyrdome, a reverend piece of Antiquity, fit to compare with any that remains in the Church. And there we find in the the cloſe of his titles, Ἐπίσκοπος τῆς τῶν ἁγίων Σμύρνῃ καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας, that he was Biſhop of the Catholick Church, which is in Smyrna, i. e. both of Jewiſh and Gentile Chriſtians there.

So Polycrates (the eighth Biſhop of Epheſus, born within a while after Saint John's Death) in his 6.
Epiſtle to Victor, Πολύκαρπος ὁ ἐν Σμύρνῃ ἐπίσκοπος καὶ μάρτυς. Polycarp the Biſhop of Smyrna and Martyr.

So Irenæus, lib. 3. cap. 3. ſpeaking of him, ſaith, ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀποστόλων καταστὰς εἰς τὸν Ἀσίαν ἐν τῇ 7.
Σμύρνῃ ἐκκλησίᾳ Ἐπίσκοπος, that he was conſtituted by the Apoſtles Biſhop of the Church of Smyrna in Aſia.

And then what poſſibility can there be, that he being thus a Biſhop, nay Metropolitane himſelf, (as 8. hath formerly been ſhewed) writing to another Metropolis, and commanding to obey the Πρεσβύτεροι and Deacons, ſhould mean any thing elſe but Biſhops by Πρεσβύτεροι?

Thirdly, That this Polycarp, as in this Epiſtle he acknowledgeth to have received an Epiſtle from 9.
Ignatius (Ἐγράψατέ μοι καὶ ὑμεῖς καὶ Ἰγνάτιος, You wrote to me, and [to] Ignatius alſo) ſo he tells them that he had ſent them a collection of the ſame Ignatius's Epiſtles. Τὰς ἐπιστολὰς Ἰγνατίου πεμφθείσας ἡμῖν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἄλλους ὅσους εἴχομεν παρ' ἡμῖν, ἐπέμψαμεν ὑμῖν καθὼς ἐπεστείλασθε, αἵτινες ὑποτεταγμέναι εἰσὶ τῇ ἐπιστολῇ ταύτῃ, ἐξ ὧν μεγάλα ὠφεληθήσεσθε —— The Epiſtles of Ignatius, ſent to us by him, and as many others as we had by us, we have ſent to you, as you required, which are ſubjoined to this Epiſtle, by which you may receive great benefit.

By this paſſage it is clear, that as Ignatius wrote one Epiſtle to Polycarp, another to the Church 10.
of Smyrna, whereof Polycarp was Biſhop, both contain'd under the phraſe πεμφθεῖσας ἡμῖν, ſent to us, (as it is explain'd by Euſebius in theſe words, Διὰ γραφῆς ὁμιλεῖ Ἰγνατίος τῇ Σμυρναίων ἐκκλησίᾳ, ἰδίως δὲ τῷ ταύτης προηγουμένῳ Πολυκάρπῳ, Ignatius wrote to the Church of Smyrna, and ſeverally to Polycarp the Ruler thereof) ſo he wrote divers others alſo, which at that time, before Ignatius's death, were by the Philippians deſired from Polycarp, and by Polycarp tranſmitted to them, and ſo cannot with any ſenſe be affirmed to be forged, and affixt to his name after his death.

How theſe Epiſtles were from Polycarp brought down to the hands of Irenæus, who lived in Poly- 11.
carp's time, and ſaw him an old man, and ſo teſtifies in his Epiſtle to Florinus, and cites a notable paſſage out of Ignatius, which we now have in his Epiſtle to the Romans: How, ſoon after Irenæus, * Origen cites them again, calling him Martyr and Biſhop of Antioch, the ſecond after Peter, and ſetting down the very words which we now have in the Epiſtle to the Epheſians; How, after Origen, † Euſebius ſets down the whole ſtory of writing them, together with a diſtinct Catalogue of ſeven, to Epheſus, to Magneſia, to the Trallians, to the Romans, to the Philadelphians, to the Smyrnæans, and to Polycarp: And in like manner Athanaſius, citing from Ignatius, words which we now find in his Epiſtle to the Epheſians, and Theodoret in many paſſages out of that to the Epheſians, to the Trallians, to the Smyrnæans; And at laſt S^t Hierome (on whoſe authority the Presbyterians ſo much depend) according exactly with Euſebius, to give theſe ſeven Epiſtles of Ignatius a full authority with all; All this I ſay hath been at large deduced and evidenced in the Diſſertations: And this, one would think, might have been ſufficient to have given Ignatius ſome place among their Teſtimonies for the opinion of antiquity in this matter; eſpecially when that very Epiſtle of Polycarp, which for the bare name of Πρεσβύτεροι Elders uſed by him, they cite, and give him his juſt honour, doth give teſtimony to the Epiſtles of Ignatius, as clear, and as univerſally, and fully confirmed by others, as any, by which that Epiſtle of Polycarp or Clemens, or any other antient writing ſtands in the Church.

mens, and one of Polycarp, backt with the like number of three more, a ſaying of Biſhop Bilſon (very unlikely to be to the prejudice of Biſhops, if it were here ſeaſonable to examine it) and the like of Gratian, and the third of the Lord Digby, They are then at leiſure to remember what out of Ignatius is objected againſt them; Had he by any poſſible colour of any paſſage in him, been capable of doing them any ſervice, he might then, as his Epiſtles were written before Polycarps, have alſo been called out and cited before him; But all thoſe Epiſtles being ſo diametrically contrary to their pretenſions, as every man knows they are, he is now to be lookt on and anſwered, as temptations are wont to be, to be mentioned only, that he may be rejected by them.

SECT.

SECT. III.

A vindication of Ignatius's Epiſtles, Voſſius's Edition of them, and the Archbiſhop's of Armagh. Some Teſtimonies out of them. The cauſe of his ſo inculcating obedience to Biſhops. Mr. Caſaubon's Teſtimony conſidered, and the Allegations from the Archbiſhop of Armagh. Three Reaſons againſt theſe Epiſtles anſwered. (No Marriage without the Biſhop.) Of the Reformed Churches. Of the Church of Scotland after the firſt converſion.

Numb. 1. THus therefore they proceed, p. 107. Againſt all that hath been ſaid in this propoſition, it is objected, that the bleſſed S. Ignatius, who lived in the firſt century, hath in his Epiſtles clearly and fully aſſerted Epiſcopal Government, as it is diſtinct from Presbyterial, and that therefore there was no ſpace of time, wherein the Church of Chriſt was governed by the Common Council of Presbyters without Biſhops properly ſo called.

I do not conceive that they have ſaid any thing of any avail, for the proving their Propoſition, and preſume that neither from Clement nor Polycarp it hath appeared that they have gained any thing; And therefore againſt all that they have ſaid, there is no need that I ſhould make any Objection. But in a far larger ſtyle, I think it were no inſolence to ſay, that againſt all that was ever imagined by any to be producible out of Antiquity in behalf of Preſbytery, the bare teſtimonies of this one Apoſtolical Martyr, Ignatius, will be abundantly ſufficient, being put in the other Scale, to weigh them all down, and decide the Controverſy on the Prelatiſts ſide.

2. It were here unreaſonable at large to recite all theſe teſtimonies, being already ſet down particularly Diſſert. 2. c. 25. and the notoriety of the fact being ſuch, that a ſpecial Objection againſt the Epiſtles is, that he every where aſſerts Epiſcopacy. And therefore the only way that could be invented for the ſupporting the Presbyterians intereſt againſt ſuch direct Teſtimonies, ſo (every where) inculcated, and ſo impoſſible to be reconciled with their aſſertions, is this which they give us, p. 108. in theſe words.

3. In anſwer to this we muſt intreat the Reader to take notice that in the Primitive Times there were abundance of ſpurious and ſuppoſititious works put forth under the Names of the Apoſtles and bleſſed Martyrs, which were none of theirs, &c. The like fraud hath been uſed in Ignatius's works, &c.

4 Here firſt 'tis a little ſtrange that the ſpurious and ſuppoſititious works of the Apoſtles and Martyrs ſhould be ſaid to be put forth in the Primitive Times, unleſs that phraſe Primitive, be taken in a very great Latitude; I had thought that it had been in after-times, when errors were gotten in, and ſought patronage and covert from the Primitive Fathers, that theſe ſpurious brats were born, and affixt to great Names; And by this means indeed they are generally deſcryed, by their impudent mentioning of ſome matters of fact, which fell out in thoſe latter times, and ſo diſcovered the impoſture.

5. But this miſtake importeth not much to our preſent controverſy; If what is here confidently affirmed, [The like fraud was uſed in Ignatius's works] can be any way proved to have truth in it, either in reſpect of the Primitive or after-times, I ſhall not quarrel upon ſuch niceties. I ſhall therefore examine their proofs, which follow.

6. And firſt, ſay they, it is certain the Epiſtle of the bleſſed Virgin Mary to Ignatius, and of Ignatius to the bleſſed Virgin, and two other Epiſtles of Ignatius to John the Apoſtle are ſpurious and counterfeit.

7. To this I moſt willingly yield, that the Epiſtles under Ignatius's name to the bleſſed Virgin and S. John, may very probably be deemed none of his; and ſo they are generally rejected by thoſe who maintain our, as well as their intereſts. I ſhall only add, that there is no one word in them concerning Biſhops, nor were they ever produced by any Prelatiſt in defence of them.

8. Next then, ſay they, As for his other twelve Epiſtles, five of them are by invincible arguments, as we conceive, proved by Vedelius to be written by a Pſeudo-Ignatius. Euſebius and Hierom make mention but of ſeven.

9. Here alſo will eaſily be granted by us whatſoever is demanded; For though Vedelius a Divine of Geneva ſince the caſting out of their Biſhop, and ſetting up of the new government, might well be lookt on as a partial arguer or Judge concerning Ignatius's writings, yet it being true, and by me formerly acknowledged, that Euſebius and S. Hierom mention but ſeven Epiſtles of his, I ſhall alſo be ready to yield to the utmoſt that Vedelius contended, that there be no more than ſeven Genuine Epiſtles of Ignatius; not that every of the other five can be proved to be ſuppoſititious, but becauſe the antient teſtifications of the Church do not make it ſo evident, that thoſe other five are all his, as of the other ſeven they do.

10. According to this conceſſion it is, that in the Diſſertations, all the Teſtimonies which are produced in defence of Epiſcopacy, are taken out of thoſe ſeven Epiſtles which S. Hierom, the Presbyter, and only truſted friend of the Presbyterians, doth acknowledge to be his.

11. But of theſe ſeven alſo they have ſomewhat to ſay, in theſe words: And for theſe ſeven, though with Scultetus, Vedelius and Rivetus, we do not renounce them as none of his, yet ſure we are, they are ſo much adulterated and corrupted, that no man can ground any ſolid Aſſertion about Epiſcopacy from Ignatius's works.

12. I hope I ſhall not now be lookt on, as an intemperate aſſerter of Epiſcopacy, if in this third ſtep alſo I go ſo far with the Presbyterians as to yield that I ſhall reſt contented even, with thoſe parcels of thoſe ſeven Epiſtles, which theſe moſt rigid cenſors, even Vedelius himſelf, which publiſhed him at Geneva, is content to acknowledge for his. If this be allowed me I ſhall need demand no more; The matter is evident, any man may conſult Vedelius's edition, and find teſtimonies as clear for our turn, as could be wiſht, in thoſe parts of thoſe Epiſtles which he allows of.

13. But for the purging of Ignatius, as of all other Antients, I ſuppoſe the Method, which Vedelius uſed, proceeding for the moſt part, by his own conjecture and fancy, is not likely to be the beſt;

The

The one courſe which any Judicious Man would require or depend on, hath been uſed in this matter, ſince Vedelius had done his beſt; I mean the moſt antient copies in Europe have been conſulted, and God's Providence hath been eminently diſcernable in the reſult of that inquiry.

14. Iſaac Voſſius, a known learned Man of that part of the Reformed Church, which is governed by Presbyters, hath met with an Antient Manuſcript in the Medicæan library, which hath none of the ſuſpected Epiſtles, and is perfectly free from thoſe paſſages, which were formerly among ſober Men made matter of ſuſpicion againſt the Epiſtles; And as in them we find thoſe very paſſages intire, which the Antients have cited out of them, ſo from them again all the Teſtimonies are fetcht, which we deſire to make uſe of in this matter.

15. So that if ever Ignatius wrote thoſe Epiſtles, which from Polycarp downward the Antients generally agree that he wrote, I have no reaſon to fear or doubt but his authority, and the Teſtimonies I have brought from him, will be of full value and force in this matter.

16. When this Copy out of the Medicæan Library was firſt tranſcribed by Voſſius, the greateſt Enemies of Epiſcopacy were much taken with it; D. Blondel confeſſes that he preſently got a Tranſcript of it, compared it with the Teſtimonies, which the Fathers (Polycarp, Irenæus, Origen, Euſebius, Athanaſius, Hierom, Chryſoſtome, &c.) had cited out of Ignatius, and finding them all to agree with this copy, confeſſeth of himſelf that he was glad for this age of ours, that we had now gotten that very copy that thirteen hundred years ago, Euſebius had uſed, and expected great light from thence. But at length this proved not for his turn, the Author ſpake ſo much of Biſhops ἀκαίρως, εὐκαίρως, in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon, that he ſet himſelf to form arguments againſt it, which are anſwer'd at large in the Diſſertations.

17. But beſide this Greek Copy of Voſſius's Edition, it fell out very opportunely, that the moſt Reverend Archbiſhop of Armagh about the ſame time met with ſome antient Latine Copies in England, which he thought fit to publiſh, although the Tranſlation were rude and barbarous; and that Latine Edition of his was found every where agreeable to that Greek of Voſſius, freed, as that, from all interpolations; and by this concurrence of theſe Providences, there is all reaſon to think that we have at laſt the Epiſtles of Ignatius, as purely ſet out as either that of Clemens, or Polycarp, or any other antient writing.

18. And in this purity it is, that we now appeal to it, and have the three orders in the Church, Biſhops, Presbyters and Deacons, and the Obedience and reſpects due to them, as evidently and irrefragably aſſerted in very many places, as any truth of Scripture can be expected to be.

19. After all this, moſt diſtinctly deduced in the Diſſertations, they yet proceed, we will not, ſay they, for our parts trouble the Reader with a large diſcourſe about this ſubject. If he pleaſe he may read what the Archbiſhop of Armagh, what Rivet, Vedelius, and Cooke in his Cenſura Patrum, and what Salmaſius and D. Blondel ſay about it, who all of them bring divers arguments to evince the invalidity of theſe Epiſtles. There is a--Doctor that hath undertaken to anſwer the Objections of the two laſt; But this Doctor ſhould do well to anſwer alſo what the Archbiſhop of Armagh, hath written about theſe Epiſtles, who proves at large that ſix of them are nothæ, the other ſix mixtæ, and none of them to be accounted omni ex parte ſinceræ & genuinæ, who alſo tells us out of Caſaubon, that among all the Eccleſiaſtical Monuments there are none in which the Papiſts put more confidence, than in Ignatius's Epiſtles.

20. This being the ſum of their charge on me in this place, that having anſwer'd all the Arguments of Blondell and Salmaſius (I hope ſatisfactorily, or elſe they were very unkind not to expreſs their diſlikes of ſome one anſwer) I have not yet anſwer'd the Arguments of the Archbiſhop of Armagh againſt theſe Epiſtles; I ſhall hope, that when either I have done that, or given competent reaſon, why I need not do it, I ſhall not need to travail any farther in this Argument; yet to omit no pains which they can but think of preſcribing me, I ſhall take the whole matter of this their laſt Section before me, and conſider every part of it.

21. And firſt, For Rivet, Vedelius and Cooke in Cenſura Patrum, 'tis evident, that their exceptions and cenſures belong to the former Printed Copies of Ignatius, that eſpecially which had been ſet out by Maſtræus a Papiſt, againſt whom Vedelius his Edition and Exercitations were chiefly deſigned.

22. But then Vedelius having called this volume to a very ſtrict examination, 'tis evident that that Copy, which he had thus purged, cannot be ſtill lyable to his and the like exceptions, which before were made againſt the former Copies.

23. As for Salmaſius and Blondell, their exceptions have, as is here confeſt, been already examined, and I need ſay no more of them, till thoſe anſwers be ſome way attempted to be invalidated, which here they are not, but inſtead of it, I am called to anſwer the Archbiſhop of Armagh his Arguments. Laſtly therefore, for the Archbiſhop of Armagh, it is firſt ſomewhat unexpected, that what he had ſaid, as the ground and occaſion of making a new Edition, ſetting out this very antient Copy, and by it purging Ignatius, who had before been ſo corrupted in his opinion, ſhould now be propoſed to me to be anſwered, who uſe that very Copy, which that Archbiſhop ſet out, and acknowledge it was formerly as corruptly ſet forth, as he conceived it to be.

24. Is it not viſible, that the Archbiſhop's whole deſign in two impreſſions of thoſe Epiſtles, was to ſet them out free from all corruptions, and mixtures, and interpolations, which they had before been under? And that all his diſcourſes in his Prolegomena, were to prove the former Editions to have been corrupt, and ſo that there was great need of ſeeking out better Copies, and that he verily thought he had now found ſuch? And then what can be required of me to anſwer in his writings, who am directly of his opinion in all the ſubſtantial parts of the whole matter?

25. As for leſſer doubts, as whether that one to Polycarp be among the genuine or no, though with Euſebius and S^t Hierom I believe it is, and have given the reaſons of my opinion, yet I need not controvert this with any, becauſe the other ſix will ſtill ſerve my turn abundantly, and the Teſtimonies out of the moſt purged Geneva, or Amſtelodam-Editions of thoſe ſix, will ſufficiently vindicate Epiſcopacy, in our preſent notion of it, to be then received, and of the Apoſtles erecting in the Church.

26. A few of theſe Teſtimonies I ſhall here ſet down πρὸς δεῖξιν, that the Reader may know the unqueſtionable onable opinion of Ignatius, and how far I am from neceſſity of uſing any corrupted Copy of thoſe Epiſtles. Firſt, then in his Epiſtle to the Smyrneans, we have the three Orders ſet down diſtinctly, ἐπισκόπῳ, πρεσβυτερίῳ, διακόνοις, and again ἀσπάζομαι τὸν ἀξιόθεον ἐπίσκοπον καὶ θεοπρεπεστάτον πρεσβυτέριον, καὶ τοὺς συνδούλους μου διακόνους, the like in three places to the Epheſians, in three to the Magneſians, in four to the Philadelphians, in four to the Trallians. So Secondly we have their particular Biſhops mentioned, as ſuch, Polycarp of Smyrna, in the Epiſtle to the Magneſians, Oneſimus of Epheſus in his Congratulation to the Epheſians, τοιοῦτον ἐπίσκοπον κεκτῆσθαι, that they had ſuch a Biſhop, adding Burrhus his Deacon: Damas of the Magneſians, together with the names of two of their Preſbyters, Baſſus and Apollonius, and Sotion the Deacon, all in the Epiſtle to the Magneſians. Polybius of the Trallians, in the Epiſtle to them. Thirdly we have his affirmation concerning Biſhops through the whole World, that they are conſtituted as, or by the mind of Chriſt, i. e. ſent by him, as he by his Father, Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς τῷ παλαιᾷ * γνώμῃ, οὕτω καὶ οἱ ἐπίσκοποι κατὰ τὰ πέρατα ὁρισθέντες Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ γνώμῃ εἰσί. Jeſus Chriſt is the mind, or by, or according to the mind of the Father (ſent and Commiſſionated by him to reveal his will to us) and ſo the Biſhops conſtituted through the World, are the mind, or by the mind of Chriſt. Fourthly, he tells us that all in the Church, particularly Preſbyters, muſt yield obedience to the Biſhop, Πάντες ἐπισκόπῳ ἀκολουθεῖτε, all follow the Biſhop, in the Epiſtle to the Smyrneans; ἵνα ὑποτασσόμενοι τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ κατὰ πάντα, ἦτε ἁγιασμένοι, that being ſubject to the Biſhop ye may be ſanctified in all things, in Ep. ad. Eph. πρέπει πάσαν ἐντροπὴν τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ ἀπονέμειν, ye ought to pay all reverence to the Biſhop, adding, καθὼς ἔγνων καὶ τοὺς ἁγίους πρεσβυτέρους, as he had obſerved their pious Presbyters to do, though their Biſhop were young, in Ep. Magneſ. and again ὑπολάγητε τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ, be ſubject to the Biſhop; ſo τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ προσέχετε, give heed to the Biſhop, in Ep. ad Philad. τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ ὑποτάσσεσθε, & ἀναγκαῖόν ἐστι τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ ὑποτάσσεσθαι, be ſubject, and it is neceſſary to be ſubject to the Biſhop, and Ἔρρωσθε ὑποτασσόμενοι τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ. Farewel ye that obey the Biſhop, in Ep. ad Trall. Fifthly, he oft adds, that nothing ought to be done in the Church without licence of the Biſhop, Μηδὲν χωρὶς τοῦ ἐπισκόπου τι πρασσέτω τῶν ἀνηκόντων εἰς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, Let none without the Biſhop do any of the things that belong to the Church, inſtancing in Baptiſm and the other Sacrament, in Ep. ad Smyr. and ſo in the Epiſtles to the Philadelphians and Trallians. Sixthly, that a convenient reverence and reſpect is alſo due to the Presbyters, and to the Deacons, as is every where taken notice of by him, almoſt in every Epiſtle.

* Perhaps ἑνώμῃ in both places.

27. And all this and much more we have in the Copies, which are now come, moſt uncorrupt, unto us; And there is no imaginable way to avoid the force of theſe Teſtimonies, and the authority of that holy Martyr for Epiſcopacy, but the una litura, expunging or caſting away the whole Volume of Epiſtles.

28. For the truth is, his whole deſigne, before his departure from the world, being this one of Divine Charity, to fortify the ſeveral Flocks, to which he wrote, againſt the poyſon of Hereticks, the Gnoſticks, ſo early creeping in, and deſpiſing the Governors of the Church, (as they had done the Apoſtles themſelves) and the Doctrine of the Apoſtles being by him known to be depoſited with the Biſhops in each Church, and having particular aſſurance of the ſanctity, and ſound faith of the preſent Governors of theſe Churches, to which he writes, He thinks fit to make uſe of this one moſt compendious courſe, moſt immediately tending to his end, to keep them all in obedience to their Biſhops and Officers under them, and to make the contrary (as it was indeed) the ſure mark of Hereticks, whom they were to avoid.

29. And ſo this is it which hath ſo fill'd all the Epiſtles (except that one to the Romans) with continual diſcourſe of the Biſhops, &c. And it is evident that in that preſent conjuncture of affairs, nothing could with more reaſon and fitneſs have been inſiſted on.

30. Mean while that I may return to the place from which I have a while diverted, It is ſo certain and evident of the learned Archbiſhop of Armagh, that he never diſputed againſt the validity and authority of theſe Epiſtles thus purged, that it cannot be unknown to them that thus diſpute, what arguments he hath urged for the authority of them, and in like manner what and how ſatisfactory anſwers he hath given to the ſpecial exceptions of others; which very thing occaſioned a particular Letter of reply to him from Dr Blondell, which by that Archbiſhops favour I received, and made my rejoinder to it in the * Diſſertations.

* Diſſ. 2. c. 9. Sect. 6. &c.

31. This I hope may be ſufficient to have ſaid in this matter, inſtead of undertaking ſo unreaſonable a task of anſwering any thing aſſerted by that Archbiſhop.

32. As for that which follows out of him and Mr. Caſaubon, of Baronius and the Papiſts making ſuch uſe, and placing ſuch confidence in theſe Epiſtles above all other Eccleſiaſtical Monuments, It is ſpeedily anſwered alſo out of what is already ſaid, that they were the former corrupt editions, which were abroad in Baronius's time, with all thoſe ſuppoſititious additions and interpolations, which the Papiſts are either by Mr. Caſaubon, or that Archbiſhop ſaid to have made uſe of; there being no one word or period in this Volume, to which my appeal is made, which yieldeth any advantage to the Papiſts in any point, nor is it, nor can it be pretended by any that it doth, unleſs by thoſe in whoſe opinion the maintaining of Biſhops is reputed for ſuch. And therefore that very learned man, Mr. Caſaubon, is ſo far from rejecting all theſe Epiſtles, that he diſtinctly promiſeth nonnullarum ex illis antiquitatem ſe novis rationibus tuiturum, that he will, if God permit, defend the antiquity of ſome of them, by reaſons which others had not taken notice of: Exerc. 16. Cont. Baron. Sect. 150. And this promiſe of his is cited by the Archbiſhop, Diſſert. de Epiſt. Ign. pag. 136. ſo far is it from all appearance of truth, which is cited as the opinion of theſe two learned men.

33. After all this, three Reaſons they will briefly offer, why they cannot build their judgment concerning the Doctrine of the Primitive Church, about Epiſcopacy, upon Ignatius's Epiſtles.

1. Becauſe there are divers things quoted out of his Epiſtles by Athanaſius, Gelaſius, and Theodoret, which are either not to be found in theſe Epiſtles, or to be found altered and changed, and not according as they are quoted. This is Rivets argument, and purſued at large by the Archbiſhop, to whom we refer the Reader.

34. Being among their other Readers referr'd to the Archbiſhop of Armagh for the validity and purſuit of this firſt reaſon, I ſhall to him very ſecurely make my appeal, what force there is in it, againſt the Volume of Epiſtles now twice in ſeveral forms publiſhed by him. And in the Prolegomena to the former mer of them, pag. 15, 16, &c. this is moſt evident, that the paſſages cited by Athanaſius, Gelaſius, and Theodoret, which were not indeed to be found in the former printed Greek Copies, are exactly diſcerned and evidenced by him to be in the old latine Interpreter, which he therefore thought fit to publiſh both out of Caius College and Biſhop Montacutes Library. The ſame hath he farther ſhewn, cap. 4. pag. 19. &c. out of the ſame and other of the Antients, Euſebius, Hierom, &c. and ſet down the places in columns, by way of parallel, to demonſtrate the agreement of this Copy with the genuine Ignatius.

And is it not a little ſtrange, that I ſhould be now referred to that Archbiſhop for the purſuit of this 35.
argument, which he hath ſo diſtinctly proved to be of no force againſt the Copy which now I uſe, but to concur in demonſtrating the purity of it?

Their ſecond Reaſon they draw from his over-much extolling himſelf in his Epiſtle to the Trallians, 36.
where he ſaith that he had attained to ſuch a meaſure of knowledge, that he underſtood heavenly things, the orders of Angels, the differences of Archangels, and of the heavenly hoſt, the differences between powers and dominations, the diſtances of thrones and powers, the Magnificencies or Magnitudes of Æons or Principalities, the ſublimity of the Spirit, the excellencies of Cherubims and Seraphims, the Kingdom of the Lord, and the incomparable Divinity of the Lord God Almighty. All theſe things I know, and yet am not perfect, &c. Now who is there that can believe that ſuch arrogant boaſting can proceed from ſuch an holy man, and humble Saint, as Ignatius was?

And who would believe that the writer of this Appendix, which had cited the Archbiſhop of Ar- 37.
magh in his Prolegomena to his Edition of Ignatius, and ſo could not but be able to have conſulted that Edition, ſhould thus think to defame, and blaſt the whole volume of Epiſtles, for one ſuch periods ſake, which is not to be diſcerned in this, or that Archbiſhops latter, or in Voſſius's Edition of them, to which only he muſt know we make our appeal for Epiſcopacy?

In theſe Copies the words are quite diſtant from what is here cited, and in effect, directly contrary 38.
to them, evidences of the greateſt humility, now when he was ſo near the honour of Martyrdome, Καὶ γὰρ ἐγὼ ὁ καθότι δέδεμαι ἠδυνάμην τὰ ἐπουράνια, καὶ τὰς τοποθεσίας τὰς ἀγγελικὰς, καὶ τὰς συστάσεις τὰς ἀρχοντικὰς, ὁρατὰ τε καὶ ἀόρατα πρὸς τοῦτο ἤδη καὶ μαθητὴς εἰμι, For I am not, becauſe (or in that) I am in bond, able alſo to underſtand heavenly things, the Poſitions of Angels, their Aſſemblies of Principalities (or of the Rulers of them) both things viſible and inviſible. Beſides this, I am yet alſo a Diſciple, &c. What arrogance, I pray, or boaſting is there in this? and yet he adds no more in that place but only, πολλὰ γὰρ ἡμῖν λείπει, ἵνα θεοῦ μὴ λειπώμεθα, For many things are wanting to us, that we may not be left behind by God, thinking himſelf utterly unworthy of the honour (and fearing he may yet miſs of it) to ſuffer Martyrdome for him. And ſo much for the ſecond Reaſon.

The third (which, ſay they, is moſt for our purpoſe) is from his over-eager and over-anxious defence of 39.
the Epiſcopal Hierarchy, which he doth with ſuch ſtrange and Hyperbolical expreſſions (as if all Chriſtianity were loſt, if Prelacy were not upheld) and with ſuch multiplied repetitions, ad nauſeam uſque, that we may confidently ſay as one doth, Certo certius eſt has Epiſtolas vel ſuppoſititias eſſe, vel fœdè corruptas, Coci cenſuras and that they do neither agree with thoſe times wherein he wrote, nor with ſuch an holy and humble Martyr as he was. We will inſtance in ſome few of them.

What reaſons and deſign Ignatius had to exhort the Chriſtians, to whom he writes, to obedience to 40.
their Governors, in the Church, hath already been ſaid at large, this being the only expedient, that, at that time, could be thought on, to keep out moſt dangerous hereſies out of the Church. And therefore what that holy Martyr did in that kind, when he was carryed from his own Church, never to return to it again, cannot be lookt on, as the ſeeking any great things for himſelf, and ſo contrary to either his piety or humility, but as a deſire full of both thoſe, that the Church of God might enjoy truth and peace, after the beaſts had devoured him.

As for the ſtrange and hyperbolical expreſſions, mentioned in the objection, and exemplified in the two 41.
following pages, the Reader muſt again be told, that what they had done moſt unreaſonably before, is here practiſed again at large, ſeveral places brought out of the former corrupt Editions of Ignatius, of which no one word is to be found in the new Editions out of the moſt antient Copies Greek and Latine, from which alone it is evident that we produce all our teſtimonies for Epiſcopacy, and ſo have produced very few of thoſe, which they are thus pleaſed to find fault with.

The places which they urge, are eight, I ſhall not need to ſet them down, but give the Reader a 42.
much ſhorter, and yet as ſatisfactory an account of them. Two are cited from the Epiſtle to the Trallians, and neither of them are in any part to be found in our Editions. Two are cited from the Epiſtle to the Magneſians, and the firſt is not at all in our Editions, nor the ſecond any farther than thus, ὥσπερ οὖν ὁ Κύριος ἀνευ τοῦ πατρὸς οὐδὲν ἐποίησε ἑωυτοῦ ὤν, ὅτε δι' ἑαυτοῦ, ὅτε δι' Ἀποστόλων, οὕτως μήτε ὑμεῖς ἀνευ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου καὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων μηδὲν πειράσητε εὔλογόν τι φαίνεσθαι ἰδίᾳ ὑμῖν. As Chriſt being one with his Father did nothing without him, either by himſelf or by his Apoſtles, ſo neither do ye act any thing without the Biſhop and the Preſbyters, nor endeavour that any thing ſhould appear reaſonable to you which is private, or of your own deviſing. A ſpeech in every ſyllable of it, very well becoming that Holy Martyr, written by him at a time, when the truth being by the Apoſtles depoſited with the Biſhops, all private devices of their own were moſt juſtly to be ſuſpected.

The fifth is in the Epiſtle to Polycarp, and is in our Copies thus, Πρέπει τοῖς γαμοῦσι καὶ ταῖς γαμουμέναις μετὰ γνώμης τοῦ ἐπισκόπου τὴν ἕνωσιν ποιεῖσθαι. It becomes the men that marry, and the women that are married, to conſummate their union with the conſent of the Biſhop. And I wonder what age of the Church 43.
there hath been from that time to this, which hath not been of the ſame opinion. For what is by Biſhops committed to Presbyters, that is not done ἀνευ γνώμης ἐπισκόπου, without the mind of the Biſhop (as elſewhere in thoſe Epiſtles appears of Baptiſm and the Lords Supper, neither of which, ſaith he, are to be medled with, without the conſent of the Biſhop; and many teſtimonies out of Antiquity are * elſe- * See Num. 5.
where produced in perfect conformity therewith.) And conſequently, if in the Chriſtian Church, marriage hath always been conſummated by the Prieſt or Presbyter, then cannot this ſpeech of Ignatius have any blame in it.

And that thus it hath been through all ages, there is little matter of queſtion (and no word here 44.

produced by the Objector to the contrary) * Tertullian will be a good competent testimony for the next Century, speaking of the felicity of the Christian Marriage, quod Ecclesia conciliat, & confirmat oblatio, & obsignat benedictio, Angeli renuntiant, &c. Which the Church makes, the Sacrament of the Lords Supper confirms, the benediction of the Priest seals, and the Angels pronounce valid. And in † another place, Penes nos occultæ conjunctiones, i. e. non prius apud Ecclesiam professæ, juxta mœchiam & fornicationem judicari periclitantur, Marriages that are not done publickly before the Church, are in danger with us, to go for adultery and fornication.

45. The same is every where to be found in the Decretal Epistles of Euaristus, about Ignatius's time (which makes it a tradition from the Apostles and their Successors) of Soter not above fifty years after, of Callistus near fifty years after him, of Silvester an hundred years after him, of Siricius seventy years after Silvester, of Hormisdas a hundred and thirty years after Siricius: And though some of these be by D. Blondel thought to be of later dates than the titles of them would pretend, yet the authority of most of them is unquestioned, as to this matter.

46. And the antient piece lately published by Sirmund, concerning the Heresie of the Predestinati, written, saith he, twelve hundred years since, speaks of it, as a known custom and Canon of the Church, over all the world, For, saith that antient author, If marriage be unlawful, Emendate ergo Ecclesiæ regulam, damnate qui in toto orbe sunt, sacerdotes, Nuptiarum initia benedicentes, consecrantes, & in Dei mysteriis sociantes. Amend then the rule of the Church, and condemn the Priests which are in all the world, who bless the beginnings of Marriage, consecrate, and join the parties together with the Holy Sacrament.

47. And the fourth Council of Carthage, before the year 400. hath these words, Sponsus & sponsa cum benedicendi sunt à sacerdote--When the Bridegroom and the Bride are to be blest by the Priest, Can. 13. And for latter ages the matter is out of Question.

48. And so it will be much more reasonable, from this passage in Ignatius, being found so perfectly concordant with other passages of the times so near him, to resolve the rule of the Church concerning sacerdotal benediction in marriage, to be received from the Apostles and their Successors, than from finding this speech in one of Ignatius's Epistles, to cast away the whole volume.

49. As for that which is added at the end of this testimony from the Epistle to Polycarp, My soul for theirs, that obey the Bishop, Presbyters and Deacons, there can be no fault in that, supposing as hath been said, that the Bishops at that time, and the Presbyters and Deacons living regularly and in union with them, had the true safe way among them, wherein any man might walk confidently, all danger being from the Heresies that crept in, and brake men off from that unity of the faith.

50. The sixth place from the Epistle to the Philadelphians, of the Princes and Emperours obeying the Bishop, is certainly inserted by forgery in the former, for not one word of it, or like it, is to be found in our Editions.

51. So likewise for both parts of the seventh place out of the Epistle to the Smyrnæans, they are not to be found in our Editions.

52. The last only is to be met with there, but that in a much more moderate strain, than the former, in words and sense very agreeable to wholsome doctrine, and the exigencies of those times, wherein there was no visible way to keep out the tares of false teachers, but by requiring all to be kept to the managery of the true Husbandman. And accordingly I have cited this very speech out of Ignatius for the asserting of Prelacy (and if there were no such, the Epistles might pass well enough with these, as with all other men, they would have needed no vindication, having no adversary) The words are these, Πάντες τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ ἀκολουθεῖτε, ὡς Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς τῷ πατρὶ, καὶ τῷ πρεσβυτερίῳ ὡς τοῖς Ἀποστόλοις, τοὺς δὲ διακόνους ἐντρέπεσθε ὡς θεοῦ ἐντολήν —— All of you follow the Bishop as Christ Jesus did his Father (i. e. as elsewhere appears by the like expression, with [ὡσαυτῶς ὢν] added to it, be at perfect unity or doctrine, &c. with the Bishop, as Christ was with God the Father) and the Presbytery as the Apostles, and reverence the Deacons as those that are appointed by God, (viz. mediately by the Apostles.)

53. Where it may be observable, that the objectors which find such fault with this speech of Ignatius in their quarrelling with it, leave out this latter part of Presbytery and Deacons; they cannot find in their hearts to quarrel, or accuse him for bidding them follow the Presbytery as the Apostles, the only crime was to bid them follow the Bishop (not, as Christ in the dative, i. e. as they follow Christ, but) as Christ follows his Father, the only piacular offence, to recommend unity with, and obedience to the Bishop. But that by the way.

54. It follows in the place, Μηδεὶς χωρὶς ἐπισκόπου τι πρασσέτω, Let no Man without the Bishop do ought which belongs to the Church, Let that be accounted a firm Eucharist, which is done by the Bishop, or him whom the Bishop shall permit. Where the Bishop appears, there let the multitude be, as where Christ is, there is the Catholick Church. It is not lawful without the Bishop (i. e.) as before, without Commission from him) either to Baptize, or Administer the Eucharist, but what he approves of (thus in these publick Ministrations) that is well pleasing to God, that it may be safe and firm whatsoever is done; It doth well that men know God and the Bishop (as their Ruler under God, with whom his truth is by the Apostles deposited) he that honours the Bishop, is honoured by God, he that doth any thing clancularly without him, serves the Devil (performs a very acceptable service to him; For so in a very eminent manner the Hereticks of that Age, the Gnosticks did, which secretly infused their devilish Leaven, and deadly poyson into mens hearts, by which they took them quite from Christ, but could not have done so successfully, if this Holy Martyr's Counsel here had been taken.)

55. What inconvenience can be imagined consequent to our affirming that Ignatius was the author of these words, I confess not to comprehend; Of this there is no question, but that it is the ordinary Language of the antient Church, and accounted necessary in an eminent degree, to preserve unity and truth in the Church, and to hold up the authority of Governours among all, οἱ πρεσβύτεροι καὶ διάκονοι ἀνευ γνώμης ἐπισκόπου μηδὲν θεραπευέτωσαν, The Presbyters and Deacons must do nothing without the mind of the Bishop, Can. Apost. 40. and the reason is added αὐτὸς γὰρ δεῖ πεπιστευμένος τὸν λαὸν τοῦ Κυρίου, for he is intrusted with the people of the Lord; So in the 56. Canon of Laodicæa, τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους μηδὲν πράττειν ἀνευ γνώμης τοῦ ἐπισκόπου, The Presbyters must do nothing without the mind of the Bishop; and so in the Council of Arles, Can. 19. The Presbyters muſt do nothing in any Dioceſs ſine Epiſcopi ſententia, without the Biſhops mind, and ſine authoritate literarum ejus, without authority of his Letters.

All that is here offer'd by them to make the like words in Ignatius a competent charge, upon which to throw away the whole Volume of Epiſtles, is only this, If this be true Doctrine, what ſhall become of all the Reformed Churches, eſpecially the Church of Scotland, which (as John Major ſaith lib. 2. Hiſtor. de Geſtis Scotorum, c. 2.) was after it's firſt converſion to the Chriſtian faith, above 230. years without Epiſcopal Government? 56.

To this double queſtion I might well be allowed to render no anſwer, It being certainly very extrinſecal to the Queſtion in hand, (which is only this, whether Ignatius wrote or wrote not thoſe Epiſtles) to examine what ſhall become of the Reformed Churches, &c. It were much more reaſonable for me to demand of the Objectors, who ſuppoſe their Presbyterial platform, as that is oppoſed to Epiſcopal, to be ſetled in the Church by Divine Right, If this Doctrine be true, what did become of all thoſe Primitive Churches all the World over, which they confeſs departed from this model, and ſet up the contrary, and ſo of all the ſucceding ages of the Church for ſo many hundred years, till the Reformation, and ſince that alſo, of all the other Churches, which do not thus far imitate Mr. Calvin, caſting out the Government by Biſhops? 57.

Is it not as reaſonable that they ſhould be required to give a fair and juſtifiable account of their dealing with (and judging, poſt factum, of) all theſe; as I ſhould be obliged to reconcile Ignatius his ſpeech concerning his preſent age, with the conveniencies of the Reformed Churches, which he could neither ſee, nor be deemed to ſpeak of, nor conſequently to paſs judgment on them by divination? 58.

What they were guilty of, which ſecretly infuſed their poyſon into Men and Women in his age, and would not let the Biſhop, the Governour of the Church, be the Judge of their Doctrines and practices, he here tells us, viz. That they performed ſervice to the Devil, in ſtealing Mens hearts from Chriſt; But what crime it was in thoſe of Corinth, and through all Achaia, to turn their Biſhops out of their places ἀπβάλλειν ἐπισκοπῆς and λειτυργίας, to caſt them out of their Epiſcopacy, their Office and Miniſtration, this he tells them not in that place, Clemens Romanus had done it competently in his Epiſtle. 59.

As for the particular caſe of thoſe Reformed Churches, which have done more than ſo, not only caſt out their preſent Governors, but over and above, utterly caſt off the Government it ſelf, there had been I confeſs, a great deal ſaid, both in this and other places of Ignatius, and many other Antient Writers, who yet never foretold theſe days, abundantly ſufficient to have reſtrained them from ſo diſorderly proceedings, if they would have pleaſed to have hearkned to ſuch moderate counſels. But having not done ſo, Ignatius hath gone no farther, he is only a witneſs againſt them, he undertook not the Office of a Judge ſo far beyond his Province, hath pronounced no ſentence upon them. 60.

And to proceed one degree farther, to the ſucceſſors of thoſe in the Reformed Churches (as many as are juſtly blameable for treading in their Leaders ſteps) though I may truly ſay they have as little taken that Holy Martyrs advice, and more than ſo, that they have retained a conſiderable corruption in their Churches, and that they ſhould do well, if now they know how, to reſtore themſelves to that model, which they find every where exemplified in Ignatius; yet till they ſhall have done ſo, I know not that they are exactly capable of being concern'd in any part of theſe words, laſt cited from Ignatius. 61.

For they that have no Biſhop at all, cannot be required to do nothing without conſulting with the Biſhop; They are juſtly to be blamed, as far as they are guilty that they have no Biſhop; but then, that is their crime (and they are to reform it as ſoon as they pleaſe) but that being ſuppoſed, this of not conſulting the Biſhop, while they have none, is no new crime, nor liable of it ſelf to the cenſure of διαβόλῳ λαλεύειν here, which was affixt to thoſe that had Biſhops, and would not have their Doctrines examined by that Standard, of which they were the Depoſitaries. And this is as much as is needful to be ſaid in this place for that firſt inconvenience affixt to Ignatius's words. 62.

As for the other, the Church of Scotland in it's firſt converſion, the matter again is ſo remote from the task we have now in hand, for the vindicating the Authority of Ignatius's volume of Epiſtles, and withal ſo uncertainly ſet down by Authors, that it would be unſeaſonable to engage far in ſo dark a part of Hiſtory ſo impertinently. In brief therefore, though I have not John Major by me to conſult, yet I conceive I ſhall not gueſs amiſs at the grounds and conſequently at the truth and weight of his aſſertion. 63.

Joannes Jordanus was of opinion that * Paſchaſius a Sicilian, prima Chriſtianæ pietatis rudimenta mandante P. Victore in Scotia nuntiavit, firſt preacht the Chriſtian Faith in Scotland by the command of Pope Victor. And this was about the year 203. And † Bede ſaith that in the eight year of Theodoſius Junior, that is about the year 431, Palladius ad Scotos in Chriſtum credentes à Pontifice Romanæ Eccleſiæ Cœlſtino primus mittitur Epiſcopus, Palladius was by Celeſtine Biſhop of Rome ſent firſt Biſhop to the Scots that believed. And the diſtance betwixt theſe two terms being 228. years, this I conceive the groundwork of John Major's affirmation here cited, of the 230. years, wherein that Church after it's firſt converſion remained without Epiſcopal Government. 64.

† Eccl. Hiſt. l. 1. c. 13.

But firſt it is to be noted here, that the ſaying of Jordanus, of Paſchaſius in Victor's days, is no more than this, that he preached the Goſpel there, prima rudimenta nuntiavit, declared the firſt rudiments there, and, as it follows in Demſter, tyrocinia fidei fecit, laid the grounds of Chriſtianity among them; And that might be done, and ſoon molder away again, and never come to ſo much maturity, as either to have Biſhops or Presbyters conſtituted among them. And Secondly, though Bede ſay that Palladius was ſent to them Epiſcopus primus, their firſt Biſhop, yet neither he, nor any other affirms that they were formerly ruled by a Presbytery, or ſo much as that they had any Presbyter among them. Nay Thirdly, Demſter reports it from Jordanus but ſlightly Joh. Jordanus putavit, it was the conceit or opinion of that author. And that which * Bozius tells us, will take off much from the creditableneſs of that Opinion, Traditur in Scotiâ, quæ tunc erat Hibernia, Chriſti cultum diſſeminatum eodem tempore quo in Britanniâ, ſub annum Chriſti 203. Victore ſedente. They ſay that the faith of Chriſt was diſſeminated in Scotland, which was then Ireland, at the ſame time that it was in Britanny, about the year 203. in the time of Victors Papacy. 65.

By this it appears that the conceit of Jordanus belonged to Ireland, not to Scotland, Ireland being † Li. 2. c. 4. * L. 3. c. antiently called Scotia (as in † Bede we find Scotorum qui Hiberniam inſulam Britanniæ proximam incolunt, the Scots which inhabit Ireland, and * Gentes Scotorum quæ Auſtralibus Hiberniæ partibus morabantur, the Scots which inhabited the Southern parts of Ireland) and that which is now Scotland, was then †See Baron. Annal. Tom. 5. Anno 429. Sect. 2. ſtyled Nova Scotia, to diſtinguiſh it from the other. And it is worth remembring that Marianus the Scotch Antiquary had no knowledge of this converſion of Scotland under Victor, nor is there any ſhew of it in Bede, who tells us of the latter.

67. Nay it is yet more evident * by Proſper, that 'twas a converſion from barbarous to Chriſtian, which * Adv. Collat. in fine. is ſpoken of in Cœleſtines time, and that the Faith was planted, and the Biſhop conſtituted there together, Venerabilis memoriæ Pontifex ab hoc eodem morbo Britannias liberavit, & ordinato Scotis Epiſcopo, dum Romanam inſulam ſtudet ſervare Catholicam, fecit etiam barbaram Chriſtianam; Pope Cœleſtine freed Britain from Pelagianiſm, and ordained a Biſhop for the Scots, and ſo while he indeavoured to keep a Roman Iſland within the bounds of the Catholick Faith, he alſo made a barbarous Iſland Chriſtian. Which as it differs ſomewhat from Bedes expreſſion of Palladius's being ſent ad credentes, to believers, ſo it gives us occaſion to propoſe that which may reconcile theſe ſeeming differences, viz. Firſt, That Chriſtianity was planted in Scotland before Cœleſtine's time, derived to them moſt probably from their Neighbours † See Bede l. 2. c. 4. Scotos nihil diſcrepare à Britonibus in eorum converſatione didicimus, and c. 19. & l. 3. c. 3. the Britains here, with whom they are † known to have agreed in the keeping of Eaſter, contrary to the cuſtom of the Roman Church, and ſo cannot be deemed to have received the firſt Rudiments of their converſion from Rome: Then ſecondly, that this Plantation was very imperfect, differing little from Barbariſm, and ſo reputed by Proſper, till the coming of Biſhop Palladius among them. Thirdly, That even after that, they retain'd the uſage of Eaſter, contrary to the Roman cuſtom, which ſtill refers to ſome rude converſion of theirs before Palladius.

Hoc enim ordine ſeptentrionalis Scotorum Provincia & omnis natio Pictorum Paſcha Dominicum celebrabat.

68. By all this it is cleared to us, what is to be thought of John Major's affirmation, which hath now very little appearance of truth in it; and if it had, would be little for the Presbyterian intereſt to inſiſt on it, when after all that time of the ſuppoſed government of that Church by Presbyters, it was found directly barbarous, and to be planted with Chriſtianity anew, at Palladius's coming.

69. Some uncertainty we ſee there is of the time and means of planting Chriſtianity in Scotland, but as to this matter of the 230. years under Presbytery, there can be no ground to affirm it; For if the converſion of it be dated from Victor's time, as that opinion would have it, yet even by that account 'twas after the ſpace, wherein the Preſbyterians themſelves acknowledge Epiſcopacy to have prevailed over all the World; and then, upon that account, it muſt be granted, that whenſoever their firſt converſion was, 'twas certainly derived to them by thoſe who had Epiſcopal Government among them, and then they having ſent them Presbyters to inſtruct and officiate (as Presbyters not as Biſhops) among them, thoſe Presbyters muſt be ſuppoſed to have continued under thoſe Biſhops by whom they were ſent, whether from Rome, or nearer home from the Britiſh, ſo far at leaſt, as that when they failed, their number was ſupplied from the ſame Fountain from which they firſt ſprang, (in the ſame manner as our own experience tells us of Virginia, which ſince the firſt Plantation continued to receive Presbyters from hence) and ſo continued to be, until they had Biſhops ordained and planted among them. And ſo much for that ſecond ſuppoſed inconvenience alſo.

SECT. IV.

Of Salmaſius's conceit that theſe Epiſtles were written at the time of Epiſcopacy firſt entring the Church.

Numb. 1. THat which follows of the Juſtice of the Reverend Presbyterian Divines cenſure of theſe Epiſtles, and of Salmaſius's belief, that they were written by a Pſeudo-Ignatius, will not require any anſwer from me, who cannot be moved by the concluſion made by thoſe Divines, any farther than the Premiſſes here produced and anſwer'd, have appeared to have force in them, and who have more largely examined Salmaſius his exceptions heretofore, and was even now by them acknowledged ſo to have done, and nothing yet replied to my anſwers, and therefore muſt not for ever turn the ſame ſtone, begin the ſame task again.

2. But for the conceit which is here cited from Salmaſius, which I confeſs I conſidered not ſo much before, as to make any reply to it, viz. That theſe Epiſtles were written when Epiſcopacy, properly ſo called, came into the Church, and that proved from hence, becauſe in all his Epiſtles he ſpeaks highly in honour of Presbytery as well as of Epiſcopacy, that ſo the people, that had been accuſtomed to the Presbyterian Government, might the more willingly and eaſily receive this new Government by Epiſcopacy, and not be offended at the novelty of it: It is evident how eaſily this may be retorted, and the argument as firmly formed to conclude, that Presbyters were then newly come into the Church, and therefore to make the people inclinable to give them a willing Reception, without being offended at the novelty of them, he ſtill ſpeaks highly in honour of Epiſcopacy.

3. Such Arguments as theſe you will gueſs from hence, how incompetent they are to conclude matters of fact, done ſo many hundred years ago, (ſuch is the queſtion, whether Ignatius wrote theſe Epiſtles or no) It is much more probable that they wanted Arguments of any real validity, who are fain to fly to ſuch Succors as theſe.

4. Yet one farther miſadventure there is, in forming or making uſe of this conceit; For what is ſaid in thoſe Epiſtles concerning the honour due to Presbyters or the Presbytery, is far from looking favourably on the Presbyterian Government; for certainly as long as there is a Biſhop, properly ſo called, ſet over the Presbyters, as they know there is in all thoſe Epiſtles, and as long as the Presbyters are to do nothing without commiſſion from him (as they knew alſo (and even now quarrell'd at it) that by him they are required to do) there is little ſhew of the Presbyterian model diſcernible, no whit more, than there was in England long before they covenanted to caſt the Biſhops out of the Church, it being certain that no community or equality of Presbyters taken into councel with the Biſhop, doth conſtitute the Government Presbyterian, as long as there be any Biſhops to have power over Presbyters; Elſe had the Convocation of Deans, Arch-Deacons and Clerks, fourteen years ago, been the platform of Presbyterian Government in England. [1640.]

This is, I conceive, a full anſwer to every the moſt minute part or appearance of Argument here produced againſt theſe Epiſtles, and is all that was proper here to be ſaid concerning Ignatius, whoſe Epiſtles as long as they have any authority with us, let it be in the moſt Reformed, purified Edition that ever was, or can be hoped for, there is evidence enough for the Apoſtolical Inſtitution of Biſhops in the modern notion of the word; And if after all this they muſt have no authority, for no other crime, but becauſe they are ſuch punctual Aſſerters of this Doctrine; 'Tis to little purpoſe farther to examine or inquire, what Antiquity hath affirmed or practiſed in this matter. 5.

SECT. V.

Teſtimonies of Irenæus, The uſe of Presbyteri for Biſhops.

YET becauſe their Method leads us forward to conſider ſome other of the Antient Writers, and I have promiſed ſo far to comply with them, I ſhall now in the next place attend them to the view of two of thoſe, Irenæus and Tertullian, p. 114, 115. where having acknowledged of them that they ſay that Apoſtles made Biſhops in Churches, Polycarp in Smyrna, Clemens at Rome, &c. all that they require of us to prove, is, that by the word Biſhop is meant a Biſhop as diſtinct from Preſbyters; and the reaſon why they think this needs proving, is, becauſe both thoſe Authors uſe the words Ἐπίσκοποι Biſhops, and Πρεσβύτεροι, Presbyteri, Seniores, for the ſame thing, the one calling Anicetus, Pius, Hyginus, Teleſphorus, Xyſtus, Presbyters of the Church of Rome in his Epiſtle to Victor; the other calling the Preſidents of the Churches Seniores in his Apology, and ſome other places are produced to the ſame purpoſe. Numb. 1.

To this therefore I ſhall now briefly give anſwer, Firſt, By conceſſion that the ſame perſons, who by theſe two Authors are called Biſhops, are promiſcuouſly called Presbyteri and Seniores alſo; And therefore ſecondly, that this queſtion being thus far (as to the Names) equally balanced between us, they ſaying that Biſhops] ſignifies Presbyters in the modern notion, we that Presbyters] ſignifies Biſhops in the modern notion, ſome other Indications, beſide this of the Names, muſt be made uſe of on either ſide, toward the deciſion of it. 2.

Of this ſort there is no one offered to us by them, and ſo as they have nothing to incline the balance their way, ſo we have nothing to make anſwer to in that particular. I ſhall therefore (as the only thing left for me to do) render ſome few Reaſons, why the words Biſhop and Elders in theſe Authors muſt needs ſignifie Biſhops in our Modern ſenſe. 3.

And the firſt proof, as far as concerns Irenæus, is, becauſe Irenæus, who uſeth theſe words promiſcuouſly, was himſelf a Biſhop in our modern notion, and yet is by others in his own dayes call'd Elder of the Church of Lyons, at that very time, when he is acknowledged to be Biſhop of it, in our modern ſenſe of the word; This I thus manifeſt in each part. 4.

And firſt, That Irenæus was Biſhop of Lyons, in ſuch a ſenſe, as we now uſe Biſhop, appears by what * Euſebius ſaith of him, importing that he was Primate of all France, Ἐν καὶ Γαλλίαν παροικίαις, ἃς Εἰρηναῖος ἐπεσκόπει, ſaith he, he was Biſhop of the Provinces through France: Now this, we know, cannot be affirm'd of a modern Presbyter, who pretends not to any ſuch wide and ſingular juriſdiction; And this needs no farther proof, it being by D. Blondell in his Apology for St. Hierom confeſt, that 140. years after Chriſt, i. e. nigh forty years before this time, the Government of the Church was in the hands of Biſhops over all the World, one in every Church ſet over all the reſt of the Church. 5. * L. 5. c. 23.

For the ſecond part then, that at that time, when he is thus an acknowledged Biſhop and Archbiſhop, he is yet called πρεσβύτερος ἐκκλησίας, Elder of the Church, I appeal to the Teſtimony of the Gallicane Church, at that time, as it lies recorded in † Euſebius, where in an Embaſſy performed by him in the name of the Martyrs of Lyons to Eleutherius the Biſhop of Rome, we have theſe words concerning him, Ταῦτά σοι τὰ γράμματα πεπέμφαμεν τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἡμῶν, καὶ κοινωνὸν Εἰρηναῖον ποιήσαι, Πάτερ Ἐλεύθερε, ἵνα πολλοῦ ἔχων σε αὐτὸν ἐν παῤῥησίᾳ ξυλαλοῦντα ὑπὲρ τῆς διαθήκης τοῦ Χριστοῦ. Εἰ γάρ ἤθελεν τόπον τινὶ δικαιοσύνῃ περιποιεῖν, ὡς Πρεσβύτερον ἐκκλησίας, ἅπερ ἐστὶν καὶ αὐτὸν ἐν πρώτοις ἂν τιθείμεθα. We have intreated our Brother and partaker Irenæus to bear theſe Letters to you, O Father Eleutherius, and we beſeech you to prize him as one very zealous of Chriſt's Covenant; If we thought that place would purchaſe juſtice to any, we had commended him in a principal manner, as Elder of the Church, for ſo he is. 6. † L. 5. c. 4.

Here nine years after he had been Biſhop and Archbiſhop of Lyons, about the year of Chriſt 177. he is ſtyled by thoſe Letters, Elder of the Church; by which it appears, that in his time Elder was the title of Biſhop, in our Modern ſenſe, and conſequently ſo it may fitly ſignifie in his own writings, and ſo muſt needs do there, when 'tis applied to thoſe, who were acknowledged Biſhops at that time, when by the Presbyterians acknowledgment Epiſcopacy was come in, in that notion, wherein we now underſtand it. 7.

A ſecond proof of this, is, that what in one place out of Papias he ſaith of all the Seniores or Elders, which in Aſia converſt with S. John; that Clemens Alexandrinus, who lived in the ſame time, affirms of the Biſhops or Elders of Aſia; meaning by both of them the Biſhops in our notion of the word. 8.

Clemens Alexandrinus wrote his Stromata about the year 192. which is five years before Irenæus's Martyrdome, in the fifth of Severus. Now of this Clemens, it is certain, Firſt, That he acknowledged 9.

the

the three Orders in the Church, which he calls τὰς χ͞ν τῶν ἐκκλησίαν περκοπὰς, ἐπισκόπων, πρεσβυτέρων, διακόνων, the three degrees or promotions in the Church, of Biſhops, Presbyters, Deacons; and conſequently muſt by the word ἐπίσκοπ& underſtand Biſhops in our modern ſenſe.

Strom. 6.

10. Secondly, that when he makes the Relation of John's meeting with the Biſhops of Aſia (which is the ſame matter which Irenæus produceth out of Papias) he calls them in the ſame period both Elders and Biſhops indifferently; For ſpeaking of S. John, he hath this paſſage, Ἐλθὼν ἔν τισι τῶν ἐγγὺς πόλεων — ὃν πᾶσι τῷ καθεστῶτι πρεσβυτέρ& ἐπισκόπῳ, νεανίσκον ἰδὼν, τοῦτον, ἔφη, σοὶ παρακατατίθεμαι —— ὁ δὲ πρεσβύτερ& ἀναλαβὼν οἶκαδε — Coming to a City not far off — and looking on the Biſhop, which was conſtituted over all, ſeeing a young man, he ſaid, This perſon I commit to thee — And the Elder took him home, brought him up, baptized, and at laſt gave him confirmation.

11. Here it is evident, this Elder of Aſia, one of thoſe which, in Irenæus, converſed with S. John, is ἐπίσκοπ& ὃν πᾶσι καθεστῶς, a Biſhop conſtituted over all in that City; and agreeably, when S. John comes back that way again, he calls to him by that title, Ὦ ἐπίσκοπε, τῷ παρακαταθήκῳ ὑπ' ἐμοῦ& ἡμῖν, ᾧ ἐγώτε κ) ὁ χριστός σοι παρακατεθέμεθα ὃν τῆς ἐκκλησίας ἧς προκαθέζη μάρτυρες, O Biſhop, render us the depoſitum, which both I and Chriſt delivered to thee in the preſence of the Church, over which thou art ſet. Where again he that is called Elder both by him and Irenæus, is alſo by him called ἐπίσκοπ& ἐκκλησίας προκαθεζόμεν&, the Biſhop ſet over the Church. And ſo that is a ſecond evidence of it.

12. Thirdly, In his Epiſtle to Victor Biſhop of Rome, he ſpeaks of his Predeceſſors thus, Οἱ πρεσβύτεροι οἱ πρὸ σοῦ τῆς ἐκκλησίας ἧς νῦν ἀφηγῇ, Ἀνικήτ&, Πί&, Τγίν& τε, κ) Τελέσφορος——The Elders which were ſet over the Church which thou ruleſt, Anicetus, Pius, Hyginus, and Teleſphorus, and lib. 3. cap. 3. Θεμελιώσαντες κ) οἰκοδομήσαντες οἱ μακάριοι Ἀπόστολοι ἐκκλησίαν, Λίνῳ τῷ ἐπισκοπῆς λειτουργίαν ἐνεχείρησαν — The bleſſed Apoſtles having founded and built the Church of Rome, put the Epiſcopal office into the hands of Linus, Anacletus ſucceeded him, Clemens Anacletus, Evareſtus Clemens, Alexander Evareſtus, then Xyſtus the ſixth from the Apoſtles, after him Teleſphorus, then Hyginus, then Pius, after him Anicetus, after Anicetus, Soter; νῦν δωδεκάτῳ τόπῳ, τ῀ τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς ἀπὸ τῶν ἀποστόλων κλῆρον ἔχει κλῆρον Ἐλεύθερος, Now in the twelfth place, Eleutherus poſſeſſes the Biſhoprick from the Apoſtles.

13. Here Firſt, it is evident that every one firſt named as Elders are yet ſingle perſons, one ſucceeding another, προϊστάμενοι ἐκκλησίας ſet over, or ruling the Church of Rome: Secondly, That for twelve ſucceſſions together, they are by Irenæus lookt upon all, as of the ſame rank, ſucceeding one another, and the firſt as well as the laſt, called Biſhop; which muſt conclude it to be underſtood by him in ſuch a notion, as is equally competible to all, and ſo muſt be in our Modern notion, if the great Aſſerters of the Presbyterian cauſe ſay true, that about the year 140. i. e. certainly before Eleutherius was Biſhop of Rome, there were Biſhops over Presbyters all the world over.

14. Laſtly, * Irenæus, ſpeaking of ſome unworthy voluptuous Elders, expreſſeth their faults in ſuch a manner, as cannot fitly belong to any but Biſhops, Principalis conſeſſionis tumore elati ſunt, they are puft up with the pride of the principal place, the πρωτοκαθεδρία the princial chair, which, as Biſhops, belonged to them. For though it is as poſſible that Preſbyters ſhould be guilty of the pride, the tumor and elation, as that Biſhops ſhould be guilty of the ſame, yet the occaſion of it there mentioned, the principalis conſeſſio, the chief place of dignity, is peculiar to the one, and not reconcileable with the ἰσότιμία or equality of the other.

* L. 4. c. 44.

15. Theſe evidences have readily offered themſelves to ſhew what Irenæus means by Preſbyteri, when he uſeth that and Biſhops promiſcuouſly, viz. by both, Biſhops in our modern notion; and he that ſhall read over that Author diligently, and compare his dialect with Polycarp and Papias, with whom he accords, the former uſing Πρεσβύτεροι for Biſhops (as hath largely been inſiſted on) and the latter for Apoſtles and Biſhops, ſingle Governours of each Church, (* πρεσβύτεροι Ἀνδρέας, Πέτρ&, Ἀριστίων, Ἰωάννης, and elſewhere, πρεσβύτερ& Μάρκ&. Andrew, Peter, Ariſtion, John, Mark, all Elders) will doutleſs find many more proofs that thus he uſed the word, and (I ſhall adventure to undertake) meet with no one indication to the contrary.

* Euſeb. l. 3. c. 39.

SECT. VI.

Teſtimonies of Tertullian. Seniores, & Majores natu for Biſhops, ſo in Firmilian.

Numb. 1. D. Blondel. Apol. pag. 38.

AS for Tertullian I ſhall need ſay no more, but that it is the confeſſion of the great Patron of Presbyterians, that he doth apertè tueri communi uſu receptam ordinis in Epiſcopos, Presbyteros, & Diaconos, diſtinctionem, Openly defend the received common diſtinction of the Eccleſiaſtick order into Biſhops, Presbyters and Deacons; and he that can yet doubt of it, let him examine his citations, de Præſcript. cap. 41. de Baptiſm cap. 17. de Monogam. cap. 11. de Fuga c. 11. And that de Baptiſmo, as high and clear, as that which was moſt quarrell'd with in Ignatius. Dandi Baptiſmum jus habet ſummus ſacerdos, qui eſt Epiſcopus, dein Presbyteri & Diaconi, non tamen ſine Epiſcopi authoritate, propter honorem Eccleſiæ, quo ſalvo ſalva pax eſt. The Biſhop hath the right of giving Baptiſm, after him the Presbyters and Deacons, yet not without the authority of the Biſhop, for the honour of the Church, which being preſerved, peace is preſerved.

2. So that of him it is as clear, as of Irenæus or Clemens, that he muſt underſtand Biſhop in our Modern notion: And yet even by him, theſe of this uppermoſt degree are called Seniores, and Majores natu, Elders; Præſident probati quique Seniores, the Elders præſide, Apol. c. 39. and of the Biſhops of Rome, the ſeries of whom he had brought down to Anicetus, lib. 3. contr. Marcion. cap. 9. he expreſſes them by Majores natu, ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles, in his Book, written in verſe, againſt Marcion.

3. And there will be leſs wonder in this, when it is remembred that after this, in S. Cyprian's times (who hath been ſufficiently evidenced to ſpeak of Biſhops in our Modern notion of them) Firmilian Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, in vulgar ſtyle calls them Seniores, and Præpoſiti, Elders, and Provoſts, in his Epiſtle to Cyprian; and again, Præſident Majores natu, &c. the Elders præſide, evidently meaning the Biſhops by thoſe titles.

And

And ſo much be ſpoken in return to what they have objected from theſe two Antients, Irenæus and Tertullian, ſuppoſing that I have competently performed the task by them impoſed on the Prelatiſts, ſhewed that the Biſhops ſpoken of by them, were Biſhops over Preſbyters, and by them underſtood to be ſo. 4.

SECT. VII.

Saint Jerom's Teſtimony of Biſhops, &c. By Apoſtolical Tradition. Conſuetudo oppoſed to Dominica diſpoſitio. Saint Jerom's meaning evidenced by many other Teſtimonies to be, that Biſhops were inſtituted by the Apoſtles. So by Panormitan alſo. The Teſtimonies of Iſidore, &c. the Council of Aquen, and of Leo vindicated. Of Iſchyras's Ordination. The teſtimony of the Synod ad Quercum, and of the Fourth Council of Carthage.

IN the next place I am to proceed to that of Saint Hierome in his 85. Epiſtle ad Euagrium, the unanſwerableneſs of which, I am affirmed to make matter of Triumph over D. Blondel and Walo Maſſalinus, ſeeming to ſay, that it never can be anſwered, whereas ſay they, if I had been pleaſed to caſt an eye upon the vindication --- written by Smectymnuus, I ſhould have found this anſwer --- Numb. 1.

What this anſwer is, we ſhall ſee anon; In the mean it will be neceſſary to give a brief account, what it was, which is called a triumphing over theſe two learned men. 2.

And firſt it is ſufficiently known, what advantages the defenders of Presbytery conceive themſelves to have from that one Antient writer, the Presbyter Saint Hierome: From him they have the interpretation of thoſe Scriptures, which they think to be for their uſe, as that the word Biſhop and Preſbyter are all one in ſeveral texts of Scripture, and both ſignifie Presbyters, and that the Apoſtles at firſt deſigned, ut communi Presbyterorum concilio Eccleſiæ gubernarentur, that the Churches ſhould be governed by the common Council of Presbyters; and that it ſo continued till upon the diſſentions, which by this means aroſe in the Church, it was judged more prudent and uſeful to the preſerving of unity, ut unus ſuperponeretur reliquis, that one ſhould be ſet over the reſt, and all the care of the Church belong to him. And this, ſaith Hierome, in toto Orbe decretum, decreed and executed over the whole world. 3.

By whom this was conceived by him to be thus decreed, he gives us not to underſtand in that place, nor in what point of time he thought it was done, but leaves us to collect both from ſome few circumſtances; As firſt, That it was after Schiſms entred into the Church, and one ſaid I am of Paul, I of Apollos, &c. And if it were immediately after that, then the Presbyterians will gain but little by this Patron: For his whole meaning will be, that the Apoſtles firſt put the Government of each Church into the hands of many, but ſoon ſaw the inconvenience of doing ſo, and the Schiſm and ruptures conſequent to it, and changed it themſelves, and ſetled one ſingular Biſhop in the whole power of Government in every Church; to which very fitly coheres what Clement had ſaid, that leſt new contentions ſhould ariſe about this ſingular dignity and authority, who ſhould ſucceed to it, they made a Roll or Catalogue of thoſe, which in vacancies ſhould ſucceed in each Church. 4.

That this was not, in Hierome's opinion, done thus early in the Apoſtles time, the Preſbyterians think they may conclude from what he ſaith on Tit. 1. Epiſcopi noverint ſe magis conſuetudine quam diſpoſitionis Dominicæ veritate Preſbyteris eſſe Majores, Let Biſhops know that their greatneſs and ſuperiority over Presbyters is held rather by cuſtom, than by Chriſts having diſpoſed it ſo. But it is very poſſible that this may not prove the concluſion, which is thought to be inferred by it. For here Conſuetudo, Cuſtom, as oppoſed to Chriſts diſpoſition, may well ſignifie the Practice of the Church in the later part of the Apoſtles times, and ever ſince to S. Hierome's days, and that may well be ſevered from all command, or inſtitution of Chriſts; and ſo Jerom's opinion may well be this, that Chriſt did not ordain this ſuperiority of one above another, but left all in common in the Apoſtles hands, who within a while, to avoid Schiſm, put the power in each Church in the hands of ſome one ſingular perſon. 5.

And that this was Hierome's meaning, I thought my ſelf, in charity to him, obliged to think, both becauſe in this ſenſe his words would better agree with the univerſal affirmation of all Orthodox Chriſtians, that before him (and after him too, unleſs thoſe few that took it on his credit) ſpeak of this matter; and alſo, becauſe if this be not his ſenſe, he muſt needs be found to contradict himſelf, having elſewhere affirmed that the three degrees of Biſhops, Presbyters and Deacons in the Church, were of Apoſtolical tradition, i. e. by the Apoſtles themſelves delivered to the Church. 6.

And now before I proceed, I deſire the ingenuous Reader, who is contrary minded, to conſider, what he can object to this concluſion of mine thus inferr'd concerning S. Hierome's opinion, and conſequently what probability there is, that the Presbyterians cauſe ſhould be ſuperſtructed on any Teſtimony of S. Hierome, ſuppoſing what I am next to demonſtrate, that the three orders are by him acknowledged to be delivered from the Apoſtles. 7.

And this is evident in his Epiſtle to Euagrius, where having again delivered the ſubſtance of what hath been now cited from his notes on Tit. 1. he yet concludes, Et ut ſciamus traditiones Apoſtolicas ſumptas de veteri teſtamento, Quod Aaron & filii ejus atq; Levitæ in templo fuerunt, hoc ſibi Epiſcopi & Presbyteri & Diaconi in Eccleſiâ vendicent. That we may know that the Apoſtles traditions are taken out of the Old Teſtament, we have this inſtance, that what Aaron, and his Sons, and the Levites were in the Temple, the ſame the Biſhops, and Presbyters and Deacons challenge to themſelves in the Church. Where theſe three degrees (and ſo the ſuperiority of Biſhops over Presbyters) are by him affirmed to be traditions of the Apoſtles. 8.

On occaſion therefore of inquiring into Hierom's meaning (and becauſe this place ſo readily offered it ſelf to expedite it) it was ſure very reaſonable to examine, and obſerve, what they which made moſt advantage of Hierom's authority, ſhould be found to ſay to this teſtimony of his, for the Apoſtolical tradition of three orders. And among theſe, three principal perſons offered themſelves to 9.

our conſideration, D. Blondel, Walo Meſſalinus, or Salmaſius, and Lud. Capellus, every of them having newly written on this ſubject, and collected eſpecially what Jerome had ſaid of it.

10. Of theſe three, the laſt was ſoon diſcerned to have dealt moſt prudently, ſetting down the other teſtimonies out of him, but wholly omitting this; The other two having not been ſo wary, made uſe of another dexterity, ſet down the words, but deferr'd their obſervations on them, till ſome fitter ſeaſon; D. Blondel put it off to his ſixth Section; whereas upon examination, he hath but three in his whole book, and ſo is certainly never likely to ſpeak of it, nor can be juſtly believed to have, in earneſt, deſigned any ſuch thing: The other ſaith, he expects more and better notes on it from Salmaſius (i. e. from himſelf) in another book, viz. De Eccleſiaſtico Ordine, and after a great volume come out of that ſubject eight or nine years ſince, he yet never takes this place, or his own promiſe into conſideration.

11. This was all that my ſearch produced, and the taking notice of theſe plain matters of fact, the behaviours of theſe men in that, which ſo much concern'd the whole cauſe to be taken notice of, and laid to heart, is all that was done by me, and which is ſtyled by theſe a triumphing over thoſe learned Men. And I hope there was little of hard meaſure, and as little of inſolence in this.

12. Now becauſe what theſe learned Men thus averted the doing, is yet here ſaid to be done by Smectymnuus, and that if I had caſt an eye on the vindication — I ſhould there have found that place of Hierome's anſwered, I am now in the laſt place to obey their directions, and conſider the anſwer, which from Smectymnuus they have ſet down for me.

13. And it is twofold, the firſt is a civil denial that there is any truth in the words, For, ſay they, It is hard to conceive how this imparity can be properly called an Apoſtolical Tradition, when Jerome, having mentioned John the laſt of the Apoſtles, ſaith it was poſtea, that one was ſet over the reſt.

14. But is this the way of anſwering the place, or ſalving the difficulty? Hierome ſaith, Biſhops, Preſbyters, and Deacons in the Church (that ſure is this imparity) are an Apoſtolical Tradition; and they anſwer, It is hard to conceive how it can be properly ſo called. What is this but to make Hierom's words (as ſoon as ever he ſaith any thing which accords not with their intereſt) as unreconcileable with truth, as with his own former words, which they had cited from him? And then how much kinder to Hierome was I than they, who thought it neceſſary to affix a commodious meaning to his former words, and interpret conſuetudo] the cuſtom of the Church begun in the Apoſtles dayes, that ſo in thus ſaying, he might be reconcileable with himſelf, when he called Epiſcopacy a tradition Apoſtolical?

15. As for the reaſon, which makes this ſo hard for them to conceive from Hierome's words, I believe it hath no force in it; For though after the mention of S^t^ John's words in his ſecond and third Epiſtle, he ſaith that [poſtea, afterwards] this imparity was introduced, yet this proves not his opinion to be, that it was not Apoſtolical tradition; It might be done after the writing of thoſe Epiſtles, and yet in S^t^ John's time, i. e. before his death. And though I believe S^t^ Hierome was miſtaken, in thinking there were no Biſhops till then (it would have had more truth in it, if he had ſaid there were no Presbyters till then) yet for all that, I cannot doubt but this was his opinion, becauſe as he no where ſaith any thing which is contrary to this, ſo here he ſaith expreſly that it was Apoſtolical tradition, which in his opinion it could not be, if it were not in the Church, in his opinion, before S^t^ John's death. And ſo there is but little appearance of validity in their firſt Anſwer.

16. And for their ſecond, that is ſomewhat like the former, viz. that with Hierome Apoſtolical tradition and Eccleſiaſtical cuſtom are the ſame.

17. If this be true, then certainly I did not amiſs in thinking that when Hierome uſed conſuetudo cuſtom in oppoſition to Dominica diſpoſitio, Chriſt's appointment or inſtitution, I ought to interpret cuſtom in that place, by Apoſtolical Tradition in the other. For how Eccleſiaſtical cuſtom with him, and Apoſtolical Tradition ſhould be the ſame, and yet Eccleſiaſtical cuſtom may not be interpreted by Apoſtolical tradition, eſpecially when the ſame man affirms them both of the ſame thing, I confeſs I cannot apprehend.

18. But then ſecondly, becauſe I muſt ſuppoſe, that by making them the ſame, they muſt mean to bring down Apoſtolical tradition to ſignify Eccleſiaſtical cuſtom, not to advance cuſtom to ſignify Apoſtolical tradition (in the ſame manner as when they make Biſhop and Elder the ſame, they bring down Biſhop to ſignifie Presbyter, but will not allow Elder to ſignifie Biſhop) that alſo will be worth examining a while.

19. And firſt, Can there be any reaſon to imagine, that Hierom or any man ſhould ſet down that for an inſtance of Apoſtolical tradition, which the ſame perſon doth not believe to be delivered by the Apoſtles, but to be of a later date? That which is delivered by the Apoſtles, and received, and practiſed by the Church, may fitly be called a cuſtom of the Church, without adding or ſpecifying, that we mean the Apoſtolical Church; becauſe the Apoſtles, while they lived, were a part of the Church, and the following Age was a part of the Church alſo. But can it be truly ſaid, that that was delivered by the Apoſtles, which was only accuſtomed in the ſubſequent Church, and not ſo much as introduced under the Apoſtles?

20. This certainly is another ſtrange way of interpreting words or phraſes quite contrary to all Lexicons, or to the uſe of ſuch words or phraſes, which unleſs they be changed, it is as much as to ſay, he that ſaid Tradition Apoſtolical, did not mean Tradition Apoſtolical; And this ſure will bring little credit to S^t^ Hierome, on whoſe authority they ſo much depend in this matter.

21. As for their proof of what they ſay, viz. becauſe the obſervation of Lent, which he ſaith, ad Marcellum, is Apoſtolica traditio, is contra Luciferianos, ſaid by him to be Eccleſiæ conſuetudo,] that ſure is not of force to conclude what they would have it; for it may be (or by him be deemed to be) both, an Apoſtolical tradition and a cuſtom of the Church too; it being very ordinary and reaſonable, that what the Apoſtles delivered, the Church ſhould alſo accuſtome, and practiſe. But could both theſe be ſaid by him of that which he thought were but one of theſe? That is again to make him teſtifie againſt his conſcience, to ſay Lent was an Apoſtolical tradition, and to believe it was not an Apoſtolical tradition.

22. Here I ſhall not need debate whether the obſervation of Lent were Apoſtolical, or no; All that is neceſſary to inſiſt on, is, whether Saint Hierome, that ſaid it was ſuch, believed it to be ſuch; And if he be mistaken in his belief, then he may be as well mistaken in the meaning of those passages, which he interprets so, as is useful to, and in favour of the Presbyterians, as that πρεσβύτεροι Elders, Act. 20. were the Presbyters of the Church of Ephesus; that the Ἐπίσκοποι Bishops, Phil. 1. are Presbyters of that one Church or City, and the like. For either of those is but his belief or perswasion too, and the more fallible they find him in other things, the less weight they ought to lay on his opinion in this, and the less blame on us, for departing from his opinion.

But having said this πρὸς ὕπαθον, for the repelling all force of their objection, I shall now add some other testimonies out of Saint Hierome, and after them, one argument, ad homines undeniable, to demonstrate, that it was indeed and without question S. Hierome's opinion, that Bishops in our modern notion were instituted by the Apostles themselves. 23.

1. In his 54. Epistle he sets down this difference among others, between the Catholicks and the Montanist Hereticks, Apud nos Apostolorum locum tenent Episcopi, apud eos Episcopus tertius est, Among the Catholicks the Bishops (such as were in S. Hierome's time, i. e. certainly such as in ours, not meer Presbyters) hold the place of the Apostles (i. e. the uppermost place in the Church of Christ, and succeed the Apostles in it) and among those Hereticks the Bishop is the third; which it seems was one character of their being Hereticks, and so a deviation from an Apostolical truth. 24.

2. In his Book, de script. Eccles. he saith of James the brother of the Lord, Jacobus ab Apostolis statim post ascensionem Domini Hierosolymorum Episcopus ordinatus, suscepit Ecclesiam Hierosolymæ. Timotheus à Paulo Ephesiorum Episcopus ordinatus, Titus Cretæ. Polycarpus à Johanne Smyrnæ Episcopus Ordinatus, James presently after Christs Ascension, was ordained Bishop of Hierusalem, and undertook (i. e. ruled, as to receive the Congregation, Psal. 75. is to rule it) the Church of Hierusalem, Timothy was ordained Bishop of the Ephesians by Paul, Titus of Crete. Polycarp was by John ordained Bishop of Smyrna. Where, as it is evident, and by the Presbyterians acknowledged, that Timothy and Titus were singular rulers (which therefore they are wont to excuse by saying they are extraordinary officers or Evangelists) and yet by him said to be Bishops of Ephesus and Crete, and so constituted by the Apostles, so it is consequent that James and Polycarp were by him deemed singular rulers also (and not Collegues in a Presbytery) and those so constituted by the Apostles also; and accordingly of this James he saith, ad Gal. 2. Jacobus primus ei Ecclesiæ præfuit --- Episcopus Hierosolymorum primus fuit, James was the first that was set over that Church --- was the first Bishop of Hierusalem. And in consequence thereto, in his comments on Isa. lib. 5. cap. 17. he calls this James Decimum tertium Apostolum, the thirteenth Apostle. 25.

3. In like manner * Epist. ad Euagrium, speaking of Mark (who dying in the eighth of Nero, what was done by him, must be resolved to have been in the Apostles times, and agreeable to their practice) he saith, Alexandriæ a Marco Evangelistâ ad Heraclam & Dionysium Episcopos Presbyteri semper unum ex se electum in excelsiori super Presbyteros gradu collocatum, Episcopum nominabant, quomodo si exercitus Imperatorem faceret. At Alexandria from the time of Mark the Evangelist, to the time of Heraclas and Dionysius Bishops, the Presbyters always named one chosen from among themselves, and placed in an higher degree above Presbyters, their Bishop, as if an army should chuse their General. That what is said of the Presbyters chusing their Bishop, belongs not to Presbyters imposing hands on him, is † elsewhere largely evidenced. And so, by the way, appeareth the falseness of the citation out of Hierome, Appen. p. 142. that in Alexandria for a long time the Presbyters ordained (it should have been said elected) their Bishop. That which I here infer from the testimony is manifest, viz. that in Saint Marks time, and from the first planting of the Church at Alexandria, one Bishop or singular Ruler was constituted among them, as that signifies an higher degree than that of Presbyters. 26. * Pag. 85. † Dissert. 3. cap. 10.

4. More places there are in him, which evidence his opinion, that Bishops, as they differ from Presbyters, are successors of the Apostles: In his Comment on Psal. 45. Nunc quia Apostoli à mundo recesserunt, habes pro his Episcopos filios, sunt & hi patres tui, quia ab ipsis regeris. Now (in S. Hierome's time) because the Apostles are parted from the world, you have in their steads Bishops their Sons; They also are thy Fathers, because thou art governed by them. Where the Bishops that then ruled (those are confest to be single persons, not Presbyteries) are the successors of the Apostles in his opinion. And Ep. 1. ad Heliodorum, of not undertaking the office of Bishop. Non est facile stare loco Pauli, tenere gradum Petri; 'tis not easie to stand in Pauls place, to hold the degree of Peter. Where Episcopacy is the place and degree of those Apostles. And so Ep. 13. ad Paulinum, Episcopi & Presbyteri habeant in exemplum Apostolos & Apostolicos viros, quorum honorem possidentes habere nitantur & meritum, Bishops and Presbyters must have for their Examples the Apostles and Apostolical men, whose honour they possess, and therefore ought to endeavour to imitate their merit. 27.

5. I shall add a Cumulus of other passages much to the same purpose with the former, and fit to be taken in conjunction with them, to give us the full understanding of S. Hierome's opinion in this matter. Ad Nepotian. Ep. 2. Esto subjectus Pontifici tuo, & quasi animæ parentem suscipe; quod Aaron & filios ejus, hoc Episcopum & Presbyteros esse noverimus. Be subject to the Bishop, and receive him as the Parent of thy Soul; what Aaron and his Sons were, that we must know the Bishop and Presbyters to be. And on Tit. 1. speaking of S. Paul's directions for the making a Bishop, Apostolus, saith he, Ecclesiæ Principem formans, the Apostle forming the Prince or Ruler of the Church, and so again in the same words on Psal. 45. deciphering a single ruler by that Bishop, which the Apostle there meant to form. So on that 45. Psal. Constituit Christus in omnibus finibus mundi Principes Ecclesiæ Episcopos, Christ in all parts of the world constituted Princes of the Church, the Bishops, just the same as hath been cited from Ignatius, that all the world over the Bishops were ordained by the Apostles according to the mind of Christ. In his Dial. adv. Luciferian. Ecclesiæ salus in summi sacerdotis dignitate pendet, cui si non exors quædam & ab omnibus eminens detur potestas, tot in Ecclesiis officientur Schismata quot sacerdotes; and, Si quæris quare in Ecclesia baptizatus, nisi per manus Episcopi non accipiat spiritum sanctum --- disce hanc observationem ex ea authoritate descendere, quod Spiritus sanctus ad Apostolos descendit. The safety of the Church depends on the dignity of the chief Priest (or Bishop) to whom if a peculiar power be not given above all that others have, there will be as many Schisms as Priests in the Churches. --- If you demand why he that hath been baptized in the Church, may not receive the Holy Ghost but by the hands of the Bishop, learn that this observance descends 28.

from that Authority, in that the holy ſpirit deſcended on the Apoſtles. Which Teſtimony, as it ſhews the neceſſity of a ſingular Biſhop to avoid Schiſms in the Church, and ſo muſt affix the inſtitution of them on the Apoſtles, who made proviſion againſt that danger (and that I ſuppoſe is his meaning in * that place which the Preſbyterians make moſt uſe of) ſo it directly derives the authority, by which Biſhops ſtand in the Church, diſtinct from Preſbyters, and above them, from the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt on the Apoſtles. Laſtly, adv. Jovinan. l. 1. Epiſcopus & Presbyter & Diaconus non ſunt meritorum nomina ſed officiorum, Nec dicitur, ſi quis Epiſcopatum deſiderat——The Biſhop and Presbyter and Deacon, are names of offices, neither is it ſaid, If any man deſire a Biſhoprick — applying thoſe Texts of S. Paul, concerning the qualifications of Biſhops to the Biſhop, as in his time he ſtood, diſtinct from Preſbyters.

29. All this I ſuppoſe may ſuffice to give authority to my collection and concluſion from plain words of S. Hierom, that his meaning was as plain and undubitable, that Epiſcopacy was delivered down and inſtituted in the Church by the Apoſtles themſelves. And I cannot conceive what can be invented to avoid the evidence of theſe teſtimonies; yet becauſe I promiſed it, I ſhall now add that one argument (ex abundanti, and much more than is neceſſary) to the ſame purpoſe, (viz. to prove that this was Hierom's meaning, which I pretend it to be.) And that ſuch, as by theſe objectors cannot with juſtice be denyed, to have a full irrefragable force in it, having themſelves made uſe of it againſt us, which they ought not to have done, if by themſelves it ſhall now be denyed when it is produced by us.

30. In the cloſe of their Appendix, they have ſet down ſeveral propoſitions declaring the judgment and practice of the Antient Church about ordination of Miniſters, and their firſt propoſition, being this, that in the firſt and pureſt times — there was ordination of Presbyters without Biſhops over Presbyters, their proof is this, For theſe Biſhops came in poſtea and paulatim, afterward, and by little and little, as Hierom ſaith. And Panormitan, lib. 1. Decretal. de Conſuetud. cap. 4. ſaith, Olim Presbyteri in communi regebant Eccleſiam & ordinabant ſacerdotes, & pariter conferebant omnia ſacramenta. Of old the Elders ruled the Church in common, and ordained Prieſts, and joyntly conferred all the Sacraments.

31. Theſe two teſtimonies of Hierom and Panormitan, being brought to prove the ſame propoſition concerning ordination by Presbyters, and the time of Biſhops coming in to the Church, It muſt ſure be reaſonable to reſolve that what Panormitan hath defined in this matter, that was S. Hieroms ſenſe alſo; Now what that is, will be diſcerned by ſetting down Panormitan's words at large, as they lie in the place cited by them.

32. The buſineſs he hath there in hand is to prove, that cuſtom is not of force ſo far, as to preſcribe that an Ordinary Clerk as Presbyter ſhould perform an Epiſcopal act, Ea quæ ſunt ordinis Epiſcopalis non poſſunt acquiri per ordinem inferiorem ex conſuetudine quantumcunque vetuſtiſſimâ, Thoſe things that are of Epiſcopal order, cannot by any cuſtom, how antient ſoever, be acquired by any Inferiour order: The reaſon is, quia conſuetudo non facit quem capacem, becauſe cuſtom doth make no man capable — Then he makes this obſervation, that Ritus Apoſtolorum circa ſacramenta habent impedire characteris impreſſionem; The rites, or practice, or Inſtitutions of the Apoſtles about the Sacraments, have power to hinder the impreſſion of the Character, nam immediatè poſt mortem Chriſti omnes Presbyteri in communi regebaat eccleſiam, non fuerant inter ipſos Epiſcopi, ſed idem Presbyter quod Epiſcopus, & pariter conferebant omnia ſacramenta, ſed poſtmodum ad Schiſmata ſedanda fecerunt ſeu ordinaverunt Apoſtoli, ut crearentur Epiſcopi & certa ſacramenta iis reſervarunt, illa interdicendo ſimplicibus Presbyteris — For immediately after the death of Chriſt, all the Elders in common ruled the Church, and ſo there were no Biſhops among them, but a Presbyter was the ſame that a Biſhop, and they joyntly conferred all the Sacraments. But after a while for the appeaſing of Schiſms, the Apoſtles cauſed or ordained that Biſhops ſhould be created, and reſerved to them ſome Sacraments (or holy Rites) forbidding ſingle Presbyters to meddle with them: and he concludes, Et vides hic quod talis ordinatio habet impedire etiam impreſſionem Characteris, quia ſi Preſbyteri illa de facto conferunt, nihil conferunt, And here you ſee, that ſuch an Ordination is able to hinder the impreſſion of the Character, becauſe if Presbyters do de facto confer them, they confer nothing.

33. Where, as Panormitan cited by them to prove Ordination without Biſhops (and ſpecious words pickt out of him to that purpoſe) doth yet diſtinctly affirm that Presbyters, which confer Orders without a Biſhop, confer nothing, all their Ordinations are meer nullities (and what could have been ſaid more ſeverely againſt their practice, and their deſign in citing him, than this?) ſo he plainly interprets S. Hieroms aſſertion of the occaſion and time of Biſhops being ſet over the Presbyters, that it was done by the appointment of the Apoſtles themſelves, and ſo that conſuetudo, cuſtome in Hierom, oppoſed to Dominica diſpoſitio Chriſt's diſpoſal, is no more than [poſtmodum ordinaverunt Apoſtoli, after a while the Apoſtles ordained] oppoſed to [immediatè poſt mortem Chriſti, immediately after the death of Chriſt.]

34. And then by the way, as the Reader may hence diſcern what force there is, in this Teſtimony of Panormitan to ſupport their firſt propoſition concerning the Ordination of Presbyters without Biſhops over Presbyters (for which, beſides S. Hieroms poſtea and paulatim, and part of this teſtimony of Panormitan, they produce no other) and as by what was formerly ſaid of the Teſtimonies of Cyprian and Firmilian, their chief ſupports for their * Second Propoſition, have already been utterly demoliſhed, ſo alſo the Teſtimonies of Iſidore Hiſpalenſis and the Council of Aquen produced for the proof of their † third Propoſition, concerning the Presbyters having an intrinſick power to ordain Miniſters, will immediately vaniſh in like manner. For as it is evident that that place in that Council of Aquen is for nine Chapters together tranſcribed out of Iſidore, and conſequently the Teſtimonies out of him and that Council are but one and the ſame thing, twice repeated, to increaſe the number; ſo 'tis as evident that what is by them ſaid, is taken from S. Hierom, and can no farther be extended either in reſpect of the authority or the matter of the Teſtimony, than in S. Hierom it hath appeared to extend. And therefore as the * words cited by theſe men out of them, are no more than theſe, that ſolum propter authoritatem Clericorum ordinatio & conſecratio reſervata eſt ſummo ſacerdoti, That Presbyters have many things common with Biſhops, only in reſpect of authority (or for the preſerving it intire, and and the unity of each Church, which depended on that, in St. Hierom's opinion) the Ordination and conſecration of Clerks (i. e. of all Presbyters and Deacons) was reſerved to the chief Prieſt, i. e. the Biſhop; ſo how far this is from concluding what it was brought to prove, the intrinſick power of Preſbyters to ordain Miniſters, I leave to any Reader to paſs judgment. And yet truly this doth it as well as their one other antient Teſtimony, that of Leo, ſet out in their front, out of his 88. Epiſtle, concerning the Conſecration of Presbyters and Deacons, and ſome other things, Quæ omnia ſolis deberi Pontificibus authoritate canonum præcipitur, All which that they ſhould be due to the Biſhops and to none elſe, it is commanded by the authority of the Canons. Who would ever have thought fit, from ſuch words as theſe, which affirm this priviledge to be reſerved peculiarly to the Biſhops, and that the authority of the Canons ſo requires, to conclude that the Presbyters had this intrinſick power? As if all that the Canons deny Presbyters, were infallibly their due to enjoy, and the Argument demonſtrative, that it was their Original and intrinſick due, becauſe the Canons deny it.

What they add of Iſchyras Prop. 6. that being depoſed from being a Presbyter, becauſe made by Colluthus who was but a Presbyter himſelf, and not a Biſhop, this was done, not becauſe the act of Colluthus was againſt the Canon of Scripture, but only becauſe it was againſt the Canons of ſome councils.] is ſomewhat of the ſame nature with the former, and will be beſt judged of by the relation of the Fact, which in the ſtory of thoſe times is thus made by Socrates, Πρᾶγμα ὑπέδυ πολλῶν θανάτων ἄξιον, ὑδεπώ ποτε γὰρ ἱερωσύνης τυχὼν, τὸ τῶ πρεσβυτέρω ὄνομα ἑαυτῶ περιθέμενος τὰ ἱερέως πράττειν ἐτόλμησεν, He adventured on a thing worthy of many Deaths, for being never admitted to the Prieſthood, and aſſuming to himſelf the name of an Elder, he dared to do the things belonging to a Prieſt. A cenſure which certainly ſets the fault ſomewhat higher than the tranſgreſſing of the Canons of ſome Councils. 35. P. 143. L. 1. c. 20.

Two Teſtimonies more I ſhall touch on, before I return to the purſuit of my propoſed Method, and then I ſhall render the reaſon of this Excurſion. 36.

For the confirmation of their ſecond Propoſition concerning Ordination, one Teſtimony they produce from the Synod ad Quercum Ann. 403. where it was brought as an accuſation againſt Chryſoſtome, ὅτι πολλὰς ἀμαρτύρως ἐχειροτόνησεν, ὅτι ἄνευ συνεδρείου καὶ παρὰ γνώμην τῆ κλήρω ἐποίησε τὰς χειροτονίας, That he made Ordinations without the company and ſentence of the Clergy. Another from the council of Carthage, Can. 20. Ut Epiſcopus ſine Concilio Clericorum ſuorum non ordinet, That a Biſhop ordain not Clerks without the Council of his own Clerks; and Can. 2. Cum ordinatur Presbyter, Epiſcopo eum benedicente, & manum ſuper caput ejus tenente, etiam omnes Presbyteri qui præſentes ſunt manus ſuas juxta manum Epiſcopi ſuper caput illius teneant. When a Presbyter is Ordained, as the Biſhop bleſſeth him and layes his hand on his head, let all the Presbyters alſo that are preſent lay their hands on his Head by the Hand of the Biſhop. And the concluſion deduced from theſe Teſtimonies (and the forementioned of Cyprian and Fermilian) is this, that Ordination by Biſhops without the aſſiſtance of his Presbyters was always forbidden and oppoſed. How truly this is inferred from the Premiſſes will ſoon be judged by a view of the Teſtimonies. 37.

For the firſt, this is the truth of the Story; Theophilus a guilty perſon, and as ſuch, cited to anſwer, what was objected againſt him, making uſe of the envy, under which Chryſoſtome then laboured, ſhifted the Scene, and became his Judge, nay, as Photius tells us, he and the reſt of that Conventicle, οἱ τὰ μάλιστα δυσμενῶς ἔχοντες πρὸς τὸν ἄνδρα, that were Chryſoſtom's greateſt Enemies, ἅμα πάντα καὶ κεῖται, καὶ κατήγοροι, καὶ μάρτυρες ἦσαν, were at once Judges, and Accuſers, and Witneſſes of all that was charged againſt him. And therefore we already ſee, what heed is to be given to the accuſation of thoſe Fathers ad quercum, and how valid an argument can be deduced from it; And we ſhall the better gueſs at it, if we conſider alſo, what other particulars were, in the ſame manner that this was, charged againſt him, ſet down by Photius in his Bibliotheca. The 23. charge was, ὅτι ἑαυτῶ μόνῳ λουτρὸν ἐποκαίεται --- that the Bath was heated for him alone, and that after he had bathed, Serapion ſhuts the paſſage into the Bath, that no body elſe might bathe: The 25. ὅτι μόνος ἐδίει, --- that he eat alone, living like one of the Cyclopes; and betwixt theſe two new found crimes, comes in this, in the midſt, being the 24. ὅτι πολλὰς ἀμαξύρυς ἐχειροτόνησεν, that he ordained many that had no Teſtimonials; which being ſet down by Photius, as the ſum of that charge, refers us indeed to the ground, on which their charge was built, of his ordaining without a Council, and againſt the mind of his Clergy, (thoſe teſtimonials, and ſo the approbation of the perſon by the Clergy, being generally a good preparation to the receiving Orders) but doth not at all prove that a Biſhop might not ordain without aſſiſtance of his Presbyters, or that it was always forbidden, any more than it proves that eating or bathing alone was always forbidden alſo. 38.

As for that of the 4. Council of Carthage Can. 20. They have ſet down but half the Canon; the whole runs thus, Ut Epiſcopus ſine concilio Clericorum non ordinet, ita ut civium conniventiam & Teſtimonium quærat, That the Biſhop ordain not without his council of Clergy, ſo that he ſeeks the liking and teſtimonial of the Inhabitants. Which again only ſerves to ſhew, the uſe of the aſſiſtant Presbyters, to help the Biſhop to a due knowledge of the perſon to be ordained (and this they know we Prelatiſts aſſent to and approve of) but is no argument of the unlawfulneſs of ſole ordination, or of any power that the Presbyters have in the conferring of Orders. 39.

So likewiſe that from Can. 2. is only a Teſtimony for the fitneſs and uſefulneſs of that cuſtom (ſtill retain'd and uſed in our Church in all Ordinations of Presbyters and Deacons) that the Presbyters there preſent ſhould lay on their hands by the hand of the Biſhop, and ſo join in the Prayer or Benediction, but no proof that a Presbyter might not be ordained by a Biſhop without the preſence of ſuch Presbyters. 40.

I have for a while gone aſide from the conſideration of S. Hierom's teſtimony (the deſigned matter of this Section) and allowed my ſelf ſcope to take in all the teſtimonies of Antiquity, which are made uſe of by theſe Aſſemblers, for the juſtifying their Ordination of Miniſters; And I have done it on purpoſe (though a little contrary to my deſigned Method and brevity) becauſe after the publiſhing of the Diſſertations againſt Blondel, I remember I was once told, that though it was not neceſſary, yet I might do well to add ſome Appendix, by way of Anſwer to that one head of diſcourſe concerning Presbyterial Ordination, and the inſtances which were objected by him. For which reaſon I have now, as near as I can, taken in all, in this place, which are in their Appendix produced on that head, and do not elſewhere in this brief reply, fall in my way to be anſwered by me. For ſome others, mentioned 41.

tioned by D. Blondel, I refer the Reader to the learned pains of the Biſhop of Derry, in his vindication of the Church of England from the aſperſion of Schiſm, p. 270. &c.

42. And ſo being at laſt returned into my rode again, This may, I hope, ſuffice to have ſaid in the juſtification of what was done in the Diſſertations concerning St. Hierom, both to clear his ſenſe, and for the ſetting the ballance aright betwixt his authority on the one ſide, and the authority of Ignatius on the other, betwixt ſome doubtful ſayings of the former, which ſeemed to prejudice the Doctrine of the Apoſtles inſtituting imparity, which yet elſewhere he affirms to be Apoſtolical tradition, and the many clear and uncontradicted, conſtant ſaying of the latter, which are acknowledged to aſſert it. Which one thing, if it be not in the Diſſertations ſo done, as may ſatisfie any impartial Judge, that Ignatius, in full concord with all, is to be heeded on our ſide, more than St. Hierom, in ſome few of his many Teſtimonies, can be juſtly produced againſt us, I ſhall then confeſs my ſelf guilty of overmuch confidence; but if therein I have not erred, it is moſt evident that I need not undertake any farther travail in this whole matter.

SECT. VIII.

The Teſtimonies of Ambroſe and Auſtin. Conſignare uſed for conſecrating the Euchariſt, and that belonged to the Biſhop when preſent.

Numb. 1. THere now follows in the next place the paſſage cited by them, p. 133. out of Ambroſe on Eph. 4. where to prove that even during the prevalency of Epiſcopacy 'twas not held unlawful for a Presbyter to ordain without a Biſhop, they urge out of St. Ambroſe theſe words, Apud Ægyptum Presbyteri conſignant, ſi præſens non ſit Epiſcopus, In Ægypt the Presbyters conſigne, if the Biſhop be not preſent. And the like out of Auſtin (or whoſoever was the Author) in Quæſt. ex utroq; Teſtam. Qu. 101. In Alexandria & per totam Ægyptum, ſi deſit Epiſcopus, conſecrat Presbyter, In Alexandria and through all Ægypt, if the Biſhop be wanting, the Presbyter conſecrates. And having done ſo, they add, which words cannot be underſtood (as a--- defender of Prelacy would have them) of the Conſecration of the Euchariſt; For this might be done by the Presbyter, præſente Epiſcopo, the Biſhop being preſent, but it muſt be underſtood either of confirmation, or (which is more likely) of ordination, becauſe Ambroſe in that place is ſpeaking of Ordination.

2. To this I ſhall briefly reply, Firſt, That it is ſure enough, and granted by the moſt eminent Preſbyterians, that theſe two Books, whence theſe Teſtimonies are cited, were not written either by Ambroſe or Auſtin, but by ſome other (Hilarius Sardus, ſaith Blondel) and unjuſtly inſerted among their works; and then the authority of ſuch ſuppoſititious pieces will not be great to over-rule any practice otherwiſe acknowledged in the Church of God.

3. Secondly, That the miſtakes of Blondel and Salmaſius, concerning the meaning of the former of theſe places, were ſo evidently diſcovered by the ſecond of them (the conſignant in the one, interpreted by conſecrat in the other) that I conceived it ſufficient, but to name them; For can there be any thing more unqueſtionable than this, that conſecrare in antient writers ſignifies the Conſecration of the Euchariſt? And then if conſignare be a more obſcure phraſe, is there any doubt, but it muſt be interpreted by that which is ſo much more vulgar and plain? and all the circumſtances beſides being exactly the ſame in both places, what doubt can there be, but in both, the words are to be underſtood of the Euchariſt?

4. Yet becauſe ſome advantage was by this their miſunderſtanding ſought to the Presbyterians cauſe, they now reſolve, and inſiſt, that it muſt not be rectified, though they know not which to apply it to, Confirmation or Ordination, and pretend not to produce any Teſtimony, where conſecrare is ever uſed for the latter, or conſignare for either of them. And indeed * Blondel and † Salmaſius were yet more uncertain, for they thought it might alſo belong to the benediction of Penitents, and that as probable as either of the two former; And when the truth is rejected, thus it is wont to be.

* Apol. p. 57.

5. As for the only reaſon which inclines them to confine it to Ordination, becauſe Ambroſe in that place is ſpeaking of Ordination, if the place be review'd, it will not be found to have truth in it; He ſpeaks immediately before, of the ſeveral Miniſterial Acts, Preaching and Baptizing, adding indeed that Scripta Apoſtoli non per omnia conveniunt Ordinationi, quæ nunc in Eccleſia eſt, The writings of the Apoſtle do not in all things agree to the Order, which is now in the Church. There is mention of Ordinatio indeed, but that ſignifies not Ordination, as we now uſe it for ordaining of Miniſters, but manifeſtly the διατάξις, the rule, or order uſed in the Church, in ſeveral reſpects, ſaith he, different from what it was in the writings of the Apoſtle.

6. And for their objection againſt my interpretation, that it cannot be underſtood of conſecrating the Euchariſt, [becauſe this the Presbyter might do when the Biſhop was preſent] If they would have taken notice of the many evidences brought by me in that place out of the Antients, the Canons of the Apoſtles, Ignatius ad Magneſ. the 56. Canon of the council of Laodicæa, and Tertullian, that the Preſbyter might not adminiſter either Sacrament without the Biſhops appointment; and diſtinctly of this Sacrament, Non de aliorum quam de Præſidentium manu Euchariſtiam ſumimus, we receive it not from the hands of any but the Preſidents, i. e. (in his ſtyle) the Biſhops, Tertull. de Cor. Mil. they could never have thought this a reaſonable Objection, It being evidently the ſenſe of the Antient Canons, (to which the deſcription of the practice in Juſtin Martyr doth perfectly agree, Apol. 2.) that only the Biſhop had power to conſecrate the Euchariſt, and in his abſence only, the Presbyter, to whom he gave that power.

7. Had they been pleaſed to have taken notice of theſe Canons and antient Records, punctually ſet down by me in that place, it muſt certainly have prevented this their exception, and utterly robbed them of thoſe two Teſtimonies to that Propoſition. And as to that of the Alexandrian Biſhops out of Hierom, Hierom, that is alſo largely anſwered by me, Diſſert. 3. c. 10. but that again they were reſolved not to take notice of.

SECT. IX.

Of the Chorepiſcopi.

THere ſtill remains one mention of me, upon occaſion of the Chorepiſcopi or Regionary Biſhops; Append. p. 138. Of that ſubject they are ſomewhat large, and ſo D. Blondel had been before them, and in anſwering him, all their pretenſions from thence, and that whole argument (by them purſued, P. 135, 136, 137, 138.) is punctually anſwered, before it was produced, Diſſert. 3. c. 8. Numb. 1.

And yet they go on roundly, as if there were no ſuch thing; only in the cloſe they add, There is another whom we forbear to name, that ſaith that the Chorepiſcopi were Biſhops. But he adds, though they were Biſhops, yet they were made but by one Biſhop, and Biſhops meerly titular and ſine Cathedrâ, which is all one as if he ſhould ſay, they were not properly Biſhops. 2.

That which is ſaid of the Chorepiſcopi in the Diſſertations, is too long to be here ſo impertinently repeated; If the Reader pleaſe to conſult the place, I have no fear that he will return unſatisfied in any thing that is by theſe men objected againſt Prelacy from that head. A Dilemma is there uſed, which, whether they were Biſhops or no, will certainly ſecure us. 3.

As to their preſent argument againſt me, I anſwer, that what I ſay of thoſe Chorepiſcopi, is, not that they were Biſhops meerly titular, but that they were Proxies or Vicarii of the Biſhop of the City, acting by Commiſſion from him in the Region or Country, and were under the Biſhop of the City and Ordained by him, and ſo were true Biſhops, but not of the Cities, had Ordination as other Biſhops had, though three Biſhops were not by the Canon required to the ordaining of ſuch, but only that one Biſhop of the City, whoſe Proxy or Vicarius the Chorepiſcopus was: Biſhops in caſes of neceſſity, ordained ſine titulo, without a title or City to which they were affixt, and for ſome time allowed to ordain Presbyters and Deacons in the Country, and to do ſome other things in the Biſhop's ſtead. 4.

All which is ſo largely ſet down in the Diſſertations, and vindicated ſo abſolutely from ſerving the Presbyterians intereſt that I muſt not for ever do the ſame thing again, tranſcribe what is there ſaid abundantly, and nothing here objected againſt it, but that what I affirm of them, makes them to be not properly Biſhops. Where if by properly Biſhops they mean Biſhops of Cities, they ſay very true, for I affirm them to be, as their title aſſures me they were, Regionary Biſhops, Vicarii and Proxies to the City Biſhop. 5.

But that they were meer Presbyters, and no more, and by their being Presbyters had the Power to Ordain other Presbyters (which alone is the Presbyterians task to make good, if they will have it uſeful to the proof of their concluſion, their * 4. Propoſition, That Presbyters, during the Prevalency of Epiſcopacy, had not only an inherent power of Ordination, but in ſome caſes did actually ordain) this they do not undertake to make good againſt the diſcourſe in the Diſſertations; And therefore I have no excuſe to make any larger reply to them. 6. * Append. p. 133.

The CONCLUSION.

I Have now gone through every part of my deſigned Method, and not omitted one intimation of theirs, wherein I could think my ſelf concerned; And that it may appear that I ſhould not have choſen this, as a ſeaſon, to begin any debate concerning a ſubject ſo forgotten in men's minds as Epiſcopacy is, I ſhall thus conclude the Readers trouble, without examining what elſe they ſay on this ſubject; having, I hope, competently ſecured my ſelf from the Opinion of having formerly attempted to ſeduce any, ſo little either to his or my own advantage.

AN

AN ANSWER TO THE ANIMADVERSIONS ON THE DISSERTATIONS TOUCHING IGNATIUS's EPISTLES, AND THE EPISCOPACY In them Asserted.

The Introduction.

I HAD thought I had concluded the Readers trouble and mine own, when I had gotten to an end of the Assemblers Exceptions, but by that time I had transmitted those debates to the Printer, and from him received one Sheet of the Impression, I found my self called out anew by a Preface (to a Book of a very distant subject, The Saints Perseverance) wherein is inserted, a Discourse touching the Epistles of Ignatius, and the Episcopacy in them asserted, and some Animadversions on Dr. H. H. his Dissertations on that subject: And this Preface (and these contents of it) lest it might be less discernable, thought fit to be expresst in the Title Page, and subscribed by John Owen, servant of Jesus Christ in the work of the Gospel. Number 1.

And although the speedy return of such tasks is not over-grateful to me, yet because 1. I conceive it is his pleasure that we should enter this commerce: And 2. because the work of the Gospel is so glorious an employment, that I cannot be averse or slow to the giving all possible satisfaction to any which professeth to labour in it: And 3. because, if the Reader so consent, this discourse may be annext to the former debates with the Provincial Assembly, being likely to be on the same heads, which are there spoken to; I shall not doubt thus speedily to undertake the labour of it; and if his Animadversions prove any way useful to me, I shall acknowledge by whom I have profited, retract most readily what he shall give me cause to retract, and never multiply any debates, which may be thus more compendiously ended, being confident that no miscarriage of mine (of which yet I am not conscious to have committed any in the Book of Dissert.) will be able to prejudice the main truth which is there defended, the Institution of Bishops by the Apostles. 2.

CHAP. I.

Of the Apoſtolical Canons.

SECT. I.

The Controverſie about them. The Codex Canonum. What is meant by Apocryphal, and ſo by Genuine Canons. The two miſtakes of the Prefacer, which produceth his Animadverſion. What is meant by the title, Apoſtolical Canons. The Prefacers ungrounded ſuggeſtion againſt the writings of the firſt times.

1. TO ſet out then, with all ſpeed that may be, on this new Stage, not knowing of what length it may prove, the firſt Animadverſion I find my ſelf concern'd in, is in * theſe words.

* Præf. p.6.

"The firſt Writings that are impoſed on us after the Canonical Scriptures, are the eight Books of "Clement, commonly called, The Apoſtles Conſtitutions, being pretended to be written by him "at their appointment, with the Canons aſcribed to the ſame perſons. Theſe we ſhall but ſalute; "for beſides that they are but faintly defended by any of the Papiſts, diſavowed and diſclaimed as "Apocryphal by the moſt learned of them, as Bellarmine de Script. Eccleſ. in Clem. who approves "only of fifty Canons of eighty five. Baronius, An. Dom. 102. 14. who adds thirty more, and Bi-"nius with a little inlargement of Canons in Tit. Can. T. 1. Con. p. 17. and have been throughly "diſproved and decried by all Proteſtant writers that have had any occaſion to deal with them; "their folly, and falſity, their impoſtures and triflings have of late been ſo fully manifeſted by Dal-"laus de Pſeudepigraphis Apoſt. that nothing need be added thereunto. Of him may Dr. H. H. learn "the truth of that inſinuation of his, Diſſert. 2. c. 6. ſect. 3. Canone Apoſtolico ſecundo (ſemper inter "genninos habito) but of the confidence of this Author in his aſſertions afterward.

2. I am not here much ſurpriſed 1. with this charge of untruth; and 2. this promiſe, that my confidence in aſſerting ſhall be diſcovered, knowing that it was one of Ariſtotles inſinuations in his Elenchs, at the beginning of a Diſpute to endeavour to put the Reſpondent in paſſion, and then he might eaſily have fallacies impoſed on him, ὀργίζοντες γὰρ οὐ δύνανται φυλάττεσθαι τὰ πάντα. If this were his deſign, I have more reaſons than that one, to hope his pardon, if I do not thus gratifie him. And although there be not one word ſaid in this place, to prove either of theſe charges, but I am appointed to learn one from Mr. Daillé, whoſe book I have not been ſo curious as to ſee, and to expect the other afterwards from the Prefacer; yet being concerned to know that veracity and humility are my duties, as I am a Chriſtian, and that I ought not to live one minute under the ſcandal of having offended againſt either of them, and having yet no motive to retract that expreſſion in the Diſſert. I am obliged to render an account of my uſing it. And it is this.

3. In the ſecond Canon of the Council in Trullo, Ann. 681. I find a conciliary confirmation of eighty five Canons under the title of Τῶν ἁγίων καὶ ἐνδόξων Ἀποστόλων, the Canons of the holy and honourable Apoſtles before us. And what was there confirmed, is farther ratified by the ſecond Council of Nice, Ann. 787. which cites the 53*d.* of thoſe Canons. And this I take for a teſtimony of the Eaſtern Churches reception of that number of 85. Apoſtolical Canons at that time. Whereas in the Weſtern Churches, both before, and after this time, although the Canons of the Apoſtles were by the Eaſtern communicated to them, yet that number was not received, but in a Council of ſeventy Biſhops at Rome, under Pope Gelaſius, ſomewhat before 500. years after CHRIST, the Book of the Apoſtles Canons, was defined to be Apocryphal. By Apocryphal here, I conceive to be meant ſuch as are not obligatory, which are not ſo owned, or received by the Church, as to be entered into their Codex, ordinarily known by the name of Corpus Canonum, Συνοδικῶν Κανόνων ἄθροισμα, in * Photius his ſtile, The body of Synodical Canons, their ‖ τάξις νόμιμος in Juſtinian; their Rule of Diſcipline, in like manner as the Books of Canonical Scripture (to which * Juſtinian added the δόγματα, or definitions of the four firſt General Councils) made up their Rule of Doctrines: That there was ſuch a Codex, we find in the fourth General Council (that of Chalcedon) when the Book of Canons, as well as the Bible, was ſolemnly brought in at the opening of the Council, and ‖ call'd for to be read before them as occaſion required. And 'tis ſufficiently known what Juſtellus obſerves, That the Chriſtian Church was ruled of old by a double Law, Divine, the Books of the Canonical Scripture, and Canonical, the Codex of Canons: And thoſe Canons that were not received into that Codex, though they might hold the authority due to ancient pieces, be eſteemed worthy the reading and obſerving, were yet ſtiled Apocryphal, i. e. uſeful, though not obligatory, reverenced for their Antiquity, but not allowed the power, or title of Laws, as the body of the Canons is known to be, ὡς νόμοις φυλάττομεν, we obſerve them as Laws, ſaith Juſtinian, and they are thence called Nomocanon, and Canon Law.

4. That this is the meaning of the word Apocryphal, I ſhall conclude from the ſtory of the fact; for ſoon after this ſentence of that Council of Rome, within very few years, we know that they were ſet up and received in that very place, where they had been thus lookt on as Apocryphal: For Dionyſius Exiguus about the year 527. made a collection of Canons, ex Græcis exemplaribus Canones Eccleſiaſticos --- compoſuit, quos hujus uſu celeberrimo Eccleſia Romana complectitur, out of the Greek copies he compoſed Eccleſiaſtical Canons, which at this day the Church of Rome embraceth, and uſeth moſt honourably, as Caſſiodore his contemporary and conſort ſaith of him, Divin. Lect. c. 23. In this collection he ſet fifty of theſe in the front, under the title of Apoſtolical Canons, prefacing this concerning them, In principio Canones qui dicuntur Apoſtolorum de Græco tranſtulimus, quibus quia plurimi conſenſum non præbuere facilem, hoc ipſum ignorare veſtram noluimus ſanctitatem, quamvis poſtea quædam conſtituta Pontificum ex ipſis Canonibus aſſumpta eſſe videantur: In the beginning we have tranſlated out of Greek the Canons, which are ſaid to be the Apoſtles, to which becauſe very many have been hard to give aſſent, we have thought fit to mention ſo much to you, though afterwards ſome conſtitutions of Biſhops ſeem to have been taken out of theſe very Canons. Here it is evident, 1. that what was a few years ſince lookt on as Apocryphal, is within a while received into their Codex, celeberrimo uſu, ſaid Caſſiodore at that very time. And 2. whilſt it was not in the Codex, yet Conſtitutions of the Biſhops were taken out of them, which argues to me, that they were not ſo rejected, as to be diſliked, but only ſo, as not to be obligatory, any farther than as ſome new Decrees of the Church ſhould give them their authority. So again in Iſidore Mercator's Collection, he prefaceth thus, Propter eorum authoritatem cæteris conciliis præpoſuimus Canones, qui dicuntur Apoſtolorum, licèt à quibuſdam Apocrypha dicantur, quoniam plures eos recipiunt, & ſancti Patres eorum ſententias Synodali authoritate roboraverunt, & inter Canonicas poſuerunt conſtitutiones. In reſpect of their authority we have before the reſt of the Councils firſt ſet down the Canons of the Apoſtles, ſo called, though by ſome they are ſaid to be Apocryphal, becauſe more receive them, and the holy Fathers have confirmed them by authority of Council, and placed them among Canonical Conſtitutions. Where the oppoſition is clear, betwixt Apocryphal on one ſide, and confirmed by Councils, and placed among Canonical Conſtitutions on the other ſide.

5. One thing only I can foreſee to be by Mr. Daillé or any man objected againſt this, viz. the Cenſure that * Iſidore Hiſpalenſis hath paſt upon the Apoſtolick Canons, in theſe words (which I ſee are thought by ſome learned men to refer to that Council at Rome under Gelaſius, but whether by Mr. Daillé, I know not) Eadem nec ſedes Apoſtolica recepit, nec ſancti patres illis aſſenſum præbuerunt, pro eo quod ab hæreticis ſub nomine Apoſtolorum compoſiti dignoſcuntur: The Apoſtolick See received them not, and the holy Fathers have not allowed them their aſſent, becauſe they are diſcerned to be framed by hereticks under the name of the Apoſtles. Here I ſhall offer my conjecture (and ſubmit it to better judgments) that Iſidore ſpeaks not of the firſt fifty Canons, which were certainly before his time (who was a member of the Council of Toledo in Spain, Ann. 633.) received into the Roman Codex, as hath already appeared; nor conſequently, refers to the Synod under Gelaſius (which, upon other reaſons I acknowledge, ſpake even of thoſe fifty) but of the whole number of 85. for in thoſe latter 35. it is, and not in the firſt fifty, that the Apoſtles are pretended to be the Authors of them, viz. Can. 82. where they call Philemon's ſervant ὁ ἡμέτερος Ὀνήσιμος, our Oneſimus, and Can. 85. Πράξεις ἡμῶν τῶν Ἀποστόλων, the Acts, or Canons of us the Apoſtles, whereas no ſuch thing is ſo much as intimated in the firſt fifty: For as for thoſe words in the fiftieth Canon which refer to the Apoſtles, Καλὰ τῷ Κυρίῳ γνώμην, καὶ τὴν ἡμετέραν ἐν πνεύματι τὴν διάταξιν, according to the ſentence of Chriſt, and our conſtitution by the ſpirit, 'tis evident that they are in Turrian's Edition, inſerted, and added to that Canon, after the words, with which Dionyſius Exiguus his old collection and tranſlation ended. And ſo in the former part of the Canon [ὃ γὰρ εἶπεν ἡμῖν, for he ſaid not unto us] (as if the Writers were the Apoſtles) 'tis certain that the [ἡμῖν to us] is inſerted: And accordingly in Balſamon's Text and Comment, which I have before me, the Canon is intire without either of thoſe inſertions. To all which I may add, that the matter of all thoſe firſt fifty Canons, and the very form of words, is ſuch, as gives not the leaſt occaſion to think them compoſed by hereticks (certainly not put under the Apoſtles names by thoſe hereticks) as Iſidore affirms of thoſe of which he ſpeaks.

6. This is to my underſtanding the meaning of the Controverſie concerning the number and authority of theſe Canons, which were to be accounted Apocryphal, and which not, and ſo likewiſe which Genuine, and which not, and to this Controverſie it is, that my inſinuation and my words refer, and the ſecond Canon being one of thoſe former 50. which though they have been counted Apocryphal in one ſence, were yet Genuine in another, i. e. none of the latter addition of 35. which are called by learned men novitii and adulterate, I thought I had reaſon (and cannot but ſtill think it) to ſay that that ſecond Canon was ſemper inter genuinos habitus, always accounted genuine, i. e. received and acknowledged among the Canons of the Ancient Church by thoſe who controverted, and rejected the other 35.

7. Thus much may perhaps ſuffice to remove the two miſtakes, which by ſome indications I conceive to have produced this Animadverſion: For 1. when in the words immediately precedent, he ſaith, they are diſavowed and diſclaimed by the moſt learned Papiſts as Apocryphal, this I ſuppoſe muſt be his meaning, either that by that Synod at Rome under Pope Gelaſius, they were defined to be Apocryphal (and then as there is truth in that, ſo I may be permitted to have told him what I conceive meant by Apocryphal in that place, thoſe that were not yet received into their Codex) or elſe that the reſt beſides the firſt 50. are diſclaimed by the moſt learned Papiſts, ſo I learn from my Lord Primate, that they are by Humbert in his Anſwer to Nicetas, Sancti Patres Canones Apoſtolorum numeraverunt inter Apocrypha, exceptis capitulis quinquaginta, quæ decreverunt regulis Orthodoxiæ adjungenda. The Holy Fathers have numbred the Canons of the Apoſtles among Apocryphal writings, except only fifty Canons, which they have decreed to be annext to the rules of the true doctrine, i. e. to the Book of Canons received by them: (Where again, by the way, the notion of Apocryphal is evident, as oppoſed to thoſe which are received into the Codex, Regulis Orthodoxiæ adjungenda) And ſo by Bellarmine, whom he names in the front of thoſe moſt learned Papiſts, and of him ſaith expreſſly and truly, that he approves only of 50. Canons of 85. (de ſcript. Eccleſ. in Clem.) And then again, I have now minded him of that which was before evident, that the ſecond Canon, which was cited by me, was one of thoſe fifty, and ſo not diſproved by that learned Papiſt. As for the other two, Baronius and Binius, whom he names to the ſame purpoſe as thoſe who have diſavowed and diſclaimed them as Apocryphal, I ſhall not accuſe his confidence, but muſt think he was in ſome haſte, that he could do ſo, Baronius being by him acknowledged to add 30. more, and Binius to have made a little inlargement of Canons, which ſure doth not intimate that they diſavowed or diſclaimed the fifty.

8. So when he ſaith of them, that they are faintly defended by any of the Papiſts, I ſhall deſire to know among many others, Bovius, Lamb. Gruterus, Stapleton, Haloander, &c.) what he thinks of Turrian, whether he were a Papiſt or no, and whether he were a faint defender of them; nay, whether Monſieur Daillé take no notice of his zeal for them? If he do not, I ſhall very much wonder at it: If he do, I ſhall have the more reaſon for my queſtion, how he that ſends me to be taught by Mr. Daillé, had not learned ſo much from him, that there was ſome Papiſt, by whom they were not faintly defended? So again when he ſaith that they have been throughly diſproved and decried by all Proteſtant writers that have had any occaſion to deal with them, I might certainly mind him of more Proteſtants than one that have been far from decrying them. I ſhall not mention, as I might, the ſeveral Biſhops of our Church, ſince the Reformation, and our Divines in their writings, that make their Appeals to them frequently, and with as pompous forms of citations, as I have done [ſemper inter genuinos habito] I ſhall not add the learned Hugo Grotius, becauſe I know not whether any, or all of theſe may not be deemed by him to be no Proteſtants. Only what doth he think of Frigevillæus Gautius? He certainly Anno 1593. in his ſecond part of his Palma Chriſtiana (dedicated to Queen Elizabeth) c. 1. & 2. was far from diſavowing, and decrying thoſe Canons: How little ſhort he came of Turrian himſelf, I ſhall not now tell him, leſt he be diſavowed as no Proteſtant, for ſo doing, but leave him at his leiſure to inquire, whether one ſuch example might not have taken off from the generality of the affirmation [decried by all Proteſtants] or indeed whether D. Blondel's vouching them in the manner which I ſhall by and by ſet down, might not have had ſome force in it, if he had taken notice of ſuch things. But all this by the way, as an Eſſay, that ſome other men, as well as H. H. may be confident in aſſerting.

9. Secondly, When immediately after his Animadverſion on my words, he mentions his Exceptions to the Books of Apoſtolical Conſtitutions and Canons taken out of Daillé, and the learned Uſher, 'tis apparent that theſe all belong to the Books under Clement's name, called the Apoſtles Conſtitutions: But then it muſt be remembred, that that Book of Διαλάξεις, or Conſtitutions is another thing, clearly diſtinct from the Book called the Apoſtles Canons, and there is but one way imaginable to involve the latter under the cenſure that belongs juſtly to the former, and it is this, That in ſome Copies the Conſtitutions and Canons are put together into one Volume (and that in * Photius his time) and that in the end of the Canons, there is a ſolemn confirmation of the Conſtitutions. But then it muſt be remembred again, that theſe are later Copies, which ſo confound them, and I take not them to be genuine, and that Canon is the eighty fifth of that Book, and ſo no part of the firſt fifty, which I ſuppoſe to be the only genuine Canons, and conſequently that none of the ridiculous things in the Conſtitutions, is imputable to that former Collection, but indeed, on the contrary, that one expreſſion in that eighty fifth Canon, which preſcribes the keeping them ‖ cloſe, becauſe of ſome myſterious paſſages in them, is juſtly thought by learned men to betray them both (the latter 35 Canons, and the Conſtitutions ſo magnified by them) to be of a much later Edition, than that which they pretend to.

* Ἐν ᾧ (i. e. in the volume of Clements Conſtitutions) οἱ διὰ Ἀποστόλων κάνονες παρείσφρυσαν. Numb. 112.

10. And thus I hope I have vindicated my ſelf, and given the grounds of my Aſſertion; And for the confidence, I did not, I confeſs, expect to be charged with any immoderate degree of it from any, nor do I yet diſcern how thoſe few words in the Parentheſis (ſemper inter genuinos habito) could be deem'd ſo criminouſly guilty of it, or that he that undertook to be my Monitor, having in ſo ſhort a time proved ſo much more guilty of it, ſhould in any reaſon think himſelf the moſt competent for that office.

11. To help him to any appearance of reaſon, and ſo to qualifie him thus to charge me, ſome want of obſervation of vulgar ſtile muſt be neceſſary, either in not adverting what is ordinarily meant by their title of Apoſtolick Canons, or ſome other the like. That he takes the meaning of that title to be their pretenſion to be written by the Apoſtles, or by Clement at their appointment, I conclude from the words with which he begins that Paragraph [The firſt writings, that are impoſed on us after the Canonical Scriptures, are the eight Books of Clement, commonly called the Apoſtles Conſtitutions, being pretended to be written by him at their appointment, with the Canons aſcribed to the ſame perſons] and if according to this his notion, he conceive me by the word genuine to affirm that they are rightly ſo aſcribed, he is miſtaken.

12. That thoſe Canons, whether to the number of 85. or but of 50. were written by the Apoſtles, I never meant; but neither is that the meaning of thoſe that cite them, and call them as I have done, by the vulgar name of Apoſtolick Canons: If there be any doubt of this, I ſhall prove it by competent teſtimonies, whether among Papiſts or Proteſtants. Of the former, inſtead of many, I inſtance only in that account, which Gabriel Albiſpine in his Obſervations rendreth of it, that ſome of theſe Canons (the fifty he means) being made by the Succeſſors of the Apoſtles (the Biſhops of the Ancient Church) who were called (ſaith Tertullian de Præſcript.) Apoſtolici viri, Apoſtolical men, Apoſtolicorum primum Canones, dein nonnullorum Latinorum ignorantia, aliquot literarum detractione, Apoſtolorum dicti ſunt, They were firſt call'd the Canons of the Apoſtolicks, after by the ignorance of ſome Latin Writers, and by the taking away of a few Letters, they were called the Canons of the Apoſtles.

Lib. 1.

13. Among Proteſtants I might inſtance in the Archbiſhop of Armagh, here cited under the name of the learned Uſher, who by ſtiling the fifty, Veteres Canones Eccleſiaſticos ob antiquitatem Apoſtolicos dictos, The old Eccleſiaſtical Canons for their Antiquity ſtiled Apoſtolical, and diſtinguiſhing them from the thirty five nova Capitula & novitii Canones, new Chapters, and novice Canons, clearly juſtifies all that I have ſaid: But I have no reaſon to go any farther than Da. Blondel himſelf, with whom I had then to do, and I am ſure 'tis ordinary with him to cite theſe Canons under the title of Apoſtolick, and ſo to yield them their authority (yet I ſuppoſe, is not thought by his Colleague Mr. Daillé, to have made the Apoſtles themſelves the Authors of them) you may ſee it twice together in two lines, Apol. pro ſent. Hieron. pag. 96. Anno Dom. 363. Laodicæno Canone 56. ſecundum Apoſtolicum 38. cautum fuit, Care was taken by the Council of Laodicæa, Can. 56. according to the 38. Apoſtolical Canon, calling it firſt an Apoſtolick Canon, and then affirming it the rule by which the Laodicæan Canon was made, and ſo clearly giving it a greater Antiquity than that Council: And immediately again, Apoſtolico 33. (longè antequam Ancyræ conveniret Synodus) in the 33. Apoſtolick Canon, long before the Synod met at Ancyra, which we know was in the year 314. and what was acknowledged to be long before that, muſt be of a pretty antiquity, although it were not written by the Apoſtles.

'Tis

'Tis true indeed some have thought fit to use greater exactness of speech, as the Council of Paris, Anno 580. calling them * Canones quasi Apostolicos, the Canons as it were Apostolick; and Dionysius Exiguus, and Isidorus Mercator, Canones qui dicuntur Apostolicorum, the Canons said to be the Apostles: And Hincmarus Rhemensis saith, they were A primis temporibus traditione viritim Apostolicorum virorum, mentibus commendati; From the first times by tradition of Apostolical persons commended to the minds of men, from man to man, and a devotis quibusque collecti, collected by all devout men. See Concil. Gallic. l. 2. p. 473, 474. And as for those which pretend the whole 85. as well as the Constitutions to have been penn'd by Clemens, there is little doubt but they did, by so doing, endeavour to impose false ware upon the Church; but still this prejudgeth not my affirmation of the former fifty, that they were always accounted genuine. Not meaning thereby that they were written by the Apostles, or at their appointment by Clemens (I say not a word, that so much as insinuates either of those to be my sence, and I can justly affirm it was not) but genuine, i. e. truly, and without contradiction (as γνησίως and ἀναμφιςόλως are taken for Synonyma's in this matter) what they were by the Church generally taken to be, i. e. Canons of ancient Bishops (before the times of the General Councils) of Apostolical persons, successors of the Apostles, in Churches, where they presided, called Apostolical Churches. 14. * Gregor. Turonens. Hist. Fran. lib. 5. c. 18.

I add no more of a matter so clear; yet before I proceed, I shall desire the Author of this Animadversion, to consider how unjustly his Censure hath fallen (in the page immediately precedent) on the Writings of the first times, immediately after the Apostles fell asleep. His words are these, I must be forced to preface the nomination of them (the first Writers) with some consideration: The first is that known passage of Hegesippus in Euseb. Eccl. Hist. l. 26. Ὡς ἄρα μεχρὶ τ τότε χρόνων παρθένω καθαρὰ κ ἀδιάφθορ ἔμεινεν ἡ ἐκκλησία, ὡς δὲ ὁ ἱερ Ἀποςόλων χόρ διάφορον εἴληφε τὸ βίᾳ τέλ, παρειληλύθεισ ἡ γενεὰ ἐκείνη τ αὐταῖς ἀκοαῖς τ ἔνθεν σοφίας ἐπακῦσαι κατηξιωμένων, τ ἀθέω πλάνης τ ἀρχὴν ἐλάμβανεν ἡ σύςασις, διὰ τ τ ἑτεροδιδασκάλων ἀπάτης, οἱ κ ἄτε μηδένω ἔτι τ Ἀποςόλων λειπομένω, γυμνῇ λοιπὸν ἤδη τῇ κεφαλῇ τῷ τ ἀληθείας κηρύγματι τ Ψευδώνυμον γνῶσιν ἀντικηρύττειν ἐπεχείρουν. Setting out the corruption of the Church as to Doctrine, immediately after the Apostles fell asleep, whereof whosoever will impartially, and with disengaged judgments search into the writings that of those days do remain, will perhaps find more cause than is commonly imagined with him to complain. 15.

Here is a sad jealousie raised against all Antiquity, even of the purest times next the Apostles, and indefinitely without any limitation, on the writings of those days that remain, τὰ σωζόμενα, i.e. all that are extant, in one common mass, and yet (besides that one saying of Hegesippus) no one word added to found it on (but only dubious, suspicious expressions [will perhaps find more cause than is commonly imagined] to warn all how they give any trust to the purest Antiquity. Whereas all that Hegesippus there saith, is only this (which they that pay most reverence to Antiquity, take as much notice of as he could wish) viz. that the poison of the Heretical, or Apostatical, or Atheistical Gnosticks, in express words, the Ψευδώνυμ γνῶσις, the Sect of the Gnosticks, falsely so called (the same that had been mentioned by S. Paul to Timothy) and ἀθε πλάνη, the Atheistical seducers did openly set up against the truth of Christ, as soon as ever the Apostles were dead. Which being by Hegesippus terminated in the known despisers and persecuters of the true Church and Orthodox professors, the grievous Wolves that worried the flock, and those constantly resisted, and combated with, preacht against, and written against by the Fathers and ancient Writers, and never observ'd by any man to have gain'd on them, or infused any the least degree of their poison into them, or their Writings, which are come to us (which to undertake to make good against any opposer, is no high pitch of confidence, again to be censured in me) It is a sad condition that the just and the unjust, the false Teachers and the Orthodox Professors should fall under the same envy, be involved under the same black censure, those that watched over the flock as Shepherds, and oft laid down their lives for the Sheep, be again defamed and martyred by us their unkind posterity, under pretence, forsooth, that they were in the Conspiracy of the Wolves also. I leave this to his, and the Readers consideration, and so proceed to the next charge. 16.

CHAP. II.

Of Ignatius's Epistles.

SECT. I.

The comparison betwixt them and the Epistles of Clement, and Polycarp. Of Salmasius and Blondel being the first that rejected them. Of the Vir doctissimus, answered by Vedelius. Of Bishop Mountague's censure of Vedelius. Εἰς Κενότηλα ἐλπίδ: Of Salmasius's Contumely, Title of Learned Grammarian. Illecebræ. THE next charge I find in the eighth page of this Preface, in these words. 1.

"A late learned Doctor in his Dissertations about Episcopacy, or Dispute for it against Sal-
"masius and Blondellus, tells us, that we may take a taste of his confidence in asserting, Dissert. 2. cap. 23. 1. That Salmasius and Blondellus, mortalium omnium primi, thought these Epistles to be feigned

"natius were always of the same esteem with that of Clemens from Rome to the Corinthians, or that of "Polycarpus to the Philippians, which we have in Eusebius, and then he adds, in the judgment of Sal-
"masius and Blondellus, Solus Ignatius ὀλίγεται, cujus tamen Epistola pari semper cum illis per universam

" cauſæ hyperaſpiſtæ in ſeipſos recipiſſent. Of his two learned Antagoniſts one is dead, and the other
" almoſt blind, or probably they would have dealt not much more gently with the Doctor for his " Parentheſis (quibus illecebris adducti neſcio) than one of them formerly did (Salmaſius de ſubſcriben-

" jus convicium, quod ei diceret, invenire, quam ſi Grammaticum appellaret) for his terming him a " Grammarian, yet indeed of him (ſuch was the hard entertainment he found on all hands) it was
" by many ſuppoſed that he was illecebris adductus (and they ſtick not to name the bait he was caught " withal) wrought over in a manner to deſtroy the faith of that which he had before ſet up and eſta-
" bliſhed.

" For the thing it ſelf affirmed by the Doctor, I cannot enough admire with what oſcitancy or con" tempt he conſiders his Readers (of which manner of proceeding this is far from being the only in" ſtance) that he ſhould confidently impoſe ſuch things upon them. He that hath written ſo much
" about Ignatius, and doth ſo triumph in his authority, ought doubtleſs to have conſidered theſe
" concernments of his Author, which are obvious to every ordinary Inquirer: Vedelius his Edition " of Ignatius at Geneva came forth with his Notes in the year 1623. long before either Salmaſius or " Blondellus had written any thing about the ſuppoſititiouſneſs of theſe Epiſtles; in the Apology of " Ignatius whereto prefixed, he is forced to labour and ſweat in the Anſwer of one, whom he deſer-
" vedly ſtiles virum Doctiſſimum; (arguing not contemptibly) that Ignatius never wrote any ſuch
" Epiſtles, and that all thoſe which were carried about in his name, were falſe and counterfeit.

" But perhaps the Doctor had taken caution of one of the Fathers of his Church, that à Genevenſi- " bus iſtis Typographis præter fraudes & fucos & præſtigias non eſt quod quicquam expectemus (Montac.
" Appar. l. 5. ſect. 46. p. 19.) and ſo thought not fit to look into any thing that comes from them.

" Eſpecially may this be ſuppoſed to have ſome influence upon him, conſidering the gentle cenſure " added in the next words by that Reverend Father of his Church, concerning the endeavour of Vede-
" lius, in his Notes on that Edition. Neque audax ille & importunus Ignatii Cenſor quicquam attulit
" ad paginas ſuas implendas præter inſcitiam, & incuriam & impudentiam ſingularem (ne ſævi magne ſa-
" cerdos) dum ad ſuum Genevatiſmum antiquitatem detorquet invitiſſimam, non antem, quod opportuit,
" Calviniſmum amuſſitat ad antiquitatem. And what I pray you is the reaſon of his Epiſcopal cen-
" ſure? That he ſhould deal with poor Vedelius in that language wherewith men of his order and au" thority were wont to deal with preaching Miniſters at their Viſitations? why this poor man in that " paſſage which you have in the Epiſtle to the Magneſians (in that Edition p. 56.) where treating of " the Ancient Fathers expectations of the coming of Chriſt, retains the common reading of εἰς κενότη-" τα ἐλπίδος ἦλθον, referring the word to their expectation of ſeeing him come in the fleſh, which " upon the teſtimony of our Saviour himſelf, they deſired to ſee, and ſaw it not, not correcting it by " a change of κενότητα into κοινότητα ἐλπίδος, ſo referring it to their faith in Chriſt, and ſalvation by " him, as in his judgment he ought to have done. Ἰδοὺ ὀλίγον πῦρ μέγιστον ὕλην ἀνάπτει, A little thing " would provoke the indignation of a Prelate againſt any thing that came from Geneva.

" I ſay I would ſuppoſe that this might divert our Doctor from caſting his eye upon Vedelius, " whoſe defenſative would have informed him that theſe Epiſtles had been oppoſed as falſe and coun" terfeit, before ever Salmaſius or Blondellus had taken them into conſideration; but that I finding " him ſometimes inſiſting on that Geneva Edition.

" For whereas Cap. 2. Sect. 2. he tells you that he intends to abide only upon the Edition of Iſaac
" Voſſius in Greek, publiſhed from the Archives of the Library of Laurence di Medices, and the La-
" tine Edition publiſhed by Biſhop Uſher out of our Library here at Oxford, yet cap. 8. being preſſed
" with the teſtimony of the writers of the Epiſtle to the Magneſians, calling Epiſcopacy νεωτερικὴν
" τάξιν plainly intimating a comparative Novelty in that order to others in the Churches, and fear" ing (as well he might) that his tranſlation of νεωτερικὴ τάξις into the ordination of a young man, " would ſcarce be received by the men of his own prejudice (for ſurely he never ſuppoſed that he
" ſhould impoſe on any other, by ſuch groſs figments) he prefers the Vedelian Edition (where theſe
" words are not ſo uſed) before it, and informs us, that ſic legendum (as it is in the Geneva Edition)
" ſuadet tota Epiſtolæ ſeries. Now this truly is marvellous to me (if the Doctor conſulteth Authors " any farther, than meerly to ſerve his preſent turn) how he could ever adviſe with that Edition of " Vedelius, and yet ſo confidently affirm, that Salmaſius and Blondellus were the firſt that rejected
" theſe Epiſtles as feigned and counterfeit.

2. The ſumm of this charge is, 1. that I would make men believe that Ignatius his Epiſtles were always of the ſame eſteem with that of Clement, and of Polycarp. 2. That I ſay that Salmaſius and Blondel were the firſt that thought theſe Epiſtles (of Ignatius) to be feigned and counterfeit. 3. That this is in me a confidence in aſſerting, an admirable piece of oſcitancy and contempt of the Reader, confidently to impoſe upon him, and all this againſt expreſs evidence; when 4. long before either of theſe, Vedelius was fain to anſwer a vir doctiſſimus, arguing that Ignatius never wrote ſuch Epiſtles; and this the more to be admired, becauſe 5. it appears that I had adviſed with that Edition of Vedelius, where thoſe arguments are propounded, and anſwered, and yet ſay that Salmaſius and Blondel were the firſt that rejected theſe Epiſtles. To theſe five branches of the original and grand charge are added incidentally theſe other paſſages. 1. That if Salmaſius were not dead, and Blondel almoſt blind, they would probably have called me knave for uſing this Parentheſis (quibus illecebris adducti neſcio, I know not by what invitations they were brought to do what they did) adding of the former, that indeed it is by many ſuppoſed that he was illecebris adductus. 2. That Biſhop Montacute inveighs bitterly bitterly againſt the Geneva Writers, and particularly againſt Vedelius his Cenſures on Ignatius.

3. That my interpretation of Νεωτερικὴ τάξις, by the ordination of a young man, is a groſs figment.
4. That it is doubtful whether I do conſult Authors any farther than is for my own turn.

To theſe particulars, which will ſoon be found to be of no very weighty importance, yet ſuch as they are, I ſhall punctually make my reply. 3.

For the firſt, I ſhall not need labour for proofs to balance the eſtimation of Ignatius's Epiſtles, either with that of Clemens, or Polycarp: For, beſide that here is not a word objected againſt it, nor ſo much as the ordinary charge of confident aſſerting affixed to this part of my ſpeech, but my words are barely repeated without any exception to them; The thing may be manifeſt to any that ſhall, for Clemens, peruſe the Teſtimonies out of ancient Writers, concerning his firſt Epiſtle, that to the Corinthians, ſet down to his hand by Mr. Patrick Yong, before his Edition of that Epiſtle, and then compare them with thoſe concerning Ignatius's Epiſtles prefixt by the Archbiſhop of Armagh to his former Edition of Ignatius, and to that, add but this one place of Euſebius, Eccl. Hiſt. l. 3. c. λζ. where ſpeaking of thoſe Writings reſerved to his time, wherein the Apoſtolick doctrine was δι' ὑπομνημάτων, by way of Records, delivered to them, he inſtanceth in Ignatius (ἐν αἷς καλελέξαμεν ἐπιστολαῖς, in the Collection of Epiſtles which he had formerly mentioned from Polycarp) and in Clement's Epiſtle, which in the name of the Church of the Romans he ſent to the Church of the Corinthians, and was ἀνομολογημένη παρὰ πᾶσιν, received and confeſt by all, which paſſage doth directly aſſert this exactneſs of parallel betwixt them two, as equal in conveying Apoſtolick Doctrine to us. 4.

To which I may add, that the prejudices our preſent volume of Ignatius's Epiſtles are under, are not greater than thoſe which lye againſt the Epiſtle of Clement, ſet forth from Tecla's Copy. I ſhall inſtance in four: 1. Among the examples of generous Chriſtian ſufferers of that Age, propoſed to be treated of (ἔλθωμεν ἐπὶ τοὺς ἔγγιστα γινομένους ἀθλήσεις, λάβωμεν τὰ γενναῖα ὑποδείγματα. Let us come to the eminent perſons which are neareſt us, let us take the generous copies of our age) immediately after Peter and Paul, and thoſe that came in to them, are mentioned Δαναΐδες καὶ Δίρκη, the Daughters of Danaus and Dirce, of whom it is ſaid, that having ſuffered ſore, or cruel contumelies, or puniſhments, they came to the conſtant courſe of Faith, and being weak in body, received a generous reward. 5. Pag. 7.

This is ſo unfit for the place wherein it is found in Tecla's copy (and we have no better, or other to mend it by) that Mr. Yong hath ſet a mark upon it, as that which he cannot allow to be genuine Clemens. 6.

Secondly, Speaking of the Sea, he hath theſe words, Ὠκεανὸς ἀνθρώποις * ἀπέρατός, καὶ οἱ μετ' αὐτὸν κόσμοι, the Ocean unbounded to men, or, which men cannot paſs over, and the worlds that are beyond it. 7. Pag. 28. * ισ. ἀπέρατος καὶ Patric. Junius.

Thirdly, Speaking of the Reſurrection, he not only offers to contemplation, the Reſurrection which every day brings us, κοιμᾶται ἡ νύξ, ἀνίσταται ἡμέρα, the night lies down to ſleep, the day riſes again; but alſo the παράδοξον σημεῖον, the wonderful ſign which is in Arabia, the Phœnix, which being μονόγενες, but one of the ſpecies, lives five hundred years, then drawing near to death, makes a neſt of Frankincenſe and Myrrh, and other Spices, and goes into it, and dies; then out of the corruption of the fleſh grows a Worm, which being fed with the moiſture of the dead creature, grows to perfection and wings, then carries the neſt where the former bird was entombed (and embalmed as it were) from Arabia to Ægypt, to Heliopolis, and in the day-time in the preſence of all men, lays it upon the Altar of the Sun, and returns again. And the Prieſts looking into their Records, and keeping exact calculation of the time, find that at the end of five hundred years this is done. And all this, ſaith he, afforded us by GOD, who δι' ἑρμέου δείκνυσιν ἡμῖν τὸ μεγαλεῖον τῆς ἐπαγγελίας αὐτοῦ, by this bird ſhews the magnificent greatneſs of his promiſe. 8. Pag. 34.

Theſe two latter are the objections of Photius himſelf * αἰτιάσαιτο δ' ἄν τις ἐν αὐταῖς, ſaith he, one may find fault with him in theſe; adding alſo another (the fourth which I propoſed to mention) that as the ſecond Epiſtle under his name (which ‖ elſewhere he ſaith ὡς νόθῳ ἀποδοκιμάζεται, is rejected as ſuppoſititious) ῥητὰ τινὰ ὡς ἀπὸ τῆς θείας γραφῆς ξενίζουσα παρεισάγει, inſerts ſome paſſages as from Scripture, which are ſtrangers to it, ſo * this firſt Epiſtle is not perfectly free in this matter. 9. * Biblioth. n. 126. ‖ N. 113. * ὧν καὶ ἡ πρώτη φαίνεται ὡσαύτως ἀπόλακτος. N. 126.

Theſe four prejudices notwithſtanding (and a fifth alſo by him mentioned) 'tis the ſame Photius his judgment, that it is ἀξιόλογος ἐπιστολή, an Epiſtle worthily eſteemed, ἥτις παρὰ πολλοῖς ἀποδοχῆς ἠξιώθη ὡς καὶ δημοσίᾳ ἀναγινώσκεσθαι, thought by many worthy of ſuch reception as to be read publickly. 10. Biblioth. n. 113.

And ſo it hath among all men generally been entertained, and Mr. Yong's Edition of it, juſtly lookt on by this Prefacer, as a genuine piece, abundantly teſtified to of old, a writing full of ancient ſimplicity, humility and zeal; and teſtimony ſolemnly fetcht from it, to prove the but two Orders in the Church, and the power of the People in Eccleſiaſtical affairs. 11.

Now, as on one ſide all theſe objections may, I ſuppoſe, have very competent Anſwers adapted to them, and I think for the firſt three, Mr. Yong's Notes may be ſufficient, that the Danaides and Dirce was an inſertion of ſome Scribe taken in from the Margent into the Text, that the Ocean was the Britiſh Sea, and the Worlds beyond it theſe Iſlands, that the Story of the Phœnix is no Fable, but vouched by very great and ancient Authors, though perhaps fabuloſis aucta (and Mr. Blondel, I hear, hath written a Diſſertation in defence of it) ſo I am to think that all the objections againſt Ignatius, as far as our Copy, which we adhere to, is concern'd, are anſwered alſo. 12.

And ſo ſtill the parallel remains compleat betwixt Clement's one Epiſtle ſet out from the King's Library, and Ignatius's ſeven ſet out from the Medicæan Greek, and our old Latin Copies. 13.

And for Polycarp and him, the compariſon will be more eaſie, by viewing the teſtimonies by the Lord Primate produced out of the Ancients concerning each of them, prefixt before the one common volume of both their Epiſtles: And indeed of them two, the advantage is clearly on Ignatius's ſide, becauſe as generally they that make mention of the one, joyn the other with him, with the ſame reverence, only giving the precedence to Ignatius (* S. Hierom ad Helvidium may ſtand for many; Can I not, ſaith he, ſummon the whole Catalogue of ancient Writers, Ignatius, Polycarp ---) So Polycarp himſelf in his Epiſtle gives his teſtimony and commendations of Ignatius and his Epiſtles, and from him it is, that originally we fetch our collection, and juſt eſteem of them. I hope I ſhall not need to add more to juſtifie my confidence in that matter. 14. * Nunquid non poſſum tibi totam veterum Scriptorum ſeriem commovere, Ignatium, Polycarpum,

15. Secondly; For my affirming that Salmaſius and Blondel were the firſt that thought theſe Epiſtles of Ignatius to be feigned and counterfeit (which is the one thing that muſt bear all the weight of my accuſation for confidence in aſſerting, confidence in impoſing upon Readers, oſcitancy, or contempt in conſidering them) my account will be ſoon given, by viewing my periods, on which this charge is laid, and they are three; two ſet down in his Text, one in his Margent: The two former are fully and truly cited by him: That in the Margent is ſet down imperfectly, and lyes thus in the Diſſert. (it ſhould be) c. 23. ſect. 3. In his quippe (Rebus in Eccleſiâ primævâ geſtis, ut an Ignatius Epiſtolas ſcripſerit) unicum D. Blondellum, aut alterum fortaſſis inter omnes mortales Walonem Meſſalinum rectius judicare, quam patres univerſos: This is to conclude, that in matters of fact done in the firſt Ages of the Church, one Blondel, or perhaps his ſecond, Salmaſius, paſs a righter judgment than all the Fathers.

16. The plain ſenſe and drift of theſe words is this, that when there was a Copy of Ignatius produced, which had in it the ſeveral ſentences, which the Fathers * (all, without exception of one) cited from Ignatius, by which it appears that thoſe Fathers univerſally gave credit to theſe Epiſtles in this form, in which D. Blondel, and Salmaſius reject them; and when this was taken notice of by Blondel as an objection againſt his diſcourſe [his ipſis Epiſtolis Patres fidem adhibuiſſe, That the Fathers gave credit to theſe very Epiſtles] and that anſwered by Blondel, with a Quid tum? Quam multa * minimè ſuſpicaces ac imparatos & ſefellerunt ſemper, & quotidie fallunt? What matter for that? How many things both have alwaies deceived, and do daily deceive perſons, that are not ſuſpicious, and upon their guard? From this anſwer of Blondels I conclude, that if he hath reaſon on his ſide in it, then the judgment of one or two Modern Writers, Blondel and Salmaſius, is to be preferred before all the * Fathers, and that in a matter of ſtory, a narration of things done in the Primitive times, wherein the Fathers lived, and from whence theſe others are ſo many hundred years diſtant.

* So Albertin, Blondels Colleague, confeſſeth in his late book de Euchariſtia, with Blondels Preface in the front of it, p. 283. where ſpeaking of Voſſius's and Biſhop Uſher's edition, he ſaith, Cum in illis loca omnia à veteribus memorata reperiantur, & fere careant aſſumentis ſupra notatis, & jam conſtare videatur eſſe eas quas vidit antiquitas, & Ignatii genuinas exiſtimavit.

* Albertin, circa medium ſecundi ſeculi compoſitæ ſunt, ac incautè & abſque examine à veteribus receptæ. De Euchar. 284.

* This is far from the Judgment of Blondel ſince diſcovered in his Preface to Albertine de Euchar. pag. penult: where are theſe words, Nemo ergo noſtrûm Patres deſeret, ne Deo, qui eos lumine ſuo perfundens, minimè deſeruit ingrati; ipſis, qui lampada nobis tradiderunt, injurii; nobiſmet ipſis, unica eorum conſanguinitate nobilitatis, infeſti videamur. Noſtra ab eorum cauſa ſejungi non poteſt; nec ſi ſejunctam velimus, impune à poſteris feremus, quibus non minus neglectui erimus, quam priores nobis.

17. This concluſion of mine, as it is moſt undeniably deduced from Blondel's words, and is, I think, a competent evidence of the unreaſonableneſs of his proceedings (for it is obvious to all men, Who are the moſt competent Judges or Witneſſes of matters of fact, ſure they which are neereſt the times, and have the moſt uniform conſent of others that ſpeak of it; not they that are but ſingular Affirmers, and at a vaſt diſtance from it:) ſo it is a full interpretation of my meaning, not that Blondel and Salmaſius were the firſt of men, which ever oppoſed any Volume of Ignatius's Epiſtles, or that thought them (I mean again, any that go under that name, or any volume of ſuch, ſet out by any) feigned or counterfeit, but that they were the firſt which rejected thoſe more emendate Copies, found upon tryal to accord with all that the Fathers cite from them, and ſo, which are by themſelves confeſt to be the very Epiſtles, which the Fathers uſed, and own'd as Ignatius's.

18. An evidence of the truth of this I ſhall produce from Blondel's own words in his Preface, p. 40. where mentioning how greedily he laid hold of the Laurentian Copy, lent him by Voſſius in Manuſcript, how he tranſcribed it with his own hand, collated it diligently with the places cited from theſe Epiſtles by the Antients (and if it were done ſtudioſè diligently, thoſe Antients muſt be, Polycarp, Irenæus, Origen, Euſebius, Athanaſius, Hierome, Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, &c.) at length he confeſſes ſe gratulatum ſeculo noſtro, quod illud ipſum exemplar quo ante 1300 annos uſus erat Euſebius, novam ipſi propediem affulſuram lucem ſponderet; That he congratulated our age, that that very Copy, which Euſebius uſed 1300 years ago, promiſed now to beſtow new light upon the Age.

19. Here it appears, that in his diſpaſſionate, impartial judgment (founded on prudent conſideration, and his having uſed the beſt means of judging) this Copy, which Blondel rejected, was the Copy that the Antients own'd, particularly Euſebius: And of his rejecting this Copy (not any other, formerly publiſhed among us) it is moſt evident that I ſpeak in all the places of the Diſſertations; and conſequently that unleſs ſome other man can now be named, which rejected this Copy (the Laurentian I mean, ſet out by Voſſius, to which the old Latine one publiſht by the Lord Primate, is anſwerable, though a barbarous tranſlation) or the Copy which Euſebius and the Fathers uſed, before Blondel and Salmaſius rejected it, I have affirmed that which is exactly the truth, and am guilty neither of confidence, nor impoſing, nor oſcitancy, nor contempt of the Reader.

20. And then, I pray, how was I concerned in the negations and arguments of the Vir doctiſſimus, which Vedelius anſwered, which muſt needs belong to the Epiſtles then extant, and carried about in Ignatius's name, and could not, by divination, be confronted to this Edition of Voſſius, or to the Laurentian, or our old Latine Manuſcripts, which may well be preſumed to have never been heard of by him, or Vedelius either, and yet are the only volume of Ignatius's Epiſtles there ſpoken of by me, and of which my affirmation proceeds. As for this vir doctiſſimus, I have now been able to conſult Vedelius, and * there I firſt find that he hath neither Name nor Book delivered to us, and that in all probability he never publiſht any word to that purpoſe. And for what hath paſt betwixt private men in more private Letters, I know not that I was obliged to take any notice, if I had remembred that Anonymus ineditus vir doctiſſimus. 2 That this unus quidem vir doctiſſimus is mentioned as the only perſon (and oppoſed to the alii, others, that expreſt their doubts and ſcruples only) which extra omne dubium ponit, affirms poſitively, and without doubting, ſuppoſitionem harum Epiſtolarum, that theſe Epiſtles were ſuppoſititious, or that Ignatius never wrote ſuch Epiſtles, whence by the way I am ſecured from the other inſtances which are by the Prefacer after brought to ſay the ſame thing which that vir doctiſſimus had done; for Vedelius was as ignorant as I, an plures ejus mentis fuerint, whether there were any more of that mind with him. Laſtly, that this vir doctiſſimus durſt ſay, that Ignatius never wrote any Epiſtles

at all, which is to me an assurance, that as learned as he was, he never knew any thing of Polycarp's collection, or of the antient Writers citations out of them (which if he had, he might as well have said, that Polycarp and the rest of those antients never wrote neither) and consequently, that his ignorance secured him from being guilty of that which I charge on Blondel and Salmasius, viz. rejecting all the Fathers with a [Quid tum?] and these Epistles in despight of all the authority which the Fathers were acknowledged to have given them. This ought to have been adverted by my Monitor, and then he might certainly have spared himself, and the Reader, and me the several gainless pains that his sharp Animadversion hath, in several kinds cost each of us.

As for his amplifications, backward and forward, on this head of discourse, that perhaps I had received caution never to look into any thing that comes from Geneva, and yet that that could not be the truth, because I had occasionally insisted on that Edition of Vedelius; though now it be far from needing reply, yet I shall be willing to oblige him, by telling him the whole truth, and making him my Confessor in this matter. That 'tis now near thirty years since, that I read over diligently that whole volume of Vedelius, with all his Exercitations annext to it, that I did it in my entrance on the study of Divinity, beginning with him as the first Ecclesiastical Writer then extant; for Clement's Epistle was by Mr. Young seven or eight years after published. This vindicates me from his jealousie, that perhaps I took caution from Bishop Montague, never to look into Book that came from Geneva. 21.

For although I began not that study so, as to fall under Bishop Abbot's censure (in the top of the tenth page produced) that Calvin had holpen me to a mouth to speak (any more than it is true of me, that I am still opening my mouth against Calvin) yet truly my first Author, used in my search of the opinions of the Antient Church, was delivered me by Vedelius from Geneva, and so from Geneva it self I first learned the three Orders of men in the Church to be of Apostolick institution, which, as far as concerns the second of them (by him and ever since call'd Presbyters) the Scripture had not taught me. 22.

If this be not enough, I next acknowledge, that when this Prefacer told me of the vir doctissimus, that Vedelius was fain to answer, I had not any such thing in memory, and though I am sure I formerly read it, because I now see it is in that Book, yet 'tis due to his Animadversions, that I had not utterly lost it: From this occasion I shall not have temptation to lose time in bemoaning my self, that my memory is so frail, both because, of the many thousand things which I have read, and heard, and utterly forgotten, this was as fit to be one, and as easie to be spared as any, and if it had been explicitely in my memory, it had been perfectly useless to me in this matter, I could not reasonably have interposed any mention of him, or added his name with any truth to those two of Blondel and Salmasius (the two men which peculiarly rejected the Laurentian (or Eusebian) Copy, Blondel having a transcript from Vossius, and Salmasius a sight of it from Blondel) and also because I see other mens memories are as frail as mine, and that in things both of present use, and fresh observation: Witness my Monitor himself, who, whilst he is a chiding, or admiring me for oscitancy, and contempt of my Reader, &c. tells me that Bishop Usher published his Latine Edition of Ignatius out of the Oxford Library; whereas that Arch-Bishop, that best knew, professes * it was from two Manuscripts, one belonging to Caius Col- * Pag. 16. ledge in Cambridge, the other to Bishop Montague! This were too mean a σφάλμα to mention, but that, besides that it is an example, that men that are the severest on others no-slips, may themselves be guilty of as great, as they judge in others; It is also a way of giving some account of that speech of Bishop Montagues, which fell so tartly on Vedelius, and is here thought fit to be brought in, in the Prefacers digression. For bating the asperity of the language, which I do as little commend in either Father, or Son of the Church, as any; the Copy which he had by him of so venerable Antiquity, might by him very reasonably be thought a more Scholarlike, and less deceivable way of correcting Ignatius's Epistles, than Vedelius's single conjectures, and prejudices, which made him, as that Bishop thought, willing to conform Antiquity to the Doctrines then received at Geneva. 23.

And this will appear yet more reasonable in the particular, which is here said to have occasioned that bitter speech of that Bishop, where, in Vedelius's reading, it is said of the Fathers of the Old Testament, that they came εἰς κενότητα ἐλπίδος, ad vacuam spem, saith Vedelius, to a frustration of their hope, but the Bishop's Latine Copy reads, in novitatem spei, to the newness of hope, evidencing the reading to be with an easie change εἰς καινότητα, to the newness, and so it is in the Laurentian Greek which is now extant. Now as again καινότητα might be an easie change for κοινότητα (which that Bishop it seems liked best) and either of those readings might well pass, either that they joyned with us Christians in the same common hope Evangelical, or came to the newness of hope, i. e. hoped for mercy on the same terms of new Evangelical obedience, on which we now hope for it, and so set on purifying as St John saith he will do, that hath this hope in him, so truly the other of [εἰς κενότητα] would hardly be kept from being blasphemy, cannot possibly be salved, as this Prefacer would salve it, by referring it to their expectation of Christs coming in the flesh, which, saith he, upon the testimony of our Saviour himself, they desired to see, and saw it not. But 1. I pray where doth our Saviour testifie this, that they desired to see it, and saw it not? I suppose in those words of Luk. 10. 24. For I tell you that many Prophets and Kings have desired to see those things which you see, and have not seen them. But will this justifie or maintain the κενότητα ἐλπίδος, the frustration of their hope, or at all prove, that they had such hope of seeing Christ come in the flesh? Men may desire that which they do not hope; the goodness of the thing once apprehended, is enough to raise desire, but hope must be founded in some promise, or else it is but either wish, on one side, or on the other, presumption. 24.

But then secondly, to justifie Vedelius in his retaining of κενότητα there is more necessary, viz to consider the Context as it lyes in the Epistle published by him, and then the whole passage will be found to be this, Εἰ οὖν οἱ παλαιοῖς γράμμασιν ἀναστρεφόμενοι εἰς κενότητα ἐλπίδος ἦλθον, ἐκδεχόμενοι Χριστὸν, (ὡς ὁ Κύριος διδάσκει λέγων, εἰ ἐπιστεύετε Μωσεῖ, ἐπιστεύσατε ἂν ἐμοὶ, περὶ γὰρ ἐμοῦ ἐκεῖνος ἔγραψε. καὶ Ἀβραὰμ ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ἠγαλλιάσατο ἵνα ἴδῃ τὴν ἡμέραν τὴν ἐμὴν, καὶ εἶδεν καὶ ἐχάρη. πρὶν γὰρ Ἀβραὰμ γενέσθαι ἐγὼ εἰμι--) πῶς ἡμεῖς--- If therefore they who conversed in the antient writings came to a frustration of hope, expecting Christ (as the Lord teacheth, saying If ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me; for he wrote of me: and Abraham your Father was exceeding glad that he might see my day, and he saw it and rejoyced; for before Abraham was I am) how shall we--- By this Context 'tis now evident, 1. how impossible it is, that the Vedelian 25.

reading of κενότηλα can ſtand; for Abraham, who is the inſtance, did not miſs of his hope; what he hoped for, he obtained, he had promiſe that he ſhould ſee Chriſt's day, viz. ſee it ἐν πνεύματι, in the ſpirit, not carnally in the fleſh, ſee it in deſtinatione divinâ, in God's deſtination; And that promiſe ἵνα ἴδῃ, that he ſhould ſee it, put him in an ἀγαλλίασις, an exultation of joy, and neither hope nor joy were fruſtrated; for it follows, he ſaw, and was glad. Secondly; how ſeaſonably the teſtimony of Chriſt was here produced by this Prefacer, in theſe words of his [referring to their expectation of Chriſts coming in the fleſh, which, upon the teſtimony of our Saviour himſelf, they deſired to ſee, and ſaw it not] I demand, Doth the Vedelian Edition ſo refer to any ſuch teſtimony of Chriſt, which ends with [ſaw it not?] doth it not quite contrariwiſe produce the teſtimony of Chriſt concerning Abraham, affirming of him that [he ſaw it?] which is competently diſtant from the Prefacers Text of, they ſaw it not. Again, are not theſe words of our Saviour concerning Abraham's ſeeing (in ſpirit) and ſatisfying himſelf, and rejoycing at that ſight, perfectly agreeable to the general purport of the Goſpel? Is it not in the Doctrine thereof frequently expreſt, that Chriſt was known by the Fathers of the former ages, by the title of [ἐρχόμενος, he that was to come] and that till the fulneſs of time was come, though they did (as the Vedelian Copy adds) ἐκδέχεσθαι Χριστὸν, expect to ſee Chriſt, yet not ſo as to ſee him come in the fleſh, but lived by Faith, as Abraham ſojourned, aſſuring themſelves, that he would be really exhibited to their poſterity, being for themſelves content to ſee him ἐν πνεύματι, in the ſpirit, and by no other eye but that of Faith? And then, can it be ſaid, that they were fruſtrated in their hope? that what they hoped, they received not; or hoped for that, which they did not receive? Simeon indeed had it revealed to him, that he ſhould not ſee death before he had ſeen the Lord's Chriſt, Luk. 2. 26. but this was about the time of the deſigned exhibition of him, and accordingly he did ſee him, and embraced him, and was not fruſtrated of his hope: But this promiſe was never made to Father Abraham, and thoſe of the former ages, nor to thoſe Prophets and Kings, Luk. 10. and ſo having no promiſe of this, they entertained not themſelves with hopes of it (though they might with deſires, ſubmitted to Gods wiſer choice) and conſequently, never came thus εἰς κενότηλα ἐλπίδος, to the emptineſs, or caſſation, or fruſtration of hope. So that to maintain the Vedelian reading of εἰς κενότηλα, 'tis evident that the following words muſt be, not εἶδεν, he ſaw, but οὐκ εἶδεν, he ſaw not, the direct contradictory to the words as they were ſpoken by Chriſt. My Lord Primate tells us from a Manuſcript in Baliol-Colledge Library, that rather than the Scribe there would adventure (ſo near blaſphemy, as) to write ad vacuam ſpem, the interpretation of εἰς κενότηλα ἐλπίδος to a void, or caſſate hope, he choſe to inſert a [not] in that Latine Copy, and wrote ad non vacuam ſpem, to a hope not void: This again ſhews how intolerable that reading is of εἰς κενότηλα, whereas the other εἰς καινότηλα, which our Laurentian Copy gives us (being retain'd, and not changed into κοινόληα) is perfect clear ſenſe, and elegantly agreeable to the Context, οἱ θειότατοι προφῆται, ſaith he, κατὰ Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν ἔζησαν---the moſt divine Prophets lived according to Jeſus Chriſt---and then ſoon follows, εἰ οὖν ἐν παλαιοῖς πράγμασιν ἀναστραφέντες εἰς καινότηλα ἐλπίδος ἦλυθον---If therefore they that converſed in thoſe old things, (i. e. lived under the Law of the Jews) came, or advanced to the newneſs of hope (i. e. as before, lived according to Chriſt, an Evangelical, Chriſtian life) &c. πῶς ἡμεῖς δυνησόμεθα ζῆσαι χωρὶς αὐτοῦ, ὃ καὶ οἱ προφῆται μαθηταὶ ὄντες τῷ πνεύματι ὡς διδάσκαλον αὐτὸν προσεδόκων, how ſhall we live without him, whoſe diſciples in ſpirit the Prophets were, and expected him as their Maſter (but ſure by ſo doing were not fruſtrated in their expectation.)

26. All this hath been ſaid to render it reaſonable for my Monitor to be leſs ſevere to the writings of others, and from hence to obſerve, that one digreſſion doth unneceſſarily, and unluckily ſometimes, beget another, and therefore that 'tis the ſafeſt courſe to keep cloſe to the matter we have before us, which yet I am not permitted to do, having ſtill three parts of this branch of digreſſion more, which I am obliged to give account of.

27. In the next place then, for the probability that my two adverſaries Salmaſius and Blondel, if they had not been one dead, the other almoſt blind, would have dealt not much more gently with me for my Parentheſis (quibus illecebris adducti neſcio) than one of them did (calling me knave) for my terming him Grammarian, I am able alſo to give him ſome Anſwer, and an account, I think, ſatisfactory to that whole matter. 1 By aſſuring him that I knew how Salmaſius had dealt with me in that paſſage to Heraldus, before my ſetting about the Diſſertations; that this was ſo far from imbittering my ſtile againſt him, that I did the more carefully watch over my pen, not to ſay any reproachful thing of him, but rather to commend his ſecond thoughts in the mattter of Presbytery, which he was willing to teſtifie in ſome paſſages of his Defenſio Regia; and truly this was it, which I ſhall not ſay I learnt from Ignatius, though I confeſs it looks very lovely in his divine expreſſions. Πρὸς τὰς ὀργὰς αὐτῶν ὑμεῖς πραεῖς, πρὸς τὰς μεγαλορρημοσύνας αὐτῶν ὑμεῖς ταπεινόφρονες, πρὸς τὸ ἄγριον αὐτῶν ὑμεῖς ἥμεροι, μὴ σπουδάζοντες ἀντιμιμήσασθαι αὐτούς. To their anger do ye return meekneſs, to their ſpeaking big be ye humble, to their fierceneſs be ye tame, not deſiring, or attempting to imitate them. Epiſt. ad Epheſ. 'Twas the leaſt that I thought my ſelf obliged to do, in obedience to our Saviours precept, Mat. 5. 44. of bleſſing and praying for thoſe that curſe and deſpightfully uſe us, from whence I muſt conclude, that contumelies are our admonitions of duty, even that of taking thoſe who pour them upon me into my ſpecial interceſſions.

28. Secondly; That my terming Salmaſius formerly a Grammarian, with the addition of Learned, was in the ſincerity of my heart, meant as a title not of diminution, but of honour to him; he was a very learned man in ſeveral parts of good literature, eſpecially skill'd in Greek and Latine words, and phraſes, and cuſtomes, and his Pliniana exercitationes had long ſince given me that notion of him, as equal thus far to any of his age, and fit to be named with Scaliger and Caſaubon of the preceding. And knowing 1. that Grammaticus was antiently a title of honour among learned men, witneſs Suetonius his Book de Illuſtribus Grammaticis; and 2. that of γραμματικὴ there are three parts, τεχνικὴ, ἐξηγητικὴ, κριτικὴ, (the two latter of which being peculiarly his excellencies, were fully comprehended in the general title of Grammarian) and laſtly, that being neither Divine, nor Phyſician, nor Lawyer, by profeſſion, I could not fitly make either of thoſe his title, I thought it moſt agreeable to all theſe reaſons to ſtile him learned Grammarian, eſpecially having ſo little reaſon, as I then had, to commend his knowledge in Theologie. This it ſeems was ſo repreſented to him from England, that having having no other reaſon (that I am conſcious of) to quarrel with my behaviour toward him, he was content to reproach me, upon that ſtile: And all that I ſhall ſay to it, is, that I had rather be in the fouleſt manner reproacht without cauſe, than to be commended for ill doing, or to be juſtly cenſured by any.

Thirdly, when I ſaid of him and Blondel (quibus illecebris adducti neſcio) I do not think my ſelf to 29.
have wronged them, or uſed them contumelioufly: Not wronged them, becauſe I verily believe there were motives properly ſtiled illecebræ (I mean not bribes from England) which brought them to do what they did: And as I did not think fit then to expreſs thoſe motives, being 1. matters of fact, of which at this diſtance, I could not have perfect knowledge or evidence, and ſo could truly ſay [quibus neſcio] and 2. being perſonal matters, which I love not to publiſh, farther than the matter it ſelf reveals and declares them; ſo I ſhall not chuſe now out of ſeaſon, and leſs pertinently to inlarge on that matter: I ſhall only add, that Salmaſius lived, and Blondel ſaw, many months, ſome years, after the publiſhing of the Diſſertations, and neither of them thought fit to fall into ſuch paſſion ſo cauſeleſly, nor, that I ever heard, ſent the Author of theſe Animadverſions their Letters of Attorney to do it for them; ſo that I am to acknowledge what he hath done in this, to be an act of his own inclinations, but have no manner of like return to make him for it.

How juſtly the many which he mentions, have ſuppoſed that he was illecebris adductus, and from 30.
what evidence they name the bait, or with what truth it is ſuggeſted, that he had ever ſet up and eſtabliſht that faith which his Defenſio Regia endeavoured to deſtroy, are things ſo far removed from the ſubject before us, the authority of Ignatius's Epiſtles, and ſo unlikely to be concluded by our diſputes, that I think we may by conſent let them alone: Otherwiſe, the then preſent lowneſs, and improſperity of the cauſe, which he defended, would offer it ſelf for a very competent argument to infer, the love of truth more than expectation of any temporal advantage, to have perſwaded the writing of it.

The ſecond incidental branch concerning Biſhop Montague, and Geneva, hath been as incidentally, 31.
but more largely diſcharged already.

The Third, concerning my interpretation of Νεωτερικὴ τάξις, for the ordination of a young man, 32.
might ſurely have been ſpared, when it is by him confeſt, that rather than I could think fit to adhere to it, I choſe to prefer Vedelius's Edition, which reads ἡ φαινομένην νεότητα, the appearing youth of their Biſhop, before this reading of the Laurentian in that place, and that done by me in the firſt place, to remove all force of Salmaſius's argument, there preſent before me; all that followed being ex abundanti, more than needed, and not propoſed, as the truth of the matter, but πρὸς ἔνστασιν to ſuperſede all poſſible reply in it.

But my Monitor runs too haſtily into ill language, which yet he diſlikes ſo much in Biſhop Montague 33.
(groſs figments is no very nice expreſſion) elſe he might have ſeen enough produced by me, to have prevented, or allaied the ſtorm of his diſpleaſure.

Salmaſius to take advantage from thoſe Epiſtles, both againſt Epiſcopacy, and the Epiſtles them- 34.
ſelves, finds in the Laurentian Copy νεωτερικὴν τάξιν, ſpoken of Dama's Epiſcopacy; hence he infers, that Epiſcopacy was there ſtiled a new Order, and that the Epiſtles were written in a later age, than that of Ignatius, and ſo, that Epiſcopacy was of that later inſtitution. To this purpoſe, ſaith he, the word τάξις cannot belong to his age, and νεωτερικὴ ſignifies new, and brings 2 Tim. 2. 22. where νεωτερικὰς ἐπιθυμίας, which we truly render youthfull luſts, ſignifie, ſaith he, novæ aut novarum rerum cupiditates, new deſires, or deſires of new things. To this whole way of arguing, I confeſs I could not afford the leaſt degree of conſent; and ſtill think, that that learned Grammarian did never more paſſionately δυσεύειν ὑποθέσει than in this heap of inconcludencies. To theſe therefore I anſwer'd by degrees proportion'd to the ſeveral ſteps of his procedure: 1. That the Laurentian ſeemed not the right reading, but the Vedelian, not νεωτερικὴν τάξιν, however rendred, but φαινομένην νεότητα, his appearing youth: This the whole courſe of the Epiſtle exacted, Damas then Biſhop of the Magneſians being a young man, and Ignatius deſiring his youth might not bring contempt upon him, and therefore adviſing expreſly, not to deſpiſe the age of their Biſhop, and this acknowledged by Salmaſius himſelf to be the purport of the Epiſtle.

Secondly; That if the utmoſt that could be deſired, were granted, both that νεωτερικὴ τάξις, were 35.
the right reading, and that it were juſtly rendred a new order, yet what was inſtituted by the Apoſtles, might paſs for new in Ignatius's dayes, who dyed very few years after St. John, and both of them in the reign of Trajan; or that however, what was in Ignatius's dayes (and to that Rivet referr'd it, novellus ordo, ſive τάξις, ut loquitur Ignatius, νεωτερικὴ) even ſo new as to be but juſt then inſtituted, was yet pretty antient; very little diſtant from Apoſtolical (Ignatius himſelf being ſtiled an Apoſtolical perſon) and without controverſie long before that famous Epocha of 140 years after Chriſt, to which Blondel affixes the riſe of Epiſcopacy.

Thirdly; That (to avoid all the force of his argument) I was not obliged to affirm, that τάξις be- 36. longed to age, on one ſide, or that νεωτερικὸς ſignified καινὸς on the other. For in caſe that were granted to be the right reading (not abſolutely; for that was prevented, but ex hypotheſi, if it were) yet τάξις might more agreeably to the context, and the nature of the word, ſignifie Ordination; and for νεωτερικὸς in that place to Timothy by him cited, it evidently ſignified not new (for what could the Apoſtle mean in forewarning him to abſtain from new luſts? were not antient as dangerous? It was much more reaſonable to think, young Timothy was adviſed to beware of ſuch ſins as are met with among young men (which was the reaſon that young men were not ordinarily made Biſhops) and conſequently, as to that again, both the Context, referring to the ἡλικία τῆς ἐπισκόπου, the age, i. e. the youth of Damas their Biſhop, and the nature of the word being a denominate from a young man, νεωτερικὴ from νεώτερος, would perſwade rather to render it ſo there alſo; and ſo τάξις νεωτέρου would be the ordination of a young man; and ſo I am ſure the learned Primate renders it, juvenilem ordinationem, and Voſſius, who retains the old barbarous Latine, yet in his Notes hath theſe words, Non debere eos cenſeri, i. e. tanquam commodato accipere, & ad ſe pertrahere ἐπισκοπὴν illam juvenis iſtius Epiſcopi, which ſure is his Paraphraſe of μὴ συγχρᾶσθαι τῇ ἡλικίᾳ τῆς ἐπισκόπου, & ὃ προσεπληρώσας ἡ φαινομένην νεωτερικὴν τάξιν, and punctually agrees with my interpretation alſo. And the Analogy with the uſe of the word νεωτερικὴν (being an ἅπαξ λεγόμενον but once uſed) in Scripture would much better agree with this, than the rendring it a new Order.

37. And now I ſhall be very well content to be told by the Reader, of what perſwaſion ſoever, what figment, or how groſs it was, that I endeavoured to impoſe upon him, when I began firſt with a profeſſion, that I did not aſſent to that reading, and then only added, that I did as little aſſent to Salmaſius's interpretation, but could not be deem'd abſolutely to like the interpretation produced by me, but only ex hypotheſi, and in compariſon with that of his affixt to S. Paul's words to Timothy, where νεωτερικαὶ was uſed; nay, that rather than I would make uſe of my own, though backt with the concurrent judgment of ſuch learned men, I choſe to forſake the Laurentian Copy in that particular, which in others I generally adhered to.

38. There remains one part of the ſuggeſtion ſtill, the doubtfulneſs which the [if] importeth, whether I conſult Authors any further than meerly to ſerve my own turn. To which I anſwer 1. by profeſſing that I ſeek truth from Authors, and no proofs, or confirmations of any thing, but what I verily believe to be ſuch. 2. That I may well be believed in this profeſſion, becauſe I am of no party, which either hath appeared to want ſuch ſupports, or if it did, could probably tempt any man, with competent rewards, to undertake ſo vile an office, as is writing and conſulting Authors to maintain that, which the conſcience doubts of, or knows to be falſe. Laſtly, That the particular, whereon this ſuggeſtion is founded, can be no juſt cauſe of this ſuggeſtion: For 1. not having Vedelius's Edition of Ignatius by me, when I wrote the Diſſertations, I had yet the Lord Primates firſt Edition of the Epiſtles, which is known to contain the Vedelian Text of the Epiſtles, but hath not his Exercitations, where the Vir doctiſſimus was mentioned: And 2. the whole matter concerning that vir doctiſſimus being already perfectly cleared, and that if that paſſage, and thoſe arguings of the vir doctiſſimus in Vedelius had actually occurr'd to my memory, it had not been in the leaſt degree pertinent to the ſubject of my then preſent affirmation, it muſt now be as unſeaſonable for me farther to vindicate my integrity herein, as it will be uncharitable in any, without any new cauſe to doubt of it. This only I muſt obſerve for mine own uſe, both from the beginning, and the end of this Animadverſion, that my Monitor is one of them whom I am by obligation of Chriſtian Charity, bound to bleſs and pray for; and I ſhall do it, either in my own choice of words, Κύριε μὴ στήσῃς, or in any other form he ſhall preſcribe me. And ſo much for this Section.

SECT. II.

Anſwer to Teſtimonies of Mr. Calvin, the Centuriators, and Dr. Whittaker. Of Lent. The occaſions of Ignatius's Epiſtles. His journey from Antioch to Rome.

1. BUT this Act is not yet at an end, there is, it ſeems, more of this Animadverſion ſtill behind, following in theſe words.

"But yet a little farther: The firſt Edition of theſe Epiſtles in Latin, was Auguſtæ Vindelicorum, "An. 1529. in Greek at Baſil 1566. Before which time I ſuppoſe the Doctor expects not that any "oppoſition ſhould be made to them, conſidering the heaps of filth and dung, that until about that "time were owned for the Off-ſpring of the Ancient Fathers.

"Upon their firſt appearing in the world, what is the entertainment they receive? One who was "dead before either the Doctor, or either of his Antagoniſts were born, and whoſe renown among "the people of God will live when they are all dead, gives them this welcome into the world; Igna-"tium quod obtendunt, ſi velint quicquam habere momenti, probent Apoſtolos legem tuliſſe de quadrageſimâ "& ſimilibus corruptelis; nihil næniis iſtis quæ ſub Ignatii nomine editæ ſunt putidius: Quo minus tolera-"*bilis eſt eorum impudentia, qui talibus larvis ad fallendum ſe inſtruunt, Calv. "Whatever be the judgment of our Doctor concerning this man (as ſome there are, of whom a "learned Biſhop in this Nation long ago complained, that they are ſtill opening their mouths againſt "Calvin, who holp them to mouths to ſpeak with: Abbot. ad Thomſ.) He will in the judgment "of ſome, be ſo far accounted ſome body, as to take off from them the confident Aſſertion, that "Salmaſius and Blondellus were mortalium primi that rejected theſe Epiſtles.

"The Centuriators of Magdeburg were eſteemed to be ſome bodies in their days, and yet they "make bold to call theſe Epiſtles into queſtion, and to tender ſundry arguments to the impairing "their credit and authority. This then they, Cent. 2. cap. 10. de Epiſc. Antioch. ac primum de Ig-"natio.

Iſta Papiſtæ non audent tueri*---- To whom ſundry "others might be added, convincing Salmaſius and Blondellus, not to have been mortalium primi that "called them into queſtion.

What is here brought out of Calvin, the Centuriators, and Whittaker, muſt ſtill be remembred to 2.
be by the Prefacer produced to prove the falſeneſs, and ungrounded confidence of my aſſertion, that Salmaſius and Blondel were mortalium omnium primi, the firſt of men that called them into queſtion: And my anſwer muſt certainly be the ſame, which in the laſt Section it was, that it muſt be remembred what Copy of the Epiſtles it was which Salmaſius and Blondel rejected, and of which I ſpake, when I affirmed them to be the firſt that did ſo, viz. this Laurentian Manuſcript-Copy, ſet out after by Voſſius (agreeing with our two ancient barbarous tranſlations, which the Lord Primate had met with in England,) that very Copy which Blondel acknowledged to be the ſame which Euſebius 1300. years ago (and the other ancient Fathers) had uſed, and gave belief unto, and by that means was forced to caſt off the Fathers with a [Quid tum! What then!] to ſay that they were deceived, and impoſed upon in that belief, and without doing ſo, had no poſſibility of doubting the genuineneſs of this Copy.

So that the plain reſult and ſumm of my affirmation muſt evidently be this, that the Laurentian 3.
Copy of theſe Epiſtles, according with all that the ancients cited from the genuine Epiſtles of Ignatius, and by Blondel's collating them, found to do ſo, i. e. in effect the Euſebian Copy of Ignatius, and as ſuch, acknowledged by Blondel, was never rejected by any before Salmaſius and Blondel rejected it.

Thit being the only true ſetting of the caſe between me, and my Adverſaries, I ſhall now need 4.
add no more but this one queſtion, whether the Author of theſe Animadverſions can now think, that this was the Copy of Epiſtles which either Mr. Calvin, or the Centuriators, or Dr. Whittaker rejected, in the places by him tranſcribed from them? I might make my queſtion a little more difficult to be anſwered by him in the affirmative, whether in caſe ſuch a purged Copy of thoſe Epiſtles had been brought to any of them, which they had been forced to acknowledge to be the ſame, or exactly agreeable to that, which the Fathers (all that could be conſulted, and gave teſtimony in this matter) received as authentick Ignatius, whether, I ſay, on that ſuppoſition, they would in any probability have rejected it, with a nil naniis iſtis putidius, and larvæ, &c? But the queſtion will be ſooner at an end, if we conſider the matter of fact, as it lies before us, and therefore in that form he muſt apply the anſwer (which he ſhall return either to me, or to his own conſcience) whether Mr. Calvin ever ſaw this Copy, or any other the like, of which it may be ſaid, what of this appears, in relation to Blondel, that he acknowledged it to be the ſame that Euſebius and the Fathers uſed and own'd; and if he never did ſee that, or any the like, whether he can be produced as an inſtance againſt my affirmation, an example of thoſe that rejected theſe, before either I or my Antagoniſts were born?

Another Copy I acknowledge he rejected, and in compliance with that judgment of his, Vedelius, 5.
that long after followed him at Geneva, and trod in his footſteps, endeavoured to purge that volume of Epiſtles, meaning, I ſuppoſe, to make it ſuch, as if Mr. Calvin had lived, he would not have rejected. To which purpoſe it may now be remembred, that Vedelius being preſt with Calvins authority for the rejecting theſe Epiſtles, he anſwers, that they are miſtaken, who think Calvin ſpake againſt the Epiſtles, and cites Rivet's Critica ſacra, c. 1. to prove Calvinum non in Ignatium, ſed in quiſquilias & nænias depravatorum Ignatii invectum eſſe, that Calvin inveighed not againſt Ignatius, but againſt the traſh that the depravers of Ignatius had impoſed upon him. This I have recovered by conſulting Vedelius about the vir doctiſſimus: And this, he that ſent me thither, might have ſeen, if he had pleaſed. But beyond what Vedelius could attempt, the providence of God hath favoured this age, and afforded it better commodity to reduce theſe Epiſtles to the ancient genuine form, and of that only it was that I ſpake, and of that Mr. Calvin could not divine to ſpeak, and ſo there is an end of that inſtance.

The ſame anſwer evidently abſolves me from the other two Inſtances, of the Centuriators, and 6.
Dr. Whittaker: for 1. both thoſe, as Vedelius ſaith, do not reject, but only doubt of them. 2. They are again the corrupt copies (thoſe that by me are acknowledged to be ſuch) of which their doubt is made, viz. the Copies which were out in their days, long before Vedelius undertook to cleanſe the Augean ſtable, and much longer, before Voſſius, and the Lord Primate, more dexterouſly, and ſucceſsfully performed it. And ſo there is nothing behind, which may aſſume to make good the leaſt part of the charge againſt me, whether of confidence, or oſcitancy, or what elſe was thought fit to be laid upon me; I may again be able to look Scholars or ſober men in the face, till I make forfeiture of my credit by ſome future miſcarriage.

Yet becauſe in the Inſtances here produced, that of Calvin, and of the Centuriators, there are 7.
mentioned ſome exceptions to theſe Epiſtles, to which our preſent Copy may ſtill ſeem liable, I will not omit to make him my return (though ex abundanti, and extra orbitam) to thoſe alſo.

And firſt for that of Calvin, that they which attribute any thing to Ignatius's authority, muſt firſt 8.
prove that the Apoſtles made any law for obſerving Lent: It is eaſily anſwer'd (without entring into any diſpute concerning the antiquity of that Faſt in the Church of Chriſt) by obſerving but theſe two things, that the place ordinarily produced to that purpoſe being out of the Epiſtle to the Philippians, in theſe words, [τὰς ἑορτὰς μὴ ἀτιμάζετε, ἢ τεσσαρακοστὴν μὴ ἐξουθενεῖτε. μίμησιν δὲ περιέχει ἡ τοῦ Κυρίου πολιτείας, Diſhonour not the Feaſts, deſpiſe not the quadrageſimal Faſt, for it contains an imitation of Chriſts converſation.] 1. This Epiſtle is none of the ſeven certainly genuine, which we have from Polycarp's collection, or which we adhere to in our account or plea for Ignatius. 2. That the Author of that Epiſtle whoſoever he was, doth not make Lent to ſtand by any Law, or Inſtitution of the Apoſtles, but only as an act of imitation of Chriſt, who faſted forty days in the wilderneſs.

Nay when the Book of Conſtitutions, which is thought to bear ſuch Analogie with the Epiſtles affixt 9. to Ignatius, ſpeaks of the ſame matter, and adds νομοθεσίας, Legiſlation [μίμησιν περιέχουσα ἡ τοῦ Κυρίου πολιτείας πολιτείας καὶ νομοθεσίας, it contains a commemoration of Chriſts converſation and Law-giving] I do not believe that this at all refers to any command or inſtitution of Chriſt or his Apoſtles in this matter of obſerving of Lent, but that as Chriſts faſting in the Wilderneſs, Mat. 4. was a preparative to his entring on his Prophetick office, Mat. 5. where, in that divine Sermon on the Mount, he gave Evangelical laws to his Diſciples, the Holy Ghoſt, having formerly deſcended on him and conſecrated him to it, Mat. 3. ſo the Quadrageſimal Faſt was obſerved in the Church to commemorate both theſe, the Laws that he gave, as well as the Faſt that he prepared for them. And ſo no part of the ſuggeſtion from Mr. Calvin holds againſt our pretenſions; the Epiſtle is not by us reckoned as Ignat. Epiſt. nor the Inſtitution of Lent ſaid by that ſuppoſititious Epiſt. to be inſtituted by the Apoſtles; and ſo that is ſufficient ſecurity to us from that firſt exception.

10. Next for thoſe exceptions of the Centuriators, I ſhall take them in order as they lye. The firſt is, that almoſt in all the Epiſtles the occaſion of writing them is omitted, nor can any man divine why he ſhould ſend Letters to this or that Church rather than any other.

11. To this I anſwer, that, to my underſtanding, the occaſions of every of his Epiſtles are as evidently legible, and diſcernable in them, as in moſt of the Apoſtles Epiſtles they are. In them they are not ſet down by way of ſyllabus, at the beginning, nor in any more viſible groſs way of tranſition, but are cloſely coucht in the manner that the Authors of them thought fitteſt, and are diſcernable to a careful obſervant reader, and ſo are they here alſo.

12. The firſt, that to the Church of Smyrna, is to confirm them in the Faith againſt the infuſions of the Gnoſticks, which by this time (as appears by S. John's firſt Epiſtle) oppugned the reality of Chriſt's birth, and death, and reſurrection; to whom he therefore confronteth the true doctrine vindicated in every branch, and vehemently inculcates the ἀληθῶς and ἐν σαρκὶ, truly, and in the fleſh, againſt the τὸ δοκεῖν the bare appearing to ſuffer, &c. which, ſaith he, ἄπιστοι τινὲς λέγουσιν, ſome unbelievers or unfaithful Apoſtate Chriſtians, evidently the Gnoſtick hereticks, affirmed and taught.

13. And here by the way, appears more fully the injuſtice of that ſuſpicion, which at the beginning of his view of Antiquity, the Author of this Preface was willing to infuſe into the Reader, as if heretical corrupt doctrine would be found to have crept into the writings of the * firſt times, that remain to us, whereas the plain truth is, that thoſe hereſies, which ſo early were gotten into the Church, and began γυμνῇ τῇ κεφαλῇ to oppoſe the truth, were by thoſe firſt writers as punctually confuted, as [reality] and [in the fleſh] can be thought to be oppoſed to the δοκεῖν, the bare appearance.

* See Chap. 1. ſect. 1. numb. 16.

14. To the ſame head of diſcourſe it pertains which follows, that theſe hereticks reject the Euchariſt upon the ſame grounds, not believing the reality of Chriſts death: And that the one compendious way of arming the Orthodox againſt all their poiſonous infuſions, was to adhere to their Biſhop and Officers of the Church under him, and not to do any thing in Eccleſiaſtical matters without his direction or commiſſion: It being certain that theſe Hereticks attempted to move the ſetled Faith, and practices, and that the Governours of the Church were by the Apoſtles inſtituted to preſerve unity, and true doctrine, and had their rules and grounds of faith depoſited with, and committed to them.

15. To this he adds things very particular both to him, and to that Church of Smyrna, that he took notice of their prayers for the Church of Syria, that he was now haſtening to his Martyrdom, being at the writing hereof, at Troas on his journey to Rome; that in his coming from Antioch, the whole tempeſt and rage of the perſecutors having fallen upon him, the Churches of Syria had now obtain'd their εὐδία, a peaceable enjoyment of the Chriſtian Aſſemblies.

16. A thing particularly taken notice of in Hiſtories, that whilſt Trajan now ſtayed at Antioch, to conſult of his affairs, and war with the Parthians, upon the Letter of Tiberianus Preſident of the prime Nation of Paleſtine, Trajan gave order to him, Παύσασθαι τῆς φονεύειν τὺς χριστιανὺς, that he ſhould leave off killing the Chriſtians, ſo ſaith * Johannes Antiochenus, adding ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ τοῖς πανταχοῦ ἄρχουσι τοῦτο ἐκέλευεν, that he gave the ſame order to all the reſt of the Governours, and concluding, Καὶ ἐγένετο ἔνδοσις μικρὰ τοῖς χριστιανοῖς, and the Chriſtians had ſome truce from their perſecutions. So Suidas in the word Τραϊανὸς ὅτι τοῖς χριστιανοῖς ἀναχώχην τινὰ καὶ τιμωρίας παρέσχεν, Trajan gave the Chriſtians ſome truce, ceſſation of puniſhment, dating it from the time of Tiberianus's Letter (which was certainly at this time of Trajans being at Antioch, and Ignatius on his journey toward Rome, though being already condemned, the mercy extended not to him) ἐντεῦθεν, ſaith he, from hence forth, ὁ Τραϊανὸς πᾶσιν ὁμοῦ τοῖς ὑπ' αὐτὸν ἀπηγόρευε τιμωρεῖσθαι τούτους, Trajan forbad all under him to puniſh the Chriſtians: So * Zonaras in the ſtory of that time, takes notice of this ceſſation, produced by the ſuffering of many, εἶτα τὸ πλῆθος τῶν κλεινομένων μαθόντα τὸν αὐτοκράτορα, δεισάσαι, &c. The Emperor hearing of the multitude of Chriſtians that had been butchered, gave order for more mercy, καὶ ὥστε γενέσθαι τὸν διώγμον μετριώτερον, and ſo the perſecution became more moderate, which is farther evident by Trajan's Reſcript to Pliny, and Tertullian's Animadverſions upon it, Apol. c. 2.

* Chron. lib. 11.

* Tom. 2. p. 202.

17. And this they, which had prayed for them in time of their perſecutions, were now in all reaſon to acknowledge to God, as an anſwer and gracious return to their prayers; and to perfect their Chriſtian work toward them, he now adviſes them to ſend a ſolemn Meſſenger with an Epiſtle to congratulate with thoſe Churches this bleſſed change, ἵνα συνδοξάσῃ τὸν κατὰ θεὸν αὐτοῖς γενομένην εὐδίαν, that together with them he might bleſs God for this tranquillity, or fair weather, which he had now given them, καὶ ὅτι λιμένος ἐτύγχανεν τῇ προσευχῇ ὑμῶν, and that by the benefit of their prayers thoſe others were now landed ſafely at their deſired haven.

18. Then he mentions the ſalutations of the Church at Troas, from whence he wrote, and names Burrhus, whom they had ſent along with him, which again is the yet more particular occaſion of his writing to them at that time, at the return of their Meſſenger and Officer, whom he would not diſmiſs without a Letter of kindneſs and Chriſtian care to them, who had ſhewed ſo much of both to him, and the Church committed to his charge: And then ends with as affectionate a ſalutation, and as large an enumeration of all the ſeveral relations to which he deſired to be kindly mention'd, as any Chriſtian heart could do at the time of his laſt farewel to them.

19. And ſo, what could have been more exactly performed, than that which theſe Objectors cannot take notice of, to be done at all? What could be more expreſs and viſible, than the occaſion and particular ticular reaſons of this addreſs? And the like might be as largely, and as evidently deduced in reference to the reſt of the Epiſtles; but truly that would be too long a work, and therefore let this ſerve πρὸς δεῖξιν, for an inſtance of the no grounds of that exception.

The next exception is the ipſius peregrinationis ratio, the nature of his journey from Antioch to Rome, 20.
the ſtages whereof, as they are diſcoverable in theſe Epiſtles, are by the Objectors obſerved to differ from S. Paul's, and not to be the neareſt way that might have been choſen thither.

But to this the anſwer is obvious, 1. that what in the Epiſtles is diſcoverable concerning his jour- 21.
ney, and the ſeveral ſtages of it, is directly agreeable to the relations of his Martyrdom, recorded by the moſt ancient and punctual Hiſtorians, that have written on that ſubject: The Reader may conſult the ancient piece call'd Martyrium Ignatii, and he will find this exactly true, without depending on the confidence of my affirmation.

Secondly, For many ſtages of this journey from Antioch toward Rome, they are here the very ſame 22.
to Ignatius, which we find in the Acts, in the relation of S. Paul's voyage, firſt from Aſia, then after to Rome; S. Paul went from Troas to Neapolis, from Neapolis to Philippi, Acts 16. 10. And ſo the Acts of Ignatius have it exactly, Illinc (i. e. à Troade) ductus Neapolim, per Philippenſes pertranſivit Macedoniam pedes: From Troas he was carried to Neapolis, from thence he went on foot by Philippi through Macedonia. So when Acts 28. S. Paul comes to Rhegium, thence to Puteoli, thence to Rome, ver. 13, 14. 'Tis in like manner manifeſt by the Acts of Ignatius, that he was carried the ſame way: And accordingly when he came in ſight of Puteoli, 'tis ſaid of him, that he went haſtily out of the ſhip, ſecundùm veſtigia ambulare volens Pauli Apoſtoli, deſirous to tread in S. Paul's ſteps: Mart. Ignat. pag. 44.

And for the variations in ſome part of the voyage, the account is eaſie alſo: For in the Acts of 23.
Ignatius ſet down by Simeon Metaphraſtes, as there is an account given why Trajan ſentenced him to that kind of death, to fight with, and to be torn aſunder with wild beaſts, * becauſe he lookt on this as the ſevereſt ſort of death (and ſo moſt proportionable to his rage againſt him, for his bold anſwers made to him at Antioch, telling him that the ‖ Gods he worſhipt, were the Demons of the nations) and in like manner alſo, why this was not to be done at Antioch, but by ſending him to Rome, leſt it might more ſtir up the love and admiration of the people toward him, when they that knew him ſo well already, ſhould now ſee him ſuffer for Chriſt's name ſo miſerably, * whereas at Rome he might dye unknown, and unpitied and unremembred; ſo there is alſo as clear a reaſon given, why being carried by ten ſouldiers from Antioch to Rome, the next, or moſt direct way was not conſtantly choſen for him, viz. that the journey might be the more tedious, and wearyſome to him, (and by that means poſſibly his conſtancy might be broken or leſſen'd) ἔτω δέ, ſaith he, mentioning it as the advice of Trajan's Counſel, that were then with him at Antioch, τῷ μήκει τ̃ πορείας χαλεπωτέραν ὑφέξει τ̃ κόλασιν, by the length of his journey he ſhall undergo the ſhrewder puniſhment: To which purpoſe alſo S. Chryſoſtom mentions it as the artifice of the Devil (in his * Encomium *Tom. 5. p. 502.
of Ignatius) that Biſhops ſhould not be butchered in their own Cities, but carried far off to gather their Martyrs Crown, ὅμα μὲν ἐρήμους τ̃ ἐπιτηδείων ποιεῖν ἐσπούδακεν, ὅμα δὲ ἀσθενεστέρους ἐργάζεσθαι τῷ μύχθῳ τ̃ ὁδοιπορίας ἐλπίζων, at once endeavouring to deprive them of all conveniences, and withal hoping by this art, by the toil and laſſitude of the journey to make them more weak, and unfit for their final combat; which if it were the policy and deſign of cruel perſecutors (as in this particular, 1. the narrations of the fact, ſay it was; and 2. a ſpecial paſſage in the Epiſtles to the Smyrnaans may be ſome indication of it, Ἀπὸ Συρίας, ſaith he, μεχρὶ Ῥώμης θηριομαχῶ, All my journey from Syria to Rome I fight with wild beaſts, expreſſing his meaning in the next words, διὰ γῆς καὶ θαλάσσης, νυκτὸς καὶ ἡμέρας ἐνδεδεμένος δέκα λεοπάρδοις, by land and Sea, night and day chain'd to ten Leopards: And 3. the Centuriators have no objection againſt it:) then ſure there is no cauſe of wondering, that the ten Leopards, the Souldiers that guarded him, did not chuſe out the ſhorteſt cut from Antioch to Rome, that their Map could have directed them to. Nay, S. Chryſoſtom is yet more expreſs in it, Ἀπὸ τ̃ ἡμιλέρας πόλεως εἰς τ̃ Ῥωμὴν ἐκάλεσε, μακροτέρους αὐτῷ τιθεὶς τοὺς διαύλους τ̃ δρόμου, the Devil call'd him from Antioch to Rome, ſetting him a courſe to be run forward and backward (that is the meaning of διαυλοδρόμιον, as it is oppoſed to δολιχοδρόμιον, as the Scholiaſt on Pindar tells us) and that of a very tedious length, to this very end, ſaith he, by the length of the way and the time, τὸ φρόνημα αὐτ̃ καταδάλλειν προσδοκῶν, expecting to proſtrate and ſubdue his reſolution, or conſtancy of mind, to make him renounce the Faith of Chriſt, on which terms he was to be releaſed by the decree of Trajan: ſo ſaith Nicephorus, δέσμιον ἐκεῖθεν εἰς Ῥώμην ἐκπέμπει, λέουσι παραβληθῆναι βορὰν, μὴ τ̃ εἰς Χριστὸν ἐξομνύμενον πίστιν, He ſent him from Antioch to Rome to be caſt to the Lions to be devoured, unleſs he would abjure the Faith of Chriſt.

* ἔτω γὰρ βαρύτατον θανάτου τρόπον διεσκέφθη τῷ βασιλεῖ.

* Ῥωμαίοις ἀγνοήμων ὅπως εἴη, καὶ θᾶσσον εἰς τὸ κακίονων ἀναιρεθῆναι δόξειε, καὶ ἧττον μνήμης παρ' αὐτοῖς ἀξιωθήσεται.

Thus unreaſonable is it, in matters of fact, the occaſions and motives whereof are not always vi- 24.
ſible to every man, placed at a diſtance from them, to fancy and conjecture, what is probable or improbable, and accordingly to reform the Records of Antiquity from our own gueſſes; many things being every day done, which are not the moſt probable; and many things being probable and credible enough, when all the cauſes and circumſtances are known, which while we continue in the dark, or ſee them with prejudices, may appear to be in ſome degree, or in ſome other reſpect improbable.

A more particular account of the ſeveral ſtages of his long wearyſome journey, perfectly agreeable to 25.
theſe φαινόμενα, and having now nothing of difficulty in it, and withal expreſly vindicated from the contrary conjectures of the Centuriators, as alſo from the miſtakes of Vedelius, the Reader may conſult in the Lord Primate's Notes on Martyrium Ignatii, which makes it very impertinent for me farther to inlarge on it. Otherwiſe it were no hard task, by ſetting down the whole paſſage in the Centuriators, of which only a part is here given us, to ſhew the many miſadventures thoſe learned men were guilty of, in their improvident purſuit of this matter; as when they ſay, he could not have liberty, longas ambages quærere, to go far out of his way in his journey, quia captivus ducebatur, becauſe he was carried captive (whereas no man thinks, that he choſe this increaſe of his torment and toil for himſelf, himſelf, yet might have it impoſed on him quite contrary to his choice, by the ſeverity of the Emperors, or his Counſels directions, as hath been ſaid) And again, that there is no mention of his following the Emperors Army, nor relation in ſtory, that the Emperor fetcht ſuch a circuit in his journey from Antioch to Rome; whereas indeed the matter is clear, that he was committed to a guard of Souldiers, commonly call'd by him the ten Leopards; and for Trajan, it is ſure that he did not at all return to Rome after this, but died in Cilicia. But this ex abundanti again, more than needs to the vindicating of Ignatius, who may now be at reſt for a while, till he be ſoon call'd out again to a freſh combate.

CHAP. III.

Of the Corruptions in Ignatius's Epiſtles.

SECT. I.

The emendate Editions. Their authority equal to the Epiſtle of Clement or Polycarp. Ἀβεδδαδδάν. Theodoret's citation out of Ignatius about the Euchariſt. Jerom's about Chriſts chuſing the greateſt ſinners, Publicans.

1. THE Prefacer is pleaſed not to diſmiſs Ignatius ſo, but beginning with ſome ſhew of more moderation and temper toward him than he had obſerved in others, he yet ſoon reſolves that it ſhall not be very uſeful to him, or to us, that expect to receive benefit from his ſuffrages in the defence of Epiſcopacy: Thus then he proceeds,

2. "I have not inſiſted on what hath been ſpoken, as though I were wholly of the mind of them who "utterly condemn thoſe Epiſtles as falſe and counterfeit; though I know no poſſibility of ſtanding "againſt the arguments levied againſt them, notwithſtanding the forementioned Doctors attempt "to that purpoſe, without acknowledging ſo much corruption in them, Additions, and Detractions "from what they were, when firſt written, as will render them not ſo clearly ſerviceable to any end "or purpoſe, whereunto their teſtimony may be required, as other unqueſtionable writings of their "antiquity are juſtly eſteemed to be; That theſe Epiſtles have fallen into the hands of ſuch unworthy Impoſtors, as have filled the latter Ages with labour and travel to diſcover their deceits, the "Doctor himſelf granteth Diſſert. 2. c. 2. ſect. 6. Nulla (ſaith he) quidem nobis incumbit neceſſitas, "ut in tantâ exemplarium & editionum varietate & inconſtantiâ, nihil uſquam Ignatio interpolatum aut "adſutum affirmemus.

"And indeed the foiſted paſſages in many places are ſo evident, yea ſhameful, that no man who is "not reſolved to ſay any thing, without care of proof or truth, can once appear in any defenſative "about them: Of this ſort are the ſhreds and pieces out of that branded counterfeit piece of Cle"mens, or the Apoſtles Conſtitutions, which are almoſt in every Epiſtle packed in, in a bungling "manner, oftentimes diſturbing the ſence and coherence of the place: yea ſometimes ſuch things "are thence tranſcribed, as in them are conſiderable arguments of their corruption and falſhood: So "is that period in the Epiſtle to the Magneſians taken from Clemens Conſtit. l. 6. c. 2. Ἀβεδδαδδὰν "ὡσαύτως ἡ κεφαλῆς ἀφαιρεῖται δι' ὁμοίαν αἰτίαν. This Abedaddan being mentioned next after Abſolom's "dying by the loſs of his head, is therefore ſuppoſed to be Sheba the ſon of Bickri, but whence that "counterfeit Clemens had that name, is not known: That the counterfeit Clemens by Abedaddan in"tended Sheba, is evident from the words he aſſigns unto him in the place mentioned, Abedaddan "ſaid, οὐκ ἐστὶ μοὶ μέρος ἐν Δαβὶδ, οὐδὲ κληρονομία ἐν υἱῷ Ἰέσσαι. And joyns him with Abſolom in his re"bellion: Such paſſages as theſe they are ſuppoſed to receive from that vain and fooliſh Impoſtor: "But if it be true which ſome have obſerved, that there is not the leaſt mention made of any of thoſe "fictitious Conſtitutions in the three firſt Ages after Chriſt, and that the διδαχὴ Ἀποστόλων mention'd "by Euſebius and Athanaſius, as alſo the διατάξις in Epiphanius, are quite other things than thoſe "eight books of Conſtitutions we have; it may rather be ſuppoſed that that ſottiſh deceiver rather "raked up ſome of his filth from the corruption of theſe Epiſtles, than that any thing out of him is "crept into them. Other inſtances might be given of ſtuffing theſe Epiſtles with the very garbidge "of that beaſt. Into what hands alſo the Epiſtles have fallen by the way, in their journeying down "towards theſe ends of the world, is evident by theſe citations made out of them by them of old, "which now appear not in them. Theodoret Dial. 3. adver. Hæret. gives us this ſentence from Igna"tius, εὐχαριστίας καὶ προσφορᾶς οὐκ ἀποδέχονται διὰ τὸ μὴ ὁμολογεῖν εὐχαριστίαν σάρκα εἶναι τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ "Χριστοῦ τὴν ὑπὲρ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν παθοῦσαν, ἣν χρηστότης ὁ Πατὴρ ἤγειρεν. Which words you will ſcarcely find "in that Epiſtle to the Church of Smyrna, from whence they were taken. Hierom alſo Dial. 3. contr. "Pelag. hath this paſſage of him, and from him, Ignatius vir Apoſtolicus & Martyr ſcribit audaciter, "elegit Dominus Apoſtolos qui ſuper omnes homines peccatores erant, which words as they are not now "in theſe Epiſtles, ſo as one obſerves, if ever he wrote them, as is pretended, he did it audaciter in"deed. But of theſe things our Doctor takes no notice.

3. The things that are here ſaid, I am not ſo nearly concerned in (not ſo ſevere charges prepared and brought in againſt me) as in the former. I am but thrice and incidentally mention'd: The firſt mention concerns my anſwers to the arguments brought againſt Ignatius's Epiſtles; the ſecond, my confeſſion of the corruptions and interpolations in them; the third, my not taking notice of ſome ſpecial cial evidences which are by him mention'd againſt them. To theſe I ſhall not need to prepare any large reply. A few words may ſuffice to avert theſe charges.

For the firſt, concerning my anſwers to the arguments brought againſt the Epiſtles, which notwithſtanding, ſaith he, there is no poſſibility of ſtanding againſt the arguments, without acknowledging ſo much corruption in them, &c. I need but mind the Reader, 1. that Salmaſius and Blondel being the two men that ſet themſelves expreſly to argue againſt the Epiſtles, I applied punctual anſwers to every argument by them produced; and ſo that buſineſs muſt reſt, till either new arguments be produced, or intimation given, wherein any one of thoſe anſwers hath been, or may be diſproved or invalidated by any. 4.

Secondly, That as there is no queſtion made by me, but that former Editions have been corrupted (otherwiſe there had been no uſe of the Lord Primates, and Voſſius's diligence, and pains, in preparing, and ſetting out purer Copies) ſo 1. that being now done by them, and 2. the ſucceſs being ſo remarkable, that they have concurr'd in publiſhing a Latin and Greek Copy from ſeveral Libraries, wherein the places cited from Ignatius by the Fathers, lye juſt as they are cited by them; and then 3. the number of the Epiſtles being reduced to that of Polycarp's Sylloge or collection; and 4. our appeal to Ignatius being made in this form, to this pure Edition of theſe ſo teſtified Epiſtles, the ſame that Blondel our Adverſary acknowledgeth to have been uſed 1300 years ago by Euſebius, and which we have no reaſon to doubt but Euſebius received from them who received it from Polycarp; all this, I ſay, being laid by way of ground-work, there will, I now hope, be no confidence in making the compariſon betwixt theſe, and other unqueſtionable writings, and aſſuming that theſe Epiſtles thus produced by us in defence of Epiſcopacy, are as fit to give in their teſtimony, and by all reaſonable men to be imbraced, as any writings of the ſame antiquity with them, which are moſt unqueſtionable, as Clemens and Polycarp, and other the like. 5.

For when many writings are in later times put upon the world under the name of Clemens Biſhop of Rome, Epiſtles, Conſtitutions, &c. And when the writings of the Ancients are found to make mention of his Epiſtle to the Corinthians, as an undoubted writing of that holy man, and to recite many things from thence; and when out of a Manuſcript of Reverend Antiquity, this Epiſtle of Clement, thus concordant with thoſe citations is lately publiſhed to the world, there is no ſober man which reaſonably may, or that I know of, doth appear to oppugn the authority of this Epiſtle. And the caſe is the very ſame, and in no particular that I diſcern, unequal, for Ignatius, as he is now publiſhed by Voſſius and the Lord Primate. 6.

The ſame might be ſaid of Polycarp, but that I have already ſpoken enough of this parallel betwixt Ignatius, and each of them in the firſt Section of the ſecond Chapter. 7.

Then for the ſecond thing, my confeſſion of the Corruptions and Interpolations of the Epiſtles, I wonder how it ſhould be thought fit to be taken notice of; it being certain that that confeſſion of mine belongs not at all to the Editions to which I make my appeal, but only to the former Editions. And is it impoſſible for any Author that was once corrupted, ever to be reformed, for that to be cleanſed, which was once ſullied? 'Tis true, it may be a matter of labour and travel for Criticks, by their own conjectures, to make diſcoveries of ſuch deceits; and therefore, though Vedelius his Edition was fit enough for the Prelatiſts pretenſions, and withal, that Author not liable to ſuſpicion that he ſhould be partial for Epiſcopacy (I might well hope, that what came licenſed from Geneva, would not have been diſclaimed by thoſe of the Genevan party) yet I wiſht for a ſurer way of reforming Ignatius, than his diligence, without the aſſiſtance of old Manuſcript Copies, could afford us: But when this was done by two learned men (one of which, Iſaacus Voſſius, had viſibly no intereſts to miſguide him) and the ſevereſt Inquiſition was not able to deprehend any conſiderable objection againſt the Edition, and when this was it that I deſired, and offer'd to be tried by, and inſiſted on the juſtneſs of it, at the very time when I made that confeſſion, how can it ſtill be pertinent to argue or infer any thing from my confeſſion, that once theſe Epiſtles were ſet out corruptly? 8.

Or how can this Prefacer reaſonably proceed to talk of the foiſted paſſages, ſo evident and ſhameful, that no man, who is not reſolved to ſay any thing, without care of proof or truth, can once appear in any defenſative about them? Have I ſaid a word in defence of thoſe, that have any of thoſe foiſted paſſages in them? Or may not I be able to appear in defence of the innocent blameleſs creature, though I cannot of the ſhameleſs and proſtitute? Certainly he that had read the Diſſertations ſo exactly, as to threaten a yet more ſevere cenſure of the whole Book in a few days or hours, and ſo cannot but have adverted that principal præcognoſcendum in it, viz. what Edition of Ignatius it is, which in ſuch variety I appeal to, might well have ſpared vouching of this confeſſion of mine, of the corruptions of former Editions, it being ſo viſibly, and ſo perfectly reconcileable with all other my pretenſions. 9.

The third and laſt thing I am to account for, is, my not taking notice of ſome ſpecial evidences, which are here mention'd againſt them: The firſt is the mention of Abeddadan for Sheba, in the Epiſtle to the Magneſians. 10.

But how can this be ſuggeſted againſt the Edition we appeal to, when it is certain there is no ſuch word in it, and when by the Lord Primate, that endeavoured to evidence the purity of this, and the corruptneſs of the former Editions, this very word Ἀβεδδαδὰν is particularly * produced as an argument, that thoſe things are reformed here, which were vitiated before? And when it is viſible by the whole paſſage here ſet down, that he had conſulted the words of the Lord Primate (Not. in Ep. ad Magneſ. p. 15.) 'tis not eaſily conceivable how he could ſtill think fit to make this evidence of the incorruptneſs of the Copy, an inſtance of the corruption of it. 11. * Prolegom. p. 71.

So again when it is objected in the next place (as an evidence, what hands theſe Epiſtles have fallen into by the way) that ſome citations are made out of them of old, which now appear not in them, and of this ſort two inſtances are tendred, one a citation from Theodoret, the other from Hierom: 'Tis hardly imaginable how he could think fit to make ſuch an objection. 12.

The place cited by Theodoret is in the very ſame form in the old Latin Copy, which the Lord Primate ſet out, and ſo in the Laurentian publiſhed by Voſſius, with very little change: Thus, Εὐχαριςίας καὶ προσευχῆς ἀπέχονται, διὰ τὸ μὴ ὁμολογεῖν τὴν Εὐχαριςίαν σάρκα εἶναι τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριςοῦ, 13.

ὑπὲρ τ ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν παθοῦσαν, ἣν τῇ χρηστότητι ὁ Πατὴρ ἤγειρεν, They depart from the Euchariſt and prayer, becauſe they do not acknowledge the Euchariſt to be the fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour, which ſuffered for our ſins, which the Father raiſed up. All the difference is but this, that where Theodoret reads [Εὐχαριστίας καὶ προσφορᾶς οὐκ ἀποδέχονται, they receive not the Euchariſt and Oblations] Our Copy of the Epiſtle to the Church of Smyrna reads Εὐχαριστίας καὶ προσευχῆς ἀπέχονται, they recede from the Euchariſt and the prayer] (which is to the ſame ſence, which ſoever be the trueſt reading, and greater differences there oft are diſcernable in citation of places of Scripture in the Fathers) and then how could he think fit to add [which words you will ſcarcely find in that Epiſtle to the Church of Smyrna, from whence they were taken] I cannot yet make any conjecture, what he ſhould aim at in thus affirming, contrary to every mans ſight, which ſhall but read that Epiſtle, and therefore I cannot farther apply fit remedy to it.

13. The caſe is evident; Theſe words are wanting in the corrupt Copies of Ignatius, and yet are cited by Theodoret out of him: This concludes, that there were more perfect Copies in Theodoret's time, than our former had been; and now the Copies lately publiſht, have theſe words in them, which is an evidence of the accord between theſe Copies and that which Theodoret uſed; and ſo being an argument for the incorruptneſs of theſe Copies, and the very thing which cauſed the Lord Primate to make ſearch in our Engliſh Libraries for thoſe Copies, becauſe he found this particular place cited by three ancients of this Nation, Wodeford, Robert Lincolnienſis, and Tiſſington, it was not either very reaſonably, or very luckily produced, as an evidence againſt them.

14. The full importance of the ſpeech it ſelf hath been formerly intimated, viz. that the Hereticks, which denied the reality of Chriſts death and Reſurrection, did, conſequently to their hypotheſis reject the Euchariſt, and prayers, or oblations of the Church, wherein that death of his was ſolemnly commemorated, and the fleſh of the crucified Saviour Sacramentally offered, and received, and ſo maintained to be by the Orthodox believers.

15. The other ſpeech ſaid to be cited from Ignatius by S. Hierom, may alſo well be his ſaying, though I find it not in theſe Epiſtles: Our Saviour, we know, ſpake many things which are not written in the Goſpels, and ſome of them are recited afterwards by the Apoſtles in the Acts, and ſome recorded by the Writers that followed the Apoſtles: And ſo, well enough may ſome periods, delivered by Ignatius, be preſerved to us, not in his own Writings, but in the Writings of other men; and this, far from prejudicing the Epiſtles, which have been tranſmitted to us, which may well be genuine, though all that was ſuch, be not come down to us. As for the [audacter] that it was a bold ſaying in him that ſaid it, I have little reaſon to be diſturbed by that, becauſe if Ignatius ſaid it, it is not my intereſt to inquire or examine, how boldly, and if he did not ſay it, then nothing can be inferr'd from his ſaying it: But then after all this, Chriſt, we know, call'd and choſe one of his Diſciples from the Toll-booth, where they that ſate, were proverbially called ſinners, and generally accounted ſuch beyond all other men; their very trade was ἀχρωμ& ἐργασία, filthy and ſordid, ſaith * Artemidorus, and fit to be joyn'd with that of λησαὶ and παραλογίσαι, thieves and cheaters; and in Theophraſtus in his Characters, πορνοβοσκῆσαι and τελωνῆσαι, Whoremongers and Publicans, as in Scripture, Publicans and Harlots go together, and accordingly when ‖ Theocritus was asked what was the cruelleſt beaſt? he anſwered, Of thoſe in the Mountains, the Bear and Lion, but of thoſe in the City τελώναι καὶ συκοφάνται, Publicans and Sycophants, and as of them the Poet concludes, Πάντες τελῶναι πάντες εἰσιν ἅρπαγες, they are all, generally all, Robbers, ſo the Jews are wont to cry out of them, that they are all מוכסין thieves, wicked ſinners: And then, what boldneſs is there in ſaying of Chriſt, who choſe ſuch, that he choſe thoſe who were ſinners above all other men? It being no way to the diſhonour of Chriſt to have choſen ſuch, who from the chief of ſinners, blaſphemers, and perſecutors, and injurious (as S. Paul ſaith of himſelf) converted, and became the moſt zealous ſervants and Diſciples of their Maſter.

SECT. II.

The ſtile, and barbarous words in theſe Epiſtles. Variety of ſtiles. Exuberance of affection. Θεοφόρος. Ignatius's title, an indication of the language of that age. Compoſitions, and new forms in Scripture. The four Latin words in theſe Epiſtles, paralell'd by Hegeſippus. The Church of Smyrna, and many more in the New Teſtament.

1. THE next objection againſt theſe Epiſtles is taken from the ſtile, and the uſe of barbarous words in Ignatius, and it begins thus;

2. "The ſtile of theſe Epiſtles doth not a little weaken the credit of them, being turgent, ſwelling "with uncouth words and phraſes, affected manner and ways of expreſſion, new compoſitions of "words, multiplying titles of honour to men, exceedingly remote and diſtant from the plainneſs "and ſimplicity of the firſt Writers among the Chriſtians, as is evident by comparing theſe with the "Epiſtles of Clement before mention'd, that of Polycarpus in Euſebius, the Churches of Vienna and "Lions in that ſame Author and others. Inſtances for the confirmation of this obſervation are mul- "tiplied by Blondellus, my deſigned work will not allow me to inſiſt on particulars. In many good "words this charge is waved, by affirming that the Author of theſe Epiſtles was a Syrian, and near "to Martyrdom, and that in the Scripture there are ſundry words of as hard a compoſition, as "theſe uſed by him, Ham. Diſſert. 2. c. 3. And as he ſays, from this kind of writing an argument "of ſufficient validity may be drawn to evince him to be the Author of theſe Epiſtles. Hierom was "of another mind ſpeaking of Didymus, Imperitus (ſaith he) ſermone eſt, & non ſcientia, Apo- "ſtolicum virum ex ipſo ſermone exprimens, tam ſenſuum nomine, quam ſimplicitate verborum; But "ſeeing Ignatius was a Syrian, and near to Martyrdom (though he writes his Epiſtles from Troas

"and Smyrna, which without doubt were not in his way to Rome from Antioch, and yet every "where he ſaith he is going to Rome: ad Epheſ. Τὰ δεσμὰ ἀπὸ Συρίας μέχρι Ῥωμῆς περιφέρω, which in "the cloſe he affirms he wrote from Smyrna, whither he was had to his Martyrdom) what is it to "any man what ſtile he uſed in his writings, what ſwelling titles he gave to any, or words he "made uſe of. Who ſhall call thoſe writings (eſpecially Ignatius being a Syrian) into queſti-"on.

"But perhaps ſome farther queſtion may here ariſe (and which hath by ſundry been already ſtar-"ted) about the uſe of divers Latin words in thoſe Epiſtles, which doubtleſs cannot be handſomly "laid on the ſame account of the Author, being a Syrian, and nigh to Martyrdom: ἀκκέπλα, δεπόσι-"τα, δεσέξλωρ, ἐξεμπλάριον, are uſually inſtanced: words to which no Roman Cuſtoms, Obſervations, "Orders, nor Rules of Government do adminiſter the leaſt occaſion. Of theſe the Doctor tells "you, he wonders only that in ſo many Epiſtles there are no more of this kind. And why ſo? "the Epiſtles are not ſo large a volume, a very few hours will ſerve to read them over; and yet I "am perſwaded that in all that compaſs of reading, in the Greek Fathers, which our Doctor owns, "he cannot give ſo many inſtances of words barbarous to their language, no way occaſioned by the "means before mentioned, as have been given in theſe Epiſtles. But he wonders that there are no "more, and ſome wonder that all are not of his mind. But he farther informs us, that a diligent "reader of the Scripture may obſerve many more Latin words in the New Teſtament, than are uſed "in theſe Epiſtles; and for a proof of his diligence and obſervation, reckons up out of the end of "Paſſor's Lexicon, ſundry words of that kind made uſe of by the Sacred Writers. I fear unto ſome "men, this will ſcarce be an Apology prevalent to the diſmiſſion of theſe Epiſtles from under the "cenſure of being at leaſt ſo ully corrupted. Of the whole collection of words of that ſort made by "Paſſor, among which are thoſe eſpecially cull'd out by our Doctor to confirm his Obſervations, "there is ſcarce one, but either it is expreſſive of ſome Roman Office, Cuſtom, Money, Order, or the "like: words of which nature paſs as proper names, (as one of thoſe mentioned by the Doctor is, "and no otherwiſe uſed in the New Teſtament) from one Country and Language to another, or are "indeed of a pure Greek Original, or at leaſt were in common uſe in that age, neither of which can "be ſpoken of the words above mentioned, uſed in the Epiſtles: which were never uſed by any be-"fore or after them, nor is there any occaſion imaginable why they ſhould: Parvas habent ſpes Epiſto-"la, ſi tales habent: I would indeed gladly ſee a fair, candid and ingenious defenſative of the ſtile "and manner of writing uſed in thoſe Epiſtles, departing ſo eminently from any thing that was cu-"ſtomary in the writings of the men of thoſe days, or is regular for men in any generation, in Repe-"titions, affected Compoſitions, Barbariſms, Rhyming expreſſions, and the like: for truly not-"withſtanding any thing that hitherto I have been able to obtain for help in this kind, I am forced "to incline to Vedelius his anſwers to all the particular inſtances given of this nature; this, and that "place is corrupted, this is from Clement's conſtitutions, this from this or that Tradition, which "alſo would much better free thoſe Epiſtles from the word σιγῆς uſed in the ſence whereunto it was "applied by the Valentinians long after the death of Ignatius, than any other Apology I have as yet "ſeen, for the ſecuring of its abode in them.

The total of this double objection againſt turgency of ſtile and barbarouſneſs of words, is this, 3.
The objections formerly drawn by D. Blondel from thoſe two heads, and punctually anſwered by me Diſſert. 2. c. 3. are again call'd up, and ſome general heads of my anſwers ſlightly repeated, and ſcoffed at, and put into as diſadvantageous a dreſs, as he could chuſe for them, and then the old anſwered arguments may ſtand good again, and all muſt be rejected as ſuppoſititious, which hath any of this turgent ſtile, or theſe barbarous words in it.

In full anſwer to this, I, that know beſt the force of my own anſwers, and wherein their ſtrength 4.
lies, ſhall very briefly give the Reader, that is not at leiſure to turn to the Diſſertations, a view of them, and vindicate them from any appearance of reply which here is made to them.

Three things are more diſtinctly objected by Blondel on this head, turgency of ſtile, new forms of 5. compounded words, and a few, viz. four Latin words made Greek.

To the firſt of theſe my anſwer is, 1. that the ſtiles of men in the ſame age are oft very different, I 6.
add, as different and diſcernable to a curious obſerver, as their hands or characters, or as their countenances, ſeveral lines and features, and airs as it were, ſeveral daſhes and forms viſibly obſervable in them. Accordingly we * read of Caſar, that if any paſſage were brought to him for Cicero's, which was not Cicero's, he would conſtantly reject it. And the ſame could ‖ Servius do, if any verſe in the name of Plautus were recited to him, which was not his. And we know, it is the part of an Ariſtarchus, or skilful Critick, and the common way of diſcerning ſuch or ſuch a writing, whether it be his, whoſe it pretends to be or not, diligently to obſerve the ſtile or character; which could not be any probable way of judging, if all others, which wrote in the ſame age, wrote the very ſame ſtile: And ſo, that which is here added of comparing Ignatius his ſtile with that of Clement and Polycarp, and the Church of Vienna, is a very ſtrange argument, juſt as if one ſhould ſay, he that owns this Preface is not the Author of it, and bind him, for the juſtifying that he is, to demonſtrate the agreement of his ſtile with all men that have written in this laſt age in our language.

* Cicer. fam. Ep. lib. 9. Ep. 16.

Secondly, When Blondel ſaith, that the Author of theſe Epiſtles doth nimis Rhetoricari, too much 7.
rhetoricate; I anſwer, that it is hard to define the bounds of Eloquence, within which it is obliged to contain it ſelf; Cicero in his Inſtitution of an Orator, commending that plenty, cui aliquid amputari poſſit, where there is ſomewhat to ſpare, which is an evidence that that Maſter of Eloquence is no way diſpleaſed with all exuberance; And to this particular it was, that peculiarly I added the mention of his being near his Martyrdom, and his flagrant deſire of it, which might enflame his ſoul, and that ſend out thoſe warmer breathings or expreſſions, which might be as much above the ordinary ſimplicity of ſpeech, as he was at that time above the ordinary cold temper of other men. And againſt this there is not the leaſt word here objected by this Prefacer.

8. For the ſecond part of the objection, the new forms of compounded words, obſervable in theſe Epiſtles, my anſwer is, that though Blondel ſet down 17. of ſuch words, yet many of them are of the ſame kind, compounded of φέρω, and ἄξιος and θεὸς, and ſo ariſe by the ſame analogie, that fewer would do, and conſequently the multitude of them ſignifies no more than a ſmaller number of the ſame. And of theſe it is obſervable, that the title, by which Ignatius was vulgarly known at that time, was θεοφόρος, one that carried God, and when Trajan condemned him to death, it was upon this point, and in this form, that he owned that name, Ignatium præcipimus in ſeipſo dicentem circumferre Crucifixum, vinctum à militibus duci ad magnam Romam, My ſentence is that Ignatius, that ſays he carries about in himſelf the crucified, i. e. that calls himſelf Theophorus, (as he did in that anſwer to Trajan's calling him Cacodæmon, Nullus Theophorum vocat Cacadæmonem) ſhall be carried bound to great Rome, and caſt in the Theatre to the wild beaſts, as we find it in the relation of his Martyrdom. Now this being then his ordinary title, the other like words are directly of the ſame compoſition with that; χριστοφόρος, ναοφόρος: and from hence I argued (and I ſtill think, probably) that his uſe of ſuch compoſitions, was an argument that he wrote theſe Epiſtles, not that he wrote them not, it being evident by that one word (ſo vulgarly then uſed to ſignifie him) Theophorus, that ſuch compoſitions were then agreeable to the ears and genius of that Age.

9. And the argument thus uſed by me, was either not apprehended, or very uneffectually anſwered, by oppoſing the words of Saint Hierom of Didymus, that he expreſt himſelf an Apoſtolical perſon by the ſimplicity of his language. So Didymus might, and yet the argument conclude probably, that theſe Epiſtles were written by Ignatius, becauſe as he was vulgarly called θεοφόρος, ſo words of the like nature with that, χριστοφόρος and ναοφόρος, familiarly diſcernable in thoſe Epiſtles.

10. As for the other words by Blondel objected, which were of other forms of compoſition, πολυαγάπητος, ἀνθρωπόμορφος, ἀνυσέρητος, πολυπληθία, συνδιδασκαλίται, ἀκαυχησία, ἀντίψυχος, πρωτοπαθεία, ἀναπάψισις, My anſwer is, that none of theſe are at all Monſtrous in the language of a Syrian, that writes Greek; and that in the New Teſtament, words are to be found, as diſtant from common language, and as extraordinarily compounded as theſe; for inſtance, πολύσπλαγχνος and ῥαδυπλοΐαις, in S. Luke, πολυμορφότητος and φιλοπρωτεύων in S. John, ἐγκομβώσασθαι, in S. Peter, ἀνθρωπάρεσκος, ὀφθαλμοδουλεία, ἐθεριομάχησα, θεομάχοι in S. Paul, and ἐλαχιστότερος, a word made on purpoſe by S. Paul, without example of the like (not only of the ſame) in other Authors.

11. To this anſwer of mine, here is no kind of reply, but of ſcoffs only, [But ſeeing Ignatius was a Syrian, and near to Martyrdom (though he writes his Epiſtles from Troas and Smyrna, which without doubt were not in his way to Rome from Antioch, and yet every where he ſaith he is going to Rome ---) what is that to any man what ſtile he uſed in his writings ---- and ſo on in the mode of ſarcaſm.

12. But I wonder what cauſed this mirth, and in ſadneſs demand, whether I ever rendered it as the reaſon of his uſing thoſe new compoſitions, that he was near to Martyrdom; he cannot but know, that that was the plea for the exuberance of his affection, which might render the reaſon of the warmer expreſſions, which Blondel had cenſured for too much Rhetorick; and to that it was proper, though not to making of new words, which is the preſent buſineſs.

13. Secondly, Why might not he be a Syrian, and write as a Syro-Gracian would write, although his Epiſtles were dated from Troas and Smyrna? 'Tis ſure enough that he lived at Antioch, and that was the Metropolis of Syria; and the Souldiers carrying him bound to Troas and Smyrna, was not likely ſo ſuddenly to change his dialect, or make him write more familiar Greek, than in Antioch he would have written; and being called vulgarly θεοφόρος at Antioch, what wonder is it that he ſhould now write in the ſame ſtile, uſe χριστοφόρος and ναοφόρος at Smyrna?

14. Thirdly, For his going by Troas and Smyrna from Antioch to Rome, all records of his journey, make it certain; and if it were not the neareſt way, the account hath been given of that in the former ſection: And ſo the Prefacer might well enough have kept his countenance, and ſpared his Sarcaſms. Here was nothing to diſcompoſe him, nothing ridiculous in all this.

15. Laſtly, Therefore, for the four Latin words turned into Greek, and uſed in thoſe Epiſtles produced by D. Blondel, ἀκκεπτα, δεπόσιτα, δεσέρτωρ, ἐξεμπλάριον, my anſwer is, 1. that there is nothing ſtrange in that, it might be as great matter of wonder, that in ſeven Epiſtles there are no more of that kind.

16. To which here it is replied, 1. that the Epiſtles are not ſo large a volume, a few hours will ſerve to read them over, 2. that no Roman Cuſtoms, Obſervations, Orders, nor rules of Government did adminiſter the leaſt occaſion of the uſe of theſe words, and 3. that the like number cannot be produced out of all the Greek Fathers that I own the reading of.

17. To theſe I anſwer, 1. that as far from large as the Epiſtles are, there might as probably have been more ſuch words, as ſo many; ſeven Epiſtles, each of them being much longer than ſome of the Apoſtles in the Scripture, if they had had but one ſuch word a piece (which ſure each might as reaſonably have, as any) this had almoſt doubled the number, which now we find in the objecters own computation. And indeed, three of theſe four being all together in the Epiſtle to Polycarp (which if, with ſome, I ſhould leave out of the Collection of the Genuine, I ſhould have enough behind to maintain Epiſcopacy) in all the other ſix there remains but one, which is no immoderate proportion.

18. Secondly, That as in Hegeſippus's fragments left to us in Greek, Blondel hath taken notice of διλατορεύειν, as perfect and unexcuſable a Latiniſm as any of theſe, ſo in the one Epiſtle of the Church of Smyrna (of a very moderate length) concerning Polycarps Martyrdom (another piece of the ſame Ages production) we have κομφέκτωρ, another parallel inſtance of the uſe of ſuch words at that time.

19. Thirdly, The like words and phraſes in the New Teſtament which is alſo no vaſt volume (though not fit to be read ad clepſidram, the length of it meaſured by the hour-glaſs) are ſo many more than theſe that are accuſed, and produced from theſe Epiſtles (near thirty for four) that this may well vindicate ſo ſmall a number, and make it more ſtrange that there are no more than four, than it ought to be that there are ſo many.

So in the next place for the four heads into which he brancheth the cauſes of the uſe of Latin words among Greek writers, I anſwer 1. that if he hath obſerved four, other men may as lawfully obſerve ſome other, and are no way obliged to marſhal all they find of this nature, under one of his four heads. 2. That if there be by him acknowledged four ſuch heads of cauſes, I may reaſonably allow Ignatius to have uſed four ſuch words, and render but this one ſingle reaſon for them all, that Antioch, being part of the Roman dominion, and many that ſpake Latin inhabiting there, four Latin words might eaſily be transfuſed into common uſe among them, acceptum, depoſitum, deſertor, exemplar. 20.

If this ſeem ſtrange, let it be remembred, that if not all, certainly the three latter of theſe very four are in vulgar uſe among us of England, derived certainly from the ſame fountain whence Ignatius had them, and ſo may well be allow'd them, who had the ſame occaſion, and the ſame liberty. 21.

Thirdly, that three of theſe four, δεσίρτως, δεπόσιτα, ἄκκεπλα, are all Military words; as for the firſt of them, 'tis clear, and for the other two, he might be inform'd from Halloix, When Souldiers went on an expedition, ſaith he, in civitatibus peculia ſua caſtrenſia deponebant, quæ reverſi recipiebant, Illa depoſita appellabantur ab eo qui deponebat, accepta ab eo qui accipiebat; confectis ergo bellis illi depoſita repetebant, hi accepta reſtituebant. And then what was thus taken from the Militia, may well be reduced to one of the Prefacers heads, the firſt, that of Roman cuſtoms, and ſo by his own rules theſe Latin words might here be lawfully uſed, in a metaphorical paſſage eſpecially, which was all Military. 22.

Laſtly, what need I take the pains to turn over the Fathers, to parallel theſe four words, when if I do ſucceed in the attempt, he hath his reſerve [yea, but they are taken from one of the four heads mentioned by him, Cuſtoms, Obſervations, Orders, or Rules of Government] (which are prettily comprehenſive indeed, as they may be applied) and when out of the very Greek Teſtament (which was written nearer to the time of Ignatius than the Volumes of the Greek Fathers were) I have already produced ſo many more, than are voucht from theſe Epiſtles. 23.

But to this it is ſaid, 1. That as a proof of my diligence and obſervation, I reckon ſundry words of this kind out of the end of Paſſor's Lexicon. 2. That of that whole collection there is ſcarce one but either is expreſſive of ſome Roman Office, Cuſtom, Money, Order, or the like, or elſe a proper name, as one mentioned by me, or indeed of a pure Greek Original, or that were in common uſe in that age. 3. That neither of theſe can be ſpoken of thoſe which are uſed in theſe Epiſtles. 24.

To all theſe I make my rejoynder. To the firſt, 1. That 'tis as good an evidence that there are ſuch words in the New Teſtament, if Paſſor collected them, as if I, or this Prefacer were ſuppoſed to have done it. I was not then contending for commendation of diligence or obſervation, but demonſtrating one truth, and vindicating another; and this might as effectually be done (without my reading over the New Teſtament on purpoſe) by any other eaſier method, that could offer it ſelf unto me. 25.

But then ſecondly, if this were ſo accurately done by Paſſor before me, my advantage was the greater againſt Blondel, who might ſo eaſily have diſcerned ſo many, and yet would take notice but of one in all the New Teſtament, viz. δυνάριον. 26.

Thirdly, That the Prefacer was not acquainted with me, nor knew ſo much of my ſecrets, as that he can upon knowledge, or with truth affirm, what he doth without any peradventure, that I reckon them up out of Paſſor's Lexicon. I had not converſt with, nor, that I know of, was ever owner of that Author of his, but did, as was neceſſary for me, that knew no more compendious way, write them out of my ill memory, and imperfect Notes, taken at leaſt twenty or thirty years before: And accordingly the Catalogue then made by me was but imperfect, and I have ſince found occaſion to increaſe it, and when I meet with Paſſor, may perhaps have reaſon farther to inlarge it (and if I do, ſhall be obliged to acknowledge by whom I was directed to him.) 27.

And ſo in the ſecond part of the reply, the Prefacer hath thought fit to do, having added one head more, that of Money to the four which he had formerly made uſe of, and not only ſo, but left room for more by a large form of Analogy [and the like] and yet farther reckon'd up three heads more, to each of which he acknowledges the [like] to be equally imputable. 28.

As for the proper name (that, I ſuppoſe, muſt be Ἰυς☉, Juſtus) as it is true, that it is ſuch, ſo 'tis certain that that Latin proper name is firſt a Latin common Adjective, and being ſpoken of, in Greek, might as well have been tranſlated into Δίκαι☉, as either Cephas is into Πετρὸς, or Tabitha into Δόρκας, if there had been any criminous barbarouſneſs in uſing foreign words, or turning them into Greek: As for the pure Greek Original, that ſome of the words are of, if he mean any of thoſe mentioned by me, I confeſs I know not what he means; If he means thoſe mention'd by Paſſor, I have no commodity to know, nor obligation to account for it. 29.

As for the laſt, that they were of common uſe in that age, I doubt it not, and ſhall therefore haſten to the laſt particular, and give the like account of that, that I doubt not but the four words in Ignatius, were at Antioch, where he lived, in frequent and common uſe at that time; and till that be diſproved, we are perfectly agreed upon the account, that it was very lawful for Ignatius to uſe them. And this I hope may at laſt be ſufficient to have added to the former competent length of account, concerning the ſtile of theſe Epiſtles. 30.

In the cloſe, there is a mention of the word στρῶς, another of D. Blondel's exceptions, but of that I have ſpoken ſo largely, both to Blondel's original objections, and to his replies (and there is not one word here ſaid to the confirming of his, or refuting of my pretenſions) that I muſt not ſuperadd one word more of that ſubject. 31.

SECT.

SECT. III.

The immoderate exaltations of Biſhops objected to theſe Epiſtles. But belong not to our Copies, ſave in one teſtimony, and that no way immoderate.

1. THE next charge againſt theſe Epiſtles is, the frequent commendation of Biſhops, &c. Thus it lies;

"It is not a little burthenſom to the thought of ſober and learned men, to conſider how frequent-"ly, cauſeleſly, abſurdly in the midſt of diſcourſes quite of another nature, and tendency, the Au-"thor of thoſe Epiſtles (or ſome body for him) breaks in upon the commendation of Church Offi-"cers, Biſhops and Presbyters, exalting with titles of honour to the greateſt Potentates on earth, "and comparing them to God the Father and Son, whereas none of the ſacred Writers that went "before him, nor any of thoſe good and holy men, who (as is ſuppoſed) followed after him, do "hold the leaſt communion or ſociety with him in that courſe of proceeding, Ἀναγκαῖον ἔν ἐσὶν ὁσάπερ "ποιεῖτε, ἀνεὺ τῦ Ἐπισκόπε μηδὲν πράτ]ειν ὑμᾶς, Epiſt. ad Trall. Whereunto is immediately ſubjoyned "that Doctrine concerning Deacons, which will ſcarcely be thought to be exegetical of Acts 6. "Δεῖ δὲ καὶ τὺς διακόνες ὄντας μυςηρίων Ἰησῦ Χριςῦ κατὰ πάντα τρόπον ἀρέσκειν, οἳ γὰρ βρωμάτων καὶ πομάτων εἰσὶ διάκονοι, "ἀλλὰ --- And τί γάρ ἐσὶν ἐπίσκοπ@, ἀλλ' ἢ πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξεσίας ἐπέκεινα πάντων κρατῶν. What the Wri-"ter of this paſſage intended to make of a Biſhop, well I know not, but thus he ſpeaks of him, Epiſt. "ad Magneſ. Πρέπον ἔν ἐσὶ καὶ ὑμᾶς ὑπακύειν τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ ὑμῶν, καὶ κατὰ μηδὲν αὐτῷ ἀντιλέγειν, φοβερὸν γάρ ἐσὶ "(as the Apoſtle ſpeaks concerning God, Heb. 6. 10.) τοιύτῳ ἀντιλέγειν. Thus indeed ſome would "have it, who to help the matter, have further framed ſuch an Epiſcopacy, as was never thought "on by any in the days of Ignatius, as ſhall afterwards be made evident: And in the ſame Epiſtle "this is ſomewhat uncouth and ſtrange; Ἐνώθητε τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ, ὑποτασσόμενοι τῷ θεῷ ὡς αὐτὸς ἐν Χριςῷ, "ὥσπερ ἔν ὁ Κύρι@ ἀνεὺ τῦ πατρὸς οὐδὲν ποιεῖ, ἃ δύναμαι, καὶ φησὶ, ποιεῖν ἀπ' ἐμαυτῦ οὐδέν, ὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς ἀνεὺ τῦ "ἐπισκόπε μηδὲ πρεσβύτερ@, μὴ Διακόν@, μὴ Λαικὸς, μηδέ τι φαινέτω ὑμῖν ἔυλογον παρὰ ταῦτα γνάμην. "Whether the Lord Chriſt hath bound any ſuch burthen upon the ſhoulders of the Saints, I much "queſtion; nor can I tell what to make of the compariſon, between God the Father, and the Biſhop, "Chriſt, and the reſt of the Church, the whole ſentence in word and matter being moſt remote "from the leaſt countenance from the ſacred writings, Ep. ad Philadel. Οἱ πρεσβύτεροι καὶ οἱ διάκονοι, καὶ "ὁ λοιπὸς κληρὸς ἁμὰ πάντι τῷ λαῷ καὶ τοῖς στρατιώταις, καὶ τοῖς ἄρχυσι, καὶ τῷ Καίσαρι (well aimed however) "τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ πειθαρχήσαν. The Epiſtle to the Church of Smyrna is full of ſuch ſtuff, inſerted with-"out any occaſion, order, coherence, or any colour to induce us to believe that it is part of the "Epiſtle as firſt written. One paſſage I may not omit τίμα, φησὶ, (υἱὲ) τὸν θεὸν καὶ βασιλέα, ἐγὼ δὲ φημὶ "(in the language of our Saviour repudiating the Phariſees corrupted gloſſes on the Law) τίμα τὸν θεὸν "ὡς αἴτιον τῦ ὅλων καὶ κύριον, ἐπίσκοπον δὲ ὡς ἀρχιερέα θεῦ εἰκόνα φορῦντα, κατὰ μὲν τὸ ἄρχειν θεῦ, κατὰ δὲ τὸ ἱε-"ρατεύειν χριςῦ, καὶ μετὰ τῦτον τιμᾶν χρῆ καὶ βασιλέα. So Peter's miſtake is corrected; his reaſons fol-"low, ὅτε γὰρ τὶς κρείτ]ων θεῦ, ἢ παραπλήσι@ ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς ἴσιν, ὅτε δὲ ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ ἐπισκόπε τί μεῖζον ἱερωμένε "θεῷ ὑπὲρ τῦ κόσμε, πανὸς σωτηρίας (as was Jeſus Chriſt) and it is added, εἰ ὁ βασιλεύειν ἐπεγειρόμεν@ "κολάσεως ἄξι@ δικαίως γενήσεται, ὥς γε παραλύων τὴν Κοινὴν ἐυνομίαν, πόσῳ δοκεῖτε χείρον@ ἀξιωθήσεσθαι τιμω-"ρίας ὁ ἀνεὺ ἐπισκόπε τί ποιεῖν προαιρέμενος --- ἱερωσύνη γάρ ἐσὶ τὸ πάντων ἀγαθῶν ἐν ἀνθρώποις ἀναδεδειγμένον. How "well this ſuits the doctrine of Peter and Paul, the Reader will eaſily diſcern; Caeſar or the King is "upon all accounts thruſt behind the Biſhop, who is ſaid to be conſecrated to God for the ſalvation "of the world; him he is exhorted to obey, and in expreſs oppoſition to the Holy Ghoſt, the Bi-"ſhops name is thruſt in between God and the King, as in a way of preeminence above the latter, "and to do any thing without the Biſhop, is made a far greater crime than to riſe up againſt the "King. As this ſeems ſcarce to be the language of one, going upon an accuſation to appear before "the Emperor, ſo I am certain, it is moſt remote from the likeneſs of any thing that in this affair "we are inſtructed in from the Scripture. Plainly this language is the ſame with that of the falſe "Impoſtor Pſeudo-Clemens, in his pretended Apoſtolical Conſtitutions. At this rate or ſomewhat "beyond it, you have him ranting, l. 2. c. 2. Ἐπίσκοπον θεῦ τύπον ἔχειν ἐν ἀνθρώποις, τῶν πάντων ἄρχειν ἀν-"θρώπων, ἱερέων, βασιλέων, ἀρχόντων, πατέρων, υἱῶν, διδασκάλων καὶ πάντων ὁμῶ τῶν ὑπηκόων. All Popes, with "all ſorts of perſons whatſoever, Prieſts, Kings and Princes, Fathers, and children, all under the "feet of this exemplar of God, and ruler over men, a paſſage which doubtleſs eminently interprets "and illuſtrates that place of Peter, 1 Epiſt. c. 5. v. 1, 2, 3. The Elders that are among you I ex-"hort, who am alſo an Elder, and a witneſs of the ſufferings of Chriſt, and alſo a partaker of the "glory that ſhall be revealed, feed the flock of God, which is among you, taking the overſight there-"of not by conſtraint, but willingly, not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind, neither as being "Lords over Gods heritage, but being examples to the flock: But yet as if the man were ſtark mad "with worldly pride and pomp, he afterwards in the name of the holy Apoſtles of Jeſus Chriſt, "commands all the Laity (forſooth) to honour, love, and fear the Biſhop, Ὡς κύριον, ὡς δεσπότην, ὡς "Ἀρχιερέα θεῦ, lib. 2. c. 20. And that you may ſee whither the man drives, and what he aims at, "after he hath ſet out his Biſhop like an Emperor, or an Eaſtern King in all pomp and glory, he "adds, τὺς Ἐπισκόπες ἀρχόντας ὑμῶν καὶ βασιλέας ἡγεῖσθαι νομίζετε, καὶ δασμὺς ὡς βασιλεῦσι προσφέρετε. The "paying of Tribute to them as Kings, is the iſſue of theſe deſcriptions, that they may have where-"withal to maintain their pomp and greatneſs, according to the inſtitution of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, "and his bleſſed Apoſtles. But I ſhall not rake farther into this dunghil, nor ſhall I add any more "inſtances of this kind out of Ignatius, but cloſe into one inſiſted on by our Doctor, for the proof of "his Epiſcopacy, Diſſert. 2. c. 25. 7. ſaith he, Quartò, τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ προσέχετε, ἵνα καὶ ὁ θεὸς ὑμῖν. Ἀν-"τίψυχος ἐγὼ τῶν ὑποτασσομένων τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ, πρεσβυτέροις, καὶ διακόνοις. Epiſcopo attendite, ut & vobis

"Deus

" Deus attendat; ego animam meam libenter eorum loco ſubſtitui cuperem (Quod Anglicè optimè dicimus, " my ſoul for theirs) qui Epiſcopo, Presbyteris, & Diaconis obſequuntur. I hope I may without great " difficulty obtain the Doctors pardon, that I dare not be ſo bold with my ſoul as to jeopard it in " that manner, eſpecially being not my own to diſpoſe of.

I ſhall not need to inquire who thoſe ſober and learned men are, with the mention of whom the Prefacer here begins; I queſtion not but that they are he, and thoſe of his perſwaſion; I only hope it is poſſible that they have not the incloſure of that title, and then there may be others as ſober, and as learned, that conſent with me in their opinion of this matter. 2.

What is ſaid here of thoſe ſober and learned men, that it is not a little burthenſom to their thoughts, that the Author of theſe Epiſtles ſo frequently, cauſeleſly, and abſurdly breaks in upon the commendation of Church-Officers] may be juſt matter of compaſſion in me; as far as I believe there is any truth in it: For truly I ſhould be ſorry, that any ſober, or learned man's thoughts ſhould be ſo cauſeleſly, and yet ſo heavily burthen'd and diſquieted: And yet if that be the caſe, I may certainly be able to do more than compaſſionate, I may adminiſter comfort alſo: For if that Authors commendations of Biſhops be cauſeleſs and abſurd, then their grief and preſſure of thoughts muſt be as cauſeleſs (that I add not, abſurd) who are much diſturbed with them: If the ſuppoſititious Ignatius that hath taken that perſon on him, act and perſonate ſo very abſurdly, any ſober, or learned man will be glad, that he hath ſo luckily diſcovered his fraud, that the Viſor is fallen off by this means, and the cheat ſo ſpeedily come to an end. 3.

If therefore there be any thing ſerious in this expreſſion (as [not a little burthenſom to the thought of ſober and learned men] is a very ſolemn and grave ſtile, that admits no ſuſpicion of Smile or Irony) it muſt to my underſtanding ſignifie, that they that are not friends to Epiſcopacy, are not a little burthen'd to think, that Ignatius, that Primitive glorious Saint and Martyr, ſhould ſo frequently (which they muſt be ſuppoſed to think cauſeleſly and abſurdly) commend and exalt Biſhops: And though in their doing this, I know they do not expect I ſhould commend them, yet it ſo falls out, that I am very well able to excuſe them, if the paſſages, which are here ſet down by the Prefacer, be the only matter of burthen to their thoughts. 4.

For indeed it is a little ſtrange, that he that hath undertaken to write Animadverſions on my Diſſertations, and knows what Copies they are of Ignatius, which I defend, as the genuine Epiſtles, ſhould produce teſtimonies out of theſe Epiſtles to invalidate their authority, and yet never but once conſult theſe Copies to which I appeal, but gather up the off-ſcourings of the corrupt Editions, which even now he had call'd the very garbidge of the beaſt, when, if he had pleaſed, he might have entertained himſelf and the Reader with much wholeſomer diet in the volumes ſet out by Voſſius and the Lord Primate. 5.

As it is, the task lies more truly burthenſom on me, who muſt now be fain to ſurvey, very unneceſſarily all the teſtimonies here ſet down, and demonſtrate that it is unjuſtly ſuggeſted by the Prefacer, that the Author of theſe Epiſtles (he ought to mean thoſe, which he, with whom he diſputes, takes for his) exalts Biſhops with titles of honour to the greateſt Potentates on earth. 6.

For the firſt teſtimony then, taken from the Epiſtle to the Trallians, he might only have corrected the reading out of the emendate Copies, and ſo have read ὥσπερ for ὥσαπερ, and then, as the teſtimony had been more Grammatical ſence, not [whatſoever things you do, do nothing ---] but [it is neceſſary, as already you practiſe, to do nothing without the Biſhop] ſo the reaſonableneſs, and moderation of that ſpeech had been diſcernable enough, being both the ordinary language of the ancient Canons (always thought neceſſary to the unity of the Church) and peculiarly uſeful at that time to be inculcated (to keep out the poiſon of the Heretical and Schiſmatical Gnoſticks) as hath at large been formerly demonſtrated, both in anſwer to * Blondel, and again to the || London Aſſemblers, and need not now be repeated here. 7.

The ſecond teſtimony, which concerns Deacons, and is not conceived to be reconcileable with their inſtitution, Acts 6. is in our Copies, both in words and ſence, different from that which is here cited out of the corrupt, and hath nothing of high or ſtrange in it. It is thus, Δεῖ δὲ καὶ τοὺς διακόνους ὄντας μυστηρίων Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μᾶλλον πάντα τρόπον πᾶσιν ἀρέσκειν, οὐ γὰρ βρωμάτων καὶ ποτῶν εἰσὶν διάκονοι, ἀλλ' ἐκκλησίας θεοῦ ὑπηρέται, διὸ ὀφείλουσιν ἄμεμπτοι εἶναι ἀπὸ πάντων, ὡς θεοῦ φυλακὴ οὖσιν καὶ ἐπίσκοποι, ὡς μιμηταὶ θεοῦ ὄντες, καὶ ὅσῳ ἂν ὑμεῖς ὑπακούητε τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ ὡς Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ, ὁμοιοτρόπως καὶ αὐτὸς ἔσται ὑμῖν, The Deacons being Miniſters of the Myſteries of Jeſus Chriſt, ought to pleaſe all men; for they are not diſpenſers of meat and drink (i. e. not only, or eſpecially ſuch) but officers of the Church of Chriſt; they ought therefore to keep themſelves from accuſations as from fire. What is there in this, above the proportion of moderate and ſound doctrine? 8.

But the third teſtimony is an immoderate one indeed, and gives him, I confeſs, a ſupereminent juriſdiction in the [πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας, and the πάντων κρατῶν] But by good hap there is not a word of it in our Editions, and ſo we are not farther concern'd to vindicate or examine it. 9.

So for the fourth, from the Epiſtle to the Magneſians, the immoderate height whereof is argued from the φοβερὸν uſed of God, Heb. (I ſuppoſe it ſhould be) 10. 31. I need ſay no more again, but that there is no part of it in our Copies nor any thing inſtead of it, above this moderate pitch, εἰς τιμὴν ἐκείνου τοῦ θελήσαντος ἡμᾶς πρέπον ἐστὶν ἐπακούειν κατὰ μηδεμίαν ὑπόκρισιν ---- To the honour of God, whoſe pleaſure it is, it becomes us to obey the Biſhop without any hypocriſie. 10.

Of the fifth there is only thus much in our Copies by way of caution againſt Schiſms, Ἑνώθητε τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ καὶ τοῖς προκαθημένοις εἰς τύπον καὶ διδαχὴν ἀφθαρσίας, Be united to your Biſhop, and thoſe that are ſet over you, for a copy and doctrine of incorruption. Which, by the way, ſets down the plain reaſon of his ſo frequent inculcating obedience to, and union with their Biſhop (juſt as in our Vindication to the London Aſſemblers, and elſewhere, hath oft been ſaid) becauſe the true doctrine being by the Apoſtles before their deceaſe depoſited with theſe, as their ſucceſſors in every Church, and becauſe having particular knowledge of the Orthodoxalneſs of Damas in this, and the like of other Biſhops and Presbyters under them in the other Churches, there was no way ſo prudent, and ſo compendious to preſerve them from the corruptions of the Hereticks (who were then creeping in clancularly) as their keeping themſelves exactly cloſe to the Biſhop, and their Superiours under him. And according- 11.

ly it follows, As therefore the Lord being united to his Father did nothing without him, either by himſelf, or by his Apoſtles, ſo neither do ye any thing without the Biſhop, and the Presbyters; nor endeavour to account any thing reaſonable which is private, or of your own deviſing: Which again differs from the reading that is here offered, and tells us clearly what is meant by the compariſon betwixt God the Father and the Biſhop, Chriſt and the reſt of the Church, even no more than Chriſt means when he ſaid, Learn of me, for I am meek: Chriſt did all by commiſſion from, and nothing without his Father, and ſo betwixt them unity was preſerved: And in like manner the Members of the Church muſt obey, and do nothing without their Governour, and ſo union may among them be preſerved alſo. But of this intire place we have formerly ſpoken in the Vindication to the London Aſſemblers, c. 3. ſect. 3. n. 42.

12. The ſixth place is of ſome weight indeed, from the Epiſtle to the Philadelphians, requiring all, of what ſort ſoever, not only Presbyters, Deacons, and the whole Clergie, but all the People, Souldiers, Princes, Cæſar himſelf to perform obedience to the Biſhop. And here, I acknowledge, there is a teſtimony and evidence of the charge of extolling Biſhops above the greateſt Potentates; for ſure Cæſar was ſuch, and if Ignatius had thought fit to uſe ſuch language, and done it at a time when Cæſar was Heathen, and he by Cæſars ſentence already condemn'd, and within a while to be brought forth to the Amphitheatre, I might have juſtly deſerved a ſevere Animadverſion for moving tongue or pen in defence of this rebellious extravagant, ſenceleſs doctrine. But I need not take pains to examine the place, my memory, as ill as it is, aſſures me there is no ſuch thing in the Epiſtles own'd by us Prelatiſts; and upon conſulting the place, I find there are almoſt eight pages together inſerted by ſome Impoſtor, of all which there remains not above one page in our Editions, which certainly is an evidence, that ſome Reformation was wrought, ſome degree of purity reſtored to theſe Epiſtles, by this ſo fiery a purgation: And 'tis very ſtrange that this Prefacer could not take notice of it.

13. So again the ſeventh, in the Epiſtle to the Smyrnæans, is advanced to the ſame pitch of Inſolence, placing the Biſhop betwixt God and the King, and that by way of correction of the words of Scripture [My ſon, fear God, and the King] and all the ſeveral branches of that place here cited, are every word vaniſht out of our volume of Epiſtles. And ſo the Prefacer hath only had an opportunity to betray his miſtake, in affirming of Ignatius at the time of writing that Epiſtle, that he was going upon an accuſation to appear before the Emperor, whereas it is certain he had before this, received his condemnation from Trajan the Emperor at Antioch, and was now carrying to Rome for his execution; and that is all he hath gained by producing this teſtimony.

14. And ſo you ſee I have no reaſon to make any further anſwer to what the Prefacer here juſtly adds concerning the unreaſonableneſs, and unchriſtianneſs of theſe expreſſions, whether in theſe inſertions publiſhed once under Ignatius his name, or the like in the Conſtitutions fathered alſo upon Clemens; I am as perfectly of his opinion concerning the impiety of them, as he could wiſh, and am thereby obliged to value our new Editions the more, for freeing an innocent Martyr and his Reader from ſuch Impoſtures.

15. Only I wonder that over and above all thoſe that are by that Impoſtor appointed to obey the Biſhop, the Prefacer (as if the other had been too wary) ſhould think fit to make a further inſertion, and to the Catalogue of the Biſhop's ſubjects, add [All Popes] when the Greek cited by him hath only ἱερέων, which he truly renders Prieſts in the words following. What is this but to corrupt the ſink, to help the Garbidge to get a ſtronger ſavour, to go beyond the Artificer at his own weapon, to fancy a command to the Biſhop to obey himſelf, to Pope Clemens to be ſubject to Clemens the Pope? If the ſuppoſititious Clemens had written at that rate, he had certainly never impoſed on any. But I muſt not adviſe my Monitor, elſe he ſhould have rendred the Greek in plain Engliſh, and ſpared that whether Paraphraſe, or Inſertion [All Popes.]

16. The laſt place produced out of the teſtimonies cited in the Diſſertations, is indeed to be found in Voſſius's Edition, and the Mediceun Copy of our Epiſtles. And the producing of that from thence, and mentioning it as produced by me, is an evidence that the Prefacer knew the way, if he had pleaſed to make uſe of it, to have cited none but Genuine Teſtimonies: For all ſuch, as far as the uncorrupted Copies would afford, were by me ſet down to his hand: But that method was not, it ſeems, for his turn; the Reader could not have been ſo amuzed with a multitude of odious paſſages out of Ignatius, if this, as fairer, ſo eaſier courſe had been taken.

17. For this one place then, where the genuine Ignatius bids them, or rather exhorts Polycarp the Biſhop to adviſe them, to give heed to the Biſhop, that God may attend to them, and adds, my ſoul for theirs who obey the Biſhop, Presbyters, and Deacons] though I cannot wonder that in theſe days there are ſome, who are not well qualified to ſay Amen to it; yet being taken as it was meant by that holy man, there is certainly nothing in it to be ſtartled at, or improbable to be written by the Saint Ignatius. 'Tis in the Epiſtle to Polycarp, and it concerns the Church under him. And at that time it appears the Gnoſtick hereticks were infuſing their poiſon there, and their firſt artifice of inſinuation was, taking upon them to underſtand or know more than their Biſhop or Teacher did, though he the moſt famous Doctor of all Aſia, διδάσκαλος Ἀποστολικὸς, καὶ προφητικὸς, and διδάσκαλος ἐπίσημος, an Apoſtolick, and Prophetick, and illuſtrious Doctor, ſaith the Epiſtle of the Church of Smyrna concerning him. This is ſet down in the words precedent, ἐὰν καυχήσεταί τις ἀπὸ λιπὸς, καὶ ἐὰν γνωσθῇ παλίον τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ, ἐφθάρται, If a man aſſume and boaſt of his knowledge, take upon him to know more than the Biſhop, by this you may know that he hath imbibed and ſuckt in that Gnoſtick poiſon (that makes him ſo ſwell preſently.) And in oppoſition to theſe it is, and upon perfect knowledge of their Biſhop, that he thus proceeds to exhort and conjure them to attend to their Biſhop, and not to ſuch aſſuming Corehs; and to do it more effectually, offers to jeopard his ſoul for theirs, that they ſhall ſuffer no damage for ſo doing. And ſuppoſing the Biſhop to be in the right, Orthodox and careful to build them up in the truth, and that the hereticks which advanced themſelves above the Biſhop, deſign'd that which would be their ruine and perdition, if they ſucceed in their attempt (as it is certain that this muſt, at this time, in this matter, be ſuppoſed) what danger was Ignatius in, by venturing his Soul in this manner? This certainly he might do, as far as ἀντίψυχος ἐγὼ reacheth (no more than this, that he durſt or would be content to venture it) though his ſoul (nay more than his life, which he now more than ventured) was not his own to diſpoſe of.

SECT. IV.

Of the three Orders in the Church. Of the Order of Presbyters when it came in. No mention of it in Clemens Romanus, or Polycarp, but in Ignatius. Lombards words of the two Orders. The Popiſh Doctrine concerning Biſhops.

FRom theſe premiſes thus laid, and, I ſuppoſe, by this time, removed out of the way, from being occaſion of ſtumbling to any, he now proceeds to infer his concluſion, thus; 1.

"Upon theſe, and many more the like accounts do the Epiſtles ſeem to me to be like the children "that the Jews had by their ſtrange wives, Neh. 13. who ſpake part the language of Aſhdod, and "part the language of the Jews. That there are in them many footſteps of a gracious ſpirit, every "way worthy of, and becoming the great and holy perſonage whoſe they are eſteemed, ſo there is "evidently a mixture of the working of that worldly and carnal ſpirit, which in his days was not ſo "let looſe as in after times. For what is there in the Scripture, what is in the genuine Epiſtle "of Clemens; that gives countenance to thoſe deſcriptions of Epiſcopacy, Biſhops, and the ſubjecti-"on to them, that are in thoſe Epiſtles (as now we have them) ſo inſiſted on? What Titles are "given to Biſhops? What Soveraignty, Power, Rule, Dominion is aſcribed to them? Is there any "thing of the like nature in the Writings of the Apoſtles? In Clemens, the Epiſtle of Polycarpus, "&c.? or any unqueſtionable legitimate off-ſpring of any of the firſt Worthies of Chriſtianity? "Whence have they their three Orders of Biſhops, Presbyters, and Deacons, upon the diſtinct ob-"ſervation of which, ſo much weight is laid? Is there any one word, iota, tittle, or ſyllable in the "whole Book of God giving countenance to any ſuch diſtinctions? Eph. 4. 11. We have Paſtors "and Teachers, Rom. 12. 7, 8. And thoſe who are Presbyters we find called "Biſhops Acts 20. 28. So that Deacons we know, and Biſhops who are Presbyters, or Presbyters "who are Biſhops we know, but Biſhops, Presbyters, and Deacons, as three diſtinct Orders in the "Church, from the Scripture we know not. Neither did Clemens in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians "know any more than we do, which a few inſtances will manifeſt: Saith he, ſpeaking of the "Apoſtles, Καὶ χώρας δὴ καὶ πόλεις κηρύσσοντες, καθίσανον τὰς ἀπαρχὰς αὐτῶν, δοκιμάσαντες τῷ πνεύματι, "εἰς ἐπισκόπους καὶ διακόνους τῶν μελλόντων πιστεύειν· καὶ τοῦτο οὐ καινῶς, ἐκ γὰρ δὴ πολλῶν χρόνων ἐγέγραπτο περὶ ἐπι-"σκόπων καὶ διακόνων ---- Biſhops and Deacons (as in the Church at Philippi) this man knows, but the "third Order he is utterly unacquainted withal. And that the difference of this mans expreſſions "concerning Church Rulers from thoſe in the Epiſtle under conſideration, may the better appear; "and his aſſerting of Biſhops and Presbyters to be one and the ſame, may the more clearly be evi-"denced, I ſhall tranſcribe one other paſſage from him, whoſe length I hope will be excuſed from "the uſefulneſs of it to the purpoſe in hand, Page 57, 58. Καὶ οἱ Ἀπόστολοι ἡμῶν ἔγνωσαν διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου "ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὅτι ἔρις ἔσται περὶ τοῦ ὀνόματος τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς, διὰ ταύτην οὖν αἰτίαν, πρόγνωσιν εἰληφότες τελείαν, "κατέστησαν τοὺς προειρημένους, καὶ μεταξὺ ἐπινομὴν δεδώκασιν, ὅπως, ἐὰν κοιμηθῶσιν, διαδέξωνται ἕτεροι δεδοκιμασμέ-"νοι ἄνδρες τὴν λειτουργίαν αὐτῶν, τοὺς ἐν καλοκαθέντας ὑπ' ἐκείνων, ἢ μεταξὺ ὑφ' ἑτέρων ἐλλογίμων ἀνδρῶν συνευδο-"κησάσης τῆς ἐκκλησίας πάσης (for ſo it ſeems, was the manner of the Church in his days, that their Of-"ficers were appointed by the conſent of the whole Church) καὶ λειτουργήσαντας ἀμέμπτως τῷ ποιμνίῳ τοῦ "Χριστοῦ μετὰ ταπεινοφροσύνης, ἡσύχως, καὶ ἀβασάνιστως μεμαρτυρημένους τὸ πολλοῖς χρόνοις ὑπὸ πάντων, τούτους οὐ δικαί-"ως νομίζομεν ἀποβάλλεσθαι τῆς λειτουργίας. ἁμαρτία γὰρ οὐ μικρὰ ἡμῖν ἔσται ἐὰν τοὺς ἀμέμπτως καὶ ὁσίως προσενέγκαντας "τὰ δῶρα τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς ἀποβάλλωμεν. Μακάριοι οἱ προδοιπορήσαντες πρεσβύτεροι (or the Biſhops of whom he "was ſpeaking) ὅτινες ἔγκαρπον καὶ τελείαν ἔσχον τὴν ἀνάλυσιν, &c. And ſundry other diſcoveries are "there in that Epiſtle of the like nature: It is not my deſign nor purpoſe to inſiſt upon the parity of "Biſhops and Presbyters, or rather the Identity of the Office denoted by ſundry appellations from "theſe, and the like places: This work is done to the full by Blondellus, that our labour in this "kind (were that the purpoſe in hand) is prevented. He that thinks the arguments of that Learn-"ned man to this purpoſe are indeed anſwered throughly, and removed by D. H. in his fourth Diſ-"ſertation, where he propoſes them to conſideration, may one day think it needful to be able to di-"ſtinguiſh between words and things. That Clemens owns in a Church but two ſorts of Officers, "the firſt whereof he calls ſometimes Biſhops, ſometimes Presbyters, the other Deacons, the Doctor "himſelf doth not deny. That in the judgment of Clemens no more were inſtituted in the Church "is no leſs evident. And this carries the conviction of its truth ſo clearly with it, that Lombard "himſelf confeſſes, Hos ſolos miniſtrorum duos ordines Eccleſiam primitivam habuiſſe, & de his ſolis præ-"ceptum Apoſtoli nos habere, lib. 4. ſent. D. 24.

To ſuperſede a concluſion not magiſterially dictated (that were the confidence quarrell'd at in me) but regularly inferr'd from the premiſes, there can be no more neceſſary than to diſcover the falſe-neſs of the premiſes, or their weakneſs and incompetency to induce that concluſion. And this being already done particularly and at large, 'tis impertinent to give any further anſwer to, or account of this 2.

concluſion. I ſhall only lightly paſs through the ſeveral ſteps of it, and acknowledge of his concluſion, as much as either here, or from the premiſes I find any reaſon to acknowledge, and briefly touch at the reaſons (before more largely rendred) why other parts of it may not be conſented to.

3. And 1. what he ſaith of theſe Epiſtles, that they ſeem like the children of the ſtrange wives, [ſpeaking part the language of Aſhdod, and part the language of the Jews] hath perfect truth in it, being applied to the former corrupt Editions of Ignatius; but none at all, nor any appearance of any, as it is applied to that volume, by which we deſired to be judged, in the buſineſs of Epiſcopacy.

4. Secondly, what is by theſe Epiſtles, as they are in our more emendate Copies, affirmed of Biſhops, is very agreeable to what is by the Scripture, by Clemens, by Polycarp, ſaid of the ſame ſubject, all which under the name of Ἐπίσκοποι, Ποιμένες, Διδάσκαλοι, Πρεσβύτεροι, Ἡγούμενοι, and the like, deſcribe their office, and require ſubjection and obedience to be paid to them.

5. Thirdly, for the three orders, particularly for the ſecond of thoſe three, which anciently, and ſtill (but either rarely, or not at all in the Scripture) are called Presbyters, but may moſt diſtinctly be ſtiled Presbyteri ſecundarii, or partiarii, Elders of a ſecond rank, admitted to the exerciſe of ſome parts of the Epiſcopal office, but not to all, and ſo diſtinguiſht from Biſhops, or Elders of the firſt rank, theſe the Prefacer cannot but know that I do not undertake to find either in the Scripture, or in Clement's, or in Polycarp's Epiſtle, and that though I have reaſons to aſſure me, that when the number of believers increaſed ſo far, that there was both need of them, and competent ſtore of fit perſons to undergo that office, then ſuch Presbyters were ordained to bear part of the burthen with the Biſhop, as the ſeventy Elders with Moſes (and I have competent reaſons to perſwade me, that this was done, in ſome places, before the departure or deceaſe of all the quire of Apoſtles, particularly that S. John inſtituted ſuch in Aſia, when he * did ὅλας ἀεμόζειν ἐκκλησίας) yet this was not ſo univerſally done thus early, as that either the Writers of the Scripture could, or after them Clement at Rome ſhould be required to make mention of it: And for Polycarp, though I ſuppoſe, and doubt not but he lived to ſee ſuch in the Church, yet there was no neceſſity that in that one Epiſtle of his, he ſhould mention them, or uſe the word Πρεσβύτεροι, Elders, of any others but Biſhops; it being certain that after the ſecundary Presbyters were inſtituted, the name Πρεσβύτεροι ſtill continued common to Biſhops, and was not preſently appropriated to Presbyters, as is elſewhere made clear out of Iræneus, Clemens Alexandrinus and Tertullian, Diſſert. 4. c. 22. and in the vindication of them from the exceptions of the London Miniſters.

* Clem. Ὑποτυπ. apud Euſeb. l. 2. c. xv.

6. It remains therefore that the Epiſtles of Ignatius are the beſt records of Primitive Antiquity, on which to build this ſecond Order of Secundarie, or Partiarie Presbyters; which if they were inſtituted perſonally by S. John, or if they were deſigned by the other Apoſtles, and not ordained in their times, only becauſe thus early (νέα ὄντα κηρύγματα and πλήθος μὴ ὄντα, in Epiphanius's ſtile) there was no need of them; their Inſtitution will ſtill be Apoſtolical, though not mentioned in the Apoſtles writings; as in the Anſwer to the London Aſſemblers hath been ſhewn alſo.

7. Fourthly, concerning the title of Paſtors and Doctors, or Teachers, Διδάσκαλοι in Scripture, he cannot but know the account given by me, viz. that by all, and each of thoſe, Biſhops are to be underſtood, as hath been ſhewed Diſſert. 4. c. 14, 15. and nothing being here ſaid to diſprove it, 'tis but petitio principii to ſuppoſe the contrary: So alſo of Ἡγούμενοι Rulers, I have ſpoken at large, Diſſert. 4. c. 13. The like of Ἐπίσκοποι, when they have none but Deacons joyn'd with them, Phil. 1. 1. and 1 Tim. 3. All which are perfectly agreeable to my hypotheſis, that there are no ſingle Presbyters, or middle order of Officers betwixt Biſhops and Deacons that I diſcern mention'd in Scripture. So the uſe of Πρεσβύτεροι, Elders for Biſhops, Tit. 1. 5, 7. is by me acknowledged (though not of Biſhops for Presbyters, which conceit it as largely * elſewhere confuted.

* Diſſ 4. c. 8. Vindic. of Diſſ. c. 3 ſect. 19. n. 27.

8. And for the two large and expreſs places here tranſcribed out of Clemens, they had before been particularly produced by me, and found perfectly to conſent, and accord with the notions, which out of Scripture I had received, and which by Epiphanius were vouched ἐκ βαθυλάτων ἱστορίων, out of the profoundeſt Records. And for Blondel's collection to the contrary, I ſhall hope that to other men my anſwers will appear more than verbal, and though I have here ſomewhat an unkind character given me of them, viz. that they that approve them may one day think it needful to diſtinguiſh between words and things, yet I am not quite diſcouraged, being competently aſſured, that if he that ſaid ſo, had had any thing elſe to ſay, any more than words to object againſt them, he would not have been ſo reſerved, or ſparing of his pains, as to have denied it place in his Animadverſions.

9. Laſtly, 'Tis evident (what he ſaith) that I do not deny Clement's owning but two ſorts of Officers in a Church, Biſhops (ſometimes called alſo Πρεσβύτεροι, Elders) and Deacons: But it is as evident by my words, what I mean, and by Clement's words, that I mean as he doth, viz. that at the Apoſtles firſt preaching and planting the Faith in Cities and Regions, before any multitude of Believers came in, they conſtituted in each City no more but a Biſhop, and one, or more Deacons, after the exemplar in Jeruſalem, where James the Lord's Brother, ſoon after our Saviours aſcenſion, was conſtituted Biſhop there, and ſeven Deacons, Acts 6. to attend him, but as yet no Presbyters of any middle order between them and him.

10. This I have cleared concerning thoſe firſt times, out of Epiphanius, and taken notice of the cauſes of it, intimated both by Clemens and him, 1. The paucity of fit men for that office, οὐκ ἐυρέθησαν ἐν αὐτοῖς πρεσβύτεροι καθισταθῆναι, there were not found among them men fit to be conſtituted Presbyters; and 2. The no need of any more at that time, ἠρκέσθησαν ἐπὶ τῷ κατὰ τόπον μόνῳ ἐπισκόπῳ, a Biſhop in each City or Region ſerved the turn (only he could not be without a Deacon) which is the more manifeſt, becauſe the Biſhops and Deacons, which were then inſtituted, were (as in the former of theſe teſtimonies from Clemens appears) the ἀπαρχαὶ, the firſt-fruits of their labours, their firſt converts, and the flock aſſigned them, the μέλλοντες πιστεύειν, thoſe that ſhould afterwards believe.

11. To this if the words of Lombard would agree (as they will, ſo far as here cited, if only by Eccleſia Primitiva we underſtand the firſt age, or infancy of the Church, at the time of the νέον κήρυγμα, the firſt preaching of the Apoſtles) then that teſtimony would by me be fully ſubſcribed alſo, meaning by the duos ordines, the Biſhops truly ſo called (and by him ſtiled Epiſcopos & Presbyteros) and Deacons, concerning cerning whom, and whom only, 'tis true, præceptum Apoſtoli nos habere, that we have the precept of the Apoſtle, viz. S. Paul in his Epiſtles to Timothy and Titus. But the truth is, Lombard's words belong to another matter, a nicety that is gotten into their Schools, that Epiſcopacy and Presbytery are not diverſi ordines, but diverſi gradus, not different orders, but only different degrees of the ſame one order of Sacerdotium or Prieſthood, upon a fancy that Sacerdos is ſo called from ſacra do, delivering, or imparting holy things; ſo ſaith he expreſly, Ideo autem etiam Presbyteri ſacerdotes vocantur, quia ſacrum dant, Presbyters are alſo called Prieſts, becauſe they give holy things. In which matter as it is of little importance which way the queſtion is decided, as long as the ſuperiority of Biſhops over Presbyters is agreed on to be ſuch, as hath ſome Powers reſerved to the one, which are not common to the other, ſo if Lombard's words ſhould by any be thought farther extenſible, as founded in that opinion, that firſt Presbyters ruled in comnion, and that beſide them there were none then but Deacons, I muſt then think it as reaſonable for me to be permitted to forſake Lombard in this, as the Prefacer will deem it for him to depart from him in other matters.

For though it be here ſet down as an argument of the evidence and clear conviction, and ſo of much 12.
more, than of the bare truth of the poſition, that Lombard himſelf confeſſeth it (which, I ſuppoſe, is not an acknowledgment that all that Lombard ſaith is true, but an inſinuation that this of Biſhops, as maintained by me, is for the matter a Popiſh Doctrine, and yet is in this particular rejected, and the contrary confeſt by Lombard an eminent Popiſh Doctor) yet I muſt crave leave to interpoſe my exceptions to this way of arguing or concluding.

1. That neither I, nor any true member of the Church of England, owe or pay any obſervance to 13.
the bare dictates of Lombard, or indeed farther than he hath reaſons or proofs of Scripture or Antiquity to confirm them.

2. That in this point, which muſt be waged by Teſtimonies, there are none produced, I ſhall add, 14.
producible by him out of Scripture, to prove that ever there was a time, when there were in the Church none but thoſe two orders of Presbyters (in our modern notion) and Deacons; I may (without immoderate confidence) aſſume, that all that can be offer'd to this purpoſe, are conſider'd, and anſwer'd in the Diſſertations.

3. That the principal Teſtimonies of Antiquity, on which in this matter ſome Papiſts build, being 15.
ſome obſcure words of S. Hierom the Presbyter, which yet muſt be ſo underſtood, as to be reconciled with his making the three orders to be of Apoſtolical tradition, the reſult muſt be this, that though they are miſtaken in ſome circumſtances, yet they maintain with us the more ſubſtantial truth, that Biſhops are inſtituted by the Apoſtles.

So 'tis elſewhere made evident of Panormitan, who though he affirm, that immediately after the 16.
death of Chriſt, all the Presbyters in common ruled the Church, yet poſtmodum, ſaith he, ordinaverunt L. 1. Decret. de teris, Within a while the Apoſtles ordain'd that Biſhops ſhould be created, and reſerved certain Sacraments to them (Confirmation and Ordination) and forbad them to be medled with by ſimple Presbyters. And accordingly it is alſo in the forecited place of Lombard, in the beginning of that 24 Diſt. Presbyteri, licèt ſint Sacerdotes, tamen Pontificatus apicem non habent, ſicut Epiſcopi, quia ipſi nec chriſmate frontem ſignant, nec Paracletum dant, quod ſolis deberi Epiſcopis, lectio Actorum Apoſtolorum demonſtrat. Presbyters though they be Prieſts, yet have not that ſuperior part of the Pontificate, which the Biſhops have, becauſe they neither Confirm nor Ordain, which, that it belongs to the Biſhop only, the reading of the Acts of the Apoſtles demonſtrates. Where whatever his opinion was concerning that nicety, of diſtinction betwixt Degree and Order, it is evident that he gives the ſuperiority of degree to Biſhops, and reſerves to them thoſe two Powers, and foundeth this in the Apoſtles times and practice.

4. That though this may ſeem at the firſt, but a ſlight difference in theſe men from that which the 17.
Ancients have more generally taught, viz. that the Apoſtles firſt inſtituted Biſhops and Deacons, not ſimple Presbyters and Deacons (as beſide the plain words of Clemens and S. Paul, the ſence whereof may poſſibly be controverted, the teſtimony of Epiphanius, and of the profoundeſt monuments of Hiſtory irrefragably inforceth) yet their intereſts for the magnifying of the Papacy, upon the ſcore of ſucceſſion to S. Peter, do clearly diſcover themſelves in this way of deciſion, and ſo make Papiſts very incompetent witneſſes in this matter.

For upon this conceit [that there was a time in the firſt plantation of the Goſpel, when the power 18.
of Biſhops and Prieſts lay confuſed, though afterward ſeparated by the Apoſtles themſelves] the concluſion aimed at, and, when occaſion requires, deduced by them, is evident, that this later, though Apoſtolical inſtitution, may be altered by the Pope, out of the ſupereminence of his power, as he is the Vicar of CHRIST, though they pretend not, that he may lawfully attempt to overthrow the primary and fundamental Sanction. And ſo, though Prieſthood may not be taken out of the Church, yet the tenure, by which Biſhops hold, is not ſo firm; but muſt ſtand wholly at the pleaſure of the Pope.

The defence of which concluſion, being none of the Intereſts of the Cauſe, which I aſſert, I ſhall 19.
no farther be obliged to hearken to the premiſes, as they are here but intimated by Lombard, and frequently repeated and built upon by ſundry of that party, than they ſhall be able regularly to prove them: Which being not here attempted, but only the ſpecious (but fallacious) argument propoſed from the confeſſion of Lombard himſelf (whoſe confeſſions are no obligations to all other men) I have no more occaſion to inlarge on this particular.

Which if it were ſeaſonable, I might eaſily do, in obſerving other particulars among the Popiſh 20.
Writers, wherein they ſhew themſelves far from paſſionate eſpouſers of Epiſcopacy. The Pope, forſooth, muſt be the fountain of all Eccleſiaſtical authority, and all other Rivulets muſt run in a weak ſtream, and then alſo derive all they have from him. And ſo much on occaſion of this teſtimony from Lombard, and much more than was neceſſary to have ſaid, if I had lookt no farther than his Teſtimony.

CHAP. IV.

Concerning the Power of the People in appointing Biſhops, and Deacons, and other Eccleſiaſtical affairs.

SECT. I.

Clement's words, Συνευδοκησάσης πάσης τ ἐκκλησίας, conſidered, and vindicated. Συνευδοκεῖν. Πνεύματι δοκιμάζειν. Ἐλλόγιμοι ἄνδρες. The firſt Biſhops deſigned particularly by God. When this way of deſignation ceaſed.

1. UPON occaſion of the former citation of ſome words out of Clemens, the diſpleaſure is for a while removed from Ignatius, and another matter of diſcourſe is ſprung, concerning the power of the People in appointing Biſhops and Deacons to their office in thoſe days. To this we ſhall now attend, as it follows, in theſe words;

2. "It ſeems moreover that thoſe Biſhops and Deacons in thoſe days (as was obſerved) were appointed to the office by, and with the conſent of the people, or whole body of the Church; no leſs do thoſe words import, συνευδοκησάσης τ ἐκκλησίας πάσης. Our Doctor indeed renders thoſe words, applaudente aut congratulante Eccleſiâ totâ, and adds (ſatis pro imperio) nihil hic de acceptatione totius Eccleſiæ, ſine quâ Epiſcopos & Diaconos ab Apoſtolis & Apoſtolicis viris conſtitutos non eſſe, ex hoc loco concludit Blondellus, quaſi qui ex Dei juſſu & approbatione conſtituebantur, populi etiam acceptatione indigere putandi eſſent, Diſſert. 4. c. 7, 8, 10. And who dares take that confidence upon him, as to affirm any more, what ſo great a Doctor hath denied? Though the ſcope of the place, the nature of the thing, and firſt moſt common ſence of the word here uſed, being willingly to conſent (as it is alſo uſed in the Scripture for the moſt part, Acts 8. 1. 1 Cor. 7. 12.) to a thing to be done, or to the doing of it, yet here it muſt be taken to applaud or congratulate, or what elſe our Doctor pleaſes, becauſe he will have it ſo. Ἐλλόγιμοι ἄνδρες alſo muſt be viri Apoſtolici, men with Apoſtolical power, when they are only the choice men of the Church where ſuch a Conſtitution of Officers is had, that are intended, becauſe it is our Doctors purpoſe to have the words ſo rendred: Ex juſſu Dei & approbatione, is added, as though any particular command or approbation of God were intimated, for the conſtitution of the Biſhops and Deacons mention'd, beyond the inſtitution of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that Elders ſhould be ordained in every Church, becauſe this would ſeem to be excluſive wholly of the conſent of the people, as any way needful or required to their Conſtitution, which yet, as it is practically falſe, no ſuch thing being mention'd by Clemens, who recounteth the way and means whereby Officers were continued in the Church, even after the deceaſe of the Apoſtles, and thoſe firſt ordained by them to that holy employment, ſo alſo it is argumentatively weak and unconcluding. God appointed, deſigned Saul to be King, approving of his ſo being, and yet he would have the people come together to chuſe him. So alſo was it in the caſe of David. Though the Apoſtles in the name and the authority of God, appointed the Deacons of the Church at Jeruſalem, yet they would have the whole Church look out among themſelves the men to be appointed. And that the ordaining of the Elders was with the peoples Election, Acts 14. 23. It will ere long be manifeſted, that neither our Doctor, nor any of his Aſſociates have as yet diſproved. This poor thing the people, being the peculiar people of Chriſt, the heritage of God, and holy Temple unto him, &c. will one day be found to be another manner of thing, than many of our great Doctors have ſuppoſed. But he informs us, Cap. 4. Sect. 3. from that teſtimony which we cited before, that the Apoſtles in the appointment of Biſhops and Deacons (for ſo the words expreſly are) are ſaid τῷ πνεύματι δοκιμάσαι, i. e. ſaith he, Revelationibus edoctos eſſe, quibus demùm hæc dignitas communicanda eſſet, that is, that they appointed thoſe whom God revealed to them in an extraordinary manner to be ſo ordained, and this is the meaning of τῷ πνεύματι δοκιμάζοντες. And why ſo? the holy Ghoſt orders concerning the appointment of Deacons δοκιμαζέσθωσαν πρῶτον, 1 Tim. 3. 10. That thoſe, who are to be taken into office and power in the Church, had need firſt to be tried and approved, is granted. And this work the Apoſtles give to the multitude of the Church, Acts 6. Where yet after the peoples Election, and the Apoſtles approbation, and the trial of both, one that was choſen, is ſuppoſed to have proved none of the beſt. And yet of him, and them, are the Apoſtles ſaid by Clemens that they did τῷ πνεύματι δοκιμάσαι. But how ſhall it be made to appear, that ſpiritu probantes, trying or proving by the ſpirit, or ſpiritually proving them, to try whether they were able Miniſters of the New Teſtament, not of the Letter, but of the Spirit, proving them by that Spirit, which was promiſed unto them to lead them into all truth, muſt needs ſignifie, they were taught whom they ſhould appoint by immediate Revelation. To prove by the Spirit, or ſpiritually the perſons that are to be made Miniſters or Biſhops, is to have their names revealed to us. Stephen is ſaid to ſpeak ἐν τῷ πνεύματι, Acts 6. 10. And Paul purpoſed ἐν τῷ πνεύματι, Acts 19. 21. and we are ſaid to ſerve God ἐν τῷ πνεύματι, Gal. 5. 5. and to make ſupplication ἐν τῷ πνεύματι, Eph. 6. 18. with many more expreſſions of the like nature. Does all this relate to immediate Revelation, and are all things done thereby which we are ſaid to do in the ſpirit? Before we were inſtructed in this myſtery, and were informed that δοκιμάσαντες τῷ πνεύματι did ſignifie to be taught by Revelation, we had thought that the expreſſion of doing any thing τῷ πνεύματι had manifeſted the aſſiſtance, guidance, and direction, which for the doing of it we receive by the holy and bleſſed Spirit of God promiſed unto "us,

"us, and beſtowed on, in, and through the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Yea, but he adds that it is alſo ſpo-
"ken of the Apoſtles, προγνωσιν præcognitionem (i. e.) revelationem ἐληφότες τελείαν, they appointed "them Biſhops and Deacons by the helps and preſence of the Spirit with them, the Apoſtles exami"ned, tried thoſe who were to be appointed Biſhops, ſo obtaining and receiving a perfect foreknow-
"ledge or knowledge of them before their admiſſion into office. This alſo expreſſes revelation
"(προγνωσιν ἐληφότες) upon trial it was revealed unto them, and ſo muſt any thing elſe be allowed "to be, that our Doctor will have to be ſo, now he is aſſerting to that purpoſe. But had the ἀλλό-
"γιμοι ἄνδρες, who appointing Biſhops and Deacons after the Apoſtles time, had they alſo this ſpe-
"cial Revelation? Or may they not be ſaid δοκιμάσαι τῷ πνεύματι? If not, how will you look upon "them under the notion of ἀλλογίμων ἀνδρῶν, who neglected ſo great a duty: If they did, let us "know when this way of conſtituting Church Officers by immediate revelation ceaſed, and what "was afterwards took up in the room thereof: and who they were that firſt proceeded on another "account, and on what Authority they did it? There are a generation of men in the world, will
"thank the Doctor for this inſinuation, and will tye knots upon it, that will trouble him to looſe.

I ſhall not here ſuffer my ſelf to be detain'd by the ſcoffs and accuſations of affirming pro imperio, 3.
&c. with which I am very liberally treated, but, withal, before this time, ſo familiarly acquainted, that I can look on them as parts of his ſtile, as idioms of his Dialect, and nothing elſe. All that can pertain to me, by way of vindication, is, intirely to ſet down what it is I have ſaid, and then to remove whatſoever appearance of reply, or objection I can here diſcern to be made to it.

Upon theſe words of Clement [συνευδοκησάσης ἡ ἐκκλησίας πάσης] delivered about the ordaining or 4.
conſtituting of Biſhops by the Apoſtles and other ἀλλόγιμοι ἄνδρες, D. Blondel had inferr'd this concluſion [Epiſcopos & Diaconos Apoſtolis Apoſtoliciſque viris, nunquam niſi totâ acceptante Eccleſiâ conſtitutos eſſe] that Biſhops and Deacons were never conſtituted by the Apoſtles or Apoſtolical perſons, unleſs the whole Church accepted them.] This concluſion he thus crudely inferr'd, without any one ſyllable added to confirm it, leaving it to ſecure and ſuſtain it ſelf by theſe few words of Clement's teſtimony.

The teſtimony, wherein thoſe words were contained, being by me laid down at length, and con- 5.
ſidered as far as was uſeful to the main Queſtion concerning Epiſcopacy, I could not fitly take farther notice of thoſe few words of it, and his concluſion haſtily collected from them, than to ſay that there was nothing in it concerning the neceſſity of that acceptation of the Church, which Blondel concluded thence; And this I choſe to do παρέργως, in paſſing, and in a parentheſis, not willing to detain the Reader any longer ſo impertinently, adding only a ſhort reaſon, why I could not conceive that the Biſhops by them conſtituted, could want the approbation of the Church, becauſe it had formerly been ſaid of them by Clement, that they were conſtituted by the appointment and approbation of God, which I ſuppoſed muſt neceſſarily ſuperſede all want of the Churches approbation. And upon theſe grounds
I rendred the phraſe συνευδοκησάσης ἡ ἐκκλησίας πάσης, not as D. Blondel had done, acceptante ſimul univerſâ Eccleſiâ, but applaudente aut congratulante totâ Eccleſiâ, the whole Church applauding or congratulating.

In this paſſage thus truly related, in every circumſtance, I hope 'tis already clear, that I was not 6. guilty of any imperious or magiſterial affirming (which I diſlike ſo much in others, that I would be very ſorry to be found guilty of it) when to a poſitive unconfirm'd concluſion, I made reply by giving my reaſon, why I could not conſent that it was duly inferr'd from thoſe words in Clement.

And for the thing it ſelf, the matter of my affirming, being now excited to it, I ſhall give a full 7.
account of it, though there it had been impertinent to do ſo.

And that 1. by conſidering the force of the word συνευδοκησάσης, 2. the poſition of it in that place, 8.
3. the circumſtances of the context, which preclude Blondel's, and inforce my interpretation.

The word εὐδοκεῖν] is known to ſignifie [being well pleaſed] ſo συνευδοκεῖν is either ſimply the 9.
ſame, or with the connotation of a relation to ſome other, whether perſons or matter, formerly ſpoken of. So 1 Mac. 1. 57. ὅστις συνευδόκει τῷ νόμῳ, if any were well pleaſed with the Law, i. e. reſolved to live according to the Moſaical inſtitution, ſuch as are there joyn'd with thoſe with whom was found the Book of the Teſtament, they that would not forſake the Jewiſh obſervances, upon Antiochus his prohibition of them. So again, the ſame ſort of men which would not live according to the Kings heatheniſh commands, but kept cloſe to the Jewiſh laws, are ſaid μὴ συνευδοκεῖν τῇ μεταθέσει, not to be well pleaſed with the change, 1 Mac. 11. 24. we render it in both places conſenting and not conſenting, but ſure it ſignifies not any legal conſent asked of them, at the conſtituting either of the Law by God, or of the change by Antiochus, but an acquieſcence, or peaceable, willing, conſtant ſubmiſſion and obedience to it. Elſewhere we render it being well pleaſed with, 2 Mac. 11. 35. where yet the matter ſpoken of, makes it a more formal act of conſent, than in either of the former it had been. Whatſoever (ſay the Conſuls) Lyſias hath granted, ᾧ ἡμεῖς συνευδοκήμεν, therewith we alſo are well pleaſed, which indeed is a confirmation of Lyſias's act or grant.

Theſe are all the places where the word in that double compoſition is found in the Greek, whether 10.
Canonical or Apocryphal of the Old Teſtament. In the New we have it, Luke 11. 48. where of the Jews it is ſaid, that they did συνευδοκεῖν, allow, or approve their Fathers works, thoſe which they had done long ſince, and wherein their approbation was never asked, the killing of the Prophets, ver. 47. So Acts 8. 1. of Sauls concurrence in S. Stephens death, ſo far as to keep the cloaths of the Executioners, which ſignified him to have been an active perſon in that murther, to have had a ſpecial liking to it, not again any act of legal conſent; for all was there done without legal proceſs, judicio zelotarum, by the (judgment, or rather) popular fury of Zelots. So again Rom. 1. 32. συνευδοκοῦσι τοῖς πράσσουσι, They take pleaſure, ſay we, in them that do them. There I think Theophylact's Scholion is very proper, συνηγοροῦσι τῷ κακῷ, they not only do unlawful things themſelves, but plead for wickedneſs, are Advocates for thoſe that commit any the fouleſt evil. So again 1 Cor. 7. 12. of the Chriſtian man or woman that hath an unbeliever to wife or husband, εἰ συνευδοκεῖ οἰκεῖν μετ' αὐτοῦ, if the unbelieving man be pleaſed, think good, be content to live with the Chriſtian; or if we render it again, conſent, ſent, yet ſure we muſt not mean any legal conſent, for that had been formerly given in marriage, and no new act of it, is now needful in the unbeliever, but only a being content to continue to live with her, which is there oppoſed to departing, ver. 15.

11. By this view of the word in the Scripture, it already appears, how little ground there is for D. Blondel's rendring of συνευδοκησάσης by acceptante, and his concluſion deduced from thence, of the neceſſity of the whole Churches acceptation. And againſt that only it was, that my words were directed, nihil hic de acceptatione --- there was no ſyllable in Clemens, from whence to conclude the neceſſity of ſuch acceptation. And unleſs I have miſtaken in this, certainly there is neither confidence nor magiſterial affirming imputable to me in this matter.

12. And it ſeems the Prefacer doth as little adhere to Blondel's rendring, as I, for he renders it [willing conſent] And how knows he that I reject this rendring of willing conſent, or that if Blondel had ſo rendred it, I would then have rejected it. Truly if that conſent ſignifie no more than a voluntary act of acquieſcence and good liking (as conſent ordinarily ſignifies) I have no diſlike to that rendring; only I rather think the word here ſignifies a little more, (not leſs,) an outward expreſſion of this good liking; which was the only reaſon which moved me to uſe the phraſe [applaudente aut congratulante] meaning thereby, that the Church had expreſt that good liking and joy of theirs, which is more than their bare conſent to what was done, in the conſtitution of their Biſhops.

13. So that the Prefacer needed not to have undertaken this verbal contention with me, about the ſignification of an ordinary word. In that he really is at more peace with me, than it ſeems he knew of; and ſo men are apt to be, which begin and purſue quarrels, ſo haſtily and ſo keenly.

14. The truth is, it is the matter of the concluſion, which I then reſiſted in Blondel, and ſo muſt ſtill in the Prefacer; Blondel made the people's acceptation, a ſine quâ non, a neceſſary condition, affirming that Biſhops, &c. were never conſtituted by the Apoſtles and Apoſtolical men, miſi, unleſs they had this, which, I ſuppoſe, makes the peoples acceptation previous to the Apoſtles act, for if it followed after, it can be of no moment, the Act of the Apoſtles was compleat without it, and ſtood valid without it, and though it was moſt happy when it followed, yet ſtill this, as any other conſequent, muſt be accidental and extrinſecal to the Conſtitution of Biſhops, as that which advenit enti in actu exiſtenti, comes to it when it is (which is the definition of an accident) is no way required to, or conſtitutive of its being.

15. And ſo in like manner this Prefacer alſo, though he pretend only to the conſent of the people, yet by ſaying that the Biſhops were appointed to their office by the conſent] and by his after mention of his notion of συνευδοκεῖν, for conſent to a thing to be done, or to the doing of it, and laſtly by expreſſing his ſence of this conſent of the people, as of a thing needful, or required to the conſtitution of thoſe Biſhops, I am aſſured that he affirms this conſent of the people, to have been required and needful antecedently to the Apoſtles inſtituting Biſhops at that time.

16. And this is the thing that I ſtill profeſs not to believe concluſible from the words of Clement; and whether it be or no, let us now examine by proceeding to the ſecond and third things, even now propos'd by me, the poſition of this phraſe, and the circumſtances of the context in this place of Clements.

17. The poſition of the phraſe may firſt deſerve to be taken notice of, Τὺς καταςαθέντας ὑπ' ἐκείνων, ἢ μεταξὺ ὑφ' ἑτέρων ἐλλογίμων ἀνδρῶν, συνευδοκησάσης τῆ ἐκκλησίας πάσης καὶ λειτουργήσαντας ἀμέμπτως --- μεμαρτυρημένης τε ὑπὸ πολλοῖς χρόνοις ὑπὸ πάντων --- Thoſe that were conſtituted by the Apoſtles, or after by other illuſtrious perſons, the whole Church expreſſing their good liking or conſent, and that have officiated without blame, and been well reported of by all for a long time, &c. Here in ſetting down the unreaſonableneſs of the ſedition raiſed againſt their Biſhops, he aggravates it by theſe gradations, 1. that theſe Biſhops were conſtituted by the Apoſtles, or other illuſtrious perſons after them; 2. that when they were ſo conſtituted, the whole Church liked it very well, and expreſt their liking it, I mean the conſtituting them by the Apoſtles; 3. that being in office, they had without blame diſcharged it; 4. that for a long time they had every mans good word, though now they were ejected by them.

18. By this diſtinct view of the words 'tis plain, that the whether conſent or good liking, which the people thus expreſt, was after the Apoſtles conſtituting them; as after that again, their officiating, and after their officiating, their continued approbation. And indeed it were as reaſonable to affirm, the ſecond teſtimony or approbation [μεμαρτυρημένης, &c.] to be previous to their blameleſs officiating [λειτουργήσαντας ἀμέμπτως] as to ſay their conſent was needful or required to their conſtitution, as to the thing to be done, for that alſo ſuppoſeth it previous to it.

19. This was a competent ſecurity to me, that my rejecting Blondel's concluſion, was no Magiſterial dictate of mine; But then the Circumſtances of the context through the whole Epiſtle make it moſt evident, that Blondel then was, and this Prefacer now is miſtaken.

20. For to repreſs the fury of the στασιασαὶ, ſeditious againſt their Biſhops, he had before immediately told them how theſe Biſhops were placed among them, viz. after this manner. The Apoſtles ἔγνωσαν διὰ --- χριστοῦ knew or underſtood by Chriſt that there would be contention for the name or dignity of Biſhops: For which cauſe, πρόγνωσιν εἰληφότες τελείαν, κατέστησαν τὺς προειρημένους, having received perfect foreknowledge, they conſtituted the foreſaid Biſhops, and after left a liſt or roll (of ſucceſſors) that when any died, διαδέξωνται ἕτεροι δεδοκιμασμένοι ἄνδρες τὴ λειτουργίαν αὐτῶν, Other approved perſons ſhould take up, or ſucceed to their office.

21. Here the Queſtion may be, What is meant by δεδοκιμασμένοι ἄνδρες, approved perſons, and who had the approving them? For if the People had, then Blondel and the Prefacer are in the right; but if not, then ſtill here is nothing to be pretended for them.

22. And indeed, another (yet former) fundamental place of Clement in this Epiſtle, takes away all place of doubting, and tells us punctually whoſe approbation it was; The Apoſtles, ſaith he, preaching through regions and cities, conſtituted their firſt converts, δοκιμάσαντες τῷ πνεύματι, examining or approving them by the ſpirit, to be Biſhops and Deacons, τῶν μελλόντων πιστεύειν, of thoſe which ſhould come in to the Faith.

Here

Here 1. it is not imaginable how the examination and approbation could belong to the people, or the whole Church, when thoſe, over whom they were conſtituted, were not yet come in, they are made Biſhops ἢ μελλόντων πιστεύειν, of thoſe which ſhould afterward come in to the Faith. And 2. if there had been a full Church to chuſe, yet the matter in Clemens, extending not only to the Biſhops of the preſent, but alſo to the ſucceſſors for the future age, what right could the then preſent people have to chuſe, not only for their own, but the future age, and ſo deprive their ſucceſſors of their Privi-ledge? 23.

But waving both theſe, the matter is otherwiſe clear, They are the ſame perſons which did preach and conſtitute, and examine or approve, i. e. the Apoſtles did every of theſe; And doing it τῷ πνεύματι, by the Spirit, by Revelation or direction of the Spirit (in the ſame manner as they are ſaid to know by Chriſt, that there would be contention about this matter, and that having received perfect foreknowledge, they conſtituted thoſe Biſhops) it is evident they had no need of any act of the People in doing it, and ſo, that the examination and approbation was that of the Apoſtles, and not of the People; of the Apoſtles aſſiſted and directed by the Spirit of God, and not ſo much as adviſed, that we hear of, or inſtructed by the people. 24.

This farther appears by another paſſage in that Epiſtle, where this act of the Apoſtles approving by the Spirit, and receiving perfect foreknowledge what would fall out, and what they ſhould do, is by him illuſtrated by the example of Moſes, who προέγνω foreknew, (i. e. certainly) had it revealed to him by God, that Aaron ſhould be the Prieſt. 25.

Examples of ſuch Revelations of God's in the firſt times, I have ſet down in the * Diſſertations; As firſt of Matthias, when God being pray'd to, that he would demonſtrate or declare (ἀνάδειξον τίνα) which of the two he had choſen, he did by lot point him out to be the perſon, Acts 1. 24. Secondly of Paul and Barnabas, Acts 13. 2. Thirdly of Timothy, to whom the Epiſcopal dignity was given διὰ προφητείας, by Prophecy, 1 Tim. 4. 14. and κατὰ τὰς προαγούσας ἐπ' αὐτῷ προφητείας, according to the prophecies which had before been delivered of him, 1 Tim. 1. 18. Upon which Chryſoſtom and Theophylact make their obſervation, Τὸ τῆς διδασκαλίας καὶ ἱερωσύνης ἀξίωμα μέγα ὄν, καὶ τῶν Θεοῦ δεῖται ψήφου ὥστε καὶ ἄξιον δέξασθαι, The dignity of Biſhop (which they there ſtile of Doctorſhip and Prieſthood) being great, wants Gods direction that a worthy perſon may receive it. And the ſame is affirmed by Clemens in Euſebius, l. 3. c. κγ'. of the Biſhops whom S. John ordained in Aſia, that they were ὑπὸ τῷ πνεύματος σημαινόμενοι, ſignified to him by the Spirit. According to what S. Paul had formerly ſaid of the Biſhops of Aſia, Acts 20. that the Holy Ghoſt had ſet them to preſide over the flock peculiarly. 26. * Pag. 267.

This, I muſt think, was, and ſtill is ſufficient to clear the difficulty, and put it beyond queſtion, who they were, by whom the Biſhops in Clement are ſaid to be approved, certainly not the People, but the Apoſtles that conſtituted them, or yet higher, the Spirit of God who ſignified or pointed them out unto them, or by whoſe directions they approved them. 27.

I ſhall not now need more largely to inſiſt on all the ſeverals here objected againſt me by the Prefacer; By this clear ſetting down of the whole matter, 'tis certain, all his exceptions muſt ſpeedily vaniſh. I ſhall but touch on them that have not yet ſo fully been taken notice of and prevented in paſſing. 28.

And 1. that ἐλλόγιμοι ἄνδρες were viri Apoſtolici, though it was truly ſuppoſed by me, yet was it not my magiſterial dictate, but, to my hand, the plain affirmation of D. Blondel; My words were regularly to be confronted to his concluſion in the very form wherein he had produced it, and ſo I was to ſet it by Apoſtolicis alſo. 29.

The Reader may, if he will, ſee my rendring of ἐλλογίμων ἀνδρῶν, literally by illuſtribus viris, and the putting of [i. e. Apoſtolicis, & Spiritu Dei probatis] into a Parentheſis, ſignified [Apoſtolicis] to be no rendring of ἐλλογίμων, but another character of the ſame men, collected out of other parts of the Epiſtle. 30. Pag. 278.

And ſo indeed it is moſt evident by the whole place, [Τοὺς ὑπ' ἐκείνων ἢ μεταξὺ ὑφ' ἑτέρων ἐλλογίμων ἀνδρῶν, The Biſhops conſtituted by the Apoſtles, and after them by other illuſtrious perſons] that thoſe that are there called ἐλλόγιμοι ἄνδρες, illuſtrious men, were the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles, ſuch as, when they were gone, conſtituted Biſhops in the Church. 31.

And then, what offence was there in my calling them Apoſtolical perſons? Or what pretence for the Prefacer to ſay they were only the choice men of the Church, in oppoſition to my calling them Apoſtolical? Choice men of the Church, I know, they were, for ſo muſt they be deemed, who by the Apoſtles were left Rulers of it. But ſuch the Prefacer cannot mean, when he ſets it in oppoſition to me, who called them Apoſtolici; He muſt therefore queſtionleſs mean the choice men of the People, and then thoſe choice men muſt be concluded to conſtitute Biſhops, and not only to conſent to their conſtituting, (as before he had ſet it) And then I deſire he will ſay poſitively, that this was his meaning, and that from any place of Scripture or ancient Writer, he will ſhew me where any choice men of the people conſtituted Biſhops after the departure of the Apoſtles. 32.

Secondly, when he ſaith, that the words [ex juſſu Dei & approbatione, by the appointment and approbation of God] are added by me, 'tis not imaginable what he ſhould mean by it: Thoſe words are evidently ſet by me as an argument that they could not want the approbation of the people, becauſe they were ſufficiently furniſhed by the appointment and approbation of God, as had appeared by the teſtimony of Clement ſet down in the page immediately precedent: And what is produced by me as an argument to convince the unconcludency of Blondel's collection, can it be blamed in me, as an inſertion or addition either to Clement's or Blondel's words? 33.

And when he goes on reproaching this addition with his [as though any particular command or approbation of God were intimated for the conſtituting of the Biſhops and Deacons mentioned] I hope it hath ſufficiently appeared that there was ſuch command or appointment of God, more than intimated by Clemens in that Epiſtle, and the like expreſt in Scripture in many parallel caſes, and this particularly a deſignation of the perſons, which were to be ordained, and ſo ſomewhat beyond the general inſtitution of the Lord Jeſus (which he ſpeaks of, I ſuppoſe he means the commiſſion of the Apoſtle to Titus and the like) that Elders ſhould be ordained in every Church. 34.

Thirdly;

35. Thirdly; When he ſaith 'tis argumentatively weak and unconcluding, he muſt mean that this argument of mine is a weak, and unconcluding argument, I ſhall therefore repeat it again, and put it formally into a ſyllogiſm; They who had been conſtituted by the appointment and approbation of God, cannot then be thought to want the acceptation of the people: But the Biſhops, ſpoken of by Clement, had been conſtituted by the appointment, and approbation of God: Therefore, they cannot be thought to want the acceptation of the people. What propoſition can here be denied, I confeſs I ſee not.

36. The Major hath its evidence in its ſelf; for certainly that which is already done, and done by Gods appointment, needs no other extrinſecal addition or accompliſhment, unleſs that alſo be ordained by God, which in this caſe of the acceptation of the Biſhop by the people, no way appears, and till it doth appear, cannot be ſuppoſed, or pretended by any to be thus needful.

37. And for the Minor, it is the expreſs affirmation of Clement, that they that inſtituted them, examined and approved them by the ſpirit, and knowing by the Lord Chriſt, and having perfect foreknowledge of what ſhould be, καθίσησαν conſtituted theſe Biſhops; and this is mention'd by Clement as an aggravation of their crime, that rejected theſe that were thus conſtituted. And then I hope the premiſes having ſtrength, the concluſion from them regularly inferr'd, will not be denied me.

38. For as to the examples of Saul and David, I am ſure they prove nothing; for if there were perfect truth in all which is here pretended, which is more than from the circumſtances of the ſtories I can affirm, viz. that God, who deſigned them Kings, would have the People come together to chuſe them, then, from that act of God's will it was, and from God's expreſſing it, that the convening and election of the People was neceſſary, and if God had not will'd it, or not appointed it, it had then as certainly not been neceſſary.

39. Now let any ſuch declaration of God's will be ſhew'd, that he would have the People convene and chuſe their Biſhop, and then I ſhall think my argument weak, but otherwiſe I muſt not think it concluded ſo, by theſe examples.

40. So in the caſe of the Deacons Acts 6. the Apoſtles appointed the Diſciples to ſeek out ſeven men from among them, withal directing them how they ſhould be qualified, and reſerving to themſelves the intire power of conſtituting them ἐπὶ χρείας ταύτης, to the office of Deacon. And ſo nothing from that third inſtance can be inferr'd againſt us, it being no way parallel to the caſe in Clement, as already is viſible: For in the Acts, the Diſciples look out, and chuſe (v. 5.) the perſons, and bring them to the Apoſtles, v. 6. and the Apoſtles lay their hands on them in the remainder of that verſe: But in Clemens, God deſigns the perſons (and ſo in the other Scripture inſtances, and in that of Clemens Alexandrinus of the firſt Biſhops of Aſia ordained by S. John) and the Apoſtles, and their ſucceſſors ordain and lay hands on them.

41. As for that of Acts 14. 23. that the ordaining of the Elders was with the Peoples election (by the way, it was even now by, as well as with the conſent of the People) or indeed, that any mention of the People is made there, or ſo much as intimated by the word χειροτονήσαντες, All that I can ſay, is, that it hath been diſproved, as far as any, that I know of, hath yet endeavoured to prove it, i.e. all arguments, that I have ſeen for it, I have * elſewhere anſwered: But what will ere long be manifeſted, I am not able to forecaſt, and ſo am not now to provide anſwers by divination.

42. No more am I able to foreſee what he ſaith will one day be found, and yet I think it is very poſſible neither he, nor I may live to ſee that day, when any thing ſhall be farther manifeſted in this matter, than what the great Doctors already ſuppoſe. The reſolution of the queſtion, what right every one hath in theſe affairs, being founded in plain matter of fact, viz. what Chriſt or his Apoſtles inſtituted in the Church, and that being already as viſible to them, that are converſant in Scripture and ancient Records of the Church, as it can well be imagined to be, till either a new mine of ſuch Records is ſprung, or men receive knowledge of ſtory by Revelation: Neither of which am I forward to expect in this age.

43. In the next place for his objections againſt my interpreting of πνεύματι δοκιμάζοντες, of Gods extraordinary revealing whom he would have ordained, they will ſoon vaniſh alſo. For 1. the place of S. Paul concerning Timothies ordaining of Deacons, and appointing δοκιμαζέσθωσαν πρῶτον, let them be firſt tried or examined, 1 Tim. 3. 10. belongs nothing to this of the trying by the ſpirit: Timothy might have ordinary means of trying (and the whole diſcourſe of S. Paul, then ſetting down the qualifications of thoſe that were to be ordained, tends to that) and then he had no need of extraordinary.

44. And ſo likewiſe the Apoſtles Acts 6. referr'd the matter of trial and approbation to the Diſciples, and without more ado, and without this πνεύματι δοκιμάζειν, trying by the ſpirit, ordained thoſe that were thus preſented to them. But theſe two inſtances can no way preclude divine revelations concerning Matthias, and Paul, and Barnabas, and Timothy, and the Biſhops of Aſia, and the Biſhops of Achaia, of whom the expreſs words of Scripture and Clemens, are, that by God and his Spirit, and Prophecy, theſe were aſſigned to their Offices.

45. And accordingly though one of thoſe Deacons in the Acts be ſuppoſed to have proved none of the beſt, yet we ſee that Clemens here uſeth it as an argument to evidence the unreaſonableneſs and impiety of ejecting their Biſhops, that they were thus conſtituted, which I ſuppoſe concludes, that this was not to be ſuſpected or feared of them, which was experimented to have befallen Nicolas.

46. Secondly; for the notion of [πνεύματι, by the ſpirit] that it ſignifies, as I affirm, and not, as he ſuggeſts [ſpiritually proving them, &c.] he knows (and ſtrait confeſſes) one way, by which I prove it, the mention of πρόγνωσιν εἰληφότες τελείαν, that they had perfect foreknowledge to this matter, and what is that reciving of perfect foreknowledge, but the ſpirit of prophecy? and that, as was ſaid, immediately before, ἔγνωσαν διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, they knew it by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and by him were directed perfectly to do what they did. And ſo this is one competent proof of it.

47. And by the way, how is the very firſt part of the phraſe [δοκιμάζοντες, trying] being applied to the Apoſtles and their Succeſſors [if πνεύματι had been left out] reconcileable with the peoples trying, examining, or approving? Before 'twas ſaid, that this work of trying (δοκιμαζέσθωσαν πρῶτον, 1 Tim. 3. 10.) was by the Apoſtles given to the multitude, Acts 6. But how can it poſſibly be ſo here in Clement, where it is ſaid of the Apoſtles, that they did δοκιμάζειν πνεύματι, try them by the ſpirit?

This I ſay, to ſhew how far he would be from gaining his deſign, though it ſhould be granted which he deſires, that πνεύματι δοκιμάζειν refers not at all to any extraordinary ways of revelation, which if it did not, yet neither refers it to the peoples, but to the Apoſtles examining and approving. 48.

But, I ſay, 'tis already evident, that I have given other reaſons, why I interpret Clemens thus of extraordinary revelations, which he ought to have adverted before, and I have now mentioned them again, and muſt not repeat eternally. 49.

This again ſhews how little I am bound to aſſert, that every thing, which is ſaid to be done in the ſpirit, is done by immediate revelation, becauſe if ſome things be, this may be one of thoſe ſome, and that it is, is ſufficiently proved by thoſe other evidences. 50.

Next to his queſtion, whether the ἐλλόγιμοι ἄνδρες, who appointed (ordained) Biſhops and Deacons after the Apoſtles times, had alſo this ſpecial revelation or no?] I anſwer, that Clement no where ſaith that they had, only that they καθίσησαν, ordained (that is all one with laying hands on) them, whom the Apoſtles by their Prophetick ſpirit had deſigned to that office. 51.

To this the Context in Clement is clear, that the Apoſtles by that πρόγνωσις, foreknowledge, ordained ſome; and μεταξὺ, for the future, to be ſucceſſors to them, ἐπινομὴν δεδώκασι, they left a roll or liſt of names, who ſhould ſucceed unto their dead places; and theſe, as oft as any Biſhop (ordain'd by the Apoſtles) died, were by the other Biſhops, i. e. the ἐλλόγιμοι ἄνδρες, ordain'd in their places, according to that rule left by the Apoſtles for their ſucceſſion. So that in this matter there could be no need of any further revelation; they were to ordain thoſe which were next upon the Apoſtles liſt, and that might be done without multiplying of revelations. 52.

And ſo his next queſtion is at an end alſo; for I have no occaſion or ground to extend theſe revelations any farther than the perſons of the Apoſtles (though I know there were alſo Prophets in thoſe times, beſide Apoſtles) but may ſafely and reaſonably leave all others, where the Apoſtles had left no ſuch liſts, or when they were at an end, to be concluded by Paul's directions to Timothy, without depending farther on ſpecial revelations. 53.

And now I think I have anſwer'd all his queſtions, or given him my Key to do it himſelf, and ſo muſt be content to return weary home, without receiving any of thoſe thanks from that generation of men whom he pleaſeth to mention, but ſhall be content with my lot, being alſo competently ſecured from the trouble of looſing knots, which thoſe thanks were deſigned to bring along with them. 54.

SECT. II.

Another teſtimony in Clemens concerning the power of the People examined. Τίς ἐν γενναῖος;

BUT this buſineſs of the power of the People in the Church is not to be diſmiſt ſo, but muſt more largely be reſumed again, and my attendance ſhall be anſwerable to my Leaders pleaſure, who thus inlargeth his digreſſion; 1.

"Before we return, let us look but a little further, and we ſhall have a little more light given us, "into what was the condition and power of the people in the Church in the days of Clemens, ſpeak- "ing of them who occaſioned the diviſion and ſchiſm in the Church of Corinth, or them about whoſe "exaltation into office, or dejection from it, that ſad difference fell out, he gives them this advice; "Τίς ἐν ὑμῖν γενναῖος; τίς ἔυσπλαγχνος; τίς πεπληρωμένος ἀγάπης; εἰπάτω, εἰ δι' ἐμὲ στάσις καὶ ἔρις καὶ σχίσ- "ματα, ἐκχωρῶ, ἄπειμι, ἔ ἐὰν βόληθε, καὶ ποιῶ τὰ προσασσόμενα ὑπὸ τῦ πλήθες, μόνον τὸ ποίμνιον τῦ Χριςῦ "εἰρηνευέτω μετὰ τ καθισαμένων πρεσβυτέρων. It ſeems the πλῆθος, the multitude, or the people, were "not ſuch poor inconſiderable things as they are reported to be, when he adviſes them to ſtop and "ſtay the ſedition by yielding obedience to the things by them appointed and commanded. If it "were in it ſelf evil, diſorderly, and not according to the mind of Chriſt, that the people ſhould "order and appoint things in the Church, it had been ſimply evil for Clemens to have adviſed any to "yield obedience to the things by them ſo appointed. Where is now Ignatius his ὑποτάσσεσθε τῷ ἐπι- "σκόπῳ and χωρὶς --- Even thoſe who are contending about rule and government in the Church, are "adviſed to ſtand to the determination of the people, and to cry, τὰ προσασσόμενα ὑπὸ τῦ πλήθες ποιῶ- "μεν. This is alſo inſiſted on by Blondellus, who thence argues, Poteſtatem plebis circa ſacra Diſſert. "4. c. 8. ſect. 4. Ad verba hæc (ſaith our Doctor) prodigii inſtar eſt, quod notandum duxit D. Blon- "dellus [poteſtatem plebis circa ſacra] (de quâ tandem integram diſſertationem elucubravit) artificiis "quibuſcunque aſſerturus. Hic (inquit) nos monet Clemens fideles etiam de Epiſcopatu aut Presby- "terio contendentes, non ab Epiſcopi ſingularis καὶ ὑπερέχοντος nutu, ſed à multitudinis præceptis "pendiſſe. But let not our Doctor be angry, nor cry out ſo faſt of Prodigies; a little "time will manifeſt that many things may not be prodigious, which yet are contrary to ſun- "dry of his exceptions and apprehenſions. I cannot but acknowledge him to be provoked, but "withal I muſt ſay, that I have found very commonly, that reaſons uſher'd in by ſuch loud cla- "mours, have in examination proved to have ſtood in need of ſome ſuch noiſes, as might fright "men from the conſideration of them. What is in the next Sections ſet up to ſhield the children "of Epiſcopacy from being affrighted with this prodigy, may perhaps be of more efficacy there- "unto, than the exclamations before mention'd: He therefore proceeds, Sect. 5. Certè (ſaith "he) ſi ſeriò rem egerit D. Blondellus, de Presbyteris ſuis (non de Epiſcopis noſtris) actum planè & "triumphatum erit, nec enim ab univerſo aliquo Presbyterorum Collegio, quod ille tam efflictim ardet, 2.

" ſed à multitudinis ſolius arbitrio, tum contendentes de Epiſcopo, tum fideles omnes Corinthios pepen- " diſſe, æquè concludendum erit. If any man in the world hath manifeſted more deſperate affection
" towards Presbytery, than this Doctor hath done toward Epiſcopacy, for my part ſolus habeto.
" But though neither Clemens nor Blondellus ſpeak any one word about the ordering of things, multi- " tudinis ſolius arbitrio, yet here is that ſaid by them both, as is ſufficiently deſtructive, not only to " the Epiſcopacy the Doctor contends for, as a thing wholly inconſiſtent with the power and liberty
" here granted the people, but of any ſuch Presbytery alſo, as ſhall undertake the ordering and diſ-
" poſing of things in the Church of God, without the conſent and concurrent ſuffrage of the people.
" Such a Presbytery it ſeems Blondellus does not defend. But yet neither the Doctor's out-cry, as at " a prodigy, nor this retortion upon Presbytery, is any anſwer to the teſtimony of Clemens, nor in" deed is there the leaſt poſſible reflection upon an orderly Goſpel Presbytery in any Church, and " over it, by what Clemens here profeſſeth to be the power of the people; all appearance of any " thing is from the term ſolius, foiſted into the Diſcourſe of Blondellus by the Doctor, in his taking " of it up to retort. Clemens in the very next words ſecures us from any thought, that all things de" pend à multitudinis ſolius arbitrio. His very next words are, Μόνον τὸ ποίμνιον τῦ Χριςῦ εἰρηνεύτω μετὰ
" τῶν καθεςαμένων πρεσβυτέρων. Our Doctors and Maſters having ſtuft their imaginations with the ſhape " and lineaments of that hierarchical fabrick, which the craft, policy, ſubtilty, avarice, pride, " ambition of many ages ſucceſſively had formed and framed according to the pattern they ſaw in the " Mount of the World, and the governments therein, upon the firſt hearing of a Church, a flock of " Chriſt, walking in orderly ſubjection to their own Elders concurring with them, and conſenting " to them in their rule and government, inſtantly as men amazed, cry out a prodigy. It is not ima" ginable into what ridiculous, contemptible miſcarriages, pride, prejudice, and ſelfulneſs
" do oftentimes betray men, otherwiſe of good abilities in their ways, and commendable indu-" ſtry.

" But Section the ſixth, the Doctor comes cloſer and gives his reaſon why this teſtimony of Clement
" is not of any efficacy to the purpoſe in hand, ſaith he, At quis (ſodes) à fidelibus de Epiſcopatu (ut
" ais) contra ipſos ab Apoſtolis conſtitutos contendentibus, quis à populo contra principem ſuum tumultus
" ciente, quis verbis ad retundendum ſeditionem ad plebem factis, argumenta ad Authoritatem populo ad-
" judicandum principi derogandum duci poſſe exiſtimavit? Though many words follow in the next Se" ction, yet this is all of anſwer that is given to this ſignal teſtimony of Clement's. I know the Do" ctor for the moſt part meets, not only with favourable Readers, but alſo partial Admirers; or " elſe certainly his exclamation would ſcarce paſs for an invincible argument, nor ſuch Rhetorical " diverſions as this be eſteemed ſolid Anſwers. There is not by Blondellus any argument taken from " the faithfuls tumultuating againſt the Biſhops (that, of appointed by the Apoſtles which is thruſt
" in, taken for the perſons of thoſe Biſhops, is againſt the expreſs teſtimony of Clemens in this " Epiſtle) nor from the peoples ſeditiouſly rebelling againſt their Prince, nor from any word ſpoken
" to the people to repreſs their ſedition; neither was any thing of this nature urged in the leaſt by " Blondellus, nor is there any colour given to ſuch a collection from any thing in the words cited from " the Epiſtle, or the Context of them. It is the advice of the Church of Rome to the perſons (whe" ther already in office, or aſpiring thereunto) about whom the contention and diviſion was in the " Church of Corinth, that is inſiſted on. It is not the words nor plea of them who were in diſorder,
" there is not any reprehenſion given to the body of the Church, the multitude or people who are
" ſuppoſed to tumultuate, to quiet them, but a direction given (as was ſaid) by the Church of Rome
" to the perſons that occaſioned the difference, how to behave themſelves ſo, that a timely iſſue
" might be put to the diviſion of the Church. To this end are they adviſed to obſerve the προσάγμα-
" τα, the Orders, Precepts, Decrees, or Appointments of the multitude, as (from Acts 15.) the " body of the Church is called. It is not that they ſhould yield to their tumultuating, but to yield " obedience to their orderly precepts, τὰ προσασσόμενα ὑπὸ τῦ πλήθες, are by him approved; and had " it not been lawful for them, with the Presbyters, προσάτ]ειν in affairs of the Church, Clemens
" writing this Epiſtle to the whole Church, could not poſſibly have led them into a greater " ſnare.

" It is a ſad thing to conſider the pitiful entanglements and ſnares that ſome men run into,
" who will undertake to make good, what they have once engaged for, let what will come againſt " them.

3. In this Section again the uſe is, as formerly, very extraordinary: Firſt, I am put under Diſcipl to teach me (that which was anciently accounted a very high pitch, propè res una, but theſe times may be able to advance one to, which is but of ordinary parts) the Nil admirari, to ſee, and hear the moſt portentous things, and to admire at nothing; I muſt not be permitted to ſay of any, though never ſo ſtrange, unreaſonable a collection of Blondel's, that it is inſtar prodigii, but I am cenſured as angry, and guilty of loud clamors, out-cries, exclamations, noiſes, and theſe deſigned to fright men from conſideration of my reaſons, as after (on as little cauſe) of deſperate affection to Epiſcopacy, of forgery, or foiſting in the word ſolius into Blondel's diſcourſe; and if this be not enough for my humiliation, there is a reſerve of [ridiculous, contemptible miſcarriages, ſuch as it is not imaginable men ſhould be betray'd to] and yet farther, as the cauſes of theſe, pride, prejudice, and ſelfulneſs] and to conclude [pitiful intanglements and ſnares, &c.]

4. This is truly ſomewhat above the proportion of the turgent ſtile, or the but four barbarous words in ſeven Epiſtles, and yet I verily believe the Section is genuine, no part of it inſerted by any ὑποζολεύς, it bears ſo perfect proportion with what I have hitherto had from the ſame hand. And the aſſuring him, that all this might, if he had ſo pleaſed, have been very eaſily ſpared, is all that I have to return to the more Rhetorical part of this Section.

5. Only when after all this ſeverity, he thinks fit to give me ſome of his benediction at parting, and to allow me a room among men of good abilities in their ways, and very commendable induſtry, I cannot but remember the critical note of Eumenides the Atticiſt, that the ordinary form of χαίρειν in

Epiſtles

Epiſtles was firſt uſed by Cleon to the Athenians, after he had taken πῦλ☉ from them, whereupon a Comical perſon anſwered, Πρῶτ☉ ἡμᾶς ὦ Κλέων, χαίρειν προσείπας, πολλὰ λυπῶν ἥ πόλιν, You, Sir, are the firſt that bid us be well, and rejoyce, having given us much cauſe of ſadneſs. This our Engliſh proverb expreſſes very ſignificantly, and I that had as little right to his plaſter, as I had to the diſpleaſure which made him think I wanted it, may tell him, he hath diſpenſed both without any merit of mine.

As for the argumentative part of his diſcourſe, I ſhall now come briefly to that, and doubt not to 6.
ſhew, 1. That D. Blondel's Collection was very ſtrange, and ſo merited the expreſſion that was beſtowed on it [inſtar prodigii] (I meant not that it lookt like a blazing ſtar, or any other ſuch prodigie) 2. That ſolius was not foiſted in by me. In a word, that all really was as I pretended it to be. This muſt be cleared by a brief narration of the whole paſſage, as it lies viſible in the fifth Diſſert. c. 8.

There was a ſedition in the Church of Achaia, the Metropolis whereof was Corinth; and that ad- 7.
vancing ſo high, as to the ejecting their Biſhops out of their office (ἐπισκοπῆς ἀποξάλλειν) and theſe Biſhops καλαξαθέντας ὑπ' Ἀποσόλων, thoſe very perſons which by the Apoſtles had been either deſigned, and put upon the liſt, or actually ordained and conſtituted among them.

This was done, ſaith Clemens, δι' ἕν ἢ δύο πρόσωπα, for one or two only perſons ſakes, whom the 8.
actors in the commotion had a mind to advance to that office.

For the calming this tempeſt, Clemens makes uſe of many methods and arguments of perſwaſion. 9.
At length he betakes himſelf to the perſons, for the advancing of whom, all this ſtir was made, this tempeſt was raiſed: To them he thus makes his addreſs; Tells them what Moſes had done when the people were in a foul ſin, being himſelf content to be blotted out of the book of the living, rather than the wrath of God ſhould light on the people; and then (in the words which are ſet down by the Prefacer) τίς οὖν ἐν ὑμῖν γενναῖ☉ ---- Who then among you is a generous perſon? who hath bowels of kindneſs and compaſſion? who is repleniſhed with love or charity? Let him thus ſay (to this ſeditious multitude) If the ſedition, and contention, and ſchiſms are for me, or my ſake (viz. that I am not in ſo great place or office as you contend, and deſire to have me) I am gone, I depart to what place ſoever you will, and do what the multitude appoint me; only let the flock of Chriſt be at peace with the Elders that are placed over them. Adding, Ταῦτα οἱ πολιτευόμενοι ἥ ἀμεταμέλητον πολιτείαν τῷ θεῷ, ἐποίησαν καὶ ποιήσουσιν, Thus godly men have done, and will do, and πολλοὶ ἐξεχώρησαν ἰδίων πόλεων ἵνα μὴ σασιάζωσιν ἐπὶ πλέον, Many have removed out of their own Cities, that the Sedition might not farther extend it ſelf.

In theſe words nothing can be more manifeſt than 1. That this ſhort Oration to the tumultuous 10. people was only deſigned to ſtill their commotion, and to reduce them at once to peace and ſubjection to their ſuperiors placed over them in the Church. And ſo it can be no farther argumentative, than to that, or the like caſe, or conjuncture, viz. that for the acquiring peace to the publick, and quiet ſubjection to Governours, any generous or charitable perſon ought even to leave his Country, if need ſo require, and if that will do it, to do, or ſuffer any thing for the regaining the publick peace; not that every Chriſtian is in all caſes bound to do this, or that what is charitable in theſe circumſtances, is ſimply, and without them, neceſſary: For then the example there uſed of Moſes muſt be obligatory too, and every man ſhall at all times be bound to wiſh and pray, what in that one caſe he did.

Secondly; That it is by Clement put into the mouth, not of the true Biſhops or Elders, duly conſti- 11.
tuted among them at that time; for ſhould they have offer'd to go out and depart, 1. There is no queſtion but they had been permitted to do ſo, by them who had already ejected them from their λειτυργία or Miniſtration: And 2. how could the ποίμνιον εἰρηνεύειν μετὰ ἥ καθεσαμένων πρεσβυτέρων, the flock be at peace together with theſe conſtituted Elders (i. e. with theſe that were already conſtituted) in caſe they ſhould thus depart? And 3. how had Clemens done the work to which his whole Epiſtle was deſigned, viz. re-eſtabliſht the true Governours in their chairs again, if they had thus, by his advice, departed? But, I ſay, this ſpeech of ἀναχωρῶ, ἄπειμι, I am gone, I depart, is by Clement put into the mouth of the one or two perſons δι' ἃ for whoſe ſakes this commotion was raiſed againſt their Eccleſiaſtical Governours (αἰσχρὸν δι' ἕν ἢ δύο πρόσωπα σασιάζειν πρὸς τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους) and this is ſo manifeſt, that it is to him that ſhall but lightly view the place in the Epiſtle, impoſſible to make any queſtion of it.

Thirdly; It is here as manifeſt, that the receſs here ſpoken of, and after exemplified in the πολλοὶ, 12.
the many that had done ſo, and in like manner by Kings and Princes, that in times of plagues had, in obedience to the Oracles, delivered themſelves up to death, ἵνα ῥύσωνται διὰ τοῦ ἑαυτῶν αἵματ☉ τοὺς πολίτας, that by their own bloud they might reſcue and deliver their citizens, as before it had been by Moſes's zealous prayer [blot me out ---] was an act of generoſity and charity in them that ſhould do it, a meer ſpontaneous, voluntary receſs, no act of ordinary duty or obligation. And conſequently, though it were very lawful for Clemens to adviſe this generoſity, yet it had been very ill in the ſeditious people to require them to be gone, who ſo earneſtly deſired the reſtoring them to peace, and due ſubjection, and ſo this can be no inſtance of the peoples power in this or any thing elſe.

Theſe things being granted, the ſtrangeneſs of D. Blondel's concluſions from the words will immedi- 13.
ately appear: They are two; the one ſet down p. 12. the other p. 13. of his Apologie: In p. 12. thus: Hic nos monet, fideles etiam de Epiſcopatu ſive Presbyterio contendentes, non ab Epiſcopi ſingularis, καὶ ὑπερέχοντ☉ nutu, ſed à multitudinis præceptis pependiſſe. Here Clement mindeth us, that the faithful even ſuch as contend for the Biſhoprick, or office of Elder, depend not on the pleaſure of the Biſhop, the ſingular Biſhop, and who had the ſupream power, but on the precepts of the multitude. In p. 13. thus, Presbyteros nihil ἀρχοντικῶς attentâſſe, ſed propter Chriſtum communemque piæ fraternitatis ædificationem, multitudinis dicto audientes fuiſſe: That the Elders attempted not to do any thing by way of command or empire, but for Chriſt's ſake, and for the common edification of the brethren, they were obedient to the command of the multitude.

In the firſt of theſe concluſions, that which is very ſtrange, is, that the believers ſhould from Cle- 14.
ment's words be concluded 1. not to have depended on the pleaſure of their Biſhop; 2. to have depended on the precepts of the multitude: Whereas 1. there is no one ſyllable of their not depending on the pleaſure of their Biſhops, but ſpecial mention of the preſerving their Biſhops quietly in their ſeats, as the end, which, with the peace of the Church, was the only thing they had in their view: And 2. they no otherwiſe depended on the precepts of the multitude, than as for the avoiding and quieting the Sedition, they ſhould voluntarily ſubmit themſelves; which is as far from concluding any due power in the multitude, as my bribing a Plunderer to ſave my life, is from inferring that he hath a lawful power over it; or my telling any man in an extremity, I will do whatſoever you bid me, on condition you will be quiet, and let my Maſter alone, will conclude that man to have had any power over me, before I had ſaid it, or that that power ſhall always continue to have obligation on me afterwards: Or, to go no farther than the Context in Clemens, than the Kings being content to die for the removing the Plague from the People, can be a precedent and obligation to all Kings and Rulers, not only to do the like in the like caſe, but to acknowledge themſelves univerſally to depend upon the commands of the people.

15. By this it already appears, how free I am from being chargeable with thoſe things of which the Prefacer accuſes me: As 1. that I foiſt in the [ſolius] into Blondel's diſcourſe. It is an ugly word, but ſure I am not guilty of it: For doth not Blondel ſay, non ab Epiſcopi nutu, ſed à multitudinis præceptis? that they depended not from the Biſhops pleaſure, but from the multitudes precepts? Is not the [non, ſed, not, but] here perfectly all one with [ſolius, only?] Where there are but two parts, the Governour (or Governours, as Blondel would have it) in every Church, and the People; what is done by the power of the People, and not by the power of the Governours, muſt ſure be done by the power of the People alone. That which can be done but three ways, by the Prefacer, or by me, or conjunctim by both of us together; if it be done by him, and not done by me, is it not done by him only? What poſſibility is there that I ſhould deceive my ſelf, or any man elſe by thus concluding?

16. This Prefacer, I acknowledge, ſeems to ſet it otherwiſe than Blondel had done, and ſo, I ſuppoſe, fanſies it a joynt power of the orderly Goſpel Presbytery and the People: But then 1. I that was ſpeaking to Blondel, was not to be ſuppoſed to ſpeak to this Prefacer, who differs from Blondel. And 2. that which is done by the Presbytery and People joyntly, how can it be ſaid to be done not by the Presbytery, or to be done by, or depend from the peoples command, not from the Presbytery? So that certainly I was capable of a more benign cenſure, I might have been ſpared the accuſation of foiſting or forgery in this matter.

17. So likewiſe for his ſecond charge, that I miſreport Blondel's way of arguing, making him take his argument from the faithfuls tumultuating againſt the Biſhops, from the peoples ſeditiouſly rebelling againſt their Prince, from words ſpoken to the people to repreſs their ſedition; whereas, ſaith he, there is not any thing of this nature urged in the leaſt by Blondel] this ſure will vaniſh preſently alſo: For as to the firſt two branches, 'tis certain I no where thus recite Blondel's arguing: My words he had juſt before ſet down truly, if he would have conſtrued them right, Quis, ſodes, à fidelibus de Epiſcopatu contra Epiſcopos contendentibus, quis à populo contra Principem ſuum tumultus ciente ---- argumenta ---- duci poſſe exiſtimavit? Who, I pray, for the aſſerting the authority of the people, would think arguments might be brought from the faithful contending for authority againſt their Biſhops, from a people raiſing ſedition againſt their Prince?] that is, from any thing ſaid or done by ſuch men at ſuch a time. This is not from the faithfuls contending, or the peoples rebelling (as the Prefacer was pleaſed to miſconſtrue me) but from the faithful contending, i. e. who contended, or (as the parallel to that) the people rebelling, or, who rebelled. And, I pray, doth not Blondel fetch his argument in this place of Clement, from theſe, and none but theſe? Are not his very words, fideles de Epiſcopatu contendentes --- à multitudinis præceptis pependiſſe, that the faithful contending, or, who contended for the Biſhoprick, depended on the commands of the multitude] and doth he not draw his argument for the peoples power, from them, and (which was the third thing) from the words, that they are by Clement bid uſe to the people to repreſs their ſedition? From whence, I beſeech him, is Blondel's argument drawn, if not from hence, when from this one ſpeech of theirs (made for them by Clement) it is, that this whole argument is drawn?

18. 'Tis true, indeed, Blondel ſhould not have affirmed of thoſe whom he calls the Contenders, that they depended on the commands of the people, but that Clemens bid them that they ſhould make that offer to them, that in that particular they would. But I, who was confuting Blondel's argument, was to take it as he ſet it, not as it ought to have been ſet by him, and ſo have done nothing criminous in ſo doing.

19. There is yet a third charge in a parentheſis, that the words [appointed by the Apoſtles] taken for the perſons of thoſe Biſhops, is thruſt in by me, and is againſt the expreſs teſtimony of Clemens in this Epiſtle.] But certainly this is alſo a groundleſs accuſation. For as to Blondel's words or arguing, they are not by me thruſt into them, but uſed as a circumſtance of ſome force in my arguing againſt him, to ſhew that his argument taken from what was ſaid or done by thoſe whom he acknowledges contenders, was ſure to be no good argument, when they, againſt whom they are by him ſuppoſed to contend, being the Biſhops of Corinth, thoſe Biſhops were, ſay I, conſtituted by the Apoſtles: This was but a light circumſtance, yet that which I thought would be ſome farther prejudice to his argument, when the words, from whence he inferr'd his concluſion, were ſuppoſed to be ſpoken by the contenders, thoſe again, contenders againſt Biſhops, and thoſe Biſhops conſtituted by the very Apoſtles.

20. And then for Clement, 'tis moſt certain (whatſoever the Prefacer is pleaſed to affirm to the contrary) that he expreſly ſaith this of theſe Biſhops, whom they contended againſt, and ejected, that they were καθισθέντες ὑπ' ἐκείνων, ἢ μεταξὺ ὑφ' ἑτέρων ἐλλογίμων ἀνδρῶν, conſtituted by the Apoſtles, or after by other eſteemed men, ſome immediately both deſigned and ordain'd to the Office by the Apoſtles perſonally, others deſigned and nominated, or put upon the ἐπινομὴ, the liſt of ſucceſſion by the Apoſtles, and as places were vacant, actually ordain'd by the impoſition of the hands of thoſe eſteemed or eminent men, the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles (ſuch as were alſo themſelves call'd Apoſtolical men by Blondel, and by the Ancients, Apoſtoli ſecundarii, ſecundary Apoſtles.)

This

This is moſt evident again by what was cleared in the laſt Section: And ſo the Parentheſis had as little of Juſtice in it, as the main period, and might have been ſpared alſo, if the Prefacer had ſo pleaſed. 21.

What follows after in this place [It is the advice of the Church of Rome ----] is for the moſt part true, and I have ſuggeſted nothing againſt it, nor am now a whit concerned in the contents of it, and therefore though there be ſome infirm parts in it alſo, and many more in the former words, yet having vindicated my ſelf, I ſhall not trouble the Reader to purſue this matter any farther; what he hath miſtaken, he may, if he pleaſe, rectifie by what hath been ſaid, and particularly inform himſelf of his doubts, that they to whom the advice is given, and on occaſion of whom the ſedition was raiſed, are not they that were in danger of being dejected from their office (as at the beginning of this Section he thought it poſſible) nor conſequently they (as toward the end he ſaith) which were already in office, but they * for whom the people contended to have them advanced to the Biſhops ſeats, they that were the occaſion and the ſubject matter of the contention, and as we may conclude from ſome paſſages, ‖ ἀρχηγοὶ τῆ σάσεως, the ring-leaders of the ſedition, and * καταβολὴν τῆ σάσεως ποιήσαντες, they that laid the foundation of it. 22.

* εἰ δ' ἐμὲ φάσκοις, p. 69 and δι' ἣν ἢ δύο πρόσωπα κατηνάγκασε, pag. 62.
* Pag. 72.

And that brings me to the ſecond ſtrange part of Blondel's collection, Communi Presbyteros conſilio Eccleſiam rexiſſe, eoſdem nihil ἀρχοντικὸς attentâſſe, ſed --- multitudinis dicto obedientes fuiſſe, that the Presbyters by Common Council ruled the Church, and that the ſame Presbyters (in the text of Clemens) were obedient to the command or ſaying of the multitude. But that certainly could not be hence concluded, the perſons into whoſe mouth Clemens put theſe words being not Presbyters nor Biſhops neither, but thoſe whom the people would have Biſhops, and to that end raiſed this ſedition, and caſt the true Biſhops out of the Church. And ſo they of whom this ſage obſervation is made, [that they did nothing imperiouſly, but depended on the commands of the multitude] are but theſe unruly fellow-believers, not really veſted with any power in the Church, only one part of a ſeditious multitude, exhorted by him to endeavour to pacifie another, and to endeavour to reſcue the legal Biſhops from ſuffering in this tempeſt (yea, though the ſame popular tumult would have put them into their places) others being reſolved to ſhake the whole Church, rather than they would miſs of their deſign of raiſing thoſe that they thought fit to admire. 23.

And for any ſuch words uſed (or by Clemens adviſed to be uſed) betwixt one part of this multitude and the other, I ſtill deſire it may be conſidered, whether it be poſſible that an argument can be regularly drawn from them, on which to found the right or power of the people, in ordering Eccleſiaſtical affairs, when beſides, all that hath formerly been ſaid, 'tis certain the ſpeech was made to that part of the people, which were in open rebellion againſt their ſuperiors, and was only a μαλακτικὸν or mollifying plaſter applied to the part which was at that preſent moſt inflamed, embrocation to allay the paroxyſm. 24.

I might now joyn iſſue with the Prefacer, and examine the truth of his poſitive affirmation, that in this ſaying of Clemens, there is that laid which is ſufficiently deſtructive to the Epiſcopacy that I contend for (and alſo of any ſuch Presbytery as ſhall undertake the diſpoſing of things in the Church of God, without the conſent and concurrent ſuffrage of the people) or that the Epiſcopacy I contend for, is wholly inconſiſtent with the power and liberty here granted to the people. But there is not one ſyllable here produced for the defence of this affirmation. And I think it competently appears by this time, how far that bare text of Clement is from founding it, and therefore I have now nothing more to contend with; my contrary affirmation, that no ſuch thing is yet concluded, will certainly be true, and fit to be confronted to, and balanced with it; and if I ſhould farther improve it into this, that nothing is concluſible, I think, having already ſeen the utmoſt, that two ſuch skilful artificers, Blondel, and the Prefacer, have been able to produce toward it, it would not be thought any grand inſolence. 25.

One thing only I cannot omit, that when he ſpeaks of the power of the people, he calls it [their concurrent ſuffrage] once, and after joyns them with the Presbyters in the προστάξει commanding or ordaining in the affairs of the Church. But I ſhall demand, can any thing like that, be drawn out of the place in Clement? Is it not certain that the multitude, whoſe προστάγματα, Ordinances he there ſpeaks of, had caſt out their Biſhops or Elders out of the Church, and thoſe that are to ſpeak to them, and joyn with them, are not Presbyters, but thoſe whom they would have exalted to that office, and raiſed their tumult about it? And how then can the Presbyters in that place be ſuppoſed to joyn with the people in this ordaining? 26.

I ſhall not make my obſervations from hence, but leave the Prefacer to examine himſelf, with what juſtice he hath managed his replies to me, or reproacht my anſwers to D. Blondel. And ſo indeed, as he ſaith, It is a ſad thing to conſider the pitiful intanglements and ſnares, &c. And ſo much for this Section alſo. The imployment is ſo dry to me, and the profit to the Reader ſo thin from ſuch kind of debates, that I ſhould be glad it were the laſt of them. 27.

CHAP.

CHAP. V.

Of the plurality of Elders in Clements Epiſtle.

SECT. I.

The difference betwixt Ignatius and Clement in the enumeration of Officers in the Church. Clements Epiſtle to the Churches of Achaia. (Παροικοῦσα.) Paul's Epiſtles to thoſe. Metropolitical Churches in the Apoſtles times. Anſwer to a charge concerning Grotius.

1. IN the next place, this digreſſion concerning the power of the people, being abſolved, I am called back again to Ignatius, and in him, to that of his aſſerting the three Orders in the Church, which is thought fit to be conſidered a while by comparing it with Clements doctrine in this matter; who is acknowledged to name but two. And then his charge againſt Ignatius and againſt me is thus managed;

2. "To return then, it is evident that in the time of Clement there were but two ſorts of Officers in "the Church, Biſhops and Deacons, whereas the Epiſtles of Ignatius do preciſely in every place, "where any mention is made of them, as there is upon occaſions, and upon none at all, inſiſt on "three orders diſtinct in name and things. With Clement it is not ſo. Thoſe whom he calls Biſhops "in one place, the very ſame perſons he immediately calls Presbyters, (after the example of Paul, "Acts 20. 28. and Tit. 1. 5. 7.) and plainly aſſerts, Epiſcopacy to be the office of Presbyters, "ἁμαρτία, ſaith he, ὐ μικρὰ ὑμῖν ἔσαι, ἐὰν τὺς ἀμέμπλως, κ) προσεπέσχονλας τὸ δῶρα τ ἐπισκοπῆς ἀποδίδωμεν, "μακάριοι οἱ προοδοιπορήσανλες πρεσβύτεροι, viz. Becauſe they were in no danger to be caſt from their "Epiſcopacy. And whereas the fault which he reproves in the Church of Corinth, is their diviſion, "and want of due ſubjection to their ſpiritual Governours, according to the order which Chriſt "hath appointed in all the Churches of the Saints, he affirms plainly, that thoſe Governours were "the Presbyters of the Church, αἰσχρὰ (ſaith he) κ) λίαν αἰσχρὰ, κ) ἀναξία τ ἐν Χριςῷ ἀγωγῆς ἀκέεσθαι "τ βεβαιοτάτην ἀρχαίαν Κορινθίων ἐκκλησίαν, δι' ἓν ἢ δύο πρόσωπα σασιάζειν πρὸς τὺς πρεσβυτέρυς. And in all "places thoughout the whole Epiſtle, writing (ἐκκλησία τ θεῦ παροικύσῃ Κόρινθον) to that particular "Church of Corinth, the Saints dwelling there, walking in the order and fellowſhip of the Goſpel, "where he treats of thoſe things, he ſtill intimates a plurality of Presbyters in the Church, (as "there may, nay there ought to be in every ſingle Congregation, Acts 20. 28.) without the leaſt "intimation of any ſingular perſon promoted upon any account whatever above his fellows. So in "the advice given to the perſons, who occaſioned the diviſion before mentioned; μόνον τὸ ποίμνιον "τ Χριςῦ εἰρηνευέτω μετὰ τ καθισαμένων πρεσβυτέρων. Had there been a ſingular Biſhop at Corinth, much "more a Metropolitan, ſuch as our Doctor ſpeaks him to have been, it had been impoſſible that he "ſhould be thus paſſed by in ſilence.

"But the Doctor gives you a double anſwer to this obſervation, with the ſeveral parts whereof I "doubt not but that he makes himſelf merry, if he can ſuppoſe that any men are ſo wedded to his "dictates, as to give them entertainment; for indeed they are plainly jocular. But learned men "muſt have leave ſometimes to exerciſe their fancies, and ſo ſport themſelves with their own ima-"ginations.

"1. Then, For the mention that is made of the many Presbyters in the Church of Corinth, to "whom Clement in the name of the Church of Rome, exhorts to give all due reſpect, honour, obedi-"ence. He tells you that by the Church of Corinth, all the Churches of Achaia are meant and in-"tended. The Epiſtle is directed only τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ θεῦ παροικύσῃ Κόρινθον, without the leaſt intima-"tion of any other Church or Churches. The difference it is written about, was occaſioned by one "or two perſons in that Church only; it is that Church alone that is exhorted to order, and due ſub-"jection to their Elders, from the beginning to the end of the Epiſtle, there is not one word, apex "or tittle, to intimate the deſignation of it to any Church or Churches, beyond the ſingle Church of "Corinth, or that they had any concernment in the difference ſpoken to. The Fabrick of after ages "lies ſo cloſe to the Doctors imagination, that there is no entrance for the true frame of the Primi-"tive Church of Chriſt, and therefore every thing muſt be wreſted and apportioned to the conceit of "ſuch an Epiſcopacy as he hath entertained. Whereas he ought to crop off both head and heels of "his own imagination, and the Epiſcopacy of the later days, which he too dearly affects, he chu-"ſeth rather to ſtretch and torture the ancient Government of the Church, that it may ſeem to anſwer "the frame preſently contended for. But let us a little attend to the Doctors learned arguments, "whereby he endeavours to make good his aſſertion.

"1. He tells you, that Corinth was the chief City of Achaia, the Metropolis (in a political ſenſe "and acceptation of the word) of Greece, where the Proconſul had his reſidence, Diſſ. 5. cap. 2. Sect. "3. Let us grant this to our Learned Doctor, leſt we find nothing to gratifie him withal; and "what then will follow? Hence, ſaith he, it will follow (Sect. 4.) that this Epiſtle which was ſent "Eccleſiæ παροικύσῃ Κόρινθον, non ad unius Civitatis Eccleſiam, ſed ad omnes totius Achaiæ Chriſtianos, "per ſingulas civitates & regiones, ſub Epiſcopis aut Præfectis ſuis ubique collocatas miſſa exiſtimetur: "But pray Doctor, why ſo? We poor creatures, who are not ſo ſharp ſighted, as to diſcern a Me-"tropolitan Archbiſhop at Corinth, of whom all the Biſhops in Greece were dependant, nor can find "any inſtituted Church in the Scripture, or in Clement, of one denomination, beyond a ſingle Con-"gregation, cannot but think, that all the ſtrength of this conſectary, from the inſinuation of ſuch

" a ſtate of things in the Church of God, is nothing but a pure begging of the thing in queſtion,
" which will never be granted upon ſuch terms.

" Yea, but he adds, Sect. 5. that Paul wrote his Epiſtle not only to the Church of Corinth, but al-
" ſo to all the Churches of Achaia, therefore Clement did ſo alſo. At firſt view this argument ſeems " not very concluſive, yea, appears indeed very ridiculous; the inforcement of it, which inſues,
" may perhaps give new life and vigour to it: How then is it proved that Paul wrote not only to " the Church of Corinth, but to all them in Achaia alſo? why ſaith he in the 2 Ep. 1. Chap. 1. ver.
" it is ſo expreſt: he writes, τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ τοῦ θεοῦ τῇ οὔσῃ ἐν Κορίνθῳ, σὺν τοῖς ἁγίοις πᾶσι τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ
" Ἀχαΐᾳ. Very good! It is indiſputably evident, that Paul wrote his ſecond Epiſtle to the Church " of Corinth, and all the reſt of Achaia, for he expreſly affirms himſelf ſo to do, and for the firſt
" Epiſtle it is directed not only to the Church of Corinth, 1 Chap. 2. v. but alſo, πᾶσι τοῖς ἐπικαλου-
" μένοις τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ, that is, ſaith our Doctor, in the whole region " of Achaia. So indeed ſays the Doctors great friend Grotius, to whom he is beholding for more " than one rare notion. I ſay it not in any way of any reproach to the Doctor, only I cannot but " think his careful warding of himſelf againſt the thoughts of men, that he ſhould be beholding to " Grotius, doth exceedingly unbecome the Doctors gravity, and ſelf-denial. This is complained " of by ſome who have tried it in reference to his late Comment on the Revelation. And in this Diſ-
" ſertation he is put by his own thoughts (I will not ſay guilty) to an Apology, cap. 1. Sect. 24.
" Quâ in re ſuffragium ſuum tuliſſe Hugonem Grotium, & πάνυ ex Annotationibus, poſthumis, nuper edi-
" tis, & poſtquam hæc omnia Typographo tranſcripta eſſent, curſim perlectis edoctus gratulor. Let not
" the Reader think that Doctor Ham. had tranſmitted his papers full of rare conjectures to the Prin" ter, before Grotius his Annotations on the Revelation were publiſhed, but only before he had read " them. The Doctor little thinks what a flye this is in his pot of Oyntment, nor how undecent with " all impartial men, ſuch Apologies, ſubſervient to a frame of ſpirit in bondage to a mans own
" eſteem and reputation, appear to be: but let this paſs: and let the Saints that call upon the name " of Jeſus Chriſt in every place, be the Saints in every part of Achaia, though the Epiſtle it ſelf
" (written indeed upon occaſion taken from the Church of Corinth, yet) was given by inſpiration
" from God, for the uſe not only of all Saints in the whole world, at that time wherein it was writ" ten, but of all thoſe who were to believe in any part or place of the world, to the end thereof: al" though the aſſertion of it be not built on any tolerable conjecture, but may be rejected with the " ſame facility wherewith it is tendred; what now will hence enſue? why hence it follows, that
" Clement alſo wrote his Epiſtle to all the Churches in Achaia. Very good, Paul writing an Epiſtle
" intituled, chiefly to the Corinthians, expreſly and ῥητῶς directs it to all the Saints or Churches " of Achaia, yea, to all that call upon the name of God in every place, ſo that his Epiſtle being of " Catholick concernment, is not to be confined to the Church of Corinth only, although moſt of the " particular things mentioned in that Epiſtle related only to that particular Church; Therefore Cle- " ment directing his Epiſtle to the Church of Corinth only, not once mentioning nor inſinuating an in" tention of extending it to any other, handling in it only the peculiar concernment of that Church,
" and a difference about one or two perſons therein, muſt be ſuppoſed to have written to all the " Churches of Achaia. And if ſuch arguments as theſe will not prove Epiſcopacy to be of Apoſtoli-
" cal conſtitution, what will prevail with men ſo to eſteem it? Si Pergama dextrâ defendi poſſent, " etiam hâc defenſa fuiſſent. And this is the cauſe of naming many Elders or Presbyters in one " Church: For my part I ſuppoſe the Doctor might more probably have adhered to a former con" jecture of his, Diſſert. 4. cap. 10. Sect. 9. concerning two ſundry different Churches, where were
" diſtinct Officers in the ſame City, Primò (ſaith he) reſpondeo, non uſquequaque verum eſt, quod pro
" conceſſo ſumitur; quamvis enim in unâ Eccleſiâ aut cœtu, plures ſimul Epiſcopi nunquam fuerint (pray " except them mentioned, Acts 20. 28. and thoſe Acts 14. 23.) nihil tamen obſtare, quin in eadem ci-
" vitate duo aliquando cœtus diſterminati fuerint. He might (I ſay) with more ſhew of probability " have abode by this obſervation, than to have rambled over all Greece, to relieve himſelf againſt
" his adverſaries. But yet neither would this ſuffice. What uſe may or will be made of this conceſ-
" ſion ſhall elſewhere be manifeſted.

That which is extended to this length in this part of the Prefacers diſcourſe, may briefly be ſumm'd up into theſe four heads; 1. a brief touch of the difference betwixt Clemens and Ignatius, the one mentioning but two, the other three Orders in the Church: 2. His aſſerting the Biſhops mentioned in Clemens to be bare Presbyters, concluding that from the number of them, many in that one Church of Corinth; 3. a taking notice of a firſt anſwer of mine to that argument, and endeavouring to invalidate it; 4. a reproach of my vain-glory in borrowing notions from Grotius, and being unwilling to be thought to do ſo. Which laſt, though it hang looſe from the matter in hand, being perfectly extrinſecal to our Controverſie, whether about Ignatius's Epiſtles or Epiſcopacy, (becauſe 'tis certain that one that hath received help from Grotius, is not for that the more likely to be in the wrong, or to be unable to maintain his aſſertions; and becauſe he that hath faults in his manners, the vain-glorious and ingrateful, may yet by ſo good a guide as Grotius, fall upon ſome truth) yet I ſhall afterward punctually reply to, and diſpatch that alſo, and ſhew how little happy the Prefacer is in all his acts of ſeverity. But as the order and the rule before me directs, I muſt begin with the more material parts. 3.

And firſt for the difference betwixt Clement and Ignatius, it was far from being any obſervation of the Prefacers, or uſeful to him againſt us; It is known to be a principal ingredient in the foundation, on which I build and aſſert Epiſcopacy, viz. that in the times of the Scriptures and of Clemens, there appear to have been two, and not above two Orders in the Church of Chriſt, Biſhops and Deacons; that theſe Biſhops were promiſcuouſly ſtiled, Ἐπίσκοποι and Πρεσβύτεροι, Biſhops and Elders, the nature of each word agreeing, to denote a ſingular Governour, and the uſe of it both in Scripture and Clemens, no way inclining to determine it to a number or Colledge of Presbyters in each Church, ruling in Common Council: That S. Paul, Phil. 1. 1. Tit. 1. 5, 7. 1 Tim. 3. expreſly ſets down this 4.

courſe, under the two plain heads of Biſhops and Deacons; that Clemens is as expreſs, that the Apoſtles at their firſt preaching conſtituted or ordained their firſt converts to be Biſhops and Deacons of thoſe that ſhould after believe; that Epiphanius voucheth it out of the profoundeſt Hiſtories, the ancienteſt Records, that while the paucity of Chriſtians was ſuch, as neither to need more than a Biſhop, and his Deacons in each Church, nor to afford much choice of perſons for any more, ἠρκέσθησαν, they were contented every where with theſe two: Laſtly, that when the number of believers was greatly increaſed, and ſo permitted and required it, then a ſecond order, under Biſhops, and above Deacons, was erected in each Church by Apoſtles and Apoſtolical men, particularly, as may probably be collected, by S. John in Aſia, toward the end of his days, and accordingly, that Ignatius's Epiſtles, written ſome years after John's death, are the firſt that mention that ſecond order.

5. All this in every branch hath been diſtinctly cleared both in the Diſſertations, and ſince in the Vindication of them from the London Aſſemblers, and not one word is here pretended to invalidate any one part of it, any farther, than as it will fall under one of the two following heads of diſcourſe, and therefore I am now to haſten to them. Only to be ſure to have neglected nothing, that can expect to be conſidered in the leaſt, It is here preſently viſible, 1. how cauſeleſly Ignatius is quarrell'd with, for mentioning the Orders of the Church upon no occaſion, when the deſign of his Epiſtles being to preſerve truth and peace among the Churches, he had no better and more compendious way to do it, than by requiring their ſubjection to their Governours, and thereupon he ſo conſtantly inculcates it, and this is a very important occaſion, and that which always makes it very ſeaſonable and pertinent, whenſoever it is done by him.

6. Secondly, How fallaciouſly the diſcourſe proceeds, which ſuppoſeth Clemens to call thoſe Presbyters (which ought to ſignifie as among us the word now ſignifies, collegues and fellow-rulers in the ſame Church) whom before he had called Biſhops, adding that he plainly aſſerts Epiſcopacy to be the office of Presbyters, and that their Spiritual Governours were the Presbyters of the Church, and a plurality of Presbyters in the ſame Church; whereas all this while he knows that Clement ſaith, that the Apoſtles inſtituted Biſhops and Deacons in all Cities and Regions, and that theſe are by us cleared to be ſingular Biſhops, and that to prevent contentions, they left a liſt of ſucceſſors to that ſingular office in each Church, and that theſe ſingular Biſhops are oft called Πρεσβύτεροι Elders, not only before, but after Clemens, even by thoſe that appear, and are acknowledged to aſſert the three Orders, and conſequently that Clement may well be allowed to ſtile them ſo, in whoſe time, for ought appears, there were none of that ſecond order, now vulgarly called Presbyters, yet erected, either at Rome, from whence or at Corinth, or in all Achaia, to which he wrote this Epiſtle.

7. Thirdly, How infirm a way of arguing it is, to ſay that Clement doth not in the leaſt intimate any ſingular perſon, promoted above his fellows, and that, had there been any ſuch at Corinth, it had been impoſſible he ſhould be thus paſs'd by in ſilence; when he knows, that the Apoſtles conſtituting Biſhops and Deacons, and what follows on that account, is by us inſiſted on, and confirmed to be more than an intimation of it, and when the whole purport of the Epiſtle is to preſerve the authority of the Governours of the ſeveral Churches under that Metropolis, whom he knows we contend and prove to be the ſingular Biſhops, and muſt not forgo that pretenſion till it be confuted.

8. To proceed to the ſecond head of diſcourſe, his aſſerting the Biſhops mentioned in Clemens to be bare Presbyters.] For this, it is certain, that he makes no tender of any other argument, or appearance of proof, but only the mention of Πρεσβύτεροι (which he renders Presbyters) in the plural, whom therefore he concludes to be many Presbyters in the ſame Church: But 1. Πρεσβύτερος Elder, ſignifies Biſhop in Scripture, in Clemens, in Polycarp, in thoſe of the Ancients after them, that are known to aſſert the ſingular Biſhop above Presbyters in each Church. And this having been ſaid and cleared in the Diſſert. is not, in the leaſt, attempted to be diſproved by him.

9. Secondly, Theſe many Elders are not all (or more than one) ſaid or intimated by Clement to be in one City. For the Epiſtle, as was ſhewed in the Diſſert. is, I ſuppoſe, moſt certainly, may have been addreſt by Clement, not to the ſingle Church of that one City of Corinth, but to the Churches of all Achaia or Greece, of which Corinth was the chief, being the Metropolis.

10. That it was not ſo, is barely ſaid; but largely proved in that place, Diſſert. 5. cap. 2. firſt from the title of the Epiſtle, ἡ ἐκκλησία θεοῦ παροικοῦσα Ῥωμὴν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ τοῦ θεοῦ παροικούσῃ Κόρινθον, where it is on each part the παροικία, or whole province, as of Rome, ſo of Corinth, the Region and territory that belonged to either of thoſe Metropoles, which in that age was called παροικία, or the adjacent region, expreſt by Ignatius, by τόπος χωρὶς τῶν Ῥωμαίων, the place of the region of the Romans, by Polycarp in the ſame kind, ſpeaking of Philippi, ἐκκλησία παροικοῦσα Φιλίπποις, the Church adjoyning or belonging to Philippi, and by * Euſebius, ἡ ἐν Κορίνθῳ παροικία, the Province belonging to Corinth, of which Dionyſius was Biſhop or Metropolitan.

* Lib. 4. cap.

11. Secondly, this was proved by the analogie held between this Epiſtle of Clemens, and the Epiſtle of S. Paul, inſcribed to the Corinthians; For I demand, was not this Epiſtle of Clement written to the ſame Church or Churches, to whom S. Paul's two Epiſtles had been addreſſed? That it was, is more than probable by the Common title; and other Characters in the Epiſtle it ſelf incline to it. As, that he refers them to the Epiſtles of S. Paul written to them, and that upon the like occaſion of diviſions and factions, ſo early crept in among them. So pag. 61. Ἀναλάβετε τὴν Ἐπιστολὴν τοῦ μακαρίου Παύλου, τί πρῶτον ὑμῖν ἐν ἀρχῇ εὐαγγελίου ἐγραψεν, ἐπ' ἀληθείας πνευματικῶς ἐπέστειλεν ὑμῖν περὶ αὐτοῦ τε καὶ Κηφᾶ καὶ Ἀπόλλω, διὰ τὸ τότε καὶ τότε προσκλίσεις ὑμᾶς πεποιῆσθαι, ἀλλὰ ἡ πρόσκλισις ἐκείνη ἧττον ἁμαρτίαν ὑμῖν προσέφερεν --- Take, ſaith he, the Epiſtle of S. Paul, conſider what he ſaith to you in the beginning of his preaching to you, certainly it was by inſpiration from God, that he wrote to you concerning himſelf and Cephas, and Apollos, becauſe that then ye had partialities and inclinations to one more than to another, but that partiality brought leſs ſin unto you --- Here ſtill it is the ſame [ὑμεῖς, you] that before, and now, were guilty of this ſin of carnality, admiration of perſons, faction, and now at length ſedition, and ſo the ſame Churches now and then, to whom theſe Epiſtles on that occaſion were addreſt, and there is no circumſtance producible, that reſtrains one more than the other.

Now

Now of the Epiſtles of Paul, it is evident they were not confined to the one City of Corinth, but 11.
to all the Churches of Achaia; ſo it is ſpecified of the ſecond of them, 2 Cor. 1. 1. To the Church of God which is at Corinth, with all the Saints which are in all Achaia: And though this be not expreſly ſaid of or in the firſt Epiſtle, or in this of Clement, yet the relation that one hath to the other, will conclude it of thoſe alſo; and the phraſe, which there we find ſuperadded to the Church of Corinth, 1 Cor. 1. 2. πᾶσι ἐπικαλουμένοις τὸ ὄνομα Χριστῦ ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ, to all that are called by the name of Chriſt, all Chriſtians, in every place] (and the like form at the concluſion of this, The Grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you, καὶ μετὰ πάντων πανταχῆ τῶν κεκλημένων ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ, and with all every where that are called by God] hath in all probability the ſame importance) for that being univerſal, and extended beyond Corinth, muſt not yet be interpreted of all Chriſtians in the world, for that would make each of theſe a Catholick Epiſtle, and would conclude the Apoſtle to have received an Epiſtle from the Catholick Church, to which this return was made; c. 7. 1. and ſo likewiſe the particular ſins, and ſinners both there and here, to which they apply their exhortations, the inceſt, the going to Law before heathen Judicatures, the ſeditions, &c. do evidently reſtrain it from that latitude; which two circumſtances being balanced on each ſide, will certainly leave it in the middle, betwixt the one Church of Corinth on the one ſide, and the univerſal Church of the whole world on the other, and ſo leave it commenſurate and appliable to the πάντα κλίματα τῆς Ἀχαΐας, all the coaſts of Achaia. Thus when 1 Cor. 3. 5. it is ſaid of Apollos, that he hath watered them, as the Miniſter by which they to whom he wrote, believed (and ſo in this of Clemens, that they had been factiouſly inclined to Apollos) it is evident by the ſtory in the Acts, that this belonged not only to Corinth, but to Achaia indefinitely, Acts 18. he reſolved to go into Achaia, and coming thither he contributed much to thoſe that believed, ver. 27.

To theſe are added theſe farther indications, that in the Epiſtle to the Romans ſent from Corinth, 12.
the ſalutations are ſent from the Churches of Chriſt, in the plural, Rom. 16. 16. mention is made of the Church which is at Cenchrea (which is one of theſe Churches) ver. 1. ſo what the Apoſtle writes in theſe Epiſtles concerning the collection for Judea, 1 Cor. 16. 1. and 2 Cor. c. 8. and 9. evidently belongs to all Achaia, Rom. 15. 26. Macedonia and Achaia have pleaſed to make a certain contribution, and I know your forwardneſs, Achaia hath been ready or prepared, 2 Cor. 9. 2. and ſo when c. 1. 9. he had ſaid, when I was preſent among you and wanted, I burthened no man, it follows, ver. 10. this boaſting ſhall not be ſhut up againſt me in all the regions of Achaia. Where ſtill [ὑμεῖς] and [Ἀχαΐα] [you] and [Achaia] are all one; and if that liberty be but allowed in this Epiſtle, the whole difficulty is at an end; for then, as there were many cities and Epiſcopal ſees in Achaia, the chief of which was Corinth, and what was ſent to that Metropolis, was from thence to be communicated, as it belonged, to all thoſe others: ſo the Biſhops of each of theſe might very fitly be called by Clement πρεσβύτεροι Elders, and not the Elders of that one Church or City of Corinth, but all that related to that Metropolis.

This, I may have leave to hope, will be lookt on as a firmer foundation on one ſide, to conclude 13.
that the Πρεσβύτεροι Elders, which is alſo the title of Biſhops, in this Epiſtle, being alſo called Biſhops here, (a title which, as is * elſewhere ſhewed at large, as far as the Scriptures, never was applied to a bare Presbyter) were the ſeveral Biſhops or ſingular Governours of the many cities of Achaia; than the bare number or multitude of them, without any other circumſtance to inforce it, will be ſufficient to infer that they were the many Presbyters in one city.

* Diſſert. 4. c. 8. & c. Vindic. c. 2. ſect. 2.

To come therefore to the third thing, the taking notice of this anſwer, and his endeavouring 14.
to invalidate it, I ſhall briefly examine whatſoever is ſaid by him in purſuit of that attempt. And his firſt Method is that of the Scoffer, to prepare his Reader to look on this anſwer as ridiculous, he doubts not but the Doctor makes himſelf merry, if he can ſuppoſe any ſo wedded to his dictates, as to give it entertainment, for it is plainly jocular; and again, I muſt in the ſame Sceptick humour, be ſtiled a learned man, ſo to be allowed to exerciſe my fancy, to ſport with my own imaginations.

But 1. truly, Sir, I was neither then nor am now at ſo much vacancy, which might call for ſport; 15.
If I were, I would find out more Chriſtian-like divertiſements. 2. I could never think that what was thus confirmed by Arguments (and this had been done in the Diſſert. on the ſame grounds of probation, which have here been mentioned) could be liable to the cenſure either of Dictates on one ſide, or of jocular, on the other; and 3. If he had been as well able to confute my anſwer, or confirmations of it, as he was to ſcoff and cry, jocular, &c. he muſt needs have thought it more like a Chriſtian, and a Scholar, and a propugner of truth, to have inſiſted wholly on the former, and omitted the latter. Laſtly, I learn from hence, wherein my crime conſiſted, when I ſaid of one of Blondel's obſervations from Clement, that it was inſtar prodigii; It ſeems I ſhould have ſaid that it was plainly jocular, have ſmiled inſtead of wondring, and all had been very well.

Having thus anſwered his Proeme, I come to his narration: And there truly I find no one argument 16. of force to countenance or juſtifie his mirth. A cumulus there is, but that will ſignifie nothing, unleſs ſome one of the particulars, of which it conſiſts, do ſo. And that they cannot do, being by him known to be denied by me, before they are mentioned, and yet no proof added to ſupport them.

As 1. that the Epiſtle is directed to the Church παροικίαν Κόρινθον, without the leaſt intimation of any 17.
other Church or Churches, and after in the like words, a little varied, that there is not an apex or tittle to intimate the deſignation of it to any but the Church of Corinth.] This is a negative unproved, and concluding nothing; whereas it is evident to him, that the very phraſe [παροικίαν Κόρινθον] is taken by me for more than an intimation that it was the whole παροικία or Province, which he wrote to, and that the conſent betwixt this and S. Paul's Epiſtles, intimated them to be addreſt to the ſame, and ſo to the Churches of all Achaia.

So 2. when he ſaith the difference it was written about, was occaſioned by one or two perſons in that 18.
Church only, and that it was that Church only that is exhorted to order and due ſubjection to Elders; that is petitio principii, and that which no way appears in the Epiſtle; one or more of theſe might be in other Churches of Achaia, and thoſe other Churches might be all exhorted to order and ſubjection to their ſeveral Biſhops.

19. 3. When he falls back ſo ſoon into his firſt Topick again, that of Contumely [the fabrick of after-ages lies ſo cloſe to the Doctor's imagination, that there is no entrance for the true frame, and therefore every thing muſt be wreſted, &c.] and yet more, that whereas I ought to crop off head and heels (a phraſe that I have not met with, croping off heels) I choſe to ſtretch and torture ---] 1. It is evident how eaſily this might be retorted, thus, that the fabrick of this laſt part of this laſt age in this Iſland of ours, lies ſo cloſe on my Monitor's imagination, that the frame in Clement's time, of a Church governed by Biſhops, ordained by the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, not by the people or the whole congregation, cannot find entrance with him. And ſecondly, from the recurring of ſuch kind of Rhetorick as this ſo ſoon, I might very probably conclude, that his whole confidence was placed in this one Topick, which is ordered both to lead the van, and alſo to bring up the reer, to be the reſerve as well as the forlorn hope; And then upon this view of his reply, I deſire it may be indifferently conſidered, whether my arguments were not as valid to confirm my anſwer, as his mirth and repetitions and bare negations without any attempt of proof, were of force to aſſert the contrary.

20. Next he promiſes to attend to my arguments, but cannot hold his countenance again, they muſt be ſtiled [learned arguments] forſooth (to have ſpoken as he thought, had been more like a ſerious perſon, that meant to attend to arguments) And the firſt that he attends to, is, that Corinth was the Metropolis of Achaia, in a political ſence and acceptation of the word, where the Proconſul had his reſidence, and this he grants, but for my conſectary from thence, that the Epiſtle inſcribed to the Church παροικούσῃ Κόρινθον, ſhould be conceived ſent to the Chriſtians of all Achaia] all the ſtrength thereof, ſaith he, from the inſinuation of ſuch a ſtate of things in the Church of God, is nothing, but a pure begging of the thing in queſtion.

21. But firſt, certainly this cannot be that fallacy called τὸ ἐν ἀρχῇ, the begging of the queſtion; It is the inferring of that which is there proved both before and after; before, both as that ſignifies long before, and immediately before; long before, viz. Diſſert. 4. c. 5. the erection of Metropoles and Metropolitanes in the Church had been demonſtrated; Immediately before, it had been mentioned as a præcognoſcendum, that Corinth was ſuch an one, which if granted, it muſt follow, that there was a Metropolitan Archbiſhop at Corinth, of whom all the Biſhops in Achaia were dependent. So again this was proved after, by the conſent betwixt this and Paul's Epiſtles; thoſe were written to all the Chriſtians of all Achaia, and then why ſhould not this be reſolved to be ſo written alſo? And how then can the queſtion be here ſaid to be begged by me? If this of Corinth's being a Metropolis in the political ſence, were not ſufficient to infer this concluſion, firſt that might then have been ſaid, the conſequence denied, and trial made, what was, or what could be farther ſaid to prove it; but that method was not here thought ſafe, it was eaſier to ſay, the ſtrength of the conſectary is nothing but a pure begging of the queſtion,] which yet I never heard ſaid of a concluſion, inferred from premiſes, and after, farther undertaken to be proved; I deſire him to conſult Ariſtotle in his diſcourſe of that fallacy, and he ſhall find it was not τὸ ἐν ἀρχῇ, on my ſide, a begging of the queſtion, but τὸ ἐν συμπεράσματι, on his, a denying the concluſion.

22. This for the form of his reply; Secondly then, as to the matter of it, I did, and ſtill do think it a concluding argument, which I there uſed; and being briefly ſet down, 'twill be more explicitly this: An Epiſtle addreſt to a Metropolitical ſee, under the title of the Church adjacent to ſuch a chief City or Metropolis, is addreſt to all the Cities and Churches that relate to that Metropolis; But Corinth was ſuch a City, and this Epiſtle was ſo addreſt to it --- That Corinth was ſuch a Metropolis, was apparent, and is not denied, as to the political acceptation of it; And if it were ſo alſo in the Eccleſiaſtick, there is no farther difficulty; And if my ſuppoſing and not farther proving of this in that place, were the infirm part of the diſcourſe, and begging of the queſtion, I muſt anſwer, that I had no reaſon to expect it ſhould be eſteemed ſo, having long before, on occaſion of the Angels in the Revelation, entred into a diſcourſe of Metropolitical Cities, and ſhewed, that not only in the Political but Eccleſiaſtical acceptation, there were ſuch in the Apoſtles, and ſo in Clement's time.

23. This was there manifeſted in many inſtances, 1. in Antioch the Metropolis of Syria and Cilicia, and all the Churches of thoſe Regions, the παροικία of Antioch, and dependant on that; Secondly in Rome the Metropolis of the Roman Province, or Urbicarian Region; Thirdly, in Alexandria the Metropolis of Egypt, whereupon Mark is ſaid by * Euſebius to have conſtituted Churches (in the plural) there, all which under the title of ‖ ἡ ἐν Ἀλεξανδρείᾳ παροικία, the province of, or belonging to Alexandria (as here ἐκκλησία παροικοῦσα Κόρινθον) were by S. Mark committed to Anianus or Ananias, and the Government adminiſtred by him, all the reſt of the Churches there planted by Mark, relating to this as to the Metropolis. Fourthly, in Gortyna the prime Metropolis of Crete, the Archbiſhop whereof, in the Epiſtle of Dionyſius Biſhop of Corinth, Ann. Chr. 175. is ſtiled Biſhop ἐκκλησίας παροικούσης Γορτύναν, καὶ λοιπῶν κατὰ Κρήτην παροικιῶν, of the Church adjacent to (i. e. the province of) Gortyna, and of all the reſt in Crete. Fifthly, in Philippi, the Metropolis of one Province of Macedonia, Acts 16. 12. to which purpoſe it is, that in the Epiſtle ſaid to be written by Ignatius to them of Tarſus, we find, ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς αἱ ἐκκλησίαι Φιλιππησίων, the Churches (in the plural) of the Philippians ſalute you. Sixthly, in the ſeveral Churches of Aſia, mentioned Rev. 1. each of them a Metropolis over ſome other Cities, and Epheſus the prime of all the Proconſular Aſia. And this form, or this ſtate of things in the Church of God, is there by three Canons of the three great Councils, Nice, Antioch, Epheſus, teſtified to be the ancient Primitive, Apoſtolical ſtate.

* Lib. 2. c. 16'.
‖ Ibid. c. 24'.

24. This being then done at large, and thereby the Primitive conſtitution of Metropolitical Churches competently aſſerted, it ſeemed to me ſufficient but to re-mind the Reader, that Corinth was one ſuch Metropolis of Achaia or Greece, and accordingly, that upon that account (in the Eccleſiaſtical as well as Political acceptation) the Epiſtles of Paul inſcribed πρὸς Κορινθίους, to the Corinthians, were meant to all the Churches of Achaia, and not only to that one of Corinth. And what error I have have committed herein, I confeſs I am not yet able to diſcern or divine, or what there is behind that wants farther proof.

The only thing I can yet think of, is, that in this Prefacer's judgment, I have not made it ſufficiently appear by that one evidence of Corinth's being a Metropolis, where the Proconſul of Achaia kept his reſidence, Acts 18. 12, 15. (i. e. a Metropolis in the Political acceptation) that it was alſo a Metropolis in the Eccleſiaſtical notitiæ, and then it may be fit perhaps farther to add ſomething to clear that, and put it out of queſtion, not only in theſi, that the Church generally thus correſponded with the ſtate, (according to that of Origen, ὥπω δὲ καὶ ἄρχοντα ἐκκλησίας ἑκάσης πόλεως ἀρχοῦσι τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει συσκηνιτῶν, the Governour of the Church of every City muſt keep conformity to the ruler of thoſe that are in the City, Contr. Celſ. l. 3.) but alſo in hypotheſi, that ſo it was particularly in this of Corinth. 25.

To which purpoſe it were eaſie to multiply teſtimonies, which put it out of queſtion that Corinth was a Metropolitical Church, and ſo is recorded to be in all the Notitiæ, that are extant; But I ſhall content my ſelf with one teſtimony, that of * Saint Chryſoſtom, who asketh this queſtion, Διὰ τί τῇ μητροπόλει γράφων, πᾶσι δι' αὐτῆς ἐπιστέλλει, ὁ παυλαχοῦ τοῦτο ποιῶν; Θεσσαλονικεῦσι γὰρ ἐπιστέλλων οὐδέπω καὶ Μακεδόσιν ἐπέστελλε, καὶ Ἐφεσίοις γράφων, ὁμοίως ὁ περιέλαβε τὴν Ἀσίαν ἅπασαν, καὶ ἡ πρὸς Ῥωμαίους δὲ ἐπιστολὴ, οὐχὶ καὶ τοῖς τὴν Ἰταλίαν οἰκοῦσίν ἐστιν ἐπεσταλμένη, ἀλλ' ἐνταῦθα αὐτὸ ποιεῖ, καὶ ἐν τῇ πρὸς Γαλάτας, οὐδὲ γὰρ ἐκεῖ μίᾳ πόλει, καὶ δύο καὶ τρισὶν, ἀλλὰ τοῖς παυλαχοῦ διεσπαρμένοις ἐπιστέλλει λόγων, Παῦλος ἀπόστολος --- ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῆς Γαλατίας ---- Why writing to the Metropolis, he writes (i. e. expreſſes himſelf to write) to all by or through that, whereas in other Epiſtles he doth not do ſo? for writing to the Theſſalonians, he no where addreſſeth it to the Macedonians alſo, and writing to the Epheſians in like manner, he comprehendeth not all Aſia, and the Epiſtle to the Romans was not addreſt alſo to the inhabitants of Italy; but here this he doth, and in the Epiſtle to the Galatians, for there alſo he makes his addreſs, not to one, or two, or three Cities, but to all every where diſperſed, ſaying, Paul an Apoſtle --- to the Churches of Galatia --- where, as Corinth at the time when S. Paul wrote that Epiſtle, is by him ſuppoſed to be a Metropolis, and ſo Theſſalonica, and Epheſus, and Rome, ſo both in the Epiſtles to the Corinthians, and in that to the Galatians, there were more Cities than one, to whom they were addreſt. And then I ſuppoſe there is a full teſtimony to all, and more than I undertook to prove from it. At the preſent it ſufficeth, Corinth, ſaith he, was a Metropolis, and that in the Eccleſiaſtick notion, when S. Paul wrote to it. 26.

* Edit. Savil. Tom. 3. p. 343.

What the Prefacer farther adds, is for the examining my next proof or evidence, that Clement's Epiſtle belonged to the Churches of Achaia, and not to Corinth only, becauſe the Epiſtles of S. Paul appear to have done ſo. And beſides the ſcoffs and the demurer accuſation about Grotius (which ſhall anon be conſidered) all that he replies is, 1. That though S. Paul's being expreſly and ῥητῶς directed to the Churches of Achaia, cannot be confined to the Church of Corinth, yet Clement directing his Epiſtle to the Church of Corinth only, without mention, or inſinuation of any intention to extend it to any other, handling in it the peculiar concernment of that Church, and a difference about one or two perſons therein, cannot be ſuppoſed to be written thus to the Churches of all Achaia. Secondly; That in his opinion I might more probably have adhered to a former conjecture of mine concerning two different Churches, with diſtinct Officers, in the ſame City, though this would not ſuffice neither. 27.

To theſe I reply, 1. That of S. Paul's, only one (the ſecond) is expreſly directed to all the Churches of Achaia, and yet the former is without that expreſs direction, already ſufficiently cleared (and not here denied) to belong to the ſame Churches, and the ſame reaſons hold for this of Clemens, which was written to them, to whom Paul wrote, and not to the Church of Corinth, but παροικοῦσῃ Κορίνθου to the Church adjacent, the παροικία the Territory, that belonged to it. And therefore, ſecondly; That this is more than an inſinuation of an intention to extend it to thoſe other Churches. Thirdly; That the concernments of the Epiſtle are no way reſtrained to the particular Church of Corinth, but lye common to the other Churches of Achaia. Fourthly; that the difference, or rather ſedition, doth no way appear to be peculiar to the Church of that one City: The one or two, if they ſignifie ſtrictly no greater a number than two, might yet as probably be in any one or two other Cities of Greece, as in that one of Corinth. And there is no probability of reaſon to conclude, that the Errors about the Reſurrection, &c. had ſpread no farther than that one City. 28.

Laſtly, for his opinion that I might more probably have adhered to my former conjecture, concerning the two different Aſſemblies of Jewiſh and Gentile Chriſtians in one city; All that I need ſay, is, that though I ſtill adhere to that conjecture, as far as ever, and no way fear what he threatens, that any uſe, which I ſhall repent of, will, or ever can be made of this conceſſion, yet I never thought fit to apply it to this matter, both becauſe here is no need of ſuch aids, (and I may have leave to think, the Prefacer would not have ſuggeſted it to me, if there had, and that if he had had any way to wreſt the former hold from me, he would not thus have attempted it by diverſion) and becauſe as I am not ſure that there ever were two ſuch diſtinct Cœtus at Corinth under diſtinct Biſhops (only from the authority of Dionyſius Biſhop of Corinth, that there were two parts of their firſt plantation, one from Paul, another from Peter) ſo if there ever were, yet they might before this time of Clement's writing, be made up into one body, as I know the Jewiſh and Gentile Church at Rome, that had been under different Governours, were now united under Clement. 29.

And therefore to conclude this matter, I deſire every man may be allowed liberty to uſe his own arguments and anſwers, and to take his own time to produce and apply them, and that, till what hath been ſaid, be refuted, I may be permitted to think that the whether Ἐπίσκοποι or Πρεσβύτεροι, Biſhops or Elders, in this Epiſtle of Clement are the ſingular Governours of the ſeveral cities of Achaia. 30.

What he ſaith by the by, of Acts 20. 8. and Acts 14. 23. that thoſe two places muſt be excepted from the univerſal negative, that there were never more Biſhops than one in a city, he cannot but know how little force it hath againſt me, who have manifeſted out of Ireneus, that the Πρεσβύτεροι Elders or Biſhops, Acts 20. were the Biſhops of Aſia, not of the one city of Epheſus, and that the Elders ordained in every Church, Acts 14. were the Biſhops ordained at Lyſtra, Iconium and Antioch, and not any plurality of Presbyters in one city. 31.

32. Having now done with all the three former particulars, wherein Ignatius and Clement, Epiſcopacy and Presbytery were concern'd, there remains only that which is perſonal to me, in relation to Grotius, but that conſiſting of ſeveral branches, of which it will preſently appear how many, or rather how few of them have any degree either of weight or of truth in them.

33. The firſt is very light and unconſiderable, that in interpreting [all in every place] 1 Cor. 1. 2. Grotius ſaith the ſame with me. And would not any man believe this aſſertion of the Prefacer, take it on his word, and not think it needful to examine it, but reſolve, it is ſo much the better, and that thereby it ſeems, that I am not ſingular in my imagination? But to ſee the luck of it, having no ſuch idea in my memory, I turn'd to Grotius's Notes on the place, and this is all that they ſay there; Oſtendit vocationem omnibus eſſe communem, ac proinde unum eſſe corpus debere, non tantum unius loci, ſed & omnium locorum, puta Achaiæ & Macedoniæ, in quâtum erat Paulus, Eccleſiam. The Apoſtle by the phraſe [all that in every place call on the name of the Lord Jeſus, both theirs and ours] ſhews that vocation is common to all, and conſequently that the Church, not only of one place, but of all places, to wit of Achaia, and Macedonia, where Paul then was, ought to be one body] From hence truly I was not ſo diligent a reader of that learned mans Annotations, as to make any collection at all; or ſo much as to remember that he had ſaid it, nor was I ever ſo acute, or ſagacious, as from thoſe words to have been able to infer this concluſion, that the Epiſtle was written to all the Churches of Achaia: For as long as Corinth was in Achaia, there had been perfect truth in Grotius's words, though the Epiſtle had been written only to Corinth; as there is on the other ſide, in his mention of Macedonia (where Paul then was) though Paul was not conceived by Grotius to have been in above one City of Macedonia (viz. Philippi) at this time when thus he wrote.

34. The ſecond is, that H. Grotius is my great friend, to whom I am beholding for more than one rare notion. To which I anſwer, that this is ſo far perfect truth, that he is one whoſe memory I exceedingly reverence and value for what he hath written; one from whom I have from my firſt entrance on the conſideration of Divine and Moral learning, received more uſeful notions than I have from any Writer of this laſt Age, and ſo may any man elſe that is not very much above my pitch, if he read him with a ſincere deſire of knowing and practiſing the truth. As for any uncertain conjectures, which I ſuppoſe the Prefacer means by rare notions, or for any expedients whereby to defend the matter in hand, that of Epiſcopacy, I know not that I received any the leaſt hint or direction from him.

35. The third is, that I ward my ſelf carefully that I may not be thought beholding to Grotius. To which I reply, that I never was ſparing on any occaſion, whether by words or writings to give my teſtimony of my valuing, and my being beholding to him, but eſpecially that I have done this very frequently in my Papers that have been publiſht, as I ſhall not need make proof by citations or references to them; and I pretend not either to more gravity or ſelf-denial, than is perfectly reconcileable with this; how far either of theſe are diſcover'd by the Prefacer, it is not my purpoſe to examine. And whereas it is ſuggeſted as the complaint of ſome that have tried it in reference to the Comment on the Revelations, this muſt needs be in thoſe men, whoſoever they are, a moſt groundleſs complaint or quarrel, 1. Becauſe it is moſt certain that Grotius's Book of Notes upon the Revelation, came out after I had penn'd the Annotations on the Revelation, and ſo all that I had to do, was to ſurvey them as ſoon as they came out, and comparing my Notes with his, to reap what benefit I could from him; but did not, could not receive from him my ſcheme of that Prophecy, or ſeries of my interpretations on the whole, or on any part thereof, ſave only thoſe two Chapters (13. and 17.) whereon he had formerly written.

36. Secondly; Becauſe in the one place which my memory at preſent ſuggeſteth to me, that I borrowed the interpretation from him, there I find upon examination, that I have own'd it from him, in that of the two Witneſſes, p. 962. I ſay, it is reaſonable to forſake all other conjectures, and pitch upon that which the learned H. Grotius hath reſolved on.

37. Laſtly, Becauſe I had made my particular and ſolemn acknowledgments to this Learned man, by recommending, next after Chryſoſtom and the Greek Scholiaſts, his admirable Comments and poſthumous Annotations, in which number this on the Revelation was ſpecially comprehended. This is once done in the beginning of the Preface, and again toward the end of it. And that is the third argument to ſuperſede all force of this charge. And ſo I am ſtill, I ſuppoſe, free from all appearance of having merited any part of this character faſtned on me by him and his other complainers.

38. After I had written thus much, and juſt as this paragraph was tranſcribed, it happens quite above my expectation, that a fourth evidence was offered to me in a Letter from a Learned friend, an account whereof, by tranſcribing ſome few paſſages in it, will a little longer divert the Reader: It is in theſe words:

Sir, I have ſeen a Preface of Mr. Owen's before his Anſwer to Mr. John Goodwin touching Perſeverance, and I doubt not but you have ſeen it, or will ſee it, before this Paper comes to you; ſo I will take no trouble to render to you any thing more of that Digreſſion, which he ſpends upon you, than to give you notice that I obſerve amongſt the many reproaches, wherewith he endeavours to load you, in the 17. and 18. pages, he tells men, That there are many that complain of your ſecret vain-glory, in ſeeking to diſclaim the direction from H. Grotius in reference to your Comment on the Revelation. This charge, I ſuppoſe, reflects upon the very cloſe of your Præmonition concerning the Interpretation of the Apocalypſe, viz. (Among which number I now alſo find the moſt learned Hugo Grotius, in thoſe poſthumous Notes of his on the Apocalypſe lately publiſhed.] It ſeems thoſe many complainers ſuſpect, that (for the main delineation of your work on that Prophecy) you took it from Grotius, though you do pretend, that without any other light going before you, you derived it from the light ſhining in the Prophecy it ſelf. Unleſs you think it more fit for you to contemn than to vindicate your ſelf from that aſperſion, ſure you want not ſufficient evidence to reprove that ſurmiſe. I doubt not but you communicated your thoughts concerning that Prophecy to ſeveral friends, whom you judged proper to be conſulted in ſuch a matter: Amongſt others, I am ſure you acquainted Mr. John D. with the firſt draught of your Interpretation, who thereupon told you, That when he and I converſed together, which was in the year 1645. I had in ſome diſcourſes declared my opinion concerning that Prophecy, to what times it referred, and that he found a great concurrence in your opinion and mine, which relation of his moved you to write to me, and require of me to communicate my thoughts to you about the ſcope of that Prophecy; and this your Letter was dated Octob. 9. 1648. To which deſire I forthwith paid a due reſpect, and in ſuch manner, as I was able, gave you a ſcheme of my thoughts on that Prophecy, and then ſoon after my anſwer ſent to you, I received a ſecond Letter from you, in which you ſaid [That which you have now ſent me is the laying down of all the very grounds, which I have laid down for the interpreting the Apocalypſe, and unleſs it be in one little particular, the concurrence is exactly the ſame for the interpretation of the ſeveral parts.] And then you proceeded in that Letter to give me the ſumm of every part of the Prophecy, which is the exact ſumm of your interpretation which is publiſhed: And this ſecond Letter was dated Decemb. 18. 1648. I have thus punctually ſet down the times, becauſe it is very likely that you cannot with ſo much eaſe diſtinguiſh the times as may clear you perfectly from that calumny, if you think fit to take any notice thereof at all.

All that I ſhall add to this ſeaſonable aſſiſtance of my ill memory, is but this, that Grotius's Notes were not publiſhed till the year 1650. And ſo much above what I intended in anſwer to that ſuggeſtion.

The fourth thing is, that which is concluded from mine own Apologie, as he is pleaſed to call it, Diſſert. 5. c. 1. ſect. 24. where I ſaid, that I was glad to find by Grotius's Annotations on the Revelation (read haſtily by me after the Diſſertations were finiſht and tranſcribed for the Printer) that he was of my opinion concerning a Gentile and a Jewiſh congregation of Chriſtians in the ſame city. How I offended in this, or why this ſhould be ſtiled an Apologie, or what I ſhould have ſaid in any ſyllable otherwiſe than I did, I confeſs I cannot imagine. This only I know, that it was perfect truth, what there I ſaid, that that whole diſcourſe, about the two ſorts of Aſſemblies and Biſhops, in every branch of it was made before his Annotations either were read by me, or publiſht; that if I had had his authority to have voucht for the whole obſervation, I ſhould moſt gladly have own'd it, and counted it my intereſt to do ſo, that I might not be blamed for the ſingularity of the obſervation by thoſe, who were otherwiſe minded: That as it was, I was glad I had his ſuffrage, and accordingly expreſſed I was ſo. 39.

And now truly I am very little concern'd in the gloſs, which, quite contrary to my expectation, I find put upon it; were it not my duty to avert the ſuſpicion of a vice, and the ill example conſequent to it, I ſhould never have diſturbed the fly, which he tells me, this hath let into my pot of ointment. The Prefacer ſhould have had my free leave to have ſaid this, and much more (ſo long as it was ſo far from truth) againſt me, without my making any word of ſolemn reply to it. As it is, I am not ill pleaſed, that I am now at an end of it. 40.

SECT. II.

A digreſſion concerning ſome jealouſies ſpread of Hugo Grotius.

YET becauſe I will be as little in the debt of that learned man Hugo Grotius, as I may, and becauſe I have the occaſion offer'd, which ſuggeſts it my duty to make ſome return of gratitude to ſo good a friend of mine, as I am told he is, I ſhall do it in a way, which ſeems to me moſt proper at this time. 1.

This very pious, learned, judicious man hath of late among many fallen under a very unhappy fate, being moſt unjuſtly calumniated, ſometimes as a Socinian, ſometimes as a Papiſt, and as if he had learnt to reconcile Contradictories, or the moſt diſtant extreams, ſometimes as both of them together. 2.

For that of his being a Socinian, three things are vulgarly made uſe of, to infuſe that jealouſie into mens minds: 1. Some parcels of a Letter of his to Crellius. 2. Some relations of what paſt from him at his death. 3. Some paſſages in his Annotations. Of theſe it may ſuffice to ſay briefly, that the collection, which is made from the firſt, and the whole of the ſecond, is perfect calumny and forgery; the third an injuſtice in the publiſher. 3.

For the firſt of them, having ſeen above twenty years ſince, ἀποσπασμάτια, fragments or excerpta of a letter of his to Crellius (on occaſion of that mans defence of Socinus, againſt his excellent Book De ſatisfactione Chriſti) wherein there were many civilities and commendations of what was any way commendable in the Socinian writings, and finding that this was lookt on as an indication of his judgment, very favourable to that ſect, that inſtead of replying to his confutation, he returned nothing but words of kindneſs and eſteem to him and his whole tribe, and having then commodity to make a more particular inquiry into the truth of that whole matter, I accordingly made uſe of it, and had this account from that learned man, which as well as my memory will afford, I will ſet down intirely, 1. that upon the Survey of Crellius's book againſt him, he found there was but one thing of any weight, which ſeemed to ſtand in force againſt him, and to exact any reply from him, and that was about ἀντίψυχία, vicaria ſatisfactio, one mans laying down his life for another, the innocent to reſcue the nocent: Secondly, that after the publication of his Book, De Satisfactione, but withal, long before Crellius's reply, he had taken that one particular into more ſerious conſideration, and in his book, De Jure Belli ac Pacis, ſet down his thoughts on that ſubject more exactly; I think it was l. 2. c. 21. Thirdly, that to that diſcourſe he remitted him, being of opinion, that he needed not add any more in relation to that Controverſie, as it lay betwixt them, joyning as appears by the Excerpta, many paſſages of civility and commendations, which he thought due to them in one reſpect, their profeſt deſire to advance the practice of vertue and Chriſtian life. And this account of this letter gives it a quite different and diſtant appearance, from that which the fragments, all of one ſort, taken alone, out of this conjunction, had given it. 4.

For

5. For the ſecond, concerning ſome words which are reported (variouſly) to have paſt from him at his death, they will be evidenced to be either totally falſified, or foully miſtaken and diſtorted from the true meaning of them, by the account given of his ſickneſs and laſt paſſages, by John Quiſtorpius, Doctor of Divinity, and Paſtor of the chief Church in Roſtoch, who aſſiſted him in his laſt trial. His Letter being already in Print, in Doctor Cauſabone's little Book intituled (as I remember) De Uſu verborum, I muſt not here ſet it down, but refer the Reader to that view of it, where he will find no other words of his but theſe; when the Doctor wiſhed he had been to converſe with him in health, his anſwer was, ita Deo viſum eſt, thus God hath pleaſed to diſpoſe of it; when he mentioned confeſſion of ſins, and the example of the Publican, he interpoſed, Ego ille ſum Publicanus, I am that Publican; when he remitted him to Chriſt, without whom there is no Salvation, he replied, In ſolo Chriſto omnis ſpes mea repoſita eſt, In Chriſt only all my hope is repoſed. When he uſed the prayer beginning Herr Jeſu wahrer Menſch und Got, &c. he folded his hands and followed him in a low voice; when he asked him at the end, whether he underſtood, he anſwered, probè intellexi, I underſtood it well; when upon reciting ſome ſeaſonable texts of Scripture, he askt again whether he underſtood him, his laſt words were, Vocem tuam audio, ſed quæ ſingula dicas difficulter intelligo, I hear your voice, but do not eaſily underſtand every word you ſay. And having ſaid ſo, he became Speechleſs. This bare recital of his noviſſima, is a ſufficient confutation of all the uncharitable relations that are made of them.

6. Laſtly then, for the paſſages in the Annotations, it may ſuffice to remember that they are in his poſthuma, thoſe which have been publiſht ſince his death, thoſe eſpecially on the Epiſtles, of which it is evident, that they had never been formed by him, or fitted for the publick, but were put together by ſome body elſe, after his death, who finding many things in his adverſaria, thrown into Paper books as he had at any time occaſion, either from his reading of Scripture or others writings (it being ordinary for every man to note, not only what he approves, but what he diſlikes, and what he thinks matter of farther conſideration) hath, as he thought fit, made a body of Annotations, and publiſht them under his name. Many indications of the truth of this I might produce, having elſewhere mentioned ſome. I ſhall only add one, Col. 1. 16. where the Apoſtle ſaith [by him all things were created that are in Heaven ---] the Annotation publiſht under Grotius's name, hath theſe words, Rectius eſt; ἐκτίσθη, hic interpretari, ordinata ſunt, novum quendam ſtatum ſunt conſecuta, the righter interpreting of [were created] is, were ordered, obtained a new kind of ſtate, and ſo in the end, All things were created by him] the Scholion is, Intellige omnia quæ ad novam creationem pertinent, Underſtand all things which belong to the New Creation.

7. Which explications as they more than ſavour of the Socinian leaven, not willing to permit Chriſt there to be ſaid the Creator of Angels, but referring all to the New Creation (as the Socinians generally do, and accordingly interpret, In principio, John 1. 1. In principio Evangelii, In the beginning of the Goſpel) ſo they are expreſly contrary to the words of Grotius, as we know they were publiſht by him on John 1. 3. where on thoſe words [without him was nothing made that was made] the nothing, ſaith he, is put to take away all exception, Id autem ideo factum, ut in iis, quæ per verbum ſunt condita, intelligerentur etiam ea quæ conſpicua nobis non ſunt, Col. 1. 16. This was done, that among thoſe things that were created by the word, may be underſtood alſo thoſe things that are not ſeen, citing this very place to that ſence, Col. 1. 16. which in the poſthumous Annotations, is interpreted in ſuch a contrariety both to this former note, and to the writings laſt publiſhed by him before his death, that nothing can be more diſcernably injurious to him.

8. By this the Reader may obſerve and judge of others, and conſider how unequal we are likely to be to dead men, if we judge of their opinions by all that is after death publiſhed under their names. Witneſs alſo his Book, De Poteſtate Regis circa ſacra, which being written by him in his younger days, but never approved by him to be publiſht in his life, but purpoſely ſuppreſt, only ſome Copies ſtoln out in Manuſcripts from him (in which form I read it many years ſince) 'tis now againſt his conſent (and in many things diſtant from his ſence expreſs in later writings) publiſht, as if it had been fully allow'd by him. But this by the way.

9. Next then for the charge of Popery that is fallen upon him, it is evident from whence that flows, either from his profeſt oppoſition to many doctrines of ſome Reformers, Zuinglius, and Calvin, &c. or from his Annotations on Caſſander, and the Debates with Rivet, conſequent thereto, the Votum pro Pace and Diſcuſſio.

10. For the former of theſe 'tis ſufficiently known what conteſts there were, and at length how profeſt the diviſions betwixt the Remonſtrant and Contraremonſtrant, and it is confeſt that he maintain'd (all his time) the Remonſtrants party, * vindicating it from all charge, whether of Pelagianiſm, or Semipelagianiſm, which was by the oppoſers objected to it, and preſſing the favourers of the Doctrine of Irreſpective Decrees with the odious conſequences of making ‖ God the author and favourer of ſin, and frequently expreſſing his ſence of the evil influences that ſome of thoſe Doctrines were experimented to have on mens lives; and by theſe means it is not ſtrange that he ſhould fall under great diſpleaſure from thoſe, who having eſpouſed the opinion of irreſpective decrees, did not only publiſh it as the truth and truth of God, but farther aſſerted the queſtioning of it to be injurious to God's free Grace, and his eternal Election, and conſequently retain'd no ordinary patience for, or charity to oppoſers.

11. But then ſtill this is no medium to infer that charge. The Doctrines, which he thus maintained, were neither branches nor characters of Popery, but aſſerted by ſome of the firſt, and moſt learned and pious Reformers. Witneſs the writings of Hemingius in his Opuſcula (moſt of which are on theſe ſubjects) whereas on the contrary ſide, Zuinglius and others, who maintained the rigid way of irreſpective decrees, and infuſed them into ſome of this Nation of ours, are truly ſaid by an * excellent Writer of ours to have had it firſt from ſome ancient Romiſh Schoolmen, and ſo to have had as much (or more) of that guilt adherent to them, as can be charged on their oppoſers.

* Dr. Jacksons Book 10. ch. 49.

12. The truth is, theſe (or the like to them) have been matters controverted in all times, and in theſe latter days the controverſies inflamed, and the doctrines warmly maintained on both ſides, by the

Lutherans

Lutherans againſt the Calviniſts, who are yet no more Papiſts than they, and by the Papiſts among themſelves, witneſs the continual diſputes between the Jeſuits and the Dominicans, and at this time between the Moliniſts and Janſenians, the parties for a long time ſo equally balanced, that the Popes have thought it prudent to wave defining on either ſide, till this laſt year Innocentius X. upon the inſtance of the French King hath made a deciſion of them.

So that from hence to found the jealouſie, to affirm him a Papiſt becauſe he was not a Contraremonſtrant, is but the old method of ſpeaking all that is ill of thoſe, who differ from our opinions in any thing, as the Dutch man in his rage calls his horſe an Arminian, becauſe he doth not go as he would have him. And this is all that can ſoberly be concluded from ſuch ſuggeſtions, that they are diſpleaſed and paſſionate that thus ſpeak. 13.

As for the Annotations on Caſſander, &c. and the conſequent vindications of himſelf againſt Rivet, thoſe have with ſome colour been deemed more favourable toward Popery; but yet, I ſuppoſe will be capable of benign interpretations, if they be read with theſe few cautions or remembrances. 14.

1. That they were deſigned to ſhew a way to peace, whenſoever mens minds on both ſides ſhould be piouſly affected to it. Secondly, that he did not hope for this temper in this age, the humour on both ſides being ſo turgent, and extreamly contrary to it, and the controverſie debated on both ſides by thoſe, qui æterna cupiunt eſſe diſſidia, ſaith he, who deſire to eternize, and not compoſe contentions, and therefore makes his appeal to poſterity, when this paroxyſm ſhall be over, Judicet æqua poſteritas, ad quam maximè provoco. 15. Vid. Ep. ad Gal. p. 36.

Thirdly; That for the chief uſurpations of the Papacy, he leaves it to Chriſtian Princes to joyn together to vindicate their own rights, and reduce the Pope ad Canones, to that temper which the ancient Canons allow and require of him, and if that will not be done, to reform every one within their own dominions. 16.

Fourthly; That what he ſaith in favour of ſome Popiſh doctrines, above what ſome other learned Proteſtants have ſaid, is not ſo much by way of aſſertion or juſtification of them, as to ſhew what reaſons they may juſtly be thought to proceed upon, and ſo not to be ſo irrational or impious as they are ordinarily accounted; and this only in order to the peace of the Chriſtian world, that we may have as much charity to others, and not as high animoſities, live with all men as ſweetly, and amicably, and peaceably, and not as bitterly as is poſſible; accounting the Wars, and Seditions, and Diviſions, and Rebellions, that are raiſed, and managed upon the account of Religion, far greater and more ſcandalous unchriſtian evils, than are the errors of ſome Romiſh doctrines, eſpecially as they are maintain'd by the more ſober and moderate men among them, Caſſander, Picherel, &c. 17.

Fifthly; What he ſaith in his Diſcuſſio, of a conjunction of Proteſtants with thoſe that adhere to the Biſhop of Rome, is no farther to be extended than his words extend it. 1. That there is not any other viſible way to the end there mention'd by him, of acquiring or preſerving univerſal unity. 2. That this is to be done not crudely, by returning to them as they are, ſubmitting our necks to our former yoke, but by taking away at once the diviſion, and the cauſes of it, on which ſide ſoever; adding only in the third place, that the bare Primacy of the Biſhop of Rome ſecundùm Canones, ſuch as the ancient Canons allow of (which hath nothing of ſupreme univerſal power or authority in it) is none of thoſe cauſes, nor conſequently neceſſary to be excluded in the διαλλάξικον, citing that as the confeſſion of that excellent perſon Phil. Melanctbon. 18. Page 255.

So that in effect that whole ſpeech of his, which is ſo ſolemnly vouched by * Mr. Knot, and lookt on ſo jealouſly by many of us, is no more than this, That ſuch a Primacy of the Biſhop of Rome, as the ancient Canons allow'd him, were, for ſo glorious an end, as is the regaining the peace of Chriſtendom, very reaſonably to be afforded him, nay abſolutely neceſſary to be yielded him, whenſoever any ſuch Catholick union ſhall be attempted; which as it had been the expreſs opinion of Melanctbon, one of the firſt and wiſeſt Reformers, ſo it is far from any deſign of eſtabliſhing the uſurpations of the Papacy, or any of their falſe doctrines attending them, but only deſigned as an expedient for the reſtoring the peace of the whole Chriſtian world, which every diſciple of Chriſt is ſo paſſionately required to contend and pray for. 19. * Page 167.

So that, in a word, ſetting aſide the prudential conſideration and queſtion, as whether it were not a hopeleſs deſign that Grotius ingaged himſelf in, expreſſing deſires of an univerſal reconciliation, when there was ſo little hope on either ſide, that the extream parties would remit ſo much, as to meet in the middle point (to which alſo the expreſſing of his no hopes of it at this time, and the making his appeal to more impartial poſterity, is a ſatisfactory anſwer) all that this very learned man was guilty of in this matter, was but this, his paſſionate deſire of the unity of the Church in the bands of peace and truth, and a full diſlike of all uncharitable diſtempers, and impious doctrines (whether thoſe which he deemed deſtructive to the practice of all Chriſtian virtue, or which had a particularity of ill influence toward the undermining of Government, and publick peace) whereſoever he met with them. 20.

All which notwithſtanding, the temper of that learned man was known to be ſuch, as rendred him in a ſpecial manner a lover and admirer of the frame and moderation obſerved in our Church of England, as it ſtood (ſhaken, but not caſt down) in his life time, deſiring earneſtly to live himſelf in the Communion of it, and to ſee it copied out by the reſt of the world. 21.

And ſo much for this large digreſſion, which if it be no neceſſary return to the Prefacer, may yet tend to the ſatisfaction of ſome others, and to the vindicating the memory of that Learned man. 22.

SECT.

SECT. III.

Of Πρεσβύτεροι in Clemens. How many Orders there were in Corinth at the writing this Epiſtle. Βεβαιοτάτην ἀρχαίαν ἐκκλησίαν. Metropolitical Churches at the firſt. Philippi a Metropolis at the firſt, as Canterbury at Auguſtines firſt planting the Faith. The Inſtitution of Presbyters, when, by what authority. S. Jerome's opinion. The uſe of the word Presbyters in Scripture. The Biſhops task.

1. THE Prefacer now proceeds to take notice of a ſecond Anſwer of mine to the Objection from the plurality of the Elders in Clement, and this yields him alſo matter for many queſtions, and great appearance of triumph. It is managed in theſe words;

2. "But the Doctor hath yet another anſwer to this multiplication of Elders, and the mention of "them with Deacons, with the eminent identity that is between them and Biſhops through the "whole Epiſtle, the ſame perſons being unqueſtionably intended in reſpect of the ſame office, by "both theſe appellations. Now this ſecond anſwer is founded upon the ſuppoſition of the former "(a goodly foundation!) namely, that the Epiſtle under conſideration was written and ſent not to "the Church of Corinth only, but to all the Churches of Achaia, of which Corinth was the Metropo-"litan.

"Now this ſecond anſwer is, that the Elders or Presbyters here mentioned, were properly thoſe "whom he calls Biſhops, Dioceſans, men of a third order and rank above Deacons and Presbyters "in the Church Adminiſtrations and Government: And for thoſe, who are properly called Presby-"ters, there were then none in the Church. To give colour to this miſerable evaſion, Diſſert. 4. "c. 10, 11. He diſcourſeth about the government and ordering of Church affairs by Biſhops and Dea-"cons, in ſome Churches that were ſmall, not yet formed or compleated, nor come to perfection "at the firſt planting of them; how well this is accommodated to the Church of Corinth, which Cle-"ment calls βεβαιοτάτην ἀρχαίαν, and which himſelf would have to be a Metropolitical Church, being "confeſſedly great, numerous, furniſhed with great and large gifts and abilities, is ſeen with half "an eye. How ill alſo this ſhift is accommodated to help in the caſe, for whoſe ſervice it was firſt "invented, is no leſs evident. It was to ſave the ſword of Phil. 1. 1. from the throat of Epiſcopacy "he contendeth for: That Epiſtle is directed to the Saints or Church at Philippi with the Biſhops and "Deacons. Two things do here trouble our Doctor: 1. The mention of more Biſhops than one at "Philippi. 2. The knitting together of Biſhops and Deacons, as the only two orders in the Church, "bringing down Epiſcopacy one degree at leaſt from that height, whereto he would exalt it. For "the firſt of theſe he tells you, that Philippi was the Metropolitan Church of the Province of Mace-"donia, that the reſt of the Churches, which had every one their ſeveral Biſhops (Dioceſan we muſt "ſuppoſe) were all compriſed in the mentioning of Philippi: ſo that though the Epiſtle be preciſely "directed τοῖς ἁγίοις τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν Φιλίπποις, yet the Biſhops that were with them, muſt be ſuppoſed to "be the Biſhops of the whole Province of Macedonia, becauſe the Church of Philippi was the Metro-"politan. The whole Country muſt have been ſuppoſed to be converted (and who that knows any "thing of Antiquity, will diſpute that) and ſo divided with Dioceſans, as England of late was, the "Archbiſhops ſo being at Philippi: but how came it then to paſs, that here is mention made of Bi-"ſhops and Deacons only, without any word of a third order or rank of men diſtinct from them cal-"led Presbyters or Elders? To this he anſwers ſecondly, that when the Church was firſt planted, "before any great number were converted, or any fit to be made Presbyters, there was only thoſe "two orders inſtituted, Biſhops and Deacons, and ſo that this Church of Philippi ſeems to have been "a Metropolitical Infant. The truth is, if ever the Doctor be put upon reconciling the contradicti-"ons of his anſwers one to another, not only in this, but almoſt in every particular he deals withal "(an intanglement which he is thrown into, by his bold and groundleſs conjectures) he will find it "to be as endleſs as fruitleſs: but it is not my preſent buſineſs to interpoſe in his quarrels, either "with himſelf, or Presbytery. As to the matter under conſideration, I deſire only to be reſolved in "theſe few Queries.

"1. If there were in the time of Clement no Presbyters in the Churches, not in ſo great and flou-"riſhing a Church as that of Corinth; and if all the places in Scripture, where there is mention of El-"ders, do preciſely intend Biſhops, in a diſtinction from them who are Deacons, and not Biſhops "alſo, as he aſſerts; when, by whom, by what Authority, were Elders, who are only ſo inferiour "to Biſhops, peculiarly ſo termed, inſtituted and appointed in the Churches? And how comes it to "paſs that there is ſuch expreſs mention made of the office of Deacons, and the continuance of it, "none at all of Elders, who are acknowledged to be ſuperiour to them, and on whoſe ſhoulders in all "their own Churches, lies the great weight and burthen of all Eccleſiaſtical adminiſtration? As we "ſay of their Biſhops, ſo ſhall we of any Presbyter, not inſtituted and appointed by the authority of "Jeſus Chriſt in the Church, let them go to the place from whence they came.

"2. I deſire the Doctor to inform me in what ſence he would have me to underſtand him, Diſſert. "2. cap. 20, 21, 22. Where he diſputes that theſe words of Hierom, Antequam ſtudia in Religione "fierent, & diceretur in populis, Ego ſum Pauli, ego Cephæ, communi Presbyterorum conſenſu Eccleſiæ "gubernabantur, are to be underſtood of the times of the Apoſtles, when the firſt Schiſm was in the "Church of Corinth, when it ſeems that neither then, nor a good while after, there was any ſuch "thing as Presbyters in the Church of Corinth, nor in any other Church, as we can hear of: As alſo "to tell us whether all thoſe Presbyters were Biſhops properly ſo called, diſtinct from Elders, who "are only ſo, out of whom one man is choſen to be a Biſhop properly ſo called. To theſe enquiries "I ſhall only add,

"3. That

3. "That whereas in the Scripture, we find clearly but two ſorts of Church-officers mentioned, "as alſo in this Epiſtle of Clement, the third that was afterward introduced, be it what it will, or "fall on whom it will, that we oppoſe. This (ſaith the Doctor) is that of Presbyters, give us "the Churches inſtituted according to the word of Chriſt, give us in every Church, Biſhops and "Deacons (rather than we will quarrel, give us a Biſhop and Deacons) let thoſe Biſhops attend "the particular flock, over which they are appointed, preaching the Word, and adminiſtring the "holy Ordinances of the Goſpel, in and to their own flock; And I dare undertake for all the Con-"tenders for Presbytery in this Nation, and much more for the Independents, that there ſhall be an "end of this quarrel: that they will not ſtrive with the Doctor, nor any living, for the intro-"duction of any third ſort of perſons (though they ſhould be called Presbyters) into Church office "and Government. Only this I muſt add, that the Scripture more frequently terms this ſecond "ſort of men Elders and Presbyters, than it doth Biſhops, and that word having been appropria-"ted to a third ſort peculiarly, we deſire leave of the Doctor and his aſſociates, if we alſo moſt "frequently call them ſo, noways declining the other appellation of Biſhops, ſo that it be applied "to ſignifie the ſecond, and not third rank of men. But of this whole buſineſs, with the nature, "conſtitution, and frame of the firſt Churches; and the ſad miſtakes that men have by their own "prejudices been ingaged into, in this delineation of them, a fuller opportunity (if God will) may "ere long be afforded.

Here firſt I ſhall demand, whence it appears, that I accommodated a double anſwer to the multi-plication of Elders in Clemens, &c. Truly I do not yet know or remember that I did. This cer-3. tainly was all (and this can amount (if to any) but to one anſwer, that which we have vindicated already) that the Elders in the Epiſtle of Clemens were all the Biſhops of Achaia. This indeed when it was propoſed, was more diſtinctly ſet down by four ſteps or degrees, (but then again thoſe are no more two than four anſwers) 1. that the Epiſtle was addreſt to the Church, παροικίαν Κόρινθον, i. e. to the whole Province; Secondly, that (to make it capable of that title) Corinth was known to be the Metropolis of Achaia. Thirdly, that S. Paul's Epiſtles to the Corinthians belonged to all the Churches of Achaia, not only to Corinth, and ſo in any probability, Clements was to do alſo, being written to the ſame, and inſcribed ἐκκλησίᾳ παροικίαν: and therefore Fourthly, that theſe many El-ders were the ſingular Biſhops in the ſeveral Cities of Achaia, in each of which, the Apoſtles had in-ſtituted a Biſhop. And this is all that is there ſaid in that ſecond Chap. of Diſſ. 5. And (yet farther) no part of this adapted as an anſwer to that objection of the plurality of Elders (or any other) but as things thought fit to be premiſed concerning that Epiſtle of Clemens, before the taking into conſidera-tion any teſtimony produced out of it.

This might ſpare me the pains of farther conſidering what is here replied to this ſuppoſed ſecond an-4. ſwer. But I have not hitherto been ſo thrifty, as might now juſtifie any ſuch haſty diſmiſſion of him, I ſhall therefore firſt diſpoſe the matter orderly before me, which is a little diſordered and intangled by the Prefacers haſty handling, and then give anſwer to every appearance of ſcruple mentioned by him.

There are two things (to the buſineſs of Epiſcopacy) chiefly obſervable in this Epiſtle of Clement, 5. Firſt, what he ſaith of the Apoſtles conſtitution of Biſhops and Deacons at their firſt preaching of the Go-ſpel, and this univerſally conſidered, through all Regions and Cities where they preached; without any reſtraining of their ſpeech to the whether Church of Corinth, or Churches of Achaia. This is con-ſidered in Diſſ. 5. cap. 10. and reference made in the margent to a former diſcourſe, Diſſ. 4. cap. 10. where out of the moſt ancient Records it had been cleared, that at the firſt the Apoſtles had conſti-tuted no more in every Church, than here were mentioned, a Biſhop and one or more Deacons. And ſo to this early practice of the Apoſtles, it is, that that refers, which is here by the Prefacer miſcalled the colour of this ſecond anſwer (which he farther ſtiles a miſerable evaſion) and ſo evidently it belongs not to the plurality of Elders in Corinth, &c.

The ſecond thing there diſcernable is, the plurality of Biſhops (ſtiled alſo Πρεσβύτεροι Elders) among 6. thoſe to whom he there writes. And thoſe, ſay I, are the Biſhops of all Achaia, as that is the Παροι-κία or Province pertaining to that Metropolis.

Now theſe things ought thus to have been ſevered, and then having competently vindicated the 7. former of theſe, Chap. 3. Sect. 4. (that there were indeed at the firſt but two orders, ſhewing when the middle order of Presbyters came in, viz. moſt probably in S. John's time in Aſia) and ſo * lately, as * Cap. 5. Sect. 1. I was required, manifeſted the ſecond, that of the Biſhops of Greece being meant by the Πρεσβύτεροι, Elders, I might, as I ſaid, have reaſonably been ſpared from being ſo ſpeedily called out again to the ſame exerciſes.

But as it is, I ſhall now attend him; and firſt, when he objects, that what was diſcourſed of ſome 8. Churches, ſmall, and not yet formed or compleated at the firſt planting, cannot be accommodated to the Church of Corinth, which Clement calls βεβαιοτάτην καὶ ἀρχαίαν, moſt firm and ancient, and which I affirm to have then been a Metropolitical Church, being confeſſedly great, numerous --- To this I anſwer, 1. That I have no where affirmed this Church to be in Clements time ſmall, unformed, &c. nor had any occaſion or temptation to do ſo. 2. That I no where accommodate to this Church at that time, what I had be-fore obſerved of the Church indefinitely at the firſt planting; Theſe two are but effects of the Prefa-cers haſt, without any foundation in any words of mine. 3. That if I am now asked, whether at this time of Clement's writing, there were any more than two orders in Corinth, and the other Cities of Greece, I muſt ſay, as formerly, that though 'tis probable there were none, yet I find no foundation in this Epiſtle either for denying or affirming it.

The chief occaſion of writing the Epiſtle was the ſedition againſt the Biſhops, or Governours of the 9. firſt order, on deſign ἀποδάλλειν ἐπισκοπῆς, to caſt out of their Biſhopricks ſome of thoſe, whom the Apoſtles had placed over them; and either for Presbyters, the ſecond, or Deacons, the third order, there was no ſuch contention, but only (as ſaith he, the Apoſtles foreſaw) περὶ ὀνόμα]ος ἐπισκοπῆς, for the name or dignity of Biſhop, and ſo there is no occaſion to mention any but their Biſhops, which yet is far from concluding that there were not any other, for Deacons we are ſure there then were, no Biſhop be-ing ever without ſuch.

10. Again, that Biſhops continued to retain the name of Πρεσβύτεροι, Elders, even after there was a ſecond ſort ordained, whom we now call Presbyters, hath elſewhere appeared from Polycarp, Papias, Irenæus, and Tertullian, who certainly lived to ſee them in the Church, and yet call Biſhops Πρεσβύτεροι and Seniores, and ſo the Biſhops being call'd Πρεσβύτεροι in Clement, is no indication that there were at that time no ſecond order of Presbyters in that Church.

11. And yet on the other ſide, Clement's death falling not far from S. John's, which was in the third of Trajan, 'tis as poſſible, and, I confeſs, to me much more probable, that there might be yet no Preſbyters ordain'd at Corinth, or in the reſt of Achaia, at the time of his writing this Epiſtle. And ſo there lies no obligation on me, whoſe conjectures are wont to bring me ſo little thanks from the Prefacer, to interpoſe them in this matter, where I have ſo little light to ſee by. Only I am ſure that the Prefacer's objection here mention'd, would be of no force againſt me, in caſe I ſhould deny that there were then any Presbyters at Corinth, becauſe, as the meaning of βεβαιοτάτην ἡ ἀρχαίαν, which Clemens affirms of it, can be no more than this, that this Church was founded and eſtabliſht by the Apoſtles themſelves, and ſo was kept upright by them till the time of this ſedition, which * Hegeſippus tells us was Πρίμῳ ἐπισκοπεύοντι, Primus being Biſhop of Corinth, ſo that concludes nothing for their having Presbyters ordain'd among them. And when I ſaid, that at the firſt preaching of the Apoſtles, they inſtituted none but Biſhops and Deacons, I never granted, or implyed, or believed, that as ſoon as ever that was done, they inſtituted more, viz. Presbyters alſo.

* Euſeb. l. 4. c. 22.

12. And whereas he fanſies my obſervation to be made of ſome Churches only, that were ſmall, and not yet formed, &c. this is another miſtake; for I take Clement's and Epiphanius's words univerſally of all Churches at their firſt planting, the fuller, as well as the thinner plantations. As at Jeruſalem, where all the Ancients tell us there was a Biſhop preſently upon Chriſt's Aſcenſion, and the number of Believers ſo great, that there were ſeven Deacons inſtituted to attend him, yet neither in Scripture, nor in the Ancients find we any footſteps of this middle order of Presbyters in that City, at that time, or ſoon after. And the reaſon is clear, that though in ſome Cities there were more, in ſome fewer converts, and ſo comparatively to others, the Church at Corinth, and through Achaia might be numerous, both Paul and Peter having labour'd there ſucceſfully, yet for ſome time there were not any where ſo many, but that the Biſhop, and his Deacon, or Deacons might be ſufficient for them.

13. So likewiſe the being a Metropolis is no argument that there ſhould be Presbyters by this time conſtituted there; for ſuppoſing, as I do (and my grounds have been largely ſet down) that the Apoſtles conformed their models to the Governments and forms among the Nations where they came, at their firſt planting the Faith in any region, it muſt follow, that the Church of Corinth, as ſoon as it was formed into a Church, with a Biſhop over it, was alſo a Metropolitan Church, in relation to all other Cities of Greece, which either then did, or ſhould after believe, as Jeruſalem was to all the Cities of Judea, or as Philippi, being a prime City, or Metropolis of Macedonia, and the firſt where Paul planted the Faith, was ſtraightway a Metropolitical Church, how few, or how many Chriſtians there were in it, it matters not.

14. And therefore for his change of the ſcene from Corinth and Clement's, to Philippi and S. Paul's Epiſtle, it will bring him no advantage. The caſe between them is exactly parallel. There was a μέρις, or Province of Macedonia, ſaith S. Luke, of which Philippi was πρώτη πόλις, the Metropolis, juſt as Corinth was of Achaia, and this City being the firſt in that Region, wherein S. Paul planted the Faith, it was certainly a Metropolitical Church, and Epaphroditus was the Metropolitan of that Province, the firſt day he was Biſhop of it. The truth of which is ſo evident, that the jeer of the [Metropolitical Infant] might ſeaſonably have been controverted into a more ſerious, and decent expreſſion, there being no reaſon imaginable, why, if the Apoſtles did inſtitute Metropolitical Churches (as here is not one ſerious word of objection againſt all that hath been ſaid to aſſert it) thoſe Churches ſhould not at their firſt inſtitution (call it their infancy if you will) be Metropolitical Churches. For as to that of the whole countries being ſuppoſed to be converted, and divided into Dioceſes, that is not conſequent or neceſſary to my aſſertion; for as Clement ſaith of the Biſhop and Deacon in each City at the firſt planting of the Faith, that they were conſtituted in relation to them (not only which did, but expreſly μελλόντων πιστεύειν) who ſhould afterward believe, ſo the Church and Biſhop in the Metropolis, when that was firſt converted, might very well be Metropolitical in reſpect of the other Cities of that Province, which ſhould afterward receive the Faith.

15. As we know when Auguſtin came firſt over into England, and preacht the Faith, and converted Chriſtians firſt at Canterbury, Ethelbert's ſeat, and the Metropolis of that Province, he was by being made Biſhop there, made Metropolitan alſo. That ſure was Bede's meaning, when he ſaith of it, lib. 1. c. 27. Venit Arelas & ab Archiepiſcopo ejuſdem civitatis Etherio Archiepiſcopus Genti Anglorum ordinatus eſt; He came to Arles (in France) and by Etherius Archbiſhop of that City was ordained Archbiſhop to the Nation of the Engliſh; and if, as a learned Antiquary thinks, Bede ſpake after the uſe of his own time, and that the word Archiepiſcopus was not in uſe here then, at Auguſtine's coming hither, yet for the ſubſtance of the thing, wherein I make the inſtance, and all that I contend from thence, there can be no doubt, but that he being at firſt made Biſhop of the Metropolis, was thereby made alſo Metropolitan.

16. As for the diviſions into Dioceſes, how little force that hath againſt all that I have ſaid, or thought in this buſineſs, whether of Biſhops or Metropolitans, I have ſpoken enough to that in the Vindication to the London Miniſters, c. 1. ſect. 19. and to that I refer the Prefacer.

17. And ſo ſtill I am free enough from quarrelling with my ſelf in the leaſt, or from being ingaged in any endleſs labour to reconcile the contradictions of my anſwers, which as far as my weak underſtanding can reach, are perfectly at agreement with one another. If the labour of ſhewing they are ſo, prove fruitleſs, I know to whom I am beholding for it, even the Task-maſter whom I have undertaken to obſerve, and in that guiſe of obedience, ſhall now proceed briefly to anſwer every of his queſtions, and I hope there cannot now need many words to do it.

To

To the firſt, concerning the Inſtitution of the ſecond order, that of Presbyters; for the [when] I anſwer, I know not the year, but evidently before the writing of Ignatius's Epiſtles, in Trajan's time, and, in all probability, after the writing all the Books of Scripture, and, for ought I can diſcern, of Clement's Epiſtle, as far as concerns either Rome, or Corinth. 18.

For the [by whom, and by what authority] I anſwer, I think they were firſt inſtituted by S. John in Aſia, before his death, and ſhall add to my reaſons elſewhere given for it, this farther conſideration, that Ignatius in all his Epiſtles to the Churches of Aſia, Epheſus, Smyrna, Trallis, Magneſia, Philadelphia, makes mention of them, within few years after S. John's death, though in his Epiſtle to the Romans he doth not. And if this be ſo, then alſo it appears by what authority, viz. ſuch as S. John's was, Apoſtolical. Or if this ſhould not be firmly grounded, as to the perſon of S. John, yet the reaſon why they were not at firſt inſtituted, as well as Deacons, being but this, becauſe there was no need of them yet, and the power given by the Apoſtles to the firſt Biſhops, being a plenary power, ſo far that they might communicate to others, what was committed to them, either in whole or in part, and thoſe accordingly, in the force thereof, conſtituting Presbyters, in partem officii, the authority ſtill, by which they were inſtituted, will be Apoſtolical, and ſo if (as this Prefacer gives order) they be let go to the place from whence they came, they will not be much hurt, they are but remitted to the ſociety of the Apoſtles and Apoſtolical perſons by this. 19.

To the ſecond, concerning the meaning of my words, Diſſ. 2. c. 29, 21. when I ſay that Hierom's words [of Churches being governed by common conſent of Presbyters] are to be underſtood of the times of the Apoſtles, and whether all thoſe Presbyters were Biſhops properly ſo called] I anſwer, that my meaning was, that if Hierom be reconcileable to himſelf, that muſt be his meaning, that in the Apoſtles times the Churches were firſt governed by common conſent of Presbyters, and after, in the Apoſtles times too, upon the riſing of Schiſms, a Biſhop was every where ſet over them; that accordingly in Hierom's notion, all thoſe Presbyters were not Biſhops, but ſuch, as out of whom after, one was choſen in every Church to be a Biſhop. 20.

That this was the truth of the fact, I no where expreſt my ſelf to think; but that this was the moſt commodious meaning to be affixt to Hierom's words ad Euagrium, ſo as they might be reconcileable with the many other teſtimonies brought out of him, which concluded it his opinion alſo, that the three orders were of Apoſtolical inſtitution. But if I am now asked my ſence expreſly, whether I think thus it was, as Hierom (I think) conceived it, I anſwer poſitively, that I think Hierom was miſtaken in that circumſtance, and that Clemens Romanus, and the Records that Epiphanius citeth, are much a more competent authority for the contrary, that Biſhops were firſt inſtituted, whenſoever any Apoſtle in his travel planted a Church in any City, and retain'd not the Government in his own hands. Yet if by any Record it ſhall be made to appear, that before any ſuch City was left by the Apoſtle, and ſo before any Biſhop were inſtituted in it, the Elders, or, as thoſe may ſignifie, the chief believers (a name of age, as well as of power) were truſted by them for ſome ſhort time of their abſence (as I mention'd it there ſect. 20. as a poſſible thing) there will then be ſome ground of S. Hierom's miſtake in that circumſtance. But this, I confeſs, more than yet hath any way appear'd to me, and therefore I am content to part with it as a fancy, or σόφον φάσμακον to help S. Hierom, and not ſo much as a conjecture. And ſo much for his Queries. 21.

As for his addition by way of Corollary to his queſtions, the anſwers to the queſtions have already perfectly ſuperſeded it: The three orders in Ignatius have already appeared to be of Apoſtolical inſtitution, and the very frame of the firſt Churches, though there was no need of the ſecond of them, νὺξ ὁλῷ κηρύσσαι, at the firſt plantations in every City. And it will not be eaſie for any man which hath looked into ancient writings, to be perſwaded the contrary; It being the univerſal affirmation of all that ſpeak of it from Ignatius to S. Hierom, and for many hundred years downward (though there be ſome difference in ſome few circumſtances, S. Hierom thinking that Presbyters firſt ruled in common, before the ſingular Biſhop was brought in over them, for the avoiding of Schiſms) that the three orders were all inſtituted in the Church by the Apoſtles appointment. And if this be the ſad miſtake and prejudice, from which he will ſhortly deliver us, I may have leave to adviſe him the one method of attempting it, that cheaper, of ſetting Antiquity aſide in the delineation, and not the more coſtly, of profeſſing to make his appeal to it, as in this Preface he hath adventured to do. 22.

One thing he here thinks farther neceſſary for him to add, that the Scripture more frequently terms this ſecond ſort of men Elders and Presbyters, than it doth Biſhops, wherein there be but theſe three miſadventures; 1. That this ſecond ſort of men are frequently mention'd in Scripture: 2. That this ſecond ſort of men are ſometimes call'd Biſhops in Scripture: 3. That they are frequently call'd Elders there: No one of which he will ever be able to juſtifie. Let him pleaſe to turn to the Vindication of the Diſſert. from the Exceptions of the London Miniſters, cap. 2. and if againſt what is there ſaid, or before in the Diſſertations, he think himſelf able to evince any one of theſe three propoſitions, I ſhall willingly acknowledge my ſelf his Diſciple, being alſo ſure, that unleſs both Biſhops and Elders ſignifie nothing but Presbyters in every place, their ſignifying moſt frequently ſo, is the giving the queſtion, the yielding the whole cauſe to the Prelatiſt. 23.

As for the tasks of the Biſhops office, and his performance of them, I ſhall willingly grant him my ſuffrage, let them diſcharge them (and I beſeech all who have any way hindred them, at length to let, and quietly permit them.) On condition he will do this as chearfully as I, I ſhall never contend with him concerning the nature of their task, be it, as he ſaith, their attending their particular flock, over which they are appointed (the Biſhop of Oxford over that Flock or portion, to which he was, and is appointed, and ſo all others in like manner) be it their preaching and adminiſtring the holy Ordinances of the Goſpel, in, and to their own flock, and whatſoever elſe of duty and ratione officii belongs to a rightly conſtituted Biſhop. And let all that have diſturbed this courſe ſo duly ſetled in this Church, and in all the Churches of Chriſt, ſince the Apoſtles planting them, diſcern their error, and return to that peace and unity of the Church, from whence they have ſo cauſeleſly, and unexcuſably departed, and let none be ſo uncharitable as to ſurmiſe, that he which thus exhorts them, hath any other deſign in doing it, than that which alone he profeſſeth to have, their timely, and now, if ever, ſeaſonable Reformation. 24.

1. BUT we are from Clemens once more brought down to Ignatius again, and of the great prejudices and mistakes, and unjust apprehensions which we Prelatists have had in reading, and bringing Testimonies from him, we are now to be admonished in these words, as followeth;

2. "To return then to our Ignatius, even upon this consideration of the difference that is between "the Epistles ascribed to him, and the writings of one of the same time with him, or not long be- "fore him, as to their language and expressions about Church-Order and Officers, it is evident that "there hath been ill favour'd tampering with them, by them who thought to prevail themselves of "his authority, for the asserting of that which never came into his mind.

"As I intimated before, I have not insisted on any of those things, nor do on them altogether, "with the like that may be added, as a sufficient foundation for the total rejection of those Epistles "which go under the name of Ignatius. There is in some of them a sweet and gracious spirit of "Faith, Love, Holiness, Zeal for God, becoming so excellent and holy a witness of Christ as he "was, evidently breathing and working. Neither is there any need at all, that for the defence of "our Hypothesis concerning the non-institution of any Church-Officer whatsoever, relating to more "Churches in his office, or any other Church, than a single particular Congregation; that we should "so reject them: For although many passages, usually insisted on, and carefully collected by D. H. "for the proof of such an Episcopacy to have been received by them of old, as is now contended for, "are exceedingly remote from the way and manner of the expressions of those things, used by the "Divine Writers, with them also that follow'd after, both before, as hath been manifested, and "some while after the days of Ignatius, as might be farther clearly evidenced, and are thrust into "the series of the discourse with such an incoherent impertinency, as proclaims an interpolation, "being some of them also very ridiculous, and so foolishly hyperbolical, that they fall very little "short of Blasphemies, yet there are expressions in all, or most of them, that will abundantly mani- "fest, that he who was their Author (whoever he was) never dreamt of any such fabrick of Church- "Order as in after Ages was insensibly received. Men who are full of their own apprehensions, be- "gotten in them by such representations of things, as either their desirable presence hath exhibited "to their mind, or any after prejudicate presumption hath possest them with, are apt upon the least "appearance of any likeness unto that Church, they fansie, to imagine that they see the face and all "the lineaments thereof, when upon due examination it will easily be discovered, that there is not "indeed the least resemblance, between what they find in, and what they bring to the Authors, in, "and of whom they make their inquiry. The Papists having hatched and own'd by several degrees, "that monstrous figment of Transubstantiation (to instance among many in that abomination) a fol- "ly, destructive to whatever is in us as being living creatures, Men, or Christians, or whatever by "sense, reason, or Religion, we are furnished withal, offering violence to us in what we hear, what "we see with our eyes, and look upon, in what our hands do handle, and our palats taste, break- "ing in upon our understandings with vagrant flying forms, self-subsisting accidents, with as many "expres contradictions on sundry accounts, as the nature of things is capable of relation unto, at- "tended with more gross Idolatry than that of the poor naked Indians, who fall down and worship "a piece of red-cloth, or of those who first adore their Gods, and then correct them; do yet upon "the discovery of any expressions among the Ancients seeming to favour them, which they now "make use of, quite to another end and purpose, than they did, who first ventured upon them, ha- "ving minds filled with their own abominations, do presently cry out, and triumph, as if they had "found the whole fardel of the Mass in its perfect dress, and their breaden God in the midst of it. "It is no otherwise in the case of Episcopacy; men of these later Generations, from what they saw "in present being, and that usefulness of it to all their desires and interests, having entertain'd "thoughts of love to it, and delight in it, searching Antiquity, not to instruct them in the truth, "but to establish their prejudicate opinion received by Tradition from their Fathers, and to confute "them with whom they have to do, whatever expressions they find, or can hear of, that fall in, as "to the sound of words, with what is now insisted upon, instantly they cry out vicimus, Io-Pean! "what a simple Generation of Presbyters and Independents have we, that are ignorant of all Anti- "quity, or do not understand what they read and look upon. Hence if we will not believe that in "Ignatius's days there were many Parish Churches with their single Priests, in subordination to a Di- "ocesan Bishop, either immediately, or by the interposed power of a Chore-episcopus and the like, "and those Diocesans again in the precincts of Provinces, laid in a due subjection to their "Metropolitans, who took care of them, as they of their Parish Priests, every Individual Church "having " having no Officer but a Presbyter, every Dioceſan Church having no Presbyter but a Biſhop, and " every Metropolitan Church having neither Presbyter nor Biſhop properly related unto it, as ſuch, " but an Archbiſhop, we are worſe than Infidels: Truly, I cannot but wonder, whether it doth not " ſometimes enter into theſe mens thoughts to apprehend how contemptible they are in their proofs, " for the fathering of ſuch an Eccleſiaſtical diſtribution of Governours and Government, as undeni- " ably lacquied after the civil diviſions and conſtitutions of the times and places, wherein it was in- " troduced, upon thoſe holy perſons, whoſe ſouls never once entred into the ſecrets thereof.

" Thus fares it with our Doctor and his Ignatius: οὐκ εἶδεν, (it ſhould be ἴδεν) ἀλλ' ἐδόκησεν ἰδεῖν " διὰ νύκλα σελήνην. I ſhall only crave leave to ſay to him as Auguſtus of Quintilius Varus, upon the " loſs of the Legions in Germany under his command; Quintili Vare, redde Legiones; Domine Do- " ctor, redde Eccleſias: Give us the Churches of Chriſt, ſuch as they were in the days of the Apoſtles, " and down to Ignatius, though before that time (if Hegeſippus may be believed) ſomewhat deflou- " red, and our conteſt about Church-Officers and Government will be nearer at an end, than per- " haps you will readily imagine. Give us a Church all whoſe members are holy, called, ſanctified, " juſtified, living ſtones, Temples for the Holy Ghoſt, Saints, Believers, united to Chriſt the head " by the Spirit that is given to them, and dwelleth in them, a Church whoſe πλῆθος is ὅπου ἂν φανῇ ὁ " ἐπίσκοπος, that doth nothing by its members apart, that appertains to Church-order, but when it " is gathered ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, a Church that being ſo gathered together in one place συνδάζει πάντα πράσσειν " ἐν ὁμονοίᾳ θεῷ προκαθημένῳ τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ, acting in Church things, in its whole body under the rule and " preſidence of its Officers, a Church walking in order, and not as ſome, who ἐπίσκοπον μὲν καλοῦσιν, " χώρις δὲ αὐτοῦ πάντα πράσσουσιν (of whom ſaith Ignatius, οἱ τοιοῦτοι οὐκ εὐσυνείδητοι μὲν εἶναι φαίνονται. " Διὰ μὲν τὸ μὴ βεβαίως κατ' ἐντολὴν συναθροίζεσθαι, ſuch as calling the Biſhops to the Aſſemblies, yet do " all things without him (the manner of ſome in our days) he ſuppoſeth not to keep the Aſſemblies " according to the command of Chriſt) give us, I ſay, ſuch a Church, and let us come to them when " they are πάντες ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ ἅμα συναχθέντες, ſuch as the Churches in the days of Igna- " tius appear to have been, and are ſo rendred in the Quotations taken from his Epiſtles, by the " learned Doctor for the confirmation of Epiſcopacy, and as I ſaid before, the conteſt of this preſent " digreſſion will quickly draw to an iſſue.

The firſt thing here aſſumed, is the evidence of ſome ill favoured tampering with Ignatius's Epiſtles, deduced from the difference between them and Clement's, in their expreſſion about Church-Order and Offi- 3. cers. But indeed if there were any ſuch thing, I hope it will not be imputed to me, who have been as careful as is poſſible, to get an emendate copy of theſe Epiſtles, and having firſt contented my ſelf with that, which had paſt Vedelius's trial at Geneva, which one might hope would burn up all the ſtubble, which could be gotten in there, toward the founding of Epiſcopacy, I have ſince fallen upon Copies much more purified than that, cleanſed from almoſt all the droſs, every paſſage, which this Prefacer hath thought fit to accuſe or diſlike in them: And ſeeing he now profeſſeth againſt the total rejecting of them, and gives them many good words in teſtimony of a ſweet and gracious ſpirit breathing in them, if he ſhall now be pleaſed to direct me to any way of procuring a yet more emendate Edition, and ſuch as may perfectly accord his language with all others of his time, or not long before him, particularly with Clemens, I ſhall acknowledge it a great obligation, and a diſcovery worth his undertaking. But as far as my eyes yet ſerve me, there is little hope of this, and therefore as it is, I muſt be content to think, as the evidences before me exact from me, that though Clemens ſaith truly, that the Apoſtles at their firſt preaching placed no more but a Biſhop and Deacon in each City, yet before Ignatius's time, there was a middle order conſtituted in the Churches of Aſia, and that alſo by the appointment of the Apoſtles, and that this is a very fair account of all the difference of their language and expreſſion about Church Order and Officers.

In the next place he hath very ingenuouſly diſcovered, upon what account it is, that he hath be- 4. ſtowed ſo many of his good words at laſt upon Ignatius, becauſe, forſooth, he hath no need for the defence of his Hypotheſis totally to reject them, and becauſe there are expreſſions in all, or moſt of them, that will abundantly manifeſt, that he who was their Author, never dreamt of any ſuch fabrick of Church-order as in after ages was inſenſibly received. But 1. I think not this the right way of judging mens works, whether they be theirs or no (the due motive of receiving or rejecting any ancient writing) by comparing them with our own Hypotheſes, and obſerving which way our neceſſities oblige us. This we were wont to call ἀναγκάζειν ὑποθέσει, ſerving and requiring all others to ſerve and miniſter to the wants of our Hypotheſis.

Secondly; If it ſhould really appear, what is here pretended, that there ſhould be expreſſions in 5. theſe Epiſtles which would abundantly manifeſt that their Author never dreamt of our modern Hierarchy, how eaſie would it be for one that would tranſcribe copies from our Prefacer, to reply, that ſuch and ſuch places were interpolated and inſerted by ſome later hand, who meant unkindly to Epiſcopacy, and then what ſecurity could be found to aſcertain thoſe paſſages to be genuine, which would not as reaſonably ſerve our turn, to retain thoſe which we think define for Epiſcopacy.

Thirdly; Whereas he adds, that the fabrick we plead for, being not yet dreamt of in Ignatius's 6. days, was in after ages inſenſibly received, why may not that alſo miniſter to us an excuſe, in caſe we ſhould not have been able to anſwer one of his former queſtions, to ſet down diſtinctly at what time Presbyters (the ſecond or middle order) came firſt into the Church, it being as eaſie to imagine, and as credible to be affirmed, that after the writing Clement's one, before the writing of Ignatius's many Epiſtles, this order was brought in, but ſo as to us at this diſtance of ſo many Centuries, it is not now ſenſible or diſcernable.

All this may again be ſaid πρὸς ἔνστασιν, and to ſhew that it is no hard matter to write ὑπερεχείτικα, 7. Animadverſions on the Author of the Animadverſions. At the preſent I am to take notice what the Prefacer's Hypotheſis is, which he hath undertaken to defend, viz. That there never was any Church-Officer inſtituted in thoſe firſt times, relating to more Churches in his Office, or to any other Church than a ſingle particular Congregation. The very ſame indeed that my memory ſuggeſts to me out of the Saint's Belief, printed twelve or fourteen years ſince, where inſtead of that Article of the Apoſtolick Symbol, the Holy Catholick Church, this very Hypotheſis was ſubſtituted. But then it muſt be remembred, that the Diſſertations being written in anſwer to Blondel, were not obliged to be confronted to this Hypotheſis, and that though Ignatius ſhould be found to ſay as little as I, againſt this, yet he might yield competent teſtimonies againſt Blondel for the ſuperiority of Biſhops above Presbyters, which was all that I there endeavoured, becauſe all that I was there required to evince from them.

Saint's

8. But then ſecondly; Ignatius is not perfectly ſilent in this matter neither; for as in his Epiſtle to the Smyrnæans, beſide the πλῆθος, or multitude under a particular Biſhop, there is ἡ καθολικὴ ἐκκλησία, the Catholick Church, which ſure is more than a ſingle particular Congregation, ſo the National Church of Syria under the Metropolis of Antioch, of which Ignatius himſelf is ſtiled the Biſhop and Paſtor, is frequently mention'd in thoſe Epiſtles. In the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, προσεύχεσθε ὑπὲρ τῆς ἐκκλησίας τῆς ἐν Συρίᾳ, pray for the Church which is in Syria, the Church of that whole Nation put under that one denomination, of which yet certainly there were divers aſſemblies; and ſo twice in the Epiſtle to the Magneſians, Τῆς ἐν Συρίᾳ ἐκκλησίας, and τῆς ἐν Συρίᾳ ἐκκλησίαν, the Church in Syria; and in the Epiſtle to the Philadelphians, τῆς ἐκκλησίαν τῆς ἐν Ἀντιοχείᾳ τῆς Συρίας, the Church of Syria which is at Antioch, joyning them all under Antioch, the Metropolitical Church. And let this ſerve for a taſte of Ignatius's judgment of our Prefacer's Hypotheſis.

9. What again here follows of the hyperbolical, and little ſhort of blaſphemous paſſages in theſe Epiſtles, of their impertinency, of their remoteneſs from the way and manner of expreſſion in the Divine Writings, and thoſe which follow'd after, I have formerly wearied my ſelf, and the Reader, with the account of them ſeverally, and, I think, given him reaſon to believe with me, that they needed not here again have been heaped up ſo ſoon by way of repetition.

10. The next larger portion of this Section endeavours to ſhew what prejudice, or the fulneſs of a mans own apprehenſions, is able to do in the reading and citing Teſtimonies out of Authors; and this is by me ſo fully granted, and in part experimented in this Prefacer, particularly, in his fetching the power of the people in Eccleſiaſtical affairs, from Clement's bidding the generous perſon (τὶς ἐν γενναῖος) to ſacrifice his own proſperity and poſſeſſions to the peace of the People, as when a King ventures his life, or Moſes ſaith, Blot me out of thy book, in order to the ſame end; that truly I needed not the inſtance of the Papiſt fetching his doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation out of the Ancients to convince me of it. As it is, I have no exceptions to his evidence, nor to the concluſion inferr'd by it, in general, of men full of their own apprehenſions. Only I crave leave to interpoſe, before it be thought applicable to me: For unleſs he can prove that Ignatius's plain mentions (ſo oft repeated, that it is become a charge of impertinence againſt him) of the three Orders in the Church, Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, are as little able to infer (what I alone undertook to deduce from them) that there were more than two Orders in the Church in Ignatius's time (and ſo before Blondel's æra of 140 years) as the teſtimonies from whence the Papiſts conclude their Tranſubſtantiation, and their whole fardel of the Maſs, are unable to infer their deſired concluſion, I ſhall ſit down in peace, wholly unconcern'd in that large inſtance, and the ἀνταπόδοσις of it, or application, to the men of theſe latter days in the matter of Epiſcopacy.

11. Only let me aſſure him, that theſe later days afford ſome men, which have ſearcht Antiquity to inſtruct them in the truth, taking the pains of that travel on purpoſe for that one end, and after the Scripture, have expected to fetch truth from that ſearch, rather than any other; and have therefore begun their ſtudy of Divinity in that order, and counted the ordinary courſe of ſetting out from the modern ſyſtemes, to be very prepoſterous; and if the Prefacer's own conſcience ſhould chance to tell him that he hath not exactly obſerved this method, that he hath firſt eſpouſed opinions and frames of Government, and then ſearcht Antiquity to eſtabliſh them; or if it ſhould not, yet becauſe it is as credible, and eaſily ſuggeſted of him, as by him of others, and others conſciences may and do excuſe them as perfectly, as his can be pretended to excuſe him, I hope this will be a competent reply to that part of this Section alſo.

12. For as to that which follows in the purſuit hereof, of the Pariſh Churches in Ignatius's days, of the Chorepiſcopus, &c. of the Dioceſan's ſubjection to the Metropolitanes, &c. from whence his neceſſary wonder ariſeth, whether it doth not enter into our hearts, how contemptible we are in our proofs, &c. It may ſuffice to ſay, that the Prefacer hath ſure forgotten himſelf, when he deſired to perſwade others, that all theſe are the concluſions which I have made (or any other Prelatiſt) out of Ignatius's Epiſtles: Certainly the aſſerting of the three orders, all of them as Apoſtolical, is the one thing which we need deduce from thence, and if that be granted us from that authority, there is an end of the Prelatiſt's contention with Blondel.

13. As for that of Pariſh Churches, ſure I have as yet concluded nothing from Ignatius concerning that ſubject, nor ever expreſt my ſelf to think him worſe than an Infidel, that diſcern'd them not in theſe Epiſtles. The firſt time I ever ſpake of them, was very lately in anſwer to the London Miniſters, which the Prefacer, having not yet ſeen, may turn to it, cap. 1. ſect. 19. And I ſhall now only add in relation to Ignatius, that the form of Government there deſcribed being this, one Biſhop with his Presbytery, i. e. Colledge of Presbyters under him, and one, or more Deacons of a third rank, ruling, and adminiſtring in their ſeveral places and offices the affairs of any one particular Church, be it Trallis, Magneſia, or the like (together with the whole Territory belonging to that Church of ſuch a City; or if it be a Metropolis, the Province adjoyning) all this may very well be done, and very eaſily imagined without any exact diſtribution into ſeveral congregations, ſuch as we now call Pariſhes, as long as the Orders of the Biſhops, without whom, ſaith he, nothing was to be done, were by all inferiours regularly obſerved. And if, as occaſion ſeemed to require, or expedience adviſe, the Biſhop (either then or afterwards) made more punctual diſtributions of the believers committed to his charge, and ſo appointing ſeveral aſſemblies in the ſame City, and in each village one, placed alſo a Presbyter in every ſuch aſſembly, this I hope, will not be ſtiled any working of the myſtery of iniquity (which I ſee by and by mentioned) but a regular acting of the Biſhop according to that power, which from the Apoſtles every ſuch ſingularly inſtituted Governour was intruſted with in every Church.

Next

Next for the Chorepiſcopi, it is known how little I am concerned to juſtifie the deducing them from theſe Epiſtles. I profeſs to believe there is not a word ſaid of them there, nay when Blondel was willing to deduce them from Clement's phraſe, κατὰ χώρας, and out of him the London Miniſters, I have * refuted their deduction, and ſhew'd that they came not into the Church ſo early; And ſo for that alſo he might have omitted his wonderment now, as reaſonably, as I was but lately rebuked for it. 14. * Diſſ. 3 cap. 8. Sect. 17. &c Vind to Lond. Miniſt. cap. 3. Sect. 1. n. 16.

As for that of Metropolitan Churches or Biſhops, I do not again remember that Ignatius firſt gave me the model for that frame; Certainly I have produced other, I hope, competent evidences to conclude whatſoever I affirm of it; and if ſome not obſcure intimations out of Ignatius were obſerved to be given that way, as when in the Epiſtle to the Romans he calls himſelf ὁ ἐπίσκοπος Συρίας, Biſhop of Syria, and ὁ ἐν Συρίᾳ ἐκκλησίας ποιμήν, the Paſtor of the Church in Syria, being at that time the known Biſhop of Antioch, one ſingle City, but that the Metropolis of Syria; to which I may add, that in the Epiſtle to Polycarp, ſpeaking of his ſucceſſor, he doth it in the like ſtile, ὁ μέλλοντα καλὰξιοῦσθαι τοῦ εἰς Συρίαν πορεύεσθαι, he that ſhould be thought worthy of the dignity of going into Syria; yet have not I in thoſe Diſſertations laid the weight on them, (much leſs counted them worſe than Infidels, that are not convinced by them) though if I had, that would not have rendred my proofs ſo admirably contemptible, as 'tis pretended. 15.

Laſtly, for the whole frame of Eccleſiaſtick Government, being, in his phraſe, lacquied after the civil diviſions,] as I no where Father it on, or deduce it from Ignatius, whom now we have to deal with, ſo if inſtead of his darker phraſe of contempt, the matter be ſet down in more ſignificative intelligible words, viz. That the Apoſtles in each Nation, where they came to plant the Faith, thought not fit to innovate (unneceſſarily) in this matter of diſtributions already made, whether in Judæa or the Gentile Regions, but planting a Church in a chief City, and extending the Faith to the Region about it, and to other adjacent inferior Cities, annext the Regional-Church to the City-Church, and preſerved the ſubordination of inferior City-Churches to the chief City-Church, i. e. to the Metropolis, and this conſtantly when there was no conſiderable reaſon to adviſe any change; if, I ſay, the matter be thus intelligibly, and without the help of odious expreſſions, repreſented, I know not what appearance of exception can lie againſt it: But of this alſo I have formerly and * elſewhere ſpoken ſufficiently, and here is nothing, I am ſure, ſuggeſted, to which any farther reply can be accommodated. And therefore as yet I need add no more of it. 16. * Vindic. to Lond. Miniſt. cap. 1. ſect. 16.

So that what follows of the redde Legiones, and redde Eccleſias, requiring me to reſtore the Churches of Chriſt, as they were in the Apoſtles days, &c. was ſure very unneceſſary. I have in no kind robb'd him of the Churches, which before my tampering with Ignatius, he had found, and made himſelf owner of there: If Quintilius Varus had been as guiltleſs of the loſs of the Legions in Germany, as I have been of purloining the frame of Independent Congregations, out of theſe Epiſtles, I believe Auguſtus would not have inflicted any ſevere fine upon him for that miſadventure. I can truly aſſure him, that if I had found any Model formed according to his hypotheſis in thoſe Epiſtles, when I read them, as diligently as I could, to diſcern what the Government was in his time, I might, and ſhould have anſwer'd Blondel another way than I did, and replied firſt to his Preface, which is much of it written with ſome aſperity againſt the Independents, and had that more compendious way of not being concern'd in the whole ſubſequent Apology, which is deſigned againſt Epiſcopacy: And I ſhall not lye, if I now tell him that I have ſince my writing the laſt period, once more read over all the ſeven Epiſtles, as they are in Voſſius's Edition, on purpoſe to obſerve whether there were any one word, formerly unobſerved by me, which might in the leaſt favour his hypotheſis; and I ſhall ſpeak my ſenſe uprightly, that I might as ſucceſsfully have ſought it in the firſt Chapter either of Geneſis, or S. Matthew's Goſpel; whether the former interpolated copies, or ſuppoſititious Epiſtles may afford him any aid, he will pardon me, I hope, that I have not had the curioſity or leiſure to examine. 17.

This being thus true, it was but neceſſary for him to remember out of Hegeſippus, that the Churches before Ignatius's time were defloured: That place of Hegeſippus to which he refers, is ſure the ſame which he had ſet down in the entrance on the view of Antiquity, and which I took a view of cap. 1. Sect. 1. and ſhew'd how unjuſt his collection was from thence, as it was by him applied to the Ancient writings: And I have now the like reaſon to complain again, that what Hegeſippus ſaith of thoſe vile heretical Apoſtates, the Gnoſticks, that they oppoſed their falſe Doctrine, and preacht it up againſt the κήρυγμα ἀληθείας, preaching of the truth, ſhould by him be applied to the prejudice of the true Church, which carefully oppoſed all their inſinuations, or to theſe Epiſtles of Ignatius, which were purpoſely written, almoſt every one of them, to keep that poiſon out of the Churches. It is moſt certain, that the firſt method of theſe deceivers, was, by deſpiſing and ſpeaking evil of the Governours of the Church, to inſinuate their poiſon into the brethrens minds, and ſo that they were the λαθροδήκλαι, the ſecret biters firſt, and then afterward the κύνες λυσσῶντες, the raving dogs, as he calls them, which flew in the face of the Government, but the Church held out conſtantly againſt their clancular, and open aſſaults, and they never were able in the leaſt to deflour it; the hereticks doctrines, and their practices, are continually branded by the Writings of thoſe times, and there is not the leaſt appearance of their leaven, but all the direct contrary, in any Epiſtle of Ignatius, or other writings of thoſe times. 18.

It is time that I now come to the interpretation of his redde Eccleſias, the particulars of his demand, concerning the Churches, which he hath found in Ignatius, and I am accuſed for robbing him of. And though I have already ſaid enough of this in the groſs, yet I ſhall ſpare no pains to give punctual anſwer to every branch of it. 19.

And 1. ſaith he, Give us a Church, all whoſe members are holy, called, ſanctified, juſtified, living ſtones, Temples for the Holy Ghoſt, Saints, Believers, united to Chriſt the head by the Spirit that is given to them, and dwelleth in them. To this I anſwer very briefly, that in all Ignatius's Epiſtles, there is no title ſo much as of intimation that any Church, to which he wrote, or which was under his Government, or which he had any occaſion to ſpeak of, was thus qualified, particularly all whoſe members were holy or ſanctified. Secondly; I am not ſure, that if that were the Ignatian model of a 20.

Church,

Church, this Prefacer would be able to parallel it in any Congregation, which these last, not best days, have brought out among us. Thirdly; That this might as well be done, and as probably hoped under a subordination of Officers and Governours, such as we Prelatists pretend to, as in any equal number of men, by whatsoever other form compacted or knit together. This may suffice without farther insisting, till some reason be urged to the contrary against any of these three affirmations.

21. Secondly; He demands a Church whose πλῆθος or multitude is where the Bishop appears. This character of a Church, or rather exhortation how it ought to be, is indeed set down by * Ignatius in his Epistle to the Church of Smyrna, where in pursuit of the advice, Πάντες τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ ἀκολουθεῖτε, Let all men follow the Bishop, and Μηδεὶς χωρὶς ἐπισκόπου τι πρασσέτω, Let no man do ought of the things that belong to the Church without the Bishop, and that Eucharist was to be accounted βεβαία, firm, or valid, which was done by the Bishop, or by some commissionated by him, he then adds ὅπου ἂν φανῇ ὁ ἐπίσκοπος, ἐκεῖ τὸ πλῆθος ἔστω, ὥσπερ ὅπου ἂν ᾖ Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς, ἐκεῖ ἡ καθολικὴ ἐκκλησία, Where the Bishop appeareth, there let the multitude be, as where Christ Jesus is, there is the Catholick Church, making in the latter part, that difference between the Orthodox, and heretical Apostate Gnosticks, that the former acknowledged and adhered to him, and the later denied him, and proportionably in the former, making the same difference betwixt the Eucharist duly, and unduly administred; that where it was duly, there the people received it in communion with their Bishop, either of him, or of some body commissionated by him; which as it is competently distant from their model, where neither Bishop, nor any from him commissionated, is received, so I am sure it is far enough from any contrariety to the Prelatists, or favour to the Prefacers pretensions. What particle of it, it is, which to his fancy looks so agreeable, I cannot divine, and so have no more to reply to it.

* Voss. Edit. p. 6.

22. Thirdly; He demands a Church that doth nothing by its members apart, but when it is gathered ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό. This, I presume belongs to a place in the Epistle to the Magnesians, which we shall meet again in his last demand, and there consider it more fully. At the present, let it suffice, that it is no more than this, That no man was to do any thing on his own head, or without the Bishop and Presbyters, but when they met together they should joyn in one prayer, &c. And this sure may be granted without any damage to the Prelatist, who desires as much as any, that publick Assemblies be frequented, which is the meaning of being gathered ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, and that no inferiour member of the Church do ought ἀνηκόυστον εἰς ἐκκλησίαν that belongs to the Church, without the Bishop. But if the meaning of the demand be, either that the Bishop with his Presbyters, who are indeed members of the Church, shall do nothing without the concurrent consent of the πλῆθος or people, which was the thing he contended for out of Clemens, this I am able to assume, will never be inferr'd from that place, or out of these Epistles; and for any other inference he will draw from hence, in order to the no other Church, but a single particular Congregation, which we find in his hypothesis, this I shall speak to in answer to his last demand, where he recurs to this place again.

23. Fourthly, He demands a Church that being so gathered together in one place, doth συνδάζειν πάντα πράσσειν ἐν ὁμονοίᾳ θεῦ, προκαθημένης ἐπισκόπου, acting in Church things in its whole body, under the rule and presidence of its officers.] Here if [acting in its whole body] denote any power again of the πλῆθος or whole body of the people, or any more than their regular obedience to the lawful commands of the Bishop over them, I shall be able to demonstrate that the words of Ignatius sound nothing toward it. They are in the Epistle to the * Magnesians, and are a plain exhortation to unity and concord, and that to be evidenced in their actions, and the rule of that, obedience to their Bishop, presiding, saith he, εἰς τόπον θεῦ, in the place of God, as the Presbyters in the place of the Colledge of Apostles, and the Deacons intrusted with the Ministery of Jesus Christ, from whence he concludes with the ἐντρέπεσθε ἀλλήλοις paying reverence to one another, i. e. (according to the meaning of that phrase in S. Peter, ἀλλήλοις ὑποτασσόμενοι, 1 Pet. 5. 5.) to the Bishop, &c. their superiours, and, besides mutual love, and care of avoiding divisions, to the ἑνώθητε τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ, &c. being united to the Bishop, and those that are set over them, for a pattern and doctrine of incorruption or Orthodox Religion, in opposition to the infections and corruptions of the Gnostick Heresies. And then what analogy bears this with the hypothesis of the Prefacer, what unkind aspect hath it on the Prelatist's pretensions?

* Voss. Edit. pag. 33.

24. Fifthly, He demands a Church walking in order, and not as some, who, ἐπίσκοπον μὲν καλοῦσι, χωρὶς δὲ αὐτοῦ πάντα πράσσουσιν, which he renders, such as calling the Bishop to the Assemblies, yet do all things without him ---- Here it was a little news to me to see a piece of Greek Englished. (This being, I think, the first time that the Prefacer hath done so, I shall not attempt to guess at the reason of it) But indeed it was much more so, to find [καλοῦσιν ἐπίσκοπον] rendred [calling the Bishop to the Assemblies.] Doth he mean that the people had the power of calling Assemblies, or calling the Bishop to them? I shall not again detain the Reader with my conjectures of his sence. This I am sure of, 1. that there is no mention of Assemblies, but that those words, [to the Assemblies] are perfectly interpolated by the Prefacer: 2. that καλοῦσιν ἐπίσκοπον] is no more than they call him Bishop, allow him the name or title, but, as he adds, do all without him, subject not their actions to his directions or command (as in the words immediately precedent, πρέπον ἔν ἐστιν, μὴ μόνον καλεῖσθαι χριστιανὸς, ἀλλὰ καὶ εἶναι, being only called Christians, and being truly such, are set as extreamly contrary, or as in the same * Ep. ad Magnes. ἄτοπόν ἐστι χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν καλεῖν, καὶ Ἰουδαΐζειν, calling Jesus Christ, is opposed to true Christianity, and sure doth not signifie calling Jesus Christ to their assemblies) and then of them that do thus, Ignatius may be allowed to add, μὴ βεβαίως καὶ' ἐντολὴν συναθροίζεσθαι, that they do not assemble validly according to the command (all actions of such, χωρὶς ἐπισκόπου, having no kind of validity in them) and by so adding, he passes no sentence upon the Prelatist, unless he be only nominally such, plead for Bishops and not obey them.

* Voss. Edit. pag. 36.

25. Lastly, saith he, give us such a Church, and let us come to them, when they are πάντες ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ ἅμα συναχθέντες, (i. e. all in the same place assembled together in prayer) such as the Churches in the days of Ignatius appear to have been, and are so rendred in the quotations taken from his Epistles by the Doctor for the confirmation of Episcopacy.] To this I answer, 1. that if the Church he would have, be set down by me as he desires, in the quotations from Ignatius, then I needed not have been called to, for the giving him his Churches back again; I had, it seems, either never detained them, or else rendered rendered them already. Secondly, for this laſt paſſage, the moſt that I have quoted toward it, is from the Epiſtle to the Magneſians, And the whole paſſage lies thus, Ἑνώθητε τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ, Be ye united to the Biſhop --- and ſtrait, ὥσπερ οὖν ὁ κύριος ἄνευ τοῦ πατρὸς οὐδὲν ἐποίησεν, ἡνωμένος ὢν, ὅτε δι' ἑαυτοῦ, ὅτε δι' Ἀποστόλων, οὕτως μήτε ὑμεῖς ἄνευ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου καὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων μηδὲν πράσσετε, μήδε πειράσητε εὔλογόν τι φαίνεσθαι ἴδια ὑμῖν, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ μία προσευχὴ, μία δέησις, εἷς νοῦς, μία ἐλπὶς, ἐν ἀγάπῃ, ἐν τῇ χαρᾷ τῇ ἀμώμῳ. As the Lord therefore being in union with, did nothing without his Father, neither by himſelf, nor by his Apoſtles, ſo neither do ye any thing without the Biſhop and his Presbyters, nor attempt to account any thing reaſonable, which appears ſo to you privately, but in the ſame place let there be one prayer, one ſupplication, one mind, one hope, in love, and joy unblameable. Pag. 33.

This whole place, I did not conceive what it imported, ſave only perfect agreement and ſubmiſſion to the judgment of their ſuperiors, in oppoſition to the ἰδιωγνώμονες, thoſe that entertain'd private doctrines, which were not left in the Church by the Apoſtles, together with all mutual unity, charity, conjunction in prayer of all ſorts, for ſupply of wants, pardon of ſins, in the ſame hope and joy --- But I now ſuppoſe that the thing here deſigned to be inferred from this in the cloſe (as from the ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ toward the beginning) of his demands, is the eſtabliſhment of his grand hypotheſis forementioned, the non-inſtitution of any Church-Officer whatever, relating to more Churches in his Office, or any other Church than a ſingle particular congregation. And this, it ſeems, he was ſo willing to have competently teſtified here, that one and the ſame teſtimony, a little diſguiſed, is fain to appear twice to the ſame purpoſe, and ſo becomes a double witneſs (a military trick, which officers ſometimes uſe, when their companies are not full, to muſter the ſame ſouldier twice under ſeveral names.) And ſo we ſee that which truly I have attended for all this while (and could not really think it deſigned by him, till this repetition of the teſtimony ſhew'd me, that ſpecial weight was laid on it,) that this one place of ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ and προσευχὴ (for ἅμα συναχθέντες is again inſerted to help the inference) muſt conclude the non-inſtitution of any Church-Officer relating to any but a ſingle particular congregation. The reaſonableneſs of which will be judged by any man, if he ſhall but put the premiſes and concluſion together thus; It was Ignatius's command to the Magneſians, that no man muſt do any thing on his own head without the Biſhop and Presbyters, but when they aſſemble together, they muſt have one prayer, one ſupplication (adding, one mind, one hope in charity, in joy unblameable) therefore in Ignatius's time there was no other Officer inſtituted in the Church, which related to more Churches in his office, or to any other Church than a ſingle particular congregation. 26.

If this be the manner of concluding Church-models from ancient Writers, I ſhall not wonder that the Prelatiſts ways of inference have been diſliked; for I acknowledge they bear no proportion with this. For certainly 1. if he had ſpoken of ſome ſingle congregation, which conſtantly met in the ſame place, within the ſame walls, and bid them when they thus met, they ſhould have one prayer, one ſupplication, as one mind, one hope, this would only conclude, that there were ſuch particular congregations, and ſo we know among us every Pariſh Church is, where none but the publick Liturgie is uſed; but this would no way conclude, as the hypotheſis doth, that there is no other but ſuch. A particular affirmative hath no power of excluding all but its ſelf. Ignatius's ſpeaking of a ſingle houſe, cannot conclude it his opinion, that there is no Town, no City, no Province, no World made up of all theſe, nor conſequently, that he which is Ruler of that houſe, may not alſo be placed in office in the City, in the Nation, &c. 27.

But then ſecondly; 'tis manifeſt that in this place, where he talks of [ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ] he talks alſo of the Biſhop and Presbyters, and the Prefacer hath not yet told me, that his particular congregation will bear all thoſe; a Biſhop and Deacon, or Deacons, he ſaid he could allow, but then that Biſhop was to be but a Presbyter, whatſoever he was call'd: And therefore I may ſuppoſe that a Biſhop and Presbyters in Ignatius's ſence, ſuch as he makes two orders, ſuperiour to Deacons, and all three in that Church of the Magneſians, to which he ſpeaks, will not be born by his particular Congregation, and therefore even that, which Ignatius here ſpeaks of, was not ſuch. 28.

Thirdly; They that live under a Biſhop and Presbyters, and do every one of them, ſomewhere or other, aſſemble with other Chriſtians in ſome one place (as whoſoever aſſemble in any place, muſt aſſemble in one) may yet all of them make up above one ſingle congregation; the ſeveral Chriſtians of the City of Oxford, may live obediently under the Biſhop of Oxford, and under the Presbyters of that City, and every one aſſemble ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, partake conſtantly of the Church-meetings, ſome at S. Peters, others at Allhallows, and every one at ſome or other, and yet all thoſe make up many particular Congregations, and the Biſhop govern them all, and ſo relate in his office to them all, and by the ſeveral Presbyters, ordain'd and inſtituted to the ſeveral charges, adminiſter and order all. 29.

Nay fourthly; the ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ μία προσευχὴ --- might fitly be rendred no more but unanimous prayer, all one with διαμένετε ἐν τῇ ὁμονοίᾳ ὑμῶν, καὶ τῇ μετ' ἀλλήλων προσευχῇ, continue in concord, and in prayer one with another, in the Epiſtle to the Trallians, and that may equally be done, whether they meet all in one, or in many places. And ſo ſtill he hath not gain'd ſo much as his particular affirmative from hence, that the [ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ] here ſpoken of by Ignatius, referr'd to a ſingle congregation; which yet if it did, were far enough from concluding the [none but ſuch.] 30.

Laſtly, It is farther evident from Ignatius, 1. that there is καθολικὴ ἐκκλησία a Catholick Church. 2. ἡ ἐν Συρίᾳ ἐκκλησία, the Church in Syria, joyned under himſelf as their one Paſtor, i. e. a National Church; and thirdly, ἐκκλησία ἡ ἐν Ἀντιοχείᾳ τῆς Συρίας, the Church of Syria at Antioch, a Metropolitical Church, and ſo ἐκκλησία ἥτις προκάθηται ἐν τόπῳ χώρας Ῥωμαίων, the Church which preſided in the place of the Region, or Province of the Romans, a Metropolitical and Provincial Church again: And fourthly, in every Epiſtle, a Church under a Biſhop, Presbyters, and Deacons, which the world hath hitherto call'd a Dioceſan Church, conſiſting of many ſingle Congregations. 31.

It is not eaſie to reckon up all the inconſequences of this inference, whereby the Prefacers hypotheſis is concluded from this Teſtimony of Ignatius. Theſe may at the preſent ſuffice, till farther diſcovery be made by him; what medium will be choſen to draw this concluſion out of theſe premiſes, which ſeem not at all inclin'd to it. And ſo though we are not come much nearer to a concluſion of this contro- 32.

verſie, there is yet no ſeaſon of adding more to the debating of it, and therefore ſo much for this Section alſo.

SECT. II.

The myſtery of iniquity. Clement's argument for the allaying the ſedition. Proofs of the Congregational way invalid. The contrary more than intimated by Ignatius. The Eccleſiaſtick diſtributions contemper'd by the Apoſtles to the Civil. Γνώμη in Ignatius.

1. THat which next follows, is the telling us three things that he will not inſiſt on, and only one fourth that he will, and methinks that ſhould not detain us long. He thus begins,

2. "Being unwilling to go too far out of my way, I ſhall not
"1. Conſider the ſeverals inſtanced in, for the proof of Epiſcopacy by the Doctor, ſeeing inde"niably the interpretation muſt follow, and be proportioned by the general iſſue of that ſtate of the "Church, in the days wherein thoſe Epiſtles were writ, or are pretended ſo to be, if that appear "to be ſuch as I have mention'd, I preſume the Doctor himſelf will confeſs, that his witneſſes ſpeak "not one word to his buſineſs, for whoſe confirmation he doth produce them. Nor "2. Shall I inſiſt upon the degeneration of the inſtitutions and appointments of Jeſus Chriſt, con"cerning Church-Adminiſtrations, in the management of the ſucceeding Churches, as principled, "and ſpirited by the operative and efficacious myſtery of iniquity, occaſion'd and advantaged by the "accommodation of Eccleſiaſtical affairs to the civil diſtributions, and alotments of the political "ſtate of things in thoſe days; nor
"3. Inſiſt much farther on the exceeding diſſimilitude and inconformity that is between the ex-
"preſſions concerning Church Officers, and affairs in theſe Epiſtles (whence ever they come) and "thoſe in the writings of unqueſtionable credit, immediately before, and after them, as alſo the "utter ſilence of the Scripture in thoſe things, wherewith they ſo abound. The Epiſtle of Clemens, "of which mention was made before, was written for the compoſing and quieting of a diviſion and "diſtemper that was fallen out in the Church of Corinth. Of the cauſe of that diſſention that then "miſerably rent that congregation, he informs us in that complaint, that ſome (ὑ δικαίως ἀποδάλες-"θαι τ λειτυργίας) were wrongfully caſt from the Miniſtry by the multitude, and he tells you, that
"theſe were good honeſt men, and faithful in the diſcharge of their duty; for ſaith he ὁρῶ μὲν ὅτι
"ἐνίυς ὑμᾶς μεταγάγετε, καλῶς πολιτευομένυς, ἐκ τ ἀμέμπτως ἐντοῖς τεθιμημένης λειτυργίας, though they "were unblameable both in their converſation and Miniſtry, yet they removed them from their "office: To reprove this evil, to convince them of the ſinfulneſs of it, to reduce them to a right
"underſtanding of their duty, and order, walking in the fellowſhip of the Goſpel, what courſe doth
"he proceed in? what arguments doth he uſe? He minds them of one God, one Chriſt, one Body,
"one Faith; tells them that wicked men alone uſe ſuch ways and practices, bids them read the "Epiſtle of Paul formerly written to them upon occaſion of another diviſion, and to be ſubject to "their own Elders; and all of them leave off contending, quietly doing the things which the people,
"or the body of the Church commanded. Now had this perſon writing on this occaſion, uſing all
"ſorts of arguments, artificial, or inartificial for his purpoſe, been baptiſed into the opinion and "eſteem of a ſingle Epiſcopal Superintendent, whoſe exaltation ſeems to be the deſign of much "which is ſaid in the Epiſtles of Ignatius, in the ſence wherein his words are uſually taken, would he
"yet never once ſo much as bid them be ſubject to the Biſhop, that reſemblance of God the Father, "ſupplying the place of Chriſt, nor told them how terrible a thing it was to diſobey him, nor "pawn'd his ſoul for theirs, that ſhould ſubmit to him, that all that obeyed him were ſafe, all that "diſobeyed him were rebellious, curſed, and ſeparated from God. What Apology can be made "for the weakneſs and ignorance of that Holy Martyr, if we ſhall ſuppoſe him to have had appre-
"henſions like thoſe in theſe Epiſtles of that ſacred order, for omitting thoſe all-conquering rea"ſons, which they would have ſupplied him withal, to his purpoſe in hand, and pitching on argu"ments every way leſs uſeful and cogent. But I ſay I ſhall not inſiſt on any ſuch things as theſe, but "only
"4. I ſay there is not in any of the Doctor's Excerpta from thoſe Epiſtles, nor in any paſſage
"in them, any mention, or the leaſt intimation of any Church whereunto any Biſhop was related,
"but ſuch an one, as whoſe members met altogether in one place, and with their Biſhop diſpoſed
"and ordered the affairs of the Church. Such was that whereunto the holy Martyr was related;
"ſuch were thoſe neighbouring Churches that ſent Biſhops and Elders to that Church: And when "the Doctor proves the contrary, erit mihi magnus Apollo: From the Churches and their ſtate and "conſtitution, is the ſtate and condition of their Officers, and their relation to them to be taken.
"Let that be manifeſted to be ſuch from the appointment of Jeſus Chriſt to his Apoſtles, or de facto
"in the days of Ignatius, or before the contemperation of Eccleſiaſtical affairs occaſionally, or by "choice, to the civil conſtitution of Cities and Provinces in thoſe days, as would, or poſſibly could "bear a rural Dioceſan, Metropolitical Hierarchy, and this controverſie will be at an end: When
"this is by any attempted to be demonſtrated, I deſire it may not be with ſuch ſentences as that urg"ed by our Doctor from Epiſt. ad Epheſ. Ἰησῦς χριςὸς τῦ πατρὸς ἡ γνώμη, ὡς καὶ οἱ ἐπίσκοποι οἱ κατὰ τὰ πέ-
"ρατα ὁρισθέντες Ἰησῦ χριςῦ γνώμη εἰσίν. The expreſſion in it concerning Chriſt being unſound, un-
"ſcriptural; concerning Biſhops, unintelligible, or ridiculous.

How

How unwilling the writer of this Preface (therein to shew the judgment of Antiquity concerning Perseverance) hath been to go out of that his way, the large Animadversions, which he hath afforded Episcopacy, Ignatius, and me, will sufficiently demonstrate: As it is, the sooner he shall now return to his rode again, the more tolerably easie it will be for the Reader, and me; and therefore I shall endeavour to make as much haste as he, and neither take any notice of what hath been said in the Dissertations for proof of Episcopacy, but yield, that if it appear, that there were none but particular Independent Congregations in Ignatius's time, I have then produced no testimony from him by which the Prefacer may be concluded, though as far as concerns Blondel, who went upon distant hypotheses, all that I said, may have been in full force against them. 3.

His second consideration, concerning the degenerating of Christs institutions concerning Church Administrations in the management of succeeding Churches, and the principle of that degeneration, the working of the mystery of iniquity, and the occasion of that again, the accommodation of Ecclesiastical affairs to the Civil distributions (which is in effect that the Apostles erecting Mother-Churches in chief Cities, where they first preacht, as at Jerusalem to all Judæa, Antioch to all Syria, &c. was a special occasion of, and advantage to the working of the mystery of iniquity) is that which in the several degrees of it might yield large discourse; the mystery of iniquity, in S. Paul, being remote enough from this, and distributions of Churches, such as were most commodious, far enough from having either iniquity or mystery in them. But I shall readily transcribe his pattern, and as he hath not, neither shall I insist on it. 4.

The third, on which he will not insist much farther, was competently insisted on before, in comparing Clement's two orders in the Church (and the like in S. Paul) with Ignatius's three. But the design of returning to it again, was to offer one argument more, which had not formerly been made use of, and I must not let that fall to the ground: It is this, that if the Bishop had been in that esteem in Clement's time, in which these Epistles set him out, as the resemblance of God the Father, he would certainly have bid them be subject to him, and used that as an argument to compose the sedition, of which he wrote unto them. 5.

But 1. It is certain that negative arguments prove nothing; there might be Bishops in Clement's days, and the power due to them as great, as that which would intitle them to the image of God the Father, and yet, the sedition being raised against the Bishops themselves, and the question being not concerning the Order, but the Persons, who should be advanced to it, the mention of the dignity of the Order, or of the due subjection to it, might be no proper way of appeasing that sedition, nor, as such, chosen to be made use of by Clement. 6.

Secondly; We know that next the obligations to peace, &c. the first and principal argument used by Clemens, was the institution of these their Bishops by the Apostles, and the dignity of that Order being such, that the Apostles foresaw the contentions that would be περὶ ὀνόμα]Θ for the dignity or name of it, he tells them that the Apostles had made a list of successors in each Church, presuming, and not needing more particularly to tell them, that this was an high aggravation of their crime, in throwing those out, whom God had thus particularly set over them. And I know not that Ignatius would or could upon his hypotheses, have argued stronger to his purpose. 7.

What the Prefacer adds by way of flourish, I shall not need to attend to: By this brief account 'tis clear, though Clemens mentions but two Orders, and Ignatius three, yet Bishops may have been in equal esteem with both of them. And that is all that I need reply, to that which, he saith, is one of the such things which he will not insist on. 8.

The fourth thing, on which he is resolved to insist, and inlarge his digression, is, that which I had thought had been already newly insisted on (and, I hope, competently answer'd) that in all the Epistles there is no intimation of any Church whereunto any Bishop related, but such an one as whose members met altogether in one, and with their Bishop disposed and ordered the affairs of the Church. And so on, to the same purpose; and I shall be Magnus Apollo, if I shew him any. 9.

Now I am perswaded, 1. that it already appears sufficiently, that the [ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ] the members of each Church meeting together in prayer, is no proof, that to them belonged in the least, to dispose and order the affairs of the Church; and yet besides, that nothing hath yet been pretended for it out of Ignatius, unless it be the μηδὲ τι ἰδίᾳ, nothing on their own heads, in the same place, which is much remoter from that purpose. 10.

Beyond this it hath appear'd farther, that the office of all members under the Bishop was by Ignatius's doctrine to obey their superiours, to live under subjection; and that is not to dispose, or order. And the places so long insisted on out of Clemens also, have, I hope, appear'd to infer nothing to that purpose. 11.

Secondly; 'Tis as certain that I have * already performed this task laid on me by him, and shew'd him that Ignatius, as Bishop of Antioch, the Metropolis, is call'd Bishop and Pastor of the Church of Syria, and some other the like passages, which directly infer what he requires me to infer, and so that I have thus much title to his favour, and should not be put off to a Poetical expression for my reward. 12. * See sect. 1. n. 8. & 14.

As for the condition he interposeth, that I must shew this before the contemperation of affairs to the civil constitutions of Cities and Provinces, I confess that to be a rigorous condition, and such as unless I be released from that restraint, I shall be utterly disabled to perform my task: For he cannot but know, that it is my affirmation, that at the first planting of the Churches, the Apostles thus contemper'd the Ecclesiastick to the Civil distributions of Cities and Provinces, having no power of making new Cities or Provinces, any more than of constituting new Nations, and yet planting their Churches, and constituting Bishops in Cities (and thence κατὰ πόλιν, in every City, and κατ' ἐκκλησίαν, in every Church, is all one in the sacred stile) which must necessarily infer, that the Ecclesiastical agreed with the civil distributions. And truly, how the Church was order'd before the Apostles planted it, I have not the curiosity to inquire. 13.

A second condition he is also pleased to lay on me by way of farther restraint, to make my obedience yet more difficult. That my proofs must not be such as is that Testimony urged by me from the Epistle to the Ephesians, Ἰησοῦς ὁ Χριστὸς τῶ πατρὸς ἡ γνώμη, ὡς καὶ οἱ ἐπίσκοποι --- Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ γνώμη ἐστίν.] This passage 14.

it ſeems hath not found favour with him; the firſt part of it is, ſaith he, unſound and unſcriptural, the ſecond unintelligible or ridiculous.

13. But I cannot yield to his cenſure in either part. For the firſt, Let it but be conſidered that Chriſt came to reveal the will of his Father, that whatſoever he taught, he taught from his Father, and there can be no unſoundneſs in the expreſſion, to ſay, that Chriſt is the ſentence of his Father (any more than that he is the word, or the wiſdom of his Father) meaning thereby, that what he delivered, was his Fathers ſentence or good pleaſure; for ſo in the title of the Epiſtle to the Philad. ἐν γνώμῃ Χριστοῦ by Chriſts ſentence, is explained immediately by κατὰ τὸ ἴδιον θέλημα, according to his own will.

14. And for the ſecond, let him but read it as he may find Voſſius and the Archbiſhop of Armagh read it, ἐν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ γνώμῃ, by the appointment or ſentence, or ἴδιον θέλημα, own will of Chriſt, and ſure it is very intelligible, and far from ridiculous, even no more than this, that the Biſhops ordained in all Regions by the Apoſtles, were appointed by, or by appointment of Chriſt, as the ſame matter is in the Epiſtle to the Philadelphians ſet down in a parallel phraſe, where the Biſhop, Presbyters and Deacons are ſaid to be ἀποδεδειγμένοι ἐν γνώμῃ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, deſigned by the appointment of Jeſus Chriſt. Or if the ἐν be left out, then, reading γνώμῃ with ἰῶτα ſubſcriptum, as the old Latin, Sententia, will bear, it is directly all one with the former. Or if in the third place, it be read in the nominative caſe, γνώμη, then the figure is very intelligible, that theſe Biſhops are Chriſts appointment, Chriſts ſentence, Chriſts will, i. e. are appointed or determined or willed by him. And ſo I hope there is yet nothing ſo very unintelligible, or at all ridiculous in Ignatius, or my teſtimonies from him, that I ſhould need this caution to be interpoſed, againſt I produce more.

CHAP. VII.

Of Metropoles and Metropolitans.

SECT. I.

Some account of the probations produced for Epiſcopacy, ἔξαρχοι. The power of Metropolitans. Their relations to more Churches than one. An enumeration of Primates, and Metropolitans.

1. HAving made this ſolemn promiſe, that I ſhould be ſo highly rewarded, in caſe I produced any intimation to prove, that there was any other but ſingle particular Congregations; It was now timely remembred, that I had done ſomewhat like this already, in proving the ſeven Angels of the ſeven Churches in the Revelation to be Metropolitans, and to the conſideration of that, he now next proceeds, and that brings in an examination of what I have ſaid of Metropoles and Metropolitans: And it begins thus,

2. "But it may be ſaid, what need we any more writing, what need we any truer proof, or teſtimo-"ny? The learned Doctor in his Diſſertations, Diſſert. 4. cap. 5. hath abundantly diſcharged this "work, and proved the ſeven Biſhops of the ſeven Churches mentioned, Revel. 2. 3. to have been "Metropolitans or Archbiſhops; ſo that no juſt cauſe remains, why we ſhould farther contend.

"Let then the Reader pardon this my utmoſt excurſion, in this digreſſion, to whoſe compaſs I "had not the leaſt thoughts of going forth at the entrance thereof, and I ſhall return thither whence "I have turned aſide.

"Diſſert. 4. cap. 5. The Doctor tells us, that Septem Eccleſiarum Angeli non tantum Epiſcopi, ſed "& Metropolitæ, i. e. Archiepiſcopi ſtatuendi ſunt, i. e. principalium urbium ἔξαρχοι, ad quos provinciæ "integræ, & in iis multarum inferiorum urbium Eccleſiæ, earumque Epiſcopi tanquam ad Archiepiſcopum "aut Metropolitanum pertinebant.

"The Doctor in this Chapter commences per ſaltum, and taking it for granted, that he hath "proved Dioceſan Biſhops ſufficiently before, though he hath ſcarce ſpoken any one word to that "purpoſe in his whole book (for to prove one ſuperintending in a Church, by the name of a Biſhop, "others acting in ſome kind of ſubordination to him, by the name of Elders, and Presbyters, upon "the account of what hath been offered concerning the ſtate of the Churches in thoſe days, will no "way reach to the maintenance of this preſumption) he ſacrifices his pains to the Metropolitical "Archiepiſcopal dignity, which as we muſt ſuppoſe, is ſo clearly founded in Scripture and Anti-"quity, that they are as blind as Bats and Moles, who cannot ſee the ground and foundation of "it.

"But firſt, be it taken for granted, that the Angels of the ſeven Churches are taken for the Go-"vernours of thoſe Churches, then that each Angel be an Individual Biſhop of the Church to which "he did belong: 2. Be it alſo granted, that they were Biſhops of the moſt eminent Church or "Churches, in that Province, or Roman political diſtribution of thoſe Countries, in the manage-"ment of the government of them, I ſay, Biſhops of ſuch Churches, not urbium ἔξαρχοι (as the Do-"ctor terms them) what advance is made by all this to the Aſſertation of a Metropolitical Archiepiſ-"copacy, I cannot as yet diſcover. That they were ordinary officers of Chriſts inſtitution, rela-"ting in their office and ordinary diſcharge of it, not only to the particular Churches wherein they "were placed, but to many Churches alſo no leſs committed to their charge, than theſe wherein "they did reſide, the Officers, Rulers, Governours, of which Churches depended on them, not "only as to their advice and counſel; but as to their power and juriſdiction, holding their place

"and employment from them, is ſome part of that, which in this undertaking is incumbent on our "Doctor to make good, if he will not be ſuppoſed to prevaricate in the cauſe in hand.

Being here called out anew to the maintaining of what I had ſaid in the Diſſert. concerning Metropolitical Churches, and Biſhops, and having ſo lately been ingaged in the ſame task by the exceptions of the London Miniſters, and many objections, which here in the proceſs of this diſcourſe are lightly propoſed, being by them formerly made, and accordingly anſwer accommodated to them; and yet farther, the main thing which is here done, being to ſet down many Latin paſſages, out of the Diſſert. and to deem them confuted by the bare recital of them; upon theſe grounds I do not foreſee that there will be any neceſſity of making any large returns to this laſt, but not conciſeſt part of his digreſſion. What had been returned to the London Miniſters, the Reader will find in that Vindication, Cap. 1. Sect. 16. (of which number, by the fault of the Printer, he will meet with two Sections) and ſo on for the three ſubſequent Sections, and to the Diſſertations themſelves, and that vindication of them, I ſhall willingly refer this matter. Yet ſhall I not omit to gather up whatſoever I ſhall here find ſuggeſted, which was not there punctually ſpoken to; and of that nature here are four things in this Paragraph. 3.

Firſt, that in the 5 Chap. of Diſſ. 4. I commence per ſaltum, taking it for granted, that I had proved Dioceſan Biſhops before, though, ſaith he, I had ſcarce ſpoken one word to that purpoſe in my whole Book. To this I anſwer, that as in the firſt Diſſertation I had anſwered one ſort of objections againſt Epiſcopacy, and in the whole ſecond Diſſ. aſſerted it out of Ignatius and S. Hierom himſelf, ſo in the third, I had deduced it from Chriſt and the Apoſtles, and I ſuppoſe laid thoſe grounds, and by all antiquity confirmed, and by anſwer of Blondel's objections vindicated them, ſo that they were competently fitted to bear that ſtructure of Epiſcopacy, which I had laid upon them; and then having in the fourth Diſſ. added to this the viſible practice of this, in the hands of ſingle Governours, whether the Apoſtles in their ſeveral κληροὶ, or their ſucceſſors the firſt Biſhops, called ſecundary Apoſtles, mentioned in the Scripture, and yet more particularly in the Angels of the ſeven Churches, (which being acknowledged to be the Governours of thoſe Churches, were proved to be ſingle Governours of them, which was the only thing in queſtion betwixt Blondel and me) I had ſome reaſon to hope that I might be allowed to have ſpoken ſome one word to that purpoſe in that Book, before I came to prove thoſe Angels to have been Metropolitans, which he knows was not attempted, till all this of Epiſcopacy had been premiſed by me. 4.

The reaſon, which he adds in a parentheſis, why he affirms thus expreſly, that I had ſcarce ſpoken one word to prove a Dioceſan Biſhop in that Book, is the ſecond thing I am to reply to; For, ſaith he, to prove one ſuperintending in a Church by the name of Biſhop, others acting in ſome kind of ſubordination to him under the name of Elders and Presbyters, will no way reach to the maintenance of this preſumption. 5.

To which I anſwer, that the queſtion lying, as there it did betwixt Blondel and me, there can be no doubt, but, if I have evinced the power in every Church, to have been in the hands of a ſingle Biſhop, and either no Colledge of Presbyters in that Church, or elſe thoſe Presbyters ſubordinate to the Biſhop (meaning by ſubordinate, ſubject to his power and authority over them) I have alſo evinced the cauſe againſt Blondel; And this I may have leave to hope is there done, till the contrary be made appear; and here being no offer of that, but only a mention of the account of what hath been offered by the Prefacer, concerning the ſtate of the Churches in thoſe days, 1. that account hath already been ſhewn to have no force in it, 2. if it had, it belongs not to the controverſie, as it lay betwixt me and Blondel, but is as contrary to Blondel's pretenſions as to mine; and ſo ſtill I cannot ſee how I fell under his Animadverſion in this matter, or how I commenced per ſaltum, in doing what there I did, as regularly as I could imagine. 6.

The third thing is, that I call the Biſhops of the moſt eminent Churches, urbium ἔξαρχοι, whom he will haved called Biſhops only. But of this there can be no Controverſie, the fitneſs and propriety of words being to be judged from the uſe of them, and the caſe being clear, that a Metropolitan, eſpecially a Primate, was called ἔξαρχος in the ancient Councils and * Church-writings, and from them, and not from Scripture, which uſeth no higher ſtile for them, than of Biſhops and Angels, it is, that I borrowed that appellation. 7.

The laſt thing, that I muſt, if I will not be ſuppoſed to prevaricate, make good, is, that the Angels of the Churches related in their office not only to the particular Churches wherein they were placed, but to many Churches alſo, no leſs committed to their charge, than theſe wherein they did reſide, and that to power and juriſdiction, &c. 8.

That they related to other Churches beſides their own, even to all that belonged to their Province, I ſuppoſe my ſelf obliged to make good; and the 34 Apoſtolick Canon is alone able to do it in general, as ſhall anon appear. Then more particularly, that they had power of ordaining Biſhops, and of judging them alſo, is S. Chryſoſtoms affirmation of Titus, whom I ſuppoſe to be ſuch a Metropolitan in Crete; That if any were made Biſhop ἄνευ γνώμης Μητροπολίτου, without the judgment and liking of the Metropolitan, μὴ δεῖν εἶναι ἐπίσκοπον, He ought not to be a Biſhop, is the ſixth Canon of the firſt Council of Nice; And what is there defined of the Metropolitan's rights, beſides that 'tis done by 318 Biſhops, the moſt ſelect of the whole Chriſtian world, and in an age very competent to paſs a judgment of an Apoſtolical cuſtom; it is alſo vouched by them expreſly as one of the ἀρχαῖα ἔθη, the ancient immemorial cuſtoms of the Church. And much more to the ſame purpoſe is evident by the ancient Canons of the univerſal Church, as hath in ſome meaſure been ſet down (and as far as I can be concerned to make good, either againſt the Preſbyterian, or Congregational, or Popiſh way) in a tract of Schiſm, Chap. 3. Sect. 11, &c. 9.

To this the ſtory of thoſe firſt times exactly accords, telling us that Irenæus by being Metropolitan of Lyons, ἐπεσκόπει τὰς κατὰ Γαλλίαν παροικίας, was Biſhop (that ſure muſt be interpreted Metropolitan or Primate) of the Dioceſe (and ſo Biſhops) that pertain to France, and * again τῶν κατὰ Γαλλίαν ἀδελφῶν ἡγεῖτο, he had the Government of the Brethren, i. e. the Chriſtians that belong to France; 10.

Euſeb. Eccleſ. Hiſt. l. 5. c. κς'.

* Ibid. c. κς'.

And

Ibid. c. xβ. And this Irenæus, the Scholar of Polycarp, auditor of the Apoſtles: That, Demetrius τῶν κατ' Ἀλεξανδρείαν παροικιῶν ἐγχειρίζεται, undertook the adminiſtration of the Dioceſes belonging to Alexandria; and both theſe at the ſame time in Commodus's reign. And that whole Chapter in Euſebius is but the enumeration of ſeveral ſuch Metropolitans by name, who were all at the ſame time; of the Church of the Antiochians, Serapion, the eighth from the Apoſtles; of the Church of Rome, Eleutherius's ſucceſſor, Victor; of Ceſarea ἡ Παλαιστίνων, or as he phraſeth it in the next Chapter, ἡ ἐν Καισαρείᾳ παροικίας, Theophilus; of the Church in Jeruſalem, Narciſſus; of the Church of Corinth, ἡ κατ' Ἑλλάδα, Banchyllus; c. xδ. and of Epheſus, or, as he phraſeth it, ἡ ἐν Ἐφέσῳ παροικίας, Polycrates, of whom he after ſaith, that ἦν ἐπὶ τῆς Ἀσίας ἐπισκόπων ἡγεῖτο, he was chief, or Prime or Ruler of the Biſhops of Aſia. In the ſame manner as afterward, S. Cyprian Biſhop of Carthage in the Council of Conſtantinople in Trullo, is ſtiled Can. 2. Ἀρχιεπίσκοπος τῆς Ἄφρων χώρας, Archbiſhop of the Region, or Province of Africk; which is, as to the matter of it, own'd by himſelf, Epiſt. 40. and 45. where he mentions his Province, and the extent of it.

SECT. II.

Of Churches in the plural, and a Church in the ſingular in the Scripture.

1. IN purſuit of this matter of Metropolitans, he proceeds next to take notice of one obſervation of mine in theſe words;

2. "To this end he informs us ſect. 2. that in the New Teſtament there is in ſundry places mention "made of Churches in the plural number, as Gal. 1. 21. 1 Theſ. 2. 14. Acts 9. 35. Acts 15. 41. 1 Cor. "16. 1. Gal. 1. 2. Rev. 1. 11. ſometimes of Church only in the ſingular number, as Acts 8. 1, 15. "4. 22. Acts 11. 26. Heb. 16. 1. 1 Cor. 1. 2. 2 Cor. 1. 1. 2 Theſ. 1. 1. Rev. 2. 1, 8, 12, 18. Now this "is an obſervation, which as we are not at all beholding to the Doctor for it, no more I ſuppoſe will "he be found to be to it, when the reaſon of it ſhall be a little weighed and conſidered. The ſumm "is, that the name Church, in the ſingular number, is never uſed, but when it relates to the ſingle "Congregation, in, or of ſome City or Town: That of Churches reſpecting the ſeveral Churches "or Congregations that were gathered in any Country or Province: Manifeſt then it is from hence, "that there is in the New Teſtament, no Church of one denomination beyond a ſingle Congregati- "on: And where there are more, they are always called Churches: How evidently this is deſtru- "ctive to any Dioceſan or Metropolitical Officer, who hath no Church left him thereby of Chriſt's "inſtitution to be related to, another opportunity will manifeſt.

3. Here is but one thing done by the Prefacer, a recital of my obſervation in the words, juſt as I ſet it, that there is in the New Teſtament mention ſometimes of Churches in the plural, ſometimes of a Church in the ſingular.

4. For this obſervation he ſaith, he is not beholding to me, and I ſhall imitate him thus far in replying, that neither is he the firſt that hath miſtaken it, the London Miniſters had done before him juſt what now he thinks fit to do. For having duly recited the obſervation, when he comes to give the  Pag. 85.* ſumm of it, that ſumm is very different from the particulars (juſt as by the * London Miniſters it had been before) viz. that my obſervation is, that the word Church is never uſed in the ſingular, but when it relates to a ſingle congregation.

5. Here I muſt interpoſe (as to the London Miniſters I did, and to the * Vindication there I refer the  Pag. 86, 87, 88.* Reader for it, and ſhall here recite it no farther than only thus) that I only ſay the word Church was ſo uſed in the ſingular for the Church of one City, meaning ſtill (as I there expreſs, and I always do, when I ſpeak of a City-Church) with the territory adjoyning, whether again that be a territory of more Cities, when that which is ſpoken of, is a Metropolis, as many of thoſe which I there mention, were, Corinth, Epheſus (and all certainly, except Cenchrea, being near unto, and an Haven-City of Corinth, πόλις, ἡ ἐπίνειον Κορίνθου, ſaith Stephanus Byzantinus, περ. πολ.) or whether the villages adjacent, when it is not a Metropolis. But that the word Church in the ſingular, is never uſed but when it thus relates to the ſingle congregation in, or of one City, Metropolis, or not Metropolis, that I never ſaid, nor thought, nor was it uſeful to me to obſerve or ſuggeſt any ſuch thing.

6. And ſo being miſtaken in his ground, his inference muſt alſo ſuddenly vaniſh, which he affirm'd to be ſo manifeſt; and ſo likewiſe all the advantage, which when opportunity ſhould ſerve, he meant to have made of it.

SECT. III.

The meaning of Provinces. Philippi a Metropolis. Dionyſius's Epiſtle to Gortyna. Philip Biſhop of all the Churches in Creet. Παροικία.

FRom the mention of my obſervation, he goes on to examine the uſe which I made of it. 1.

"For the preſent (ſaith he) let us ſee what uſe our Doctor makes of this obſervation. 2.
"Sect. 3. ſays he, Judæa, and the reſt of the places where Churches are mention'd, are the names "of Provinces, ἐπαρχιῶν, quatenus ea παροικίαις & διοικήσεσι contradiſtinguuntur: But if the Doctor "takes theſe words in an Eccleſiaſtical ſence, he begs that which will upon ſuch unworthy terms ne-"ver be granted him: If no more be intended but that Judæa, Galatia, and the like names of Coun-"tries were Provinces wherein were many Churches; Smyrna, Epheſus, of Towns and Cities where-"in there was but one, we grant it him.
"And how much that conceſſion of ours is to his advantage hath been intimated: And this ſeems "to be his intendment by his following words, Provinciarum, inquam, in quibus plurimæ civitates ſin-"gulæ ſingularum Eccleſiarum ſedes, comprehendebantur, ideoque Eccleſiæ in plurali iſtius ſive iſtius Pro-"vinciæ dicendæ; well, what then? cum tamen unaquæque civitas, cum territorio ſibi adjuncto (λῆρος!) "ab Epiſcopo ſuo adminiſtrata, ſingularis Eccleſia dicenda ſit: Ideoque quod κατ' ἐκκλησίαν factum dici-"tur, Acts 14. 15. κατὰ πόλιν fieri jubetur, Tit. 1. 5. that in every City there was a ſingular Church "in thoſe Provinces, (I ſpeak of thoſe where any number were converted to the Faith) I grant, for "the annexed territories let the Doctor take care: There being one Church at Corinth, and another "at Cenchrea, ſo that every ſingle City had its own ſingle Church with its Biſhop in it, as at Philippi.
"The paſſage mentioned by the Doctor, concerning the Epiſtle of Dionyſius to the Church of Gorty-"na in Crete, is very little to his purpoſe: Neither doth he call Philip the Biſhop of that Church, "the Biſhop of all the other Churches in Crete, as the Doctor intimates; but the Biſhop of them to "whom eſpecially and eminently he wrote.

It being here, as he ſaith, uncertain to him, what I mean, when I ſay Judæa, Syria, and the like 3.
are Provinces, as they are contra-diſtinguiſhed from thoſe which were no more than Dioceſes in our modern uſe of the word, though I thought I had ſpoken intelligibly enough before, yet I am moſt ready farther to explain my ſelf, That I mean Province in an Eccleſiaſtick ſence, the ſeveral Churches of ſeveral Cities (with their territories adjoyning to them) all together making up one Provincial Church, ſo ſtiled, as meeting occaſionally, or at ſet times, at the Metropolis in an Aſſembly ordinarily called Provincial, in which the Biſhop of the Metropolis preſideth, as James at Jeruſalem with the Biſhops of all Judæa joyning with him, as I conceive the model ſet down both Acts 15. and Rev. 4. 4. by way of viſional repreſentation.

Theſe ſeveral Churches conſidered by themſelves, are each the Church in, or of ſuch a City, and 4.
ſo each mentioned in the ſingular number; but being conſidered all together, though the denomination, wherein they all agree, be in the ſingular alſo, Judæa, Syria, &c. (and accordingly we have in Ignatius the Church of Syria, both Church and Syria in the ſingular number) which, as comprehenſive of all the ſeverals in it, I call a Province (as men have generally done before me) yet the ſeverals ſo comprehended, are oft mentioned in the plural, the Churches of Judæa, &c. This is the obſervation, and being, as I thought, evidenced by the inſtances there made, I did not think it could want farther proof, or be liable to be cenſured as that fallacy of begging the queſtion on ſuch terms, as he is pleaſed to think unworthy.

At the preſent, all that I had there to ſay in the * Diſſertations being only this, the rendring ſome 5.
reaſon of that difference of ſtile in Scripture, ſometimes the Churches in the plural, ſometimes in the ſingular, and that reaſon being viſible, becauſe Judæa had many Churches in it, as many Cities, and Cenchrea, &c. was but one Church of one City, and the territory (though perhaps many places of Eccleſiaſtick aſſemblies in that circuit) this cannot be a begging of more than is made evident. All that I am by him warned to take farther care of, is, the territory, (what cauſe he had to cry λῆρος! at the mention of it, I ſhall not enquire) which I ſhall be mindful to do, when it is in any danger, or need of my care, which as yet it is not, being no way aſſaulted by him, and therefore here is at preſent no place of my farther ſolicitude.
* Diſſert. 4. c. 5. Sect. 3.

What he is pleaſed to interpoſe of Philippi, its being a ſingle City with its Biſhop in it, he cannot 6.
but know, is, as to me, a meer begging of the queſtion, which juſt then he had accuſed in me, ſome pains being taken in that Diſſertation, cap. 10. to ſhew that thoſe plural Biſhops, were not the Biſhops of that one City of Philippi; To which having never offered the leaſt word of anſwer, the contrary ſhould not thus have been taken for granted by him.

One thing he adds in the cloſe, which was a little unexpected, that the paſſage, concerning the 7.
Epiſtle of Dionyſius to the Church at Gortyna in Crete, is very little to my purpoſe, and that neither doth he call the Biſhop of that Church, the Biſhop of all the other Churches in Crete. What truth there is in this ſuggeſtion will ſoon be diſcerned.

And firſt, theſe are the words of that Epiſtle, or the title of it, in Euſebius l. 4. c. κγ'. Dionyſius 8.
Biſhop of Corinth, τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ παροικούσῃ Γορτύναν (this he ſhould not have rendred, to the Church of Gortyna, but) to the Church adjacent or lying about Gortyna, ἅμα ταῖς λοιπαῖς κατὰ Κρήτην παροικίαις, together with the reſt of the παροικίαι (the word common to Dioceſes and Provinces) in Crete. The controverſie, I perceive, here, is not concerning παροικίαις, what that ſignifies (but the λοιπαὶ the reſt, how far that extends, whether to all, or to ſome to whom he eſpecially and eminently wrote) and ſo I ſhall not need inſiſt on it, elſe it were eaſie to ſhew, that ſignifying originally, adjacence of habita- tion,

tion, it belongs indifferently, whether to a greater or leſs circuit, a Pariſh (which word comes from thence) or adjacence of houſes; a Dioceſs, or adjacence of Pariſhes to a City; a Province, or adjacence of Cities (with their territories) to a Metropolis or chief City. And which of theſe it ſignifies at any time, the Context muſt define.

9. So the Church παροικῶτα Γορτύναν, muſt here be the whole Province, relating to Gortyna the chief Metropolis of Crete, and then the λοιπαὶ κατὰ Κρήτην παροικίαι; can be no other but the reſt of the Provinces, which were in Crete. And then certainly the adding of λοιπαῖς the reſt, to the mention of that, of which Gortyna was the Metropolis, muſt conclude him to comprehend all the other, beſide that, which were in Crete; and Philip, which is there ſaid to be Biſhop ἀυτῶν of them, in the plural, not only ἀυτῆς of that about Gortyna, muſt needs be concluded Primate of them all, which he could not be any other way, than as he was Biſhop of the chief Metropolis, to which thoſe other related. And then, what could be more to my purpoſe than this, I confeſs I know not. Againſt this there is no word of reaſon offered, only 'tis ſaid that it is not to my purpoſe --- and ſo I have nothing to which I can make reply in this matter.

SECT. IV.

The Original of Metropolitical Churches. Accommodation of the Eccleſiaſtick to the Civil diſtributions. The Biſhop of Romes greatneſs.

1. THE next thing he is pleaſed to examine, he calls (I ſhall not debate how fitly) my application of the forementioned obſervation, and from thence he expects ſome great advantage.

2. "Sect. 4. ſaith he, Application is made of the forementioned obſervation: Sect. 2. and the Interpretation given of it, Sect. 3. in theſe words, His ſic poſitis, illud ſtatim ſequitur ut (in Imperii cognitione) in provinciâ qualibet, cum plures Urbes ſint, una tamen primaria & principalis cenſenda erat, μητρόπολις ideo dicta, cui itidem inferiores reliquæ civitates ſubjiciebantur, ut civitatibus regiones, ſic & inter Eccleſias, & Cathedras Epiſcopales unam ſemper primariam & Metropoliticam fuiſſe.

"In this Section the Doctor hath moſt ingenuouſly and truly given us the riſe and occaſion of his "Dioceſan and Metropolitical Prelates, from the aims of men, to accommodate Eccleſiaſtical or "Church-affairs, to the ſtate and condition of the civil government, and diſtributions of Provinces, "Metropolitan Cities, and chief Towns within the ſeveral dependencies (the neighbouring villages "being caſt in as things of no great eſteem, to the lot of the next conſiderable Town and ſeat of Ju"dicature) did the Hierarchy, which he ſo ſedulouſly contendeth for, ariſe; what advantage were "afforded to the work, by the paucity of believers in the Villages and leſs Towns (from which at "length the whole body of Heatheniſh Idolaters were denominated Pagans) the firſt planting of "Churches in the greater Cities, the eminence of the Officers of the firſt Churches in thoſe Cities, "the weakneſs of many rural Biſhops, the multiplying and growing in numbers and perſons, of gifts, "abilities, and conſiderable fortunes and employments in this world, in the Metropolitan Cities, "with their fame thereby, the tradition of the abode of ſome one or other of the Apoſtles in ſuch "Cities and Churches, with the eminent Accommodation at the adminiſtration of civil Juriſdiction "and other affairs, which appeared in that ſubordination and dependency, whereunto the Provinces, "chief Cities, and territories in the Roman Empire were caſt, with which opportunities Satan got by "theſe means, to introduce their ways, ſtate, pomp, words, phraſes, terms of honour of the "world into the Churches; inſenſibly getting ground upon them, and prevailing to their declenſion "from the naked ſimplicity and purity wherein they were firſt planted, ſome other occaſion may "give advantage for us to manifeſt; for the preſent it may ſuffice that it is granted, that the Magni"fick Hierarchy of the Church aroſe from the accommodation of its ſtate and condition of the Roman "Empire and Provinces. And this in the inſtances of after-ages that might be produced, will eaſily "be made yet farther evident; in thoſe ſhameful, or indeed rather ſhameleſs conteſts, which fell out "among the Biſhops of the third Century, and downward, about precedency, titles of Honour, ex"tent of Juriſdiction, Eccleſiaſtical ſubjection to, or exemption from one another, the conſiderable"neſs of their Cities in the Civil ſtate of the Roman Empire where they did reſide, was ſtill the moſt "prevalent and cogent argument in their brawles: the moſt notable bruſh, that in all Antiquity we "find given to the great Leviathan of Rome, who ſported himſelf in thoſe gatherings together of the "waters of people, and multitudes, and Nations, and Tongues, or the general Councils (as they "are called) was from an argument taken from the ſeat of the Empire, being fixt at Conſtantinople, "making it become new Rome, ſo that the Biſhop of the Church there, was to injoy equal priviledge "with him, whoſe lot was fallen in the old imperial City.

3. The brief ſumm of what he there quotes in Latin, is this, That as in the civil account, the chief City where there are many in a Province, is the Metropolis, to which the inferior Cities are ſubjected (and relate to it, as the adjacent region to the City) ſo the chief Church in a Province was by the Apoſtles deſigned (which I hope is far enough from Satans introducing it) to be a Metropolitical Church, on which the inferior Churches and their Biſhops depended, and obſerved concord and unity with it. This the Prefacer looks on, as a ſpecial diſcovery, and having threatned what ſome other occaſion may give advantage to manifeſt, he is not pleaſed to make any the leaſt objection againſt it at this time, or to endeavour to prove that it was not thus, but is very well ſatisfied that it is granted, that the Magnifick (as he will ſtile it) Hierarchy of the Church aroſe from this accommodation of the Eccleſiaſtick to the Civil forms of diſtributions.

4. This indeed, as far as concerns every national Church, which by this means is beſt diſpoſed for order and unity within it ſelf, is by me willingly and profeſtly granted; and if the reaſonableneſs, that it ſhould do ſo, do not competently vindicate it, yet ſuppoſing (as the diſcourſe there doth) that the Apoſtles themſelves did generally ſo deſign it in every Region, I hope there will lye no charge againſt it; And if farther than ſo, the obſerving of it proved uſeful, as he ſaith it did, to the reducing the Biſhop of Rome to ſome moderate terms, equalling another Biſhop to him, when the Empire was removed to another ſeat, I know not ſtill, why this ſhould be ſuch a diſobligation to the Prefacer, who will hardly be able to give any more moderate or leſs Popiſh account of the immenſe greatneſs which that Biſhop by preſcription of ſome number of years did challenge, than this of the Imperial ſeat having been fixt at Rome, and theſe priviledges accruing to him by that means, and not by any inveſtiture from Chriſt, by ſucceſſion to S. Peter, as they plead, nor by appointment of the Apoſtles in their firſt plantations, which now we ſpeak of.

I have elſewhere ſpoken on this ſubject in the Tract of Schiſm, in the latter part of Chap. 3. and to 5.
the London Miniſters, cap. 1. ſect. 16. and there briefly ſhewed the reaſonableneſs of it. And here being yet nothing but promiſes of objections againſt it, it may ſuffice that I defer the anſwering them, till they be produced.

SECT. V.

The Grounds of the Apoſtles inſtituting Metropoles. The frame of Heathen Governments, and the patterns among the Jews, Civil and Sacred.

NExt he proceeds to that which I add, as an image of this model in the Church, taken from Gods 1. direction to Moſes for the government of the Jews, thus,

"But our Doctor adds, Sect. 5. Illud ex Judæorum exemplari tranſcripſiſſe Apoſtoli videntur, cum 2.
"Moſaicâ id lege cautum eſſet, ut Judices & miniſtri in qualibet civitate ordinarentur, Deut. 16. 18.
"illi vero in rebus dubiis ad Judicem (Moſis ſucceſſorem) Synedrio Hieroſolymitano cinctum recurrere te- "nerentur, Chap. 17. 9. and in Sect. 6. he proves Jeruſalem to have been the Metropolis of that whole "Nation, Egregiam vero laudem! But

"1. The Doctor I preſume knows before this, that thoſe with whom he hath to do, will never "give him the thing in queſtion upon his begging, or requeſt. That which alone falls under our "conſideration and inquiry is, whether the Apoſtles inſtituted any ſuch model of Church order and "Government, as is by the Doctor contended for; to this he tells you, that the Apoſtles ſeem to "have done it, from the pattern of Moſaical inſtitutions in the Church of the Jews; But, Doctor, the "queſtion is not, with what reſpect they did it, but whether they did it at all or no? This the Do"ctor thought good to let alone till another time, if we would not grant him upon his petition, that "ſo they did.

"2. This then is the Doctors ſecond argument for his Dioceſan and Metropolitan Prelates. His
"firſt was, from the example of the Heathens, in their civil adminiſtrations and rule, this ſecond
"from the example of the Jews. Not to divert into the handling of the Church and Political ſtate
"of the Jews, as appointed by God, nor that diſſonancy that is between the inſtitution of civil Ma-
"giſtrates, and Evangelical adminiſtrations, this is the ſumm of the Doctors reaſoning, in his 5, 6, 7, "and 8. Sections. God in the Church and among the people of the Jews, choſe out one City to place "his name there, making it the place where all the types and ceremonies which he had appointed for "the diſcovery and ſhadowing forth of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, were viſibly and glorioully to be ma"naged, acted, and held forth (ſundry of them being ſuch, as whoſe Typicalneſs would have been "deſtroyed by their multiplication) and principally on this account making that place or City (which "was firſt Shilo) the ſeat of the Kingdom, or habitation of the chief ruler, for the adminiſtration of
"Juſtice, who appointed Judges in all the Land, for the good and peace of the people, therefore "the Churches of Jeſus Chriſt, diſperſed over the face of the whole world, freed from obligations "to Cities or Mountains, walking before God, in, and with a pure and ſpiritual worſhip, having no
"one reaſon of that former inſtitution, in common with the Church of the Jews, muſt be caſt into "the ſame mould and figure; I hope without offence I may take leave to deny the conſequence, and
"what more I have to ſay to this argument I ſhall yet defer.

One great fallacy I am here charged to be guilty of, (but having been oft accuſed of this very 3. crime, I yet never had the ill luck to be convict by him) that I beg the queſtion again, which, ſaith he, is only this, Whether the Apoſtles inſtituted any ſuch order, or no?

But can this be a begging the queſtion, when Sect. 9. of that Chapter, I expreſly undertake to prove 4.
that the Apoſtles did inſtitute ſuch model, and when he himſelf in the very next Paragraph, expreſly confeſſes that I proceed to prove it?

Can that be ſaid to be begged, which is undertaken to be proved, and the proofs as yet not ſo much 5.
as conſidered by him, and ſo certainly not invalidated? Or can a man be bound to prove his aſſertion, before he hath explained what he means by it, or upon what grounds of credibility he affirms it?

That which I do in that Chapter may analytically be divided into two parts, 1. the grounds upon 6.
which I conceive the Apoſtles thus modell'd the Church, and ſecondly, the proofs or teſtimonies by which I manifeſt that they did ſo. The queſtion in hand being a matter of fact, whether or no the Apoſtles inſtituted Metropolitical Churches, &c. that was to be proved or diſproved only by teſtimonies; and if that be not attempted to be done, but taken for granted, that were indeed a begging of the queſtion; but a due place being reſerved for that, in the latter part of the Chapter, I conceive it no breach of the Laws of diſcourſe, owned and exemplified by Artiſts, firſt to render the aſſertion credible, by propoſing the grounds upon which I conceive they did it.

7. And thoſe grounds were of two ſorts, 1. The known frame of the Heathen Governments, where they came to plant the Goſpel, and by attending to which, they ſhould plant it more advantagiouſly; and then what Nazianzen ſaith of Julian, that it was in him a wiſe but a wicked policy, for the reducing Heatheniſm among Chriſtians, to appoint the heathen Prieſts to make uſe of the Chriſtian obſervances, may be very credible, as an act of Divine policy in the Apoſtles, to make their advantage for the propagating and preſerving the Faith, by obſerving and not going contrary to the civil diſtributions, which they ſhould meet with among the Heathens.

8. Secondly, The patterns of this among the Jews, and thoſe we know, the more conſiderable in this, becauſe they were there inſtituted by God himſelf, and becauſe many other obſervances in Chriſtianity are by Chriſt and the Apoſtles viſibly accommodated from the Jews. And again there are two of thoſe patterns, one in their civil managery, Judges and Officers in every City, Deut. 16. 18. and Moſes in matters of higher concernment and difficulty with his Sanhedrim at Jeruſalem; and the other in their Eccleſiaſtical, the three families of the Levites, ſeparated for the ſacred offices, a נשיא or chief over them, Num. 3. 24. and over them Eleazer the Son of Aaron the נשיא נשיא ἀρχων ἀρχόντων, the chief of the chiefs of the Levites. And the advantages of order, and unity, and due adminiſtration of Juſtice, which recommended thoſe forms among the Jews, were all fit to be taken care of, and conſequently were ſo many motives to induce the Apoſtles to copy them out under the New Teſtament, and to obſerve the like uniformity in all their Plantations.

9. And theſe grounds being thus laid as a foundation, to ſupport and fit the building, which in the remainder of the Chapter was regularly, i. e. by teſtimony of the Scripture and the Ancient Church, ſuperſtructed on it, I cannot gueſs, what I could otherwiſe have done in reſpect of the Method, than what was there deſigned by me. And truly if I did let the proof of the fact alone, as he ſaith, till another time, as long as that other time was ſo near at hand, in the ſame Chapter, in the very next Section after the ſetting down the exemplars among the Jews, I cannot yet diſcern how I have offended in it. No man can do two things at once, and I was free to chuſe my own Method, as long as I neither omitted nor put off (as the Prefacer hath often done, and ſo now again in the laſt words of this Paragraph he doth) to ſome other occaſion, that which was ſo neceſſary to be proved there.

10. As for his ſummary account of my diſcourſe again, it is very much varied from that, which thoſe four Sections yield, which is no more than this, that as by Gods appointment to Moſes, there were many inferiour and one ſuperiour Court; many in the ſeveral Cities of Judæa, and one at Jeruſalem, to which the inferiour related, as the Mother and prime; and as in the Temple above the Levites there were heads of the Levites, and heads of thoſe heads, ſo it would be exactly parallel in the Apoſtles to inſtitute Biſhops in every City-Church, and Metropolitans in the chief Cities; which as it is no argument at all to prove the matter of fact, that indeed it was ſo, nor by me deſigned for ſuch, propoſed only as an exemplar or parallel, not as a proof, and accordingly induced with [ad hanc imaginem, after this image] Sect. 9. an [as] and [ſo] not a [therefore] (and ſo there was no conſequence in it capable of being denied) ſo again ſuch as it was, it very much differed from that which is here ſet down in Italick letters, as if it were the Engliſh of my Sections (which, again, were never ſet down in Engliſh, till now that this advantage might be gain'd by it.)

11. This manner of dealing, what it imports, I ſhall not judge, but leave the Prefacer to paſs his own Animadverſions on it.

SECT. VI.

Of Antioch the Metropolis of Syria, Acts 15. What the dependence of Inferiour Churches to their Metropolis. The reference to Jeruſalem made by the Church of Antioch. The decrees delivered to other Churches. Jeruſalem the grand Metropolis. Philo's Teſtimony. Ignatius Paſtor, Biſhop of Syria. The Epiſtle to the Antiochians. A Teſtimony thence.

1. NOW then he proceeds to the examination of my proofs, (If it might have been foreſeen that there were any ſuch, the laſt Paragraph might certainly have been ſpared.)

2. "But, ſaith he, the Doctor proceeds to prove, that indeed the Apoſtles did diſpoſe of the "Churches in this frame and order, according to the pattern of the Civil government of the Roman "Empire, and that inſtituted of God among the Jews. The ninth Section, wherein he attempts the "proof of this aſſertion, is as followeth.

"Ad hanc imaginem, Apoſtolos Eccleſias ubique diſponendas curâſſe, & in omnibus plantationibus ſuis, "minorum ab eminentioribus civitatibus dependentiam & ſubordinationem conſtituiſſe, exemplis quidem "plurimis monſtrari poſſit; illud in Syriâ & Ciliciâ patet Act. 16.4. cùm enim ζήτημα illud c. 15.2. Hie- "roſolymas referetur ab Eccleſiâ ἰδίως Antiochia, Cap. 14. 26. & 15. 3. & decretum ab Apoſtolis denuò "ad eos mitteretur v. 22. in Epiſtolâ quâ decretum illud continebatur, ſimul cum Antiochenſibus, Τὰς κα- "τὰ Συρίαν καὶ Κιλικίαν Ἀδελφὰς comprehenſos videmus v. 23. Dein Epiſtolâ iſtâ Antiochenæ Eccleſiæ reddità "v. 30. Paulus tandem & Sylas Syriam & Ciliciam peragrantes v. 41. c. 16.4. δόγματα κεκριμένα ὑπὸ "τῶν Ἀποστόλων ſingulis civitatibus obſervanda tradiderunt, ut quæ ad hanc Antiochiæ Metropolin, ut toti- "dem ſubordinatæ Eccleſiæ pertinerent, ut & ipſa Antiochia ad Hieroſolymas, primariam tam latæ (ut "ex Philone prædiximus) Provinciæ Metropolin pertinebat, & ad eam, ad dirimendam litem iſtam, ſe "conferebat.

"This being all that the Doctor hath to produce from the Scripture to his purpoſe in hand, I have "tranſcribed it at large; for this being removed, all that follows, will fall of its own accord.

"1. Then, the dependence on, and ſubordination of leſſer Cities to the greater, is aſſerted as an "Apoſtolical inſtitution; Now becauſe I ſuppoſe the Doctor will not aſſert, nor doth intend

"a civil

"a civil dependance, and ſubordination of Cities, as ſuch, among themſelves, nor will a depen-
"dance as to counſel, advice, aſſiſtance, and the like ſupplies, which in their mutual communion,
"the leſſer Churches might receive from the greater and more eminent, ſerve his turn: but an Ec-
"cleſiaſtical dependance and ſubordination, ſuch as whereby many particular Churches, with inferi-
"our Officers reſiding in them, and with them, depended on, and were in ſubjection to ſome one "perſon of a ſuperiour order, commonly reſiding in ſome eminent City, and many of theſe Gover-
"nours of a ſuperiour order in the greater Cities were in ſubordination unto ſome one of high degree, "termed a Metropolitan, and all this by Apoſtolical inſtitution, is that which he aimeth at, which
"being a moſt gallant adventure, in a waking generation, we ſhall doubtleſs find him quitting him-
"ſelf like a man in his undertaking.

"2. Then he tells you that the queſtion about Moſaical Rites, and neceſſity of their obſervation, "was referred to Jeruſalem by the ſingle Church of Antioch. But how does the Doctor make good
"this firſt ſtep, which yet if he could, would do him no good at all? It is true, that Paul was "now come to Antioch, Chap. 14. 26. and alſo that he was brought on his way by the Church, "Chap. 15. 3. But yet that the brethren who were taught the Doctrine conteſted about, v. 1. were "only of the Church of Antioch (when it is moſt certain from the Epiſtles of Paul to the Galatians,
"Coloſſians, Romans, and others, that great diſturbance was raiſed far and wide, in all the Church"es of the Gentiles about this controverſie) nothing is offered. It ſeems indeed that their diſputes
"grew to the greateſt heights at Antioch, whither brethren from other parts and Churches did alſo
"come, whilſt Barnabas and Paul abode there, but that that ſingle Church referred the determining "of that controverſie to them at Jeruſalem, excluſively to others, the Doctor proves not. And it "is moſt evident, from the return of the anſwers ſent by the Apoſtles from Jeruſalem, ver. 23. that
"the reference was from all the Churches of the Gentiles, yea and all the ſcattered brethren, per"haps as yet not brought into the Church order, not only at Antioch, but alſo throughout Syria and
"Cilicia. It is then granted what he next obſerves, viz. that in the anſwer returned from Jeruſalem, "with them at Antioch, thoſe in Syria and Cilicia are joyned, the reaſon of it being manifeſt, name"ly their trouble about the ſame controverſie, being no leſs than theirs at Antioch. It is alſo gran"ted, that as Paul paſſed through the Cities, that he delivered them the decrees to keep, that were "ordained by the Apoſtles and Elders, cap. 16. 4. and that not only to the Churches of Syria, and
"Cilicia, which he left cap. 15. 41. but alſo to thoſe throughout Phrygia, and the Regions of *Gala-
"tia*, ver. 6. What now follows out of all this? What? but that Antioch by Apoſtolical inſtituti-"on was the Metropolitan See of all the Churches of Syria and Cilicia. Good Doctor do not be angry
"but tell us how this may be proved. Why doubtleſs it was ſo; as Antioch belonged to the Metro"politan Church at Jeruſalem, as he told us out of Philo (who was excellently acquainted with "Apoſtolical inſtitutions) what Jeruſalem was to the whole Church and Nation of the Jews, while
"the name of God was fixed there, we know; But what was the primitive ſtate of the Churches of "Jeſus Chriſt, made of Jews and Gentiles, tied neither to City, or Mountain, I muſt be par"doned if I cannot find the Doctor making any tender of manifeſting or declaring. The reaſons of "referring this controverſie unto a determination at Jeruſalem, the Holy Ghoſt acquaints us with "Acts 15. 2. That we have no need of this Metropolitical figment, to inform us in it. And
"now if we will not, not only ſubmit to Dioceſan Biſhops, but alſo reverence the grave Metropo-
"litans, ſtanding upon ſuch clear Apoſtolical inſtitution, It is fit that all the world ſhould count us
"the arranteſt Schiſmaticks that ever lived ſince Pope Boniface his time. The ſumm then of this "doubty argument for the Apoſtolical inſtitution of Metropolitans (that none might ever more dare "to call Dioceſans into queſtion hereafter) is this; Paul who was converted about the third or "fourth year of Caligula, five or ſix years after the aſcenſion of Chriſt, having with great ſucceſs for "three years preached the Goſpel, went up to Jeruſalem with Barnabas, upon the perſecution raiſed
"againſt him at Damaſcus, Acts 9. 22. whence returning to the work, he went firſt to Tarſus, Acts
"9. 30. thence to Antioch, where he abode one whole year, Acts 11. 25, 26. and was then ſent
"to Jeruſalem with the collections for the Saints, about the fourth year of Claudius, ver. 30. thence "returning again to Antioch, he was ſent out by the command of the Holy Ghoſt more eminent"ly, and peculiarly than formerly for the converſion of the Gentiles, Acts 13. 1, 2, 3. in this under"taking in the ſpace of a year or two, he preached and gathered Churches (whereof expreſs men"tion is made) at Salamis, Acts 13. 5. in the Iſle of Paphos, ver. 6. at Perga in Pamphylia, ver. 13. at
"Antioch in Piſidia, ver. 14. at Iconium, cap. 14. 1. at Lyſtra and Derbe, ver. 6. and at Perga 26. in "all theſe places gathering ſome believers to Chriſt, whom before they returned to Antioch, he viſi-
"ted all over the ſecond time, and ſetled Elders in the ſeveral congregations, Chap. 14. 21, 22, 23.
"in this journey and travel for the propagation of the Goſpel, he ſeems in all places to have been fol"lowed almoſt at the heels, by the profeſſing Phariſees, who impoſed the neceſſity of the obſervati-
"on of Moſaical Ceremonies upon his new Converts; for inſtantly upon his return to Antioch, where "during his abſence, probably they had much prevailed, he falls into diſpute with them, Chap.
"15. 1. and that he was not concern'd in this controverſie, only upon the account of the Church of "Antioch, himſelf informs us, Gal. 2. 4. affirming that the falſe brethren, which cauſed thoſe diſ-
"putes and diſſenſions, crept in to ſpy out his liberty, in his preaching the Goſpel among the "Gentiles, ver. 2. that is in the places before mentioned, throughout a great part of Aſia. For the "appeaſing of this difference, and the eſtabliſhing of the Souls of the Diſciples, which were grie-
"vouſly perplexed with the impoſition of the Moſaical yoke, It is determined that the caſe ſhould be "reſolved by the Apoſtles, Acts 15. 2. partly becauſe of their authority in all the Churches, where"in thoſe, who contended with Paul, would be compelled to acquieſce, and partly becauſe thoſe Ju"daizing teachers pretended the commiſſion of the Apoſtles for the Doctrine they preached, as is "evident from the diſclaimure made by them, of any ſuch commiſſion or command, ver. 24. Upon "Pauls return from the aſſembly at Jeruſalem, wherein the great controverſie about Jewiſh Ceremo"nies was ſtated and determined, after he had in the firſt place delivered the decree and Apoſtoli-
"cal ſalutation by Epiſtle to the Church at Antioch, he goes with them alſo to the Churches in Syria

" and Cilicia, expreſſed in the letter by name, as alſo to thoſe in Pamphylia, Piſidia, Derbe, Lyſtra, " Iconium, &c. Chap. 16. 1, 2, 3, 4. and all the Churches which he had gathered and planted in his " travels through Aſia, whereunto he was commanded by the Holy Ghoſt, Acts 13. 1, 2. Things " being thus ſtated, it neceſſarily follows, that the Apoſtles had inſtituted Dioceſan and Metropolitan
" Biſhops. For though the Churches were ſo ſmall, and thin, and few in number, that ſeven years
" after this, may we believe our Doctor, the Apoſtles had not inſtituted or appointed any Elders or " Presbyters in them, viz. When Paul wrote his Epiſtle to the Philippians, which was when he was " Priſoner at Rome, as appears, cap. 1,7,13,14. cap. 4. 22. about the third year of Nero, yet that he " had fully built and ſetled the Hierarchical fabrick contended for, who once dares queſtion?

Audacia ---- Creditur à multis fiducia.

" But if this will not do, yet Ignatius hits the nail on the head, and is ready at hand to make good " whatſoever the Doctor will have him ſay, and his teſtimony takes up the ſence of the two next fol" lowing Sections, whereof the firſt is as follows.

" Hinc dicti Ignatiani ratio conſtat in Epiſtolâ ad Romanos, ubi ille Antiochiæ Epiſcopus ſe ὁ ἐν Συρίᾳ
" ἐκκλησίας ποιμένα, paſtorem Eccleſiæ quæ eſt in Syriâ appellet, cùm ad Antiochiam ſcil. ut ad Metropo-
" lin ſuam, tota Syria pertineret. Sic & Author Epiſtolæ ad Antiochenos, ἐκκλησίᾳ θεοῦ παροικούσῃ ἐν Συρίᾳ
" τῇ ἐν Ἀντιοχείᾳ eam inſcribens, totam Syriam ejus παροικίαν eſſe concludit.

" But yet I fear the Doctor will find he hath need of other weapons, and other manner of Aſſiſtance " to make good the cauſe he hath undertaken. The words of Ignatius in that Epiſtle to the Romans
" are μνημονεύεσθε ἐν τῇ ἐυχῇ ὑμῶν ὁ ἐν Συρίᾳ ἐκκλησίας ἥτις ἀντ' ἐμοῦ ποιμένι χρῆται τῷ κυρίῳ: Becauſe he re" commends to them that particular Church in Syria, which by his impriſonment was deprived of its " Paſtor, therefore without doubt he was a Metropolitical Archbiſhop. Tityre tu patulæ, &c.

" But the Doctor is reſolved to carry his cauſe, and therefore being forſaken of all fair and honeſt " means, from whence he might hope for aſſiſtance or ſucceſs, he tries (as Saul the Witch at " Endor) the counterfeit, ſpurious title, of a counterfeit Epiſtle to the Antiochians, to ſee if that " will ſpeak any comfortable words, for his relief or no. And to make ſure work, he cauſes this " Gentleman ſo to ſpeak, as if he intended to make us believe that Syria was in Antioch, not An- " tioch in Syria, as in ſome remote parts of the world, they ſay they inquire whether London be in " England, or England in London; What other ſence can be made of the words as by the Doctor
" tranſcribed? ἐκκλησίᾳ θεοῦ παροικούσῃ ἐν Συρίᾳ τῇ ἐν Ἀντιοχείᾳ, To the Church of God dwelling in " Syria which is in Antioch: now if this be ſo, I ſhall confeſs it is poſſible we may be in more errors
" than one, and that we much want the learned Doctors aſſiſtance for our information; the words
" themſelves, as they are uſed by the worſhipful writer of that Epiſtle, will ſcarce furniſh us with " this learned and rare notion, they are at length, Ἰγνάτιος ὁ καὶ Θεοφόρος (for ſo he firſt opens his mouth " with a lye) ἐκκλησίᾳ ἠλεημένῃ ὑπὸ θεοῦ, ἐκλελεγμένῃ ὑπὸ Χριστοῦ παροικούσῃ ἐν Συρίᾳ, καὶ σπόρῳ Χριστοῦ ἐπω-" νυμίαν λαβούσῃ τῇ ἐν Ἀντιοχείᾳ, What is here more expreſſed, than that the latter paſſage, in An- " tioch, is reſtrictive of what went before, was ſpoken of its reſidence in Syria, with reference to " the name of Chriſtian, firſt given to the Diſciples in that place, I know not; and therefore " it is moſt certain that the Apoſtles inſtituted Metropolitan Archbiſhops, ὅπερ ἔδει δεῖξαι.

3. The large tranſcripts of the Latin ſections being the foundation of his whole inſuing diſcourſes, it is a little neceſſary they ſhould be made intelligible to all, to whom the confutation of them is addreſt: This I ſhall be content to do for him; and the plain Engliſh is this.

4. According to the image of the civil government among the Jews, and the like again in their Temple (forementiond) the Apoſtles appear to have diſpoſed of Churches every where, and in all their Plantations to have conſtituted a ſubordination and dependance of the Churches in the inferiour Cities, to thoſe in the Chief or Metropoles. An example of this we have in the ſtory of the Acts, concerning Syria and Cilicia, and the ſeveral Cities thereof, in relation to Antioch the Metropolis; For when the queſtion Acts 15. 2. was referred and brought to Jeruſalem from the Church (peculiarly) of Antioch, Cap. 14. 26. and 15. 3. and the Decree of the Council returned to them by whom the queſtion was propoſed, i. e. to the Church of Antioch, ver. 22. yet in the Epiſtle in which that decree was contained, we find the brethren through Syria and Cilicia, i. e. all the Chriſtians of that Province, to be expreſſed and joyned with thoſe of Antioch, ver. 23. And after, when that Decretal Epiſtle was delivered to the Church of Antioch, ver. 30. Paul and Silas went over Syria and Cilicia, ver. 41, 42. and as they went, they delivered to every City the Decrees of the Council, c. 16. 4. which is an evidence, that the Churches of thoſe Cities, related either immediately to Antioch, or, as Antioch it ſelf did to Jeruſalem, and were in ſubordination to it, as to the principal Metropolis, of ſo wide a Province, according to that of Philo, that Jeruſalem was in his time the Metropolis not of Judea alone, but of many other Regions, in reſpect of the Colonies, which it ſent out of the Jews that dwelt in them, naming Syria and Cilicia and divers others.

5. What is here ſaid, may be divided into two branches, one concerning the Cities of Syria as relating to Antioch, the other concerning Antioch it ſelf and other Cities, relating to Jeruſalem: The latter is mentioned incidentally; the former is it, which was propoſed for the example to teſtifie the Apoſtles diſtributions, and the plain ſtory of the Acts ſeemed to me to manifeſt it fully, that the Churches of the inferiour Cites of Syria, &c. related to Antioch as to the Metropolis; And the matter alſo being farther clear by all Eccleſiaſtick writers, which make Antioch the Metropolis of Syria, I gave a taſte thereof out of Ignatius's Epiſtle to the Romans, who being the known Biſhop of Antioch, ſetled there by the Apoſtles, calls himſelf Paſtor (as elſewhere Biſhop) of the Church in Syria. And ſo the Ancient writer of the Epiſtle to the Antiochians under Ignatius's name, (but none of thoſe which we receive from Polycarp's collection) hath theſe words in his Inſcription, Ἐκκλησίᾳ θεοῦ παροι-κούσῃ ἐν Συρίᾳ τῇ ἐν Ἀντιοχείᾳ, to the Church of God which is at Antioch, lying together in Syria, making Syria to be the παροικία or Province, of which Antioch was the Metropolis.

The

The ſame is after manifeſted of other chief Cities, Rome, Alexandria, Gortyna in Crete, and the ſeven Churches of Aſia, and the plain words of the three Councils forementioned, which devolve the whole buſineſs of the rights of Metropoles to their firſt plantations. And of all theſe there is not one word replied, ſave only what concerns Rome and Alexandria. To thoſe two, we ſhall come in the next Section, But in this I am to conſider what he hath to object to the ſeveral proofs concerning the Church of Antioch, being as I conceive it manifeſt, a Metropolitical Church in the Apoſtles times. 6.

And firſt it ſeems I muſt define, what I mean by this dependence and ſubordination of inferiour Churches to their Metropolis. And I ſhall do it, in my own words, not in his, for they are very obſcure; 1. I mean by inferiour Churches, the ſeveral Churches in the ſeveral leſſer Cities with the Region adjoyning, adminiſtred and governed each of them by the Biſhop of each ſuch leſſer City-Church, and his officers under him. 2. By the Metropolis, I mean the Church of the chief City of that Region or Province; and ſuch, ſay I, was the Church of Antioch in reſpect of Syria. 3. By the ſubordination and dependence of the inferiour to the Metropolis, I mean not any inferiority of order and dignity, nor a dependence only as to counſel and advice and mutual Communion, but an inferiority of power in many things, which the Apoſtles left not to the Biſhops of the inferiour Cities, but reſerved to the Metropolitans. To this purpoſe the 34*th Apoſtolick Canon* is clear, Τὸς ἐπισκόπους ἑκάστου ἔθνους εἰδέναι χρὴ τὸν ἐν αὐτοῖς πρῶτον, καὶ ἡγεῖσθαι αὐτὸν ὡς κεφαλὴν, the Biſhops of every Nation muſt know their Primate, (ἤτοι μητροπολίτου Ἀρχιερέα, ſaith Zonaras) and account him as the head of them; and the powers that thus belong to him, are known in the ancient Councils by the title of πρεσβεῖα privileges and preeminencies, which are proper to ſuch, and for which even immemorial and Apoſtolical tradition and cuſtom is vouched by them. Such as receiving accuſations againſt, and appeals from inferiour Biſhops, ordaining of them, as Titus is appointed to do through Crete, and as the ſixth Canon of Nice ſaith, that he that is made Biſhop without the Metropolitan, ſhall not be deemed a Biſhop; For this I again refer the Reader to the Diſcourſe of Schiſm, pag. 60, &c. and there to that ninth Canon of the Council of Antioch, the ſame in effect with the 34*th Apoſtolical Canon* forementioned, where the Biſhops of inferiour Cities are interdicted doing, without the Metropolitan, any thing which is there ſtiled περιττὸν, i. e. (as is there explain'd) wherein more Churches than one are concerned equally; The Biſhops power extending to the adminiſtration of affairs in his own Dioceſe, ὅσα τῇ ἀνῆκε παροικίᾳ ἐπιδάλλει, whatſoever belongs to his Dioceſe, ſay both thoſe Canons; but things of a more foreign nature, which belong not to the particular Biſhop, ratione officii, ἃ εἰς κοινὴν ἀφορᾷ τὴν ἐκκλησίας κατάστασιν, which reſpect the common ſtate of the Church (as Zonaras interprets περιττὸν) being reſerved and pertaining to the care of the Metropolitan. 7.

This, I ſuppoſe, ſufficiently expreſſes, what ſubordination I mean, the very ſame which the moſt Ancient Canons of the Univerſal Church expreſs to be due from the Biſhop to the Metropolitan; and then I ſhall not trouble my ſelf to inquire what he means by [ſome eminent Cities, and, Governours of a ſuperiour order in greater Cities] which I ſhould have thought had been Metropoles and Metropolitans, had I not found them all placed by him in ſubordination to ſome one of high degree termed a Metropolitan.] And by that Character being aſſured, that by the former he muſt mean no more but Biſhops of inferiour Cities, I muſt be content not to underſtand the myſtery, why they ſhould yet be ſtiled eminent and greater Cities, and ſo briefly paſs to the next thing. 8.

Secondly then, he will examine my plea from that paſſage in the Acts, cap. 15. and the thing he diſlikes, is, my making the queſtion ſent for reſolution to Jeruſalem, to be referred to them by the ſingle Church of Antioch. This, ſaith he, I do not prove, though if I could prove it, it would do me no good at all. And yet, to ſee, in the proceſs of the diſcourſe, he ſeverally grants all the reſt, And only deſires me not to be angry, but to prove that Antioch by Apoſtolical inſtitution was the Metropolitan See of all the Churches of Syria and Cilicia, which is in effect to deny, or bid me prove the concluſion, without offering to deny above one propoſition, which therefore, I muſt aſſume, will, if it be proved, infer the concluſion, and ſo do me all the good, which I pretend to expect from it. 9.

Now truly, that this queſtion thus refetred to Jeruſalem, was at this time, Acts 15. 1. referred to it, by the ſingle Church of Antioch (but that, as Metropolis of all Syria) I thought ſufficiently proved by the text it ſelf firſt cited, cap. 14. 26. and 15. 3. In the former of theſe places, the Apoſtles were come to Antioch, as that ſignifies Antioch the great (to difference it from another City of that name, v. 21. the ſame which is by Pliny placed in Piſidia, as here alſo it is, ver. 24.) that City peculiarly where the Scripture ſaith they were firſt called Chriſtians, and whereof Euodius and Ignatius were conſtituted Biſhops by Peter and Paul, one of the Jewiſh, the other of the Gentile Chriſtians. And being there, they gathered the Church together, ver. 27. that I ſuppoſe to be the Church of the City of Antioch, (or if any more, thoſe certainly as ſome way relating and ſubordinate to Antioch, which again infers Antioch to be their Metropolis) Then of Antioch it follows that there they abode, v. 28. And then cap. 15. 1. certain men, which came down from Judea, infuſed the Judaical ritual doctrine into the brethren; who are thoſe, but the Chriſtians of Antioch, where then they were? And upon the diſpute had with thoſe Judaizers, v. 2. they determined, (that ſure, muſt ſtill be the Church of Antioch peculiarly) that Paul and Barnabas ſhould go to Jeruſalem about this queſtion, and then ver. 3. they are brought on their way by the Church, What Church is this ſtill, but the Church cap. 14. 27. i. e. the Church of Antioch? 10.

This was my way of proof (deſigned to lay the foundation of that argument of Antioch's being the Metropolitical See) that this queſtion was referred to Jeruſalem from the Church peculiarly of Antioch. And I muſt hereby think it competently proved, unleſs ſome weak part be diſcovered in it, or ſome abſurdity or repugnancy be objected to it; None of which, I ſee, is here done. 11.

For 1. as to that which is offered at, by his ſaying that I have not proved that the brethren that taught the doctrine conteſted about, ver. 1. were only of the Church of Antioch, ſure that is of no force. For as I doubt not but the ſame doctrine might be, and was infuſed into many others in Galatia, Coloſſe, yea, and Rome it ſelf, as he truly ſaith; and never conceived that the poiſon was confined to, or incloſed within Antioch; ſo all that is needful to my turn, is this, that at this point of time noted Acts 15. 1. 12.

the Judaizers pretensions were solicited at Antioch, and that on that particular occasion of the dispute between Paul and them, the question was by them peculiarly referred to Jerusalem. And that sure might be done by them alone, though others far distant, as well as they, either at that or some other time, were disturb'd with the like scruples.

13. That which the Prefacer here confesses, that the disputes grew to the greatest height in Antioch, is a very sufficient account in this matter, why Antioch peculiarly should send up to Jerusalem about this question, when others, who were not so much concern'd in it, did not do so; And moreover the convenience of such Messengers, Paul and Barnabas, who could say so much, from the success they had had among the Gentiles, toward the deciding of the question, might both qualifie and incite them to do it, rather than any others at this time; And so still there is more reason why I should conceive the question referred to Jerusalem, peculiarly or alone by Antioch (and not so by Colosse, or Rome, or Galatia) and no appearance of any thing yet produced to the contrary.

14. Secondly, He adds, then to Antioch brethren from other parts and Churches also came, whilst Paul and Barnabas abode there. To what purpose this is urged by him I know not, but this I know, that there is no mention in that story of any such, but only of those which ver. 1. came from Judea, and taught the necessity of Judaizing. And of them 'tis not probable that they joyned with the Antiochians to refer the question to Jerusalem; or if they did, I am sure the Decretal Epistle from the Council was not addrest to them, but to the Gentile Christians, ver. 19. 23. and takes no other notice of them, than as of seducers, ver. 24. And so still it appears not of any, that they thus referred the question, but only of the Antiochians.

15. Thirdly, Whereas he concludes it most evident from the Council's answer, ver. 23. that the reference is made from all the Churches of the Gentiles, if he mean it of all other Gentile Churches, beside Syria, and Cilicia, as Phrygia, Galatia, &c. Which he after mentions, and Rome, and Colosse, which before he had mentioned, there is no appearance of truth in it, the Text saying expresly, that it was sent to the brethren of the Gentiles in Antioch, and Syria, and Cilicia; But if he means it of all not absolutely, but all of Syria and Cilicia, and not only of Antioch, then as that is the very thing observed by me, to prove that Antioch was the Metropolis of Syria and Cilicia, so certainly it is far from evidencing the contrary. I grant, nay, I make it matter of observation, that when the Question was sent to Jerusalem by Antioch peculiarly, the Decretal Answer of the Council is addrest, not only to Antioch, but also to all the Christians of Syria and Cilicia; and what reason can there be for that, when the Question was not, as far as appears, proposed by them, but only this, that those Regions depended on, and related to that Church, from which the Question was sent, i.e. to Antioch? which if it be but possible (much more, if by other evidence, that out of Ignatius, it be proved to be more than possible, even perfectly true) it must thence follow, that the argument drawn from the Council's answer being addrest to Syria and Cilicia, as well as to Antioch, will no way conclude that the Question was referr'd by all those, when the Text, which is the only ground of affirming ought in this matter, mentions none but the Church of Antioch in the referring of the question, and this other reason is so ready at hand, for the mention of more, in their giving answer to it.

16. Fourthly; Whereas he adds, that the Apostles delivered these Decrees, not only to the Churches of Syria and Cilicia, which Paul left, c. 15. 41. but also to those throughout Phrygia, and the Regions of Galatia, ver. 6. 1. 'tis no where said, that they did so in Phrygia, and the regions of Galatia; for the mention of the delivering the Decrees, being ver. 4. no way belongs to Phrygia and Galatia, which are not mention'd till ver. 6. nor can be farther extended than to Derbe and Lystra forementioned ver. 1. which we know were Cities of Lycaonia, Acts 14. 6. and neither of Phrygia nor Galatia. Nay, 2. it is not necessary, that the delivering of the Decrees mentioned chap. 16. 4. should belong to all the Cities which had by that time been mention'd: S. Luke's words will be true, that as they went through the Cities, they delivered them the Decrees to keep] though it should be affirmed, that they delivered them only to the Churches of Syria and Cilicia, which they are said to confirm, cap. 15. 41. as here to establish in the Faith, cap. 16. 5. But these two things having been said only εἰς ἔνδειξιν, to shew how far the Prefacer is from speaking demonstratively, when he is censuring others for want of that: In the third place, I shall acknowledge it very possible, and most probable, that S. Paul did deliver these Decrees of Jerusalem to other Churches beyond Syria and Cilicia, where he came, particularly to the Churches of Lycaonia, Derbe and Lystra, yea, and to the Churches of Phrygia and Galatia, which no way disturbs my pretensions, because as Paul that planted those Churches, might reasonably have care to uphold them in the truth, so in the latitude of Philo's speech, all these, even Phrygia and Galatia also, in respect of the Jewish inhabitants dispersed among them, might in the secular account refer to Jerusalem as their grand Metropolis.

17. For so saith Philo, it was the Metropolis of most, whither it had sent Colonies, naming Ægypt, Phœnice, Syria, and Cœlosyria, and τὰς πόρρω διοικημένας, others far distant, Pamphylia, Cilicia, and a great deal of Asia as as far as Bithynia and Pontus (and Lycaonia, &c. are sure within this distance, nearer to Jerusalem than some here named) and then by the contemperation we speak of, of the Ecclesiastick to the Civil distributions, why should not they all relate to the Metropolitical Church at Jerusalem also?

18. And S. Paul's delivering them these δόγματα, decrees, to keep, and doing it not upon his own authority, as his γνώμη, his private Apostolical judgment, but as κεκριμένα ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀποστόλων καὶ πρεσβυτέρων τῶν ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ, judged, and conciliarly determined by the Council at Jerusalem, this sure is an evidence that S. Paul, that planted these Churches, set them in subordination to, and dependance on the grand Metropolis of those parts, that at Jerusalem: Which is the thing I was to prove, that these distributions were made by the Apostles, that planted Christianity.

19. But then it must still be remembred, that the Cities of Lycaonia and Phrygia, and Galatia were not named in the Councils Epistle, but only Syria and Cilicia, and accordingly this of c. 16. 4. is no proof, I acknowledge, that these Churches did belong, and were subordinate to Antioch: That was to be proved, not by this passage c. 16. 4. (thus understood) but from the inscription of the reponſe of the Council to the brethren of Antioch, and Syria, and Cilicia, as it was before explained and cleared, and farther from Ignatius his ſtiling himſelf Paſtor of Syria, who, we know, was no otherwiſe ſo, than as he was Biſhop of Antioch, the Metropolis of Syria. And ſo ſtill I hope the concluſion now regularly follows out of theſe premiſes, there ſhortly ſet down, but here more largely evidenced to infer, that Antioch was by Apoſtolical inſtitution the Metropolitan See of all the Churches of Syria, and Cilicia. And ſo ſure I have no temptation to be angry, nor ever diſcovered any part of that paſſion to the Prefacer, and ſo needed not have been beſought, ſo affectionately, not to fall into it at this time, when there is no rub in my way, no difficulty to oppoſe, or provoke the leaſt degree of it, in the moſt rageful.

What follows by way of ſcoff at the citation from Philo, as if I took him for a perſon well acquainted with Apoſtolical Inſtitutions, might alſo, as now appears, very well have been ſpared. I had brought in that Teſtimony ſeaſonably enough ſect. 6. when I was ſpeaking of the exemplar among the Jews, and by it ſhewed that Jeruſalem was the Metropolis to all thoſe regions in the Jewiſh account, and now all that I concluded in reference to that citation, was, that Antioch was in the number, and then the appeal which Antioch made to the Council at Jeruſalem (and not the Teſtimony of Philo) was the argument on which I inferr'd the Concluſion, that the Church of Antioch was now ſubordinate to the Church or Council at Jeruſalem (which if it were, muſt be by the Apoſtles inſtitution) as all Syria, in Philo, was to the Sanhedrim at Jeruſalem. 20.

To which I ſhall now farther add: If it were not ſo, why did the Church ſend up Paul and Barnabas thither? Why did not Paul, who planted Chriſtianity there, finally determine the controverſie? Why did the πρεσβύτεροι or Elders, whoſoever they were (the Biſhops of Judea, I ſuppoſe, but it will be much more ſtrange, if they were but the Presbyters of Jeruſalem) joyn with the Apoſtles in making Decrees, whereby thoſe of Antioch, and all through Syria, ſhould be bound, if all this while the Church of Jeruſalem were not their Metropolis, and ſo had no manner of power over them? 21.

As to that which he ſaith, that the Holy Ghoſt, Acts 15. 2. acquaints us with the reaſons of referring this controverſie to a determination at Jeruſalem, ſo that he hath no need of this (as he will ſtile it) Metropolitical figment, to inform him in it: I confeſs I cannot reach him in it, for all that that verſe informs us, is, that upon occaſion of that diſpute between Paul and Barnabas on the one ſide, and the Judaizers that came from Judea, on the other ſide, the Church determined to ſend up to Jeruſalem about this Queſtion. This only informs us of the occaſion of referring the queſtion, whereon there was συζήτησις οὐκ ὀλίγη, no ſmall diſpute, ſuch, as it ſeems, they could not ſo convincingly decide within themſelves; but this renders no account, why they ſent and referr'd it to Jeruſalem peculiarly, and not to any other Church, unleſs we here ſuppoſe, as I do, that Jeruſalem was lookt upon as their Mother-Church. 22.

What reaſon it is which the Prefacer finds in that ſecond verſe, or by what medium it comes to have the force of a reaſon, he is not here pleaſed to communicate, but only ſaith, the Holy Ghoſt hath there acquainted us with the reaſon. But in the next page he is more liberal, gives us the reaſons of their ſending to Jeruſalem, partly becauſe of the authority of the Apoſtles (which were there) in all the Churches, wherein thoſe, who contended with Paul, would be compell'd to acquieſce; partly becauſe thoſe Judaizing Teachers pretended the commiſſion of the Apoſtles for their doctrine. 23.

As for the firſt of theſe, I ſuppoſe that, taken alone, cannot be the reaſon, becauſe there being but two Apoſtles there at that time, Peter and John, 1. there might be ſo many in ſome other City. 2. Paul and Barnabas being before this ſeparated by Gods command to the Apoſtolick Office, were in this reſpect of equal authority with them, and ſo in this ſence the words of S. Paul have truth, in relation to them, Gal. 2. 6. οὐδὲν ἐμοὶ προσανέθεντο, they added nothing to me. 3. The reference is made Acts 15. 2. not to the Apoſtles alone, but to the Apoſtles and Elders, i. e. the whole Council at Jeruſalem at this time. 4. The cauſe of the reference was not only the contention of thoſe who came out of Judea, but the Antiochian Chriſtians being taught, i.e. ſeduced by them, c. 15. 1. and accordingly the Decree reſpected them peculiarly. And ſo this firſt reaſon is of no force. 24.

For the ſecond; 'tis true indeed, and 'tis affirm'd ver. 1. that certain men, which came down from Jeruſalem, taught the brethren, and ſaid, except ye be circumciſed, ye cannot be ſaved, and that may ſeem to be ſet down as the reaſon of their making this reference to Jeruſalem, becauſe the men came from Judea, which made it fit to inquire, whether the Apoſtles and Council there were of theſe mens opinions: But then even this will very little advance his, or prejudice our pretenſions: For this goes upon a ground which will be uſeful, not diſadvantageous to me, viz. that if theſe certain men, which came from Judea, had been truly ſent, or commiſſionated by the Church of Jeruſalem, then this would have been of ſome force at Antioch (which it could not be, if Antioch were perfectly Independent from Jeruſalem) and accordingly in the Epiſtle from the Council, ver. 24. we have theſe words; For as much as we have heard, that certain, which went out from us, have troubled you, &c. to whom we gave no ſuch commandment or commiſſion (ſo διεστειλάμεθα literally ſignifies) It ſeem. d good unto us, &c. 25.

Where it is apparent, that any ſuch former commiſſion being diſclaim'd, now they ſend their expreſs decree, not their bare counſel, or advice, or aſſiſtance, which the Prefacer would allow, but, I ſay, a δόγμα, a conciliary, dogmatical definition, by which, as it appears by the conſequents, all were deemed to be obliged, which were within the circuit, of which Jeruſalem in the Jewiſh account was the Metropolis. And ſo ſtill, this reaſon, if any ſuch be diſcernable, Acts 15. 2. confirms my aſſertion inſtead of invalidating it. 26.

That which next follows in the Prefacer, as the ſumm of my argument, is very far from being what he ſaith it is, either my argument, or the ſumm of it: My argument it is not, being quite a diſtant thing, a recapitulation of the whole ſtory of S. Paul from his converſion to his coming this time to Jeruſalem from Antioch, whereas I collected nothing from any part of the whole ſtory, but only from this particular, the reference from Antioch to Jeruſalem. And then, what is ſo much larger than the particulars diffuſively taken, is ſure very unlikely to be the ſumm of them. And yet 'tis a little ſtrange, that that which is ſo over large a recitation, ſhould chuſe to omit the one thing, 27.

whereon the whole force of my argument lies, i. e. either the reference made to Jeruſalem from Antioch, to infer the dependence and ſubordination of Antioch to Jeruſalem, or the ſtile of the Epiſtle from the Council, taking in Syria and Cilicia, as well as Antioch, when the reference had been made, and the Meſſengers ſent from Antioch peculiarly.

28. And when he ſaith, that for the appeaſing of the difference it was determined, that the caſe ſhould be reſolved by the Apoſtles, that ſure is unduly ſuggeſted; for c. 15. 2. the reference is not made either to the Apoſtles indefinitely, whereſoever they were, or to the Apoſtles that were at Jeruſalem at that time, and to none but ſuch; but in expreſs words, to Jeruſalem to the Apoſtles and Elders, comprehending under the word Apoſtles, James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, which was none of the twelve, and yet pronounceth the decree, ἐγω κρίνω, I judge, or, my ſentence is, v. 19. and by the word Elders, as I ſuppoſe, all the Biſhops of Judæa, ſitting in Council with him: And ſo ſtill this is to the Church of Jeruſalem, as the Metropolis of Judæa, and, in an eminent manner, of Syria alſo, and not only to the Apoſtles alone, or peculiarly to be reſolved by them.

29. The Prefacer here in his haſte ſaith, that Paul goes with the decrees to the Churches in Pamphylia, Piſidia, and by name Iconium, citing c. 16. 1, 2, 3, 4. and all the Churches which he had gathered through Aſia. Whereas 1. there is no mention of Piſidia, or Pamphylia, in thoſe verſes (nor ſince, c. 14. 24. for what is ſaid of Mark's departing from them from Pamphylia, c. 15. 38. belongs to the former ſtory) nor of any City but of Derbe and Lyſtra, which are known to be in Lycaonia. Secondly; That there is no mention of their paſſing through Iconium, nor of the very name of the City, but once incidentally, that Timothy was well reported of by the brethren that were at Iconium, ver. 2. Thirdly; That for Aſia, the Text ſaith expreſly, ver. 6. that they were forbidden of the Holy Ghoſt to preach the word in Aſia, and that therefore when they had gone though Phrygia and Galatia, they came to Myſia, &c. So that he could not well have multiplied more miſtakes in ſo few words, and all to make up his hypotheſis, that the Decree of Jeruſalem had no more reference to Antioch, and the Regions, whereof that was the Metropolis, than to all thoſe other Churches, which yet if it be extended no farther than to Aſia it ſelf, will by Philo's words be interpretable of the Province ſubordinate to Jeruſalem.

30. What remains to this head, is made up of contumely and reproach of my audaciouſneſs, with reflexion only upon a ſuppoſition of mine, that after this time the Churches were ſmall, and thin, and few in number, and ſo that of Philippi was ſeven years after this, which is deſigned as a prejudice to my hypotheſis concerning Metropolitan Churches ſo early. But to the former of theſe, the reproaches, I have nothing to return but my thanks; to the latter I have anſwered formerly, that the ſmallneſs of the number of Chriſtians nothing hinders the dependence of one Church upon another. See Vindic. to Lond. Miniſt. chap. 1. ſect. 16. numb. 14. And ſo much for the evidence out of the Acts.

31. Next he comes to my proof out of Ignatius, who, ſay I, being Biſhop of Antioch doth yet in the Epiſtle to the Romans, call himſelf Paſtor of the Church of Syria. The words wherein he ſo ſtiles himſelf, he ſets down in the Greek, and inſtead of tranſlating them (as they ſhould be tranſlated) Remember in your prayers the Church of Syria, which inſtead of me hath Chriſt for their Paſtor (viz. now that he was carried from them to his Martyrdom) he takes advantage of the Readers unskilfulneſs in that language, and forms my proof into a ridiculous argument, Becauſe he recommends to them that particular Church in Syria, which by his impriſonment was deprived of its Paſtor, therefore without doubt he was a Metropolitical Biſhop; and then is very pleaſant with his

32. But would not a little ſadneſs and juſtice have done better, and then it had been moſt clear that Ignatius his ſaying, that Chriſt was now their Paſtor inſtead of him, muſt neceſſarily imply, that he was formerly their Paſtor; and whoſe Paſtor was he? expreſly ὁ ἐν Συρίᾳ ἐκκλησίας, the Paſtor of the Church in Syria; where it is evident, that the whole Church in Syria, not that particular Church only of Antioch, is by him ſuppoſed to be under his Paſtoral care, the ſame thing being before in the ſame Epiſtle expreſt in words no way liable to miſunderſtanding, ὁ ἐπίσκοπος Συρίας καλὴν ἔσχεν ὁ Θεὸς, God hath vouchſafed or dignified the Biſhop of Syria, calling himſelf Biſhop of Syria, and ſo not of Antioch only. This hath been formerly cleared againſt all exception, and need not be here farther repeated. Chap. 6. Sect. 1. n. 15.

33. There remains the teſtimony of the Author of the Epiſtle to the Antiochians, which I vouched not as the genuine writing of Ignatius, but only as an ancient Writer according with the genuine in this matter. Hence I am cried out on, as forſaken of all fair and honeſt means, and like Saul trying the Witch of Endor, &c. But this is but ordinary ſtile, a flouriſh of his Rhetorick, and need not ſtay us to conſider it; that which follows is more to the purpoſe, that I make this counterfeit ſpeak as if Syria were in Antioch, not Antioch in Syria, and he asks, What other ſence can be made of the words as by me tranſcribed, ἐκκλησίᾳ θεοῦ παροικούσῃ ἐν Συρίᾳ τῇ ἐν Ἀντιοχείᾳ, to the Church of God dwelling in Syria, which is in Antioch, and then triumphs in this diſcovery.

34. But certainly the Witch was not ſo contrary to a wiſe woman, the counterfeit author ſo perfect a changeling, as here he is ſet out to be. Certainly the Greek, as tranſcribed by me, lies thus in the conſtruction, ἐκκλησίᾳ θεοῦ τῇ ἐν Ἀντιοχείᾳ, to the Church of God which is at Antioch, with this farther denomination added to it, παροικούσῃ ἐν Συρίᾳ, adjacent, or lying together in Syria, or allowing them the ſame poſition in Engliſh, which they have in Greek, To the Church of God lying together in Syria, the Church, or, that which is at Antioch; but taking all the words together (of which I there only gave the abſtract) to the Church pitied by God, choſen by Chriſt, lying together in Syria, which firſt received the ſirname of Chriſtian, the Church which is at Antioch ---- And ſo he may diſcern it poſſible to make ſence of theſe words, a very little skill in that language being ſufficient to enable one to joyn τῇ with ἐκκλησίᾳ, the not very remote, as well as with Συρίᾳ, the immediate Antecedent. And ſo this leaves it clear as the day, 1. That Antioch was believed by that Author to be in Syria (not Syria in Antioch) and 2. That Syria was the παροικία, or Province belonging to Antioch the Metropolis; and that is a proof, as far as his authority will bear, that the Apoſtles inſtituted Metropolitans, and ſo of the very thing in earneſt, ὅπερ ἔδει δεῖξαι which was to be demonſtrated.

And

And if this authority were not so great as the former of the true Ignatius had been, yet, first, he was an ancient Writer, and so acknowledged; and, secondly, one that imitated ancient stile, and calls himself Ignatius, ὁ καὶ Θεοφόρος, the known title of Ignatius, by which he was condemn'd by Trajan; and so, though he feign'd a person, yet did it decently, and so testifies his opinion that this was the stile of Ignatius's days, or else would not have discovered himself by using it. Thirdly, his testimony added to Ignatius's, and in concord with it, will not (certainly) take off the force from Ignatius's. And fourthly, if this be finally reprobated, there be several more behind of Scripture and the Ancients concerning Gortyna in Crete, and seven Metropolitical Churches in Asia, and a reference to the Archbishop of Armagh's discourse on that subject, and passages collected out of the Canons of the Ancient Universal Church, and no one word offer'd to be replied to all this; which makes it very impertinent to go about farther to confirm this assertion, which else I might do, and for brevities sake refer the Reader to Frigevillæus Gautius, Par. 1. c. 4. the subject of which Chapter is, Primates esse jure Divino, That Primates are by Divine right. 35.

SECT. VII.

Ἐφέσιοι ἀπὸ Σμύρνης. Τόπος χωρὶς Ῥωμαίων. Casaubon's Censure of that phrase.

NExt he comes to examine Sect. 11. and that one small testimony from the Inscription of Ignatius's Epistle to the Romans. Before I proceed to which, I shall confess to the Prefacer, that he hath mist an opportunity of great rejoycing: For the truth is, in the end of sect. 10. there lay a passage, wherein though I affirm'd not, but only past my conjecture (crediderim, &c.) yet I now, by a last reading over of Ignatius's Epistles, discern my self to have mistaken: For in the Epistle to the Magnesians, Ἐφέσιοι ἀπὸ Σμύρνης, the Ephesians from Smyrna, are not, as I conceived it possible, the Smyrnæans called Ephesians, because Ephesus was the prime Metropolis; but the Ephesians, which together with some of the Church of Smyrna, were sent with him from Smyrna, such as Burrhus mention'd in the Epistle to the Smyrnæans, who appears to be a Deacon of the Church of Ephesus in the Epistle to them, and yet is said to be sent with him by the Smyrnæans, ἅμα Ἐφεσίοις τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς ὑμῶν, with other of the Ephesians also. This I desire the Reader now to correct in the Dissertations, by blotting out that last part of * Sect. 10. which concerns that matter. 1. Pag. 9. Pag. 18. Pag. 9. * Diss. 4. c. 5.

I come now to his view of the Testimony from the Epistle to the Romans, and it is set down in these words; 2.

"But to make all sure, the learned Doctor will not so give over, but Sect. 11. he adds, that the "Epigraph of the Epistle to the Romans grants him the whole case, that is, ἐκκλησία ἥτις προκάθηται "ἐν τόπῳ χωρὶς Ῥωμαίων, ex qua (saith he) Ecclesia Romana ejusque Episcopo super Ecclesiis omnibus in "urbicariâ regione, aut provinciâ Romanâ contentis, præfecturam competiisse videmus. 3.

"Although I have spent some time in the consideration of mens conjectures of those suburbicarian "Churches, that (as is pretended) are here pointed to, and the rise of the Bishop of Romes juris- "diction over those Churches, in a correspondency to the civil Government of the Prefect of the "City, yet so great a Critick in the Greek tongue as Casaubon Exerc. 16. ad An. 150. having pro- "fessed that expression, ἐν τόπῳ χωρὶς Ῥωμαίων, to be barbarous, and unintelligible, I shall not con- "tend about it. For the presidency mentioned of the Church in, or at Rome, that it was a presiden- "cy of jurisdiction, and not only in eminency of Faith and Holiness that is intended, the Doctor "thinks it not incumbent on him to prove: Those with whom he hath to do are of another mind; "although by this time some alteration might be attempted; yea, there was, as elsewhere shall be "shewed: And so much for Ignatius his Archiepiscopacy.

This Testimony it seems must be thrown off upon the one score of Isaac Casaubon's Censure, that the expression was barbarous and unintelligible: I must therefore examine his words, which I find Exerc. 16. sect. 150. though not ad Ann. 150. that whole book of Exercitations against Baronius extending no farther than the Life of Christ. 4.

Casaubon's words are these (speaking of Bellarmine's collection of the Roman domination from thence) Rogandi sunt ut barbaram locutionem prius nobis explicent, quam ullum ex iis verbis argumentum ducant, quæ nè ipsi quidem intelligant. They that endeavour to draw these words to this purpose, are to be intreated first to explain to us a barbarous expression, before they draw any argument from those words, which they themselves do not indeed understand. Here it is true that Casaubon saith of ἐν τόπῳ, that it is barbara locutio, but for the unintelligible, which the Prefacer adds, and which seems to be expresst in these words also, it is possible it may be a mistake. Isaac Casaubon conceived himself to have observed by many indications, that Cardinal Bellarmine understood no Greek; he calls him a little before, hominem Græcarum literarum prorsus ἀμύητον, a man utterly unskill'd in the Greek learning; adding, that all his works, especially that which he last wrote, demonstrate it. And why may not the [nè ipsi quidem intelligunt] be thus meant by him, that Bellarmine was very unfit to make collections out of a Greek passage, which 'twas certain he did not understand. So I am sure he had before said of him expresly, concerning the writings of Dionysius Areopagita, Est quidem ridicula planè res --- It is a very ridiculous thing for one that hath no Greek, to offer to judge of a Greek Author. Which being granted of that Cardinal, I should yet well have hoped, that the Prefacer, who hath so much Greek in this Preface, and very little of it translated, might himself have been able to understand such plain words (for, of the words it is, that Casaubon speaks, not of the full importance of them) ἥτις προκάθηται ἐν τόπῳ χωρὶς Ῥωμαίων, which presides in the place of the Region of the Romans. 5. Pag. 541.

But then, secondly, there will be little reason to doubt what the full sence also of these words is: For without disputing what Casaubon saith, that the word τόπος is not proper or vulgar stile, but in 6.

ſome reſpect barbarous, I ſhall yet ſuppoſe it put by Ignatius (being joyned with προκάθηται, preſidence) for the Latin ſedes, ſeat, or ſee, which [τόπος, place] will, without any forcing, ſignifie; as when the Gallican Church in their Epiſtle to Eleutherius, ſaith of Irenæus Archbiſhop of Lyons, εἰ γὰρ ἤδειμεν τόπον τινὶ δικαιοσύνην περιποιεῖσθαι, If we knew that place would purchaſe righteouſneſs to any, the meaning is, if his being Biſhop of ſo eminent a City and Province would commend him --- (and accordingly Peter Halloix would here have it read θρόνῳ, throne, or ſeat, but hath no Manuſcript to favour his conjecture) Nay, if we ſhall obſerve the ancient Latin forms, we ſhall have no reaſon farther to deem τόπος barbarous, than as it directly anſwers to the Latin uſage of locus, place; and that ſure may be allow'd Ignatius in an Epiſtle to the Romans: For in the ſecond Epiſtle of Anacletus to the Biſhops of Italy, we have theſe words, In capite Provinciarum, ipſis quoque in civitatibus vel locis noſtris Patriarchas vel Primates, &c. In the head of Provinces, and in our Cities or places, Patriarchs, or Primates were conſtituted. The authority of that Epiſtle may ſure be ſufficient to manifeſt the uſe of a word; and then, our City, and our place is all one, and that properly of a chief City or Metropolis, ſuch as here Rome is conteſted to be. And then the ſence will be as plain as the words intelligible, that the Church, to which that Epiſtle was addreſt, was the preſiding Church in the place, or ſeat of the region of the Romans, i. e. in the chief place, or ſeat, or City of that Region, commonly called the ſuburbicarian Region. And thus hath Jacobus Gottofredus, a learned Lawyer, and Critick, expreſt himſelf to underſtand it, meaning by the ſuburbicarian Region, all that in the civile notitiæ, was under the adminiſtration of the Prefect of the City of Rome, anſwerable to which circuit was the Primitive Province of the Roman Biſhop. And here being nothing offer'd againſt it, I have no occaſion to give farther anſwer: For as to that of Juriſdiction, what degree of that belonged to the Primate in every Province, over and above that which belonged to a Biſhop of an ordinary City and territory, that hath oft been ſpoken to already, and need not be again repeated or inlarged on.

Euſeb. lib. 5. c. 4.

7. In the cloſe he is pleaſed to add, that by this time (i. e. in Ignatius's time, who ſuffer'd in Trajan's time, and ſurvived S. John very little) ſome alteration was attempted; and if that were ſo meant by him, as to belong to the juriſdiction of the Church of Rome over other Churches, which the diſcourſe is upon, this truly might paſs for pretty ancient, being ſcarce diſtinguiſhable from Apoſtolical, and ſo if what was attempted, were attain'd alſo, 'twill be very like the yielding that, which I contended from that teſtimony.

SECT. VIII.

Alexandria a Patriarchate inſtituted by S. Mark. This proved and vindicated. The Eſſens in Alexandria, Chriſtians; Biſhops among them.

1. IN the next and laſt place, he will paſs his judgment on the evidence drawn from the ſtory of the Church of Alexandria, thus;

2. "The example of Alexandria is urged in the next place in theſe words, Idem de Alexandriâ, de "quâ Euſebius, Marcum ἐκκλησίας πρῶτον ἐπ' αὐτῆς Ἀλεξανδρείας συστήσασθαι, Eccleſias (in plurali) pri- "*mum in Alexandriâ inſtituiſſe. There is not any paſſage in any ancient "Author more clearly diſcovering the uncertainty of many things in Antiquity, than this pointed to "by the Doctor in Euſebius: For firſt, the ſending of Mark the Evangeliſt into Ægypt, and his "preaching there at Alexandria, what he had written in the Goſpel, is but a Report: Men ſaid ſo, "but what ground they had for their ſaying ſo, he relates not. And yet we know what a founda- "tion of many aſſertions, by following Writers, this rumor or report is made to be. 2. In the ve- "ry next words, the Author affirms, and inſiſts long upon it in the next Chapter, that Philo's book "περὶ τοῦ βίου τῶν Ἀσκητῶν was written concerning the Chriſtians converted by Mark's preaching at Alex- "andria, when it is notoriouſly known, that it treateth of the Eſſens, a Sect among the Jews, "amongſt whoſe obſervances many things were vain, ſuperſtitious, and fooliſh; unworthy to be "once applauded as the practice of any Chriſtian in thoſe days; that ſame Philo, as far as can be ga- "thered, living, and dying in the Jewiſh Religion, having been employed by them with an Apolo- "gy to Rome in the days of Caligula. But 3. ſuppoſe that Mark were at Alexandria, and preached "the Goſpel there, which is not improbable, and planted many Churches in that great and populous "City of Jews and Gentiles, and that as an Evangeliſt the care of thoſe Churches was upon him in a "peculiar manner; nay, and add farther, that after his death, as Hierom aſſures us, the Elders and "Presbyters of thoſe Churches choſe out one among themſelves to preſide in their Convocations and "meetings: If, I ſay all this be ſuppoſed, what will enſue? why then it is manifeſt that there was "fixed at Alexandria a Patriarchal Chair, and a Metropolitical Church, according to the appoint- "ment of Jeſus Chriſt by his Apoſtles, Si hoc non ſit probationum ſatis, neſcio quid ſit ſatis. If ſome "few Congregations live together in love and communion, and the fellowſhip of the Goſpel in a Ci- "ty, he is ſtark blind that ſees not that to be an Archbiſhops See. The reaſon is as clear as his in the "Comœdian, for the freedom of his Wife; Sy. Utinam Phrygiam uxorem meam unà mecum videam "liberam. Dem. Optimam mulierem quidem. Sy. Et quidem nepoti tuo, hujus filio, hodie primam mam- "mam dedit hæc. Dem. Hercle, verò, ſerìò, ſiquidem primam dedit, haud dubium quin emitti Æquum "ſiet. Mic. Ob eam rem? Dem. Ob eam. And there is an end of the conteſt. The Doctor indeed "hath ſundry other Sections added to theſe foregoing, which as they concern times more remote "from thoſe who firſt received the Apoſtolical Inſtitutions, ſo I muſt ingenuouſly profeſs that I can-

"not

"not see any thing whereon to fasten a suspicion of a proof, so far as to call it into examination, and "therefore I shall absolve the Reader from the penalty of this Digression.

It is most true that I have deduced the Original of Metropolitans from the first plantation of the Faith in Alexandria, the prime City of Ægypt, and having * before spoken many things of it, I begin here with a reference to what had there been said. And for the clearing of it, it is not amiss that I give the Reader a brief view of all. 3. * Dissert. 3. c. 10.

They that write the History of that Church, and are thought to write it least favourably to Bishops, do yet affirm out of the Records of that Church, that S. Mark founded it, and left Ananias, or Anianus Patriarch there: Of this Eusebius thus speaks, Ἐκκλησίας πρῶτον ἐπ' αὐτῆς Ἀλεξανδρείας συστήσασθαι, that Mark first erected Churches in Alexandria, and these Anianus received and ruled, under the title of ἣν ἴσμεν Ἀλεξανδρείᾳ παροικίαν the Province of Alexandria; adding, that there was such a multitude of them, which upon S. Mark's πρώτη ἐπισολὴ first onset, received the Christian Faith, being allured to it διὰ ἀσκήσεως αὐτῆς φιλοσοφοτάτης καὶ σφοδροτάτης, by his most Philosophical, or pious excellent manner of living, that Philo Judæus, who lived at that time, thought fit to write a Book to describe their whole manner of living. 4. Lib. 2. c. 16'. Cap. 24'.

That the same S. Mark constituted Churches also in Pentapolis, is affirmed by the Author of his life in Photius, and accordingly the sixth Canon of the first Council of Nice appoints those Churches, as also all others of Ægypt and Lybia, to be subject to the Patriarch of Alexandria, affirming that so it was to be by the ancient and primitive custom. 5.

Here it is evident, that by Mark himself Alexandria was constituted a Metropolitical Patriarchal See, in the hands and government of a Patriarch, who by being Bishop of that, had the care of the whole Province, and many particular Churches in it, and accordingly superintended in all of them. And this the second Canon of the Council of Constantinople refers to, when it decrees τὸν Ἀλεξανδρείας ἐπίσκοπον τὰ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ μόνον οἰκονομεῖν, that the Bishop of Alexandria shall administer only the affairs of Egypt; and this, in their care μὴ συγχέειν τὰς ἐκκλησίας, not to confound the Churches, disturb the order anciently observed among them. 6.

The only thing that I could foresee possible to be objected to this, was the authority of Eutychius the Annalist, affirming that till the time of Demetrius's Patriarchate, there was no other Bishop in Ægypt but only at Alexandria. But to this authority it was sufficient to oppose the far greater of Eusebius, who speaking of that Demetrius, saith, that after Julian he undertook τὴν αὐτόθι παροικιῶν ἐπισκοπὴν, the government of the Dioceses there, in the plural, which cannot be imagined to be without Bishops over them. And the same is in a manner confest by Eutychius himself, who saith Ananias was made Patriarch by Mark; which he could not be, if he had no Bishops under him. 7.

And indeed Philo describing the manner of these Holy men in Ægypt, the Christians of Mark's planting, sets down προσασίας τρόπον τὰς ἐκκλησιαστικὰς λειτουργίας ἐγχειρισμένων, the manner of presidency, or rule of them who performed the Ecclesiastick Ministeries, and saith it was made up of *. Deacons and Bishops, who were in the uppermost rank placed over all. 8. *Διακονίαις καὶ ἣ δὴ πᾶσιν ἀνωτάτω ἡ ἐπισκοπῆς προεδρείας.

And so when ‖ Tertullian tells us of Valentinus the Heretick, that he had an ambition to be Bishop, it is evident enough that this was in Ægypt, for he was of that Country; and 'tis no way probable that it was the Patriarchate of Alexandria, that he sued for, being, as * Epiphanius saith, ἐκ τῆς νόμε Ἀθριβίτου, of the Athribitick division, which was far distant from Alexandria. To which again belongs what was premised of Mark's planting Churches in Pentapolis, and the Nicene Council giving that Patriarch jurisdiction over them by the ἀρχαῖα ἔθη, the ancient, or original customs, which supposes still, that there were such Churches and Bishops originally from S. Mark. ‖ Contr. Valent. in init. * Hær. Valent. in init.

The matter lying thus, and being indeed in every branch thus laid in the Dissertations (if the Prefacer had been at leisure to attend it) I supposed the way clear to my conclusion. But he is pleased to make his Exceptions. Those he seems to promise shall be more than one, for he begins with [For 1.] but then having branch'd that again into three parts, and so again beginning [For first] by that time he hath gotten through those branches, he hath forgotten what was promised to succeed his first general in the division. 10.

As it is, we have enough remaining: For his general exception being the uncertainty of things in this story (from whence by the way, he makes haste to conclude the clear discovery of the uncertainty of many things in Antiquity; so ready he is, upon all occasions, to express his affections that way, that his conclusion is far wider than his premises) the first that he mentions is, the sending Mark the Evangelist into Ægypt, and his preaching at Alexandria what he had written in the Gospel: This, saith he, is but a report; Men said so; but what ground they had for saying so, Eusebius relates not. 11.

But 1. is there any thing more acknowledged, and uniformly attested in story, than this of Mark's preaching the Faith (that sure is what he had written in the Gospel) in Ægypt, and particularly at Alexandria? Is it doubted of by any Writer? or is there the least ground of doubting? 12.

Secondly; Eusebius being to set down a fact of former times, which he received by tradition, either from man to man, or in writing, what could he say more, than [Men said so?] And whoever required other grounds of narrations of notorious facts, than the common unquestioned affirmations of men? and so, it seems, it was here: And certainly there is no cause imaginable, why any man should question this, or believe the contrary, and why following Writers should not found assertions on such matters of fact, with so uncontroll'd a consent of all Historians (that speak of that Churches plantation) brought down to us, or why we Prelatists should not conclude from thence, what even S. Hierom himself, and Eutychius, the prime favour'd Authors of the Presbyterians, have yielded us premisses to conclude. 13.

His next branch of Exceptions is against Eusebius's affirming Philo's book περὶ βίου τῶν Ἀσκητῶν to have been written concerning the Christians converted by Mark's preaching, when, saith he, it is notoriously known, that that book treateth of the Essens, and Philo lived and died a Jew. But certainly this no way prejudiceth Eusebius's affirmation; Essens, we know, signifie holy pious men; and Christians converted to the Faith by S. Mark, may doubtless be such; and being Jews by parentage, and by the example 14.

and doctrine of S. Mark brought to a ſtrict aſcetick life, why might not Philo deſcribe and commend them as ſuch, being, though a Jew, yet, that we can any way diſcern, not any profeſt enemy of Chriſtianity, which alſo was but Judaiſm reformed and heightned.

15. And for any vanities or follies taken notice of in that Sect of the Jews, ordinarily call'd the Eſſens, there is no neceſſity that thoſe ſhould be found among the holy men in Ægypt, deſcribed by Philo; or if any reliques of them ſhould be diſcern'd among them, 'twould be no ſtranger, than that there ſhould be ſome of the Phariſaical leaven among other Primitive Chriſtians, as it is evident by Scripture that there was.

16. It will be very much more difficult for the Prefacer to avoid the force of many paſſages in that book of Philo, which inclined Euſebius that way, and have had the ſame force on many others; I ſhall mention but one, which is already toucht on, and belongs to our buſineſs in hand, their τρόπος προσασίας, and the Biſhops and Deacons among them, which will not be found in any Sect of Jews that were not Chriſtian.

17. His third branch is made up of Conceſſions and liberalities (one more than is uſeful or neceſſary for me, to have granted) and then, as if he had repeated the full force of my argument, he laughs at it, and falls into a Scene of the Comœdian, and ſo concludes in great chearfulneſs: And truly I am very glad to find him in ſo good humour; and although my argument might with eaſe have been truly and fully repeated [viz. that S. Mark planting many Churches in Ægypt, ſubjected them all to the Patriarch of Alexandria, therefore here is an example in the Apoſtles times of a Metropolitical Church conſtituted] and although the argument lying thus, it be far from ridiculous, and if it were not concluſive enough, there are many more evidences of the ſame matter in that Section of the Diſſertations, and as there is no word offer'd to them, ſo what is objected againſt this, hath appear'd to have no force; yet I ſhall moſt willingly have the Prefacer excus'd for all this, and give my plaudit to his exit, upon that one ſcore of the obligation laid upon me, much more than upon the Reader, in abſolving me from the penalty of this digreſſion.

A SECOND

A SECOND DEFENCE of the LEARNED HUGO GROTIUS; OR A Vindication of the Digreſſion concerning him, from ſome freſh EXCEPTIONS.

WHAT hath newly been ſuggeſted, in an Epiſtle Dedicatory to the Oxford-heads, by way of Reply to my Digreſſion about the Learned Hugo Grotius, will receive punctual anſwer within the compaſs of very few leaves. But for the Reader's thrift and eaſe, I ſhall firſt ſet down the words, wherein the ſuggeſtion is delivered. 1.

'From thence, whence in the thoughts of ſome, I am moſt likely to ſuffer, 2.
'as to my own Reſolves, I am moſt ſecure. It is in medling with Grotius his Annotations, and 'calling into queſtion what hath been delivered by ſuch a Gyant in all kinds of literature. Since my 'ingagement in this buſineſs, and when I had well-nigh finiſhed the Vindication of the Texts of 'Scripture commonly pleaded, for the Demonſtration of the Deity of Chriſt, from the exceptions
'put in to their Teſtimonies, by the Racovian Catechiſm, I had the ſight of Dr. H's Apology for 'him, in his Vindication of his Diſſertations about Epiſcopacy, from my occaſional Animadverſions, 'publiſhed in the Preface of my Book of the Perſeverance of the Saints. Of that whole Treatiſe I
'ſhall elſewhere give an account. My Defenſative as to my dealing with Grotius his Annotations, 'is ſuited to what the Doctor pleads in his behalf, which occaſions this mention thereof.

'This very Pious, Learned, Judicious man (he tells us) hath fallen under ſome harſh cenſures of 'late, eſpecially upon the account of Socinianiſm, and Popery. That is, not as though he would 'reconcile thoſe extreams, but being in Doctrinals a Socinian, he yet cloſed in many things with the 'Roman intereſt: as I no way doubt, but Thouſands of the ſame perſwaſions with the Socinians, as 'to the Perſon and Offices of Chriſt, do live in the outward Communion of that Church (as they 'call it) to this day; of which ſuppoſal I am not without conſiderable grounds, and eminent in-'ſtances for its confirmation. This (I ſay) is their charge upon him. For his being a Socinian (he 'tells us) Three things are made uſe of to beget a jealouſy in the minds of men of his inclinations
'that way. 1. Some parcells of a Letter of his to Crellius. 2. Some Relations of what paſ-
'ſed from him at his Death. 3. Some paſſages in his Annotations. It is this laſt alone wherein I 'am concerned. And what I have to ſpeak to them, I deſire may be meaſured and weighed by what 'I do premiſe.. It is not that I do entertain in my ſelf any hard thoughts, or that I would beget in 'others any evil ſurmiſes of the Eternal condition of that man, that I ſpeak what I do. What am
'I, that I ſhould judge another mans Servant? He is fallen to his own Maſter. I am very ſlow to 'judge of mens Acceptation with God, by the Apprehenſion of their underſtandings. This only I 'know, that be men of what Religion ſoever, that is profeſſed in the world, if they are Drunkards, 'Proud, Boaſters, &c. Hypocrites, haters of good men, perſecutors and revilers of them, yea if 'they be not regenerate and born of God, united to the head Chriſt Jeſus, by the ſame ſpirit that 'is in him, they ſhall never ſee God.

'But for the paſſages in his Annotations, the ſubſtance of the Doctors plea is, that the paſſages
'intimated are in his poſthuma, that he intended not to publiſh them, that they might be of 'things he obſerved, but thought farther to conſider: and an inſtance is given in that of Col. 1. 16.
'which he interprets, contrary to what he urged it for, John 1. 1, 2, 3. But granting what is affirm'ed as to matter of fact, about his Collections, (though the Preface to the laſt part of his Anno-'tations will not allow it to be true) I muſt needs abide in my diſſatisfaction to theſe Annotations, 'and of my reſolves in theſe thoughts give the Doctor this account. Of the Socinian Religion
'there are two main Parts; the firſt is Photinianiſm, the latter Pelagianiſm. The firſt concern'ing the perſon, the other the Grace of Chriſt. Let us take an eminent inſtance out of either of 'theſe heads: Out of the firſt, their denying Chriſt to be God by Nature. Out of the latter, their 'denyal of his ſatisfaction.

Jam veràſcien-dum eſt, multo quidem citius, quàm nunc de-mum temporis eam reſumi ab-ſolviq; potuiſſe, & quo minus id jam pridem factum ſit, per eum non ſtetiſſe virum, cujus fideli curæ opus integrum ab Authore ipſo primum creditum fuit & ſedulo commendatum. Præmon. ad Lect.

'For the firſt, I muſt needs tell the Apologiſt, that of all the Texts of the New Teſtament and 'Old, whereby the Deity of Chriſt is uſually confirmed, and where it is evidently teſtified unto, He

'hath not left any more than one (that I have observed) if one, speaking any thing clearly to that 'purpose. I say, if one, for that he speaks not home to the business in hand on Joh. 1. I shall elsewhere give an account: perhaps some one or two more may be interpreted according to the Analogy of that. I speak not of his Annotations on the Epistles, but on the whole Bible throughout, 'wherein his Expositions given, do for the most part fall in with those of the Socinians, and oftentimes consist in the very words of Socinus and Smalcius, and always do the same things with them, as 'to any notice of the Deity of Christ in them. So that I marvel the Learned Doctor should fix upon 'one particular instance, as though that one place alone were corrupted by him, when there is not one '(or but one) that is not wrested, perverted and corrupted to the same purpose. For the full conviction of the truth hereof, I refer the Reader to the insuing considerations of his interpretations of 'the places themselves. The condition of these famous Annotations, as to the satisfaction of Christ, 'is the same; not one Text of the whole Scripture, wherein Testimony is given to that sacred truth, 'which is not wrested to another sense, or at least the Doctrine in it, concealed, and obscured by 'them. I do not speak this with the least intention to cast upon him the reproach of a Socinian: I 'judge not his Person: his Books are published to be considered and judged. Erasmus I know made 'way for him in most of his Expositions about the Deity of Christ, but what repute he hath thereby 'obtained among all that honour the Eternal Godhead of the Son of God, let Bellarmine on the one 'hand, and Beza on the other, evince. And as I will by no means maintain or urge against Grotius 'any of the miscarriages in Religion, which the Answerer of my Animadversions undertakes to vindicate him from; Nor do I desire to fight with the Dust and Ashes of men; yet what I have said, is, 'if not necessary to return to the Apologist, yet of tendency, I hope, to the satisfaction of others, 'who may inquire after the reason of my calling the Annotations of the learned man to an Account 'in this Discourse; shall any one take liberty to pluck down the Pillars of our Faith, and weaken the 'grounds of our assurance, concerning the person and grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and shall we 'not have the boldness to call him to an account for so sacrilegious an attempt? with those then, 'who love the Lord Christ in sincerity, I expect no blame or reproach for what I have indeavoured 'in this kind; yea that my good will shall find acceptance with them, especially if it shall occasion 'any of greater leisure and abilities farther, and professedly to remark more of the Corruptions of 'those Annotations, I have good ground of expectation. The truth is, notwithstanding their pom-
* Grotius in lib. 5. de veritat. Relig. in notis R. Sol. 'pous shew and appearance (few of his Quotations, which was the * manner of the man, being at 'all to his purpose) It will be found no difficult matter to discuss his Assertions, and dissipate his 'Conjectures.

Aben Ezra & Onkelos adducit, sed alienis oculis hic vidit, aut alienâ fide retulit (fortè authoribus illis aut non intellectis, aut propter occupationes non inspectis) aut animositati & authoritati suæ in citandis authoribus, & referendis dictis aut factis, ut ipsi hoc usui veniebat, nimium in scriptis Theologicis indulserit. Voet. disput. de Advent. Mess.

'For his being a Papist, I have not much to say; let his Epistles (published by his Friends) writ-Reverende Domine, sæpe tibi molestus esse cogor; 'ten to Dionysius Petavius the Jesuit, be perused, and you will see the character which of himself he 'gives: As also what in sundry writings he ascribes to the Pope.

sumpsi hanc ultimam operam, mea antehac dicta & famam quoq; à ministris allatratam tuendi; in eo Scripto siquid est, aut Catholicis sententiis disconsonans, aut cæteroqui à veritate alienum, de eo abs te viro Eruditissimo, &c. cujus judicium plurimi facio, moneri percupio. Epist. Grot. ad Dionys. Petav. Epist. 204.

3. The first thing that I am here to clear, is the meaning of plain words. I said that Grotius was sometimes calumniated, as a Socinian, sometimes as a Papist, and as if he had learnt to reconcile contradictories, or the most distant extreams, sometimes as both of them together. And here I am told that the harsh censures under which he hath fallen, are not as though he would reconcile those extreams —— And sure I never said, or intimated they were, but that the Socinian and Popish Doctrines were so contradictory one to the other (the one affirming, the other expresly denying the Eternal Divinity and satisfaction of Christ, and many the like) that it was impossible for the same man to be both Socinian and Papist, without being a greater artificer than yet ever was in the world, one that had learnt to reconcile contradictories, &c. i. e. (if I must farther construe plain words) to believe together things most incompetible, and impossible to be believed together by the same person, the affirmations and the negations of the same Enunciations, that Christ was, and was not Eternal God, made, and made not satisfaction for our sins; For this work of wonder, above what either nature or divine power can extend to, is necessarily required to the verifying of that part of the calumny.

4. The second is, his stating the jealousie, as far as it is own'd by him, viz. that H. Grotius being in Doctrinals a Socinian, he yet closed in many things with the Roman interest; where the Distinction being made between Doctrinals and interest, it is visible, First, That this doth not so much as pretend that he was a Papist, for it is the doctrines only (such is that of the Popes Supremacy, &c.) which can give any man that denomination; and for closing in many things with the Roman interests, the Anabaptists and other such Sectaries, the most distant from Popery, may and oft are as guilty of that, as any. Secondly, There is no colour for this suggestion, as far as Grotius's writings give us to judge (and farther than those, I have no perspective to examine his heart) For the fomenters of the divisions in Christendom, being the only persons whom he profest to oppose, the irreconciliabiles, and qui æterna cupiunt esse dissidia, 'tis consequent, that the Pacificatory interest was the only one espoused by him, and pursued most affectionately; and I could never yet discern by any pregnant indication, that this is the Roman Interest.

5. The third is, his manner of proving his thus stated suggestion. First, By his bare affirmation, without the least tender of proof for the truth of it; Secondly, By his confident undoubted assurance, that thousands of the same perswasions with the Socinians, as to the person and offices of Christ, do to this day live in the outward communion of the Church of Rome. Whereas, First, This could have no force to infer the conclusion, as it concerned Grotius, who never lived a day, or died in the communion of the Church of Rome, nor is by his most unkind adversaries affirmed to have done so, but is known to have profest his willingness to communicate with the Church of England; and secondly, 'tis not imaginable how any any one Doctrinal Socinian, ſhould after his having eſpouſed thoſe Doctrines, if his practices be conſonant to his perſwaſions, live in outward Communion with the Church of Rome, if by living in the outward Communion, be meant either joining in the offices, or receiving the Sacrament with them; when (beſide many other obſtacles in the way, the Athanaſian Creed, and the like) the very * receiving the Euchariſt kneeling, is by Socinus defined to be Idololatrical, and moſt ſtrictly required by the Papiſts from every Communicant.

Fourthly, When he hath premiſed his profeſſion, that he would not beget in others any evil ſurmiſes of the eternal condition of that man (who is (bleſſed be God) out of the reach of ſuch darts) with a [what am I, that I ſhould judge another mans ſervant?] and yet adds in the next words [He is fallen to his own maſter,] I cannot but think theſe words ſo far contrary to his profeſſion, as may be apt to beget evil ſurmiſes in others. The foregoing words are evidently taken from Rom. 14. 4. and judging there, and here, is uſed in the ſenſe of condemning, which is, at the leaſt, ſurmiſing of the eternal condition, and [falling to his own Maſter] is in like manner taken from the ſame verſe, and ſo mark by the Italick letter, and [falling] there evidently ſignifying that Lot, to which the precedent [judging] determines it, and to which the ſubſequent [ſtanding] is oppoſite, what can this regularly infer, but that he which is fallen to his maſter, is fallen under condemnation? But if by [fallen] he meant no more than death, as I yet hope, and deſire the Reader in charity to believe he did, I heartily wiſh, he would hereafter be more careful in uſing of Scripture ſtyle in a ſenſe ſo diſtant from the known importance of it in Scripture, without any character to diſcriminate it; and withal, that when he ſpeaks of ſo nice a point, as is the eternal ſalvation of one that is dead, he will not deliver his mind in ſuch general Aphoriſms, as thoſe (which the jealouſie or malice of any man may interpret, to the inferring the moſt ſanguinary concluſion) that the men of what religion ſoever, if they are Drunkards, Proud, &c. ſhall never ſee God. For though I have all reaſons to believe that this Learned man was regenerate and born of God, and united to the head Jeſus Chriſt by the ſame Spirit that is in him, and withal, neither lived, nor dyed, in any one or more of thoſe waſting guilts (I heartily wiſh all men living were as guiltleſs as he) yet who knows what ſurmiſes may be infuſed into thoſe, that are willing to believe ill, or have no grounds of knowledge to pronounce any thing that is good, of him, when they find ſuch Aphoriſms as theſe (comprehending ſo many ſorts of ſinners, which ſhall never ſee God) made uſe of to conclude a diſcourſe, which purpoſely treated of that perſon, and cannot diſcern with what propriety, they could be directed to that place, if they did not relate to him? 6.

Fifthly when he ſaith, that the Preface to the laſt part of Grotius's Annotations will not allow that to be true, which I ſaid of his Poſthuma, viz. that they had not been formed by him, or fitted for the publick, &c. I anſwer, that that Preface of the Publiſher, if it be ſuppoſed to have ſet down the whole truth, hath yet nothing contrary to what I ſaid. It ſaith the Opus integrum was by the Author committed and earneſtly commended to the faithful care of ὁ δεινα. But what was the Opus integrum? not that laſt part or volume of Annotations thus compleated, and ſo made Integrum, intire, by his own hand (though for as much as concerned the Apocalypſe I think it had received from his own pencil, by occaſion of the conteſts he met with about his Tract De Antichriſto, the very lineaments and colors, wherein it appears) but Opus integrum, the whole volume, or volumes which contained all his ἀνικδοτα adverſaria on the New Teſtament, which it ſeems were thus committed to a friends hands, or elſe they had never come to ours. And this is perfectly conſonant to what I ſaid, and (I ſuppoſe) exemplified, and evidenced concerning thoſe Annotations. 7.

Sixthly when he ſaith, that H. Grotius hath not left any more than one text of the New and Old Teſtament whereby the Deity of Chriſt is uſually confirmed, and where it is evidently teſtified to] I refer him briefly to one place in his Annotations on S^t John's Goſpel, which alone will be able to diſcover, what weight there is in this affirmation. There, having by way of Preface obſerved, that S. John did more expreſly, than any other of the Evangeliſts, and more early, in the very firſt words of his writing, ſet down the divine nature of Chriſt, ipſo initio Dei nomen ei aſſignandum —— exiſtimans, in the very beginning of his Goſpel aſſigning him the name of God; accordingly, in his explication of the firſt verſe, he makes the [ἐν ἀρχῇ ἦν, In the beginning was] an expreſſion of Chriſt's Eternity, applying to it the place in the Proverbs concerning wiſdom, c. 8. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27. I was ſet up from everlaſting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was, when there was no depths I was brought forth, when there were no fountains abounding with water, before the mountains were ſetled, before the hills was I brought forth, while as yet he had not made the earth nor the field, nor the higheſt part of the duſt of the world, when he prepared the heavens, I was there —— (and in his notes on the Old Teſtament, Prov. 8. 27. he expreſly refers to this, Joh. 1. 1. and by ſo doing, manifeſtly defines that eternal wiſdom to be Chriſt) and on this occaſion he brings the moſt expreſs affirmations of the antients, Juſtin and Athenagoras, the former affirming Chriſt's pre-exiſtence before the world, προϋπῆρξε πρὸ τῶν αἰώνων, and p. 851. ἦν ὄντα πρὸ αἰώνων, he was God before the worlds; the latter his eternity, and that from the beginning God being an eternal mind, εἶχεν ἀΐδιον ἐν ἑαυτῷ τὸν λόγον ἀϊδίως λογικὸς ὤν. Then out of the old Teſtament from the Chaldee Paraphraſt he brings ſeveral places where God is interpreted by God and his word, making and founding the heavens and earth, Iſa. 45. 12. and 48. 13. and according and conſenting thereto, 2 Pet. 3. 5. which again are ſo many more evidences ſet down by him, of Chriſts eternal deity, and then on v. 3. to teſtifie that all things were created by this eternal word, he appeals to the place, which before I produced from him, Col. 1. 16. by him were all things created —— 8.

This I hope without farther ſearch, may ſuffice to prove, that he hath left more than one text of the Old and New Teſtament ſpeaking home and clearly to this purpoſe; For what can be more clear and home, than this, that Chriſt was God before the world was (whereas Socinians make the beginning, Joh. 1. 1. to be the beginning of the Goſpel) and that by him the whole world was created. 9.

In a word, If one text acknowledged to aſſert Chriſt's eternal divinity, will not ſuffice to conclude him no Socinian in that point, who was not ſo Atheiſtical, as to doubt of the truth and authority of that one place, and ſo cannot be doubted to believe, what from one place (if there had been no more) he did believe; Secondly, If ſix verſes in the Proverbs, two in Iſaiah, one in St. Peter, one in St. Paul, added to many in the beginning of St. John, will not yet amount to above one text; or Laſtly, If that one may be doubted of alſo, which is by him interpreted to 10.

affirm Chriſt eternally ſubſiſtent with God, before the creation of the world, and that the whole world was created by him, I ſhall deſpair of ever being a ſucceſsful Advocate for any man.

11. And then how, ſtill, he that affirmed poſitively that he hath not left more than one, and preſently adds his doubting of this one [not more than one, if one] and after [not one, or but one,] can firſt inlarge the Catalogue, that [perhaps ſome one or two more may be interpreted according to the analogy of that one] and then preſently contract it again, that [his Expoſitions always do the ſame things with Socinus and Smalcius] who it is certain do not permit that one to be underſtood of Chriſt's eternal Divinity, and yet at length profeſs, that he ſpeaks not with the leaſt intention to caſt on him the reproach of a Socinian, or to urge againſt him any of thoſe miſcarriages in Religion, which the Anſwerer of his Animadverſions undertakes to vindicate him from (and Socinianiſm was one of them) acknowledging that Eraſmus made way for him in moſt of his Expoſitions about the Deity of Chriſt, (which is to make him an Eraſmian, rather than a Socinian) and after that, ſtill adhere, that his attempt is ſacrilegious, even to pluck down the Pillars of our Faith —— concerning the Perſon and grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, how, I ſay, he can reconcile all theſe contrary appearances, I have not the skill, and therefore ſhall not have the curioſity to divine, or conjecture.

12. Seventhly when he marvels the Doctor ſhould fix upon one particular inſtance, as though that one place only were corrupted by him] I anſwer that he miſinterprets my words, and miſrepreſents my deſign and aim in producing that particular inſtance; It was not to give example what place of Scriptures thoſe Notes had corrupted, or miſinterpreted, but to evidence that thoſe Annotations, under his name, agreed not with his ſenſe; of which as this was one eminent and pertinent inſtance, interpreting this place, Col. 1. 16. after his death, to the Socinians mind, which in his life time he had interpreted expreſly againſt it, and as one inſtance thus explicite, is as concluding to this matter, as many more could be; ſo elſewhere I have added many inſtances more to the ſame purpoſe, which I ſhall not here collect unſeaſonably.

13. What places in the Old Teſtament, wherein the Deity of Chriſt is evidently teſtified to, are corrupted, wreſted or perverted by this learned man, H. Gr. I profeſs not to divine, nor ſhall, it ſeems, come to the full conviction of the truth thereof, without reading over this whole (which is a great) volume, where their confutation lies ſcattered, and is not, as I diſcern, put together in any part of the work, ſave only in the Title Page; and to this larger travel my proſpect doth not invite me, having already by what I have recited from Grotius's Notes on Joh. 1. compared with this Authors ſuggeſtions a competent δεῖξις, what I am to expect from any farther inquiry.

In lieu hereof, I ſhall only add theſe two ſuppletory conſiderations. Firſt, That the word of God, being all, and every part of it equally of undoubted truth, that doctrine, which is founded expreſly on five places of divine writ, muſt by all Chriſtians be acknowledged to be as irrefragably confirmed, as a hundred expreſs places would be conceived to confirm it. Secondly, That this charge of diſarming the Church of her defences againſt the adverſaries of the faith, by diverting thoſe places of Scripture, which have formerly been uſed to aſſert the great myſteries of Salvation, to other and inferior ends, though it be a very popular one, and that which is moſt apt to devolve an odium on him, which ſhall be repreſented guilty of it, and may therefore probably be choſen, as the field of declamation againſt Grotius, by any that can gladly expatiate on that ſubject, yet will it upon inquiry be found in ſome degree, if not equally, chargeable on the learneſt and moſt valued of the Reformers, particularly upon Mr. Calvin himſelf, who hath been as bitterly and unjuſtly accuſed, and reviled, on this account, (witneſs the book entitled Calvino-Turciſmus) as ever Eraſmus was by Bellarmine or Beza, or as probably Grotius can be.

14. Eighthly, For the doctrine of the ſatisfaction of Chriſt, and the interpretation of thoſe Scriptures that belong to it, I cannot imagine any ſurer meaſure can be taken of Grotius's ſenſe, than by that perſpicuous and judicious treatiſe which he hath written purpoſely on that ſubject, againſt Socinus himſelf, and which I believe will be found a ſurer Antidote againſt that poyſon, among conſidering men, than hath been mixed by any other the moſt skilful hand, ſince that controverſy hath been agitated in this laſt age; more eſpecially, the places of Scripture are by him there * vindicated from the perverſions of Socinus, and a great cumulus of texts brought forth to teſtifie to the doctrine of Satisfaction, which I ſhall not recite, that I may leave on the Reader an ingagement to ſurvey the book, and commit the judgment to his own eyes.

* Edit. Lugdun. p. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, &c.

15. Only becauſe I have heard the ſignal place Iſa. 53. taken notice of by ſome, as that wherein his Annotations are moſt ſuſpected, I ſhall there faſten a while. From 1 Pet. 2. 24. having inferred that Chriſt ſo bare our ſins, that he freed us from the puniſhment of them, and ſo that we are healed by his ſtripes, he at length urges as parallel to this, Iſa. 53. 11. my righteous ſervant ſhall juſtify many, and ſhall bear their iniquities, עון iniquity ſaith he *, ſignifying the puniſhment of iniquity, 2 Kin. 7. 9. and סבל to bear, the bearing of puniſhment, and thence concluding, Diſertè ergo hîc dicitur Chriſtus laturus pœnas eorum qui juſtificantur, It is therefore here diſtinctly ſaid, that Chriſt ſhall bear the puniſhments of thoſe who are juſtified; and according to this ſpecimen, he gives the myſtical ſenſe of that whole chapter (and refutes the Socinian arts of evading it) and at laſt from v. 12. concludes the puniſhments which Chriſt indured for our ſins, to be the foundation and merit of his dividing the ſpoil, and interceeding, decere enim ut is qui peccata multorum tulerit, jus habeat pro iis intercedendi, for it was fit that he that bare the ſins of many, ſhould have the right of interceding for them; and much more to the ſame purpoſe, defining poſitively againſt all the adverſaries κηρυγέλα, that Peccata ferre patiendo, atque ita ut inde liberentur alii, aliud indicare non poteſt, quàm pœnæ alienæ ſuſceptionem, to bear ſins by ſuffering, and ſo that others may be freed by that means, cannot ſignify any thing elſe, but the undergoings of other mens puniſhment, annexing Iſa. 53. 6. The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all — and refuting all the evaſions, that were there interpoſed by Socinus.

16. And when to this, and the * many pages more which are there ſubjoyned for the vindicating that one chapter, and the ſeveral expreſs teſtimonies therein, I ſhall add two things more for preventing all poſſible miſtake or jealouſy of his after-change in this matter, I ſhall have no motive farther to inlarge this conſideration.

* From p. 12. to p. 18.

Firſt,

First, The Annotations of that Learned man on the Old Teſtament, publiſhed a little before his death, are very brief, and eſpecially reſpect the firſt and literal interpretation; As in the Prophets, where there is one immediate completion of each Prophecy among the Jews of or near that time, wherein it was written, another more remote and ultimate concerning Chriſt, or the times of the Goſpel (this might be exemplified in ſeveral inſtances, applyed by the New Teſtament to Chriſt, having had before a literal completion, [Out of Ægypt have I called my ſon] and many the like) there generally his care is, to ſet down moſt diſtinctly the firſt, or literal ſenſe, as that is terminated in the immediate completion (and this, I ſuppoſe, becauſe it was moſt neglected by other interpreters, who were more copious in rendring the myſtical notation.) And accordingly on Iſa. 53. conceiving the Jews uſage of the Prophet Jeremy, and Gods regard to him, to be literally predicted there, he interprets every verſe of that chapter to that ſenſe (which was not ſo eaſily diſcoverable, or vulgarly taken notice of) omitting to inlarge on that other, more ſublime completion in Chriſt, which the New Teſtament had ſo clearly expreſt, all Commentators enlarged on, and himſelf in the tract de Satisfact. ſo evidently ſet down, and vindicated, that all that was needful to be added, was eaſily ſaid by him by way of introduction to that whole chapter, in theſe few words, Hæ notæ in Jeremiam quidem congruunt priùs; ſed potiùs, ſublimiùſque, ſæpe & magis κατ' ἐξοχὴν in Chriſtum. Theſe characters agree indeed firſt to Jeremy; but to Chriſt more principally and eminently, and oftentimes more according to the very letter or diction. 17.

The ſecond thing that I have to add for the clearing of his conſtancy, or no change in theſe doctrines, will be ſuch, as I think will leave no place of Jealouſie, his own expreſs words proteſting his opinion, when he was accuſed of changing it. This he hath publickly done in his Diſcuſſion (written a little before, and not publiſhed till after his death) p. 17. by ſetting down the occaſion and author of that defamation, and for the removing of it, referring the Reader to what he had in many places of his Annotations on the Goſpels written concerning the eternity of the Word, the blood of Chriſt given for our redemption, &c. And this I have before my eyes at this time, more clearly teſtified under his own hand in a letter of his written to a friend of his of this nation, who then held a correſpondence with him, in theſe words, Poteris autem, vir optime, omnibus, qui nos norunt, affirmare, me de iis quæ contra Socini admiratores defendi, non modo nihil diſcedere, ſed & illorum aliquos meâ operâ adductos ad meliorem ſententiam. Quo magis gratias tibi habeo de edito noſtro libro de Satisfactione Chriſti, In quo argumento illos proprietate verborum tam multorum in ſacris literis, & manifeſtiſſimo antiquitatis conſenſu, poſitionibus quibuſdam inanibus abſtractos non dubito. Giving him authority to aſſure all that know him, not only that he hath no whit departed from what he had maintained againſt the Socinians, but alſo that ſome of them had by his indeavour been reduced from the Socinian errors, charging them with the vanity of their poſitions, and departure both from the Propriety of many words in the Scriptures, and from the moſt manifeſt conſent of antiquity, and expreſſing himſelf very well pleaſed that his Book de ſatisfactione was reprinted at Oxford. And all this, long after the publication of Crellius's Book againſt him, which is the thing ſuppoſed to have wrought the change in him. Upon theſe plain words I ſhall add no Deſcants, but leave them that have entertained contrary ſurmiſes, to conſider them. 18.

Ninthly, For the character given of this Perſon, with whoſe duſt and aſhes he yet deſires not to fight, viz. that few of his quotations are at all to his purpoſe; and the grounds of that character, the words of Voetius diſputing againſt him, and affirming that it was cuſtomary with him to indulge too much to his own authority in citing authors or relating ſpeeches or facts] I ſhall ſay but this, Firſt, That theſe two things are different, to miſ-cite, which was the thing Voetius ſpake of, and not to cite to the purpoſe; A falſe citation is one thing, an impertinent or unſeaſonable citation, or ſuch as is not at all to his purpoſe, is another; and ſo this citation from Voetius, is guilty of the infirmity it accuſeth, is not to his purpoſe that cited it. Secondly, That adverſaries teſtifications of the faults of thoſe, whom they find it uſeful to aſperſe, are not valid teſtimonies, nor competent to affix (or juſtifie) ill characters on any; and that Voetius was ſuch, is known to many, and, I doubt not, to him that cited him. Thirdly, That whoſoever ſhall be willing to profit by that mans writings, will find, that as he writes with great conſent, ſo is he obſervable to bring the moſt pertinent teſtimonies of any man, and ſeldom to omit any, which the moſt diligent obſerver ſhall take notice of. And if in ſo large a field he be found ſometimes to have miſtaken, or miſ-cited a teſtimony, there are ſo many innocent wayes to ſuch kind of errors, that until it appear that his were not ſuch, they cannot with reaſon affix an ill character on him; And fourthly, That if this character were true, it yet infers not the point in hand, that he was either Socinian or Papiſt, thoſe two Sects having not the incloſure, or Monopoly from all other Sects, of writing or quoting what is not to their preſent purpoſe. 19.

Laſtly, For the little which he hath to ſay to prove him a Papiſt, and firſt, For his Epiſtles written to Dionyſius Petavius a Jeſuit, and in them the words ſet in the margin, I anſwer, Firſt, That it being willingly acknowledged that he wrote five very ſhort Epiſtles to Dionyſius Petavius, which are put together in the two laſt leaves of his Epiſtles ad Gallos, there is this obvious account to be given of it, which will no way reflect ill upon him. 20.

Petavius was both a very learned, and a very moderate Papiſt, fit to be joined with Jac. Sirmundus, a Jeſuit alſo, yet both theſe of ſuch abilities and affections to the good of learning, of ſuch diligence in the ſearch and ſtudy of antiquity, and withal of ſo much temper above what is generally expected from that Society in other kingdoms, that it can be no prejudice to him, who ſo earneſtly deſired, and laboured to advance the peace of the univerſal Church, to have a particular reſpect unto, and acquaintance with one of theſe; and as his living ſo long in Paris, where Petavius was an eminent perſon, makes it no miracle, that he ſhould be thus acquainted with him, ſo his Pacificatory deſign could not but render it profitable and deſirable; he muſt have been an unskilful manager, if intending to reconcile diſtant intereſts, he did not acquaint himſelf with the utmoſt of both their pretenſions; And what means was more commodious to that end, than this, of receiving advertiſements from Petavius? 21.

The words of Grotius himſelf *, when he was by Rivet accuſed for commending Jeſuits, are here worth reciting, Jeſuitas non omnes laudavit Grotius, ſed quorum & mores & eruditio laudem merentur; Eos vero qui in Gallia ſunt, pro talibus habet, quales eos Reges Galliæ volunt exiſtimari, i. e pro bonis civibus; & quid magis neceſſarium eſt pacem Eccleſiaſticam reſtituere cupienti, quam eruditorum audire conſilia, 22.

consilia, eorum maxime quibus & præsens Ecclesiæ status & antiquior historia percognita sunt? He commends only those Jesuites whose manners and learning deserve praise, the French Jesuites, whom he takes to be such as the Kings of France account of them, i. e. good Subjects to their Prince — And what can be more necessary to one that desires to restore the peace of the Church, than to hear the advices of those especially who have the perfectest knowledge of the present state of the Church, and of antient History? And to the same purpose again, p. 91. affirming that he had great reasons to believe that some of that Society, Petavius no doubt, were seriously willing as well as able to contribute very much toward the peace of the Church.

23. Secondly, For the words here cited from his Epistle, that if there were any thing in that answer to Rivet, which agreed not with Catholick Doctrine, or were otherwise distant from truth, (or which he adds in that place, but is here left out) minus idoneum ad pacem, less fit for Peace, he desired to be admonished by Petavius.] The result is no more than what all his controversy with Rivet professes, that he was one, that desired the return of all Catholick truth and peace into the Christian World (and he must renounce his part in Christ's Legacy [peace I leave with you] that is not in this particular affected like him) And then, what wonder he should desire to be admonished by a sober learned man of the Romish Communion, if he wrote any thing which was not ordinable to that end?

24. The same design, and way of pursuing it, will be yet more visible in the two hundredth Epistle, where he hath these words to the same Petavius, Liceat mihi tua ope addere, demere, corrigere quæ opus erit ad verum pacemque promovendam, Give me leave by your help, to add, to take away, to mend what is needful toward truth and the advancing of peace, viz. such an advancement of peace, as was perfectly consistent with truth.

25. The Second and last Suggestion in this matter is taken from what Grotius hath said in sundry writings concerning the Pope] to which I have already spoken somewhat in the answer to the animadversions, as far as concerned that passage in his Discussio, which I discerned to be most accused of inclination to the Popes interest. As for the Papal power, whatsoever passage can be brought from him, must sure be interpreted by analogy with those rules, which he premiseth in his Discussio, requiring that it may be confined and limited sec. Canones, according to the antient Canonical rights allowed the Pope by the Councils, and so as the authority of Scripture, the rights of the Catholick Church, of Councils, of Patriarchs of the East, of Primates, and Metropolitans, and other Bishops, be preserved intire, as also all the the just rights of all Christian Princes in their own Dominions. See Discuss. Riv. Apol. p. 18, 19, 20. And against this, or on this head, here being no one place produced, to support this indefinite charge, I cannot reply by Divination, and so have thus briefly discharged my present undertaking.

26. What is briefly toucht on with reflexion on my self in the end of that Dedication, of the softness and gentleness of the leaves of my Answer to his Animadversions, of the illness of my cause, wherein I am ingaged against him, and the illness of my Principles in managing a good cause, in the Treatise of Schism and some others, (which he hath not pleased to name) I am no way qualified to judge of, till his severer sheets instruct me, by discovering the infirmities of my cause, and till by his managery of a dispute with a Romanist, he shall approve his Principles to be such as will hold out against all gainsayers. At the present having no more to add, I willingly take leave of him.

A CONTINUATION OF THE DEFENCE OF HUGO GROTIUS, IN AN ANSWER TO THE REVIEW of his ANNOTATIONS.

WHERETO

Is subjoined a REPLY to some Passages of the Reviewer in his late Book of Schism, concerning his charge of Corruptions in the Primitive Church, and some other particulars.

TO THE STATIONER.

Mr Royston,

I Have been so often called on for the Reply to the Review of Grotius's Annotations, that I am at length inclined to change my former purpose, and permit these few sheets (prepared as soon as the Review came to my hands, but then laid aside, on a perswasion that they might be safely spared) to follow the former on that subject, rather than deny to any so easie a request. I am

Your Friend,

Numb. 1. IF he that hath read the Review of the Annotations of Hugo Grotius, which is offered as a Reply to the ſecond Defence of that learned man, ſeem from thence to have any new ſcruples infuſed into his mind, it will not coſt him many minutes to depoſite them, by obſerving with me this method.

2. Firſt, By adverting (on the firſt head, that of the ſatisfaction of Chriſt) not only what fair and large characters of his thoughts lie legible to all men in his Book De ſatisfactione, written on purpoſe againſt Socinus on this ſubject, but alſo how thoſe have been ſince back'd with indubitable evidences of a later and freſher date, taken from his own expreſs words in his Diſcuſſio (the laſt thing he wrote) and in a letter under his own hand (dated after the time of his ſurmiſed change) written on purpoſe to foreſtal this ſurmiſe, and to aſſure us of his conſtant adhering to that ſenſe which he had delivered in his Book De ſatisfactione. Which two as they are moſt irrefragable proofs of the matter in hand, being teſtimonies of him that certainly beſt knew his own thoughts, whether he were changed or no, ſo to neither of theſe is the leaſt word of Reply here offered by the Reviewer, and ſo ſtand in full force againſt all that is here ſuggeſted.

3. Secondly, By remembring that from the * beginning of this debate, the poſthumous Annotations on the Epiſtles were expreſly renounced and rejected by me, as departing manifeſtly from the judgment of that learned man, formerly expreſſed in thoſe writings which he had compleated and publiſhed in his life time, and conſequently, as unſufficient arguments, or teſtimonies of his change, when produced againſt his own repeated and expreſs declarations to the contrary; And yet from theſe are the proofs now principally brought in this Review, and by the contrariety betwixt theſe and his Book De ſatisfact. his change concluded; with what appearance of reaſon, the Reader will ſoon diſcern, when he hath conſidered the premiſſes, and what ſhall now occaſionally be added thereto.

* See Anſ. to Animadverſ. p. 132.

4. For this manner of dealing, two things only are pleaded in the Review, which here muſt be regarded, before I proceed: Firſt, That the Accuſer having to deal with that book of Annotations that goes under his name, If they are none of his, it is neither on the one hand or other, of any concernment to him.]

5. To this I reply, firſt, that it is in the Reviewer a manifeſt diverſion, a courſe which is ſure to render all debates infinite: In my anſwer to his Preface of Animadverſions on Ignatius's Epiſtles, &c. I inſerted, ex abundanti, one, and only one Digreſſion, A Defence of the learned Hugo Grotius. And ſtreightwayes the whole ſtream of the Controverſie is diverted into that one narrow chanel, removed from the queſtion of Epiſcopacy, to the inquiry into Grotius's his opinions; and that is one competent diverſion. After this, when both in that my Digreſſion, and alſo in my ſecond Defence, I had confined my plea to Grotius himſelf, and thoſe writings publiſhed by him in his life time, and known to be written, and perfected by him, expreſly rejecting this book of poſthumous Annotations on the Epiſtles, the Reviewer is now pleaſed principally to inſiſt, and found his charge againſt Grotius, on thoſe his poſthumous Annotations; which is a perfect diverſion again, inſtead of a reply, and ſo, the waving evidently, becauſe changing of the whole queſtion.

6. Secondly, As uneffectual as this plea is, it is yet much more unreaſonable, if circumſtances be conſidered, being evidently prevented, and ſuperſeded by that which hath paſt in this debate. For if there were any truth in thoſe words of his Epiſtle to the Oxford Heads, [My Defenſative as to my dealing with Grotius's Annotations, is ſuited to what the Doctor pleads in his behalf] then certainly he muſt be concern'd in this, which yet he reſolves to be none of his concernments; For it is ſure, that my plea was framed in Defence of Grotius himſelf, (not of thoſe incompleat, if not falſe images of him, thoſe parts of the Annotations, which I profeſſed to reject, and not to plead for.) Accordingly my words in the firſt propoſal of this matter to debate, were theſe, [This very pious, learned, and judicious man hath of late among many, fallen under a very unhappy Fate, being moſt unjuſtly calumniated ſometimes as a Socinian, ſometimes as a Papiſt ---] And then, how can this Defenſative be, according to his promiſe, conformed or ſuited to my plea, if it refer not to the ſame ſubject, viz. to Grotius, or thoſe Books of his, which are acknowledged to be his compleated, genuine writings? ſuch alone being competent teſtifications of his ſenſe, and ſo, meaſures to judge of his perſwaſions, whether he were a Socinian or no.

7. A ſecond part of his plea is by reflecting again on that evidence, which, ſaith he, he had formerly offered from the Printers Preface to the volume of Annotations on the Epiſtles.] But here, in the very entrance, is a miſtake, which, for the clearing of my ſelf, more than on apprehenſion of any advantage the Reviewer can gain by it, I muſt firſt take notice of. The Evidence was by him † cited from ſome words of the Preface to the laſt part of the Annotations, beginning thus, Jam vero ſciendum eſt --- To thoſe words there found, I gave anſwer in my ſecond Defence, p. 7. and he now tells me, that a ſlight inſpection will ſerve to manifeſt how ill it (i. e. my anſwer, or the ſenſe I gave of the words produced) agrees with the intention and words of the Prefacer, who ſaith he, tells us, that Grotius had himſelf publiſhed his Annotations on the Goſpel five years before, and ſo proceeds, reciting the words of the Prefacer for eight lines together; and concluding, that if the Apologiſt read this Preface, he ought to have deſiſted from the plea inſiſted on; If he did not, he thought aſſuredly he had much reaſon to deſpiſe them with whom he had to do.]

† Epiſt. to the Oxford Heads.

8. Who would not think there were ſomewhat herein really miſtaken by me, which called for this ſo ſolemn rebuke? But the Reader is intreated to conſult the place, or if it be not worth his pains, he may believe me, who made the inſpection more than ſlightly, and can aſſure him, that there is no part of what he thus now recites, to be met with in that Preface, whence he hath formerly drawn his teſtimony. I ſay in that Preface to the laſt part of the Annotations under Grotius's name, from whence it was, that the words [Jam ver ſciendum ---] were (truly) cited, and to which words it was viſible, that I gave that anſwer, which he now pretends to refute from the intention and words of the Prefacer.

9. The ſhort is, There being two volumes of Annotations ſet out ſince Grotius's death; the former on the Acts, and ſo on through the Epiſtles of Saint Paul and Saint James; the latter on the other ſix Catholick Epiſtles, and the Revelation; and before the former of theſe, the Printers Epiſtle, inſcribed, Typographus Lectori; before the latter, a Præmonitio ad Lectorem: From the latter of theſe it is, that the words formerly by him produced, Jam verò ſciendum --- and to which (conſequently) I gave anſwer, were cited. And I, that obediently and diligently read over that to which I was directed, and there finding the words which were cited, gave my anſwer to them, ſuch as I thought the words capable of; am now unexpectedly rebuked for not reading it, and more than ſo, for deſpiſing thoſe with whom I had to do; when indeed, what is now in the Reply cited from it, is not to be found there, but in the Printers Epiſtle to another volume. By what means he fell into this miſtake, and was by that led into this cauſeleſs ſeverity, I leave him upon recollection to conſider.

I need add no more for the vindicating my ſelf in this matter; yet if I ſhall now having till now 10.
no occaſion) attend to this other teſtimony, now newly alledged by him out of that other Preface, it will ſoon appear, that it neither (as is pretended) diſproves the anſwer, which I gave to the words formerly cited from the premonition, nor refutes what I had firſt ſaid concerning the Poſthumous Annotations; and then ſurely I ſhall not be much concern'd in it: Not the firſt; for my Anſwer being no more but this, that Opus Integrum ſignified not that volume completed, and ſo made integrum intire by Grotius's own hand, but the whole volume or volumes which contained all his ἀνέκδοτα Adverſaria on the New Teſtament.] This is no way refuted, but rather confirmed by theſe other words of the Typographus Lectori; for there alſo Opus integrum ſignifies the whole volume or volumes, as that is oppoſed to the Magna pars voluminis in the line before, without any reſpect to its being compleated or made intire; Which alone having been denied by me, my anſwer is ſtill ſecured from any force of this Teſtimony.

Not the ſecond; For if I ſhall now grant the Printer to have in that Preface delivered the whole 11.
and naked truth, (which I had no obligation to be confident of) and conſequently, that Grotius committed to a Friend thoſe Annotations, in order to Printing, yet this no way proves, that they were completed and perfected by him; There is a middle, truly ſuppoſable, betwixt theſe two, viz. that they were by occaſion of the Authors unexpected diverſions, delivered to him imperfect. This Remainder of Annotations now by the Reader had been long expected to follow thoſe on the Goſpels, and on the Old Teſtament; and the learned Compiler being now at ſome leiſure to ſet about it, was ſuddenly called back from Paris to Sweden, a long voyage, not certain whether ever he ſhould return again (as indeed he did not) or whether God would ſpare him life and vacancy to perfect that work: Having therefore communicated his Notes to a learned man (one by the way, much more addicted to the doctrine of Calvin than Socinus) going now thence, he left them in his hand, and committed the publiſhing of them to his care, taking only with him thoſe ſheets which were not legible, which he haſtily tranſcribed in his journey, and, as the Printer tells us, returned them from Hamburge; and theſe, as by his words appears, belonging to the laſt volume, that on the Revelation, which therefore had truly thus much of his laſt hand, as this haſty tranſcribing comes to; ſo haſty, that M. who was prepared to write them again for the Preſs, did almoſt deſpair of decyphering them. The reſt, thoſe on the Epiſtles, remained in the firſt rude draught, and are not pretended to have been (ſo much as haſtily) tranſcribed by him, and ſo never obtained that perfecter growth, that fulneſs of limbs and lineaments, which I did and do ſuppoſe his ſtudiosi ocii, and greater leiſure, would have afforded them. Which therefore cannot with any juſtice be ballanced againſt the contrary evidences and plain words either of his Diſcuſſio, (the laſt thing, as I ſaid, written before his death) or of his letter, dated after his reading of Crellius's and the Socinians interpretations (to which his ſuppoſed change is imputed) and avowing his continued adherence to his former doctrine; much leſs, of the ſeveral paſſages producible out of his undoubted writings, maturely compoſed, and publiſht by him, which poſitively and profeſſedly ſet down his ſenſe, and cannot be prejudiced by ſuch uncertain, feeble ſuggeſtions as theſe, drawn from his ſuppoſed miſunderſtanding of ſome few paſſages in the Epiſtles. And let this ſerve for a ſecond ſtage in my propoſed method.

Thirdly, That adhering to my former method, and, upon the grounds premiſed, abſtracting from 12.
or ſetting aſide (as 'tis viſible I have done, from the firſt riſe of this debate) theſe poſthumous Annotations, upon account of ſome heterodox mixtures in them diſcernible, eſpecially in the matter of our juſtification, and the ſatisfaction of Chriſt, and ſome other particulars, elſewhere noted, and confining our diſcourſe (more reaſonably) to thoſe Annotations, which he perfected and publiſhed in his life time, i. e. to thoſe on the Goſpels and on the Old Teſtament, taking in alſo all his other writings whatſoever; There cannot be any ground of ſuſpicion concerning his change, nor want of inſtances (which the Reviewer now requires) to diſprove his Univerſal Negative, and to invalidate the charge brought againſt that learned man, of his wreſting to another ſenſe every text of Scripture, wherin teſtimony is given to that ſacred truth, or at leaſt concealing and obſcuring the doctrine of them.]

I ſhall therefore, being now admoniſhed of Quintilians rule of aut negandum aut defendendum, do my 13.
duty in obſerving it, and formally deny his poſition, of every text, &c. and for contrary inſtances, begin with Matth. 20. 28. where the ſon of man is ſaid to give his life a λύτρον, or ranſom for many. Here, ſaith Grotius, Puto reſpici vaticinium, Iſa. 53. 10. ubi dicitur, ſi Chriſtus vitam ſuam dediſſet אשם, quod hic recte λύτρον vertitur, fore, ut ſui cognitione multos juſtificaret, & poſtea, ipſe peccata multorum tulit. Here firſt, the parallel is ſet by Grotius betwixt the Evangeliſt and the Prophet Iſaiah, and ſo that 53. of that Prophecy is brought to this ſenſe, of Chriſt's giving his life a ranſome for many, i. e. of his ſatisfaction; and yet farther explained by that other phraſe of the Prophet there uſed, his bearing the ſins of many, and the like, Heb. 9. 28. his being offer'd to bear the ſins of many.

Secondly, The λύτρον or ranſom here, is interpreted by the Hebrew אשם or ſacrifice for ſin there, 14.
and after more fully, by ſacrificium piaculare, περὶ ἁμαρτίας, ἱλαστικὸν, an expiatory, propitiatory ſacrifice for ſin, victima luſtralis — and the giving his life a ranſom, the offering it up ſuch a ſacrifice for many, and this as the ground or condition of his juſtifying many by the knowledge of him; which what is it, but the founding of our juſtification in the propitiatory ſacrifice of Chriſt's death, i. e. in the ſatisfaction wrought by it for us?

So Mat. 26. 28. Where Chriſts blood of the New Teſtament is ſaid to be ſhed for many for the remiſſion 15. of ſins. Here, ſaith he, Puto Danielis oraculum reſpici, in quo de Meſſia dictum eſt, חגבר ברות לרבים δυναμόσει διαθήκην πολλοῖς, cum præceſſiſſet לכפר העון ad expianda peccata. Adde quæ Rom. 5. 15. (it ſhould be, 10.) ſic & in Barnabæ quæ dicitur Epiſtola, οὐ δοῦλός ἐστι τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν ἀλλὰ σκεῦος τοῦ πνεύματος ἁγιάσματος θυσίαν. Adding, Simul autem tranſit Chriſtus à comparatione fœderum ad comparationem ſacrificiorum piacularium, in quibus anima pecudis offerebatur, velut ſuccedanea animæ hominis qui mortem meruiſſet, unde victima ferre peccata dicebatur in lege. Hinc mori victima pro homine --- Here again, firſt, the words of Daniel of making reconciliation for iniquity, and confirming the covenant with many, c. 9. 24. 27. are ſet as a Prophecy parallel to this Evangelical truth of Chriſts blood of the New Teſtament being ſhed for the expiating of our ſins. So likewiſe Rom. 5. 10. of our being reconciled to God, when we were enemies, by the death of his Son. And all theſe three illuſtrated by the plain words of Barnabas's Epiſtle, that Chriſt offered up himſelf the veſſel of the Spirit, a ſacrifice for our ſins. Secondly, It is here affirmed of his blood, that it was an expiatory ſacrifice, ſuch as wherein one is offered up in ſtead of the other which had deſerved death, and is accordingly ſaid to bear the ſin of the other. And then, what could be more expreſs to the doctrine of ſatisfaction, than theſe three places of Prophet, Evangeliſt, and Apoſtle, thus interpreted, which being added to the former, and now laid before the Reviewer (willing to have perſwaded the Reader there were none ſuch, becauſe I formerly thought it needleſs to produce them) will ſure now paſs for ἴσα μαρτύεια, inſtances as competent as any Quintilian would exact, to diſprove the Univerſal propoſition of the [not one text in the whole Scripture --- which is not wreſted to another ſenſe, or at leaſt the doctrine concealed and obſcured by theſe Annotations.]

16. But here on this occaſion the place in his Annotations on Iſa. 53. is by the Reviewer reſumed, as hopeful to yield ſome colour to infer his charge; Where, ſaith he, he gives ſuch an expoſition of the whole Chapter, as is manifeſtly and univerſally inconſiſtent with any ſuch deſign on the words, as that which he intends to prove from them in his Book De ſatisfact. and in particular tells you in his Annotations on the place, as alſo on 1 Pet. 2. 24. that סבל ſignifies auferre, which with all his ſtrength he had there contended againſt.

17. To this I anſwer, Firſt (as to his expoſition of the whole chapter) that I have already told him, that Grotius endeavoured to find a firſt ſenſe of the words of that Prophecy, ſo as to belong peculiarly to the Jews uſage of the Prophet Jeremy, and that I acknowledge not to be appliable always to their uſage of Chriſt. But beſide this, ſaith he, there is a more principal and ſublime ſenſe, and that of the more literal of the two, wherein the whole chapter belongs to Chriſt; but this ſenſe being more vulgarly markt by others, is only in general, once for all, pointed at by him, in thoſe ſhort Annotations, being alſo more fully explicated elſewhere, in a ſet diſcourſe on that ſubject.

18. This anſwer being formerly given by me, the Reviewer is now pleaſed to miſtake, and to change it into a diſtinction betwixt the literal and myſtical ſenſe of a place, and then to undertake that his perverting the firſt literal ſenſe of the chapter, or giving it a completion in any perſon but Chriſt, is no leſs than blaſphemy. But to this I reply, that my words are miſreported by the diſputant, and agreeably, my ſenſe alſo. For I diſtinguiſht not betwixt the literal and myſtical ſenſe of the place (or if I had, I muſt much have wronged Grotius, who reſolved the words to belong oft more literally or καὶ λέξιν to Chriſt, than to any other) but betwixt the firſt and literal interpretation, which had its immediate completion among the Jews, near that time, wherein it was written, and the more remote, concerning Chriſt: that indeed myſtical, becauſe veiled under the firſt; but literal alſo, becauſe that to which the very words belonged as properly, oft more properly, than to the other; As when the λέξις or plain word without any figure belongs to Chriſt, and only the figurative interpretation of it, the μετωνυμία to Jeremy. Of theſe two ſenſes Grotius makes frequent mention in his interpretations. See the note on Zach. 9. 9. Behold thy King ſhall come, which, ſaith he, primo & maxime obvio ſenſu, in the firſt and moſt obvious ſenſe, belongs to Zorobabel; but ſublimiore quodam ſenſu, in a more ſublime ſenſe, to the Meſſias; And many the like.

19. If thus the Reviewer had underſtood my words (which I then thought plain enough, till I ſaw them miſapprehended) I am in charity to think he would not have deemed it little leſs than blaſphemy, thus to interpret words of ſome other in a firſt, but that leſs principal ſenſe, which belong to the Son of God in the more principal and ſublime ſenſe, more remote in time of completion, but not in reſpect of the propriety of the words.

20. This the inſtance did evince, which I gave from the words, [out of Egypt have I called my Son] which evidently had a firſt ſenſe in the Iſraelites, a ſecond, equally literal in Chriſt, and ſo 'tis applied in the New Teſtament; and many more might be brought of affinity with it, if there were need of them.

21. It will be more to the purpoſe of vindicating Grotius's intention, and clearing the whole matter, that I give the Reader one ſignal paſſage from him, by which his ſenſe muſt in all reaſon be judged, being by him premiſed before his interpretation of the latter part of this Prophecy, from chap. 40. which he generally interprets in a firſt ſenſe, of matters that belonged to the Jews from the time of their deportation, to the Maccabees, &c. but acknowledges to contain alſo, and that more ſimply and more clearly the matters of Chriſt.

22. The words are in the proœme to Iſa. 40. Cum autem omnia Dei beneficia umbram in ſe contineant eorum quæ Chriſtus præſtitit, tum præcipuè iſta omnia quæ deinceps ab Iſaiâ prænuntiabantur, verbis ſæpiſſimè à Deo ſic directis, ut ſimplicius limpidiuſq; in res Chriſti, quam in illas quas primò ſignificare Eſaias voluit, convenirent. Whereas all Gods bleſſings have in them a ſhadow of thoſe things which Chriſt performed, this is eſpecially applicable to all thoſe things which in the enſuing chapters (this of chap. 53. muſt needs be comprehended in that ſtyle) are foretold by Iſaiah, the words moſt often being ſo directed by God, that they agree more ſimply and clearly to the matters of Chriſt, than to thoſe which Iſaias would firſt ſignifie by them.

23. Here is the ground of what I ſaid of the firſt ſenſe of theſe prophecies, viz. that which Iſaias firſt meant to ſignifie by them, ſuppoſing that there was ſomewhat elſe, belonging to Chriſt, which in a ſecond ſenſe or later completion he ſignified alſo, and the words ſo directed by God the wiſe diſpoſer, that they moſt ſimply and clearly, i. e. without figures (which are uſual in prophecies) belonged to him. This being by him ſaid once for all, of all thoſe prophecies that follow, doth by perfect equivalence, (a collective being as full and efficacious as a diſtributive) conclude of every particular, and conſequently of this fifty third before us (of which he again gives the ſame account as hath been ſaid, particularly, when he comes unto it) and of every verſe in it, that it moſt clearly and literally belongs to Chriſt, though in Jeremy he ſuppoſed it had another interpretation. And ſo this, I now hope, will be deemed ſatisfactory, as to the general, to vindicate his expoſition of the whole chapter; and the having mention'd it, may be in ſome degree neceſſary to the preſerving of them from miſpriſions, who read not thoſe notes intirely, that they may comprehend the ſenſe of the whole prophecies, (which is the proper'ſt uſe of them) but caſt their eyes upon ſome particular texts, to ſatisfie their preſent wants, or curioſities.

But then ſecondly, for the partitular verſe 11. I anſwer, Firſt, That in the Annotation on 1 Pet. 2. 24. I cannot be concern'd, having oft reſolved that, as the reſt on the Epiſtles, to be unſufficient to give us his ſenſe. As for that on Iſaiah, if it were true, that he had there interpreted סבל auferet, Firſt, This could not have been juſtly charged upon him, as a Socinian interpretation, Tertullian having given him authority for it, as he cites it, on Mat. 8. 17. and indeed that Evangeliſt too having there applied that prophecy to νόσους βαστάζειν, the bearing their bodily diſeaſes, which ſure was ſo to be underſtood, as ſhould denote his curing, (i. e. his auferet, taking them away) and not his bearing them in their ſtead, taking upon him all the diſeaſes which he cured in any. But then ſecondly 'tis clear, that he doth not ſo interpret it [auferre, to take away] as to exclude, but expreſly to include the ferre, or bearing alſo; Auferet, ſaith he, as applied to Jeremy, by a metonymy, but that founded in the other of bearing, as the literal, quia qui ſordes auferunt, ſolent eas collo ſuppoſito portare; ſo that the literal of bearing, or carrying our iniquities, is (by the former obſervation) left to be compleated in Chriſt, who did both bear and take away the ſins of the world, and nothing by Grotius is here affirmed, or interpreted to the contrary of that. And ſo much for the other part of the Objection, and ſo for the third part of my method. 24.

Fourthly, When I had propoſed to conſideration two things for the preventing all jealouſie of any after change in Grotius, and the Reviewer had taken notice of one of them, under the ſtyle of my firſt obſervation, and offered ſome ſemblance of anſwer to it, pag. 6. before he comes to the ſecond, he [illegible] not, as he ſaith, but ſuppoſe, that he is already abſolved from a neceſſity of farther procedure—] by that means freeing himſelf from giving any heed to that argument which I had laid greateſt weight on, as that which of all others was moſt conſiderable in this buſineſs, viz. Grotius's own words (who certainly knew his own heart, better than any accuſer, or diviner can be ſuppoſed to do, and ought to be believed, rather than any contrary ſurmiſes concerning him) expreſly teſtifying his conſtancy in adhering ſtill (now after the time of his ſuppoſed change) to what he had delivered in his Book De ſatisfactione. Herein I ſhall leave the Reader to paſs the judgment, whence that abſolution was derived to the Reviewer, by which he could not but ſuppoſe himſelf freed from any neceſſity of conſidering this evidence, when yet he was at leiſure (by way of commutation) to heap up contrary appearances from the Annotations on the Epiſtles, which I profeſt not to allow to be his, and therefore could not be concern'd in the producing of them. 25.

Here only I had expreſt my opinion that the Notes on the Apocalypſe, had (as I ſtill think I have been informed, and have already premiſed ſome proof of it) received from his own pencil the very lineaments, and colours, wherein they appear; And therefore when he pitches on one Annotation on that Book Rev. 1. 5. Chriſt's waſhing us from our ſins in his bloud, where he thinks the ſatisfaction of Chriſt concealed, and the Socinian interpretation taken up by Grotius, contrary to his manner of explicating and applying it in his Book De ſatisfactione; This will require to be a while conſidered by me. 26.

The words of Grotius he hath rightly ſet down; but I ſuppoſe, not ſufficiently conſidered the latter part of them, which runs thus, Dicitur Chriſtus ſuo ſanguine nos laviſſe, quia & ipſe omnia præſtitit, quæ ad id requirebantur; Chriſt is ſaid to have waſht us with his bloud, becauſe he performed all things which were required to it, i. e. to the waſhing of the ſoul. Which words are certainly of competent largeneſs to contain (and ſo exclude not) the doctrine of ſatisfaction, that being of the number of thoſe things, which in Gods counſel, were appointed, and ſo required to the waſhing of our ſouls; This being conſidered, it will be no prejudice to that learned man, that in the former words he took in Socinus's interpretation of [morte ſuâ certos nos reddidit veritatis eorum quæ docuerat, quæ talia ſunt, ut nihil ſit aptius ad purgandos à vitiis animos ---] For of that there is no queſtion, but that Chriſt by his death did give us aſſurance of the truth of his doctrine, and that this aſſurance is very apt to purge us from our evil and vitious courſes. In reſpect of which purgation, Saint Paul himſelf ſaith, Tit. 2. 4. that Chriſt gave himſelf (that is ſurely, even to die) for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity (the power as well as guilt of it) and purifie unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works. And Gal. 1. 4. he gave himſelf for our ſins (and thereby, I ſuppoſe, made a ſatisfaction for us) that he might deliver us from this preſent evil world, from the vices and abominations thereof. And Eph. 5. 25. Chriſt gave himſelf for the Church, that he might ſanctifie and cleanſe it, that he might preſent it unto himſelf a glorious Church, not having ſpot or wrinkle or any ſuch thing. From whence I conclude, that the Socinians errour conſiſts not herein, that they affirm this; but that they ſay, this is all that Chriſt did by his death, and ſo exclude his ſatisfaction; which can by no means be affirmed of Grotius, who, as he wrote a Book in defence of it, ſo in this very place aſcribes to Chriſt the performing omnia all things, indefinitely, which were required to the waſhing of our ſouls, from which number his expiatory ſacrifice was never excluded by Grotius. 27.

And then it may be fit to be remembred, that as the denying the ſatisfaction of Chriſt is one great errour juſtly charged on the Socinians, ſo the confining the effects of the death of Chriſt, to that one head of ſatisfaction, is an errour alſo, very carefully to be averted by him, that deſires to reap benefit by Chriſts death. 28.

After his view of this place, he is pleaſed (to prevent the Readers farther trouble) to refer him to Grotius's Annotation on one place more of the Revelation, chap. 13. 9. and I have obſerved his directions, and can aſſure him, there is not there one word to this matter. Only that Arethas rightly applies the phraſe [from the foundation of the world] to the word [book] not to the word [ſlain] evincing it from the parallel place, chap. 17. 8. where ſo it is joined [Whoſe names are written in the 29.

book of life from the foundation of the world] the book of life, in one place, and the book of life of the lamb ſlain, or the ſlain lambs book of life, in the other, being perfectly equipollent.

30. The remainder of the Catalogue of Texts, that is added, is all again out of the Epiſtles, and ſo hath already more than once been accounted for, by denying the Annotations on them to have been perfected by Grotius. And this is all that need to be conſidered, in reference to the firſt branch of the ſuggeſtion, that concerning the doctrine of the ſatisfaction of Chriſt.

31. On the ſecond Socinian head of doctrine, that concerning the Deity of Chriſt, whereon the Diſputer had affirmed [that of all the texts of the Old and New Teſtament, whereby the Deity of Chriſt is uſually confirmed, — Grotius hath not left any more than one, if one, ſpeaking any thing clearly to this purpoſe.] I thought I had given ſome matter of conviction, by referring to that learned man's Annotations on John 1. when both that one ſignal text is left by him ſpeaking clearly to this purpoſe, and many other places of Scripture are mentioned, and interpreted, and applied to the ſame ſenſe, as parallel, and anſwerable to that. To this he replies, that this of John 1. was the one place by him expreſly excepted, and therefore this inſtance would not evade the charge. And for the other places, Prov. 8. &c. he is pleaſed to ſuppoſe, that on the view of my defence, men muſt needs ſuppoſe that in the Annotations on the places repeated, Grotius muſt give their ſenſe, as bearing witneſs to the Deity of Chriſt; Hereupon he will turn to the ſeveral places, and give the Reader an account of them.]

32. But before he proceed to that, and to ſave the pains of many of them, it may be ſoon conſidered, that what Grotius doth in the Notes on John 1. is as truly his act, as any thing that is done by him in any other place, much more ſo, than what is publiſht under his name, in the Annotations on the Epiſtles; and conſequently, that as many places as he hath there affirmed to be parallel to John 1. 1. ſo many places he hath left ſpeaking clearly to this purpoſe. Grotius had not at that time publiſht any other Notes on any part of the Bible, but thoſe only on the Goſpels. On the reſt of the New Teſtament he never lived to publiſh any, yet here on John 1. hath affirmed the words of S. Paul, Col. 1. 16. [all things were created by Chriſt—] to be agreeable to the words of S. John, that without him was nothing made that was made. Is it not now as viſible, that he hath left that place of Col. 1. 16. ſpeaking clearly to the Deity and creative power of Chriſt, by which all things were at firſt made, as if he had lived to ſet out Annotations purpoſely on that place, and had therein ſo interpreted it? This certainly is ſo clear, that I cannot yet doubt (what ever the Reviewers ſarcaſme would ſuggeſt) of being a ſucceſful advocate in this matter.

33. The ſame is again as clear of 2 Pet. 3. 5. and of the two places brought by him, in concent with it, from the Chaldee Paraphraſt on Iſai. 45. 12. & 48. 13. to teſtify that by this ὁ λόγος, i. e. by the word of the Lord, Chriſt, the whole world was founded; which again (though he never ſhould mention them again in all his writings) are yet ſolemnly left by him, to teſtify clearly to the Deity of Chriſt; And ſo, more than that one of John 1.

34. But the place more largely recited by Grotius to this purpoſe, is that of Prov. 8. from verſe 23. A ſeculo habui principatum, I was ſet up from everlaſting, to verſe 27. when he prepared the heavens I was there; And this the Reviewer thinks fit to examine, by repairing to his Annotations on the Old Teſtament, and there 1. he finds his note on the Wiſdom there ſpoken of, to be [Hæc de ea ſapientia quæ in lege apparet exponunt Hebræi, & ſane ei, ſi non ſoli, at præcipue hæc attributa conveniunt] and this he thinks a very advantageous diſcovery; for if they agree ſolely or principally to the wiſdom that ſhines in the Law, how can they be the attributes of the perſon of the Son of God?

35. But I anſwer, that note of his, is on the firſt verſe of that chapter, far enough from verſe 23. where the citation in his Note on John 1. begins. And why might not many parts of the character of wiſdom be by the Jews duly applied to the Law (as will appear, if you read the former part of the chapter, for above twenty verſes together) and yet the latter and ſublimer part of its character be competible only to Chriſt, the eternal wiſdom of the Father? And why ſhould not Grotius's [hæc] on verſe 1. rather belong to thoſe former 20. verſes, than to the 23. &c. which he there (as in the Notes on the Goſpels) expreſly interprets ſo, as that verſe 27. and 30. be all one with John 1. 1. and ſo Prov. 9. 1. Wiſdom built her an houſe, i. e. ſaith he, corpus humanum, a mans body, which is not applicable to any thing, but Chriſt in his incarnation. And ſo I hope this artifice hath ſtood the Reviewer in little ſtead.

36. But then, ſaith he, On verſe 22. Grotius affirms of קנני that it is rendred not amiſs by the Chaldee בלח and by the Septuagint ἐκτήσατο, though he knew that ſenſe was pleaded by the Arians, and exploded by the ancient Doctors of the Church.]

37. To this I anſwer, That Grotius's words, [ſenſu non malo, ſi creare ſumas pro facere ut appareat] ſignify not, that rendring is not amiſs, for he had formerly expreſt his opinion of that, that Aquila and Symmachus and Theodotion their rendring it by ἐκτήσατό με, was well agreeing or anſwerable to the Hebrew קנני but that the other which was not the right rendring, might yet bear a tolerable, or not ill ſenſe, if it were interpreted to ſignify no more than that which he there names, viz. [making to appear] a ſenſe which the Fathers never exploded, nor was fit to be pretended by the Arrians, or favoured by any in kindneſs to them.

38. This therefore was but a weak foundation of that confidence, with which the Reviewer concludes, that of the Son of God, the eſſential wiſdom of God, ſubſiſting with the Father, we have not one word] eſpecially when he had himſelf confeſt that [on verſe 27. he adds, aderam, i. e. ὢν παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ, John 1. 1.] for certainly if thoſe words of wiſdom, when he prepared the heavens I was there, and the ſame again verſe 30. (to which alſo he refers the Reader, though the Reviewer pleaſed not to ſee it) When he appointed the foundations of the earth, then was I by him] be all one with [the word was with God] John 1. 1. there is then ſome word of the Son of God, the eſſential wiſdom, in thoſe Notes, and perfectly as much as is proportionable to the manner of thoſe very ſhort Annotations on the Old Teſtament.

39. To which may be added, that by interpreting the phraſe [his ways] verſe 22. by operationes Dei, the operations of God, the ſenſe of that verſe (which the Reviewer thinks perverted or obſcured) muſt in his rendring run thus, In the beginning of his operations God poſſeſſed this eternal wiſdom, the Son of God, which will be ſtill to the ſame ſenſe; And then the Note on chap. 9. 1. ſets down the incarnation of this eternal word, or wiſdom; And what could have been more punctual againſt the Socinian intereſt, than all this, being thus briefly amaſſed together, if the Reviewer would have but the patience to diſcern it?

What he adds by way of wonderment, that I ſhould add the places of Iſa. 45. 12. and 48. 13. to the number of texts interpreted by Grotius to this matter of the Deity, is ſoon ſatisfied, by remembring (what was viſible enough before) that the Chaldee Paraphraſt in thoſe and many other places rendring the word [God] by [God and his word] is fitly brought by Grotius, as a witneſs, that the world was created by the word of God, as that is God, and that that is the ſenſe of thoſe places. Which if it be, then are thoſe texts of Scripture left by Grotius, to teſtifie to this truth of the Deity of the word of God, i. e. of Chriſt. 40.

Now for the principal place that of John 1. 1. the Reviewer hath expreſt his diſlikes alſo to that, and mention'd ſome grounds thereof, firſt, that Grotius is very careful of aſcribing an ὑπόστασις τῷ λόγῳ] But if by this phraſe he would ſignifie him unwilling to aſcribe an hypoſtaſis to the word, this is miſrepreſented by him; for 'tis evident, Grotius expreſſes no diſlike to that ſtyle, all that he ſaith that way is, vocem ὑποστάσεως —— non à primis Chriſtianis uſurpatam, cùm contra μίαν ὑπόστασιν dixerit Athanaſius, Synodus Nicæna, Sardicenſis, & Romana aliquot, that that word, and ſome others was not uſed by the firſt Chriſtians, that Athanaſius, and the Nicene, Sardicene, and ſome Roman Councils affirmed, that there was one hypoſtaſis. And all theſe, I hope, are ſo contrary to the Arian, that if Grotius ſhould chuſe to ſpeak with them, he could with no juſtice be accuſed of that hereſie, or obſcuring the Deity of Chriſt by ſo ſpeaking. 41.

And yet it is farther clear, that from Origen and others after him, he cites the diſtinction of hypoſtaſes, and what could he have done more to obtain the Reviewers favour, than to cite it from them, that uſed, and not pretend it from them, that uſed it not? 42.

That he hath interweaved many Platonick interpretations of ὁ λόγος, is alſo in the ſecond place ſuggeſted, and at once, that he hath darkened the whole counſel of God in that place.] But I hope there is no hereſie in letting the Chriſtian Reader know, how much Platoniſts and Heathen Philoſophers have by groping diſcover'd of divine truths; and to me it is not imaginable, that when the Chriſtian doctrine is once declared, ſuch additions as theſe ſhould, by being ſubjoined ex abundanti, obſcure what was once made clear, and ſo darken the whole counſel of God. 43.

Thirdly, It may not be amiſs, ſaith he, to obſerve, that not only the Arians, but Photinus himſelf acknowledged that the world was made τῷ θεῷ λόγῳ] And to this I anſwer, that what is wide of the mark, to which it is directed, no way ſufficient to infer the deſired concluſion, is (in the managing of a controverſie) amiſs to be obſerved; And ſuch will this obſervation appear to be; For the matter of the queſtion being a charge againſt Grotius, of Socinian doctrine, what can be concluded (to that) from the bare mention of the Arians, and Photinus his acknowledgments, unleſs firſt it be proved, that Grotius was an Arian, or Photinian, and ſecondly, that all Arians and Photinians are Socinians? Either of which, as they have not the leaſt appearance of truth in them, ſo are they not ſo much as attempted here to be proved by the author of this obſervation. On the contrary, there are theſe five ſhrewd prejudices againſt it: Firſt, That what the Arians ſay in this matter, Photinus doth not ſay; and ſo they were not fit to be put together. Secondly, That what the Arians ſay, Grotius doth not ſay. Thirdly, That what the Photinians ſay, neither the Arians, nor Grotius do ſay. Fourthly, That the Socinians do in this differ much both from Arians and Photinians; and yet Fifthly, That Grotius differs as much (or more) from the Socinians herein, as he doth from either of the other two. 44.

All this will appear by viewing ſeverally the Arians, and Photinians, and Socinians doctrine in this point, and the diſtance of Grotius's interpretation from each of theſe. For the firſt, Arius did indeed acknowledge in his * Epiſtle, that God did by his only Son make τοὺς αἰῶνας, καὶ τὰ λοιπὰ, the worlds and the reſt, and in the words of the text, ὅτι πάντα δι' αὐτοῦ ἐγένετο, that all things were made by him, and without him was nothing made that was made. But ſure this was no part of his hereſie, (if it were, the Scripture, as well as Grotius, muſt be involved in it, who affirmed it equally) but that he firſt affirmed Chriſt to be himſelf a creature, κτίσμα τοῦ θεοῦ τέλειον, ſaith he, he by whom God created the world, was a perfect creature of Gods, though created πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, before all ages; and again ſaith Epiphanius, Κἂν κτίσμα αὐτὸν λέγωσιν, ὁμολογοῦσιν αὐτὸν ὑπὲρ ὅλα τὰ κτίσματα αὐτῶν, though they call him a creature, yet they confeſs him above all his creatures. So again ſpeaking of the Holy Ghoſt, they will have him to be κτίσμα κτίσματος, the creature of a creature, where ſtill that is Arius his hereſie, in this matter, that he made Chriſt a creature, and to that applied the Septuagints rendring of the place, Prov. 8. of θεὸς ἔκτισέ με, God created me, and conſequently would not allow him to be ὁμοούσιος, of the ſame ſubſtance, or equal with the Father. And when Grotius ſaith any thing in favour of this doctrine, of Chriſt's being a creature, or denies his equality with the Father, then he muſt paſs for an Arian; (Of which he hath not yet had the luck to be accuſed, that I know of;) But 'tis certain he hath not done ſo; nay on the other ſide, 'tis competently evident, if but by the notion which he applies to ἔκτισε in his Annotations on Prov. 8. (to reſcue that rendring from an evil ſenſe) that he utterly rejects that notion wherein the Arian took it, viz. for creating, and ſo that he is herein profeſſly free from that hereſie. 45.

* Epiph. l. 2. Hær. 49.

As for Photinus in the ſecond place, 'tis certain his hereſie, like that of Paulus Samoſatenus, conſiſted in denying that Chriſt had a being, or ſubſiſtence from the beginning, or before the Holy Ghoſt's coming upon Mary; ſo ſaith † Epiphanius, Φάσκει ὅτι ἀπ' ἀρχῆς τὸ χρεὼν μὴ εἶναι, κατὰ δὲ Μαρίας τὸ θεῖον καὶ θεοῦ αὐτοῦ ὑπάρχειν, ἔξοδε φησὶ, τὸ πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἐπῆλθεν —— Now though this heretick was content to acknowledge that the Father made the world διὰ τοῦ ὅλου ἐν αὐτῷ λόγου, by the λόγος which was in him, yet that it was not Chriſt which he underſtood by that ſtyle, is moſt clear, both by his denying Chriſt to have had then any ſubſiſtence, and ſecondly by the ſimilitude, by which he expreſt himſelf, ὥσπερ διὰ λόγου ὁ ἄνθρωπος ποιεῖ ὃ βούλεται, οὕτως διὰ τοῦ ἰδίου λόγου, ὁ πατὴρ διὰ τοῦ ὅλου ἐν αὐτῷ λόγου ἐποίησε τὰ πάντα, as a man by λόγος doth what he will (by λόγος meaning a kind of Idea in the agents mind, by, or according to which he doth any thing) ſo by his own λόγος, or by the λόγος which is in him, the Father hath made all things; but eſpecially by Epiphanius's way of confuting him, ἀλλ' ἐν τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ τῷ λόγος ἐσθιάθεος 46. † Hær. 51.

θεὸς ἀεὶ, ἡ προφορικὸς ὑπάρχων, ὃ δύναται λόγος ἄνθρωπος, ἀλλ' ἀνθρώπου λόγος --- The λόγος in man, whether the word of the mind within, or the word ſpoken, cannot be called man, but the λόγος of man, whereas the λόγος in Saint John is ſaid to be God. And ſo, as Photinus ſaying [all things were made by the λόγος, which was in God] ſaid quite another thing from what Arius had ſaid (and therefore this Reviewers obſervation was in that reſpect guilty of that fallacy, which Ariſtotle calls plurium interrogationum) ſo is it moſt certain, that Grotius's interpretation of the Evangeliſt, is no way conſonant to Photinus (any more than to Arius) his notion. For when to thoſe words of the Evangeliſt [In the beginning was the word] his note is, Jam tum erat, ſic mos eſt Hæbreis æternitatem populariter deſcribere] which defines the eternity of his being, he brings for explication of that form of ſpeech, the words of Juſtine, προϋπηρξε πρὸ τῶν αἰώνων, he was ſubſiſtent before the worlds. So again on thoſe words [the word was with God] he ſaith this was in oppoſition to his being ſeen in the world in his incarnation, vult enim dicere, ante eum fuiſſe inconſpicuum, he would expreſs that before his incarnation, he was inviſible; adding for proof, Dicitur enim Deus ἀόρατος; 1 Tim. 1. 17. for God is ſaid to be inviſible, and to inhabit the light which none approacheth; by all which it is clear, that by [the word] he underſtands inviſible God himſelf, being or ſubſiſting eternally with the Father; which is in every part contrary to Photinus's doctrine, as hath been ſhewed.

47. Thirdly, For the Socinians, their interpretation is known to differ toto cœlo in this particular both from Arius, and Photinus, being after this manner; that * In the beginning of the ſpiritual world, or the Goſpel, the word, that Son of God, which was born of Mary in Auguſtus's reign, ſo called in reſpect of his office, which was to make known Gods word to men, was with God, i. e. before John's preaching, was, as the word, or in reſpect of this office, known to none but to God: That this word is God, i. e. that Chriſt was ſo called (as Angels and Princes are) in reſpect of the great benefits which we receive from him, and the dignity to which he is by God advanced, (diſtinctly denying that he is the ſupream God, the author of all things, or creator of the world) that all things were created by him, i. e. all the new ſpiritual and divine things, which are under the Goſpel done in the world, and ſo on, in concordance with this Foundation From every part of which, Grotius's explications of that text are moſt remote, as hath already appeared, and have not the leaſt infuſion of this leven diſcernable in them, as will be evident to any, who ſhall but caſt an eye on his Notes on that place. Of the Notes on the Epiſtles which came out ſince his death, this cannot be ſaid; for there many of theſe, or the like Socinian interpretations are crept in, ſome words of the Epiſtles expounded in a ſenſe expreſly contrary to what he hath here incidentally ſaid of the ſame words. This I have pointed at in one eminent inſtance, the place to the Coloſſians, chap. 1. 16. of the worlds being made by Chriſt; and thereon founded my reſolution, that they were none of his, nor conſequently did I ever permit my plea for him, to be extended to the juſtifying of them. Thus much may ſuffice for the ſupernumerary obſervation, which being, ſure, meant to inſinuate ſomewhat, it now appears with what juſtice it was produced by him. By the way, I ſuppoſe my account alſo given, why the interpretations of John 1. and Prov. 8. of the world being made by ὁ λόγος the word of God, were by me formerly produced, as irrefragable evidences, that this learned man inclined not to the Socinians in this matter of the Deity of Chriſt. The Reviewer may now judge what reaſon I had for it.

* Socin. in John. 1.

48. Laſtly, There being a threefold λόγος, ὑποστατικὸς, ἐνδιάθετος, προφορικὸς, 'tis ſuggeſted that nothing but λόγος ἐνδιάθετος, was by Grotius intended in thoſe Annotations on John 1. 1. but withal 'tis confeſt, that much from ſome quotations there uſed, may be ſaid againſt it.] And if there may, and if thoſe quotations be ſo clear, as thoſe out of Juſtin Martyr, and Athenagoras, of Chriſt's preſubſiſting before the worlds, of his being God before the worlds, that from the beginning God being an eternal mind, εἶχεν ἐν ἑαυτῷ ὁ λόγον ἀΐδιος, had the word in himſelf eternally; and if the negative [nothing but λόγος ἐνδιάθετος] be not reconcileable with any one mention of any thing elſe, ſuch as Chriſt's being God, and with God from all eternity; upon theſe grounds, I ſay, I ſhall confeſs it the prudenteſt courſe, which the Reviewer here hath taken, viz. to defer the undertaking of this task, and to add no more, than the unproved ſuggeſtion, till ſpace of greater leiſure.

49. In reproaching of me for a triumphant cloſe, he is now pleaſed to give an Eſſay of his own humility, in heaping theſe ſeverals into one period. Firſt, That he ſaid not Grotius was a Socinian. Secondly, That in his Annotations on the ſix verſes in the Proverbs, two in Iſaiah, one in Saint Peter, one in Saint Paul, added to many in the beginning of Saint John, Grotius ſpeaks not one word to the purpoſe. Thirdly, That he doth not interpret Chriſt's eternal ſubſiſtence with God, ſo as to a perſonal ſubſiſtence.

50. To theſe three I briefly anſwer. To the firſt, That the only thing that in my firſt Digreſſion (or ſecond Defence of Grotius) I undertook in behalf of that learned man, being the injuſtice of the charge, of his being ſometimes a Socinian, ſometimes a Papiſt, ſometimes both; This is by the Reviewer in his Epiſtle to the Oxford Heads, undertaken to be refuted, which can never be done, unleſs he both ſay and prove, that Grotius was a Socinian. To the ſecond, That, as hath now appeared, Grotius hath ſpoken to the purpoſe of the Deity of Chriſt, on the eighth of the Proverbs (as of his incarnation on the ninth) as well as on John 1. And for the other places, as it is ſufficient that he hath recited them to that purpoſe on John 1. ſo the account is clear why he is not found to do it elſewhere. On Iſaiah keeping himſelf to the literal Hebrew, he had no occaſion in thoſe conciſe notes, to take notice of that, which only the Chaldee there had ſaid. The other two are in the Epiſtles, on which the Annotations, which are publiſhed under his name, are by me deemed imperfect, and not to carry his full ſenſe with them. To the third as before, That he cites out of Origen, and others after him, the uſe of the word hypoſtaſes, and the diſtinction of them. Only he ſaith the word was not uſed à primis Chriſtianis, by the firſt Chriſtians, any more than ὁμοούσιον, &c. And ſo it is certain it was not.

51. In the next place, I am reproved that I neither make inquiry into his Treatiſe, for the places in the Old Teſtament, wherein the Deity of Chriſt is teſtified to, and are corrupted by that learned man, nor yet will look into Grotius's Annotations on thoſe texts, which I remember at all times to be pleaded to that purpoſe. To this I anſwer, Firſt, That I never undertook the vindication of all Grotius's Annotations, nor ever ſaid any thing, which ſhould ingage me in ſuch a long task as this. Secondly, The diſcouragements, which I mentioned to have already received from making inquiry into this Reviewers former Treatiſe, were taken from what had appeared from Grotius on John 1. compared with, and found evidently to ſuperſede this Authors ſuggeſtions of [but one, if one place, in all the Bible, left by Grotius clearly teſtifying this truth] For when, beſide that of John 1. I found there ſo many more, put together, particularly Prov. 8. verſe 23.— largely ſet down, and in the Annotations on the Proverbs, found the ſame ſenſe adhered to, and a reference back again to John 1. where he had ſpoken ſo largely on this matter, what need was there of farther inquiry for that, which had thus readily offered it ſelf?

Now to my two ſuppletory conſiderations, he hath his replies alſo; To the firſt, by confeſſing, what I deſire, that one expreſs text of Scripture, is ſufficient for the confirmation of a divine truth] but then, denying that five places have been by me produced out of the Annotations of Grotius for the confirmation of the truth pleaded about.] 52.

To this I anſwer, 1. that if any one be ſufficient to confirm this divine truth, then Grotius hath been demonſtrated ſufficiently to have confirmed it, who hath evidently brought John 1. which is one ſuch text. Secondly, that that Text, and Prov. 8. 23— he hath certainly not depraved, nor kept back from teſtifying to this truth; So likewiſe Col. 1. 18. and 2 Pet. 3. 5. if we may judge by his own words on John 1. and not by the poſthumous Annotations, which I deem not competent meaſures to judge him by; and ſo there are four of the five. Thirdly, he hath there alſo applied to it the places of Iſaiah, in the Chaldee reading, and theſe ſuperadded to the former, are very ſufficient to confirm a divine truth, and that is all I ſaid in this matter. But then Fourthly, as the conciſeneſs of his Notes on the Old Teſtament, and his deſire to clear the firſt, and neareſt ſenſe of the Prophecies, ſuch as pertain'd to the then approaching affairs of the Jews, are a competent account of his not inlarging to the more remote and ultimate completions in Jeſus Chriſt: So his general advertiſements, more than once given (ſuch as hath been produced from his Preface to Iſa. 40. and to Iſa. 53.) are ſufficient to teſtify his acknowledgment of Chriſt's being predicted in thoſe places of the Prophets, where his Annotations on the ſeveral verſes make no particular mention of him. And ſo, when he gives a ſenſe of Iſa. 9. 6. which immediately belonged (in his opinion) to Hezekiah, and according to that, interprets every part of that verſe, he yet thus prefaceth it, ſic tamen ut multo excellentius hæc ad Meſſiam pertinere non Chriſtiani tantum agnoſcant, ſed & Chaldæus hoc loco] thus giving only a lower notion of the words to Hezekiah, and reſerving the ſublimer and more excellent to Chriſt. So again chap. 11. 1. Redit ad Hezechiæ laudes, ſub quibus ſenſu ſublimiore latent laudes Meſſiæ; and many paſſages there are to the ſame purpoſe: As others alſo of referring to the Annotations on the Goſpels, wherein he hath ſpoken ſo largely of this ſublimer completion of the Prophecies, that he would not repeat them in the places of the Prophets, to which they belonged. 53.

In the next place he comes to the compariſon betwixt Calvin's and Grotius's dealing in this matter, and makes many offers of anſwer, to which I am concern'd to make particular replies. 54.

Firſt, he denies Mr. Calvin equally chargeable, or in any degree of proportion with Grotius. To which I anſwer, that whether he be, or be not truly chargeable, in any degree, I am not concern'd to examine, having not accuſed him, but only made the parallel betwixt that learned man and Grotius, in this, that each of them have by ſome been deemed chargeable. Secondly, The compariſon which I made, was not of the equality, or indeed of the degree of proportion, but expreſt with ſuch caution, as ſufficiently prevented that reply, my words being theſe, that it will upon inquiry be found in ſome degree, if not equally chargeable, on the learneſt and moſt valued of the Reformers, particularly on Mr. Calvin himſelf, &c. Here I ſaid, in ſome degree, but proceeded not to define the equality, or to conſider what proportion that degree held with that wherein Grotius was chargeable, not indeed believing that either Grotius or Calvin had given any reaſons for that charge, which I ſee lie heavy on both of them. 55.

Thirdly, The compariſon of equality, which I made between theſe two learned men, referred only to the bitterneſs and injuſtice of the accuſations and contumelies that fell upon them, on that account, in theſe words, [Calvin himſelf hath been as bitterly and unjuſtly accuſed and reviled on this account, as ever Eraſmus was by Bellarmine or Beza, or as probably Grotius can be.] And there will be no way to diſprove my compariſon in this, but by heaping far more unjuſt reproches on Grotius, than yet this Reviewer hath done; which if others are reſolved to do, yet ſhall I not thereby be refutable, who, as juſtice and charity obliged me, affirmed it only not probable that they would. 56.

In the next place he requires me to prove of Mr. Calvin, that he hath in all his Commentaries on the Scripture, corrupted the ſenſe of any text, giving expreſs teſtimonies to the Deity of Chriſt, and commonly pleaded to that end and purpoſe; although he deny not, but that he differs from the common judgment of moſt, in the interpretation of ſome few prophetical paſſages, judged by them to relate to Chriſt.] 57.

To this I anſwer, Frſt, That the latter part of this (his not denying, &c.) is in effect the confeſſing all that I had ſaid of Mr. Calvin, which was but this, that he was by ſome charged of diſarming the Church of her defences againſt adverſaries, by diverting thoſe places of Scripture which had formerly been uſed to aſſert the great myſteries, to other inferior ends; And then I need undertake no farther tasks of ſupererrogation, ſuch as the proving Mr. Calvin to have corrupted the ſenſe of any text, &c. which he knows I never affirmed of him. Yet remembring him that I am not now to ſpeak my own ſenſe, but only to juſtify the truth of my report, that Mr. Calvin and ſome of the firſt Reformers have been ſeverely accuſed and reviled on this account, I ſhall now, Secondly, (inſtead of * many) refer the Reader to Schluſſeburgius a Lutheran ſuperintendent, in his Second Book De Calviniſt. Theolog. and 6. Article; or to Fr. Fevardentius, a Doctor of Paris, either in his Comment on S. Paul to Philemon, or in his Excerpta out of that Lutheran. Not in Iren. Var. Fragm. p. 508, 509. In the latter of theſe he will find a Catalogue of twenty paſſages affixt to thoſe eminent firſt Reformers, eſpecially to Mr. Calvin; as Firſt, that the enmity betwixt the Serpent and the ſeed of the Woman, Gen. 3. is ſimply to be interpreted of the hoſtility of Men and Serpents; that the prophecies of the Scepters not departing from Judah till Shiloh comes, Gen. 49. expounded of Chriſt, gives the Jews occaſion to ſcoff; that the words of Balaam, Numbers 24. A ſtar ſhall riſe out of Jacob, muſt not properly be expounded of Chriſt; nor that of the Lord by Moſes, Deut. 18. 18. I will raiſe them up a Prophet, which yet S. Peter Acts 3. 22. and S. Stephen Acts 7. 37. affirmed to belong to Chriſt; that Mich. 5. 2. Out of thee Bethlehem ſhall he come forth to me that is to be a ruler in Iſrael] muſt not be expounded preciſely and properly 58.

properly of the divinity of Christ. That Zach. 9. 9. Behold thy King cometh, lowly —— is by interpreters triflingly and in a false manner expounded of his entrance into Jerusalem, which yet Saint Matthew and Saint John have applied to it. These are a few Essayes whereby to judge of many others. And the less Mr. Calvin and the Reformers are guilty of these, (as truly in many that I have had the convenience to examine, I cannot but think him guiltless) the more evident is the parallel betwixt Grotius and them in this matter.

59. Thirdly, He affirms that what the Papists raved against Mr. Calvin, was chiefly from some expressions in the Institutions about the Trinity, (wherein he is acquitted by the most learned of themselves) and not from the expositions of Scripture.] But first the truth of this will be judged by what was last said; for all those twenty passages are fetcht from the expositions of Calvin, &c. on those so many places of Scripture. And secondly, 'tis certain I specified not the Book, wherein he had written what was thus chargeable, and so had not been reproveable, if they had been all out of the Institutions, those being as acknowledgedly his, as the Commentaries, and both much more than the Annotations on the Epistles are Grotius's; and thirdly, if he stand by learned men acquitted of the charge, then as I said, that may make the parallel more exact betwixt him and Grotius, though I undertake not that every learned man hath been thus just to acquit him.

60. But then fourthly, for Calvino-Turcismus by me mentioned in a parenthesis, he tells me, I have forgotten the design of it, and that Calvin is no more concerned in it than others of the first Reformers; nor is it from any doctrine about the Deity of Christ in particular, but from the whole of the Reformed Religion, with the Apostasies of some, that they compare it with Turcism; adding, that something indeed in a chapter or two they speak about the Trinity, from some expressions of Luther, Melanchthon, Calvin, and others.

61. To all this I answer, First, That 'tis visible I speak not of Mr. Calvin alone, but of the learnedst and most valued of the Reformers, and of Mr. Calvin only, as one of them. Secondly, That although the forgetting the design of Reynolds and Giffords Book, would be far from a crime in me, had I been guilty of it, (the subject matter of it, is not so much worth remembring) much less any indication that Grotius were insufficiently vindicated; yet when the Reviewer confesses, that in a chapter or two it speaks about the Trinity, from some expressions of Luther, Melanchthon, and Calvin, and others; this clearly evidences, that these Reformers were there thus accused in the matter of the Trinity, as now it seems Grotius is; And thirdly, if Hunnius's Calvinus Judaizans, which is home to the business, be answered by Pareus, and an account of the calumny given by him] this still renders the parallel more compleat. An account of the calumny and the first author, and grounds of it against Grotius, being happily rendred by himself also in the Discussio, p. 17.

62. The Reviewer concludes this matter with a signification of his constant adhering to his proposition formerly asserted, with one limitation expressed (of his own observation.) But I that first gave the occasion of the debate in my Digression concerning Grotius, did never propose it with reference to that limitation, not being able to foresee, how much this Reviewer had read, or observed of Grotius's writings; nor can I yet pass judgment, whether what hath now been offered to him by another, will be yielded to come within the compass of that limitation, or no. And so I must be content to leave it at this time.

63. On the second sort of suggestion, the Reviewer hath chosen to be brief, and hath well prepared for it, by expressing dislike and aversation to any such undertaking, that seemed incumbent on him, viz. to prove that Grotius was a Papist.] But to this I reply, as before, that this task is sure incumbent on him, if, as he said, his defensative be suited to what I pleaded in his behalf. For 'tis certain, that in the Digression, I had so proposed the debate, and undertaken to vindicate him from this suggestion, viz. that he was a Papist.

64. That he closed with the Roman interest, he is now willing to infer, from his observation on Rev. 12. 5. To that therefore I have turned, and there find no other premisses toward this conclusion than only these, First, That Dispersi ex Judæis, instrumenta Ecclesiæ Catholicæ, multos de populo Romano Christo genuêre, that those that were dispersed from Judæa --- begot to Christ many of the people of Rome, and that these are there called partus masculinus the man-child or masculine birth, in respect of the great constancy which appeared in the Church of Rome of those times; then secondly, that the Church of Rome hath this above other Churches, that no Church subjected more people to the word of God, so that her victories by the weapons of Christ, were not inferiour to the martial successes of Old Rome: thirdly, that the regiment of other Churches after the Apostles death belonged to that. Now this being clearly applied by him to the infancy or first ages of the Church, that which is first said of the constancy, is indeed much for the honour of the Primitive Roman Church, but no way for the interest of the present, which having much departed from the Primitive, cannot in any reason partake of those Elogies, which he there bestows on that masculine birth, at the first appearing of it in the world. So likewise secondly, of the ancient Roman Church it is, that he saith, it converted so many to the faith, which is a truth known, and acknowledged in History, but is not at this day assumed (witness S. W.) to be the foundation on which their Supremacy is built. Thirdly, That after the Apostles death, Rome being a chief Metropolis, and (as the Imperial See) the most eminent of all others, had the dominion aliarum of other (it is not omnium, of all) Churches, is not denied by any either ancient, or modern, that I know of. All the suburbicarian Region, and the Churches in that, were under the Primate of Rome, and that Primate was within a while lookt on, as the Patriarch of the West, and the First Patriarch. And the words of Grotius are not, by any circumstance of the place, inclined to any other sense. The aliæ Ecclesiæ, other Churches, being in no reason interpretable any farther, than those, which Rome had converted to the faith, nor necessarily to all them, but to the oppida minora and Provinciæ, the lesser Cities and Provinces, unto which (as he interprets) the woman is said to flie (and so Christianity to be propagated) when Simon Magus by the favour of the Emperour had opposed and much oppressed it at Rome, and drave the profession out of it, by which means those aliæ Ecclesiæ were planted. And it may be worthy to be observed, that when the text before him was general, for πάντα τὰ ἔθνη all the nations, he is not thereby moved to interpret it in that latitude of all simply, but (in a more restrained sence, wherein all in Scripture-style oft ſignifies but a great many) only by the nullæ plures, and aliarum, others, and none more than that.

65. Here before he concludes, he is pleaſed to look back on a paſſage which he had uſed, [that if men be drunkards, proud, boaſters, &c. hypocrites, haters of good men, perſecutors and revilers of them, yea, and if they be not regenerate and born of God, united to the head Chriſt Jeſus, by the ſame ſpirit that is in him, they ſhall never ſee God] for which, he now ſaith, he fears not what concluſion can regularly, in reference to any perſon living or dead, be deduced.] To this I reply by acknowledging the certain truth of the general Aphoriſm, and only remembring him, that the only queſtion was, whether in a particular diſcourſe concerning Hugo Grotius, after the mention of his eternal ſtate, and diſclaiming all deſign of begetting in others any evil ſurmiſes of it, or of judging him himſelf; firſt it were ſeaſonably added, that he was fallen to his own maſter, when falling in the ſtyle of that Scripture (viſibly referred to) ſignifies falling under condemnation; and ſecondly, whether the applying this general Aphoriſm to this matter, were not apt to beget in others thoſe evil ſurmiſes, which he was willing to diſclaim: If in theſe he be not concerned, neither am I, and therefore I ſhall not further importune him in that matter.

66. To the fragments of Grotius's Epiſtles to Crellius, I had formerly ſpoken, though they were not (poſſibly) formerly printed. But having no more in them than was acknowledged, ſomewhat of civility to a civil adverſary, commendation of ſome things truly commendable (ſuch ſure is the care of good life) acknowledgment of advantage received by his writings, readineſs of performing any office of kindneſs to him, and finally praying for him; All theſe are certainly no more than due, as by Chriſt's precept to the injurious, ſo to a learned man, from whom he differed in opinion, and may only ſerve to direct us to the Chriſtian manner of dealing with adverſaries, that of never labouring their ruin or hurt in any kind, but doing them all poſſible good. And if in this matter the Reader will be moved with probable arguments; It is not well to be imagined, in caſe Grotius had at this time been changed from the opinion which he was of, at the writing of the Book De Satisfact. that having ſaid what theſe fragments ſignifie him to have ſaid, he would have concealed that; or that any ſuch paſſage, had it been in the letter, would have been left out of the fragments, or being in the fragments, would have been ſuppreſt by the Reviewer.

67. What in the ſecond Epiſtle is ſaid of Crellius's notes on the Epiſtle to the Galatians, that he had very happily found out the occaſion, and purpoſe, and whole contexture of the Epiſtle, no way concludes his imbracing the interpretation of each brief occaſional paſſage in that Epiſtle, wherein the Socinian controverſies are concern'd, or renouncing that, which he had given in his Book De Satisfact. as his ſenſe of thoſe paſſages.

68. There is no more remaining now before me, which ſeems to exact farther reply. Thus much I have once more added, leſt the Reviewer may either think his Animadverſions deſpiſed, or conceive that they have ſucceſfully performed what they attempted; and moreover, leſt having once (though but ὡς παιδιᾷ) undertaken the Defence of this learned man, I ſhould now by my ſilence ſeem to deſert my plea, and be deem'd to have conſented to, and in a manner confirm'd thoſe calumnies, which on this ſcore of his defection to hereſie, I ſee from many Pens daily caſt out upon him.

69. And this, as it is an act of meer juſtice, and charity to the dead, and no leſs to thoſe, who by their ſin of uncharitable thoughts towards him, are likely to deprive themſelves of the benefit of his labours; ſo is it but a proportionable return of debt and gratitude to the ſignal value and kindneſs, which in his life time he conſtantly profeſt to pay to this Church and nation; expreſſing his opinion, that of all Churches in the world, it was the moſt careful obſerver, and tranſcriber of Primitive antiquity, and more than intimating his deſire to end his dayes in the boſom, and Communion of our Mother. Of this I want not ſtore of witneſſes, which from time to time have heard it from his own mouth, whileſt he was Embaſſadour in France, and even in his return to Sweden, immediately before his death; And for a real evidence of this truth, 'tis no news to many, that at the taking his journey from Paris, he appointed his Wife, whom he left behind, to reſort to the Engliſh Aſſembly, at the Agents Houſe, which accordingly ſhe is known to have practiſed. Which therefore may ſerve for a competent addition to, and concluſion of the evidences hitherto produced, (being in perfect accord and harmony with them) that as far as the Engliſh eſtabliſhment is removed from Socinian, and Popiſh, ſo far this learned man ſtands vindicated from both theſe aſperſions; which makes me the leſs wonder, that ſome others, who have endeavoured to maintain their conſtancy of adherence, and ſubmiſſion to the Church of England, are in like manner moſt injuriouſly aſperſed by thoſe who have departed from it; Lord lay not this ſin to their charge.

A POSTSCRIPT.

Numb. 1. HAving lately a ſight of a new piece publiſhed by the ſame Author, one of the firſt things I happened to fall upon, appeared to be mine own concernment. For having cited from ſome words of Hegeſippus, that ſoon after the death of the Apoſtles and their Auditors, many falſe doctrines were preached and divulged in the Church, he hath theſe words.

2. "I know who hath endeavoured to elude the ſenſe of this complaint, as though it "concerned not any thing in the Church, but the deſpiſers and perſecutors of it, the Gnoſticks. "But yet I know alſo, that no man would ſo do, but ſuch a one as hath a juſt confidence of his own "ability, to make paſſable at leaſt, any thing that he ſhall venture to ſay or utter. For why ſhould "that be referred by Hegeſippus to the ages after the Apoſtles and their Hearers were dead, with an "exception againſt its being ſo in their dayes; when if the perſon thus expounding this teſtimony "may be credited, the Gnoſticks were never more buſie nor prevalent than in that time which alone "is excepted from the evil here ſpoken of? Nor can I underſtand how the oppoſition and perſecu- "tion of the Church ſhould be inſinuated to be the deflouring and violating of its chaſtity, which is "commonly a great purifying of it: ſo that ſpeaking of that broaching and preaching of errours, "which was not in the Apoſtles times, nor in the time of their hearers, the chiefeſt time of the rage "and madneſs of the Gnoſticks; ſuch as ſpotted the pure and incorrupted virginity of the Church; "which nothing can attain unto, that is foreign unto it, and that which gave Original unto Sedition "in the Church; I am of the mind, and ſo I conceive was Euſebius that recited thoſe words, that the "good man intended corruptions in the Church, not out of it, nor oppoſitions to it.

3. What juſt confidence any man can have of his own abilities to make any thing paſſable that he ſhall venture to utter] unleſs it be founded in a due care never to adventure to utter any thing, which hath not perfect truth in it, I acknowledge my ſelf unable to apprehend. But how unjuſtly I am here charged of any kind of confidence of my own abilities, and how unſufficiently my anſwer in defence of the ancient Church-writers is here invalidated, will, I hope, ſoon appear, by a ſhort view, firſt of my anſwer, ſecondly of the words of the teſtimony it ſelf, on which it was clearly grounded, thirdly, of that which is here objected againſt the fitneſs of my anſwer.

4. For the firſt, It muſt be remembred (as the original of this debate) what from this teſtimony of Hegeſippus he had * formerly concluded, viz. the corruption of the Church as to doctrine, immediately after the Apoſtles fell aſleep, whereof, ſaith he, whoſoever will impartially ſearch into the writings that of thoſe dayes do remain, will perhaps find more cauſe to complain, than is commonly imagined.

* Pref. to his Book of Perſever. p. 5.

5. To which my anſwer was, † "that all that Hegeſippus there ſaith, is only this, that the poiſon of "the heretical or Apoſtatical, or Atheiſtical Gnoſticks, in expreſs words, the ψευδώνυμος γνῶσις, "the ſect of the Gnoſticks falſly ſo called, and ἀθεος πλάνη, the Atheiſtical ſeducers, did openly ſet up "againſt the truth of Chriſt, as ſoon as ever the Apoſtles were dead, which being by Hegeſippus ter- "minated in the known deſpiſers and perſecutors of the true Church, and Orthodox profeſſors, the "grievous Wolves that worried the flock, and thoſe conſtantly reſiſted and combated with, preacht "againſt and written againſt by the Fathers and ancient Writers, and never obſerved by any man to "have gained on them, or infuſed any the leaſt degree of their poyſon into them, or their writings "that are come to us: 'Tis a ſad condition, that the juſt and unjuſt, the falſe teachers and Ortho- "dox profeſſors ſhould fall under the ſame envy, that the ſhepherds which oft laid down their lives "for their ſheep, ſhould be defamed, and again martyred by us their unkind poſterity, under pre- "tence that they were in conſpiracy with the wolves alſo.

† Anſw. to Animadv. p. 13.

6. In this anſwer it is not poſſible I ſhould be ſubject to any miſtake, if this one matter of fact be true, that the Gnoſticks and Atheiſtical ſeducers were the very perſons, of whom alone Hegeſippus ſpake, (for that thoſe were the wolves, and that the Church-writers have conſtantly refuted and deteſted them, and not ſuckt any of their poyſonous doctrines from them, is ſo evident, that this author hath neither formerly nor now ſuggeſted the contrary.) And for this in the next place, I appeal to the expreſs words of Hegeſippus, there at large ſet down in Greek, but here only referred to, and more briefly toucht on by this author.

7. The words, as far as this matter is concern'd in them, I ſhall recite; They are theſe, Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. III. Κεφ. λβ. Ὡς ὑπὸ ὁ ἱεγὴς Ἀποστόλων χόρος διάφορον ἔιληφε τῦ βίυ τέλος, παρεληλύθη τε ἡ γενεὰ ἐκείνη τῶν αὐταῖς ἀκοαῖς τῆς ἐνθέυ σοφίας ἐπακῦσαι καλῃξιωμένων, τλωικαῦτα τῆς ἀθέυ πλάνης τλῶ ἀρχλω ἐλάμβανεν ἡ σύςασις. διὰ τῆς τῶν ἑτεροδιδασκάλων ἀπάτης, ὅτε μηδενὸς ἔτι τῶν Ἀποστόλων λειπομένυ, γυμνῇ λοιπὸν ἤδη τῇ κεφαλῇ, τῷ τῆς ἀληθείας κηρύγμασι τλῶ ψευδώνυμον γνῶσιν ἀνλικηρύτλειν ἐπεχείρυν. That there may be no place for doubt in this matter, I ſhall now give the Engliſh Reader a full view of them, thus. But when the ſacred quire of the Apoſtles had ſeverally ended their lives, and the generation of thoſe that had been thought worthy to hear with their own ears the divine wiſdom, was now paſt, then the rout or riotous convention of the Godleſs ſeduction or ſeducers (σύςασις ſignifies a ſeditious aſſembling, or military preparation of confederates or conſpirators, and ἡ πλάνη deceit or ſeduction, may be uſed for the men that deceive or ſeduce) received its beginning, by the cunning or deceit of falſe teachers, who, now that none of the Apoſtles were left, avowed and openly attempted to preach or promulgate the ſcience falſly ſo called, in oppoſition to the preaching of the truth.

8. What is here meant by the ſcience falſly ſo called, no man can be ignorant, that hath compared that phrase used expresly by the Apostle, 1 Tim. 6. 20. with the writings of the Primitive Fathers, or but lightly considered the very nature of plain words. The word γνωστικοὶ Gnosticks, literally signifies knowing men, so styled by themselves, but upon no grounds of truth, their doctrines being indeed directly opposed to the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and so, ψευδώνυμ& γνῶσις, knowledge or science falsly so called. This therefore must be the meaning of the Apostles words, ἀντιθέσεις τῆς ψευδωνύμε γνώσεως, the oppositions of the science falsly so called, i. e. the doctrines of the sect of the Gnosticks, in direct opposition to the doctrine of the Apostles, and consequently the same must the importance of the like phrase in Hegesippus, in consent with the Apostles dialect; what the Apostle calls science falsly so called, Hegesippus must be believed to mean by the very same words, the science falsly so called, i. e. the Gnosticks; what the Apostle calls ἀντιθέσεις, oppositions or contradictings, Hegesippus expresses by ἀντικηρύττειν, opposite or contrary preaching; and these phrases are both farther cleared by a passage in the ancient author περὶ θείων ὀνόμ. c. 6. which tells us of ὁι τῆς παρανοίας τῆς Σίμων& ἀνλιβόλικοὶ λόγοι, the contradictory discourses of the dotage or folly or madness of Simon; by contradictory discourses certainly meaning the ἀντιθέσεις and ἀντικήρυγμα, oppositions and antipreaching, and by the dotage or madness of Simon Magus, the knowledge that he pretended to, and his followers, and which so puft them up in a mad conceit of it, but was indeed nothing else but blasphemous folly, far removed from all degree of true science.

From this short representation of this plain matter of fact, thus visible before our eyes, I shall now 9.
suppose it clear, that it was not confidence of my abilities, but a well grounded perswasion, that he that cited these words in Greek, understood the plain meaning of them, upon which I built my hope, that my answer to this passage of Hegesippus would approve it self to him. For if the Gnosticks and none else were the men spoken of by Hegesippus, then was there no place for exception against my answer; and if Hegesippus's expres words might be believed, thus it was. And thus stands this matter betwixt me and my Reprover at this time; I have laid it before him, let himself now, if he please, be party, witness, and judge; I cannot think it possible I should need other.

But then in the third place, he hath an objection against this sense, which at least may have force 10.
against me; For, saith he, if the person thus expounding this testimony (i. e. I) may be credited, the Gnosticks were never more busie nor prevalent than in that time, which alone is excepted from the evil here spoken of.

To this I answer, first, that in case I had at several times spoken things incoherent or contradictory, 11.
this would be no sufficient proof, that what I now recited from Hegesippus's plain words, was not contained in them. But then secondly, I have been far enough from having thus (any where) contradicted my self, or what I affirm in this answer of mine, nor (if I may be allowed the confidence to believe that I know and speak my own sense) did I ever let fall any thing which will not be exactly reconciled with it. The short is this. The Ringleaders of the Gnosticks were very busie in the Apostles times, but did at first more clancularly operate; from whence in my opinion (of which here it seems I must give an account) they are in the Apostle expres by μυστήριον ἀνομίας, the mystery of iniquity, iniquity, but that somewhat disguised, till at last in the season most for their turn, some of them put off their disguises; Simon Magus in the Apostles times; and though he miscarried, yet many of his followers afterwards, in a more avowed and profest hostility (the σύστασις in Hegesippus) when they had the advantage of all those being dead, who had received the truth from Christ himself: This is the sum of what I have elsewhere frequently, and more largely delivered, and this is exactly the sense of Hegesippus in that place, as will yet more clearly appear by the addition of some other words, not yet recited, and (I know not why) omitted by this author in his first producing of them, when yet both the antecedents and consequents were set down by him. They are these, ἐν ἀδήλῳ πῶ σκότει φωλευόντων τότε ἆρ', εἰ ἦ τίνες ὑπῆρχον, παραθείρειν ὅπως ἐπεχείρουν ἢ ὑγιῆ κανόνα τῆ σωτηρίε κηρύγματ&. Till those times he there speaks of, those hereticks, though some there were, that endeavoured to corrupt the wholesome rule of saving doctrine, skulked in darkness undiscernable, but afterwards (when the season better agreed with their design) they did it γυμνῆ κεφαλῆ with bare head, or face, putting off disguise or care of secresie; with this indeed it would not easily be reconcileable to say, that the Gnosticks were never more busie nor prevalent, than in the Apostles times; And this he is pleased to set down as my saying; but hath not intimated the place, where I said it (as easily he might have done, and I suppose would not have neglected to do, if he had known where.) For my part I remember not, neither believe any such words ever to have past from me; If he shall produce any that have the least sound that way, I shall not doubt to give him an account of them, such as shall sufficiently supersede the conclusion, which now he is willing to draw from them.

Mean-while I shall yet farther give thus much over measure of reply to his objection, that in case 12.
Hegesippus had not expresly named the Gnosticks, which yet expresly he names, and therefore must mean them if he knew and considered what he said, yet the ἄθε& πλάνη, the Atheistical seduction or seducers, and the σύστασις, the riotous convention or confederation of these, must needs signifie some known sect of hereticks in that age of the Church, be they Cerinthians, Ebionites, Nicolaitans, Menandrians, Basilidians, Saturnilians, or after them Valentinians, Marcionites, or who ever else can be supposed; And then, as it is certain, that all, or most of these, met and agreed in this common notion of the Gnosticks, so from the poyson and taint of all and each of them, 'tis still equally clear, that the Church of God, and the known Governours and shepherds thereof, by Gods grace and blessing preserved themselves, and expres their constant opposition and detestation of them, and mark them out to be avoided of all Christians; and so cannot be imagined to have been corrupted by them (but on the contrary, whosoever was discerned to be so corrupted, was cast out of the Church) and by their contrary doctrine, illustriously known in their writings against these heresies, long after the Apostles times, (Irenæus against the Valentinians, &c. Tertullian, &c. against the Gnosticks) have demonstrated themselves to have continued stedfast and immaculate, and not to have been in the least corrupted: And then what can be farther removed from truth, than this whole suggestion from Hegesippus, of the infection being diffused in the Church?

But he further objects, That the opposing and persecuting of the Church, which is a great purifying of 13.

it, cannot be insinuated to be the deflouring and violating of its chastity: To this I answer, 1. that if there were the least force in this objection, it would yet be unsufficient to disprove my answer; It might possibly infer the impropriety of Hegesippus's expression, whereof I undertook not to be the advocate, but cannot conclude him not to have meant those to be the corrupters, whom he expresly names to be so. 2. That in respect of those weak or deceiveable members of the Church, that received the heretical poyson, (and then fell off from it, or were by just censures cast out of it) 'tis not improper to say, that the Church which once contained them, was deflowred and violated; though on the other side, in respect of the constant fidelity of others, who were not moved by all their opposition, the Church was still rather purified than deflowred, as gold by trial in the fire comes out more pure, whilest yet the dross is discovered by the same means, and declared to have no purity in it. The truth is, many visible and temporary professors were infected and defiled by the Gnostick infusions, as in all times of trial, befals those that forsake the Faith, rather than they will endure persecution; And that is the plain meaning of Hegesippus's words, and hath nothing new or strange in it.

14. One thing by the way I shall farther observe, that in this citation he hath made some change in the words, from what before he had represented; to the Apostles times, adding, the time of the Apostles hearers, and not only the Apostles themselves, as if Hegesippus included that second generation in the space of the virgin uncorrupted age, after whose decease (and not till then) the corruptions by him spoken of, came in: But that I suppose will be found to be a mistake also.

15. In his former citing of the passage (in his Preface of Animadversions) he understood Hegesippus of the corruption immediately after the Apostles fell asleep. And indeed this is all that the words assure us [when the quire of the Apostles, saith he, were dead, and the age past of those that were deemed worthy to hear with their own ears, τῆς ἀνθέου σοφίας, the divine wisdom, or the wisdom that had divinity in it —] where, that ages being past, [and the Apostles being dead] sure signifies the same thing; and ἡ ἀνθεος σοφία, the divine wisdom] very fitly signifies Christ himself, the wisdom of the Father, and no way appears to be extended to the Apostles also; and then they that were the hearers of that wisdom, will be the men of the Apostles age, specially the Apostles themselves, and not the subsequent generation. And that indeed thus it was, appears by the context in Hegesippus, which evidenceth him to speak of Trajans times, wherein Simeon Bishop of Jerusalem, one of the ἀνεψιοὶ and ἀκηκοοι τῦ κυρίε, seers and hearers of the Lord, being falsly accused by hereticks, (συκοφαντηθεὶς ὡς ἐπὶ αἰρέσεων) was put to death. Now this we know, was but the conclusion of the Apostles age; (John, who was one of them, living till that time) and not of the auditors of the Apostles. But should it be granted according to his desire, that 'twas of the latter age that Hegesippus spake, it would, as hath appeared, stand him in little stead; and therefore I shall not spring new occasion of contention with him on this matter; Had not the honour of the Universal Church of Christ succeeding the Apostles (so nearly concern'd in this his reinforced objection) seemed to exact this just tribute from me, I had not here given him this importunity.

16. Whereon seeing I am thus far entred, It will not be amiss to pay him at once what he may expect of return to some other passages of this his last piece, wherein he is pleased to reflect on me.

17. And 1. occurs towards the beginning of it, pag. 33. a discourse of παροικὸς, παροικεῖν, &c. which he endeavours to apply to the prejudice of my evidences for the Epistles of Clement, and of S. Paul to the Corinthians, being written to all the Churches of Achaia: In return to this I shall note but these four things of very many that offer themselves.

18. First, That there is a double notion of παροικεῖν, &c. one wherein it is opposed to ἐνοικεῖν, (and is
* De verb. sig. all one with μετοικεῖν, or παρεπιδημεῖν, being strangers or sojourners) in which notion * Pomponius takes it, when by it he expounds the Latin incola, as that is all one with inquilinus a stranger in any place, qui aliquâ, or rather, aliâ regione (ἀλλαχῦ saith Theophilus) domicilium suum contulit. Of this notion of the word I spake not, nor could be imagined to speak, nor (whatever he thinks) is or can parochia or parœcia be taken in this sense in any author. Another notion there is of παροικὸς for accola a neighbour, as in Thucyd. l. 4. Σπαρτιάται καὶ οἱ ἐγγύτατα τῶν παροίκων, the Spartans, and the neareſt of the neighbouring Cities, (some of those παροικοὶ, neighbours, it seems, nearer than others) and so Pomponius also, non tantùm qui in oppido moratur, sed qui alicujus oppidi finibus agrum habet, a borderer that lives and holds lands within the bounds, i. e. in the territories of any City, whether nearer or farther off, or whether that territory be wider or narrower; wider as the territory of a Metropolis, narrower as of an ordinary city, or yet lower, as of a town or village; And which of these it is in any author, is not conclusible from the nature or use of the word, which equally belongs to all these, but from the quality of the place, to which in any author it is applied; If the discourse be of a Metropolis, then the territory, and so the παροικία is the whole Province or ἐπαρχία, as when Mark is said by Eusebius to have constituted Churches in the plural at Alexandria, the chief Metropolis of Egypt, these are by ‖ Eccl. hist. l. 11. Κεφ. κδ'. ‖ him all contained under the phrase ἡ ἐν Ἀλεξανδρείᾳ παροικία, as by Mark committed to Anianus. And so the Churches that belong to the chief Metropolis of Crete, Gortyna, are by Dionysius Bishop of Corinth, called ἐκκλησία παροικοῦσα Γορτύναν, the Church adjacent to, i. e. the Province of Gortyna; If speech be of an ordinary City, then the territory of that, and so the παροικία, is that which we now call a Diocess (though διοίκησις anciently signified otherwise) Territorium est universitas agrorum intra fines † Ibid. cujusque civitatis, saith † Pomponius, and is rendred by Theophilus Τερριτωρεῖον, πάντες οἱ ὑπὸ τὴν πόλιν ἄγροι, all the region which is under a City; And so farther downward to Towns and Villages also, as they are called παροικίαι, parœciæ, Parishes, the whole territory or bordering neighbourhood is comprehended under it. And so in summ, Corinth, otherwise appearing to be the Metropolis of all Achaia (as Achaia was one of the * five μοῖραι of Peloponnesus) and this both in the Civil and Ecclesiastical Notitiæ; in the Civil, as is evident by the Proconsuls keeping his residence there, Acts 18. 12. 15. (Corinth being before this time ‖ destroyed by Mummius, re-edified by Julius Cæsar, and now a † Roman Colony, and having a * Province belonging to it, called Κορινθία χώρα, the Corinthian region) and in the Ecclesiastical, as appeared both by the general σύγχυσις or conformity between the City and the Church, not only in after ages, but from the first, cited from a most ancient learned Church-writer, Origen c. Cels. l. 3. and more particularly as to Corinth, by the expres words of ‖ S. Chrysostom. All this, I say, otherwise largely appearing, and not deduced from the bare style [παροικοῦσα Κορινθον] this Church thus styled by Clements, and compared with Pauls second Epistle, which expresly comprehends the Saints of all Achaia, and yet (as is granted on all sides) no greater an extent, than what Clemens wrote to, is by me regularly affirmed to be that whole Province of several Churches, (for which 'twas not yet that ἐπαρχία grew to be the Ecclesiastical word) and not that single Church of Corinth, but all under that Metropolis.

Secondly, That it is most unreasonable to affirm that either 2 Cor. 9. 2. or any where else, Achaia and Corinth are all one, for that is all one as to say France and Paris, a Region or Nation, and a City in that Region, are all one. 'Tis true the Church, to which the Epistles of Paul were written comprehends under it all the Christians of Achaia; but then, my pretensions must have place, that those Epistles were written to all the Churches of Achaia, united in Corinth, the Metropolis; not that Achaia, which had many Cities in it, was all one with Corinth, that but one, though Metropolitical City. 19.

Thirdly, That, of the Churches of Achaia, beside Corinth, that of Cenchrea is expresly named, and though no other chances to be thus explicitely mentioned in Scripture, which was not obliged to write the full Chorography of the Apostles plantations, yet this negative argument gives us no reason to doubt, but there were more Cities in Achaia than these two (all Geographers assure us of many) and those in some proportion converted to the faith, and formed into Churches, in S. Pauls time, and before Clements writing to them. However, that one of Cenchrea concludes as much, as I want; Cenchrea being another City Church, different from Corinth, and παροικοῦσα neighbouring to it, part of its territory, and under it as a daughter under a Metropolis. 20.

Fourthly, That Chrysostom, that speaks of Corinth as a Metropolitical Church, speaks of it, not (as this Author pretends) only in the political, but Ecclesiastical notion, and not only as in his own, but as it was in the Apostles time: Else he could not say of S. Paul, as he doth, τῇ μητροπόλει γεγραφὼν that he wrote to a Metropolis; 'Twas certainly to the Church that S. Paul wrote, not the City; and 2. to that Church, in S. Pauls age. The testimony is as clear as the Sun, that * S. Chrysostom speaks of Corinth, Thessalonica, and the Ephesians, and Galatians to whom the Apostolical Epistles are directed, as so many Metropolitcal Churches, to each of which S. Paul wrote, and thereby in every of those Epistles wrote not μιᾷ πόλει, to one City only, (he adds, or to two, or to three) but τοῖς πανταχοῦ, to all every where, in each of those regions, relating to those Metropolitical Churches, to all the Churches of Galatia, or Achaia, &c. 21. * Tom. 3. p. 343.

And so much for that affair, on which five leaves were providently laid out at the beginning of his journey, to secure some principles which were after to be improved by him, which yet he cannot but know, are superseded by many other evidences of Metropolitical Churches planted in the Apostles times, at Jerusalem, Antioch, Ephesus, Thessalonica, Philippi, Alexandria, and Rome, &c. every of which requiring his answer, as much as παροικοῦσα κορινθον. 22.

P. 87. He minds me of his acknowledging the Catholick Church, both the invisible body of Christ, his elect, &c. and the Universality of visible professors, and consequently, of the injury formerly done him, in comparing his expression [that there was never any Church-Officer instituted in those first times relating to more Churches in his Office, or to any other Church than a single particular congregation] with the author of the Saints belief, which instead of the Holy Catholick Church in the Apostles Symbols, substituted this very hypothesis; as if I either really believed, or was willing to perswade others, that he denied the Catholick Church. 23.

To this I answer, first, that I neither entred into his secrets, nor indeavoured to infuse any jealousies into others concerning his latent undiscovered thoughts, but only considered those words then before me, not being at that distance able to divine how far he meant to acknowledge the Catholick Church in a tract written two years after. 24.

Secondly, That his acknowledging now two notions of the Catholick Church, one of all the elect, the other of all that are called, doth not so certainly difference his doctrine from that of the author of the Saints belief; there being no reason to doubt, but that he that compiled that, did at that time acknowledge the Catholick Church in those two notions. The thing that he meant to deny, and renounce, implicitely by leaving out the mention of the Catholick Church, and explicitely by what he substituted in stead of it, was (I supposed) the several degrees of associations, each known among men by the name of a Church, 1. That of the whole Christian world, the Universal Church, either as it is by some pretended to be Monarchically, or by others Aristocratically governed. 2. That of each National Church under the Primate thereof. 3. That of each Provincial Church under the Metropolitan. 4. That of every Diocesan Church under the Bishop; and lastly, of every Parochial Church under the Rector thereof. And all these seem as avowedly to be denied by this author to have been instituted in those (i. e. in Ignatius's) times, as by the compiler of the Saints Belief they were; And some of these being, to my understanding, thus anciently instituted, and expres mention made in Ignatius, not only of the πλῆθος or multitude, under a particular Bishop, which is one of these, but farther, of the Church of Syria, i.e. of that whole region, and the Church of Syria which is at Antioch, all joyned under Antioch, the Metropolitical Church, and the Catholick Church, wider than either of these, and comprehensive of both; this I deemed fit to be confronted to his hypothesis (and the parallel in the Saints Belief) of the no other Church, than a single particular congregation, which I supposed narrower than any one of these. And this is a brief, and I hope, inoffensive, account of that particular. 25.

Pag. 232. An exception is made to my instance in the Bishop of Oxon, and that from a supposed exemption of this author, at the time of his writing, from the jurisdiction of that Bishop. But 1. I proceeded not to the naming or specifying the author at all, when I spake of the Bishop of Oxon; much less, considered the quality, which was peculiar to him, from other men, or the exemption consequent to that quality, which whatever it can be pretended, is but temporary, and personal, and so not proper for any special consideration. 2. I answer, The Bishop of Oxon hath a Diocess, or else no man that lives in that, could by any priviledge of his place, be exempt from it. And then what I said of the duty owing to that Bishop (somewhat more than styling him a reverend and 26.

learned perſon, and being glad of his neighbourhood and acquaintance; πείθεσθε ἡγουμένοις ſignifies more than that) regularly belongs to all ſuch as are in his Dioceſs, and are not exempt from his juriſdiction; and whatever he pleaſe to imagin, I never meant to extend it to any other.

27. Pag. 122. I find a diſlike of my way (he ſhould not have ſaid of juſtifying our ſeparation from Rome, but) of defending our Church from the guilt of ſchiſm, charged on us by the Romaniſts. But this is no news to me; he had once before ſignified thus much, and I was not then ſurpriſed with it; and ſhall only aſſure him, that now I have ſeen his new way, I am no whit leſs pleaſed with the old, than before I had the confidence to be.

28. The laſt that I took notice of to be my concernment, was pag. 229. where perhaps I may be the perſon, accuſed to have charged the doctrines (there named, as a conſiderable portion of the doctrine of our Church) of everting fundamentals. If it be ſo, I have then two things to ſay in this haſte, and no more; 1. that the doctrines, which I charge in the tract of Fundamentals, I charge not of everting of Fundamentals, but (as may be ſeen in the title and contents of the 12. chapter) of aptneſs to obſtruct and hinder the ſuperſtructing of good life upon Chriſtian belief. Of which, whether the doctrines by me ſpecified be grilty or no, I appeal to thoſe indifferent Readers, that ſhall impartially view what is there ſaid; and ſhall be content to be concluded by that, though not by this Umpirage.

29. Secondly, That no one of the doctrins thus accuſed by me, are the doctrins of the Church of England, as there are (as far as I ever heard it doubted) is cleared by me; whereas on the contrary, ſome of them, that particularly of Chriſts redeeming none but the elect, are as expreſly renounced by our Church, as any branch of Atheiſm or Polytheiſm is diſclaimed by the Creed of the Apoſtles.

30. And now I may be permitted to take my leave of him at this time.

THE

THE BAPTIZING OF INFANTS REVIEWED and DEFENDED FROM THE Exceptions of Mr TOMBES,

In his three last CHAPTERS of his BOOK Intituled,

ANTIPÆDOBAPTISM.

THE INTRODUCTION.

HAving, by Gods help, past through many stadia in these agones, and therein paid some degree of obedience to the precept of Christ, Mat. 5. 41. and withal to St. Peters directions of rendring an account of the Faith which is in us, παντὶ ἀπολογίαν even to him that most unnecessarily requires it; There is yet remaining one matter of discourse, wherein some seeming ingagement lyes upon me, occasioned by the Resolution of the fourth Quære, conerning Infant Baptism; For to this Mr. Jo. Tombes hath offered some answers in the three last Chapters of his Book Intituled Antipædobaptism. Numb. 1.

What I have thought meet to return to these, might, I supposed, have been not unfitly annexed by way of appendage to that of Festivals; the treatises of Festivals and Infant Baptism being so nearly conjoined in the first draught or monogramme, that the defence of them (which may in some degree pass for the ζωγραφίαι) ought in congruity to be contrived into the same table also. But the length of this Answer hath disswaded that, and the desire that the Reader may have no tasks imposed on him but by his own choice, hath advised the publishing this by it self, with some hope that this may conclude his trouble, and that this new year may not bring me so many occasions of such contests, as the last hath done. 2.

CHAP. I.

Of Baptiſm among the Jews.

SECT. I.

Probations more and leſs perfect. The uſe of Circumciſion to this queſtion of Pædobaptiſm. As alſo of Chriſt's reception of children. Childrens coming and believing, Mat. 18. Children ſinners.

Numb. 1. THE foundation of Mr. Tombes's returns to me, he is pleaſed to lay in ſome words, which he hath recited out of §. 23. of my Reſolution of the fourth Quære, where I ſay, that there is no need of laying much weight on this, or any the like more imperfect wayes of probation, the whole fabrick being ſufficiently ſupported and built on this baſis (the cuſtomary baptiſms among the Jews) and that diſcernible to be ſo, if we conſider it firſt negatively, then poſitively.

2. To this he begins his Reply with theſe words, I like the Doctors ingenuity in his waving the imperfect wayes of proving Infant Baptiſm, viz. the example of circumciſion, Gen. 17. of baptizing a whole houſhold, Act. 16. 33. Chriſts reception of little children, Mat. 19. 14. Mar. 10. 16. and doubt not to ſhew his own to be no better than thoſe he relinquiſheth.

3. To this introduction of his I ſhall make ſome Reply, in a general reflexion on the Treatiſe which he undertakes to anſwer, and begin with diſclaiming his good words and approbation of my ingenuity, aſſuring him that he is wholly miſtaken in theſe his firſt lines, and that I do in no wiſe relinquiſh thoſe ways of probation by him taken notice of, nor ſhall ſo far deſpiſe the authority and aids of the ancient Church writers, who have made uſe of them, as wholly to neglect the force and virtue of them. And I thought it had been to him viſible, that I have made my advantage of every one of them, §. 20, 21, 22. though I do verily think the foundation of this practice is more fitly laid in that other of Jewiſh Baptiſm, which belonged to all, both Jews, and proſelytes Children, females as well as males, whereas circumciſion belonging to males only, was in that and ſome other reſpects a leſs perfect baſis of it.

4. Meanwhile, for the clearing of this whole matter, it muſt be remembred that probations are of two ſorts, either leſs or more perfect; thoſe I call leſs perfect, which though they have full force in them, as far as they are uſed, yet are not of ſo large an extent as to conclude the whole matter in debate, which others that are more perfect may be able to do.

5. I ſhall apply this to the matter before us. The inſtituting of the Sacrament of circumciſion among the Jews, and the expreſs command of God that the children of eight dayes old ſhould by this rite be received into Covenant, is an irrefragable evidence that thoſe may be capable of receiving a Sacrament, who have not attained to years of underſtanding the nature of it, that children may be received into Covenant with God though they are not perſonally able to undertake or perform the condition of it; and then that argument will ſo far be applicable to Pædobaptiſm, as to evidence the lawfulneſs and fitneſs of it among Chriſtians, by this analogy with God's inſtitution among the Jews, and ſo certainly invalidate all the arguments of the Antipædobaptiſt (i. e. of Mr. Tombes) drawn from the incapacity of Infants, from the pretended neceſſity that preaching ſhould go before baptizing, from the qualifications required of thoſe that are baptized, &c. For all theſe objections lying and being equally in force againſt circumciſing of Infants, it is yet evident to be the appointment of God that every Infant of eight dayes old ſhould be circumciſed, Gen. 17. 12. and the threatning of God denounced againſt them as tranſgreſſors, in caſe it be neglected, The uncircumciſed manchild ſhall be cut off from his people, he hath broken my covenant, v. 14. And this the rather, becauſe the Apoſtle compares baptiſm of Chriſtians with circumciſion, Col. 2. 11, 12. In whom ye are circumciſed —— buried with Chriſt in baptiſm, Iſidor Peluſiote, l. 1. Ep. 125. ἀντὶ βαπτίσματος τῆ περιτομῆ Ἰουδαῖοι ἐκέχρηντο, the Jews uſed circumciſion inſtead of baptiſm, whereupon S. Epiphanius ſtyles Baptiſm μεγάλῃ περιτομῇ the great circumciſion, and S. Auguſtine to them that require a divine authority, whereby to prove the baptiſm of Infants, renders this of the * Jewiſh circumciſion, ex quâ veraciter conjiciatur quid valeret in parvulis Sacramentum Baptiſmi, whereby true judgment may be made what force the Sacrament of Baptiſm may have in Infants. And in like manner Iſidore l. 1. Ep. 125. where, upon conſideration of the Angel coming to kill Moſes becauſe of the childs not being circumciſed, he concludes, σπουδαίως τὰ παιδία βαπτίσωμεν, Let us make haſte to baptize our children.

* De Bapt. contr. Donat. l. 4. c. 23.

6. Yet becauſe what is thus evidenced to be lawful, and agreeable to divine appointment in the old Teſtament, is not thereby preſently proved neceſſary under the New (Chriſt might otherwiſe have ordained, if he had pleaſed; and from his ordinance only, as that was underſtood by his Apoſtles and by them delivered to the Church, the neceſſity of our obedience, and ſo of Baptizing Infants, is compleatly deduced) therefore it is, that I mentioned this, as a more imperfect way of probation, in reſpect of the intire concluſion, which I undertook to make, viz. not only the lawfulneſs, but the duty and obligation, that lies upon us to bring our Infants to Baptiſm; which by the way, was much more than was neceſſary (the ſhewing the lawfulneſs, being ſufficient, and the example of circumciſion being competent) for the diſproving the pretenſions of the Antipædobaptiſt, and ſo, ex abundanti, an act of Supererogatory probation, in relation to Mr. T.

7. The ſame is appliable in ſome degree to the other ways of probation, which he ſuppoſeth to be relinquiſht by me, eſpecially to that of Chriſt's behaviour to little children, commanding to ſuffer them to come unto him (who yet were no otherwiſe able to come than as they were brought, and as now they come to the font for baptiſm) and embracing and laying on his hands and bleſſing them: But this is competently ſet down, and the force of it, how far 'tis argumentative, §. 22.

8. Only I now add, that that other place of Mat. 18. 6. where Jeſus ſpeaking of little children, uſeth theſe theſe words, who ſo offendeth one of theſe little ones that believe in me, it were good for him that a Mil-ſtone, &c. may tend much to give us the full importance and ſignification both of their coming to Chriſt, and of his commanding not to forbid them (ſuch as will nearly concern every Antipædobaptiſt to take notice of.) For as in other places of the New Teſtament, the coming unto God and Chriſt, is believing on him, ſeeking to receive benefit from him (as, He that cometh to me ſhall never hunger, and Come unto me all ye that are weary, and If any man thirſt let him come unto me and drink) ſo, it ſeems, by this place, that that coming of the βρέφη little Infants (for ſo they are called in the Parallel place, Luk. 9. 47.) which they were capable of, by the help of their parents or friends, is ſtyled by Chriſt the childrens believing, and ſo far imputed to them, as that upon that account the ſentence is very ſevere upon thoſe that ſhall ſcandalize them, repulſe or diſcourage, or any way hinder them in this their progreſs to Chriſt, though it be but in the arms of other men.

How fitly this is applicable to the ſtate of Infants, in reſpect of the guilt of original ſin, under which they are born, and for the remiſſion of which (and not onely for the entring into the Kingdom of Heaven) the Fathers defined againſt the Pelagians, that baptiſm was neceſſary for them, I ſhall not need here to inlarge, having formerly ſpoken to that head. Onely it may not be amiſs here to advert, that it was as reaſonable for the children to be called πιστοὶ believers, who yet had no faith of their own, but onely of their parents, &c. to bring them to Chriſt, as for the ſame children to be accounted ſinners (as undoubtedly they are) which yet never committed any act of ſin, which made S. Auguſtine De verb. Apoſt. Serm. 14. ſay, Abſit ut ego dicam non credentes infantes, God forbid that I ſhould ſay that Infants are not believers, Credit in altero, qui peccavit in altero, He believes by another who ſinned by another, dicitur, Credit, & valet, & inter fideles baptizatos computatur, the Suſceptors ſay he believes, and ſo he is reputed among the baptized believers. And this reputative faith the more reaſonably accepted by the Church, it being moreover evident by the baptiſm of Simon Magus, and of all hypocrites, that 'tis the profeſſion of faith, and not the poſſeſſion of it, which is required as the qualification which authorizes the Church to admit them to baptiſm; and that being performed by the Infants proxies in his name, the Church after the forementioned example of Chriſt, may very lawfully accept it of thoſe, who can perform no other, in lieu of a perſonal profeſſion. 9.

Meanwhile this paſſage of Chriſt concerning children, though it be a certain evidence again againſt the Antipædobaptiſt, as hath been ſhewed, and I need no more than this one proof, if I were deſtitute of all others, to refute his pretenſions; yet becauſe it contains no relation of Chriſts, or his Apoſtles baptizing infants, therefore I put it in the rank of the more imperfect probations (in compariſon with that other way of probation, which I conceive, deduceth and concludeth the whole matter more intirely) though, as 'tis evident §. 22. this was neither waved nor relinquiſht by me. 10.

To this if I ſhall now add, that it was my deſign in that reſolution of the Quære to inſiſt more largely on that way of probation, which I diſcerned to be leſs conſidered or inſiſted on by others, and yet to have perfect evidence in it, if it were duly explained and improved as it was capable; and on the ſame account, thought I might ſpare to multiply words, where others had often inlarged, and therefore ſaid but little of thoſe common arguments or heads of probation, and yet ſufficient to teſtifie my neither waving nor relinquiſhing them. It will then abundantly appear, how little I deſerved Mr. T. his good words, and how juſtly I renounce that title to ingenuity which he beſtows upon me, being better pleaſed with his animadverſions on my dotages, as he after phraſeth it, than theſe his δῶρα δῶρα, his liberalities to me by which he deſigned advantage to himſelf. 11.

SECT. II.

The neceſſity of Pædobaptiſm depending on the poſitive part of the probation. The ſeveral ſorts of Anabaptiſts. Teſtimonies the only proof of Inſtitutions.

BEfore I proceed I muſt deſire the Reader to conſider two things, Firſt, That the Jewiſh baptiſm is not by me ſet up as the competent proof, but only as the ground or foundation (which taken by its ſelf, is always very imperfect in reſpect of the whole fabrick or building,) Secondly, That the perfect proof being ſet down to conſiſt of two parts, a negative and a poſitive, the firſt only ſhewing the no incongruity or unlawfulneſs of baptizing Infants, and the ſecond adding thereto duty and obligation, theſe two muſt in all reaſon remain conjoined in our diſcourſe, and not be ſo ſevered, or conſidered aſunder, as if I thought the former way of negative probation ſufficient to do the whole work without the aſſiſtance of the latter; This I needed not have ſaid in relation to Mr. T. For the bare negative conſideration (that there is nothing in the pattern whence Chriſts baptiſm is copied out, nothing in the copy it ſelf, as far as Chriſt's words in the Goſpel, or the Apoſtles practice extend, &c.) is perfectly ſufficient to refute an antipædobaptiſt (ſuch as he profeſſeth to be) who undertakes to ſhew the baptizing of Infants to be unlawful, but cannot pretend to ſhew it by any other way, but by producing ſome either law or practice of Chriſt or his Apoſtles to the contrary, which he muſt be concluded unable to do, if my Negative ſtand inviolate; But I thus interpoſe (and do it thus early) becauſe the poſitive part, being indeed the principal, eſpecially when it is alſo added to the negative, doth not only demonſtrate it lawful, but duty, to offer and receive our Infants to baptiſm, the judgment and practice of the Univerſal Church for 1600. years, (received, as the Fathers with one conſent teſtifie, from the Apoſtles, as the will of Chriſt himſelf) having this force and authority over every meek ſon of the Church, that he may not without incurring God's diſpleaſure, oppugn or contemn it. Numb. 1.

And ſo by this means there is much more performed than was needful, if Mr. T. had been the only adverſary foreſeen, even that which may convince all ſorts of oppoſers and diſputers in this matter, from * Peter de Bruſe and Henry his Scholar, and the Petrobruſiani and Henriciani that ſprang from them, to Nicholas Storck and John Munzer, Melchior Rinck, Balthazar Hæbmaier, Michael Satelar the Switzers, and ſo on to Michael Hofman the skinner in the Low Countries, to Ubbo and Menno of 2.

of Friſeland, and Theodorick Ubbo's Son, and all their followers, which either then lived, and ſet up in Germany, or are now revived, or copied out among us; This one deduction of this practice (of baptizing Infants) from the Apoſtles, if it be ſolid, being abundantly ſufficient to make an end of all controverſies of this kind, It being highly unreaſonable that an inſtitution of Chriſt's, ſuch as each Sacrament is, ſhould be judged of by any other rule (whether the phancies or reaſons of men) but either the words wherein the inſtitution is ſet down, or (when they, as they are recorded in the Scripture, come not home to the deciding of the controverſie) by the records of the practice, whether of Chriſt, or (becauſe he baptized not himſelf) of the Apoſtles, however conſerved or made known unto us.

4. In a word then, the cuſtomary baptiſm among the Jews being firſt laid only as the baſis and foundation (which, as I ſaid, muſt be obſerved to differ from the whole building, being indeed only, the firſt and moſt imperfect part of it) and evidently brought home and applied to every branch of the Chriſtian baptiſm, I deſire Mr. T. will permit the baptiſm of our infants to deduce and evidence it ſelf from the conſiderations, which are thereunto annexed, both negative and poſitive, and then make trial how he ſhall be able to demoliſh that ſtructure which is thus founded and ſupported; Meanwhile I ſhall now conſider the ſeverals of his exceptions, having premiſed thus much in general.

SECT. III.

The Jews Baptiſm of natives as well as proſelytes. Teſtimonies of their writers in proof thereof. Baptiſm among the heathens taken from the Jews. Among both from Noahs flood. The derivation of Chriſtian from Jewiſh Baptiſm how manifeſted. Chriſts anſwer to Nicodemus. Baptiſm ἀνάλογον to the deluge. Gr. Nazianzen's and Macarius's teſtimonies. The Fathers meaning in affirming the Chriſtians baptiſm to be inſtead of Circumciſion. The Lords Supper founded in the Jews Poſtcœnium, yet inſtead of their Paſsover.

Numb. 1. AND firſt he will abbreviate and give the Reader the ſubſtance of my proof, which he conceives to be this, that the Jews were wont when they admitted proſelytes, to baptize them and their children. Here again at the entrance I muſt interpoſe, that his Epitome hath done ſome injury to the Book, left out one conſiderable, if not principal part, viz. that which concerned the Native Jewiſh children, who were baptized as ſolemnly, as the Proſelytes and their children.

2. This muſt be here taken notice of, becauſe Mr. T. makes haſte to aſſume the contrary, that the Jews baptized not Jews by nature, p. 306. that after the baptiſm, Exo. 19. 10. the Jews did not baptize Jews but only proſelytes, p. 307. and ſo makes a ſhift to conclude, that by my arguing, the children of thoſe that were baptized in infancy ought not to be baptized, and ſo that no infant of Chriſtian race, or deſcended from Chriſtian anceſtors, is now to be baptized, p. 308. no infants but at the firſt converſion of the parent, p. 309. And this I was many months before the publication of his book, warned to expect from Mr. T. as an irreſiſtible anſwer to my way of defending infant-baptiſm, mentioned by him in the pulpit, as ready to be publiſht, that by deducing the baptiſm of Chriſtians from the Jewiſh cuſtom of baptizing of proſelytes, I had excluded all the children of Chriſtian anceſtors from our baptiſm.

3. But as this was then a great ſurpriſe to me, who knew that I had cleared that Judaical baptiſm to belong to the children of all native Jews, as well as of proſelytes, ſo now I could not but wonder to find there was ſo perfect truth in that relation, which I had received, and have no more to ſay, but to deſire the Reader to caſt his eyes upon that Treatiſe, and inform himſelf whether I have not as punctually deduced from the Jewiſh writers the cuſtomary baptiſm of native Jewiſh infants, as I have done the baptiſm of proſelytes and their children, and indeed mentioned the former as the original from which the latter was to be tranſcribed, and ſo as the foundation and groundwork of that other.

4. 'Tis unreaſonable to recite here, what is there ſo viſible; yet becauſe I ſee it is not taken notice of, but the contrary aſſumed for granted, and the chief weight of his 24th Chapter laid upon that ſuppoſition, there is nothing left me to do in this matter, but to tranſcribe my words from that ſixth Section which are expreſly theſe.

5. Firſt then, Baptiſm or waſhing of the whole body was a Jewiſh ſolemnity, by which the native Jews were entred into the covenant of God made with them by Moſes, ſo ſaith the Talmud. tr. Repud. Iſrael or the Iſraelites do not enter into covenant but by theſe three things, by circumciſion ובטבלה and by baptizing, and by peace offering. So in Gemara ad tit. Cherithoth, c. 2. your fathers, i. e. the Jews of old time, did not enter into the covenant אלא בטבילה ישלה but by circumciſion and baptiſm, and in Jabimoth, c. 4. Rabbi Joſhua ſaid, we find of our mothers that they were baptized (שטבלו) and not circumciſed, ſo Maimonides tit. Iſuri bia, c. 13. By three things the Iſraelites entred into the covenant, by circumciſion, baptiſm and ſacrifice, and ſoon after, what was done to you, to the Jews in univerſum, ye were initiated into the Covenant by circumciſion וטבילה and baptiſm and ſacrifice. All theſe Teſtimonies there thus ſet down, and then how could I conclude leſs than there I do, that nothing can be more clearly affirmed by them, i. e. by the Jewiſh writings of the greateſt authority among them, the Talmud, Gemara, and Maimonides?

6. If this were not ſufficient, then follows §. 11. as a third thing obſervable in this baptiſm among the Jews, that the baptiſm of the natives was the pattern, by which the baptiſm of proſelytes was regulated, and wherein it was founded, and this made evident by the arguing, and determining the queſtion, in the Gemara, tit. Jabimoth, c. 4. after this manner, Of him that was circumciſed and not baptized Rabbi Eliezer ſaid that he was a Proſelyte, becauſe, ſaid he, we find of our Fathers (Abraham, Iſaac——) that they were circumciſed but not baptized; And of him that was baptized and not circumciſed Rabbi Joſua ſaid, he was a Proſelyte, becauſe, ſaid he, we find of our Mothers that they were baptized and not circumciſed: But the wiſe men pronounced that till he were baptized and circumciſed he was not a proſelyte, where the example of the Jews is the rule by which the obligation of the proſelytes is meaſured.

7. And the ſame is evident by the reaſon rendred by the Jewiſh writers of their baptizing the proſelytes, which which is generally taken by them from that command, Numb. 15. 15. One ordinance shall be both for you of the congregation, and also for the stranger (i. e. הגר the proselyte) that sojourneth with you, an ordinance for ever in your generations, as ye are, so shall the stranger be before the Lord, one law and one manner (i. e. one ἐντολὴ and one δικαίωμα, Luke 1. 6. one Law for moral duties, and one ordinance for rituals or ceremonies) shall be for you and for the stranger that sojourneth with you. Thus the Gemara tit. Cherithoth, c. 2. foundeth the circumcising and baptizing of proselytes, upon those words, As to you, so shall it be to the proselyte. So Maimonides tit. Isuri bia, c. 13. In like manner through all ages as oft as a Gentile will enter into the Covenant, and receive the yoke of the Law upon him, it was necessary that circumcision and baptism should be used for him, beside sprinkling of the sacrifice, and if it were a woman, baptism and sacrifice, According as it is said (Numb. 15. 15.) as to you, so also to the proselytes.

8. And yet farther, as to the original of this baptism among the Jews themselves, the twelfth Section out of their writers deduceth it from the time of giving the Law in Mount Sinai, Exo. 19. 10. when God, to prepare them for the receiving it, commands Moses, Go to the people and sanctifie them to day and to morrow, and let them wash their clothes. So saith Maimonides Isuri bia, c. 13. But baptism was in the desart before the giving of the Law, according as it is said, Thou shalt sanctifie them— And that agreeable to what we read of Jacob to his household, Gen. 35. 2. Put away the strange Gods that are among you, and be clean and change your garments (where being clean is answerable to being sanctified or baptized, and changing to washing their garments) so that as the covenant made with Abraham was sealed by circumcision, so the giving of the Law which was the Covenant made by God with all the people, was thought to be sealed by baptism, and that the washing, if not of the whole, yet of some parts of the body (ordinarily called קדושין sanctifications) and the washing (or wearing clean) garments also.

9. And now I may, I hope, assume, that not only there is perfect truth in what I now affirm, that baptism among the Jews belonged to their natives as well as to proselytes (even to all that entred into the Covenant, and those evidently were the Jewish children as well as men) but also that this had before been evidenced in that Resol. of the fourth Quære, which here Mr. T. hath been pleased to examine, and consequently that it was no small injustice, and unkindness in him both to the reader, and to me, that he would omit to take notice of it, but assume and build on it as a thing yielded and granted him by my discourse that the proselytes only, and not the native Jews were partakers of that Jewish baptism.

This sure was a strange infirmity in an answer, and that which must needs have a special influence upon it, in any impartial weighing, even such an one, as will make it very unnecessary for me to consider any of his other considerations which he hath offered in that matter, which must certainly have no force in them, when that which is such a principal part of my arguing, is so perfectly omitted, and the contrary supposed by him.

10. However I shall not refuse to attend him in all his motions, and inquire whether there be any particular pitcht on by him, which may deserve our farther consideration, in order to the point in hand, that of Infant-baptism among Christians.

11. And first, saith he, Baptism, it seems, was a custom of all nations as well as the Jews, citing Grotius for it on Mat. 3. 6. and Mat. 28. 19.

12. Of the truth of this observation I shall raise no question, only I wonder what he could phansie from thence to conclude for his advantage. Certainly he will not hope by that argument to evince the negative, that it was not used among the Jews, for how can the Gentiles using it, conclude, against all other evidence, that the Jews did not use it? Nor can he pretend that Christ transcribed it from those Gentiles, and not from the Jews: for Christ preaching, as he was sent, to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and ὑμῖν πρῶτον, to them first, Act. 3. 26. and if not to them only, yet in a far more eminent manner to them than to any others, and accordingly adapting his Reformation to the Jewish Religion, and lightly deducing so many other customs from the Jews, and none from the Gentiles, can with no probability be conceived to deduce this from the Gentiles, rather than from the Jews, especially when (as Clement observes, Ἕλλωες ἀεὶ κλεπται, the heathens borrowed or stole both their learning, and their custom from the Jews, so) it is very obvious to imagine, that this of baptism, purgations and lustrations might by those heathens be borrowed from the Jews, at least by both of them be derived from the same common fountain, the sons of Noah, in remembrace of the deluge, according to that famous verse among the Greeks, Θάλασσα κλύζει πάντα τ' ἀνθρώπων κακά, the sea sweeps away all the evils of men, to which S. Peter alludes in making baptism the ἀντίτυπον to Noah's flood (as he hath himself cited it out of Grotius,) and so in like manner some of the Fathers, as Athanasius, in his χρησ. εἰς ἐρημ. περὶ β. Tom. 2. p. 426. Πρῶτον βάπτισμα τὸ τῆ καλακλυσμῶ εἰς ἐκκοπὴν ἁμαρτίας, The first baptism is that of the deluge for the excision of sins. And Optatus l. 5. * Erat quidem Cataclysmus imago baptismatis, ut inquinatus totus orbis, demersis peccatoribus, lavacro interveniente, in faciem pristinam mundaretur, The deluge was the image of baptism, that the polluted world by the drowning of sinners may be cleansed into the antient form.

* Edit. Casaub. p. 127.

13. And if neither of these be hence deducible, then it matters little what else he can design to infer from it. And so sure there was some want of answers, when this (so nothing to the matter on either side) was thought fit to march in the front of them.

14. Under this head of answer, he presently adds, that he doth not know that Dr. H. or any other hath alledged one passage in Scripture, or any of the Fathers, that might evince that the custom of baptising, or baptising infants, was derived from the Jews initiating Proselytes by baptism.

15. To this I answer, 1. By asking Mr. T. Whether he be ready to pay that reverence to the authority of the Fathers, as to be concluded by their affirmations? If he be, I wonder why the uniform consent of them, that infants are to be baptized, should not prevail with him: If he be not, why doth he mention this as useful in this matter?

16. But then secondly, It must be adverted, that this one containing two questions in it, First, Whether this of initiating into the Covenant by baptism were a Jewish custom? Secondly, Whether from thence Christ derived this rite of baptizing of Christians? The former of these was that which alone required proving, the latter being of it self evident, without farther probation, supposing only that the Fathers testified that to be Christ's institution of baptism, which we find to have been thus agreeable to the practice customary among the Jews.

17. As for example, if it were made matter of doubt or queſtion, whether Chriſt derived the Cenſures of his Church from the Jews, It will ſure be a ſufficient anſwer to the queſtion, if we ſhall firſt find in the Jewiſh writers their cuſtoms of Excommunication, and then from the Chriſtian writers find the like records of the Chriſtian cuſtom, from the inſtitution of Chriſt, and the practice of his Apoſtles, delivered down unto us; For thoſe two things being done, what need we any Father's aſſiſtance or guidance, to ſecure us, that Chriſt derived, and lightly changed this cuſtom of Eccleſiaſtical cenſures in his Church, from what he found in the Jewiſh Sanhedrim?

18. In this matter 'tis eaſy and obvious to object (as Mr. T. here doth about baptiſm) that excommunication was a cuſtom among other nations, as well as the Jews, the deſcription of it among the Druids in Cæſar's Commentaries being ſo famous and notorious to every man: which yet will not ſure prevail with any reaſonable man, or make it neceſſary to produce the teſtimonies whether of Scriptures or Fathers, that Chriſt took it not from the Druids but the Jews. The like might be inſtanced again in the inſtitution of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper in the Jews poſtcœnium, from which it is by light change deduced.

19. And ſo it is in this matter of baptiſm, the Jewiſh cuſtom of baptizing (not only proſelytes and their children, but the Jewiſh natives) I thought neceſſary to clear from the moſt competent witneſſes of their cuſtoms, the Talmud, Gemara, and Maimonides, the ſobereſt of their writers; And ſo likewiſe in the ſecond place, the practice of the Chriſtian Church, as it is from Chriſt and his Apoſtles deduced, and applied particularly to the Reſolution of our Quære, to the baptizing of Infants, I have cleared alſo from ſome footſteps of it in the Scripture it ſelf, and from the concordant teſtimony of the Fathers of the Church. And having cleared theſe two particulars, wherein all the difficulty conſiſted, I need not ſure inquire of the opinion of antiquity for the dependence betwixt theſe two, or the derivation of one of them from the other, the very lineaments and features acknowledging and owning this progeny to have come forth from that ſtock, this ſtream to have been derived from that fountain, without any teſtimonials to certifie it.

20. And yet thirdly, After all this I demand whether Chriſt's words to Nicodemus, Joh. 3. mentioned, §. 18. be not an evidence from Scripture it ſelf of this very matter, the derivation of the Chriſtian from the Jewiſh baptiſm; when upon Chriſts diſcourſe on that ſubject, that except a man be regenerate of water and of the ſpirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God, and on occaſion of Nicodemus's objection againſt this, v. 9. Jeſus anſwered, Art thou a maſter in Iſrael, and knoweſt not theſe things? diſcernibly intimating that this his inſtitution of baptiſm was ſo agreeable to the Jewiſh cuſtoms of initiating, and receiving into the Covenant by baptiſm, that a Rabbi among the Jews could not reaſonably be imagined to be ignorant of it.

21. And if the baptiſm of the Jews had (as Mr. T. cites it out of Grotius) its firſt original from the memory of the deluge purging away the ſins of the world, then ſure that place of St. Peter which affirms the Chriſtian baptiſm to be ἀντίτυπον, the antitype or tranſcript of Noah's deluge, is an expreſs teſtimony of it alſo. And this I hope might be a competent account of this matter.

22. And yet after all this, it is alſo clear, that the Fathers in their diſcourſes of baptiſm do ordinarily lay the foundation of it in Moſes, or the baptiſm of the Jews; witneſs Gregory Nazianzen Or. 39. Seeing, ſaith he, it is the feaſt of Chriſt's baptiſm, let us philoſophize, diſcourſe exactly of the difference of baptiſms; then after this preface, entring on the diſcourſe, he thus begins, Ἐβαπτίσε Μωσῆς ἀλλ' ἐν ὕδατι, καὶ πρὸ τούτου ἐν νεφέλῃ καὶ ἐν θαλάσσῃ, Moſes, ſaith he, baptized but in water, and before this in the cloud and in the ſea: And then making that (with S. Paul) a type of the Chriſtian baptiſm, he proceeds to John's baptiſm, which, ſaith he, differed from the Moſaical, in that it added Repentance to water, ἐβάπτισε καὶ Ἰωάννης, ἀλλὰ δὲ Ἰουδαϊκῶς, John alſo baptized, but not Judaically.

23. So before him, Macarius Hom. 32. having mentioned the circumciſion which was under the Law, foreſignifying the true circumciſion of the heart, annexes thereto, καὶ τὸ βάπτισμα τῆς νόμου, the baptiſm of the Law, which ſaith he, σκία δὲ τῶν ἀληθινῶν πραγμάτων is a figure of true things, ἐκεῖ γὰρ σῶμα ἀπέπλυνεν, ὧδε δὲ ἡ ἐρρυπωμένον νῦν βάπτισμα πνεύματι καθαίζει καὶ ἀποπλύνει, for there that waſhed the body, but here the baptiſm of the holy Ghoſt and of fire purgeth and waſheth the polluted mind, and ſo goes on to the parallel betwixt the legal Prieſt and Chriſt, making the ſame accord betwixt the one and the other pair; So Hom. 47. p. 509. ſpeaking of things under the Law, he firſt mentions the glory of Moſes face, a type of the true glory under the Goſpel; ſecondly, Circumciſion, a type of that of the heart; thirdly, παρ' ἐκείνοις βάπτισμα, ſaith he, τὸν σάρκα ἁγιάζον, among them there is baptiſm cleanſing or ſanctifying the fleſh, but with us the baptiſm of the holy Spirit and of fire, that which John preached — The ſame is intimated again, but not ſo explicitely ſet down Hom. 26. p. 349. Πάντες Μωσέα διεδέξατο, τὸν καινὸν ἐκκλησίαν χειροτονήσαντα, καὶ τὸν ἀληθινὸν ἱερωσύνην ἐγχειρισθέντες, νῦν γὰρ ὅτι βάπτισμα πυρὸς καὶ πνεύματος, περιτομή τις ἐν καρδίᾳ γινομένη, Peter ſucceeded Moſes, having the New Church of Chriſt and the true Prieſthood committed to him, for now is the baptiſm of fire and the Spirit, and a kind of circumciſion placed in the heart; where it ſeems the Jewiſh baptiſm was the figure of the Chriſtian, as the Jewiſh Prieſthood of the Chriſtian, and the Jewiſh circumciſion of the circumciſion in the heart.

24. So in Athanaſius's ῥήσεις καὶ ἑρμεν. παραβολ. εὐαγγ. qu. 103. * numbring up ſeven ſorts of Baptiſm, the
* Tom. 2. p. 426. firſt even now mentioned, τὸ τῷ καλαλυσμῷ εἰς ἐκκοπὴν ἁμαρτίας, that of the flood for the cutting off of ſin, the ſecond that of Moſes, in paſſing the Red ſea, which he calls, τυπικὸν, figurative; the third is τὸ νομικὸν βάπτισμα the legal baptiſm, ὅπερ εἶχον οἱ Ἑβρῶοι, which the Hebrews had, whereby every unclean perſon (ſo is every one by nature) ἐλούετο ὕδατι, ἐπλύνετο τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτῶν, καὶ ὅτως εἰσήρχετο εἰς παρεμβολὴν, was baptized in water, had his garments waſht, and ſo entred into the camp, this it ſeems the ceremony of his admiſſion. And then follows the baptiſm of John and Chriſt. So St. Auguſtine againſt Fulgentius, Paganus baptizat, Judæus baptizat, Saducæus baptizat, & multi extra regulam legis latæ baptizare non ceſſant, ſed illud eſt unum quod verum, illud verum quod Chriſti. So Germanus in his μυσικὴ θεωρία. Bib. Gr. Pa. p. 131. D. Τὸ βάπτισμά ὅτι, καθὼς ὁ θεὸς διετάξατο τῷ Μωϋσῇ, λέγων, καταβὰς διαμάρτυραι τῷ λαῷ τούτῳ, καὶ ἁγνίσον αὐτὸς, καὶ πλυνάτωσαν τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτῶν, &c. Other examples I doubt not the Reader may obſerve in the Fathers writings on this ſubject; theſe few may ſerve πρὸς δεῖξιν.

25. And therefore when Mr. T. adds, that ſome paſſages of the Fathers ſhew rather, that they took it as

as in ſtead of circumciſion, the anſwer alſo is very obvious, that the Jews cuſtom being to initiate by circumciſion and baptiſm both, and the former of theſe being laid aſide by Chriſt's reformation, and only the ſecond continued, and that ſo improved by Chriſt, as to have more than the whole virtue of both, and to be the only initial Sacrament, the Fathers might well learn of St. Paul to make this compariſon or parallel betwixt the Jewiſh, and the Chriſtian Sacrament, and ſo betwixt baptiſm and circumciſion, and indeed could not properly ſay that the Chriſtian baptiſm was in ſtead of the Jewiſh baptiſm being rather the continuance of it, adding ſome ceremonies and virtue to that which was formerly among them, not ſubſtituting ſomewhat elſe (as for circumciſion it did) in ſtead of it.

This is evident enough; and yet if it were not, we ſhould have little reaſon to be moved with this 26.
ſuggeſtion, knowing that in the other Sacrament which Chriſt viſibly inſtituted in the Jewiſh poſtcœnium, and imitated it in the delivering the portions of bread and wine, the Fathers generally lay the compariſon betwixt the Paſchal Lamb and that, and not without the authority of St. Paul himſelf, ſaying that Chriſt our Paſsover is ſacrificed for us, the plain meaning of it being this, that the Jewiſh Paſsover being aboliſhed, we have now the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt (the true immaculate lamb of God) ſubſtituted in the ſtead of it, but that copied out not from the Jewiſh manner of eating the Lamb of Paſsover (for Chriſt did not eat it at that time, being put to death before the hour in which it was to be eaten) but of the poſtcœnium or cloſe of the Jewiſh Supper, after which he took bread, &c. conſecrating this ordinary cuſtom of theirs into an higher myſtery, than formerly it had in it.

SECT. IV.

The conceits of Pe. Alfunſus and Schickard of the Jewiſh baptiſm. Raf. Alphes. Mr. T. his concluſion not inferred. The original of the Jewiſh Baptiſm (the only doubt) vindicated. Jacob's injunction to his family. Sanctifications Exod. 19. 10. differ from waſhing garments.

WHat he next adds from Mr. Selden, of ſome that conceived the Jewiſh baptiſm in initiating of proſelytes was in imitation of Chriſts example (and ſo not Chriſts of theirs) and of Schickard that conceives they added baptiſm to circumciſion, to difference them from Samaritans, is too vain to deſerve any other reply, than what he himſelf hath annext concerning the former, viz. that Mr. Selden (naming only Pet. Alfunſus for this) doth not give any credit to him in it (but indeed diſproves it, and adds antidotes to that poyſon, that without them I ſhould not have thought likely to have wrought on any man.) And indeed ſo he doth alſo in plain terms concerning the latter, de Syned. l. 1. c. 3. fateor me nondum illud aut eâ de re quicquam alibi legiſſe, he never read that or any thing of that matter any where elſe. Numb. 1. pag. 41.

To which I add, that if the place in Schickard be examined, it will acknowledge it to be a ſingular conceit and invention of his, and nothing elſe. 2.

In his fifth Chap. de Reg. Jud. he hath theſe words, ad differentiam Samaritanorum addiderunt baptiſmum quendam de quo Raf. Alphes, Tom. 2. p. 26. & ipſe Talmud Maſſ. Jefamos fol. 47. citing the words at large in Hebrew. But in thoſe words, though they are by Schickard applied indefinitely, as if they were the teſtification of the whole foregoing propoſition, yet the reader ſhall find no ſyllable to that purpoſe of differencing from Samaritanes, more than from all other men, but only that when a proſelyte is received he muſt be circumciſed, and then נתרפא מטבילין אותו when he is cured, they ſhall baptize him in the preſence of two wiſe men, ſaying, Behold he is an Iſraelite in all things, or if ſhe be a woman, the women lead her to the waters, &c. A plain teſtimony (to the ſenſe of thoſe which we formerly produced) of baptizing both Jews and Proſelytes (for elſe how could the Proſelyte, upon receiving this, be ſaid to be an Iſraelite in all things?) but no leaſt intimation, that this was deſigned to diſtinguiſh them from Samaritanes peculiarly, but as that which was always cuſtomary among the Jews, at their entring into Covenant with God. 3.

And then the premiſes being ſo groundleſs and frivolous, I ſhall not ſure be concerned in any concluſion that Mr. T. ſhall infer from them, which it ſeems, is to be this, that notwithſtanding the Doctor's ſuppoſition that the whole fabrick of baptiſm is diſcernible to be built on that baſis, the cuſtomary practice among the Jews, yet many will conceive it needs more proof than the bare recital of paſſages out of Jewiſh writers. 4.

But Mr. T. would be much put to it, to ſhew in what mode and figure it is, that this concluſion is drawn out of theſe premiſſes: Certainly none that my Logick hath afforded me, for that hath no engine firſt to draw many out of two; nor ſecondly, to infer that thoſe that had miſtaken for want of knowledge (as Alfunſus) or adverting (as Schickard) of the Jewiſh cuſtoms, would need any more than the recitation of clear teſtimonies out of the ſobereſt Jewiſh writers, to diſabuſe him: or thirdly, that they that either through prejudice, or any other principle of obſtinacy ſhall reſiſt this degree of light thus offered them, will be convinced by any other ſort of teſtimonies, whether out of the Fathers, or Scripture it ſelf, being ſo well fortified and provided with inclinations, at leaſt, if not with artifices, to reject one, or miſinterpret the other. 5.

But, it ſeems, after all this, and to evidence to how little purpoſe he hath ſaid thus much, Mr. T. is well enough ſatisfied, at leaſt as far as to baptizing of Proſelytes, that there was ſuch a cuſtom among the latter Jews afore Chriſts incarnation; All the difficulty, ſaith he, is concerning the original of it among them, For that either it ſhould begin from Jacobs injunction to his houſhold, Gen. 35. 2. or from Gods command, Exo. 19. 10. for the Iſraelites to waſh their clothes afore the giving of the law, he cannot conceive, thoſe places ſpeaking of waſhing Jews by nature, not Proſelytes, whereas the Jews baptized not Jews by nature (as Mr. Selden ſaith) but by profeſſion. 6.

Here are many weak parts in theſe few words; For firſt, The original of the cuſtom among the Jews is but an acceſſary, wholly extrinſecal to the matter in hand, and in no reſpect neceſſary to be 7.

defined by us: If the cuſtom be acknowledged, we need ask no more; and Mr. T. having acknowledged the cuſtom, grants all that in that matter we require of him, for on that, and not on that particular original of it, it is that we ſuperſtruct our whole fabrick, as far as belongs to infant-baptiſm, which is very fitly founded in the Jewiſh cuſtom of baptizing, from whence ſoever that cuſtom was derived to them; And ſo that one thing ſuperſedes and anſwers that whole difficulty, if indeed there were any ſuch in this matter.

8. But then ſecondly, for the two originals here ſet down, and both rejected by him, it is a little ſtrange that he ſhould think fit to do ſo, and not to ſubſtitute any third in the place of them; For 'tis certain that every cuſtom received univerſally into a Church or ſociety of men, muſt have ſome original or other, and conſequently this cuſtom being by Mr. T. acknowledged, muſt not in any reaſon be left ἀπάτωρ, ἀμήτωρ, without Father, without Mother, without any original; and therefore thoſe two that are alledged for it by the Jewiſh writers, being by him ſo faſtidiouſly rejected, it was very fit that he ſhould aſſign ſome other, and annex his reaſons of giving it the deference, upon which it ſhould be prefer'd before them.

9. And when he ſhall do ſo, I ſhall not doubt to imbrace it, and make the ſame advantage of it which hitherto I have done of either of theſe. But he is here pleaſed to be reſerved, and gives not the leaſt intimation of any other reaſon, which is more ſuitable with his conceptions. 'Tis true indeed he did before out of Grotius, mention Noahs flood, in memory of which this cuſtom aroſe among other nations; but, beſides that this original of it was not by him deemed ſufficient to appropriate it to the Jews, but leaves it common to them with other nations, thoſe other two, Jacobs injunction, and Gods command before receiving the Law (either one or both) are perfectly reconcileable with that, and the memory of the deluge being the more remote and firſt original, theſe may be the nearer and more immediate, and ſo are not prejudged by his pretending, or my yielding of that.

10. Thirdly, For Jacobs injunction to his houſhold, Gen. 35. 2. it is no where vouched by me as the original of this cuſtom among the Jews, but only an intimation given, that that other, the command of God before the giving the Law, was agreeable to what we read of Jacob to his houſhold; and ſo certainly it is; for as in the one the ceremony preſcribed them to uſe at the putting away ſtrange Gods, was this, to be clean and change their garments; ſo in the other they are injoined to ſanctifie themſelves and waſh their clothes, which is in other words directly the ſame thing; waſhing themſelves, and having clean garments, being among the Jews joined together, and the whiteneſs of their garments preſcribed in baptiſm לקבל פני שכינה (ſaith the Gloſs on Gemara Babylon. tit. Jabimoth) to receive the preſence of the divine Majeſty (juſt as in the Chriſtian Church the Dominica in albis, white or Whitſunday was a ſpecial day for adminiſtration of baptiſm, and the perſons baptized were rhetorically ſtyled ſometimes ἀστέρες ἐξ ὑδάτων ἀνατέλλοντες, ſtars riſing out of the waters, ſometimes ἀστράπτοντα τῆς κολυμβήθρας τὰ κρῖνα, the bright lilies of the font, as they are joined together in Proclus Orat. 12. p. 384. and in S. Chryſoſtom, new lilies planted from the font, Hom. 6. de reſur. and accordingly on Conſtantine's great coin, ſtampt in memory of his baptiſm, was ingraven (on one ſide) a pool of water with a lily grown out of it; (ſee Joſ. Scal. in Opuſc.) and all theſe but figurative expreſſions of what Chryſoſtom more plainly ſets down by τὸ λαμπρὸν τοῦτο περιβολαῖον ἐνδυσάμενοι, their putting on white garments at the receiving of baptiſm, Tract. de S. Pent. for which Jobius in Photius hath λαμπροφορεῖν only.)

See §. 12.

11. And then as Jacob vowed a vow to the Lord to give him the tenth of all, and accordingly God after inſtituted the tithes for the Levites portion, and ſo the latter of theſe was agreeable to the former, but yet the latter, viz. Gods inſtitution, the original of the cuſtom of tithing among the Jews; ſo Jacob might injoin his houſhold that ceremony of waſhing or baptiſm, and after that God injoin it in giving the Law, and one of theſe be agreeable to the other, and yet the cuſtom of baptiſm among the Jews be derived only from the latter, as from the peculiar original of it.

12. Fourthly, The command of God, Exod. 19. 10. in which baptiſm is ſaid to be founded by the Jews, is not (as Mr. T. ſuggeſts) the command to the Iſraelites to waſh their clothes (nothing but the cuſtom of changing their garments can be founded in that) but the command to Moſes to ſanctifie them (Go unto the people and ſanctifie them to day and to morrow) in the Hebrew notion of the word קידושין, ſanctifications, for waſhing, either the whole, or ſome parts of the body, as is ſhew'd at large, Sect. 35.

13. And if in ſtead of this of ſanctifying, i. e. baptizing them, Mr. T. did unwittingly ſubſtitute waſhing their garments, then I hope, he may now be adviſed to reform that miſtake, and ſee more reaſon than hitherto he hath done, to aſſign that command of Gods, as the moſt agreeable original of this cuſtom, and no longer imagine that it was a cuſtom of the latter Jews, taken up by themſelves without any ground of Scripture; But if formerly he ſaw this, and was willing to diſguiſe it, and, on purpoſe to miſguide the Reader, left out the mention of Moſes's ſanctifying or baptizing them, and only ſet down the waſhing of their garments (which was not at all proper for the turn) to be the original of baptiſm, wherein, as Paulinus tells us, they were rendred nivei, white as ſnow, corpore as well as habitu, in body as well as garment, I ſhall not then hope that even this length of words will be ſufficient for his conviction.

14. Laſtly, For his reaſon againſt deducing the baptiſm of proſelytes from this original [becauſe the Jews baptized not Jews by nature but by profeſſion, whereas thoſe places ſpeak of waſhing Jews by nature, not Proſelytes] it will preſently appear to be very vain; for firſt, The Jews baptized Jews by nature, and not Proſelytes only, as hath been both there and here ſhewed at large, out of the moſt creditable of the Jewiſh writers; Secondly, Their baptizing of Proſelytes was founded in their precedent cuſtom of baptizing of Jews, as hath been evidenced alſo from the Rabbines explication of Num. 15. 15. One Ordinance ſhall be both for you of the congregation of Iſrael, and alſo for the ſtranger or proſelyte. And ſo 'tis evident that of Exod. 19. 10. being the original of baptizing native Jews, may, and muſt be the original of baptizing the Proſelytes.

15. And this in each part being thus manifeſt, Mr. Selden's Authority (if it ſhould be, as is pretended) can be of no force againſt thoſe evidences which I have here produced, the beſt he offers us at any time, to prove any thing concerning the Jewiſh cuſtoms. And I ſhall now appeal to the Reader, whether Mr. T. could well have been expected to have made more miſadventures in ſo few words.

SECT. V.

Mr. Selden's notion of the Sea. The defence of my notion of it. Learned mens affirmations to be judged of by their teſtimonies. Chriſt's baptizing of Jews as well as Gentiles no argument. Chriſt's vouching Johns baptiſm to be from heaven, no argument. No more, the pretended no intimations of it. The no conformity. The proſelytes children baptized, continually, not only at the firſt converſion. The baptiſm of a woman with child, ſerving for the child alſo, not argumentative. The Canon of Neocæſaria about it.

NExt he proceeds to conſider the words of the Apoſtles, 1 Cor. 10. 1. of our Fathers being baptized into Moſes (as in the cloud, ſo) in the Sea. Where firſt, He tells me that he doth not conceive Mr. Selden's Expoſition, that the ſea was ſome veſſel of waters —— but the red ſea] And I that am as little of Mr. Seldens mind, but expreſly interpreted it, of the Red ſea, §. 7. and rejected Mr. Seldens interpretation, §. 8. (although I omitted to name the author of it) am not, he knows, concerned in that, but have from his rejecting Mr. Seldens authority, when 'tis not for his turn, his example for my not thinking my ſelf bound up by it at other times, either in that newly paſt, where he vouched his name as his only proof, that the Jews did not baptize Jews by nature, or in other particulars which I find afterwards vouched from him, the truth of which I as little conceive, as Mr. T. doth this of the ſea not ſignifying the Red ſea, which I acknowledge to be unconceiveable. Numb. 1.

But then ſecondly, he doth not think my expoſition right neither (though I interpret it of the Iſraelites paſſing through the Red ſea, as he acknowledges to do.) But what is my interpretation? why, that their being baptized into Moſes in the Red ſea (as alſo in the cloud) ſignifieth their being initiated into God's covenant under the conduct of Moſes, as ſince they are wont to be initiated by baptiſm. And why doth he diſlike this interpretation? why, becauſe when it is ſaid, our fathers were baptized, it is not meant were baptized as ſince Proſelytes were baptized among the Jews, but as Chriſtians were baptized. 2.

But certainly this is no reaſon of exception to my interpretation; For firſt, I compare not this baptiſm of our fathers in the ſea with the baptiſm of Proſelytes among the Jews, but annex it immediately to the baptizing of the native Jews, §. 6. before I proceed, §. 9. to the baptiſm of Proſelytes. And ſecondly, I do not lay the compariſon of the Apoſtle betwixt the baptizing in the ſea, and the Jewiſh cuſtom of baptizing, but acknowledge it to be betwixt the baptiſm of the Fathers under the Law, and the baptiſm ſince Chriſt among Chriſtians; All the uſe I make of the words of the Apoſtle, was to ſhew that baptiſm among the Jews was a ceremony of initiating into the covenant, and that upon that ſuppoſal it was, that the Apoſtle uſed the phraſe of the Iſraelites that came out of Ægypt, and entred into Covenant with him, under the conduct of Moſes, God giving them an eſſay of his receiving them under his wings (the phraſe to ſignifie reception into the covenant) by invironing them with the ſea. This I thought had been before intelligibly enough ſet down; I hope now he will no longer miſunderſtand it. 3.

What he adds out of Mr. S. that after Exo. 19. 10. the Jews did not baptize Jews, but only Proſelytes, hath already been evidenced at large to have no truth in it, the cuſtom of baptiſm continuing to all their poſterity, as well as that of circumciſion. And whereas this is ſaid to be ſet down thus out of Maimonides and other Jewiſh Rabbines, the Reader, if he will conſult the place in Mr. Selden de Synedr. l. 1. c. 3. will find there is no ſuch matter; That Mr. S. himſelf ſo affirms, p. 23. I willingly acknowledge; but in a matter of antient ſtory, ſuch as this is, neither he nor any elſe muſt be believed farther than the teſtimonies produced by him out of their writers exact, eſpecially againſt expreſs teſtimonies to the contrary. And ſuch he there produceth more than one, p. 34. out of Gemara מת אבותינם What did our Fathers? truly they entred not into Covenant without circumciſion and baptiſm and ſprinkling of blood, and again p. 35. our mothers were baptized and not circumciſed, and p. 26. out of Victoria Porchetus, that our mothers (though not as he ſaith, Sara and Rebecca, referring the cuſtom to a greater antiquity than that of the time of giving the Law) were baptized and not circumciſed, and p. 38. out of Maimonides, that the Iſraelites entred into covenant by a threefold rite or ceremony, by circumciſion, baptiſm, and oblation. And again, p. 39. What was done to you? ye entred into covenant by circumciſion, baptiſm, and the ſprinkling of the ſacrifice, and therefore the Proſelyte — the cuſtom of baptizing the Proſelytes founded in that of baptizing the native Jews. All theſe clear teſtimonies are by him produced directly to the proof of my poſition, that the native Jews (indifferently) were baptized, and not a word in any other parts of the teſtimonies to give reaſon to ſuſpect, that after that one time of Ex. 19. the Jews did not baptize. What he hath done in his other Book de Jure Nat. ac Gent. I need not apprehend (and have not commodity to inquire or examine) ſuppoſing that if there he had undertaken the proof of it, he would here, where he affirms it without proof, and againſt expreſs teſtimonies produced by him, have referred (according to cuſtom) to that place. 4.

And now what force againſt any pretenſion of ours is there in Mr. T. his obſervation, that Chriſt and his Apoſtles baptized Jews as well as Gentiles?] For firſt, ſo certainly they might, and yet derive their baptiſm from the cuſtom formerly in uſe among the Jews, for they, we know, baptized native Jews: nay ſecondly, ſo they might, though the Jews had baptized none but Proſelytes, for to that it would bear juſt proportion, that they ſhould baptize both Jews and Gentiles, in caſe both came in as Proſelytes to Chriſt. For it were a fallacy a little too groſs to deceive any man of common underſtanding, to argue thus, The cuſtom was to baptize Proſelytes, and not natives; therefore Chriſt, if he obſerved that cuſtom, was not to baptize native Jews; The anſwer being ſo obvious, by diſtinguiſhing of Proſelytes, that they are either ſuch as come in to the Jewiſh Religion, or ſuch as came into Chriſt, and that Chriſt was to baptize all that were Proſelytes to him, and that the native Jews as many as 5.

believed on him, were ſuch, and as believers, i. e. as Proſelytes to Chriſt, not as native Jews were baptized by him.

6. Other reaſons he hath choſen to annex for confirmation of his negative, that "Chriſts baptiſm was not in imitation of, or in conformity with the Jewiſh cuſtom; for ſecondly, ſaith he, Chriſt would not have avouched the baptiſm of John to be from heaven and not from men, if it had been in imitation of the Jewiſh cuſtom. But I wonder what appearance of concludency there is in that reaſon? May not any thing be from heaven, or by God's appointment, which is derived from a Jewiſh cuſtom? may not God in heaven give commiſſion to John Baptiſt to preach repentance, after the ſame manner that others before him, Noah and Jonah, &c. had preached repentance, and to receive all that came in on his preaching, by the ceremony of baptizing ordinarily uſed, and known, to initiate men into covenant with God, among the Jews? I ſee not the leaſt incongruity in this, or that any obligation of reaſon can be pretended, why God may not appoint a ceremony known among men to be uſed in his ſervice: ſuch ſure was impoſition of hands, uſual among the Jews in Benedictions, which now is made uſe of by the Apoſtles of Chriſt, in ordaining Biſhops over the Church. And ſo it may well be in this matter of John's or Chriſt's baptiſm, which though it were unqueſtionably from heaven in reſpect of the Commiſſion given to them by God, appointing them to do what they did, yet might the ceremony of waſhing uſed by them, be derived from the cuſtoms that were already familiar among them.

7. 'Twere eaſy to inſtance in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, the power of the Keyes (and many the like) which though brought into the Church of Chriſtians by Chriſt, and ſo from heaven, were yet derived and lightly changed from Jewiſh obſervances, and in that reſpect from men alſo.

8. His third reaſon, that it is likely ſome where or other ſome intimation would have been given of that cuſtom, as the directory for Chriſtians in the uſe of baptiſm] is too frivolous to require reply; for beſide that the negative argument were of no force, if it were as is pretended, It already appears that there are in the Jewiſh writers, more than intimations of this cuſtom, and ſome indications of it even in the Scripture it ſelf, as John 3. 5. 10. and for any plainer affirmations, what need could there be of them, when both the matter it ſelf ſpeaketh it ſo plainly, that there was no need of words, to thoſe that knew the Jewiſh cuſtoms, as the firſt writers and Readers of the New Teſtament did, and when Chriſt's ſole authority, and practice of his Apoſtles were ſufficient Directory for the Chriſtians in the uſe of baptiſm?

9. Fourthly he adds, that the inſtitution and practice would have been conformable to it; And ſo I ſay, and have made clear that i was, as far as to the controverſie in hand we are or can be concerned in it: But ſaith Mr. T. the contrary appears, adding one main inſtance of the inconformity, and fourteen leſſer diſparities, The main diſparity, ſaith he, is in their baptizing no infants of the Gentiles at their firſt converſions, whereas the Jews baptized only the Gentiles Infants at their firſt proſelyting, not the infants of thoſe who were baptized in infancy.

10. For the former of theſe he offers no manner of proof beyond his own affirmation, and therefore it is ſufficient to deny it, as he knows we do, and evidently begs the queſtion in aſſuming and not offering any proof for the contrary.

For the ſecond, that of the Jewiſh practice, he pretends no more than what he had before cited by reference (but now ſets down in words) viz. the affirmation of Mr. Selden.

11. But I have already ſhewed how groundleſs that affirmation of Mr. S. was, as to the native Jews children, who were ſtill baptized after the giving of the Law. And the ſame I now add for the children of thoſe proſelytes who had been baptized in infancy, there appears not the leaſt proof of this from the Jewiſh writers, who are the only competent witneſſes in it, but for the contrary I propoſe theſe two teſtimonies taken notice of by Mr. S. himſelf, de Synedr. c. 3. out of Gemara Babylon לטולם אין גר עד שימול וישביל. He wants the rite of a proſelyte for ever, unleſs he be baptized and circumciſed. Here baptiſm and circumciſion are joined together, as equally neceſſary to a proſelyte, and that for ever. And circumciſion there is no doubt was to be received by every male, not only at their firſt coming to the Church of the Jews, at their firſt proſelytiſm, but through all poſterities, every child of a proſelyte that was not circumciſed אין גר became ſtraightways no proſelyte: And then ſure this conjunction of baptiſm with circumciſion on theſe termes of equality, both of perpetual neceſſity to all proſelytes, muſt needs extend the baptiſm as well as the circumciſion beyond the firſt proſelytes and their immediate children, to all their poſterity that ſhall come from them afterwards, for to all thoſe belonged circumciſion.

12. So again in the ſame place, יכיון דלא טביל נוי תוא, and if he be not baptized, he remains a Pagan or Gentile; Here I ſhall ask, whether the child of a proſelyte who had been baptized in his infancy, were to be a Pagan for ever? I ſuppoſe it will be anſwered, no; And then by the force of that teſtimony of Gemara I conclude, therefore it muſt be ſuppoſed that he was baptized, for elſe he would be a pagan for ever.

13. Beſides this, two things I farther add, to remove all poſſible force of this ſuggeſtion; Firſt, That if it were granted in the full latitude wherein it is propoſed, that the Jews baptized no other infants of proſelytes, but thoſe whom they had at their firſt converſion; yet this would nothing profit Mr. T. For it were then obvious to affirm, that Chriſt who imitated the Jews in that, and ſo baptized the children of Chriſtian Proſelytes, did make ſome light change in this, and farther than the pattern before him afforded, baptized all the poſterity that ſhould ſucceed them, and were born in the Church in their infancy alſo, the reaſon though not the pattern belonging equally to them as to the children of the firſt proſelytes, and the Jewiſh cuſtom of baptizing their natives infants, being fully home to it.

14. Secondly, That it being by all parts granted, that the children which the proſelytes had at their firſt proſelytiſm were baptized among the Jews, this is as evident a confutation of the Antipædobaptiſt, and ſo of Mr. T. as it would if all their infants to all poſterity were baptized: For by that very baptizing of the infants at their firſt proſelytiſm, it appears that infants may be baptized, for I hope thoſe proſelytes infants are infants; And if any infants may, and ought to be baptized, then are all their pretenſions deſtroyed, whoſe only intereſt it is to evince, that no infants muſt or may be baptized. And I hope this will be of ſome uſe to Mr. T. when he ſhall have conſidered it.

The

The only way M. T. hath to confirm this of the Jews not baptizing any infants of proselytes born after their first conversion and baptism, is the resolution of the Jews, that if a woman great with child became a proselyte and were baptized, her child needs not baptism when 'tis born. And this I had cited, §. 109. out of the Rabbines, and so indeed I find it in Maimonides, tit. Isuri bia. c. 13. סע יברח שנתן יירה וטבלה אין בנה צריך טבלה But I cannot think that (whether true or false) a sufficient proof to infer the conclusion; For the Jewish Doctors might probably thus resolve upon this other ground, because the mother and the child in her womb being esteemed as one person, the woman great with child being baptized, they might deem the child baptized as well as the woman, and not account it needful to repeat it after the birth, which yet (by the way) it seems they would have done, if they had not deemed the child all one with the mother, and consequently they must be supposed to baptize those children which were begotten to the proselyte after the time of his or her first conversion and baptism. And accordingly the Christian Doctors in the Council of Neocæsarea Can. 6. having resolved the contrary to that Jewish hypothesis, viz. that οὐδὲν ποιοῦσι ἡ τικτοῦσα τῷ τικτομένῳ, the mother that bears the child differs from the child, or is not all one with it, and her confession in baptism is ἰδία proper or particular to her self, and belongs not to the child in her womb, give the [κυοφοροῦσα] the woman that is with child, and is then converted to the faith, leave to be baptized, when she pleases, supposing that the child which then she carries, shall, notwithstanding her baptism then, be it self baptized after its birth. 15.

Which as it is a clear answer to the argument deduced from the resolution of the Jews in that point, so 'tis moreover an evidence how little of proof Mr. T. had either from his own observation or Mr. Seldens testimonies, from all which he can produce no other but this, which in the sound is so far from affirming what he would have, and upon examination is found to conclude the contrary. 16.

SECT. VI.

Lesser inconformities no prejudice. Yet they do not all hold. Prayer the Christian sacrifice. בת דין. The rule of judging in this matter. Baptizing in the name of the Father, &c. prescribed by Christ. So dipping or sprinkling. The Pract. Cat. misreported. Mr. Marshals covenanting.

THIS grand disparity then being cleared to be Mr. T. his mistake, I shall not need to attend his other instances of disparity, this accord which hath been already mentioned and vindicated, being sufficient to my pretensions, and no concernment of mine obliging me to believe or affirm, that the parallel holds any farther than Christ was pleased it should hold, and of that we are to judge by what the Scriptures, or ancient Church tells us was the practice of him, or his Apostles; For 1. the Jews I doubt not, brought in many things of their own devising into this, as into other institutions of God's, and the latter Jews more, as of the proselytes being so born again in baptism, that lying with his natural sister was no incest, and the like: And 2. Christ, I doubt not, changed the Jewish œconomy in many things, as in laying aside circumcision, in commissionating his disciples to baptize (and they leaving it in the hands of the Bishop, and those to whom he should commit it, οὐκ ἐξὸν ἐστι χωρὶς τοῦ ἐπισκόπου βαπτίζειν, it is not lawful to baptize without the Bishop, saith Ignatius) whereas it was not among the Jews any part of the Priests Office, any more than Circumcision was; And so in many other particulars. Numb. 1. Ep. ad Smyrn. Edit. Voss. p. 6.

But what prejudice is that to my pretensions, who affirm no more of the accordance betwixt the Jewish and Christian practice than either by some indications in the Scripture it self, or by the Christian Fathers deductions from the Apostles times, appears to be meant by Christ, and practised by the Apostles, and then by the Jewish writers is as evident to have been in use among them. 2.

And this is all the return I need make to his 14. lesser disparities, and all that he hath at large endeavoured to infer from them, supposing and granting them all to be such. 3.

But yet it is evident that some of them are not such; As when First he saith, the baptism of males must be with circumcision and an offering, 'tis clear that, though 1. circumcision be laid aside by Christ, and 2. when it was used, it had nothing to do with baptism, yet as to the adjoyning of offering, or sacrifice, the parallel still holds, the prayers of the Church being the Christian sacrifice, and those in the Christian Church solemnly attendant on the administration of baptism. 4.

So parallel to the court of three Israelites, by the confession or profession of whom (על עדת בת דין saith Maimonides) the infant was baptized, we have now not only the whole Church, in the presence of whom 'tis publickly administred, and when more privately, yet in the presence of some Christians, who are afterwards, if there be any doubt, to testify their knowledge to the Church, but more particularly the Godfathers, and Godmothers, being themselves formerly baptized, do represent the Church of which they are members, meaning thereby the people of the Church, and the Minister commissionated thereto by the Bishop, represents the Church also, meaning the Governors thereof. 5.

But I shall not proceed to such superfluous considerations, and so I have no need of adding one word more of reply to his 24. Chap. (as far as I am concerned in it) unless it be to tell him that the Bishops Canons are not the rule by which I undertake to define, wherein the Jewish custom must be the pattern, wherein not; but (as he cannot but know, if he had read the resolution of the 4. Quære) the practice of the Apostles of Christ, by the testifications of the Fathers of the Church made known unto us, to which as I have reason to yield all authority, so I find the Canons and rituals as of this, so of all other Churches in the world (no one excepted) to bear perfect accordance therewith, in this particular of infant baptism (though in other lesser particulars they differ many among themselves, and all from the Jewish pattern) And this I hope is a competent ground of my action, and such as may justify it to any Christian artist to be according to rules of right reason, of meekness, and sound doctrine, and no work of passion or prejudice or singularity, or (as Mr. T. suggests) of the Doctors own pleasure, as if that were the mutable principle of all these variations from the Jewish pattern. 6.

Of this score 'tis somewhat strange, which he thinks fit to add concerning the form of baptism, 7.

In the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost, In this one thing, saith he, which Christ did not prescribe, nor did the Apostles, that we find, so conceive it, yet, saith the Doctor, Christs prescription must be indispensably used.

7. In reply to this I shall not spend much time to evidence this form to be Christ's prescription; If the express words at his parting from the world, Mat. 28. Go ye therefore, and teach, or receive to discipleship, all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, be not a prescription of Christs, and if the universal doctrin and continual practice of the whole Church through all times, be not testimony sufficient of the Apostles conceiving it thus, and a competent ground of the indispensable continuing the use of it, I shall not hope to perswade with him; only I shall mind him of the words of S. Athanasius in his Epistle to Serapion Tom. 1. p. 204. Ὁ ἐν μόνῳ τῷ πατρὸς ὀνόματι βαπτιζόμενος, ἢ ἐν μόνῳ τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ υἱοῦ, ἢ χωρὶς τοῦ πνεύματος, ἐν πατρὶ καὶ υἱῷ, οὐδὲν λαμβάνει, ἀλλὰ κενὸς καὶ ἀτελὴς διαμένει, ἐν τῇ τριάδι γὰρ ἡ τελείωσις ἐστι. He that is not baptized in the name of all three, receives nothing, remains empty and imperfect, For perfection is in the Trinity, no baptism perfect, it seems, but that. And if this will not yet suffice, I shall then only demand, whether he can produce so express grounds from Christ, or the Apostles, or the Universal Church of God through all ages, or from any one ancient Father, for his denying baptism to infants.

8. What in this place he adds farther from me, out of the Practical Catechism, that I confess that by Christs appointment the baptized was to be dipt in water, i. e. according to the Primitive antient custom to be put under water, is a strange misreporting of my words, I wonder Mr. T. would be guilty of it. The words in the Pract. Cat. are visibly these, By Christ's appointment whosoever should be thus received into his family should be received with this ceremony of water, therein to be dipt (i. e. according to the Primitive antient custom, to be put under water (three times, or in stead of that, to be sprinkled with it—— where 1. All that Christ's appointment is affixt to, is, the receiving all that should be received into Christ's family, with this ceremony of Water; 2. For the manner of that reception by water, 'tis set down disjunctively, therein to be dipt three times, or in stead of that, to be sprinkled with it. These are evidently my words; no way affirming either the dipping or sprinkling (one exclusively to the other) to be appointed by Christ, but only the ceremony of water, whether it be by dipping in it, or sprinkling with it, either of which may be signified by the word used from Christ by S. Matthew, βαπτίζετε, baptize ye.

9. What ground the Church of Christ hath had to disuse immersion, and in stead of putting the whole body under water, only to dip the face, or sprinkle it with water, I shall not now discourse; all that I have to do in this place, being to vindicate my self, that I have no way affirmed the putting under water (used by the Primitive Church) to be appointed by Christ, exclusively to sprinkling, and that I hope I have already done by the exact reciting of my words, which had been so much misreported by him.

10. And so I have done with his 24. Chapter. For as to the objection against Mr. M. drawn from his covenanting to perform the worship of God, according to Gods word, and admiring that ever mortal man should dare in Gods worship to meddle any jot farther than the Lord hath commanded, and yet in point of infant baptism following the Talmud, I that am far from Mr. M. his perswasions, as well as practices, am not sure bound to give answer for him, Ætatem habet, let him answer for himself; and when he doth so, 'twere not amiss he would consider, whether Episcopal government stand not on as firm a basis in the Church of God, as Infant baptism is by him vouched to do.

CHAP. II.

Of Christ's words, Matt. 28. 19.

SECT. I.

The Doctors pretended concessions examined. Christ's institution of Baptism not set down Matt. 28. but necessarily before that time.

Numb. 1. THIS 25. Chapter is a view of my interpretation of Mat. 28. 19. which lies thus, Go and disciple (μαθητεύσατε, make disciples, receive into discipleship) all nations, baptizing them in the name, &c. teaching them, &c. thereby evidencing that the making or receiving disciples, not supposing any precedent instruction, but looking wholly on it as subsequent, can no way exclude the Christians infants from baptism, when they are thus brought to the Church to be entred into the School of Christ, and undertaken for, that they shall learn when they come to years.

2. And to this a long proemial answer he hath of many lines, which begins thus, Though I conceive Dr. H. to ascribe more power to the Canons of the Prelates about the Sacraments, than is meet, being one who hath written in defence of the Common prayer Book, yet by this allegation of Mat. 28. 19. he seems tacitely to yield, that if the words there include not infants under the discipled, then there is something in the New Testament which excludes infants from baptism, although he say §. 96. I do not believe or pretend that that precept of Christ doth necessarily infer (though it do as little deny) that infants are to be baptized.

3. Before I proceed to that which follows, 'tis not amiss to view in passing, how many incongruities are here amass't together in these few words.

4. For whereas my having written in defence of the Common Prayer Book is made use of as an evidence to infer that I ascribe more to the Canons of Prelates, than is meet, it is certain, 1. That the Common Prayer book stands not by the Canons of the Prelates, but by Act of Parliament, and consequently if I had had been guilty of a confeſt partiality to the Common Prayer book, yet were this no evidence of my aſcribing any thing (therefore ſure not more than is meet or too much) to the Canons of Prelates.

Secondly, It never yet appeared, that by writing in defence of the Common Prayer book, I offended 5.
at all (therefore ſurely not about either, much leſs againſt both the Sacraments.)

Thirdly, The making my defence of the Common Prayer book, written long ago, a proof that I 6. offend now in ſomewhat elſe; viz. in attributing too much to the Canons of the Biſhops, is, 1. The connecting together things that are moſt diſparate, concluding quidlibet ex quolibet; and 2. a plain begging of the queſtion, for ſuch certainly it is in reſpect of him, with whom he diſputes, and ſo muſt be, till he ſhall offer proof that I have erred in that defence, The ſame, as if he ſhould conclude, that he who hath once written the truth, were obliged the next time to ſwerve from it.

So when he mentions my allegation of Mat. 28. 19. the word allegation muſt ſignify that I produce 7.
and ſo alledge that text as a proof of my poſition: But this he knows I do not; But only ſuppoſe the Antipædobaptiſt to found his plea in it, and all that I have to do, is to ſhew how uſeleſs it is like to prove to him, confeſſing alſo that to me it is as uſeleſs, and ſo never attempting to draw any argument from it.

So again, when upon a ſuppoſition by him ſpecified, he aſſumes me to grant that which he acknow- 8.
ledgeth me expreſly to deny, this ſure is very incongruous: Tis viſible from the words by me produced §. 96. that I deny that that text of Mat. 28. 19. can prejudice the baptiſm of infants, and the only deſign I had in conſidering this text at all in this place, was to evidence the ſecond branch of the negative part of my undertaking, that there appeared nothing in Chriſts inſtitution of baptiſm, or commiſſion to his Apoſtles, which was excluſive of infants: How then can it be ſuggeſted with any ſhew of truth, that I ſeem tacitely to yield, that if the words include not infants under the diſcipled, there is then ſomething in the New Teſtament which excludes infants from baptiſm.

'Tis evident from whence it is that I infer, and poſitively define Chriſts Commiſſion for baptiſm to 9.
belong to infants, not from theſe words of Chriſt (which as I ſaid, I never propoſed to that end to prove my poſition from them, but only to anſwer the Antipædobaptiſts objection founded in them) but from the practice of the Apoſtles ſignifying their ſenſe and perſwaſion of Chriſts meaning in his inſtitution of baptiſm, which inſtitution we know from John 4. 1. had long preceded the delivering of theſe words Mat. 28.

So that whatſoever were the notion of diſcipling there, yet could not I deem infants thereby exclu- 10.
ded from baptiſm, whom by another medium, viz. the Apoſtolical practice, I ſuppoſed to be admitted to it by Chriſts inſtitution.

The ſhort is, Infants I ſuppoſe may be received into diſcipleſhip when their parents bring them, 11.
and if ſo, then they are or may be included in the words Mat. 28. but if they might not, and ſo were ſuppoſed not to be comprehended in theſe words of Chriſt, Mat. 28. yet that which is not included, is not preſently excluded, he that ſaith a man is a living creature, doth not thereby deny an angel to be ſo alſo: when Chriſt gives his diſciples power to heal diſeaſes, Mat. 10. 1. he cannot be deemed to withhold from them power of raiſing the dead, for that we ſee comprehended in their commiſſion v. 8. and ſo I could no way be inforced to yield that they were excluded from baptiſm, as long as from any other medium I were aſſured they were admitted to it.

And ſo ſtill μηδὲν ὑγιὲς, here is not the leaſt appearance of truth in this diſcourſe. 12.

He proceeds then to ſome other attempts of proving it neceſſary for me, if I will ſtand to my 13.
words elſewhere, to acknowledge infants excluded by that text. To which end he hath been very diligent in putting together ſeveral ſcattered paſſages in my writings, in hope to find ſome ἐναντιοφάνεια, and to raiſe ſome ſhew of argument out of my own words, and ſo from my temerity or inconſtancy (for want of ſolid proofs) to conclude, that if this precept of Chriſt doth not neceſſarily infer infant-baptiſm, then by manifeſt conſequence it doth deny it.

The paſſages he gathers up are theſe, "The Doctor ſaith, §. 55. that Chriſts inſtitution makes 14.
"dipping or ſprinkling with water a Sacrament, which inſtitution is Mat. 28. 19. and therefore the "Doctor will have the words there indiſpenſably uſed in baptiſm, and §. 92. he ſaith baptiſm is a Sacra"ment, that Sacrament an inſtitution of Chriſts, that inſtitution not founded in any reaſon of im-
"mutable truth, but only in the poſitive will of Chriſt, and ſo that there is nothing conſiderable
"in this queſtion (or any of this nature) but how it was delivered by Chriſt; And §. 94. that which "was done by the Apoſtles, if it were not a rule for ever, yet was an effect of ſuch a rule formerly gi"ven by Chriſt, and interpretable by this practice to be ſo. And, Pract. Cat. l. 6. §. 2. he expounding
"Chriſts inſtitution, ſaith that the words import that the perſon baptized acknowledgeth, maketh
"profeſſion of believing in three, delivers him to three as authors of his faith, and to be ruled
"by the directions of his Maſter, and this he will have to be meant by baptizing into the name of "the Father, Son, and holy Ghoſt.

Theſe are the paſſages, whence, ſaith he, "I infer that if baptiſm be a Sacrament, and made ſo 15.
"by Chriſts inſtitution, and that inſtitution founded only in his poſitive will, and the will of "Chriſt be, that baptiſm be in the name of the Trinity, and this is when the baptized makes pro-
"feſſion of believing in three, to be ruled by them, and the Apoſtles practice interprets Chriſts
"rule, no infant that doth not profeſs faith, is baptized into the name of the Trinity, nor was "appointed to be baptized by Chriſt, nor did the Apoſtles baptize them, and therefore they are not "baptized according to Chriſts inſtitution, and ſo no Sacrament to them.

Here is a very ſubtile fabrick and great pains taken to prove me to affirm tacitely what I expreſly 16.
deny: But herein though his pains be great, he hath much failed of the ſucceſs; it were too long to ſhew it at large, yet the reader that will be at pains to ſurvey his proceſs, will certainly acknowledge it, if he ſhall but remember theſe two things.

Firſt, That Chriſts inſtitution of baptiſm was not (nor is ever affirmed by me to be) ſet down in 17.
thoſe words of Mat. 28. that having been long before inſtituted and practiſed, as appears by plain words Joh. 4. 1, 2. Secondly, That though Chriſts will and inſtitution for baptizing infants be not ſo manifeſtly expreſt in thoſe words Mat. 28. 19. as ſhall be able by the bare force of the words to con- vince any gainſayer, without any other way of evidence or proof added to it, yet by the Apoſtles practice of baptizing infants (appearing to us by other means) it is moſt evident that they who certainly did not miſtake Chriſts meaning, did thus underſtand and extend his inſtitution and commiſſion. The truth of this is there made evident §. 30, &c. I ſhall not here repeat it.

18. Secondly, That the infant when he is to be baptized, doth, though not by his own voice perſonally, yet by his lawful proxies, which the Church accepteth in his ſtead, profeſs the believing in three, the Father, Son, and holy Ghoſt, deliver himſelf up to three, &c.

19. By this clue the reader will eaſily extricate himſelf out of the Labyrinth there provided for him, if ſuch it appear to be, and diſcern a perfect accordance in all the paſſages, which with ſuch hope of advantage were ſo diligently collected by him.

20. But this is not all, he will yet drive the buſineſs ſomewhat higher in theſe words, Yea, if the poſitive will of Chriſt, be the reaſon of baptiſm, they uſurp upon Chriſt's prerogative who baptize otherwiſe than Chriſt hath appointed, and then if the precept of Chriſt doth not neceſſarily infer infant baptiſm (which the Doctor ingenuouſly acknowledgeth) it doth by manifeſt conſequence deny it, ſith he forbids that to be done otherwiſe than he hath appointed when he hath determined how it ſhould be done. The Doctor when he ſaith above, the words, [I baptize into the name of the Father, &c.] muſt be indiſpenſably uſed, methinks by the ſame reaſon ſhould conceive Chriſts inſtitution ſhould be unalterably uſed in baptizing thoſe only whom he hath appointed to be baptized.

21. To this the grounds of anſwer have been already laid alſo, viz. that they that baptize infants, baptize no otherwiſe than Chriſt appointed, and the Apoſtles appear to have underſtood his appointment. By Chriſts appointment, not meaning particularly his words, Mat. 28. but his will otherwiſe made known to his diſciples when and in what words ſoever it was that he inſtituted baptiſm, which muſt be long before this, even before his Apoſtles took upon them to baptize any, which yet they did in great abundance Joh. 4. 1. And of this appointment or inſtitution of baptiſm by Chriſt, it is moſt true, that if that precept of Chriſt, whereby he firſt inſtituted baptiſm, did not indeed comprehend and ſo neceſſarily infer infant baptiſm, and was ſo underſtood to do by the Apoſtles, it ſhall conſequently be deemed to deny it. But then herein lyes a great fallacy, when from another appointment of Chriſts, viz. that Mat. 28. which I acknowledge not to infer infant baptiſm neceſſarily, he aſſumes in univerſum, and reports it as my confeſſion, that Chriſts precept (indefinitely taken, and ſo extending to all Chriſts precepts at any time) doth not neceſſarily infer infant baptiſm. Which is that grand illogical fault in diſcourſe, of inferring an indefinite or univerſal concluſion from particular premiſſes.

22. As for the compariſon which he makes betwixt the indiſpenſable uſe of the words of baptiſm, Mat. 28. and the as unalterable obſervation of Chriſt's inſtitution, in reſpect of the perſons to be baptized, I willingly grant it, on the condition premiſed, that he miſtake not the text, Mat. 28. to be the words of that inſtitution, wherein Chriſt defined, who are the perſons to be baptized.

23. Thoſe words are a commiſſion to the Apoſtles to go preach to, or diſciple all nations, and thus far extends to point out the perſons, viz. that they ſhould (as diſciple ſo) baptize Gentiles as well as Jews, and again, they are expreſs for the form of baptiſm, that it ſhould be in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, but they are not any kind of direction to that other matter of receiving; and admitting infants or not infants.

24. That I ſuppoſe ſufficiently notified to them before, both by the common practice of their anceſtors in the Jewiſh religion, by the vulgar notion of baptiſm, whileſt it was familiarly uſed among the Jews, both to their own and their proſelytes children, and alſo by Chriſts ſpecial direction, (though the Goſpels, which expreſs not at all the words of the firſt inſtitution of baptiſm, do not ſet that down) in the time of his preaching among them, ſome while before that paſſage of ſtory related, Joh. 4. 1, &c.

25. From both of theſe, I ſuppoſe, the Apoſtles learnt it (and not from Mat. 28.) and we learn it only from the Apoſtles, as ſhall hereafter appear. And ſo much for his proœmial reaſoning.

SECT. II.

Making diſciples, all one with receiving into diſcipleſhip. Baptizing, the act of the Baptiſt. Inſtruction ſubſequent to diſcipling. The pretended parallel between Mat. 28. and Mar. 16. Εὐαγγελίζεσθαι. Johns diſcipling by preaching, excludes not infants. No more the Apoſtles, Mat. 10. 5. The notation of the word μαθητεύειν. Mat. 13. 52. Act. 14. 21. Infants both ſaid to come, and to believe. Inſtruction ſubſequent to baptiſm.

Numb. 1. After this præluſory σκιαμαχία, he next proceeds to conſider, what ſhift (as he calls it) the Doctor makes to elude the force of Chriſts inſtitution, Mat. 28. 19. But I have already made it evident that that Commiſſion for preaching to, or diſcipling all nations (as for the baptizing them, and the particularity of the form to be uſed in baptiſm, &c.) was not the inſtitution of baptiſm, nor any intimation on either ſide, whether infants ſhould be baptized or not; and ſo 'tis manifeſt how little need I had to uſe any ſhift, or artifice to elude the force of it.

2. However in his view of my diſcourſe ſome exceptions he muſt find; And the firſt is that though μαθητεύσαλε is well rendred, make diſciples, yet μαθητεύσαλε βαπλίζονλες is not well paraphraſed by, receiving into diſcipleſhip, baptizing them, making this form of baptiſm the ceremony of receiving them. For by this, ſaith he, the making diſciples is made the ſame with receiving them, and baptiſm the ceremony of receiving into diſcipleſhip, which is as truly an act of the baptized profeſſing, or avouching his diſcipleſhip.

3. Here is another ſubtlety of a refined nature, making a difference betwixt making diſciples, and receiving into diſcipleſhip, or receiving diſciples; As if theſe two were not perfectly ſynonymous, and by me evidently uſed, uſed, as ſuch. I ſhall not diſpute of words, when the matter is clear, and when it is equally to my purpoſe which phraſe is uſed, whether making or receiving diſciples.

Secondly, When he affirms of baptiſm, which I make the ceremony of the Apoſtles receiving them, 4.
that 'tis as truly the act of the baptized, this is no ſubtilty, but groſs and viſible enough; For certainly baptiſm in the active ſenſe (as it is plain I underſtand it in that place, where I paraphraſe, go and make diſciples and baptize) is not the act of the baptized, but of the baptiſt; The coming to baptiſm indeed, and the undertaking the vow, and making the profeſſion, is the act of the baptized, either perſonally, or by his proxy, which in reputation of Law, and in acceptation of the Church, is his alſo; but ſtill baptiſm, or (to remove all poſſible miſtake) baptizing, βαπτίζειν, Mat. 28. 19. is an act of the baptizer only, and ſo the ceremony of receiving into diſcipleſhip, whomſoever they thus duely baptize. I hope I need ſay no more of this.

His ſecond branch of exception is to thoſe words of mine wherein I ſay that the making or receiving 5.
diſciples, ſuppoſeth not any precedent inſtruction, but looks wholly on it as ſubſequent. This I there concluded not from the bare negative, becauſe there was no precedent mention of ſuch inſtruction, where diſcipling and baptizing, were both mention'd, but becauſe in that place, on which the Antipædobaptiſt ſo much relies, Mat. 28. 19. the [διδάσκοντες teaching] is expreſly mentioned after diſcipling and baptizing, and ſo is in reaſon to be deemed, and lookt on, as ſubſequent to both, and ſo the receiving ad diſcipulatum refer to that then future inſtruction.

And to this ſenſe I there made it manifeſt, that the definition of baptiſm 1 Pet. 3. 21. did refer, 6.
that baptiſm is ἐπερώτημα, ſeeking to God, as to the oracle to inquire for the whole future life, no way prerequiring actual inſtruction, but coming to Chriſt and the Church to receive it, and obey it for the future (and that done in ſome ſort by thoſe that are brought, when they are not able to come, and by the charity of the Church received there) And this farther illuſtrated as by the manner of children brought by parents to School, without either knowledge of letters, or choice, or ſo much as wiſh of inſtruction, ſo by the manner of Chriſt's diſciples being received by him, particularly of Philip, Joh. 1. 44. who was called, and received into diſcipleſhip, as ſoon as ever Chriſt met with him, i. e. before he was at all inſtructed by him; and ſo alſo by the ſtory of the Jews, Exo. 19. 8. who undertook to obey all the Commandments of God, which he ſhould give them, which yet were not then, but after given them, v. 20. and ſo laſtly, by the nature of proſelytiſm, which as it is all one with entring into God's covenant and (in the Chriſtian ſenſe) with coming to Chriſt and being received to diſcipleſhip, ſo 'tis that which children are known to be capable of, not only by that text, Deut. 29. 10. but by the cuſtom of baptizing infant proſelytes among the Jews, and by Chriſt's command to ſuffer them to come unto him, whenſoever they were thus brought.

Now to this thus evidenced (and much more largely in that place, §. 26. &c.) he is pleaſed to 7. annex ſome reaſons of his diſſent, For, 1. ſaith he, that which is expreſt in Matthew by, Go ye therefore and make diſciples all nations, is in Mark, Go ye into all the world and preach the Goſpel to every creature, which ſhews how they ſhould diſciple all nations; Now they who are made diſciples by preaching the Goſpel are made diſciples by precedent inſtruction, Ergo, the making or receiving diſciples, Mat. 28. 19. ſuppoſeth precedent inſtruction.

But to this I anſwer, 1. That the words in Mark are no otherwiſe parallel to thoſe in Matthew, than 8.
as an Epitome is parallel to a larger diſcourſe, ſuch we know S. Marks for the moſt part is, an abbreviation of S. Matthews Goſpel, as in many others, ſo in this particular, ſome paſſages indeed there are in S. Mark in this place, which are not in S. Matthew, as ſhall anon be ſhewed, but in the particular now before us, S. Mark is, according to wont, more conciſe; there is no mention in him of baptizing in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the holy Ghoſt, nor conſequently of diſcipling, of which that was the ceremony, as in S. Matthew there is.

Secondly, That Chriſts appointment κηρύσσειν εὐαγγέλιον, to preach the Goſpel, in S. Mark, doth no 9.
way infer the precedent inſtruction of every ſingle perſon that was received to baptiſm: The phraſe ſignifies to proclaim or promulgate the happy tidings brought into the world by Chriſt, grace, and mercy, and eternal felicity to all that ſhould come in to him, and take his yoke upon them, and learn of him; And upon the publiſhing of this to all the world, to every creature, i e. to the Gentiles univerſally, as well as the Jews, I ſuppoſe 'tis very poſſible, that many of them ſhould make all ſpeed to come unto Chriſt, and come out at the Apoſtles preaching, they and their whole houſholds together (παυδίη, as the oracle commanded in Homer) and to bring their infant children with them, as they uſed to do, that became proſelytes to the Jews and then the Apoſtles, knowing their Maſters mind for the receiving of Infants, and that (as from the inſtitution I ſuppoſe them fore-inſtructed) to baptiſm, receive them all, and (as many as interpoſed no voluntary hindrance) baptize them, and having taken them into the School of Chriſt make good proviſion for the future inſtruction of them, as ſoon as ever they ſhould be capable of it.

That thus it was, I pretend not (ſtill) to deduce from theſe words, Mat. 28. but to infer from 10.
another medium, the practice of the Apoſtles, otherwiſe notified to us: All that I am now to manifeſt, is, that this paſſage hath nothing contrary to our hypotheſis, but is perfectly reconcileable with it, and this is done by the ſcheme thus laid: And ſo 'tis moſt viſible how no force there is in this firſt reaſon of exception.

The ſecond follows, that ſuch as the making diſciples was Joh. 4. 1. ſuch is the making diſciples Mat. 11.
28. 19. For by the Doctors confeſſion they are all one. But that was by preaching, as is plain concerning John, Mat. 3. 1, 2, 5, 6. and concerning the Apoſtles, Mat. 10. 5, 6, 7. Ergo.

To this I anſwer, that the account laſt given, is fully ſatisfactory to this exception alſo; For ſup- 12.
poſing the Apoſtles to publiſh whitherſoever they came, the Εὐαγγέλια, the good news that was come into the world by Chriſt, and the hearers not only to come in themſelves, but to bring their whole families, and ſo their infant children with them, there is no difficulty to imagin, that they that had thus made proclamation, received all, and made all diſciples, young and old, that either came or were brought, and ſo it being granted that they made diſciples by preaching, preaching being the inſtrument to draw the parents themſelves, and to move them to bring their children to diſcipleſhip, it is ſtill very viſible

how children ſhould be diſciples, and conſequently baptized by them, baptiſm being the conſtant ceremony of diſcipling. And though I am not able to affirm, how it was actually in Johns baptiſm, yet this I may ſay, that as far as can be diſcerned or inferred from the phraſe in either place, (μαθητεύειν and μαθητὰς ποιεῖν) thus it very poſſibly might be both in Johns and in the Apoſtles baptizing.

12. Firſt for John, 'tis true indeed that his baptiſm attended his preaching, yet doth it not thence neceſſarily follow that none were baptized by him, but thoſe who particularly heard and obeyed his preaching; For 1. Why might not thoſe that heard it, divulge it to others, and bring them before they heard him, to deſire to be baptized, and upon their confeſſing their ſins, and profeſſing amendment, he baptize them? 2. Why might not thoſe that heard it, or heard of it, give that heed to it, as to bring all that were dear to them, of what age ſoever, by that means to ſecure them from the wrath to come; when Noah preacht repentance to the old world, and upon the decree of ſending the flood upon the world of the ungodly, called all to come into the Ark to him to eſcape the deluge, ſuppoſe others beſides Noahs family, had hearkened to his preaching, or ſuppoſe he and his ſons had had infant children, can we imagine they would have left their infants to that certain ruine, and not have taken them into the Ark with them?

13. And Johns baptiſm was anſwerable to that Ark, in reſpect of that approaching ruine on the Jews, ſtyled the kingdom of heaven v. 1. and that evidenced to be a bloody kingdom, explicated by caſting into the fire v. 10. And can we imagine the Jews that believed John and came to his baptiſm, did not bring their children with them to ſave them from the predicted evils? And then I profeſs not to ſee any reaſon to render it incredible, that John Baptiſt ſhould thus receive and baptize thoſe infants (though the Scripture affirming nothing of it, and tradition, as far I know, as little, I ſhall neither affirm nor believe any thing in it) This only is certain, that among the Jews of that time infant Children were known to be capable of entring into covenant with God after this manner, and of being partakers of the benefit of the Covenant by that means.

14. And one thing more I may add, that Chriſt himſelf, who was by his ſinleſneſs, as unqualified for the Repentance which John Preacht, as the infants were by their incapacities, did yet come and was received to John's baptiſm, v. 13. and then in caſe infants were brought, why might not they be received alſo?

15. Then Secondly, for as much as concerned the Apoſtles Mat. 10. Firſt, 'Tis there evident that they were ſent to the loſt ſheep indefinitely, and ſure that phraſe comprehends the Lambs alſo, the infant children being loſt in Adam, as well as the grown men, by the addition of their actual to original ſin: And then why ſhould we doubt but the Apoſtles miſſion extended to them alſo?

16. And Secondly, for their preaching, it is juſt as Johns was, to warn them to beware of the imminent deſtruction, that vindicative act of Gods kingdom v. 7. that all that ſhould give ear and heed to them might haſten to get out of that danger by reformation and new life; and the ruine being impendent to the young as well as old, even the whole nation, why ſhould not the infant children be reſcued from that, by their parents care in bringing them to baptiſm, and timely ingaging them to fly from the wrath to come, as ſoon as they ſhould come to underſtanding, injoying in the mean time the benefit of others charity?

17. Thirdly, After their Preaching though there be no mention of baptizing (and ſo it was not ſo fit to be produced to our preſent buſineſs) yet other things there are appointed to be done, wherein infants were concerned as well as others, as healing of diſeaſes, &c. and if being incapable of receiving benefit from preaching ſhould be deemed an obſtacle to their being baptized, why ſhould it not to their receiving of cures? Nay I may add, How ſhould the dead in that place (who ſure were as uncapable of hearing or underſtanding as the tendereſt infant) be capable of being raiſed by thoſe Apoſtles, which yet is there affirmed of them, v. 8.

18. And ſo much for that reaſon alſo, and in like manner for the third, which is but repeating the laſt branch of this ſecond, that the Apoſtles were to diſciple all nations by the ſame way that they diſcipled the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, which was, ſaith he, by preaching and therefore ſuppoſed precedent inſtruction.

19. In what ſenſe, I have now ſhewed, viz. by preaching to the nations, and receiving all that came in, to the diſcipleſhip whether on their own legs, or in others arms, whole families at once, the parents, and upon their undertaking their infant children alſo.

20. His fourth proof is taken from the uſe and notation of the word, which is ſo to teach as that they learn, and ſo, ſaith he, is uſed Mat. 13. 52. μαθητευθεὶς, is rendred, [inſtructed] by our laſt tranſlators, and can be no otherwiſe rendred than [made a diſciple by teaching] ſo Act. 14. 21. it is ſaid, Having preached the Goſpel to that city, καὶ μαθητεύσαντες and having taught or made many diſciples

21. For the notation of the word we have formerly ſaid ſufficient, that it ſignifies to receive ad diſcipulatum, as into a ſchool of Spiritual inſtruction, μαθητεύω ποιῶν to make a diſciple, and ſuch he is made, who by any motive or means either comes or is brought into the ſchool, this indeed in order to teaching in the Maſter, and to learning in the ſcholar, and the one ſo to teach, as that the other learn, but this ſubſequent to his being made a diſciple, the youth we know enters into the School, is admitted into the College and Univerſity, before he learns a word there, the inſtruction or learning is ſtill lookt upon as future, at his entring into diſcipleſhip.

22. And this is all the importance of the word μαθητεύειν Mat. 13. 5. only ſome accidental differences may be obſerved; 'tis in the paſſive, and in the Aoriſt in the prater tenſe, πᾶς γραμματεὺς μαθητευθεὶς εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν, every Scribe which is or hath been entred as a diſciple unto the kingdom of heaven, who ſince his entrance hath been inſtructed and (as real paſſives import) received influence, been really affected and changed by diſcipleſhip, ſtill no way ſuppoſing that he was inſtructed in the learning or myſteries of the kingdom of heaven, before he was thus admitted a diſciple to it; After his admiſſion, there is no doubt but he doth (or ought to) learn, nay being there γραμματεὺς μαθητευθεὶς, a Scribe diſcipled, a grown man and learned among the Jews, before he came to Chriſt, I doubt not but ſome knowledge he had of it before he entred himſelf a diſciple (ſee baptizing of infants, p. 199.) but this not by force of the word μαθητεύειν, for ſtill a diſciple he may be before he learns, and is therefore obliged to learn,

becauſe he hath aſſumed and undertaken to do ſo, either perſonally, or by others ſuſception, by his coming, or being brought to be a diſciple.

So in the other place Act. 14. 21. μαθητεύσαντες ἱκανοὺς] ſignifies no more than having received, or initiated, i.e. (I ſuppoſe) by this rite of baptiſm, made and baptized many diſciples, which though it be there ſet down as a conſequent of the Apoſtles preaching the Goſpel in that City (for otherwiſe it were not imaginable that they ſhould receive any diſciples there, they muſt firſt proclaim admiſſion to all that come, before any can be expected either to come, or be brought to them) yet may it very reaſonably be extended to more perſons than thoſe that underſtood their preaching, viz. to the infant children of their proſelytes, brought to them by their parents and dedicated to Chriſt. 23.

Thus invalid are his attempts from the notation of the word, and by conſequence his inference from thence (which is ſet down as his fifth proof) that thereby it may appear how the Apoſtles underſtood the precept of Chriſt to preach the Goſpel to perſons and thereby make them diſciples. For although the practice of the Apoſtles be indeed the means by which we may diſcern how they underſtood Chriſts precept (and thoſe two places cited by Mr. T. from Mat. 13. and Act. 14. do no way belong to that, they tell us not, whether they received infants to baptiſm, or not) yet I may very well ward my ſelf from any inconvenience, which this uſe of the word μαθητεύειν in other places can threaten, it being already vindicated from all neceſſity that it ſhould be confined to grown men, and not communicated to infants alſo. 24.

His laſt proof is by returning to the firſt again, comparing the words in Matthew with the parallel place in Mark, Whereby, ſaith he, a diſciple and believer will appear to be the ſame, the diſciple to be baptized in Mat. being in Mark expreſſed by the believer, which is put before baptiſm. 25.

To this I anſwer, 1. that that paſſage in S. Mark, He that believes and is baptized ſhall be ſaved, and he that believeth not ſhall be damned, and ſo on to the end of the Goſpel, is (as even now I intimated) added by that Evangeliſt, to the words, as they are ſet down in Matthew, and ſo being an addition, cannot be looked on, as exactly parallel to the words in Matthew, Go and diſciple all nations baptizing them— And this we alſo know is ordinary, for one Evangeliſt to ſet down more fully, what is omitted or more ſhortly ſet down in another, and S. Mark that in other things was willing to abbreviate S. Matthew, doth now viſibly inlarge; And ſo the compariſon cannot regularly be made betwixt theſe two Evangeliſts words, ſomething being abbreviated in Mark which was more at large in Matthew, and ſomething more conciſely ſet down in Matthew, and more largely in Mark. And then what neceſſity is there, that Mark not mentioning diſcipling but believing, and Matthew mentioning diſcipling but not believing the diſcipled and believers ſhould be deemed the ſame? 26.

'Tis true indeed of grown men, none can in reaſon be admitted diſciples, which are not alſo believers (the ground of which I have ſet down in the Reſol. of the Quære p. 199.) but of infant children this is not true, for thoſe, though they cannot come, may yet be brought, and though not upon their own confeſſion, yet by the ſuſception of others, made capable of the Churches charity, and ſo may be diſciples without actual or perſonal belief. 27.

Nay Secondly, if Mr. T. his argument had power to infer it, 'twere that which I might ſafely avouch, that infants may be comprehended under the ſtyle πιστεύοντες, they that believe and are baptized; ſo even now we had it in the expreſs words of Chriſt, the little ones (and S. Luke ſpecifies them to be βρέφη little infants) that believe on him: i. e. juſt as they are ſaid elſewhere to come unto him, when they are as uncapable, for want of bodily ſtrength, of perſonal coming, as for want of ſtrength of mind or judgement, of perſonal believing, and yet in reſpect of others bringing them to Chriſt (and ſo to the Church in baptiſm) they are by Chriſt himſelf ſaid to do both of theſe, to come in one place, and to believe in the other. 28.

But then Thirdly, I willingly acknowledge that the word [believe] in Mark, belongs peculiarly to the grown men and women, who are called by the preaching of the Goſpel, of whom though it be ſaid, that believing and being baptized they ſhall be ſaved, and not believing they ſhall be damned, yet it no way follows, that none but ſuch as thus perſonally believed, ſhould be baptized, or that being baptized they ſhould not be ſaved, but loſe all the benefit of their baptiſm. 29.

The latter part of the words is conſiderable, He that believeth not, ſhall be damned, Infidelity is pitcht on, as the thing peculiarly, that incurs the certain damnation, i. e. the voluntary reſiſting the Faith, when it is preacht convincingly to them, and of that none are capable, but thoſe that are arrived to years of underſtanding. Which as it is an indication that that ver. and thoſe that follow in S. Mark, of believers caſting out devils, &c. v. 17, 18. belong to adulti peculiarly; ſo it no ways hinders but S. Matthews words being different from them, and ſuppoſed to be precedent to them in Chriſts delivery, may comprehend infants alſo, as ſuch who are capable of entring into diſcipleſhip, and of being brought and preſented to the Apoſtles by believing Parents, This being the way whereby the faith of the Parents may be ſignally beneficial to the child, in bringing him thus early into the School, and ſo to the benediction of Chriſt, the parents together with the infant children, as among the Jews ſo among Chriſtians, entring together into covenant with God. 30.

In this matter Mr. T. is willing to find a difference betwixt Teaching them to obſerve all things whatſoever Chriſt hath commanded them, Mat. 28. 20. and the preaching of the Goſpel in S. Mark: thinking by that means to avoid the importunity of that text in Matthew, which evidently ſets baptiſm before inſtructing. But this can avail him nothing; For if by the Goſpel in Mark, we underſt and the whole Goſpel, as in reaſon we muſt, for that is it which muſt be Preacht to every creature (the Gentile world) then is that directly all one with teaching them to obſerve whatſoever he hath commanded; But if by preaching the Goſpel we mean no more than, as Mr. T. here ſaith, that Jeſus is the Chriſt, i. e. the propoſing him as a Maſter, and calling all to come to him as diſciples, then this being ſuppoſed precedent to mens coming to diſcipleſhip, or bringing their infants to it (for without this they cannot be expected to come themſelves, or to bring their infants) all the reſt is left to follow baptiſm, and ſo all particular Chriſtian inſtruction is ſubſequent, not precedent to baptiſm, an effect of their diſcipleſhip, attending it, no way neceſſary to prepare for it, which is the utmoſt τὸ ἐν δείξει, which from that circumſtance of that text I undertook to demonſtrate. 31.

SECT.

SECT. III.

Diſcipleſhip before inſtruction. What knowledge of the Maſter is required to diſcipleſhip. Two ſorts of diſciples, Some come, others are brought.

Numb. 1. HIS reaſons for the diſproving of my interpretation of Mat. 28. being thus evidenced to have no force or validity in them againſt our pretenſions, and ſo indeed his whole fabrick demoliſhed, (that place of S. Mat. being the one main (if not only) ground of Antipædobaptiſts ſtructure) I might well ſpare the advantages of the 26, 27, 28. Sections to which he makes ſome kind of anſwer in the remainder of his 25. Chapter: But there is ſo little weight in his anſwers that they will be ſpeedily diſpatched.

2. Firſt then to my 26. §. he ſaith, that were it all granted me, yet it would no whit avail to prove that an infant may be a diſciple appointed by Chriſt to be baptized. To this I reply, that the 26. §. being moſt of it ſpent for the explaining an hard place 1 Pet. 3. 21. concerning baptiſm, and for aſſigning the due notion to ἐπερώτημα, a queſtion, or addreſs as to an Oracle, for inſtruction for the future life, I pretended not to conclude infant Baptiſm from thence, nor any more than this, that baptiſm being the entring of a diſciple, and not prærequiring actual inſtruction, but conſiſting in coming to Chriſt and his Church, to receive it for the future, 'tis certain that by this account, children are capable of baptiſm, becauſe they may by the care of their parents be thus brought early to Chriſt, and entred into his School by them, before they themſelves, have faculties either to deſire, or know what is done to them, the proportion holding in this, betwixt infants and other Scholars that are entred by their parents in any School before they know one letter in the book, or have actual willingneſs to acquire any knowledge; And this is there illuſtrated by the example of Philip, Joh. 1. 44. and of the Jews, Ex. 19. 8. which have again been mentioned, and are clear evidences, that thoſe may be received into diſcipleſhip which have not yet had precedent inſtruction.

3. Againſt this, all that he hath to pretend, is ſet down by him in theſe words, Let putting to ſchool be as early as the Doctor will imagine, yet none is put to ſchool till he doth know his teacher, and ſo none is Chriſt's diſciple in the Scripture language till he know Jeſus to be Chriſt, and take him for his Lord, which infants being not capable of, they are not diſciples, nor to be baptized according to Chriſt's appointment.

4. To this I anſwer, 1. That the example which I had uſed of children being brought to School by the care of their parents, was deſigned to ſhew no more than this, that they may be delivered up to be Scholars, who as yet know nothing of what they are to learn, nor have actual willingneſs to acquire knowledge; and conſequently, that entrance into diſcipleſhip, refers only to ſubſequent, ſuppoſes not any precedent inſtruction.

5. And this is competently evidenced by that example, though it were ſuppoſed of the child that goes to School, that he knows his teacher, this bare knowledge of the perſon of his teacher, being none of the documents which he comes to School to learn, but the good letters that are profeſt and taught in the School; nor indeed is it imaginable why a blind child which is brought to School, or put to an inſtructer, and ſo cannot be deemed to know the Maſter, before aſſuetude hath acquainted him with him, ſhould not yet be ſaid, with as full propriety of ſpeech, to come to ſchool, as he that uſeth his own eyes as well as feet to direct him thither.

6. Secondly, It is as true, that children that are brought to School, do not always know their Maſters before their entrance, no not by the moſt ſuperficial knowledge; Many are brought to publick Schools, who never ſo much as ſaw their Maſters, till they are by their parents delivered up into their power and diſcipline; If this be not plain enough, then change the ſimilitude from the Schoolmaſter to the parent or guardian, or the very nurſe, every one of theſe are to feed and nouriſh, and, as he ſhall be capable, to inſtruct the child, and ſo doth Chriſt in a Spiritual ſenſe whoſoever is intruſted (by being brought) to him in baptiſm. And we know, God and Nature doth thus bring a child to the parent, to the nurſe or Guardian when the child knows none of theſe, nor underſtands any more of all theſe tranſactions, than the infant doth at the Font conceive what is done to it there. And ſo ſtill this evidenceth the vanity of this anſwer concerning the childs knowing his teacher.

7. But then Thirdly, This ſo imperfect ſuperficial knowledge of the teacher, is in no wiſe worth conſidering in this matter; For I ſhall demand, doth ſuch very imperfect knowledge of Chriſt, as a Schoolboy hath of his teacher, the firſt hour he comes into the School, qualify him for diſcipleſhip to Chriſt, or no? If it do, then his countrymen and kinſmen, before he revealed himſelf to be the Meſſiah, and the Phariſees, which believed not his miracles, were ſufficiently qualified, and then 'tis evident that thoſe might be admitted to diſcipleſhip, which were not believers, and ſo all Mr. T. his hypotheſes are deſtroyed, and then infants may be diſcipled and baptized, though they be not believers.

8. As for that which he here interpoſes [the knowing Jeſus to be Chriſt, and taking him for his Lord] this bears no proportion with the childs bare knowing of his maſter, but is far above it, equal to his making it his own choice to have this Maſter, rather than any other, and promiſing exact obedience to him, which is much more than is to be found in moſt young Scholars, or indeed in any that are brought by their parents or guardians, who alone are the perſons who bear proportion with the infants brought by others to baptiſm.

9. So that this reaſoning of his is ſoon ſalved by diſtinguiſhing of diſciples, that they are either ſuch as come, or ſuch as are brought to School, proſelytes of their own choice, or children under the care of others; of the former ſort there are none but ſuch as have ſome rude imperfect knowledge of Chriſt, upon which they make this choice, and without it, would not probably be expected to make it; But for children which as minors in their guardians hands, have no will of their own, there is no neceſſity they ſhould have knowledge to move their will, they may very reaſonably be acted by the will of others, and by their charity be made partakers of thoſe priviledges which are communicated from Chriſt, in his

Church to all true members thereof, and to that end be discipled and baptized, entred by this cere- 5.
mony into the Church of God, where instruction is to be had, as soon as they are capable of it, and in the mean while partake of those other advantages, of which their condition is capable.

SECT. IV.

The difference of a disciple and proselyte examined. Christian as well as Jewish proselytes, Priviledges of proselytism. Disciples of the Pharisees. The Holy Ghost's not using the word proselyte of Christians, concludes nothing. Jehovah. Ὁμοούσιος. Infants qualified for baptism, As for entring into Covenant, Deut. 29. Gods Oath. Infants adjured, Cripples capable of Christ's cures.

TO my 27. and 28. Sections his answer is brief, that what I say is not right; And for proof, though Numb. 1.
he begins with a [For 1.] and so by his form of branching, promises more reasons than one, yet that first hath never a [Secondly] to follow or back it, and so 'tis all resolved into that one, viz. that it is not true that a disciple and a proselyte are perfectly all one.

To this therefore I must advert, and consider what nice difference he can spring betwixt a dis- 2.
ciple and a proselyte, whereupon to found satisfaction for conscience, why infants may be proselytes and as such, come unto Christ, and yet cannot be made disciples, or received in baptism to discipleship.

And his reason is, because a proselyte, saith he, notes one that is by birth an alien from the Common- 3.
wealth of Israel, and comes to the Israelites to own their God, and be part of their policy, and not to be taught, but enjoy priviledges with other Jews, whether Civil or Ecclesiastical.

But certainly this is no reason of difference; for besides that I, in that §. 27. acknowledged this 4.
accidental difference, that a proselyte denotes a coming from some other nation (as a disciple doth not) adding that this difference had no place in this matter, where the disciples are specified to be received from all nations; besides this, I say, it cannot be unknown to Mr. T. that I speak of proselytes in such a notion as is equally competible to all of what nation soever they are, that enter into Covenant with God.

Thus do we find a proselyte defined, Heb. 11. 6. by ὁ προσερχόμενος τῷ θεῷ, he that cometh to God; 5.
thus doth a Jew when he enters into Covenant of obedience to him, and thus did a Gentile when he undertook the whole law of the Jews, and was therefore גר צדקה and גר ברית a proselyte of their covenant, and a proselyte of their righteousness, and such is every one whether Jew or Gentile, that cometh to Christ; and as the two former of these were made partakers of priviledges by this means, particularly allowed freely to enter into the congregation, and infants as well as grown men, were thus among them admitted into Covenant; so it is not imaginable why it should not hold of the Christian proselytes also, nor why the Christian infants thus received into Covenant by Christ, after the same manner as Jewish and Gentile Infants were among the antient people of God, i. e. by baptism, should not as properly be called proselytes of Christ, though they neither come from any other nation, nor ever associate themselves with Israelites according to the flesh.

And whereas he saith of the proselytes coming to the Israelites, that they came not to be taught, but 6.
to enjoy priviledges, I cannot divine what motive he had to affirm it; for sure the infant child that was baptized, and so received into the congregation of Israel, did come to learn the Jewish religion, into which he was thus early initiated, and that was one special priviledge (the rest of the heathen having not knowledge of these laws,) the immediate end of his proselytism, yet not excluding those other ends of injoying all other priviledges both Civil and Ecclesiastical thereby.

And when he adds, but a disciple of Christ is one that owns Christ for his teacher and Lord only for 7.
spiritual benefits, I might well acknowledge it, and ask, why then an infant, who hath need of those spiritual benefits, assoon as he is born, should not be hastened to a participation of them? But it is farther evident, that spiritual benefits being first and principally designed, other even secular advantages may very lawfully be respected, and reaped by them that are thus early brought in, whether as disciples or proselytes to Christ.

Two sage observations he here addeth, 1. That there is no mention of the disciples of the Priests, but 8. of the Pharisees and Sadduces, and I can very well grant it, who speak not of any lower kind of disciples, but either of God among the Jews, or of Christ, among us Christians, those being the only discipleships, to which they were admitted by the ceremony of baptism, the disciples of the Pharisees and Sadducees being but a subdivision, and notification of several sects among Jews, as there are different denominations of Christians (the more the pity) which divide unity, but use not new baptisms, to discriminate them, I am sure contradict the Apostle if they do.

His second observation is, that the holy Ghost doth not at any time call Christians Christ's proselytes, but his 9.
disciples, that, saith he, we might not confound the notions of these terms; But I answer, 1. that those texts that express the Christians entring into discipleship, by coming unto him (of which there are good store) do in effect call them proselytes, for a Proselyte is a Greek noun derived immediately from the verb προσέρχεσθαι to come unto.

And Secondly, that if this word, whether in it self, or in the verb from whence it comes, had ne- 10.
ver been used in the New Testament, yet would it not thence follow, that we might not confound the notions of proselytes and disciples: The word Jehovah is never used by the Holy Ghost in the New Testament, yet may we not thence conclude, that the notion of Jehovah and God are divers: Ὁμοούσιος, the known style of the Nicene Fathers, is never found used by the writers of the Bible, yet sure it no way follows thence, that the notion of that word, and of this phrase [I and my Father are one] are different and may not be confounded. 'Tis pity to lose time on such fictions of scruple, and difficulty as these.

What now is further said by him in this chapter, both concerning little ones coming unto Christ, 11.
and of their entring into covenant, Deut. 29. 10. is on both sides but a bare denyal of that which is competently proved in that 28. §. For 'tis there evident, that infant children are and always were accounted capable of proſelytiſm and ſo of being entred diſciples, and particularly of being entred into covenant with God, and ſo of being baptized; and there is no reaſon imaginable, why the infants which were capable of coming to Chriſt, were bleſſed by him, were affirmed by him to be qualified for the kingdom of heaven, ſhould be denyed water to be baptized: The Holy Ghoſt being fallen on the Gentiles that came with Cornelius, Peter durſt not deny them baptiſm; And with what equity can the Chriſtian Church do it to thoſe, who are qualified for the receiving pardon of ſin, for being bleſt by Chriſt, for being received into Covenant with him, and may afterward be inſtructed in all things which are needful to be learnt; For that ſtill they are unqualified, till by hearing they own Chriſt as their Maſter, this is a begging of the queſtion, without any the leaſt tender of proof.

12. As for entring into covenant, when by the force of Deut. 29. 10. he is forced to yield it competible to infants, yet he will do his beſt to eſcape the conviction which it offers him, 1. by modifying the ſenſe, then by invalidating my inference from it.

13. Firſt, though he yield that they may enter into Covenant, yet this, ſaith he, but in ſome ſenſe, by their fathers act ingaging them under a curſe or oath to own God as theirs, in which ſenſe the poſterity then unborn did enter into covenant, Deut. 29. 15.

14. But if we examine the place, it will be moſt clear, 1. that the Covenant is entred into by the infants, juſt as by the reſt of them, the wives and the ſtrangers or proſelytes: On their part, Ye ſtand this day all of you before the Lord, that thou ſhouldſt enter into Covenant with the Lord; and on Gods part, that he may eſtabliſh thee this day for a people.

15. Secondly, Here is in the text no mention of any act of the Fathers ingaging them under a curſe or oath, but only of Gods oath which he maketh to them. v. 12.

16. Thirdly, If they had thus adjured, or laid oath or curſe upon their children, yet would this make no difference betwixt their and our entring into Covenant; we by the oath of baptiſm which is laid on the child (by him to be performed when he comes to ability, unleſs he will forfeit all the benefits of his baptiſm) do in like manner adjure our infants, though whilſt they remain ſuch, they hear it as little as the Jewiſh infants did.

17. Fourthly, Whereas from v. 15. he cites that the poſterity then unborn thus entred into Covenant, there is no ſuch word in the text, no mention of [poſterity] or of [unborn] but of them only, who were not that day with them, i. e. (I ſuppoſe) were at that time of aſſembling abſent from the Congregation. I wonder why Mr. T. ſhould attempt thus to impoſe upon the reader.

18. As for our inference (which is this, that by parity of reaſon, infants may be entred into diſcipleſhip, and accordingly baptized, as well as they then might be entred into the covenant of God) he ſimply rejects it, without any farther notice of his reaſon again, ſave only this, that in baptiſm ſuch a diſcipleſhip is injoyn'd as is by preaching the Goſpel, and they only are diſciples that are believers, and they only are appointed to be baptized, who in their own perſons do enter into Covenant and ingage themſelves to be Chriſt's followers, and this is again but a pitiful petitio principii, a denying our concluſion when the premiſes cannot be denyed, and ſo invincibly infer the concluſion, viz. that thoſe may be brought to and received into diſcipleſhip, covenant, baptiſm, which in their own perſons are not yet able to come to Chriſt, as thoſe Cripples may be born by others to Chriſt, who wanted ſtrength to addreſs themſelves, and be as really partakers of his healing miracles, as thoſe who came to him on their own legs. And ſo much alſo for the 25. Chapter.

CHAP. III.

Of the Apoſtolical Practice in this Matter.

SECT. I.

The interpretation of 1 Cor. 7. 12. vindicated. Ἁγια. Sanctification uſed to denote Baptiſm, the uſe of it in the Fathers and Scripture. Tertullians teſtimony: deſignati Sanctitatis. Origen. Author Quæſt. ad Antiochum. Cyprian. Chryſoſtom. Τεκνα there, infant Children. Ἁγιοι in the Epiſtles. S. Auguſtines words examined.

Numb. 1. IN his laſt Chapter he proceeds to the view of thoſe Sections which ſet down the poſitive part of our baſis, evidencing the opinion and ſence, which the Apoſtles had of Chriſt's inſtitution, and of his intention to include, and not to exclude infants from baptiſm.

2. The Apoſtles ſenſe muſt be judged by their own uſage and practice, and that is teſtified to us two ways, 1. by one conſiderable remain and indication of it in S. Paul, 2. By the practice of the firſt and pureſt ages of the Church, receiving infants to baptiſm, and ſo teſtifying the Apoſtolical uſage, and farther affirming that they received it by tradition from the Apoſtles.

3. The remain, and indication in S. Paul, is in the known place of 1 Cor. 7. 12. where ſpeaking of the believers children he ſaith v. 14. νυν δε ἁγια ἐστι, but now are they holy, i. e. it is the preſent practice of the Church (that Apoſtolical Church in S. Paul's time) to admit to baptiſm the infant children of parents of whom one is Chriſtian, though not of others.

4. That this is the meaning of [holy] is there made evident, as by other arguments, ſo by this, that the ancient Fathers who knew the ſacred dialect, call baptiſm Sanctification, Eum qui natus eſt, baptizandum & ſanctificandum, in Cyprian, and ἀναξίως ἁγιαζόμενοι to be ſanctified when they have no feeling of it, and ἐκβρέφους ἁγιαζήτω, let him be ſanctified from the infancy, i. e. baptized then, in Gregory Nazianzen.

To

To which teſtimonies, and the reſt which is there produced out of the agreement of the Jewiſh ſtyle (קדושין ſanctifications for baptiſms, to which agrees Macarius's ſaying of the Jewiſh baptiſm, σαρκα ἁγιάζει, it ſanctifies the fleſh, Hom. 47. p. 509.) becauſe the main difficulty of the interpretation conſiſts herein, I ſhall now add more, one very ancient before any of theſe (within leſs than a hundred years after the death of S. John) Tertullian de Animâ, c. 39. where ſpeaking of infants, and ſaying, ex ſanctificato alterutro ſexu ſanctos procreari, that when either the Father or Mother is ſanctified (i. e. received as a believer by baptiſm into the Church) the children are holy, &c. (clear evidences of the notion of the word) this he there proves by theſe very words of this Apoſtle, Caterum, inquit, immundi naſcuntur, elſe (ſo caterum in Tertullian's ſtyle is known to be put for alioqui or the Greek ἐπεὶ ἄν) were your children unclean, adding in ſtead of theſe other words [but now are they holy] quaſi deſignatos tamen ſanctitatis & per hoc etiam ſalutis, intelligi volens fidelium filios; hereby willing that we ſhould underſtand that the children of believrs are the deſigned, or the ſealed of holineſs (in the ſenſe, I conceive, wherein they that are baptized are by the ancients frequently ſaid σφραγίζεσθαι to be ſealed) and thereby of ſalvation alſo: And all this, ſaith he, thus urged by the Apoſtle, ut hujus ſpei pignora matrimoniis quæ retinenda cenſuerat, patrocinarentur, that this hope might be a pledge to ingage the believing wife or husband not to part from the unbeliever: And he yet farther adds (ſtill to the confirming of this interpretation) Alioqui meminerat Dominicæ definitionis, Niſi quis naſcatur ex aquâ & ſpiritu, non introibit in regnum Dei, i. e. non erit Sanctus. Otherwiſe (or if this argument of the Apoſtle had not been ſufficient) he would have mentioned the definition of Chriſt, that unleſs one be born of water and the Spirit (i. e. baptized) he ſhall not enter into the kingdom of God, i. e. ſhall not be holy, ſhewing ſtill of what holineſs he underſtands the Apoſtles ſpeech, that which the child of the believer is made partaker of by baptiſm, concluding, Ita omnis anima uſque eo in Adam cenſetur donec in Chriſto recenſeatur, tamdiu immunda quamdin recenſeatur, Every ſoul is ſo long inrolled in Adam till it be enrolled anew in Chriſt, and is ſo long unclean till it be thus anew inrolled; which as it ſuppoſes every child of Adam to be impure, till he be thus by baptiſm made a child of God, a member of Chriſt, ſo it gives a full account of that uncleanneſs, and that holineſs of which the Apoſtle ſpeaks, the former the ſtate of a child of Adam unbaptized, the latter of him that by baptiſm is initiated and matriculated into Chriſt. 5.

And to this agrees perfectly that of Origen (of the ſame age, a very few years after Tertullian) ſpeaking of the Apoſtles (from whom, ſaith he, the Church received by tradition that infants ſhould be baptized) Sciebant enim illi quibus myſteriorum ſecreta commiſſa ſunt divinorum, quia eſſent in omnibus genuinæ ſordes peccati, quæ per aquam & ſpiritum ablui deberent, They to whom the ſecrets of the divine myſteries or Sacraments were committed, knew that there are in all the connatural pollutions of ſin, which ought to be waſht away by water and the ſpirit, giving us to underſtand what uncleanneſs and holineſs it is, that children are capable of the uncleanneſs of their birth from Adam, and the cleanneſs or ſanctity of Chriſtian baptiſm. 6. In Rom. l. 5.

So Athanaſius * Quæſt. ad Antioch. 114. (or whoſoever it is under the name of that ancient Father) where the ſalvation of the baptized infants is concluded by him upon force of thoſe two texts, Suffer little children to come unto me; and, now are your children holy, whereto he there ſets parallel, τῶν πιστῶν βεβαπτισμένα νήπια, the baptized infants of believers, as the plain paraphraſe of the Apoſtles words. 7. * Tom. 2. p. 377. D.

To theſe I farther add another paſſage of * Cyprian, together with the 66. Biſhops that were in Council with him in their Epiſtle to Fidus, where ſpeaking of the baptiſm of infants and expreſly forbidding that any ſuch ſhould be hindred or kept from it, he brings for proof of it, the words of S. Peter, that the Lord had ſaid unto him that he ſhould count none common or unclean, where it appears what was that Holy Fathers notion of common or unclean, ſuch as might be refuſed baptiſm, and conſequently they which are not ſuch, but on the contrary ἅγιοι clean or holy (and ſuch ſaith Paul here, are the believers children) are to be admitted thither. 8. * Ep. 59. Edit. Pam. p. 80.

Upon which words of S. Cyprian * S. Auguſtin ſpeaking ſaith, he made no new decree, but kept moſt firm the faith of the Church, Et mox natum rite baptizari poſſe cum ſuis coepiſcopis cenſuit, and he and his fellow Biſhops reſolved that a child might duely be baptized as ſoon as born. 9. * Ep. 28. ad Hieron.

So * S. Chryſoſtom in his Κατήχησις to them that were to be baptized, ſpeaking of the ſeveral titles of baptiſm, applies unto it that of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 6. 11. ἀλλ' ἀπελούσασθε, ἀλλ' ἡγιάσθητε, but ye are waſhed, but ye are ſanctified: ‖ and again, of thoſe that were baptized, ὁ λόγος οὐ καθαρὰς μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ δικαίους καὶ ἁγίους γενομένους ἀπέδειξεν, the Scripture pronounces them not only made clean but juſt and holy alſo. 10. * Edit. Savil. Tom. 6. p. 854. l. 16. ‖ Ibid. l. 19.

So * Cyrill, in like manner, Glaphyr. in Exod. l. 2. ſpeaking of him that defers baptiſm to old age, ſaith, ἀπέδειξεν μὲν, &c. he is ſanctified indeed, i. e. baptized, but brings in no profit to God. And ‖ Comm. in Iſ. l. 1. Or. 1. ſpeaking of baptiſm again, and the ſufficiency to waſh away ſin, he adds χεῖρας ἡμῖν τὰς ἅπαξ ἁγιασθείσας— But they that are once ſanctified, i. e. baptized— But I need no more ſuch like ſuffrages. 11. * Tom. 1. p. 273. ‖ Tom. 2. 18. C.

This I have both there (Sections 34, 35, 36, 37.) and here thus largely deduced, becauſe in this one matter all the difficulty conſiſts, and if it be once granted that this is the meaning of [Now are your children holy] then here is an evidence undenyable of the Apoſtles practice of baptizing infants, and conſequently an irrefragable teſtimony of their ſenſe of Chriſts inſtitution, including, not excluding infants. 12.

And ſo this is a ſhort and clear way of preventing all Mr. T. his indeavours and pains (ſo largely taken) to invalidate my concluſion from this place of the Apoſtle, and I need not now be farther ſollicitous for my paraphraſe on all thoſe 3. verſes, wherein he would fain find out ſome exceſſes and defects, ſome inſertions and omiſſions; If ſuch there were (as I doubt not to evidence there are none) it would be little for his advantage, as long as the interpretation of the laſt words [but now are they (i. e. your children) holy] appears to be this, [but now are your infant children partakers of the priviledge of baptiſm] for this one part of that verſe concludes all that I pretend, or he oppugneth: And this I hope is now cleared to be no ſingular interpretation of mine, but that which (beſide the τὸ λογικὸν, the ra- 13.

tional importance of the Context concluding it) the ſtyle of Scripture, and the uniform atteſtation of the anncienteſt writers aſſign to it, ſo that there can be no reaſon for doubting in it.

14. Yet becauſe this is one of the exuberances objected to my paraphraſe (and the only one which I can without impertinence take notice of) that the term [young children of Chriſtians—] is more than is in the text, which hath only [your children] which, ſaith he, is not reſtrained to infancy, I ſhall briefly remove this exception, 1. By the authority of Tertullian juſt now produced, who interpreted it of their infant children, as appeared both by the expreſs words [ſanctos procreari] and the [caterùm immundi naſcerentur] and by the occaſion of that diſcourſe in that place, which was the immunda nativitas ethnicorum, the unclean birth of heathens children, and the unlawfulneſs of baptizing them, unleſs one of the parents were Chriſtian. To which may be added alſo Nazianzens phraſe forementioned, ἁγιαζόμεναι ἐκ βρέφους, being ſanctified from infancy (for ſo ſure βρέφος ſignifies, ἔμβρυον, νήπιος, παῖς, a child before or ſoon after birth, ſaith Heſychius, and Ariſtophanes the Grammarian cited by * Euſtathius, τὸ ἄρτι γεγονὸς, a child new born) which in all probability refers to this place of the Apoſtle, and ſo renders, τέκνον by βρέφος, their children by their infant children.

* In Iliad. Baſil. Ed. p. 944.

15. Secondly, 'Tis as manifeſt by the general doctrine of the Fathers, when they ſpeak of the faith of parents profiting their children, meaning always their infant children, brought to baptiſm by the faith of their parents, before they are perſonally capable of having faith themſelves.

16. Thirdly, By the inconveniences which muſt follow in caſe it be interpreted of any other but infant children. For ſuppoſing them come to years of underſtanding and capacity, they ſhall then either be ſuppoſed to have received the faith, or to remain in infidelity: If they have received the faith, and then be baptized, 'tis evident that this benefit comes not to them upon any conſideration of the faith of the parent, but upon their own perſonal profeſſion, and conſequently that theſe cannot be ſpoken of by the Apoſtle in that place, where he makes the ſanctification or baptiſm of the children, a benefit of the believing parents cohabiting with the unbeliever, and as Tertullian ſaith, patrocinium, a plea to move the believer not to depart. But if they have lived to years and not received the faith, 'tis then certain that they may not be baptized at all; And ſo 'tis manifeſt it muſt be underſtood of the infant (uncapable) children, and none elſe.

17. 'Tis true that Mr. T. alſo excepteth againſt the paraphraſing of [holy] by [admitted to baptiſm] affirming this to be a ſenſe of the word, no where elſe found. But this I hope I have cleared already, both from the uſage of the word among the Jewiſh and firſt Chriſtian writers, and might farther do it even by this Apoſtles dialect, who in his inſcriptions of moſt of his Epiſtles to the Churches, calls all thoſe to whom he writes, i. e. the baptized Chriſtians of thoſe Churches, ἅγιοι holy, Rom. 1. 17. and ἡγιασμένοι ſanctified, and ἅγιοι holy, 1 Cor. 1. 2. and again ἅγιοι holy, 2 Cor. 1. 1. and Eph. 1. 1. Phil. 1. 1. Col. 1. 1. among whom no doubt there were many who were no otherwiſe holy or ſantified, than as all baptized Chriſtians are capable of that ſtyle. But I ſhall need add no more of that, to what hath been already ſo largely ſaid.

18. And the parts of my interpretation being thus cleared, that their children] were their babes or infants, and their being holy] their being baptized, 'tis ſure I cannot be concerned in his concluſion, that he never read or heard any expoſition ancient or modern ſo expounding as this Doctor or Dictator doth, nor do I think he can ſhew any] I hope now he will alter his mind, and acknowledge that it was his own fault, that this interpretation ſeemed ſo new and ſtrange to him.

19. As for the one place of S. Auguſtin produced by him (it ſhould be, l. 2. de Pecc. Mer. & remiſs. c. 26.) to the ſeeming prejudice of this interpretation, Ac per hoc & illa ſanctificatio cujuſcunque modi ſit quam in filiis fidelium eſſe dixit Apoſtolus, ad iſtam de baptiſmo & peccati origine vel remiſſione quæſtionem omnino non pertinet] it will eaſily be reconciled to it, if we but mark what queſtion it is, that there he ſpeaks of, even that which he had then in hand, viz. whether baptiſm were neceſſary to remiſſion of ſins, and entring the kingdom of heaven.

20. That this was the queſtion in hand, appeareth by the words immediately precedent, which are theſe, ſanctificatio Catechumeni, ſi non fuerit baptizatus, non ei valet ad intrandum regnum cœlorum aut ad peccatorum remiſſionem, The ſanctification of a Catechumenus (what that is, he had mentioned before, Catechumenos ſecundum quendam modum ſuum per ſignum Chriſti & orationem impoſitionis manuum puto ſanctificari, that ſome kind of ſanctification which the unbaptized might have by prayer and impoſition of hands, of which we ſometimes read in the ancients, as hath elſewhere been ſhewed) profits him not for the entring the kingdom of heaven, or obtaining remiſſion of ſins, unleſs he be baptized. And therefore that ſanctification of whatſoever kind it is, viz. if it be without baptiſm, belongs not, ſaith he, to the queſtion then in hand concerning baptiſm and the original and pardon of ſin.

21. Here then I ſuppoſe is S. Auguſtins meaning. The adverſaries with whom he diſputes (the Pelagians) to maintain the no neceſſity of baptizing infants for the remiſſion of ſins, made uſe of that text, and concluded from it the ſanctity of the Chriſtian infants birth, before, and without baptiſm: To this he anſwers, without any ſtrict examination of the importance of that text, that whatſoever ſanctification it can be imagined to be, that the Apoſtle ſpeaks of, except it be that of baptiſm, it cannot avail to the remiſſion of ſins, &c. Some improper kind of ſanctification, ſaith he, he may confeſs, ſecundum quendam modum, in him that is not yet baptized, but that without baptiſm, non valet ad intrandum, is not of force for entring into the kingdom of heaven, and therefore whatſoever ſanctification that is, (viz. whatſoever without baptiſm) it belongs not to his queſtion then before him, and ſo the Apoſtles words can have no force againſt him.

22. This I ſuppoſe then to be in brief S. Auguſtines meaning in that place, that 'tis not the holineſs of the Chriſtian infants birth, but of their baptiſm, which ſtands them in ſtead toward the kingdom of heaven: And then that, as it is no evidence on my ſide, that he interpreted that place to the Cor. as I interpret it, ſo it affirms nothing to the contrary, but leaves it in medio, having his advantages other ways againſt the diſputers.

23. However for the ſubſtance, his accord with us is evident, and his concluſion firm both in that place, and l. 3. de Pecc. Mer. & Remiſs. c. 12. Illud ſine dubitatione tenendum, quæcunque illa ſanctificatio ſit, non valere ad Chriſtianos faciendos, atque ad dimittenda peccata, niſi Chriſtiana atque Eccleſiaſticâ inſtitutione & Sacramentis efficiantur fideles. It is to be held without doubting, that whatſoever that ſanctification be, it avails not to the making them Chriſtians, and to the obtaining remiſſion of ſins, unleſs by Chriſtian and Eccleſiaſtical inſtitution, and by the Sacraments they be made faithful.

This is all that I can ſeaſonably return for the vindicating of my paraphraſe; It would be too im- 24.
moderate an excurſion to take notice of all his pretended objections to the former part of it, which concerns the cohabiting of the believer with the unbeliever, which I aſſure Mr. T. were eaſy fully to anſwer, and ſhew his miſtakes in each particular, if the matter of our preſent diſpute did require, or would well bear a πάρεργον of that length, or if I thought it in the leaſt degree uſeful to the reader, that I ſhould farther explain the grounds of my paraphraſe, than as they are already laid before him, Section 31, &c.

Yet becauſe the reaſons which I there rendred for the paraphraſe taken from the notations of the word 25.
ἡγίασται, hath been ſanctified, and ὑπὸ γυναικὸς (not to, but) by the wife] and by the plain conſequents, what knoweſt thou ô wife, whether thou ſhalt ſave thy husband— are by Mr. T. examined with an endeavour to confute them, and ſo to overthrow the whole paraphraſe, it may perhaps be thought uſeful that I ſhould take a view of thoſe his indeavours, and therefore that I ſhall now proceed to do, and ſhall there meet with by the way what was moſt material in his former exceptions againſt my paraphraſe.

SECT. II.

The rendring ἡγίασται [hath been ſanctified] defended. S. Hieroms teſtimony. Enallages muſt not be made uſe of without neceſſity. No advantage from it here. Feigned inſtances of Enallage. Κλώμενον, ἀκήκοα ὅτι, δεδήλωται, Κέκρικα.

FIrſt then, to my firſt evidence taken from the word ἡγίασται, hath been ſanctified] referring to ſome Numb. 1.
paſt known examples and experiences, of this kind (of a wives converting the husband, &c.) he hath a double anſwer, 1. That as my paraphraſe expreſſeth it, it ſhould ſignify not only that an unbelieving husband hath been ſanctified, but alſo that there is hope they will, and ſo it ſhould note not only ſome example paſt, but alſo ſome to come, of which there can be a leſs reaſonable account given than of putting it in the preſent tenſe in Engliſh. 2. That the Enallage or change of tenſe is frequent, C. 11. 14. Κλώμενον in the preſent tenſe for the future, and here ἀκήκοα ὅτι for λῶ or οἶδα, and in the next verſe δεδήλωται in the præter for the preſent, and ſo ἡγίασται here, not, hath been, but, is ſanctified, or if in the præter tenſe, yet that to be underſtood of a paſt thing yet continued, as κέκρικα Joh. 3. 18. notes an act ſtill continued in force.

To theſe two I reply briefly, and firſt to the former (the ſame which he had mentioned before, 2. and excepted againſt as an exceſs in my paraphraſe, but both there and here without the leaſt cauſe;) For in my paraphraſe, I look upon ἡγίασται as a verb of the præter tenſe, and as ſuch only adapt the ſenſe to it, referring it not to future hopes but to paſt experiences or examples; Only becauſe examples are rhetorical ſyllogiſmes, and what hath been frequently experimented, may alſo reaſonably be hoped, I ſuppoſe that the Apoſtle ſo meant theſe examples, as grounds of hoping the like for the future, not making this of the future, any part of the ſenſe of ἡγίασται in the præter, but explicating the τὸ λογικὸν or rational importance (which is ſomewhat more than the τὸ ῥητὸν) of the Apoſtles ſpeech, and ſuppoſing this concluſion to ly hid under this premiſe, as it is ordinary in all diſcourſe to ſet down the premiſes diſtinctly, leaving the concluſion by every ones reaſon to be drawn from thence, without ſetting it down explicitely.

Wherein that I was not miſtaken, I had all aſſurance from v. 16. where the argument is preſt, 3. and the concluſion inferred more explicitly, For what knoweſt thou, ô wife, whether thou ſhalt ſave thy husband — and the like mentioned in the Paraphraſe from 1 Pet. 3.

And herein I have the authority of S. Hierom; as for my rendring ὑπὸ γυναικὸς by the woman (ſo I 4. find it, per mulierem, in his 7. Epiſt. ad Lætam, and ſo Marianus Victorius in his Scholia aſſures us, all the Copies antient and printed, read it) ſo alſo for this part of my Paraphraſe, exemplum refert (ſaith he on the place) quia ſæpe contigerit ut lucrifieret vir per mulierem, Unde & Beatus Petrus ait, ut ſiquis non crediderit verbo, per mulierum converſationem ſine verbo lucrifierent, id eſt, cùm viderint eas in melius commutatas, cognoſcant omnes Dei legem ita conſuetudine inveterata potuiſſe mutari: He produces an example, becauſe, ſaith he, it hath often happened that the husband hath been gained by the wife, according to that of S. Peter, that if any man believe not the word, he ſhould without the word be gained by the converſation of the wife, that is, that when they ſhall ſee them changed to the better, all may know that the Law of God might have been taken in exchange for ſo inveterate a Cuſtom.

And ſo again Ep. 7. ad Lætam, ſpeaking of the like example, Bene, ſaith he, felicitérque expecta- 5.
vimus; Sancta & fidelis domus virum ſanctificat infidelem, we have well and happily expected, (i. e. not miſt of our expectation) an holy and faithful houſe ſanctifies an unbeliever, adding his conceit, ipſum Jovem, ſi habuiſſet talem cognationem, potuiſſe in Chriſtum credere; that Jupiter himſelf if he had had ſuch a kindred, might have been brought to the faith of Chriſt.

As for his ſecond anſwer, I acknowledge ſuch Enallages to be ordinary in the Hebrew, and ſometimes, 6.
but more rarely found in the Hebraizing Greeks, or Helleniſts, and conſequently that where the context will not bear the ſenſe of the tenſe which is uſed, there may be place for this Grammatical figure, which yet is not to be made uſe of unneceſſarily.

Accordingly, if there were any convincing reaſon offered, that ἡγίασται in the præter tenſe] could 7.
not be born, I ſhould not then doubt to interpret it by this figure, either in the preſent or ſome other tenſe: But when (as here it is evident) there is no ſuch neceſſity, then 1. I cannot think fit to do ſo, (tis dangerous to forſake the literal ſenſe, when it may be commodiouſly retained, and fly to either a Rhetorical, or Grammatical figure) and having no motive to do ſo, I am next to conſider, what is the propereſt importance of that phraſe in that tenſe wherein it is uſed, and then I could not (I believe) have fallen upon any thing more natural, than that the præter form of ſpeech referred to the paſt experiences, &c.

8. This is a full ſatisfaction to his anſwer; yet I may in the ſecond place ex abundanti add thus much more, that the utmoſt that he can pretend to by the enallage (whether of the præter for the preſent, or of the præter underſtood of a paſt thing yet continued) is as commodious for my interpretation, as the præter is: For if it be in the preſent, then the importance will be, that it is a matter of preſent daily experience; if in the paſt continued, then that it is matter both of paſt and preſent experience that the unbeliever is thus wrought upon by the believer, and brought into the Church by baptiſm, and this is a juſt ground of hope, that ſo it may be again in any particular inſtance, and ſo a competent motive that the believing wife ſhould abide with the infidel husband, and not depart as long as he will live peaceably with her; and this ſure was S. Hieroms underſtanding in the words newly cited, exemplum refert, quia ſæpe contigerit, &c. the Apoſtle makes inſtance, produceth example, that this hath (and doth) ordinarily come to paſs; And to that alſo exactly agrees the 16th verſe, For how knoweſt thou, &c.

9. As for Mr T. his inſtances of Enallage, though now I may ſafely yield them all, and rather gain than loſe by them, I ſhall yet in the laſt place add my ſenſe, that no one of them is any way convincing; that of κλώμενον is not, c. 11. 24. for his paſſion was now ſo near approaching, that it might very fitly be repreſented as preſent, and ſo that be the the force of the preſent tenſe.

10. That of ἀκάθαρτά ἐστι, is not pertinent; for certainly [ἐστὶν, is] is not for [ἦν, was] which is the enallage of tenſes, nor is there any neceſſity it ſhould be for [ἦν] (the enallage of modes) the rendring is proper, elſe are your children unclean, and exactly all one with elſe were, the change of the mode not changing the ſenſe in this matter; which was the cauſe why I followed the Engliſh rendring, and made no change in that tranſlation.

11. As for his third inſtance δεδούλωται, v. 15. which he ſaith is manifeſtly put in the præter tenſe for the preſent, I cannot be convinced of it; The context will well bear the præter tenſe yet continued [no Law of Chriſt hath or doth thus inſlave her] or the præter tenſe ſimply [ſhe by entring the bonds of marriage hath not thus inſlaved her ſelf] that ſhe ſhould think her ſelf bound to do any thing contrary to her religion in order to continuing with her husband.

12. As for κέκριται, Joh. 3. 18. I wonder it could be thought fit to be produced to the prejudice of the præter ſenſe, when the [ἤδη, already] which is preſent, is an evident proof of the præter ſenſe; and if it be continued as well as paſt (he that hath been condemned remaining ſtill under condemnation) this is ſtill perfectly agreeable to my notion of ἡγίασται, the unbeliever oft hath been, and daily is converted, and brought to baptiſm by the believer.

13. And ſo much for all the grounds of his firſt exception, and his two anſwers to my inference from [ἡγίασται.]

SECT. III.

The rendring ἐν γυναικὶ by the woman] defended, ἐν for εἰς. Κτισθέντα ἐν πάσῃ κτίσει, Col. 1. 23. Κτίσις δεδομένον ἐν ἀνθρώποις, Act. 4. Irenæus no Latine Author, ἐν παρεφάσει, Act. 7. Gal. 1. 16. 1 Pet. 1. 5. ἐν σοὶ, Deut. 28. Ἔλαβες δόματα ἐν ἀνθρώποις, Pſal. 68. My proof of the interpretation from the context.

Numb. 1. THE ſecond concerns the rendring of ἐν γυναικὶ, which I read, [by the woman] but he [to the woman] as [to] is a note of the dative caſe, and ſo ἐν redundant.

2. And the reaſon, ſaith he, that he ſtill adheres to his way, is, becauſe this ſeems to him the faireſt, eaſieſt, and moſt congruous ſenſe then to expound it, The believer may abide with the unbelieving yoke-fellow, For though he be an unbeliever, and in himſelf unſanctified, yet in or to his wife he is as if he were ſanctified, it's all one in reſpect of conjugal uſe, as if he were ſanctified.

3. To this reaſon I have many things to anſwer. Firſt, That the very rendring it, is the begging the queſtion, which is only this (in this mattr) whether this be the faireſt, eaſieſt, and moſt congruous ſenſe, and muſt not be here ſuppoſed, when it ſhould be proved.

4. Secondly, That if it were the faireſt ſenſe, yet if the words bear it not, it muſt not be affixt to them, if it be more capable of another; and whether they will bear it or no, is the queſtion again, on occaſion of which, this inquiry is made into the uſe of the prepoſition ἐν, and to ſuppoſe again that it will ſignifie [to] in the dative ſenſe, before it is proved it will, is a ſecond begging the queſtion, a paralogiſm in ſtead of a reaſon.

5. Thirdly, The fairneſs of the ſenſe (ſimply taken) is not attempted to be proved, which yet doth ſtand in great need of it; For beſide the redundance, or unuſual ſenſe of ἐν, ſome other parts of the rendring are none of the faireſt; As firſt, the believer may abide] as if it were ſimply free to abide or not abide, whereas in the preſent caſe (when the unbeliever is willing to abide with the believer) the believer is by the Apoſtle counſelled at leaſt, if not commanded (and that is more than a liberty, that he may) To him the Apoſtle ſaith (and his ſayings have ſure authority with them) μὴ ἀφιέτω, let him not put away. Nay the interdict of Chriſt belonging to all, but that one caſe of fornication, Mat. 5. and Mat. 19. it is evident, that by force thereof the believing man muſt not put away the unbeliever, that is guilty of no more but unbelief; And accordingly the preface, Τοῖς δὲ λοιποῖς --- But for the reſt (or, for the other queſtions, v. 1. 6. 8. 10.) ſay I, not the Lord] muſt be applied not to the immediate conſequents, of the believers not putting away the unbeliever, that will ſtay with him (for that had been determined by Chriſt in the Negative) but to v. 15. If the unbelieving depart, i. e. if the unbeliever will not dwell with the believer, except the believer forſake his, or her religion, what ſhall be done then? And to that the Apoſtles counſel is, that marriage inſlaves not the believer ſo far.

6. All which, is a competent prejudice to that part of Mr. T. his ſenſe, The believer may abide; For if that that be it, even when the unbeliever is willing to abide, then ſhe may alſo depart, if ſhe rather chooſe, which will be found contrary to Chriſt's precept, and ſo may not be admitted.

Secondly, in this rendring, ἡγίασται is engliſhed, (not by is or hath been ſanctified, but by [is as if he 7.
were ſanctified] which indeed acknowledgeth that he is not truly (in any reſpect) ſanctified, and then ſure this will be a ſtrange conſtruction, ὁ ἄπιστος ἡγιάσθη, the unbeliever (is not ſanctified, but) is as if he were ſanctified, when yet literally it muſt be rendred the unbeliever hath been, or (to gratify Mr. T.) is or continues to be ſanctified: For what is this but to interpret an affirmative by interpoſing a negation, he is ſanctified, by he is not? for ſo aſſuredly he is not, if he only be as if he were.

With this let any man compare the interpretation I have given, the unbeliever hath been ſanctified 8.
by the believer, i. e. examples there are of ſuch as have been thus converted from their unbelief, and this ſence inforced by the interrogation, v. 16. For what knoweſt thou, ô woman, whether thou ſhalt ſave the man, &c. and by S. Peters aphoriſm of daily obſervation, 1 Pet. 3. 1. the husband that obeys not the word, i. e. the unbeliever, may probably be gained by the converſation of the wife; and then let him impartially paſs judgment, which is the faireſt and eaſieſt rendring.

His ſecond reaſon is, becauſe though the Dr. deny it, yet (ſaith he) I aver, that the notion of ἐν for to, 9.
as a ſign of the dative caſe, is found more than once in the New Teſtament.

The truth of this I muſt now examine by the proofs offered for the affirmation. And his firſt proof, 10.
is from Mat. 17. 12. ἐποίησαν ἐν αὐτῷ, This, ſaith he, cannot be eluded becauſe the ſame ſpeech is Mar. 9.
13. ἐποίησαν αὐτῷ, and rendred by Beza in the former place, fecerunt ei, they did to him. 2. Whereas the Doctor ſaith ἐν is uſed for εἰς, upon him or againſt him, It had been meet the Doctor ſhould have given one inſtance at leaſt of ſuch conſtruction, which, ſaith he, I do not believe he can do.

To this I anſwer, 1. By two ready inſtances in one verſe, Luk. 23. 31. Εἰ ἐν τῷ ὑγρῷ ξύλῳ ταῦτα 11.
ποιοῦσιν, ἐν τῷ ξηρῷ τί γένηται; If they do theſe things (our ordinary Engliſh reads in a green tree but the ſenſe and propriety directs us to) on the green tree, what ſhall be done on the dry? here is the very phraſe that is uſed in that place of Matthew, ποιοῦσιν ἐν ὑγρῷ, as ἐποίησαν ἐν αὐτῷ, and then for S. Marks uſing (in the parallel place) αὐτῷ for ἐν αὐτῷ] that proves not that ἐν was redundant in S. Matthew, or that it was a bare ſign of the dative caſe, it being free to S. Mark to uſe any other expreſſion, different from S. Matthew, ſo he retained the ſenſe, as it is clear in this place he doth, doing injuries to him, being all one in effect with upon or againſt him, though the phraſes are not the ſame, which no way infers that when the change of the phraſe changes the ſenſe, it were lawful ſo to vary it, as in the place we have in hand (ἐν γυναιξὶ) 'tis on both ſides ſuppoſed to do.

A ſecond inſtance which he conceives cannot be eluded, is Col. 1. 23. τῷ κηρυχθέντι ἐν πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει, 12. which was preached to every creature; and this he proves to be the only rendring, 1. Becauſe κηρύσσω to preach, is commonly with a dative caſe of the object, and though, 1 Tim. 3. 16. it is ἐκηρύχη ἐν ἔθνεσιν, yet our traſlators, and the vulgar, and Beza read it, unto the Gentiles, as if there it noted only a dative caſe, and if it were among the Gentiles, there, yet here Col. 1. 23. it cannot be ſo, becauſe the object is in the ſingular number, but ἐν, when it is for among, is joyned ſtill with a noun of the plural: and 2. That which, ſaith he, puts this out of all doubt, is, that the phraſe, Col. 1. anſwers, Mar. 15. 16. κηρύξαι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει.

But to this all the anſwer is ready, by obſerving the exact notation of πᾶσα κτίσις the whole creation 13.
(as we render it Rom. 8. 22.) as that ſignifies the whole, but eſpecially the Gentile world, and accordingly is expreſt by πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, Mat. 28 and farther explained by ὅλῳ κόσμῳ the whole world, to which in S. Mark they are appointed to go, when they were thus to preach the Goſpel πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει, to this whole creation. Now of κτίσις in this notion it is clear, that though it be in the ſingular number, yet that hath the power of the plural, as the word [world] and the like, which every body knows, is a noun of Multitude, and ſo is creation, when it is thus taken for the whole created world, meaning this world of men, the nations or people of the world.

And then there can be no doubt but κηρυχθέντι ἐν πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει] is moſt exactly thus to be rendred, 14.
preached in, or among the whole creation, as Gal. 1. 16. κηρύσσειν ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, preach in the nations, or among the Gentiles, and ſo 1 Tim. 3. 16. alſo, though the ſenſe being no way altered by rendring it unto the whole creation, or every creature, and to the Gentiles, it matters little though it be promiſcuouſly thus rendred in all theſe places, which yet muſt not preſcribe for other places, where the ſenſe is ſo much changed by the divers rendring, as in this caſe ἡγιάσθη ἐν γυναικὶ] is obſervable, where therefore the literal rendring being retained, we are not reaſonably to conclude any more from it, than that literal rendring will afford us. As for the parallel phraſe Mar. 16. that doubtleſs can prove nothing, 1. Becauſe the places are not, nor can be thought parallel, 2. Becauſe if they were, (as of Mat. 28. and Mar. 16. hath been granted) yet the parallel lying only in the ſenſe, and that being all one, whether they preacht to or among the Gentiles, this no way concludes that the phraſes are the ſame, or the ἐν in one redundant, which is the only thing for the proving of which this parallel is produced, but of that I have formerly ſpoken.

His third inſtance is δεδομένον ἐν ἀνθρώποις, Act. 4. 12. which he cannot yet conceive, but that it is 15.
better rendred, to men, than among men. And his reaſons are, 1. Becauſe δίδωμι hath moſt regularly and conſequently a dative caſe of the perſon after it. 2. Becauſe if it had been among men, it had been to be placed after ἕτερον, other, there is no other name among men, given, but being placed after given, it is to be expounded as referred to given, not to other, and ſo muſt be read, to men, not among men. 3. It ſeems no good ſenſe, nor true, that Chriſt was a name given among men, for though he were among men, yet he was given from above. To all which he adds the judgment of Irenæus, l. 3. c. 12. cited by Beza, and a parallel phraſe ἐν παλεάσιν for παλαίσιν, Act. 7. 44.

To theſe I anſwer, 1. That 'tis true that when δίδωμι hath any caſe of the perſon following and 16.
governed by it, that is conſtantly the dative, but that is no way applicable to this phraſe δεδομένον ἐν ἀνθρώποις, for there the perſons, ἀνθρώποις are governed by the prepoſition ἐν not by δεδομένον.

To the ſecond, That the conſtruction by among, is very good, placing it after given, there is no 17.
other name given among men, i. e. no means of ſalvation afforded by God, and continued among men.

To

18. To the third, That Christ's being given from above, no way prejudges his being given among men, both becauſe the benefit of this gift is as a common donative, diſtributed among men, and alſo becauſe this gift is diſpenſt in form of humane fleſh, Christ is become man, and to be found and ſeen among men.

19. And to the laſt, for the place of Irenæus, 'tis ſtrange that neither Mr. T. nor Beza whom he tranſcribed, ſhould remember that Irenæus wrote Greek, and that as the Latine tranſlation [datum hominibus] is not written by Irenæus, ſo there is no queſtion but Irenæus's Greek was the ſame with the text in the Acts, δεδομένον ἐν ἀνθρώποις, and then the Tranſlator (barbarous enough through that whole book) is to be reformed by the Author, and not the Author judged of by the Tranſlator; Or if he were, and Irenæus's Greek did really read ἀνθρώποις, without [ἐν] as the Tranſlator doth [hominibus] without [in] then I muſt reſolve, that the copy of the Scripture, which he followed, did ſo read before him [δεδομένον ἀνθρώποις] and if ſo, then what proof can Mr. T. have from thence that in other places or phraſes, where ἐν is found in all copies, it ſhall be redundant, and ſignifie no more than if it were not to be found there?

20. As for ἐν πατράσιν, it muſt certainly be rendred, among the Fathers, thus, the tabernacle of witneſs was among our Fathers in the wilderneſs: 'Tis pity the Reader ſhould be exerciſed and detained with ſuch debates as theſe, with which yet in obedience to Mr. T. I muſt farther importune him.

21. For a fourth inſtance he again reſumes that of Gal. 1. 16. and 2 Pet. 1. 5. That Gal. 1. where of God, the Apoſtle ſaith, that he was pleaſed to reveal his own ſon ἐν ἐμοὶ, and when I had rendred that by, or through me, to others, This expoſition, ſaith he, makes the Apoſtle tautologize ineptly.

22. This ſtrange undecent expreſſion I wiſh had been ſpared; for certainly there was little temptation for it: why, I pray, might not the Apoſtle without incurring either part of that cenſure, ſay, God was pleaſed through me to reveal his ſon, and by way of explication, (and withal to denote the deſignation of that Apoſtle to his peculiar province, as the Apoſtle of the uncircumciſion) add, that I might preach the Goſpel to the Gentiles. Certainly every explication of an obſcurer or narrower, by a clearer or larger phraſe, is not inept tautology, but that which all writers which have deſired to ſpeak intelligibly, have always been full of.

23. And yet ſecondly, the latter part here, of his preaching the Goſpel to the Gentiles (he being peculiarly the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, as Peter and John were of the Jews whereſoever diſperſed) is more than was pretended to be ſaid by my rendring and paraphraſing the former part of it; for in that thoſe others had not been defined, who they were, or limited to the Gentiles.

24. This Mr. T. adverted not in his objection; I deſire he will now take notice of it. For that of ὀφείλετε συγκύπτειν ἐν τῇ πίστει ὑμῶν ἀρετὴν, I need add no more to what I had before ſaid, that it is moſt fully rendred thus, unto or over and above your faith ſuperadd virtue, or fortitude.

25. Two places, he ſaith, he had formerly produced out of the old Teſtament, Deut. 28. 60. and 2 Kin. 7. 27. and now adds one more, Pſal. 68. 18. But beſides that three only places in the whole old Teſtament, would never infer that ſo it muſt be in this place of the new, there being many more to preponderate for the contrary, and there being no pretence of neceſſity that thus it muſt be here, beſides this, I ſay, it will be found, that theſe three will be of no avail to him.

26. Of the two former, the ſecond is not; there be but twenty verſes in that Chapter, and therefore no ἐν in the 27. and for the former, we well read it, unto thee, where the 72. reads ἐν σοὶ, in the ordinary way of acception of ἐν for εἰς.

27. And laſtly, for his new ſprung teſtimony, Pſal. 68. 18. of ἔλαβες δόματα ἐν ἀνθρώποις, for which ſaith he the Apoſtle hath Eph. 4. 8. ἔδωκε δόματα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις, which he takes to be more than enough to refute the Doctor, 'tis preſently viſible that it hath no manner of force in it; For though thoſe two places are perfectly parallel, as to the matter, yet for the expreſſion 'tis evidently very different; in one [thou haſt received] in the other [he hath given] and ſo [ἐν ἀνθρώποις for, or among men] muſt of all neceſſity differ from [ἀνθρώποις to men.] For how could it be ſenſe to ſay, thou haſt received gifts to men? yet ſo it muſt be, to make good Mr. T. his obſervation, that ἐν ſignifies to, or is redundant, or the note of a dative caſe.

28. And ſo he never had a more improper ſeaſon for his triumphs; never leſs cauſe to tell others of talking ad randum, when he himſelf was ſo far removed from all appearance of demonſtration. And ſo much for the Grammatical notation of ἐν γυναικὶ, very unfit to have exerciſed us thus long, but that Mr. T. would have it ſo, and words are the means of conveighing realities unto us, and miſtakes in them (though minute) may be of ſubſtantial importance.

29. My third proof produced for my interpretation of the firſt part of v. 14. which to me put it out of all doubt, by comparing it with the reaſon ſubjoined, For what knoweſt thou, O wife, whether thou ſhalt ſave thy husband; or how knoweſt thou, O man, whether thou ſhalt ſave thy wife?] he comes next to examine, and hath many exceptions againſt it, all which (without loſing time in repeating and viewing them ſeverally) will be ſoon diſpelled by a right underſtanding of the force of the Apoſtles argument as there I conceive it to ly, Thus v. 14. It is matter of ordinary obſervation, that unbelieving husbands have been brought to the faith and baptiſm by the believing wife, therefore I now exhort and counſel the believer not to depart from the unbeliever, in caſe the unbeliever be willing to ſtay, v. 13. for this reaſon, v. 16. becauſe what hath been ſo oft, may very probably be hoped again, and conſequently upon the premiſes the believer hath ground to hope, that ſhe may in time gain the husband to the faith, and that, being ſo fair a reward in her view (the ſaving or reſcuing him from infidelity, to Chriſt) may well inforce the counſel of the Apoſtle, not to depart from him, as long as, without ſin, ſhe is permitted to ſtay.

30. By which it appears that this v. 16. is not a bare explanation of ἁγίασται, v. 14. (on which Mr. T. his exceptions principally depend) but an application of the argument formerly propoſed, but now more ſignally brought home to them, under the form of [τί γὰρ for what---] by this means to reinforce his concluſion of their not departing for the cauſe of infidelity: If the Reader will but obſerve what is thus viſible, he will want no more help, to get out of the intricacies, and toils, which Mr. T.

hath here ſpread for him in this matter, which is in it ſelf ſo manifeſt, as nothing can be added to it, if either the text or my paraphraſe may be permitted to ſpeak for it ſelf.

SECT. IV.

Mr. T. his miſtake of my ſenſe. The argument à genere ad ſpeciem. Ἀκάθαρτα and ἅγια. How the husband is ſaid to be baptized by the wife. נדושין partial waſhings. The proportion betwixt legal holineſs, and baptiſm. Difference between relative and real ſanctification. The teſtimonies of the antient, for and againſt my interpretation.

HIS exceptions to the former part of my paraphraſe being now ended, I muſt attend what he hath to ſay againſt the latter part of it, that which concerns our matter in hand more nearly; The words are ἐπεὶ ἄρα, for elſe were your children unclean, but now are they holy, i. e. upon that ſcore it is that Chriſtians children are admitted to baptiſm, viz. becauſe by their living in the family with the Chriſtian parent they probably will (and ought to) be brought up in the faith — and the Church (requiring and receiving promiſe from the parents) reaſonably preſumes they will, and ſo admits them to baptiſm. Numb. 1.

This argument of the Apoſtles thus explained in my paraphraſe (or if he yet will have it more plainly thus, The Church upon confidence that the believers children will be brought up in the faith, receives them to baptiſm when they are infants; And upon the ſame grounds of hope, that your abiding with the unbelieving husband may in time convert him (as by experience it hath oft been found) I adviſe you not to depart from him, if he will live with you; For what knoweſt thou whether thou ſhalt ſave thy husband, &c.) Mr. T. hath made a ſhift not to underſtand, and ſubſtituted another way of arguing in my name, in ſtead of it, p. 331. And having done ſo, I muſt leave him to combate with the ſhadow of his own creating, no part of his impreſſion lighting upon that, which alone I profeſs to be my meaning in it; which I leave him or the Reader to ſee, in the particulars propoſed by him, but muſt not now be ſo impertinent, as to loſe time in the purſuit of them. 2.

But the reaſons produced for my thus interpreting, he next proceeds to examine, and I muſt take care to vindicate them. My firſt reaſon is, becauſe ἅγιος, holy, noting a relative holineſs, a ſetting apart to God, and the loweſt degree of that imaginable being the initiating into the Church by baptiſm, this muſt in reaſon be here noted by ἅγια holy, as all viſible profeſſors, Ezr. 9. 2. are the holy ſeed, and in the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles, ἅγιοι holy. 3.

To this he anſwers, that it being all granted, confirms not the Doctors Expoſition, becauſe 'tis no good argument, à genere ad ſpeciem affirmative, and becauſe infants are not viſible Profeſſors. 4.

But ſure when the ſpecies is ſuch, that he that hath not that, hath not any part of the genus, the argument will thus hold very irrefragably: Suppoſe that of the Deacon to be the loweſt order of officers of the Church, and that without which there is no aſcending to any higher degree in the miniſtery, will not then the argument hold; He hath ſome degree Eccleſiaſtical upon him, therefore ſure he is a Deacon? Thus ſure it is in this matter, the relative holineſs belongs to no perſon, that is not baptized, baptiſm is the loweſt degree of it, and all ſuperiour degrees of Apoſtle, Prophet, &c. in the Chriſtian Church are founded in that, therefore if the infant children be holy, the infant children are baptized. So again, Baptiſm is the loweſt degree of viſible profeſſion, therefore if theſe that are ſaid to be holy, are viſible Profeſſors, then ſure they are baptized; And ſo there is no force in that whether anſwer or exception to my firſt reaſon. 5.

My ſecond follows from the notation of ἀκάθαρτα, Act. 10. 14. for thoſe that muſt not be received into the Church, as on the other ſide God's cleanſing is God's reputing him fit to be partaker of this priviledge, whereby it appears how fitly, receiving and not receiving to baptiſm] are expreſt by [holy and unclean.] 6.

To this he anſwers by acknowledging the concluſion, viz. the fitneſs of the expreſſion, all his exception is againſt my premiſſe, the notion of unclean, Act. 10. which, ſaith he, ſignifies there not only one out of the Church, but alſo one that a Jew might not go in to, or eat with. To this I reply, that my concluſion being granted, I may ſafely part with that, which inferred it, as when I am arrived at my journeys end, I have no farther need, or uſe of my horſe or guide that brought me thither: Let it be remembred, that [holy and unclean] fitly expreſs thoſe that are received, or not received to baptiſm, and then I am ſure I have not offended againſt the propriety of the words, by concluding from this text, that in the Apoſtles time the believers children were received to baptiſm; And if I have as little offended againſt the rational importance of the words in that place (as I hope hath formerly appeared that I have) then I hope I am perfectly innocent in inducing my concluſion. 7.

As for the uſe of the phraſe, Act. 10. though now I need not contend, yet I may add, that the notion of not entring to, and eating with, containing under it this other of not baptizing (for ſure he might not baptize thoſe to whom he might not enter) and the baptizing Cornelius (and not only entring to him) being the end for which Peter received that viſion, I ſtill adhere that ἀκάθαρτα in that place ſignifies one peculiarly that muſt not be received into the Church by baptiſm; and the holineſs, on the contrary, reception to that priviledge. 7.

My third being taken from the uſe of the Hebrew קדש to ſanctifie, for waſhing any part of the body, and on occaſion of that, mentioning a conjecture that the uſe of holineſs for baptiſm might perhaps intimate that the primitive baptiſms were not always immerſions, but that ſprinkling of ſome part might be ſufficient; he hath a reply to each of theſe; To the former, that if this reaſon were good, then the husbands being ſanctified by the wife, muſt ſignifie his being baptized or waſhed by her; to the latter, that I have in my writings ſo oft acknowledged the baptiſm of the Jews and Chriſtians to be immerſion of the whole body, that I ought to be aſhamed to ſay the contrary, and that I can hardly believe my ſelf in it. 8.

To theſe I anſwer, firſt to the former, 1. That I that affirm ſanctifications among the Jews to ſignifie 9.

nify waſhings, do alſo know that it hath other ſignifications, and that that ſignification is in each text to be choſen, which ſeems moſt agreeable in all thoſe reſpects which are to be conſiderable in the pitching on any interpretation; Conſequently that the wive's baptizing the husband being a thing abſurd, and utterly unheard of in the Church of God, whether in the Apoſtles or ſucceeding ages, this ſenſe may not reaſonably be affixt to it, whereas the baptizing of infants being by the ancients affirmed to be received from the Apoſtles, it is moſt reaſonable to underſtand the words of this, though not of the other (and ſo to apply the obſervation (as it is viſible I did) to the latter, not former part of that verſe.

10. And yet 2. if we ſhall diſtinguiſh of the notion of [by] and expound [ὑπὸ γυναικὸς, by the woman] of the perſwaſion, that the woman hath uſed to bring her husband to baptiſm, and not of her miniſtry in baptizing, we may very conveniently ſo interpret the former part of the verſe alſo, that by the woman, ὁ ἀνὴρ ἄπιστος ἡγίασται, the unbelieving husband hath been brought to baptiſm, viz. by being brought to faith, to which this priviledge belongs.

11. As for his 2. exceptions to my conjecture, founded in the uſe of קדשין ſanctifications for partial not total waſhings, 1. I anſwer, that I mention it only as a conjecture, with a perhaps, and lay no more weight upon it: 2. That for Chriſtian baptiſm I no where affirm that it was only by immerſion, nor on the other ſide, that it was always by ſprinkling, but disjunctively, either by one or the other (as by the words cited by him from Prac. Cat. l. 6. Sect. 2. is clear) ſuppoſing indeed that Chriſt's appointment was not terminated to either, and ſo ſatisfied by either. To which purpoſe I ſhall now add, what Mr. Pocock, one moſt expert in the writings and Cuſtoms of the Jews, hath obſerved Miſcell. not. c. 9. p. 390, &c. that the difference between the Hebrew טבל and נטל being the ſame, as in the Greek between βαπτίζεσθαι and χερνίπτειν, yet none of all theſe four do neceſſarily belong to the waſhing of the whole body, but are all indifferently for the waſhing the hands, and ſo but of a part, only with this difference, that טבל and βαπτίζεσθαι ſignify immerſion of that part in the water, and נטל and χερνίπτειν imply no more than the affuſion of water upon the hands. This difference is taken notice of among the Jewiſh writers in the waſhing but of the hands. In the Miſna, Chagigah c. 2. §. 5. נוטלין לידים &c. they waſh the hands by pouring water on them, for common meat, &c. ולקודש טובלין and to ſacred offices they immerſe them, i. e. their hands again. Thus Maimonides ſets the difference (in præfat. ad ſuos in tr. Tadaim) betwixt נטילת ידים waſhing the hands by pouring water on them, and טבילת ידים immerſion of the hands in water, and both theſe equally עד הפרק to the wriſt and no farther. Conſequently hereto, the ſame muſt be reſolved of βαπτίζεσθαι, which is perfectly equivalent to טבל that that doth not neceſſarily extend to the waſhing the whole body but only to the immerſion (as that is oppoſed to affuſion of water) of any one part of it. Thus it is clearly uſed Lu. 11. 38. the Phariſee wondred ὅτι οὐ πρῶτον ἐβαπτίσθη πρὸ τοῦ ἀρίστου, that he was not firſt waſht before dinner, which yet extended no farther (certainly) than the waſhing the hands, which was all that was by them required before meat, Mar. 7. 3. and ſo the word is uſed alſo in that place, Mar. 7. 3. ἀπὸ ἀγορᾶς ἐὰν μὴ βαπτίζωνται, οὐκ ἐσθίουσι, When they come from market they eat not, unleſs they waſh, i. e. their hands, not their whole body, as learned Mr. Pocock hath alſo cleared it, Not. Miſcell. p. 398.

12. My laſt reaſon is taken from the effect of the legal uncleanneſs, contrary to thoſe their ſanctifications, viz. removing men from the congregation; agreeable to which it is, that thoſe ſhould be called holy, who in the account of God, ſtood ſo, that they might be received into the Church; To this he anſwers, that it is ſaid without proof that the uncleanneſs excluding from, and ſanctification reſtoring to the tabernacle, are proportionable to the notion here given of the childrens being excluded or included in the Church, asking, why Cornelius ſhould be counted out of the Church, being a devout man.

13. But to this I reply, that that which is ſo manifeſt, needed no farther proof; for what two things can be more proportionable, or anſwerable the one to the other, than the Jews calling thoſe unclean, and holy, who were excluded from, and reſtored to the tabernacle, and the Chriſtians calling them unclean, and holy, that were excluded from, and received into the Church, the excluſion and reception being the ſame on both ſides, as alſo the uncleanneſs and holineſs, and the proportion lying only betwixt the Jewiſh tabernacle and the Chriſtian Church, which ſurely are very fit parallels as could have been thought on.

14. As for his queſtion of Cornelius, it is moſt vain, the whole diſcourſe being not of real but relative ſanctification, and the difference moſt viſible betwixt that ſanctity which was truly in him in reſpect of his devotion, fearing, praying, &c. and that outward priviledge of admiſſion into the congregation of the Jews, which alone was the thing which in the account of God, or ſober men, was denied Cornelius.

15. Theſe be pitiful ſophiſms, and in no reaſon farther to be inſiſted on, And therefore it was but neceſſary that to amuſe the reader, he ſhould here add by way of cloſe, that Auguſtine did diſclaim this interpretation, Hierom and Ambroſe gave another, and ſo did Tertullian De Anima, c. 39.

16. The three former of theſe we muſt, it ſeems, take upon his word, for he cites not the places where they give that other interpretation, nor pretends he that they gave that to which he adheres: But for Tertullian the moſt antient of theſe, by the place here cited, I am aſſured what credit is due to his citations, having ſet down the words at large from that c. 39. de Animâ, and found it perfectly to accord to my interpretation.

17. The like hath appeared of S. Hierom in part (for the former and more difficult part of the verſe) the man hath been ſanctified, exemplum refert, ſaith he, quia ſæpe contigerit, juſt according to my paraphraſe of the place.

18. For S. Auguſtin alſo, l. 2. de Pecc. Mer. & Remiſs. c. 26. (which I ſuppoſe the place he means) I have already accounted. And for the Annotations on the Epiſtles, which go under S. Ambroſe's name, as I have not commodity to examin them, ſo they are known and univerſally acknowledged to be none of S. Ambroſe's writings; And then it is competently evident how little he hath gained by this unſeaſonable appeal to teſtimonies.

19. The deſign, I ſuppoſe, was to prevent the force of my allegations; For in that place as an appendix to the use of the word, holy, among the Jews, I had added the acception of it among the antient Christian writers, S. Cyprian, Ep. 59. Eum qui natus est baptizandum, & sanctificandum, and the two places out of Gregory Nazianzen, of ἁγιασθῆναι ἁγιασθῶσι, being sanctified when they are not (through want of years) sensible of it, and ἐκ βρέφους ἁγιασθῆναι, sanctified from infancy. And before he chuses to take notice of these, he brings forth his names of Fathers too; with what success, we have seen, and shall not need farther to consider.

At length he descends to take notice of my testimonies, and to them he hath two answers, First, That for the antients of the third or fourth Century, especially for the Latine Doctors, he thinks the Doctor knows them better than to assert that they knew certainly the sacred Dialect, adding that few of them had skill in Hebrew or Greek. Secondly, That if those Fathers knew the sacred dialect, then not holy but sanctified, must be as much as baptized, and then the sense is, that the unbelieving husband is baptized by the wife. 20.

This latter answer was even now satisfied to the full; To the former then I reply, First, That of the two antients cited by me, the former was crowned a Martyr within 160. years after the Apostles Age, and the latter flourished about 110. years after him, and so that in respect of their time they are no way incompetent to testify what was the sacred language, the writers whereof were so lately gone out of the world. 21.

Secondly, That one of these being a Greek Doctor, and he agreeing exactly with the other (and more of the same kind I have now produced in this Rejoinder) there can here be no pretence for Mr. T. either to prejudice the Latine Doctors skill in this matter, or to say they had no skill in Greek. 22.

Thirdly, That the notion that they had of the word, being the very same, that the Hebrews were so lately shown to have had of it, there was as little colour, or temptation from the matter in hand, to except against their skill in Hebrew. 23.

Fourthly, That either of these antient Doctors knew as much (the one much more) of Greek as any of the four whom just now Mr. T. had vouched for the interpreting of the place; and for the Hebrew S. Hierom, who alone was better skilled in that, concurred with me in the main part (and basis) of my interpretation. 24.

Lastly, The Text to the Corinthians being in Greek, certainly Gregory Nazianzen was as great a Master in that language, as any that can be pretended fit to be confronted against him; and with that concurrence, which I have shewed he had of Origen, and others, both Greek and Latine, may be thought worthy to be heeded by Mr. T. for a matter of no greater weight than this, the interpretation of a word, especially when Mr. T. himself hath so lately joined his suffrage in these plain words, I deny not the fitness of the expressing [receiving to baptism] by the term [holy.] 25. Pag. 333.

And so much for those exceptions against the latter part of my paraphrase of that verse, and my reasons for it.

CHAP. IV.

An Answer to Mr. Tombes's view of my Conclusion, and therein the sense of Antiquity in this Question.

SECT. I.

Τέκνα, 1 Cor. 7. infant children. The Jews practice. Their notion of [holy] Baptism a priviledge of believers children, yet is communicated to others whose guardians are believers. The several sorts of holiness all vainly mentioned by Mr. T. His denials of the Conclusion. The place in Tertullian vindicated. S. Hieroms answer to Paulinus. Institutionis disciplina in Tertullian. Candidati Dæmoniorum. A third denial of the Conclusion. The use of baptism to regenerate, &c. No prejudice to the founding it in the Jewish practice. His art of diversion to put off answering of testimonies. The way of Testimonies insisted on.

After this examination of my paraphrase of this text to the Corinthians, he proceeds to the conclusion which I deduce from thence, which is no other than my premisses, (viz. my confirmation of that interpretation) had regularly inferred, that the infants of Christian Parents were by the Apostles received to baptism. Numb. 1.

But to this he will object also, not only by referring to his former performances invalidating the premisses (to which I shall not need now to advert, having refuted his answers, as they were produced) but by denying the consequence in case my interpretation were granted, and that upon these accounts, First, Because it is not clear that [your children] are [your infants] the Corinthians having (for ought yet hath been shewed) other children besides infants, and the Jews baptizing Proselytes, children females under twelve, and males under thirteen years old, not according to their will, but of the Father or Court. Secondly, Because if the Apostle should by [holy] mean a priviledge whereupon they were baptized, he should conceive otherwise than the Jews did, who conceived all unclean whom they baptized, till by baptism they cleansed them, and made them holy. Thirdly, Because there is no priviledge attributed by the Apostle to the Christians infants, which would not belong to the infants of heathen, or if there were, yet it might not be baptism. 2.

To the first of these I have incidentally answered already, by making it evident, not that 3.

the Corinthians had no other children beſide infants (I have no want of ſuch ridiculous evaſions) but that the children which are there ſpoken of, were infant children, as appeared both by the expreſs words of Tertullian, and the Author of Anſwers ad Antiochum, and the aggreableneſs of Nazianzen's expreſſions, by the general doctrine of the Fathers in this matter, and by the inconveniences which were conſequent to the interpreting it of any other but infant children, meaning by them ſuch as are either ſtrictly infants, new born, or ſuch as are proportionable to theſe, having not arrived to maturity of underſtanding, and capacity of profeſſing perſonally for themſelves. For this, I muſt refer the Reader to that place.

4. And for the practice of the Jews, which I acknowledge to be as is here ſuggeſted, not to baptize any Proſelytes children by their own wills or profeſſions, till they be, the female at the full Age of twelve, the male of thirteen years, ſure it makes nothing againſt me, for they that thus baptized the Proſelytes children, all under that Age, by the profeſſion of others, did alſo baptize their infant children in the ſame manner; and all that I pretend from that place is, that the believers infants were admitted to baptiſm, if infants they were, not doubting but if they were of greater years they were baptized alſo, if before they were fit to profeſs for themſelves, then by their Parents or the Churches, but if fit to anſwer for themſelves, then by their own profeſſion.

5. To the ſecond I ſay, that by [holy] the Apoſtle means the priviledge of admiſſion to baptiſm, becauſe in baptiſm they were received into the Church, and ſo made relatively holy; And the very ſame was the Jews notion of holineſs, when they called baptiſms, Sanctifications, and conceived thoſe that were unclean, to be made holy by that means, This holineſs is the term of the motion in both their uſages of the word.

6. To the third, Firſt, I ſuppoſe it evident by my interpretation, that the holineſs which belonged to the believers children, was a priviledge, and that not common to the unbelievers children, unleſs they were by the charity of the Church or ſome member thereof (having power, and aſſuming to make uſe of that power, to bring them up in the knowledge of their baptiſmal vow) brought to baptiſm, and then thoſe ſupplied the place of the Parents, and the children equally received the ſame benefit by that charity, as if their own Parents had done it for them; and there being no reaſon here offered to the contrary, but a reference to another place, which I have not commodity to conſult or examine, there is nothing that exacts any farther reply from me.

7. The ſame will ſatisfie the latter part of this laſt ſuggeſtion; for, to prove that if there were a priviledge, yet it might not be baptiſm, he produceth this reaſon, that baptiſm according to the fathers opinion and practice belonged to unbelievers children alſo, if they were brought: which being willingly granted, and ſo the matter cleared, that the children of believers were to be admitted to baptiſm, when the very unbelievers children, if brought and aſſumed for by others, which were not their parents, were to be admitted, It certainly follows not from thence, that the believers children were not admitted, or that their admiſſion was not a priviledge of believers children; For ſo ſtill it was, though by parity of reaſon, and by the charity of the Church it was communicated to ſome others; viz. thoſe that were brought by friends or guardians, though not by Parents, for ſo ſtill this priviledge belonged not to thoſe unbelievers children, who lived in their Parents power, and were not thus undertaken for by believers.

8. The ſhort is, baptiſm was a priviledge of the believers infants undertaken for by their Parents, and by analogie communicated to thoſe who were undertaken for by others, whoſe charity and piety ſupplied the place of believing Parents; but was not communicated ſimply or indifferently to all children of unbelievers, and herein the priviledge conſiſted.

9. As for the other imagined priviledge, which he names, belonging to infants, If it be that of real, actual, inward holineſs, I diſcern not Mr. T. hath any kindneſs to it, (nor can he, without deſtroying his own hypotheſes) and therefore it matters not what others imagine; If it be federal external holineſs, that I ſuppoſe to be the ſame with baptiſmal holineſs, baptiſm being the entrance into that Covenant; And for holineſs in hope and expectation; firſt, that cannot denote actually holy (as ἁγίων here notes) unleſs by holy we mean in the relative ſenſe, conſecration or deſignation to holineſs, and then it is all one with baptiſm again, the ſolemnity of that conſecration.

10. Before he leaves the ſurvey of my concluſion, he will again reſume what he had ſaid without all degree of truth in the beginning, and yet doth it with great incitation, Firſt, ſaith he, it is falſe that Chriſt founded his inſtitution in the Jewiſh practice.

11. But this I ſuppoſe in Mr. T. to be no other than a Mentiris Bellarmine, or that moſt inartificial thing, the denying a concluſion which had been inferred by competent premiſſes. And for the reaſon added to his negation, that it would utterly overthrow all baptiſm after the firſt converſion of Progenitors, that hath been largely anſwered here, and grounds laid for it in the reſolution of the Quære, by the Jewiſh practice of baptizing the children of natives, as well as of Proſelytes, and ſo of thoſe that are born never ſo many Ages after the firſt converſion. And I muſt not again ſo often repeat the ſame thing.

12. In the ſame cauſeleſs fit of incitation, he farther goes on, Secondly, ſaith he, It is falſe that there is any evidence in the Apoſtles words, 1 Cor. 7. 14. of ſuch a Cuſtom of baptizing Chriſtians and their children. But that I humbly conceive, is the denying my concluſion again, having all this while laboured to clear this evidence in the tract, and here vindicated it from all objections, which ſeemed to have the leaſt force in them: And whereas he here adds no other reaſon to his negation, but his own not thinking that ever any of the Fathers did interpret the Apoſtles words as this Doctor doth, adding that Tertullians words de Anima, c. 39. are not an exact parallel to the Apoſtles ſpeech (which I muſt ſuppoſe I have now ſhewed it is) that Ambroſe and Hierome interpret them of legitimation in birth, Auguſtine what way ſoever, not to baptiſm (of each of which I have ſpoken already alſo) all that I ſhall need add, is only this.

13. Firſt, That ſtill if this argument were exactly true, yet it is but a negative argument à teſtimonio, which never was available in any diſpute: Secondly, That if the Fathers do not fully interpret this place as I now do, yet I have brought ſome ſuffrages and other competent grounds out of the Fathers for for my way of interpreting it: Thirdly, That what he hath ſaid for the invalidating the Teſtimony out of Tertullian, hath certainly no force in it, as ſhall now briefly appear, by this view of what he ſaith.

It is this, 1. That the terms candidati ſanctitatis, or deſignati ſanctitatis, or candidati fidei in Hierom's Epiſ. 153. to Paulinus, do note not that they were baptized, but that they were in deſignation of being believers and baptized, intended to be holy by the parents, to be bred up to the faith and ſo baptized. 2. That what the Doctor talks of Tertullian as ſaying they were holy, i. e. baptized, ex ſeminis prærogativâ, it is a manifeſt miſtake, for 1. The holineſs he aſcribes to believers children was not only by prerogative of birth, but alſo ex inſtitutionis diſciplinâ, by the diſcipline of their inſtruction which is afore baptiſm. 2. The prerogative of birth the very words of Tertullian ſhew to be no more but this, that believers children were born without thoſe idolatrous ſuperſtitions which were uſed in the birth of infidels children, which he there principally recites. 14.

To this I anſwer by degrees, 1. By viewing the place in S. Hierom, to which he refers me for the explication of the phraſe, candidati or deſignati ſanctitatis. That Epiſtle to Paulinus is haſtily written in anſwer to two queſtions of Paulinus his propoſing. To the latter, being this, quomodo ſancti ſint qui de fidelibus, i. e. baptizatis naſcantur (which plainly refers the matter to theſe words of the Apoſtles, how the children born of believing parents are holy] he gives a very ſhort ſolution, being taken off by the haſt of the Poſt, and the multitude of other letters, he had to write. All that he is permitted to ſay is this: De ſecundo problemate tuo Tertullianus in libris de monogamiâ diſſeruit, aſſerens ſanctos dici fidelium filios quòd quaſi candidati ſint fidei, & nullis Idololatriæ ſordibus polluantur. Simúlque conſidera, quòd & vaſa in tabernaculo legimus, & cætera quæ ad ritum ceremoniarum pertinent, cum utique ſancta eſſe non poſſint niſi ea quæ ſentiunt & venerantur Deum. Idioma igitur Scripturarum eſt, ut interdum ſanctos pro mundis & purificatis & expiatis nominent, ſicut & Betſabee ſanctificata dicitur ab immunditia ſua, & ipſum templum ſanctuarium nominatur. Of your ſecond problem Tertullian hath diſcourſed in his Books de monogamia, affirming the children of believers to be called holy, becauſe they were as it were candidates of Faith, and not polluted with any of the filth of idolatry. Withal conſider that alſo we read that the veſſels in the Tabernacle are holy, and the other things which belong to the rite of ceremonies, when yet nothing can (really) be holy but what have ſenſe, and worſhip God. It is therefore an idiome of the Scriptures, to uſe the word holy for thoſe that are clean, and purified and expiated, as Bathſeba is ſaid to be ſanctified from her uncleanneſs, and the temple is called the Sanctuary. And ſo he is abruptly broken off, meaning to have ſaid much more on that ſubject, this, as he ſolemnly proteſts (teſtis eſt mihi conſcientia meæ Deus) being but the procinctus & exordium, the preparation and beginning of his interpretation. 15.

If he had gone on to have perfected his anſwer to Paullinus's quære, he would probably have more perfectly cleared the whole difficulty. As it is, here is nothing in the leaſt wiſe to our prejudice, nor to the proving that which Mr. T. undertakes, that Tertullians words de Anima do not affirm the baptizing of the believers children. 16.

For 1. This of Tertullian is not the place that S. Hierom refers to, but ſome other in his Books de Monog. that one Book which we now have under that title, affording us no ſuch diſcourſe on that ſubject, as S. Hierom mentions. 17.

Secondly, All that S. Hierom cites out of that (not this) place of Tertullian, is very reconcileable with what Tertullian ſaith in this place, and with his opinion that the infants of Chriſtians were baptized, for, ſaith he, they were quaſi candidati fidei, as it were candidates of Faith? Candidates were they that ſtood for any office, *qui candida ſumptâ veſte conſulatum, prætu*ram, &c. poſtulabant, who putting on white garments ſued for any office, and ſo candidates of faith, they that ſue, for this condition in the Church of God, that of πιστοὶ believers, to which by baptiſm they are aſſumed, and accordingly were to be brought to the Font, like ſuch candidates, in white garments, as they that were to be ſanctified, i. e. baptized, among the Jews, Exod. 16. 10. were alſo to waſh their cloths, or put on clean garments. 18.

Again when he ſaith of them that they were holy as the veſſels of the Temple were holy, though they had no ſenſe, this is the clear laying of a ground, whereby children may be deemed capable of this relative holineſs, which is to be had by baptiſm, though as yet they are not capable (for want of underſtanding) of inherent holineſs. 19.

Laſtly, when he mentions it as an idiome of Scripture, to call them holy, who are cleanſed, purified, expiated, ſpeaking of thoſe legal luſtrations or purifications, this gives an account of S Pauls uſing the word in the Chriſtian Church for the Chriſtian luſtration, purification, expiation, i. e. for baptiſm. 20.

And by the way, it appears by S. Hierom that he uſeth promiſcuouſly ſancti and ſanctificati, and ſo that gives us authority to interpret [ἁγιάσθαι] in the end of the verſe in the ſame ſenſe in which [ἁγιασαι] is uſed in the beginning, for thoſe that are brought and received to baptiſm. All which are far enough from ſerving any of Mr. T. his intereſts, and might have inclined him to have omitted that teſtimony of S. Hieroms, if he had more maturely conſidered of it. 21.

Nay Thirdly, I muſt add, that Mr. T. his rendring of candidati and deſignati ſanctitatis, and candidati fidei, by being in deſignation of being believers and baptized, intended to be holy by the parents, to be bred up to the faith and ſo baptized, is a moſt groundleſs inconvenient interpretation: For if by holineſs and faith be meant inherent holineſs and faith, then baptiſm it ſelf is the ceremony of conſecrating and deſigning them to this, and ſo precedent to that holineſs (not ſubſequent to it, as Mr. T. ſets it) and accordingly in the Church writings, the word πιστοὶ believers, is never beſtowed on any, though of mature age and knowledge, till after they be baptized, φωτιζόμενοι and πιστοὶ, illuminate and believers being all one, promiſcououſly uſed for thoſe that have received Baptiſm, in oppoſition to catechumeni, thoſe that have not yet attained it: But if holineſs and faith be the relative holineſs, then infants being as capable of that as veſſels in the Temple, they might be preſently deſigned and conſecrated to that, and not firſt bred up in the faith, before they were partakers of it. 22.

The children of believers, I willingly grant, are preſumed to be by them intended to be bred up to the faith; but if that intention of theirs bring forth no preſent effect, if they do not bring them thus 23.

early, and enter them into the Church by baptism, why should that bare intention of the parents give them the style of holy or sanctified, or how should these infant children, which may die before they come to those years, receive any present priviledge or benefit, by that which is thus far removed from them?

24. Now for the second part of this suggestion, that what I say from Tertullian, that they were holy, i. e. baptized in seminis prærogativâ, is a mistake, I must answer by viewing of the proofs of his assertion, First, saith he, the holiness was not only by prerogative of birth, but ex institutionis disciplinâ. This sure is a strange proof, It is not so, because it is not only so; 'Tis certain that Tertullian saith they are holy ex institutionis disciplinâ, and as certain that they are as much so by prerogative of their birth, the words are most clear, tam ex seminis prærogativâ quàm ex institutionis disciplinâ, and I that never denied the second could not be mistaken in affirming the first.

25. Some difficulty I suppose there may be, what Tertullian (who did not excell in perspicuity of expressions) meant by institutionis disciplina. My opinion (gathered from the observation of his language in other places) is, that he meant the doctrine of baptism instituted by Christ in his Church; for by this it is that baptism was allowed to those that were ex alterutro sexu sanctificato procreati, born of parents of which either of them was Christian.

26. Thus in his Book De Bapt. c. 12. he uses a like phrase tingi disciplinâ religionis, to be sprinkled with the discipline of religion, meaning evidently being baptized.

27. By this interpretation of that phrase, the whole place will be most clear, in reference to the antecedents, thus, The birth of all men by nature brings impurity into the world with them; the children of heathens have this mightily inhanced to them by the Superstitions that are used before and at, and soon after their birth, inviting the devil to come and take possession of them (who is himself very ready to catch them) and so making them as soon as born, candidatos dæmoniorum, candidates of the devils, ambitious to be admitted thus early into their service; Thus every one hath his genius, i. e. his devil assigned him from his birth, and so no birth of any heathen can choose but be polluted: Hinc enim Apostolus— for from hence, saith he, it is that the Apostle affirms that whosoever is born from either parent Christian, is holy both by prerogative of seed, and by discipline of institution, i. e. hath one priviledg by nature, by his very seed (by being born of a Christian, not an heathen) that he is not so polluted by their idolatrous ceremonies, and so is in some degree holy, in that respect, not so polluted as heathen children are; another priviledge he hath by the orders and rites, which Christ instituted and left in his Church, viz. that of reception to baptism, whereby he is consecrated to God, whereas heathen children are desecrated to devils, and in that respect also they are called holy by the Apostle, citing that place, 1 Cor. 7. Cæterum, inquit, immundi nascerentur, else were your children unclean, but now are they holy; adding that the Apostle in those words means, that the children of believers are designati sanctitatis, that sure must signify that they are initiated into Christ by the Christian rite or sign or ceremony of baptism, as those which had the heathenish ceremonies used upon them, were candidati dæmoniorum, candidates of the devils, in the former, thus early admitted and initiated into their sacra.

28. How far now this is from intimating any discipline of their instruction (the word their is clearly inserted by Mr. T. and institutio rendred instruction, and so Christ's institution turn'd into their instruction) I shall not now need farther to declare, nor to add ought concerning his other reason taken from the idolatrous Superstitions, without which they that are born are said to be holy, for how far that hath here place, I have already manifested also.

29. In this fit of incitation he yet farther proceeds, Thirdly, saith he, it is false that the Jewish practice in baptizing proselytes and their children, laid the foundation of infant-baptism: But as this is like the former, a meer denying of my conclusion, and so against all rules of discourse, in the first place; so is it not attempted to be proved, save only by the negative argument à testimonio, Neither the Scripture, saith he, gives any hint thereof, nor any of the ancient Christian writers, no nor any of those the Doctor cites, ever derives it from the Jewish practice.

30. But certainly this is of no force; for first, so long as none of all these deny it, to be so derived, and when the matter it self speaks it, and the agreement between what we find in the Christian Church with what we find among the Jews, there is no want either of truth or sobriety in my assertion, that Christs institution of baptism was founded in the Jewish practice of baptizing their natives and their proselytes, and that their custom being to baptize infant children, Christs institution also being by the Apostles understood to belong to the infant childrens baptism was in that respect also conformable to the Jewish copy, and so still the Jewish practice the foundation of the Christian.

31. What he adds from several ancient testimonies, shortly pointed at, that they shew that the Fathers took the baptism, of infants not to have foundation in the Jewish practice, but in the conceit they had that baptism did regenerate, give grace and save, and was necessary for them to enter into the kingdom—— hath nothing of weight in it; For First, Their conceiting that baptism had this force from Christs institution, no way prejudges Christs founding his institution in the foregoing Jewish practice.

32. 'Tis as if he should thus argue, The Fathers conceived the Sacrament of the Lords Supper to be useful for the confirming of our faith, therefore they took that Sacrament not to be founded in the postcœnium of the Jews: They conceived imposition of hands to confer a Character on those that were thus ordained to holy orders, therefore this was not founded in the Jewish custom of receiving Doctors into the Sanhedrim by laying on of hands. The foundation of the institution is one thing, and the benefits of it being instituted is another, and yet both these are found to belong to the same thing.

33. Secondly, Their very opinion that baptism did regenerate, and was necessary to enter into the kingdom, as it is taken by the Fathers from the words of Christ to Nicodemus Joh. 3. Except a man be born again, v. 3. and that of water——v. 5. (by baptism) he cannot enter into the kingdom of God, so was that speech of Christ, taken from the customary doctrine of the Jews, among whom baptism was said to regenerate, and to enter into the Church, as that was the portal to the kingdom of God, and accordingly ingly when Nicodemus ſeems not to underſtand it, Chriſt appeals to the Jewiſh doctrine or tradition, Art thou a Ruler, a Maſter in Iſrael, and knoweſt not theſe things? and therefore again, thoſe perſwaſions of the Fathers are far from unreconcilable with that which I have affirmed of the founding the Chriſtian in the Jewiſh baptiſm.

Nay fourthly, That the Fathers in their diſcourſes of baptiſm do ordinarily lay the foundation of it in Moſes, or the baptiſm of the Jews (and ſo might as well found the baptiſm of Chriſtian infants there, the Jews baptiſm, as hath appeared, belonging to ſuch) hath formerly been evidenced from Gregory Nazianzen, Orat. 39. Ἐπειδὴ βαπτίσματα & πανήγυεις — ἐβάπτισε Μωσῆς — and ſo from others alſo. 34.

What he now adds of womens baptizing among Papiſts and the allowance thereof formerly among us, of private baptiſm, of the uſe of propounding queſtions to the infant, which he is pleaſed to ſtyle ridiculous, of the ſureties anſwering in the childs behalf, and expreſſing their deſire to be baptized into the faith recited, of the cuſtom of baptizing only at Eaſter and Whitſontide, of ſprinkling or pouring water on the face, of a confeſſion in the Pract. Cat. that all men were inſtructed antiently before they were baptized, is all amaſt together, if it might be, to make up one accumulative argument, but is utterly inſufficient to do ſo. All that he concludes from the mention of all theſe, is but his own reſolution not to anſwer the teſtimonies which I had alledged from the Fathers, to prove that Infant baptiſm was an Apoſtolical Tradition. His words are theſe, upon the mentioning of thoſe particulars. [And therefore for the preſent I ſhall put by the anſwering of the ſtale and rotten allegations out of the Fathers for infant baptiſm brought by the Doctor, becauſe having ſaid ſo much. 35.

Here indeed by his [therefore] I am told the reaſon why he was willing to mention thoſe other particulars ſo cauſeleſly and unſeaſonably, viz. by way of diverſion (as dextrous perſons are wont to do for the removing of difficulties) to put by the anſwering of the allegations out of the Fathers. 36.

But I muſt not thus far comply with Mr. T. The main iſſue of the whole diſpute muſt devolve to this, the doctrine of the antient Church in this matter; For, firſt, baptiſm being inſtituted by Chriſt long before his crucifixion, and ſecondly, The form wherein he inſtituted it, being not ſet down in the Goſpels, and ſo thirdly, The Apoſtles practice being our only guide for the reſolving ſuch difficulties as theſe, whether infants were admittable or no to baptiſm, (the foundation thereof among the Jews viſibly belonging to infants, but it being ſtill poſſible that this might be changed in Chriſts inſtitution) it is not now imaginable what way ſhould be open to us of this Age (ſixteen hundred years after thoſe times) to diſcern Chriſts inſtitution in this matter, but by the words or actions of (or ſome kind of intimation from) the Apoſtles, how they underſtood Chriſts inſtitution. 37.

Of this, one place we have 1 Cor. 7. which comes in incidentally, ſpeaking to another matter, and notifies the Apoſtles ſenſe by their practice viſibly enough, and defines for the baptizing of infants in thoſe dayes; But to them that will not acknowledge this ſenſe of thoſe words, how fair and eaſy ſoever, there is but one poſſible method remaining in this, as in all other queſtions of fact, (as evidently this is, whether in the Apoſtles times and by their appointment children were received to baptiſm or no) viz. to appeal to thoſe that could not be ignorant of this matter, who by ſucceſſion and tradition, the one from the other, had the Apoſtles practice, the interpreter of their ſenſe of Chriſts inſtitution, conveyed and handed down unto them, and are to us, their late poſterity, the only competent witneſſes of this matter of fact, and ſo are in all reaſon to decide the controverſie, and give a final concluſion to the debate between us. 38.

This therefore being the laſt part of my method in the poſitive part of the Reſolution of that Quære, I profeſs to have laid the moſt weight upon it (according to the grounds ſet down in the firſt Quære concerning the deciding of ſuch controverſies) and conſequently muſt ſtill inſiſt upon it, and not be put off by Mr. T. his dexterity; and that in this matter I may not fail of giving the Reader ſome evidence, I ſhall again reſume it, and give him a competent ſeries of teſtimonies, ſome formerly mentioned, and now put more into form of evidence, and other added to them, ſo as to infer an uniform concordant tradition of all the Ages of the Church of Chriſt even ſince the Apoſtles times unto this day, for the receiving infants to baptiſm; and that ſhall be the laſt part of this Reply to Mr. T. and the Antipædobaptiſt, whoſe pretenſions are the contrary, that infants muſt not be thus admitted. 39.

SECT. II.

A Catalogue of Teſtimonies of the firſt Ages for Infant baptiſm, and the Apoſtolicalneſs thereof.

FIrſt then I begin with the words of the Apoſtle ſo long inſiſted on, and vindicated from Mr. T. his exceptions, and by ſo antient a writer as Tertullian, &c. applyed to this matter. Numb. 1.

And that firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians being written at the end of his three years ſtay in Aſia, Act. 20. 31. i. e. An. Ch. 54. I ſhall there place my firſt teſtimony. 2.

In the middle of the firſt Century S. Paul delivered theſe words, Now are your children holy, i. e. your children new-born (as appears by the context and Tertullian) are ſanctified, as that ſignifies baptized, in the ſtyle of the New Teſtament and the antient Church, ἀξιοῦνται καὶ διὰ βαπτίσματος ἀγαθῶν, they are vouchſafed the good things that come by baptiſm, ſaith the Author of the Reſponſ. ad Orthod. whether that were Juſtine the Martyr, who ſuffered Anno 163. or another very antient writer under that name; And this of that Apoſtle is an evidence of the practice of the firſt, or Apoſtolical Age, ſoon after Chriſt, and is not contradicted by any that wrote in that Age. 3.

In the next Age after the Apoſtles, flouriſhed S. Irenæus, ſaid to be martyred at Lyons (the ſeat of his Biſhoprick) the fifth of Severus, An. Chr. 197. he had been an auditor of Polycarp Biſhop of Smyrna (ſtyled 4.

(styled by that Church an * Apostolical and Prophetical Doctor) and is by † S. Hierome lookt on as a man of the Apostolical times, and by ‖ Tertullian as a most accurate searcher of all doctrines, and so is a most competent witness of the Apostolical doctrine and practice; and thus he speaks l. 2. adverſ. hær. c. 38. Omnes venit Christus per semet ipsum salvare, omnes inquam qui per eum renascuntur in Deum, Infantes, & parvulos, & pueros, & juvenes, & seniores: Christ came to save all by himself, all I say, who are born again unto God by him, Infants and little ones, and children, and young men and elder men; where it is evidently his affirmation, that infants (expresly) are by Christ regenerate unto God, and that must be in baptism, that laver of regeneration, and so they are not, in his opinion, excluded from baptism. And so this is a testimony of the second Century, not found or pretended to be contradicted by any other of that Age.

* Ep. Eccl. Smyr. ap. Euseb. l. 4. c. 15. Θαυμασιώτατος Ἀποστολικὸς καὶ Προφητικὸς διδάσκαλος.

Immediately after Irenæus followed Tertullian in the end of the second, and beginning of the third Century, a man of great learning, and a diligent observer and recorder of the customs and practices of the most antient Church. And he lib. de Animâ, c. 39. affirms it from the Apostle, ex sanctificato alterutro sexu sanctos procreari, that when either Parent is sanctified or believer, i. e. baptized, the children that are born from them are holy, and this tam ex seminis prærogativâ, quam ex institutionis disciplinâ, both by prerogative of their seed, and by the discipline of the institution, i. e. (as hath been shewed) by baptism, adding from the same Apostle that delivered those words, 1 Cor. 7. 4. that his meaning was, that the children of believers should be understood to be designati sanctitatis, ac per hoc salutis, and evidencing what he means thereby, by the following words, of Christ's definition, Joh. 3. Unless a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he shall not enter into the kingdom of God, i. e. non erit sanctus, shall not be holy, where baptism is manifestly the thing by which these children are said to attain that sanctity; and more he adds in the beginning of the next chapter to the same purpose. And so he is a competent witness for the beginning of that third Age, and is not found contradicted by any other passage in his works, or by any of his time; But on the contrary,

6. Origen, who died at Tyre, An. Chr. 254. hath three most irrefragable testimonies for it; first on Luke Hom. 14. Parvuli baptizantur in remissionem peccatorum, little ones are baptized into the remission of sins; and quomodo potest ulla lavacri in parvulis ratio subsistere, nisi juxta illum sensum de quo paulò antè diximus, Nullus mundus à sorde, &c. How can the account of baptizing little ones hold, but according to that which before was said, none is clean from pollution, no not if he be but a day old; and per baptismi sacramentum nativitatis sordes deponuntur, propterea baptizantur & parvuli, by the sacrament of baptism the pollutions of our birth are put off, and therefore little ones are baptized.

7. Secondly, on Leviticus Hom. 8. Requiratur quid causæ est cum baptisma Ecclesiæ in remissionem peccatorum detur, secundum Ecclesiæ observantiam etiam parvulis baptismum dari —— Let it be considered what the cause is, when the baptism of the Church is given for the remission of sins, that baptism should according to the observation (or custom) of the Church be given to little ones.

8. Thirdly, on the Epistle to the Romans, l. 5. Ecclesia ab Apostolis traditionem suscepit etiam parvulis baptismum dare —— the Church hath received tradition from the Apostles to give baptism to little ones also, such little ones still (as by the former words appears) as those of a day old and the like. And so here is a full concord of testimonies both for the practice of the Church, and tradition received from the Apostles for baptizing of infants, and so is a farther evidence of the doctrine of the third age, not contradicted by any of that time.

9. About the same time, or without question soon after, wrote the Author (under the name of Dionysius Areopagita) de Eccl. Hierarch. For, as by * Photius it appears, Theodorus Presbyter about the year 420. debated the question, whether that writer were Dionysius mentioned in the Acts or no. And of this no doubt hath been made, but that he was a very antient and learned Author. He therefore in his † 7. chap. of Eccles. Hierarch. proposeth the question, as that which may seem to profane persons (i. e. heathens) ridiculous, why παῖδες ὄντα τὰ θεῖα συσίνεσι δωρεάμενοι, τῆς ἱερᾶς μέτοχοι γίνονται θεογενεσίας, children which cannot yet understand divine things are made partakers of the sacred birth from God, i. e. evidently of baptism (περὶ τῶν τὰ βρέφη βαπτίζεσθαι, concerning the baptizing of infants, saith Maximus his Scholiast) adding to the same head also, that ἀντὶ ἀυτῶν ἕτεροι τὰς ἀποταγὰς φασι καὶ τὰς ἱερᾶς ὁμολογίας, others in their stead pronounce the abrenunciations and divine confessions, And his answer is, first, that πολλὰ δηλ. ὑφ' ὑμῶν ἀγνοημένων, αἰτίας ἔχει θεοπρεπεῖς, many things which are unknown by us, why they are done, have yet causes worthy of God. Secondly, Ὅτι καὶ ἐκεῖ τὰυτὰ φαμὲν, ἅπερ καὶ θεοπρεπῶς ἡμῶν ἱεροτελεσταὶ πρὸς τὰ ἀρχαῖα μυηθέντες παραδόσεως εἰς ἡμᾶς κατήγαγον, that we affirm of this the same things which our divine officers of the Church, being instructed by divine tradition, have brought down unto us, and again, τοῦτο τοῖς θείοις ἡμῶν καθηγεμόσιν εἰς νῦν ἐλληλυθὸς ἔδοξεν εἰσδέχεσθαι τὰ βρέφη κατὰ τόνδε τὸν ἱερὸν τρόπον --- our divine guides (i. e. the Apostles, τὺς Ἀποστόλους φησι, saith Maximus) considering this, appointed that infants should thus be admitted according to the sacred manner; Nothing can be more clear, than that the Apostolical tradition is by this antient and elegant writer vouched for the baptizing of infants, as a sufficient account of that matter, against the reproaches and scoffs of profane, or heathen men, who deemed it unreasonable. And so there is a most convincing testimony for that time, wherein that author wrote, which must needs be in the fourth Century before Theodorus Presbyters debating the question concerning him, but most probably more antient, and so to be placed in this third Age.

10. In the midst of this third Age, An. Chr. 248. was S. Cyprian made Bishop of Carthage, and ten years after he suffered martyrdom, i. e. 158. years after the Age of the Apostles. In the year 257. he sat in Council with sixty six Bishops (see Justellus in his Preface to the African Canons, p. 21.) and their decrees by way of Synodical Epistle are to be seen in his Ep. 58. ad Fidum fratrem, which is now among his works. Pamel. Edit. p. 80. The Council was in answer to some questions about baptism, and accordingly he there sets down his own opinion, together with the decrees of that Council of sixty six Bishops which were assembled with him; And so this, as it is an antient, so it is more than a single testimony, that of a whole Council added to it; and yet farther, to increase the authority of it, S. Augustine cites this Epistle ‖ more than once, and sets it down almost intire, as a testimony of great weight against hereticks, and so 'tis cited by S. Hierom also, l. 3. dial. contr. Pelag.

In

In this Epiſtle the queſtion being propoſed by Fidus, whether infants might be baptized the ſecond or third day, or whether, as in circumciſion, the eighth day were not to be expected, he anſwers in the name of the Council, Univerſi judicavimus, 'twas the reſolution or ſentence of all, nulli hominum nato miſericordiam Dei & gratiam deneganda, that the mercy and grace of God was not to be denyed to any humane birth, to any child, though never ſo young, (by that phraſe [mercy and grace of God] evidently meaning baptiſm, the rite of conveighing them to the baptized) adding, that 'tis not to be thought that this grace which is given to the baptized, pro ætate accipientium vel minor vel major tribuitur, is given to them in a greater or leſs degree in reſpect of the age of the receivers; and that God as he accepts not the perſon, ſo nor the age of any, confirming this by the words of S. Peter Act. 10. that none was to be called common or unclean, and that if any were to be kept from baptiſm, it ſhould rather be thoſe of full age, who have committed the greater ſins, and that ſeeing thoſe when they come to the faith are not prohibited baptiſm, quanto magis prohiberi non debet infans, qui recens natus nihil peccavit, niſi quòd ſecundum Adam carnaliter natus contagium mortis antiquæ primâ nativitate contraxit? qui ad remiſſam peccatorum accipiendam hoc ipſo facilius accedit, quod illi remittuntur non propria ſed aliena peccata, how much more ought not the infant to be forbidden, who being new born, hath no ſin upon him, but that which by his birth from Adam he hath contracted as ſoon as he was born, who therefore ſhould more eaſily be admitted to pardon, becauſe they are not his own, but others ſins which are then remitted to him. Concluding that as none were by the decree of that Council to be refuſed baptiſm, tum magis circa infantes ipſos & recens natos obſervandum atque retinendum, ſo this was the rather to be obſerved and retained about infants and new born children. 11.

Thus much and more was the ſentence of that antient Father and that Council, and as the occaſion of that determination was not any antipædobaptiſt doctrine (there had no ſuch then ſo much as lookt into the Church, that we can hear of) but a conceit of one, that it ſhould be deferr'd to the eighth day, which was as much infancy, as the firſt (and ſo both parties were equally contrary to the Antipædobaptiſts intereſts, the condemned, as well as the Judges) ſo that it was no new doctrine that was then decreed, or peculiar to S. Cyprian (who had one ſingular opinion in the matter of baptiſm) appears alſo both by the concurrence of the whole Council that convened with him, and by the expreſs words of S. Auguſtin Ep. 28. ad Hieronym. Beatus Cyprianus non aliquod decretum condens novum, ſed eccleſiæ fidem firmiſſimam ſervans —— mox natum rite baptizari poſſe cum ſuis quibuſdam coepiſcopis cenſuit, Bleſſed Cyprian, ſaith he, not making any new decree, but keeping the faith of the Church moſt firm, decreed with a ſet number of his fellow Biſhops, that a child new-born might firly be baptized. Which ſhews it the reſolution of that Father alſo, that baptizing of Infants was the faith of the Church before Cyprians time, not only the opinion, but the Faith, which gives it the authority of Chriſt and his Apoſtles. 12.

In the next or fourth Century, about the year of Chriſt 370. flouriſhed Gregory Nazianzen, and dyed in the year 389. who though he be by Mr. T. affirmed to diſſuade from it but in caſe of neceſſity by reaſon of apparent danger of death, will yet give an evident teſtimony of the doctrin of the Church of that age in this matter. 13. p. 339.

In the * fourth oration written on this ſubject of Baptiſm having gone through all the ages of man (to demonſtrate a propoſition premiſed by him, ‖ πάσης ἡλικίας ἀπεῖναι, πάσης ἰδέας βίου, that it belongs to every age and ſort of life) he at length comes to the conſideration of infancy, in theſe words, Νήπιόν σοι, μὴ λαβέτω καιρὸν ἡ κακία, ἐν βρέφους ἁγιαζέσθω, ἐξ ὀνύχων καθιερωθήτω τῷ πνεύματι. If thou haſt an infant, let not iniquity get time, let it be ſanctified (certainly baptized) in infancy, let it in the tender age be conſecrated to Gods ſpirit, and whereas the heathens uſe amulets and charms to ſecure their children, ‖ δὸς αὐτῷ τὸ τριάδα τὸ μέγα καὶ παλὸν φυλακτήριον, do you give it the Trinity (the Fathers the Son and the Holy Ghoſt in baptiſm) that great and good phylactery, or preſervative. A plain teſtimony of the Churches doctrine at that time. 14. * Paris. Edit. Tom. 1. p. 648. ‖ p. 647. D. * (Juſt as Tertullian de Ani. had obſerved.) ‖ p. 643. C.

Afterwards in the * ſame oration he returns to this matter again, Τί δ' ἂν εἴποις περὶ τῶν ἔτι νηπίων ὄντων, what, ſaith he, will you ſay concerning thoſe that are yet children, and neither know the loſs nor are ſenſible of the grace of baptiſm, ſhall we alſo baptize them? And his anſwer is Παντί γε, εἴπερ τις ἐπείγοι κίνδυνος, κρεῖττον γὰρ ἀναισθήτως ἁγιασθῆναι, ἢ ἀπελθεῖν ἀσφράγιστα καὶ ἀτέλεστα, Yes by all means, if any danger preſs, 'tis better they ſhould be ſanctified (baptized) when they have no ſenſe of it, than that they ſhould dy unſealed, uninitiated; adding for proof of this, the ἀκμήμηνον περιτομὴν, circumciſion on the eighth day, which was, ſaith he, μυστική τις σφραγὶς, an initial ſeal, and yet τοῖς ἀλογίστοις προσαγομένη, uſed to thoſe that had no uſe of reaſon, and (in a lower degree) the anointing of the Poſts, which were inſenſible alſo, was yet a means of ſaving the firſt-born. 15. * p. 658. A.

After this, 'tis true that he proceeds to conſider thoſe children, that are not in any danger of death, and of them he gives his opinion (δίδωμι γνώμην, in the ſtyle which S. Paul uſeth, when he ſpeaks his own ſenſe, as that is other from the revealed will of Chriſt) that ſtaying about three years, at which time they may be taught to anſwer ſomewhat, though they underſtand it not perfectly, ἵνα ἁγιάσωμεν ψυχὰς καὶ σώματα τῷ μεγάλῳ μυστηρίῳ τῆς τελειώσεως, by this means they may be baptized, ſouls and bodies, by this great Sacrament of initiation. 16.

But of this, Firſt, It is clear that it no way prejudges the doctrine and practice of the Church formerly ſet down, and approved by him, that infant children, indefinitely conſidered, might be baptized, and if danger approched, muſt, how young ſoever they were; which is as contrary to the Antipædobaptiſt, and ſo to Mr. T. as any thing. 17.

Secondly, That it is but his γνώμη or private opinion, pretending not ſo much as to any part of the Church of that, or former ages to authorize it. 18.

Thirdly, That the ſtate of children being ſo weak and uncertain, that 'tis hard to affirm of any that they are not (for the firſt three years) in any danger, his counſel for deferring will hardly be ever practicable to any. 19.

Fourthly, That the deferring, of which Nazianzen ſpeaks, is moſt probably to be underſtood of thoſe whoſe Parents are newly converted, and themſelves doubt whether they ſhall be yet baptized or no, for to ſuch he ſpeaks in that place from p. 654. A. 20.

Laſtly,

21. Lastly, That the deferring till three years old, if it were allowed, would no way satisfie the Antipædobaptists pretensions; and so still the former passages ought to be of force with all, and no heed given to the whispers of Mr. T. and others, as if this holy Father dissuaded baptism in any Age, unless in case of danger, when he clearly saith, ἐξ ὀνύχων καθιερωθήτω, let him in the tendrest Age be baptized and consecrated to the Spirit.

22. In the same Century S. Ambrose must be placed, being a writer about the year 380. he in his tenth Book, Ep. 84. ad Demetriad. Virg. speaking of those that made Adams sin no otherwise hurtful to posterity, than by the example (exemplo non transitu nocuisse) he presseth it with this principal absurdity, Hinc evacuatio baptismatis parvulorum, this evacuates the baptism of infants, which should then be capable of adoption only, but not of pardon.

23. And in like manner on Luke, by Jordans being driven back, saith he, are signified the mysteries of baptism, per quæ in primordia naturæ suæ qui baptizati fuerint parvuli à malitia reformantur, by which the little ones that are baptized, are reformed from their malignity to the first state of their nature.

24. In the beginning of the next or fifth Age, flourished S. Chrysostom, that famous Bishop of Constantinople, whose death is placed in the year of Christ 407. he in his homily to the Neophyti hath these words, Διὸ τοῦτο καὶ τὰ παιδία βαπτίζομεν καίτοι ἁμαρτήματα οὐκ ἔχοντα, for this cause (i. e. because there be so many benefits of baptism, there recited, ten in number) we baptize children, though they have not sins.

25. Which words are the more worth remembring, because they had the hap to be made use of by the Pelagians, and consequently vindicated by S. Augustine; The Pelagians urged them in this form, Hac de causa etiam infantes baptizamus, cum non sint coinquinati peccato, for this cause we baptize infants, when they are not polluted with sin, understanding it of original sin, but S. Augustine appealing to the Greek, shewed that the right rendring was, quamvis peccata non habentes, although they had not sins, i. e. propria, their own or actual sins, of which these infants were not supposed to have any.

26. So in his * fourth Homily on Genesis, speaking of baptism as of the Christian circumcision, among other things he affirms of it, οὐδὲ ὡρισμένον ἔχει καιρὸν, ἀλλὰ ἔξεστι καὶ ἐν ἀώρῳ ἡλικίᾳ, καὶ ἐν μέσῃ, καὶ ἐν ἀκμῇ τῇ γήρᾳ, γενόμενόν τινα ταύτην δέξασθαι τὴν χειροποίητον περιτομήν, it hath no determinate time but 'tis lawful both in the first Age (the childhood, so ἀώρῳ ἡλικίᾳ signifies, with him, † elsewhere applied to the time of circumcision on the eighth day, ἵνα ἐν τῇ ἀώρῳ ἡλικίᾳ κυφότερον —) and in the middle, and in old Age it self, to receive this circumcision made without hands.

In the same Century, very few years after, if not before Chrysostom, S. Hierom must be placed, born in the year 342. and deceased in the year 420. And he in Ep. 7. to Læta telling her that whilest the child was young and not come to Pythagoras's Y. the bivium or two wayes, the knowledge of good and evil, tam bona ejus quàm mala parentibus imputantur, his good or evil deeds are imputed to the Parents, adds that this must needs be acknowledged, nisi forte existimas Christianorum filios, si baptisma non receperint, ipsos tantùm reos esse peccati, & non etiam scelus referri ad eos qui dare noluerint, maximè illo tempore quo contradicere non poterant qui accepturi erant, sicut è regione salus infantum majorum lucrum est. Unless, saith he, you believe that Christians children, if they receive not baptism, are the only persons that are guilty of the sin, and that the offence is not charged on them which would not bring them to baptism, at that time especially, wherein they that were to receive could not contradict, as on the other side the salvation of infants is the gain of the elder; adding that the Parent which was thus to prepare his child for the Kings, i. e. Christs embraces, si negligens fuerit, punietur; shall, if he be negligent therein, be punished.

27. Words of no very comfortable aboad to the opposers of Pædobaptism; I wish Mr. T. who thinks fit to make use of S. Hieroms name (it now appears how luckily) would be at leisure to consider them.

28. So lib. 3. contr. Pelag. the question being asked by Crito, Quare infantuli baptizentur, why infants are baptized, the answer is made by Atticus, Ut eis peccata in baptismate dimittantur, that their sins may be pardoned in baptism; and again, qui parvulus est, parentis in baptismo vinculo solvitur, the infant is freed in baptism from the band of Adams sin.

29. Paulinus, we know was his Contemporary, and from him we have this testimony, Ep. 12. Inde parens sacro ducens de fonte sacerdos, Infantes niveos corpore, corde, habitu --- The Priest brings the infants out of the font white as snow in body, in heart, in habit.

30. Next to these succeeds S. Augustine, who died in the thirtieth year of this fifth Age, and was the great champion of the Church against all the invaders of the depositum committed to it. His passages on this subject are too many to be enumerated, and some of them have already been set down in the Resol of the Quære, p. 217. making it the perpetual doctrine of the whole Church of all Ages before him, and expressly including that of the Apostles.

31. So de Bap, contra Donat. l. 4. c. 23. Quod traditum tenet universitas Ecclesia cum parvuli infantes baptizantur, qui certè nondum possunt corde credere ad justitiam, & ore confiteri ad salutem --- & tamen nullus Christianorum dixerit eos inaniter baptizari. This is held as tradition by the Universal Church, when little Infants are baptized, which are sure yet unable to believe with the heart or to confess with the mouth, and yet no Christian will say that they are baptized to no purpose: (a severe sentence again for the Antipædobaptist) adding the Ecclesiastical rule by which to judge of Apostolical tradition, and evidencing the benefit of infant baptism by the example of circumcision, that as in Isaac, circumcised the eighth day, the seal of the righteousness of faith preceded, and the righteousness it self followed in his riper Age by his imitating his Fathers faith, ita & in baptizatis infantibus præcedit regenerationis Sacramentum, & si Christianam tenuerint pietatem, sequitur in corde conversio, cujus mysterium præcessit in corpore, so also in baptized infants the Sacrament of regeneration precedes, and if they hold fast Christian piety, conversion in the heart follows, the mystery whereof had been formerly received in the body.

32. So De verb. Apost. Serm. 14. being come to handle this subject of the baptism of infants, he begins thus, sollicitos autem nos facit non ipsa sententia jam olim in Ecclesiâ Catholicâ summâ authoritate fundata, sed disputationes quorundam --- The doctrine it self gives us no trouble, being long since founded in the Catholick Church by the highest authority (that sure must be by Christs and the Apostles) but the disputings of ſome men --- and again, Non enim quæſtio eſt inter nos & ipſos, utrum parvuli baptizandi ſint; Baptizandos eſſe parvulos nemo dubitat, quando nec illi hinc dubitant, qui ex alterâ parte contradicunt --- the queſtion betwixt them and us is not, whether infants are to be baptized; Let no man make doubt of this, ſeeing neither do they doubt of this, which contradict us in the other queſtion concerning the benefit of it.

And again, in a farther proceſs with thoſe diſputers, Dic mihi, obſecro te, parvulis baptizatis Chriſtus 34.
aliquid prodeſt, an nil prodeſt? Neceſſe eſt ut dicat prodeſſe, Premitur mole matris Eccleſiæ. Doth Chriſt profit infants that are baptized, or doth he not? He muſt needs ſay that he doth profit, he is preſt with the weight of the Church our Mother.

And again, authoritate reprimuntur Eccleſiæ, ſi enim dixerint Chriſtum nihil prodeſſe baptizatis infanti- 35.
bus, nihil aliud dicunt quàm ſuperfluè baptizantur infantes. They are repreſt by the authority of the Church, for if they ſay that Chriſt profits not infants baptized, they plainly affirm that infants are ſuperfluouſly baptized; but this thoſe very hereticks (the Pelagians) dicere non audent, dare not ſay, and ſo were fain to ſecure their hypotheſis by another evaſion, viz. that they were baptized not for ſalvation, but for the kingdom of heaven.

And yet farther, Hoc habet authoritas matris Eccleſiæ, hoc fundatus veritatis obtinet canon, contra hoc 36.
robur, contra hunc inexpugnabilem murum quiſquis arietat ipſe confringitur. Fundata iſta res eſt, ferendus eſt peccator errans in aliis quæſtionibus --- non tantum progredi debet, ut & fundamentum ipſum Eccleſiæ quatere moliatur. This the authority of our mother the Church is poſſeſt of, this the grounded Canon of truth holds faſt; againſt this Fort, this invincible Wall, whoſoever makes aſſault, is broken to pieces. This is a grounded thing: He is to be born with, who errs in other queſtions; but he muſt not proceed thus far (as the Antipædobaptiſt certainly doth) as to indeavour to ſhake the very foundation of the Church, i. e. certainly a doctrine laid by the firſt planters of the faith, Chriſt and the Apoſtles themſelves.

So Ep. 89. Non eſt ſuperfluus baptiſmus parvulorum, ut qui per generationem illi condemnationi obligati 37.
ſunt, per regenerationem ab eâdem liberentur. The baptiſm of infants is not ſuperfluous, that they who by their birth are bound to that condemnation which came by Adam, ſhould be freed from it by regeneration; and more to the ſame purpoſe in that place.

So in Enchirid. c. 42. à parvulo recens nato uſq; ad decrepitum ſenem, ſicut nullus prohibendus eſt à bap- 38.
tiſmo, ita nullus eſt qui non peccato moriatur in baptiſmo. From the infant new born to the decrepit old Age, as none is to be kept from baptiſm, ſo there is none who dyeth not to ſin in baptiſm. See Aug. de nuptiis & concup. l. 1. c. 20. Tom. 7. p. 822.

Which words are ſoon after tranſcribed by Leo (ad Epiſc. Aquileg.) who was advanced to the Pa- 39.
pacy about the year 440.

About this time was the Epiſtle of the Council of Carthage written to Innocentius (made Biſhop of 40.
Rome about the year 400.) In which theſe words we find by way of Decree, Quicunq; negat parvulos per baptiſmum Chriſti à perditione liberari, & ſalutem percipere ſempiternam, anathema ſit. Whoſoever denies that Infants are by the baptiſm of Chriſt freed from perdition, and receive eternal life, let him be anathema.

About the ſame time, whileſt Innocentius lived (and to the ſame purpoſe) was the Milevitan Ca- 41.
non, at which S. Auguſtine was preſent, a Biſhop in that Council. This hath been ſet down in the Reſol. of the Quære, p. 219. and is an evident teſtimony that this doctrine was ſuch as Eccleſia Catholica ubiq; diffuſa ſemper intellexit, the Catholick Church every where diffuſed, always underſtood and aſſerted, and ſo it is that Councils witneſs of the Apoſtolicalneſs of it.

To theſe it were eaſy to add Theodoret alſo, and Leo (already cited) ſoon after him, both falling 42.
within the former part of that fifth Century, and in every Age after this, ſtore enough. But the queſtion is not, and in any reaſon cannot be extended to thoſe times, the clear definitions through all thoſe firſt Ages, being all that could be required to decide the controverſie concerning the matter of fact, whether it were practiſed or not practiſed by the Apoſtles.

And having ſo largely deduced them, it is not imaginable what ſhould be now wanting to the com- 43.
pleating of the evidence, when I have only added, that there is no one teſtimony of diſſent, either pretended or producible from the writings of all thoſe firſt Ages, nor conſequently the leaſt appearance of obſtacle, why the receiving of Infants to baptiſm ſhould not be reſolved the doctrine and practice of the firſt and pureſt Ages of the Church, avouched and teſtified to be delivered to them by the Apoſtles of Chriſt, who could not miſtake his meaning in the Inſtitution.

What artifices the Antipædobaptiſt can make uſe of to caſt a miſt before our eyes, in the midſt of ſo 44.
much light, I can no way divine: ſure I am that the prejudices which Mr. T. hath in few words indeavoured to infuſe (as that ſome are counterfeit authors, ſome ſuſpected, ſome miſinterpreted; that ſome maintained infant baptiſm but in caſe of danger of death, that others which avouched this, avouched either Rebaptization or Communion of Infants alſo) are all of them unjuſt and cauſeleſs, and have ſeverally and punctually been prevented in one or both of theſe diſcourſes, and ſo there remains not the leaſt ſcruple of difficulty, that I can foreſee in this matter, to add to the bulk of this vindication.

God aſſiſt it with his bleſſing to the diſabuſing thoſe that are ſeduced, and regaining them to the 45.
ways of Peace.

AN

AN ACCOUNT OF Mr. CAWDREY'S Triplex Diatribe CONCERNING Superstition, Will-Worship, and Christmas Festival.

A PREFACE TO THE READER.

THAT Mr. Cawdrey hath taken great pains to shew me the infirm parts of three little Tracts of Superstition, Will-worship and Festivals, I am now obliged to take notice, and to design the vacancy of a few days to clear those brief discourses from all the misprisions and exceptions, to which some contrary Hypotheses of his (how true, shall in due place be examined) more than the want of evidence in the Tracts themselves, may have rendred them liable. Numb. 1.

What on the two former heads I wrote many years since, I confess, I expected not to see arraigned at this time, being designed as part of an εἰρηνικὸν or διαλλακτικὸν, which might help to repair the breach, at least molify the Paroxysm, by removing two of the five specious charges, under which the blameless ceremonies, and customary practices, and observances of the Church of England were by dissenters oppugned and rendred odious. And what was then said, as I could not discern wherein it came short of Evidence of conviction, (if I had, I should certainly either have cleared or suppress't them) so it was never my fortune in nine years space to hear from any, that it lay under an ill character, but on the contrary, that it had in some measure performed what it undertook, freed our Church from those two accusations, and demonstrated them, as applied to us, to be perfect calumnies. And I have but one Petition to the Reader, at his entrance on these debates, that he will calmly review those two Treatises, with three more designed to the same end, and upon his strictest survey advertise me, wherein I have failed in my undertaking. 2.

But it is come to pass, what Arrian long since taught me to expect, that as when general discourses come to be applied to particular cases, τότε ἡ μάχη γίνεται, then the contention begins; so when the grounds, more universally laid for the justifying our Church, were in a tract concerning Festivals, and especially the day of the Nativity of Christ, brought home to 3. Arr. Epict. l. 1. c. 22.

the clearing that celebration from either of thoſe two (as from all other) charges, then Mr. Cawdry's hypotheſes, in which, I ſuppoſe, his way of managing his opinion of the morality of the Sabbath had engaged him, found themſelves to be concerned, then the commemoration of the birth of Chriſt, though but by one anniverſary (being not eaſily reconcileable with the grounds which he had laid for the Chriſtians one weekly Sabbath in the Fourth Commandment of the Decalogue) was ſolemnly to be indicted, and, as in a Chancery Bill, all imaginable evil to be affixed on it, and the cuſtomary riot of feſtivities being not ſufficient to render it odious, the more formidable charges of Will-worſhip and Superſtition muſt be revived, and by the neceſſity of this conſequence, to ſalve his φανόμενα and δουλεύειν ὑποθέσει, all that I had ſaid on either of thoſe two ſubjects, though never ſo clear, muſt now be called to a ſevere examen, and ſo, ſtore of new tasks provided for me.

4. And methinks 'tis poſſible that old * Nahum's word may not here be unreaſonable גַּם זוֹ לְטוֹבָה even this alſo for good, To which purpoſe I am willing to remember what Alexander Aphrodiſæus told the Emperours Severus and Antoninus, in his Preface to the Tract of Fatality and Free-will, that whoſoever would point him out any doubt or difficulty, that remained in that matter, after the reading of his treatiſe, he would account it a great favour and honour to him, rendring this reaſon for it, becauſe it was not eaſy ἐν ἑνὶ βιβλίῳ in one Tract, to do two things exactly, both dilucidly to expound the matters of which he principally wrote, and all thoſe other things alſo, which were uſeful to the explicating thereof.

* Elias Lev. Thisb. p. 49.

5. And the ſame I deſire may introduce my addreſs to this Diatribiſt, and the tasks by him ſet before me, The ſubjects which he hath choſen to conſider with me being ſuch, as well deſerve ſome care from each of us, that we neither deceive others, nor our ſelves in them, I mean, perfectly practical, concerning a peculiar Chriſtian duty incumbent on us, in that of Feſtivals, and again a more univerſal duty, that of obedience to our immediate Superiours, and to the univerſal Church of Chriſt, from which we muſt not depart or be affrighted, upon pretence of Superſtition, &c. and yet ought warily to ſecure our obedience from that and the like guilts, when there is any real danger of them. And beſide theſe, there is ſomewhat of a more ſublime conſideration, (on occaſion of that of Will-worſhip) the freewill offerings which will very well become a Chriſtian to bring to Chriſt, rewardable in a high degree, though they are not under any expreſs precept, ſuch are all the higheſt charities, and devotions, and moſt heroical Chriſtian practices, which ſhall all not only be degraded but defamed, if every thing be concluded to be criminous, which is not neceſſary, if all uncommanded practice be unlawful.

6. Now this Diatribiſt having undertaken to examine what I then wrote, and done it with ſo little partiality to me, that I have no reaſon to ſuſpect he hath leſe any minute difficulty unmentioned; I ſhall hope that the deſcending to a particular ſurvey of all his objections, will probably prevent any future miſtake in theſe matters, and upon this ſcore, as St. Auguſtine thought it neceſſary for thoſe heathens which deified all their benefactors, to build one altar and pay ſome homage to their Enemies, becauſe they deſerved to be numbred among their benefactors, ſo have I not grudged the tribute of my pains, at leaſt that of a ready, though laborious obedience to this call of the Diatribiſt, but apprehended this opportunity of removing all doubts, which can recur and require ſolution; entertaining my ſelf with ſome ſlender hope that the Reader may reap ſome ſmall benefit thereby in order to chriſtian practice; the one thing which I deſire to propoſe, as the end of all my meditations, and never to be drawn by the importunity of thoſe which differ from me in opinion, into any contention or ingagement, which hath not this aim viſible before it, the ſeaſonable checking and reformation of ſome vices, (ſuch ſure are thoſe which here I deſire to prevent and remove) or the confirmation and increaſe of virtue, to the glory of God, and the multiplying of fruit to our account.

7. That this hath been the only aim of all hitherto publiſht by me, even of thoſe diſcourſes which are moſt polemical, I am ſo fully ſatisfied in my ſelf, that I doubt not to approve it to any, that can make queſtion of it; where difference of opinion doth not either by cloſe conſequence, or more immediately, lead into vitious practice, I ſhall never willingly contend with any man, or make reply to the contentious: But in Doctrines which have immediate influence upon practice, 'tis obligation of charity to indeavour the diſabuſing of all, and not to permit or ſuffer any ſuch fruitful, and noxious error upon my neighbour.

8. Under which head becauſe I cannot but place the rejecting of Children from Baptiſm, and find ſome objections, offered by Mr. Tombes, to what I have written on that ſubject, I have therefore drawn a ſhort defence of that Apoſtolical practice, and vindicated my former diſcourſe from his anſwers, and exceptions, which being offered to the Reader, as ſoon as the Printer will permit, I ſhall not doubt of his leave to ſhut up the Palæſtra at this time, having ſufficiently cloyed him with theſe Spectacles.

9. And it is my wiſh for him, that he may continue to have the eaſe (at leaſt) of a Spectator, that it may be his lot, though for ſome months it hath not been mine, ἐιρωνεύειν καὶ ἡσυχάζειν, to live peaceably and quietly with all men, a felicity of which we are all to be ambitious, φιλοτιμεῖσθαι, and a grace that we are all, not in prayer only, but by real indeavours to contend

SECT. I.

Philoſophy Col. 2. 8. Fables and endleſs Genealogies, 1 Tim. 1. 4. Tit. 3. 9. The propriety of that Text Col. 2. to Mr. C. his diſcourſe.

AND firſt the Title page will deſerve a curſory view, eſpecially the place of Scripture, where- Numb. 1.
with he hath choſen to adorn it, Col. 2. 4. 8. by which the Reader is directed to look on his threefold exercitation (as he is pleaſed to call it) with Dr. H. as an eſpecial antidote againſt that Philoſophy, &c. of which St. Paul forewarns men to take heed in thoſe two verſes.

On this occaſion I ſhall not need inquire, what provocation Mr. C. had to expreſs ſuch unkindneſs 2. to, and jealouſie of Philoſophy, (certainly not the ſame that St. Paul then had among his Coloſſians) but only remind the Reader what is * elſewhere ſhew'd more largely, that the Philoſophy there branded * Annot. on by the Apoſtle, was that which the Gnoſticks divinity was ſo full of, taken out of Pythagoras and the Col. 2. a. and Greek Poets, Antiphanes, Heſiod and Philiſtion, and eſpecially Orpheus his Theology or Genealogies of 1 Tim. 1. a.
the Gods, and ſo promiſcuouſly ſtyled by the Apoſtles φιλοσοφία καὶ κένη ἀπάτη, Philoſophy and vain deceit, in this admonition to the Coloſſians; and μῦθοι καὶ ἀπέραντοι γενεαλογίαι fables and endleſs genealogies (how out of Night and Silence comes forth Chaos, &c.) in his directions to Timothy, 1 Tim. 1. 4. and μωρὰς ζητήσεις καὶ γενεαλογίας, fooliſh queſtions and genealogies, in his Epiſtle to Titus, c. 3. 9.

And then, how conveniently this was accommodated to any, or all thoſe three diſcourſes concern- 3.
ing Superſtition, Will-worſhip, Chriſtmas Feſtival, muſt be diſcerned by his anſwer to all, or any of theſe few queſtions, Firſt, Whether any Gnoſtick principle of Theology hath been diſcovered in any of thoſe three Tracts which he hath undertaken to chaſtiſe? Secondly, Whether it be a piece of Apoſtatical or heretical pravity, a branch of heatheniſm or Gnoſticiſm, to maintain the celebration of Chriſts Nativity to have nothing criminous in it, either under the head of Superſtition or Will-worſhip? Thirdly, Whether all inſtitutions of the Church, though in themſelves never ſo blameleſs, are yet to be lookt on, as συλαγωγία acts of diſpoiling Chriſtians, and little leſs than Sacrileges, and whether they are all comprehended under that ſtyle of Traditions of men, and rudiments of the world, in oppoſition to κατὰ Χριστὸν, after Chriſt, of which the Apoſtle ſo carefully warns the Coloſſians? Laſtly, Whether all probable, or concludent, nay even demonſtrative diſcourſe, be to be warded and averted, as deceits and beguilings, becauſe capable of that title of πιθανολογίαι, which the Apoſtle there uſeth, whether we render them literally probabilities of ſpeech, or with our tranſlation, inticing words?

When Mr. C. hath accommodated any ſatisfactory anſwer to theſe few queſtions (all, or at leaſt 4. ſome one of them) he may then be qualified to attempt juſtifying the charitableneſs of his title page, and the propriety of his ſelect Scripture; but till then, he may give his Reader leave to queſtion one of them.

SECT. II.

Mat. 15. 8, 9. Gal. 4. 9, 10. Deum ſic colere quomodo ſeipſum colendum præcepit.
Chriſtmas no irrational cuſtom.

THE ſame reaſon I have to put in my exceptions to the title pages of his two other exercitations, Numb. 1.
and in like manner, firſt, to demand, how commodiouſly the words of Chriſt, Mat. 15. 8, 9. condemning their worſhip as vain, which teach for doctrines the commandments of men, are affixt to the ſecond Diatribe concerning Will-worſhip, when he cannot but know, that that Text is particularly handled in the firſt leaf of the treatiſe of Will-worſhip, and demonſtrated neither to belong to humane laws in general, nor to any inſtitutions of the Chriſtian Church, but only to the dogmatizing of Phariſaical Hereticks, and particularly, their urging ſome inventions of their own, as commanded, and under obligation by divine precept, now when the very Judaical commanded rites were ſo ſuddenly to be laid aſide, nailed to the croſs, ſolemnly cancelled and aboliſht by Chriſt.

And ſecondly (no farther to demand his reaſons, but) to admire his conſtancy to himſelf; that 2.
before the Diatribe of Chriſtmas, and other (ſure Chriſtian) feſtivals, he hath thought meet to prefix that text, Gal. 4. 9, 10. of obſerving dayes, months, times, years, ſo peculiarly reſtrained by all circumſtances to the Judaical Sabbaths, New Moons, Anniverſaries, and Jubilees, but no more appliable to the prejudice of the yearly feaſt of Chriſts birth, than to the weekly of his Reſurrection.

3. To which if we ſhall aſſociate his two Latin ſentences, the one out of S^t Auſtin of worſhipping God as he hath commanded; the other out of S^t Cyprian, of the vanity of irrational cuſtoms, and remind him, that we deſign no other worſhip of God upon Chriſtmas day, but ſuch as we are ſure he hath commanded at all times, that of prayer and thanksgiving, &c. and that the incarnation of Chriſt was a competent reaſon to found a cuſtom of commemorating it after this manner, we ſhall find a perfect harmony and conſent in all his diſcords; and that is all I ſhall return to his frontiſpieces, deſigned to infuſe prejudices into the Reader, to blaſt before-hand, what he meant to anſwer.

CHAP. II.

Of Mr. C. his Preface.

SECT. I.

His diſcourſe of the cauſes of my miſtakes. Comparing of Superſtition and Will-worſhip to Hereſie. Accounting Superſtition our virtue.

Numb. 1. THIS now more than time that we think of entring, and yet there is a Preface ſtill behind, which expects to be taken notice of, as being a very friendly recapitulation of the grounds of my great miſtakes, the unhappy cauſes of thoſe my miſcarriages, which he hath diſcovered in the inſuing Exercitations.

2. But I that am not yet by all his Diatribe ſo inſtructed, or improved, as to diſcern one real miſadventure in thoſe diſcourſes, find it impoſſible for me to be edified by this his charity; I muſt be ſhewed my diſeaſe, before Hippocrates himſelf can point me out the cauſes of it, and therefore my briefeſt return to his preface, is but to beſeech him to reſerve his diſcourſe of cauſes, till the effects ſhall be ſo viſible, as to call for it; and if this be not a ſufficient reply to all of it, What is behind, will eaſily be referred to this one head, the injuſtices and miſtakes of the author of it, which I ſhall but briefly recite to him.

3. Firſt, That he hath thought fit to compare Superſtition and Will-worſhip, as they are the ſubjects of my diſcourſes, with Hereſie; whereas, firſt Superſtition, in the proper notation of the word, which firſt I ſpeak of, and vindicate our Church, whether in the ceremonies, or obſervances, from all appearance of guilt of it, is the worſhipping of Dæmons or deified men, and that ſure is worſe than hereſie in every Chriſtians account, and ſo, inconveniently compared, ſo as to be equalled with it. And ſecondly, whatever our Church hath admitted, is cleared to have nothing of Superſtition in it, in any other ſecundary notion or acception of the word; or if it had, yet as long as it is no more but uncommanded Rites or Feſtivals, which by the Diatribiſt himſelf are thus ſtyled, thoſe ſure, in any reaſon, will not be capable of this compariſon, or accuſation of being ſo bad as hereſie; and thirdly, will-worſhip in the one place where it is uſed in Scripture, hath no manner of ill, but good character ſet upon it, being joined ἐν σωφροσύνῃ with humility, which I hope is not yet condemned to be quite ſo criminal and abominable to God, as pride and hereſie is acknowledged to be; however in this Preface, before my interpretation of Col. 2. 23. hath been endeavoured to be confuted, this ſo eminent criminouſneſs thereof was not with more reaſon, than charity ſuppoſed by him.

4. Secondly, That he hath affirm'd, in a parentheſis, of ſome men that they account theſe (and ſuperſtition is evidently one of theſe) their virtues rather than crimes; which again if applied to me, or I think to any Proteſtant living, is very unkind and unprovoked, having no ground in any part of my Diſcourſe.

5. Thirdly, That Will-worſhip hath been by him elſewhere demonſtrated to be as criminal as Hereſie, which in what notion ſoever he hath expreſt himſelf to underſtand the word, is with no truth aſſumed by him, as far as refers to theſe Diatribæ; and if it be elſewhere attempted, Firſt, He ſhould have referred us thither, if but to vindicate his own veracity, or elſe have recited the heads of ſuch demonſtrative arguments in this place; or in the ſecond Diatribe; and yet neither of theſe are done by him.

SECT. II.

Of being too Religious; of the intenſion or degree. The Meſſalians. Neglect of Charity, of particular callings, Eccl. 7. 16. Of multitude of Ceremonies. Too many Ceremonies no argument of too much, but of too little Religion.

Numb. 1. HIS fourth miſtake is, that he hath recited it as one cauſe of my miſcarriages in this buſineſs, that I affirm that a man cannot be too religious, and that I atteſt this, both of the intenſion or degree, and of the extenſion or number of Ceremonies taken into the worſhip of God] Whereas that which I affirm, is evidently this, Firſt, That in reſpect of the degree, there is no ſuch thing as nimiety or exceſs in Religion; no poſſibility of being Religious in too high a degree, Sect. 33. and this is not denied by by Mr. C. nor can be by any pious man; who knows that all his faults are omiſſions and defects, but never exceſſes of piety or religion.

Secondly, The main objections imaginable againſt this, from the practice of the Meſſalians, or the neglect of the duties of charity and the particular calling, incident to the intenſe practice of holy duties, were foreſeen and prevented there; the Meſſalians fault was not their exceſſive practice, but their laying that obligation on themſelves and others; the ſame that Tertullian and the Montaniſts were guilty of, in reſpect of other auſterities, and ſo 'twas their dogmatizing, in their impoſition of heavy burthens, wherein their hereſie (not their ſuperſtition) conſiſted: And the others crime is his idleneſs, and walking ἀτάκτως diſorderly, a crime cenſured by the Apoſtle, 2 Theſ. 3. 11. (yet far enough from Superſtition again) and in like manner his want of charity, and ſo not nimiety, but unſeaſonableneſs of piety, contrary to the expreſs words of Chriſt, I will have mercy and not ſacrifice. 2.

And if yet a third objection be offered from the words of the Preacher, Eccl. 7. 16. (which yet this Diatribiſt hath not thought fit to offer) Be not righteous overmuch, why ſhouldſt thou deſtroy thy ſelf? I ſuppoſe the anſwer is obvious, that thoſe words are the intimation of the wordlings objection, who taketh that for exceſs of duty, which brings any damage or worldly deſtruction upon him; and is anſwered in the next verſe with this ſolid Aphoriſm of eternal verity, Be not thou overmuch wicked, why ſhouldeſt thou die before thy time? The fears, and from thence the prudential, but oft-times very impious practices of the worldling, are far the more probable path to the moſt haſty ruines. 3.

And ſo ſtill this branch of my Doctrine, as far as aſſerted by me, was neither untruth, nor miſcarriage, nor cauſe of either, in my diſcourſe. 4.

As for the ſecond, that of the extenſion or number of rites and ceremonies taken into the worſhip, that there cannot be too many of them, is as far from being my aſſertion, as that which is moſt contrary. For upon that head my concluſion is, that as ſome rites or circumſtances of time and place and geſture are abſolutely neceſſary to Religion, and the significativeneſs of them is no manner of prejudice to the uſe or inſtitution of them, ſo if the Diſputers will yield but this, that even when they are ſignificative, the uſe of Ceremonies may be allowed among Chriſtians, I ſhall then in ſtead of pleading for the multitude of ſuch, give my vote to the confirming the old Rule, that they be paucæ & ſalubres, few and wholſom; and particularly few for five reaſons, ſet down in the following words, Sect. 39. and ſure that is contrary enough to his reporting of my opinion, that there cannot be too many of them; and ſo, that which was no part of my belief, could be no cauſe of any miſcarriage of mine in that buſineſs. 5.

To which if I ſhall now add, that my granting there ought to be few (and ſo that there may be too many) Ceremonies in a Church, is no way the yielding a poſſibility that a man may be too religious; but on the Contrary, when the too many Ceremonies either cauſe, or occaſion, or are accompanied with inward neglects, there is not too much but too little Religion, too much formality, but too little devotion, too much outward Phariſaical waſhing, but too little inward Chriſtian fervor; as there may be πολυλογία and βαττολογία, words too many, but too little praying (I may add, too many offers of proof, but too little reaſon) and remind the Diatribiſt that this was expreſly ſaid before in the end of Sect. 39. by the token of the inſectile animals, whoſe want of blood cauſed their multitude of legs, I ſhall then ſure have given him ground of conviction, that there were more than one calumny in his aſſignation of the cauſes, particularly in this of the firſt cauſe of my miſcarriages. 6. Mat. 6.

SECT. III.

Mr. C. his diſtinctions of being too religious, multiplied unneceſſarily. Frequency of duty, if ſecured from other neglects, no exceſs, nor criminous. Prayer a branch of Natural worſhip, Θεῦ τίμα. Exceſs in truſt, &c. as well as in Prayer. The Species of worſhip, and the circumſtances thereof. The wide difference between theſe. Times of Prayer not limited by Scripture: Set days of worſhip, Geſtures, Proſtration. Mr. C. his three proofs examined, Deut. 4. 2. conſidered. Apoc. 22. 19. A view of Aquinas's doctrine in this matter.

AS for his diſtinctions, by which he is willing to clear his way, that a man may be ſaid to be too Religious, either becauſe he gives more to God than he deſerves, but ſo he cannot be too Religious; or, becauſe he gives more than God requires by the Rule of worſhip. Secondly, That in regard of worſhip commanded, eſpecially natural worſhip, a man cannot be too religious in reference to the intention (I ſuppoſe it ſhould be intenſion) of the devotion, as in love, fear, truſt in God (adding in a cautious parentheſis, that in inſtituted worſhip a man may be too religious, as if he pray or faſt to the waſting his health or neglect of his calling:) but in uncommanded worſhip, the leaſt addition to the Rule of worſhip is too much, and ſuch a man may be ſaid to be too religious. I cannot imagine how he hath by either or both of theſe attain'd his end, but rather perplexed, than cleared the way for the Reader, which was perfectly ſtraight, and abundantly explicate, before he took upon him to be the harbinger. Numb. 1.

For Firſt, the two latter members of both his diſtinctions are directly the ſame, and ſo I am ſure there was too much of his diſtinctions; tautology I ſuppoſe is ſuch a nimiety, and ſuch ſure is this [A man that gives more than God requires by the rule of worſhip, is too religious] and [in uncommanded worſhip the leaſt addition to the rule of worſhip is too much, and ſuch a man may be ſaid to be too religious.] 2.

Secondly, For his Parentheſis, it was perfectly prevented in the tract of Superſtition, §. 33. and ſo, was a ſecond nimiety, being added without all neceſſity or uſe, it being there acknowledged that in a frequent or intenſe practice of holy duties, there might be ſome incident fault, viz. neglect of duties of charity or particular callings; and waſting of health through faſting immoderately, bears analogy with theſe. 3.

But then it was forewarned, that the fault herein was not the exceſs of Religion, but omiſſion of other neceſſary duties; and that demonſtrated by this, becauſe if that frequency, whether of prayer 4.

or faſting, wherein is the ſuppoſed exceſs, be either in another man, or in that man (whoſe exceſs is accuſed) at another time, ſeparated and ſecured from thoſe neglects, or omiſſions of thoſe other duties, the very ſame frequency and intention were his virtue not his crime, which therefore ſtill prejudges this from being an inſtance of the thing in hand, that a man may be too religious.

5. Thirdly, His difference, in this reſpect of nimiety, betwixt natural and inſtituted worſhip, is perfectly vain and uſeleſs to his deſign, even as he himſelf hath explicated it, placing love, fear, truſt in God under the firſt head, and prayer and faſting under the other.

6. For firſt, I muſt remind him, that prayer is as properly a branch of natural worſhip, as love, or fear, or truſt can be imagined to be, being, firſt inſeparable from truſt, ſecondly, a neceſſary and natural means of acknowledging Gods fulneſs and our wants, thirdly, containing under it thanksgiving, praiſing God, which is the prime way of honouring God (He that praiſeth me, honoureth me, ſaith David) and ſure that honouring of God, a moſt peculiar branch of natural worſhip, dictated by the nature of a creature, and taught by all naturaliſts that acknowledged any God, (Θεὸς τίμα, in the Pythagorean Verſes, honour the Gods, and Θεὸν God in Phocylides) and both the petitory and the Euchariſtical comprehended under the Θεοὺς σέβεσθαι, worſhipping the Gods, in Plutarch, which Xenophon tells us πρὸ πάσιν ἀνθρώποις νομίζεται is the primeval law acknowledged among all men, and Hierocles, having defined Piety to be the πασῶν δὲ ἀρετῶν ἡγεμών, the captain of all virtues, πρὸς τὸν θεὸν αἰτίαν τὸν ἀναφορὰν ἔχουσα; as having reſpect to the divine cauſe, he adds that the precept concerning that in the golden verſes, had juſtly the precedence and deference before all laws, to give the Gods that honour which is due unto them, and all things elſe according to that order * ὧν ὁ δημιουργικὸς νόμος ἅμα τῇ οὐσίᾳ αὐτῶν συμπεφύγαγε, which the creative law (that ſure is the Chriſtians law of Nature) together with their being, had afforded them. But perhaps ſuch evidences as theſe, are the Philoſophy againſt which the Reader was to be forewarned in the title page; and therefore,

Ἀπομνημον. βιβ. δ.

* Εἰς Χρυσ. Ετ. p. 10.

7. Secondly, I muſt add, to demonſtrate the uſeleſsneſs of his diſtinction in this place, that it is as poſſible to exceed in truſt, in fear, nay even in love, as it is in prayer; Thus he that ſo truſts in God, as not to fear; he that truſts him with the end, ſo as to neglect the means, parallel to him that prays and neglects his calling; he that truſts and relies and hopes, but doth not purifie, (performs not the Evangelical condition) every one of theſe is, in proportion with Mr. C. his inſtances of prayer and faſting, an exceeder in truſt; we are wont to expreſs it by preſuming.

8. Secondly, He that ſo fears, as not to love, that fears where no fear is, that walks accurately ὡς ἄσοφος as a fool, he will be as properly an exceeder in fear.

Thirdly, He that ſo loves God again, either as not to fear God, or as not to love his brother alſo; he that hath a zeal to God, but not according to knowledge; he is in like manner an exceeder in love. And yet all this while, none of theſe are religious too much, but too little; though they exceed the bounds of one part of duty, they are defective in another, and 'tis this defect, not that other exceeding, that is criminous, Theſe things ought they to have done, but not to leave the other undone; and theſe omiſſions are their crimes, and as truly ſo, in the natural, as in the inſtituted worſhip; though if the inſtituted worſhip in any branch be preferred before any branch of natural duty, or be more intenſely and frequently practiſed, to the neglecting thereof, this may be a greater fault than if one part of natural worſhip be intended to the detriment of another either ſuperior or equal to it, as if Sacrifice (which I acknowledge an inſtituted worſhip) be intended or preſt to the omiſſion of neceſſary charities, ceremonies to the ſlacking of the inward fervor, or the like.

9. So that ſtill all that this Diatribiſt's ſubdivided diſtinctions have done for us (beſide diſcovering his own miſtakes) is only this, to propoſe one ſort of things, wherein, in his opinion, a man may be too religious, viz. in giving God more than he requires by the rule of worſhip, or, as again he expreſſeth it, by the leaſt addition to the rule of worſhip, which, ſaith he, is too much, and ſuch a man may be too religious. And this being the only product of his diſtinctions, is, as I intimated, ſo far from clearing, that it is the perplexing and intricating the buſineſs, which was formerly clear enough, the leading the Reader not out but into Meanders, an intanglement of the clue, a Sphinx inſtead of an Oedipus.

10. For there was no ſuch ἀμφίβολον before, nothing ſo difficult, ſo involved, of ſo incertain and dubious ſignification, as this which now he calls [giving God more than he requires by the rule of worſhip] and explains by [uncommanded worſhip, and, the leaſt addition to the rule of worſhip.]

11. I ſhall evince the truth of what I now ſay, and with the ſame hand clear again what he hath clouded, by asking him but this one queſtion, Doth he mean in theſe words [more] and [Addition] any new ſpecies or ſort of worſhip, neither preſcribed by the law of Nature, nor inſtituted by any poſitive law of God? or doth he deſign only, ſome circumſtance only, or ceremony, which being not of the intrinſick nature or eſſence of worſhip, but only accidental to it, is not particularly commanded or preſcribed by the word of God, the rule of worſhip? ſuch are, the time, the place, the geſtures, and ſuch outward, but ſome of them inſeparable attendants of worſhip.

12. I ſhall deſire to ſecure my expreſſions from obſcurity and miſtakes, and therefore to be as explicit as may be; Prayer is a ſpecies of worſhip; praying on the Lords day, on Chriſtmas day, obſerving conſtant hours of prayer, thrice, ſeven, ten times every day, is each of them a circumſtance adherent to Prayer; ſome time is neceſſary and inſeparable from Prayer, but every of theſe times forementioned are not ſo, he that prayes but thrice, doth not pray ſeven or ten times a day; So again the place of prayer may give it a different denomination, either of publick or private; the manner may render it more or leſs ſolemn; the geſtures more or leſs reverent or irreverent, the increaſe, letting down of ardor, devout or formal; and there are many ſorts, and degrees of each of theſe, but theſe do not conſtitute new or ſeveral ſorts of worſhip, but all are accidents of one and the ſame ſpecies of worſhip, viz. of Prayer.

13. Here then is a wide difference, and if his meaning were of the ſpecies or ſorts of worſhip, then I never doubted to affirm with him, that all uncommanded worſhip is an exceſs, if he pleaſe, (an error, I ſhould rather ſay) a ſetting up that for worſhip of God, which is not worſhip, nay perhaps quite contrary to worſhip; and this ſure was never juſtified by me explicitely, or implicitely, in concluſions, or in grounds and principles of thus concluding; and ſo ſtill this hath not been uſeful to me to diſcover any miſtake of mine.

The ſecond then is the only branch remaining, of which his words, as referring to me, can poſſibly be underſtood, and then 'twill prove ſo far from being any miſadventure of mine, that it will devolve all abſurdity upon the Diatribiſt. 14.

For I ſhall demand, Hath the rule of worſhip, i. e. the Scripture, any where preſcribed the times, the places, the geſtures, and all the circumſtances of the worſhip of God, and that both poſitively and excluſively, ſo that he that prayes oftener than the Scripture expreſly commands, or on any day not aſſigned to that purpoſe by Scripture, ſins in ſo doing, adds to the rule, gives more than God requires, doth too much, is too religious, is criminous and abominable to God in ſo doing? every of theſe muſt be the affirmations of this Diatribiſt, if this ſecond meaning be his; and the like he is obliged to ſay again of him that prays in any place, in any manner, in any geſture, which the word of Scripture, the rule of worſhip hath not commanded. 15.

And becauſe this is by all reaſon to be reſolved to be his meaning, or elſe his whole Book is perfectly caſt away, a meer σκιαμαχία or beating the air, without me or any man elſe to be his adverſary, I ſhall at the preſent ſuppoſe it ſo, and ſhew him, as deictically as he can wiſh, the abſurdities of it. 16.

And firſt for the times of prayer, I demand, What hath the rule of worſhip, the Scripture preſcribed? hath it preſcribed morning and evening Prayer, and that both poſitively, and excluſively to any more? If ſo, then by the ſtandard of this Diatribiſt's doctrine, Davids or Daniels praying three times a day, adding the noon day ſeaſon to the other two, muſt be criminous and abominable: or if he ſhall pitch upon any other number of times, as preſcribed by the Rule, then I ſhall add an unite more to that number, and demand, whether that addition will add abomination to his performances? If he ſaith it will, though I might preſs that affirmation with abſurdities enough, yet I ſhall ſpare it, and only demand the proof from the Scripture for this aſſertion, and when he gives it me, forfeit all my pretenſions to the underſtanding that ſacred book; but if he cannot produce any ſuch Scripture, then is my Cenſor the guilty perſon, the very dogmatizer, that teacheth for Doctrines or Commandments of God, his own Dictates, which I muſt ſuppoſe to be the traditions of a man, and the doing ſo, I cannot reſiſt to be a nimiety, but not of religion, that I yet diſcern. 17.

In like manner for ſet days to be conſecrated to the worſhip of God, for faſting or for prayer, I demand how many every week or every year hath the Rule of worſhip preſcribed? Or what rule of worſhip ſhall be appealed to? the Law of Moſes, or the Goſpel of Chriſt? His anſwer to this queſtion will involve him in intricacies enough: If the Law of Moſes be the rule, then he knows all the New Moons and feaſts of the Jews, and Sabbatick years and Jubilees muſt return upon him: If the Goſpel of Chriſt, which hath certainly aboliſht all theſe, and, as he ſuppoſeth, ſet up the Lords-day, inſtead of them all, then firſt, I demand in what words of the New Teſtament the weekly obſervation of this is commanded? and ſecondly in what words the obſerving all others but that, particularly the Feaſt of Eaſter, the annual commemorative of the Reſurrection, is interdicted, and whether the weekly remembrance of ſo great a mercy, being ſo acceptable to God, it be reaſonable to think the annual, abominable before him? And the ſame queſtion ſoon extends it ſelf to the day of Chriſts Incarnation, Paſſion, Aſcenſion, &c. and if of each of theſe he ſhall define and pronounce them unlawful, without teſtimony and verdict from the Rule of worſhip, the Scripture, then he is the Dogmatizer, that hath added to the Rule, more interdicts than are there to be met with, and ſo ſtill he is the man guilty of the nimiety. 18.

So again for geſtures in the worſhip of God, I demand, What is the geſture of prayer, preſcribed by the Rule? Is it ſtanding, ſitting, or kneeling, any, or all of theſe, or any fourth ſuperadded to theſe? If the Rule have preſcribed none, then according to his doctrine again, any of theſe muſt be criminous additions to the Rule, abominable, &c. If the rule have preſcribed ſome one, then all others, beſide that one, muſt fall under the ſame ſeverity, that that one had done, if it had not been preſcribed: and if all three are under ſeveral precepts, and ſo the whole Rule obeyed by retaining theſe three, then ſtill I ſhall mention a fourth, that of proſtration, whether with the old penitents, in the porch, or on the pavement, every man in his cloſet and receſs, and ſtill the queſtion returns, whether this be criminous, and by what part of the rule of worſhip it appears to be ſo? 19.

Necdum finitus the enumeration of the Diatribiſts inextricable difficulties is not yet at an end, but infinitely multipliable by every act of Religious Faſt, and of Almſgiving, the two other ſorts of Gods worſhip (as Aquinas (owned here by the Diatribiſt) hath defined from the ſixth of Matthew) the proportions or degrees of each of which, are yet no where defined in the Scripture. But I ſuppoſe it cannot now be neceſſary, that I farther confirm what is ſo evident already. 20.

Elſe I might yet farther proceed from the duties of the firſt to the ſecond Table, and demand whether any thing that is done (out of the ſervice of God) for which there is no command, be a criminous exceſs? Certainly the Analogy will hold, God having given the Rule for juſtice and charity, as well as worſhip; and then, whatſoever of any kind is not under precept, muſt by this argument be under interdict, and ſo there will be nothing left indifferent in the world: A concluſion that ſome men, which have held Mr. C. his hypotheſis, have rationally inlarged to, finding it neceſſary, and unavoidably deduced from thence: But I diſcern not yet, that Mr. C. hath thus improved his principle, though ſure whenſoever it is for his turn, it is thus improvable. 21.

But Mr. C. hath added three proofs to his affirmation, and how unreconcileable ſoever with common notions that is, yet thoſe muſt deſerve to be heeded; And his firſt proof is this, If a man or Church may add to the Rules of Religion, then he or they may be too Religious: But Ergo. 22.

Here it muſt be remembred, that the thing which he had propoſed to himſelf to prove, was this, that in uncommanded worſhip the leaſt addition to the rule of worſhip, is too much, and ſuch a man may be ſaid to be too religious: And this, ſaith he, I prove, firſt, If a man or Church may add to the rule of religion, &c. Of this firſt, I deſire to be told, whether it be not a meer idem per idem, a proving a thing by it ſelf, and whether that be not contrary to all rules of ſyllogizing, where the medium of probation is never to enter the concluſion, as here moſt evidently it doth. 23.

Having

24. Having ſaid this to the form, tis not needful that I ſay any thing to the matter of this proof, it being the very thing that I have ſpoken to, all this while, and by that diſtinction, of the ſorts, and circumſtances of worſhip, I have competently ſhewed, that it hath no force againſt me; that indeed he that introduces any new part of divine worſhip, is a preſumptuous aſſumer, doth more than he ſhould, becauſe that which he ſhould not do, and ſo that the Major is falſe, inſtead of clear; he that thus adds, and impoſeth on God and his word, is not hereby too religious, but too bold, and was never pleaded for in the leaſt, by my treatiſe of Superſtition.

25. The inconſequence of this Major will more appear, by conſidering the proof of the Aſſumption, which he annexes, The aſſumption, ſaith he, is proved by Deut. 4. 2. where all additions to the word are prohibited.

26. But I pray, doth he that proſtrates himſelf in prayer, add to the word of God? then ſure he that walks in the Garden, doth ſo too; much more, he that makes any ſuch deductions from Scripture, as this Diatribiſt here doth, (for not only the analogy enforceth this, but it is alſo to be remembred, that the laws which had here been given by Moſes, were all ſorts of duties of common life, towards our ſelves, and our brethren, as well as of worſhip toward God, and ſo this Text muſt exclude all other uncommanded actions, as well as worſhips) The words in Deuteronomy are theſe, Ye ſhall not add to the word that I command you, neither ſhall ye diminiſh from it, לשמר ad cuſtodiendum, and in the ſame ſenſe the Targum לְמֶעְבַּד to obſerve, or that ye may obſerve, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you. The meaning is moſt evident, that they were to perform uniform obedience to God, not to make any change in Gods commands, either to pretend more liberties, or fewer obligations, or again more obligations and fewer liberties, to be delivered them by God, than thoſe which he had then delivered by Moſes, but to ſet themſelves humbly to the performance of his precepts, and accordingly the Septuagint renders לשמר to keep] φυλάσσεσθε ye ſhall keep, the Latine, cuſtodite keep, and the Syriack, ſed obſervate, but keep the commandments by that oppoſition ſhewing that to be the meaning of not adding or diminiſhing, viz. paying an obedience to Gods commands. And the ſame ſenſe in the like words we have again Apoc. 22. 18, 19. to ſhut up the great prophecy in the New Teſtament; And then, I pray, is he that offends againſt either of theſe two Texts, too Religious? Is it not more true on the contrary, that he is a falſe Prophet, and a ſacrilegious perſon, that pretends the word of the Lord for that which God hath not ſpoken to him? But this crime I hope every man is not guilty of that bows or kneels or proſtrates himſelf in prayer, by ſuch outward geſtures both ſignifying, and inflaming the inward fervor of the heart, but not inſerting any precept of doing thus, either into the Book of Deuteronomy or the Apocalypſe. And this may ſuffice for his firſt proof.

27. His ſecond proof is from the ſaying of the great School-man, that Religion is a moral virtue, (or very like it) and ſtands between two extremes, Ergo, a man may be too much religious, as well as too little.

28. Firſt, I anſwer to the antecedent, that if it be remembred what the two extremes are, between which religion, in Aquinas, ſtands, the conſequent will never be inferred from it. The extremes are on one ſide Superſtition, on the other irreligion; ſuperſtition is again, ſaith he, of two ſorts, either Firſt, the worſhipping of a creature (of falſe Gods, or more Gods than one, as in Tertullian adv. Marc. l. 1. c. 5. ſpeaking of the worſhipping of two Gods, Vererer, ſaith he, ne abundantia officii ſuperſtitio potiùs quàm religio crederetur, I ſhould fear ſuch abundance of officiouſneſs would be rather believed ſuperſtition than religion; and S. Auguſtine, and out of him * Aquinas, tangis primam chordam qua colitur unus Deus, & cecidit beſtia ſuperſtitionis, The beaſt of ſuperſtition is deſtroyed by the firſt ſtring of the Decachord, the firſt commandment of the Decalogue, preſcribing the worſhip of one God.) or Secondly, cum Deo illegitimus cultus tribuitur, giving undue worſhip to God; and neither of theſe notions of ſuperſtition will be at all uſeful to the Diatribiſt to prove his concluſion.

* Secunda ſecundæ qu. 92. art. 1.

29. If from the former of theſe, he ſhould conclude that a man may be too religious, tis plain that this muſt be his meaning, that a man may be a Polytheiſt, a worſhipper of falſe Gods, but I hope, in this ſenſe, he that obſerves the ceremonies of the Church of England, he that commemorates the birth of Chriſt on the twenty fifth of December, will not be ſaid to be too Religious.

30. As for the Second, that of cultus illegitimus, or indebitus, undue worſhip of the true God (which alone can poſſibly be deemed for the Diatribiſt's purpoſe) my anſwer ſhall be more particular, by viewing and weighing the words in Aquinas which are here referred to: though the place be not ſet down by the Diatribiſt, I ſuppoſe it muſt be ſecunda ſecundæ either quæſt. 81. Art. 1. or elſe qu. 92. Art. 1. in concluſ. which indeed hath theſe words, Religio eſt virtus moralis, omnis autem virtus moralis in medio conſiſtit, Religion is a moral virtue, and every moral virtue conſiſts in the middle, citing it (with a ſicut ſuprà dictum eſt) from the former place qu. 81. Art. 5. Now the ſumm of that Article is this, that

* Reſp. ad 3. * Religion is neither a Theological nor an Intellectual, but a moral virtue, as being a branch of juſtice, in giving to God that which belongs to him, and that the due medium, wherein this, as all moral virtue conſiſts, is to be taken, not as the middle point between two paſſions, the * medium rei (as ordinarily moral virtue is the moderating of paſſions, reducing them to a mediocrity, or temper, or equilibration betwixt the exceſs and defect) but according to ſome equality, in reſpect of God, * medium rationis, interpreting what he means by that, viz. equality, not abſolutely, becauſe we cannot give God ſo much as belongs to him, but ſecundum quandam conſiderationem humanæ facultatis & divinæ acceptationis, by conſidering what man is able to do, and what God will accept; As for ſuperfluity in ſuch things as theſe, which belong to the worſhip of God, there can be none, ſaith he, ſecundum circumſtantiam quanti, as to the circumſtance of quantity, I cannot do too much in the worſhip of God, I cannot offend that way but, as * elſewhere he ſaith of this, and the like, tanto eſt melius, quanto magis acceditur ad ſummum, it is ſo much the better, by how much it comes nearer the higheſt. All the ſuperfluity poſſible is as to the other circumſtances, and he names but three, Firſt, cui non debet, by exhibiting divine worſhip to him to whom it ought not to be exhibited, Secondly, quando non debet, by giving it at a time when it ought not, (when having formerly been acceptable to God, tis now outdated) Thirdly in reſpect of other circumſtances, prout non debet, in a manner wherein it ought not.

* Vid. 1. 2. q. 64. Art. 2.

* 1. 2. q. 64. Art. 4. in corp.

31. By this it appears already, how incompetent this teſtimony from Aquinas, is, to prove the concluſion propoſed by the Diatribiſt, that every thing in the worſhip of God which is not commanded by God, is too much. For ſure every thing that is not commanded, is not preſently forbidden, nor conſequently offends againſt the prout debet, as it ought, the due manner, time, or other circumſtances of it. If there be any difficulty in that phraſe [prout debet, as it ought] and it be conceived to ſignifie ſo as is particularly commanded by God, and è contra, that what ever is done, being not particularly commanded by God, is prout non debet, as it ought not, this is certainly a miſtake, and very diſtant from Aquinas's ſenſe, who means by cultus debitus, due worſhip, any acts of worſhip, * qui ad Dei reverentiam fiunt, which are done to the honour of God, without conſidering whether they be under precept or not, and conſequently with him cultus indebitus, undue worſhip, is ſuch as is done to the diſhonour, at leaſt not to the honour of God, as when of Idolatry he ſaith, that it † exhibits divine reverence, indebitè, unduly to the creature.

offends

In full accord with this it is, that in that other text qu. 92. art. 1. Superſtition is by him defined to be a vice oppoſed to religion in the exceſs, whereby a man gives worſhip to him to whom he ought not, or not in a manner that he ought, meaning as he explains himſelf, not that of quantity, but in reſpect of other circumſtances, when either it is faſtned on a wrong object, divine worſhip to that which is not God, (which ſure is againſt, not only without the command of God) or done in a wrong manner, i. e. when any thing is done in the divine worſhip, * quod fieri non debet, which ought not to be done, and he † inſtances, ſi quis temporibus gratiæ vellet colere Deum ſecundum veteris legis ritum, If any man under Chriſtianity would worſhip God after the rites of the old law, which ſure are not only not commanded but forbidden under Chriſt, and ſo are a proper inſtance of the quando non debet, the undue circumſtance of time, mentioned particularly in the former place, and convinces that which I aſſigned, to be the meaning of it. I need add no more in this place concerning the teſtimony of Aquinas. Other mentions of his opinion in this matter, will hereafter occur, and then I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak more to them. 32.

* In reſp. ad tertium.
† Art. 2. in reſp. ad tertium.

His third proof is from the Doctors own conceſſion, who, ſaith he, grants there may be a nimiety or exceſs of religion, and adds words in ſuch a ſtyle as are abſolutely nonſenſe, even when the [not] (which I ſuppoſe the inſertion of the Printer) is blotted out, thus, there may be a nimiety in adding, and ſo is an exceeder in the fear and ſervice of God. 33.

But to paſs by that, I anſwer, firſt that the Doctor no where uſeth that phraſe, a nimiety or exceſs of religion, the words [of religion] are inſerted by the citer, and honeſtly put in different letters, to note them to be his own. 34.

The matter is plain, I there ſpeak of an exceſs of fear, but not of religion (ſee the beginning of §. 46. of the Tr. of ſuperſtit.) and though I after ſay, that he that thinks himſelf bound or obliges others, as from God, when God neither commands nor forbids, and ſo adds to the commands of God, and fears where there is no reaſon to fear, is an exceeder in the fear and ſervice of God; yet neither is that, exceſs of religion, nor indeed exceſs of fear or of ſervice of God, but the meaning is apparently this, that in fearing God, and ſerving God, he is guilty of ſome other exceſs, not an exceſs of fear of God, but fearing ſomewhat elſe, which he phanſies to come from God, when it doth not, this fear of that ſomething elſe, is an exceſſive fear, more than religion ſuggeſts to him, and yet the unhappineſs of it is, this interpoſeth it ſelf in religion. 35.

This will be more evident by an example; ſuppoſe a man to phanſie that by Gods law he ought to kill his Father, and fears Gods wrath if he doth not, this mans fear is exceſſive, but his religion is not; he is an exceeder in the ſervice of God, if he do that in Gods ſervice, which is no part of it, but quite contrary to it, but doth not mean-while ſerve God too much, but too little, doth not exceed but fall ſhort, and ſo is far from being too religious.

There was certainly great need of Arguments, when this was thought fit to be produced to me, who ſure knew my own meaning when I thus ſpake, and was likely enough to be able to give this account of it. As it is, I have done with his firſt diſcovery of cauſes of my miſcarriages, and ſhall now haſten to the ſecond.

SECT. IV.

Exceſs of Religion. Super ſtatutum. Addition to the Rule. Doctrines. Δεισιδαιμονία, Act. 17. 22. Act. 25. 29. Six conceſſions. Superſtitioſus. Worſhipping of Angels. Superſtitum cultus. Slaviſh fear. Religion in Epicurus. Fear of puniſhment in ſons; in wicked men. The neceſſity thereof. Dogmatizing. Placing more virtue in things than belongs to them.

THE ſecond cauſe of the Doctors miſcarriages, ſaith he, is his miſpriſion, That exceſs in Religion is not well called Superſtition, or that Superſtition is not exceſs of Religion, Sect. 27. &c. Numb 1.

To this I anſwer, Firſt, That my memory not ſuggeſting unto me, that I was at all guilty of this miſpriſion, thus unlimitedly charged on me, I therefore read over that 27. and the two following Sections, to diſcern what it was that had given him occaſion to affirm this, and there I find no ſuch thing. The ſubject of Section 27. being the improperneſs of their expreſſions, who reſolve Superſtition, ſimply and abſtractly taken, in all Authors, to ſignifie evil; of Sect. 28. a ſecond inconſequence, that the uſe of Ceremonies not preſcribed by Chriſt, ſhould firſt be called Superſtition, then condemned for deſerving that title; of the 29. a third inconſequent, that men ſhould abſtain from ſome indifferent Ceremonies, as Superſtitious, and not expect to be counted ſuperſtitious for obliging themſelves to do the contrary. But ſure none of theſe, nor all together, do at all yield any ground for that concluſion, which he hath here miſreported from them, and that one would think, were a competent anſwer to this ſecond diſcovery of cauſes. 2.

But then ſecondly, till the ἀμφίβολον be explained, and agreed on, what is meant by exceſs of religion, 'tis not poſſible for me to affirm or deny, to acknowledge or diſclaim univerſally, what I am ſaid to affirm. To deal plainly then, and without all ambiguity, If by exceſs of Religion he underſtand the doing of any thing in the worſhip of God, which Gods word doth not command (which is the only thing which is of controverſie betwixt us, as hath already been manifeſted) then I ſtick not to deny that this is Superſtition, or that ſuperſtition in any authentick notion, or in the origination of the word whether 3.

Greek or Latine, doth import or comprehend this; and if he ſhall flie to any other ſort of exceſs, and contend that to be it, of which he ſpeaks, this will be then the fallacy or lying hid in ambiguities, which I took care to deprive him of in the laſt Section.

4. Fourthly, But he expreſſes ſufficiently what exceſs in religion he means, by the proof which he firſt offers to confirm his affirmative. For, for this he brings three proofs, and the firſt is this, becauſe it is an addition to the rule of worſhip, and ſo an exceſs, as ſuper ſtatutum.

5. Fifthly, Here though it be very hard to reduce this to any formal or legal proof of the propoſition for which it was deſigned (and beſides, it muſt be obſerved, in paſſing, that the medium here uſed, is no fitter for the proving of this, than of the laſt propoſition; for it is the ſame to both, and ſo indeed it is equally proper for both, or for what elſe he pleaſe) yet thus much is clear from it, that by exceſs in Religion, he means addition to the Rule, and that we formerly diſcern'd to ſignifie with him the doing any thing uncommanded in the ſervice of God, and to that we have replyed abundantly in the laſt Section.

6. But he adds for the confirmation of his proof, one thing not ſaid before, that all ſuch addition to the Rule muſt be ſuperſtition forſooth, becauſe it is ſuper ſtatutum, above what is commanded, ſuppoſing, it ſeems, that that is the notation of the word ſuperſtition. And then I deſire the Diatribiſt's leave, that it may for once be my turn to make diſcoveries of cauſes, to propoſe to him, at leaſt for conſideration, whether this may not be his πρῶτον ψεῦδος fundamental procreative miſtake, the having inconſiderately in his youth ſwallowed this etymologie of the word ſuperſtition (I am unwilling to phanſie the Diatribiſt to be the inventer of it) as if it were ſo calledfrom ſupra ſtatutum, above what is commanded.

7. If this be not a right conjecture, I ſhall profeſs to be at an end of my ſearch of cauſes; But if it be, I deſire him to allow me the favour once to diſabuſe him, by exacting this juſtice from him to himſelf, to conſider whether any Laws of derivation, compoſition, or analogie can permit him ſeriouſly to believe that [ſtatutum] is ingredient in compounding Superſtition, or that it can be by any Rules deduced from any word in the Latine tongue, but ſuperſtes, ſuperſtitis, and the rather becauſe δεισιδαιμονία, which is reſolved to be the parallel Greek to the Latine ſuperſtition, and is viſibly ſo, if it be allowed to be deduced from ſuperſtitum cultus, hath nothing to do with ſuper ſtatutum, but is in plain words a worſhipping of Demons.

8. Of this ſure I have ſaid enough in the Treatiſe of Superſtition, to ſatisfie any Scholar, that knows in the leaſt, what belongs to the uſe or the nature of words, and ſo much, it ſeems, that Mr. C. confeſſes that the original of the word was Heatheniſh, to ſignifie ſuperſtitum cultus, and only adds (δικαίαν ὑποθέσιν, in civility or fidelity to his cauſe) that though this be true, 'tis well applied by Divines to thoſe additions made to the Rule of worſhip. But I pray, what is this but to grant the premiſes, and deny the concluſion? 'Tis certain, and by him acknowledged, that the original of the word is another thing, not ſuper ſtatutum; what then can he tolerably mean by ['tis well applied by Divines]? can Divines do well to apply ſuperſtitio to ſuper ſtatutum, when that is no way the nature of the word? Or can any proof be brought from hence, to conclude ſuperſtition an exceſs, or addition to the rule, becauſe it is ſuper ſtatutum, when there is no affinity between ſuper ſtatutum and ſuperſtition? what is or can be unreaſonable, if this be not?

9. And ſo it appears, how little truth there is in that which ſhuts up this firſt reaſon [That which the Old Teſtament calls addition to the word, the New calls doctrines, traditions of men, will-worſhip, ſuperſtition.] In which few words as there be many infirm parts, Firſt, That additions to the word are in the N. T. called Doctrines (I ſuppoſe he means, teaching ſomewhat elſe for doctrines, Mat. 15. 9. aſſuming them to be ſuch when they are not: So again, Mar. 7. 7. where yet the word Doctrines ſignifies the Scripture or Doctrine of God, and ſo the teaching their own traditions for doctrines, is adding them to the Scripture, Doctrines there ſimply ſignifying not that addition, but that to which the addition is made) and ſecondly, that they are called will-worſhip (the contrary of which is proved in the Treatiſe of will-worſhip, and here to ſuppoſe it, is a begging of the queſtion) ſo ſure this is a third, that additions to the rule of worſhip, are any where in the New Teſtament called ſuperſtition; I deſire he will ſhew me one ſuch place, for my Concordance will not afford it me.

10. 'Tis but a δὶς λεγόμενον, only twice there uſed: Firſt, Act. 17. 22. by St. Paul of the Athenians, whom he perceived to be δεισιδαιμονεστέρους, more ſuperſtitious than others: But theſe ſure never medled with, and ſo added not to the true rule of worſhip, any otherwiſe than as all that abandon it, add to it, live by ſome other falſe rule, and mind not that; and if they are, for ſo doing, to be ſtyled adders to the rule of Worſhip, adulterers are ſo in like manner, and ſo by that meaſure or ſtandard, every ſin in the world is ſuperſtition.

11. Secondly, The word is uſed, Act. 25. 29. where Feſtus ſpeaks of Pauls ἰδία δεισιδαιμονία, own ſuperſtition, but ſure meant not to accuſe him of adding to his or the Jews rule of worſhip, but underſtood his own Religion, and nothing elſe by that phraſe. And ſo ſtill μηδὲν ὑγιές, here are as many miſadventures amaſt together, as could well be crowded into ſo few words.

12. His ſecond proof now follows, thus, Becauſe as the defect in Religion is called profaneneſs, ſo the exceſs is called ſuperſtition, as ſtanding in oppoſition to it. Alas, it ſeems there is great need of proofs, for this again, as the former, was the very medium to prove the firſt propoſition, and ſo either the firſt, and this ſecond propoſition of his are all one (and then why was it cut in two, by Lucians beetle?) or elſe theſe proofs are very excellent inſtruments, fitted for all turns indifferently. However it is, I ſhall not need provide new anſwers to it, but remand it to the former Section, where it was conſidered to the utmoſt it could pretend: Only if he pleaſe, I ſhall put it in form for him, thus, The worſhip of the many falſe Gods or Demons, is an exceſs oppoſed to Religion, or worſhip of the one true God of heaven and earth, in Aquinas's opinion, and ſo alſo is the worſhipping the true God after an undue or unlawful manner, ergo, the uſing any Ceremony (in the worſhip of the true God) which the Scripture hath not commanded, is ſuperſtition, and ſuperſtition is that: As if he ſhould ſay, ſuperſtition is that, becauſe it is ſomewhat elſe, as extreamly diſtant from that, as that which is not God is from God, or as unlawful (for ſo is ſuperſtition) is from lawful, for ſuch is that which is not prohibited.

13. A third proof he now adds of his affirmation, and that after the manner obſerved in his former argument,

argument, from the Doctors own conceſſions, and no leſs than five, nay the fourth number being twice repeated, no leſs than ſix of them: And if I have ſo liberally granted it, I wonder how it came to be my charge, and that as the cauſe of my miſcarriages, that I denyed it.

But 'tis ſtrange to ſee what ἀμελία ἀνθολκῆς can do, phanſy firſt, and next accuſe me of denying 14.
a thing groſſo modo, and to prove me to have erred in this denying, produce ſix ſeveral ſenſes, wherein I have granted it, whereas there is in the whole inditement but one pretended, wherein I had denied it. In all reaſon thoſe ſix conceſſions might have reconciled the Diatribiſt to me, and perſwaded him that I was of his mind, rather than one ſingle appearance of diſſenting have thus provoked him.

The Doctors Conceſſions, ſuch as they are, are evidently reconcileable with all that he hath propoſed, 15.
in that Tract of Superſtition, and the deſcending to a particular view of them, as they are marſhalled up by the Diatribiſt, will take away all doubt in this matter.

Firſt, ſaith he, he grants that ſuperſtitious may denote ſuch an exceſs, Sect 31. Here I demand what Mr. C. 16.
means by ſuch an exceſs? that indeed is thus far anſwered already, that he means an exceſs of Religion:
But what exceſs in Religion? The ſuperſtatutum, every addition to the rule of worſhip, i. e. every uncommanded circumſtance, or Ceremony in the worſhip of God? Thus he muſt mean, if he be conſtant to himſelf, and if the Doctors Conceſſions yield him any appearance of proof for his affirmative. But to ſee the luck of it, this firſt citation from the Doctor is ſo far from yielding him any ſuch teſtimony, that it is indeed the quite contrary; for that which the Doctor there obſerves Sect. 31. is this, that the word ſuper-ſtitioſus may indeed denote ſuch exceſs, from the force of the termination oſus, but this no more than the word religioſus alſo denotes, in the opinion of Agellius out of Nigidius Figulus, and conſequently, that Firſt Superſtitio and Religio were all one, in that ſame Author's opinion: and Secondly, that it is the ani-madverſion of Agellius upon that Author, that all ſuch exceſſes are not culpable, or taken in ill, but good ſenſes. And then, was not this a dangerous conceſſion, fit to be called out, in judgment againſt me, than which nothing could be more direct to the aſſerting mine, and refuting the Diatribiſts hypotheſis?

If this account of the word ſuperſtitioſus were not ſufficient, to ſecure my pretenſions, which in that 17.
place were only this, that ſuperſtition among all Authors ſignified not any criminous exceſs. I might farther add, that even when the word ſuperſtitioſus is but a bare denominative from ſuperſtitio, and yet is uſed in an ill ſenſe, as when we Chriſtians ſay a ſuperſtitious perſon, the account is clear, that ſuperſtition there ſignifies Heathen-worſhip, or ſomewhat proportionable to it, * worſhipping of others beſide the one true God; and by analogy with that notion of the ſubſtantive, the adjective fitly denotes him that acts like one of thoſe falſe worſhipers, or agrees with them in ſome eminent thing, which is a branch of their falſe worſhip, as he that makes obſervations of dreams, and ominous days, or occurrences, is ſaid commonly to be ſuperſtitious herein, i. e. to imitate the Auguries of the Heathen, and many the like.

* Superſtitioſum eſt quicquid ab hominibus inſtitutum eſt ad facienda & colenda idola pertinens. Aug. de doctr. Chriſt. l. 2. c. 20.

The Second Conceſſion, that the worſhip of Angels is an exceſs or addition to the object of worſhip, and 18.
by him ſtyled that crime of ſuperſtition] a man would wonder to ſee produced by the Diatribiſt againſt me. Tis certain I make the worſhip of Angels ſuperſtition, worſhipping thoſe fellow creatures, which a Chriſtian ought not to worſhip; But is this an exceſs of religion, or not rather of impiety? worſhipping of the creature παρὰ τὸν κτίσαντα beſides or over and above the Creator. Tis true, this is an addition to the object of worſhip, as death is an addition to life, i. e. deſtructive to the oneneſs of that, which ought alone to be worſhipt, and admits no rival (ye cannot ſerve God and Mammon, nor worſhip the one God, if ye impart and laviſh out that incommunicable priviledge to any other) and ſo adultery is an addition to the object of marital love and fidelity: But then what is this to the prejudice of uncommanded ceremonies? the uſing of which ſuper ſtatutum, the Diatribiſt is to demonſtrate to be ſuperſtition, for about that only, he knows, the controverſy is betwixt us.

The Third Conceſſion is juſt parallel to this, and in part the ſame, ſuperſtitum cultus, ſaith he, the 19.
worſhip of the Worthies by heathens, or of Saints and Angels by Papiſts, is called ſuperſtition Sect. 3. moſt properly, why? but that it adds to the rule of worſhip.] I muſt not repeat what was ſo lately ſaid, though the Diatribiſt will. Tis evident I affirm all theſe to be ſuperſtition, but the uſing of an uncommanded rite is none of theſe; what heathen worthy, Saint, or Angel, is worſhipped or idolized by my proſtra-ting my ſelf in the worſhip of the true God, by my bowing at the name of Jeſus, &c. As for the reaſon why the worſhip of heathen Worthies and Saints, and Angels by analogy, is called ſuperſtition, it is ſtrange again what care of intereſt can do. The reaſon, one would think, was viſible enough to the Diatribiſt, in the very naming of ſuperſtitum cultus, theſe Worthies and Saints are ſuperſtites, ſup-poſed to live after death (ſure that is the notion of ſuperſtes) and ſo the worſhipping of ſuch is ſuperſti-tion, and as the Angels, ſo the ſouls of the Worthies that thus ſurvive the bodies and in the heathens theology are removed εἰς μακάρων νήσους, to the fortunate Iſlands, in the Chriſtians, to heaven or paradiſe, or Abrahams Boſom) are ſolemnly ſtyled δαίμονες, and ſo the worſhipping of them is δεισιδαιμονία, and that is ſuperſtition. Is not this reaſon enough for the juſtifying the propriety of the uſe of a word, that it perfectly accords with the origination of it both in Greek and Latine? and then what need of his capriccio, [why? but that it adds to the rule of worſhip] Certainly ſo doth ſacriledge (even when it robs God) add to the rule of worſhip, in this ſenſe, doing ſomething which the rule commands not, no nor permits, and yet that is not ſuperſtition.

The Fourth Conceſſion produced is yet more ſtrange. A ſlaviſh fear, ſaith he, of God, is granted to 20.
be ſuperſtition, becauſe fear of God being worſhip commanded in the firſt Commandment, ſlaviſh fear is an exceſs of that] and he hath adventured to cite the ſections, wherein tis granted by me, §. 24. 25. of the Treatiſe of ſuperſtition. Herein the Reader will eaſily ſatisfy himſelf by his own eyes; In a word, thoſe Sections ſay no ſyllable of ſlaviſh fear, or any ſuch matter (and yet the Printer hath not miſtaken his figures) all that they ſay, is this, that ſuperſtitio ſometimes ſignifies in authors any part of Divine worſhip, which in obedience to his God, or for fear of vengeance from him, any worſhipper doth perform, a thing which every ſect likes in themſelves, but diſlikes in others of a diſtant worſhip, and ſo either honours or defames with the title as of ſuperſtition, ſo of Religion alſo. Then, that it alſo ſignifies a trembling fear of Gods puniſhments due for ſin, ſuch as the Epicureans, that denied all providence, were willing to ſcoff out of the world. And of this notion of ſuperſtition, and equally of religion among the Epicureans, and Cicero that took it from them, I had ſpoken there at large, from §. 14. to §. 20.
to which I muſt remit the Reader, and only add what there I omitted, that all that is there obſerved would probably receive much light, if we could retrieve one book of Plutarch, which is loſt, and in ſtead of which I can now only give him the title of it, περὶ δεισιδαιμονίας πρὸς Ἐπίκουρον of ſuperſtition to Epicurus, differing (it ſeems, both by the addition of πρὸς Ἐπίκουρον, and conſequently in the ſubject of it) from that which is now extant of Plutarchs περὶ δεισιδαιμονίας, which hath no conſiderable aſpect on Epicurus, or his followers and Philoſophy, either to defend or accuſe it. Of this ſee the learned Gaſſend in his life of Epicurus.

21. But to return, what pretence can there be thus to change my words in an unprofitable citation (when if it had been ſlaviſh fear in his notion of it, of which I ſpake, yet that had been far enough from the uſing of uncommanded ceremonies or inſtituting of Feſtivals) and in ſtead of [that divine worſhip which any performs in obedience to his God, or for fear of puniſhment from him, and which Epicurus deſired to ſcoff out of the world] to ſubſtitute ſlaviſh fear of God, or an exceſs of that fear of God which is preſcribed as worſhip in the firſt commandment ?] Can it enter into any Chriſtians heart to think or ſay, that Epicurus was in the right in that part of his Theology, and conſequently that it was an exceſs of fear which Epicurus deſired to exterminate? This is to ſay, that all religion, belief of hell, infinite puniſhments apportioned to ſinners in another world, are exceſs of fear, and (under the title of ſlaviſh) criminous, and to be caſt out. This certainly was Epicurus's meaning, and the verſes in Lucretius demonſtrate it, where he thus argues,

> — Nam ſi nullum finem eſſe putarent
> Ærumnarum homines, nullâ ratione valerent
> Religionibus atq; minis obſiſtere vatum.

If men ſhould believe endleſs puniſhments, they could never reſiſt the religions, and threatnings of the Prieſts.

* Quid enim intereſt utrum Deos neges an infames? † Superſtitio error inſanus, amandos timet, quos colit violat. Seneca Epiſtol. 124.

And who would have expected the Diatribiſt a favourer of this ſect, as he muſt be, if this fear of God, which Epicurus called Religion or Superſtition, be by him lookt on as an exceſs of that worſhip of the firſt commandment ? for that was Epicurus's very notion of it, placing his own opinion in the midſt; and as on one ſide, downright Atheiſm, denying any God at all, ſo on the other, belief of a providence, of rewards and puniſhments; which as the mother of fear or perturbation, and interrupter of the γαλήνη τοῦ βίου quiet of life (his great aim) and very * injurious to the Gods, he rejected as another extream, under the title of † Superſtition. But of this ſure I have ſpoken abundantly, and did not foreſee that Mr. C. was to be admoniſht of this worſt principle in all Epicurus his philoſophie.

22. Yet becauſe he is fallen into it, under colour of the ordinary divinity concerning ſlaviſh fear, and becauſe mention of this ſlaviſh fear as of a criminous exceſs, and a branch of ſuperſtition recurs very frequently in theſe Diatribæ, I ſhall not reſiſt the invitation of ſaying ſomewhat in this place, once for all, of ſlaviſh fear : By that I ſuppoſe he underſtands fear of puniſhment, as by filial fear, a reverential obedience, proceeding wholly from love, without any thing of fear in it. Concerning this diſtinction I ſhall firſt demand, whether it have any thing of propriety in it, i. e. whether ſons may not lawfully and reaſonably fear puniſhment from their parents, in caſe they ſhall deſerve it, even the greateſt puniſhment, exheredation, and caſting out of the family, upon their continuing diſobedient and refractary to their fathers commands, and whether this very fear be not ſo uſeful to reſtrain the exceſſes of youth, and keep them within that obedience, that no parent will ever think fit that the child ſhall know or think that his diſobedience, whatſoever the degree of it may be, ſhall not be thus puniſht, and laſtly, whether it be not duty in the child thus to fear, and proportionably whether this be not applicable to every child of God, eſpecially being exhorted to it, Heb. 4. 1. Let us fear, leſt a promiſe being made of entring into his reſt, any of you ſhould ſeem to come ſhort of it (adding thereto Heb. 12. 28, 29.) and this diſtinction being founded in the likeneſs between a child of God, and a child of an human parent : If this be ſo, then there can be no fitneſs or propriety in the diſtinction thus explicated, nor can the fear of puniſhment be diſcriminatively called ſlaviſh, nor with juſtice defined an exceſs of fear.

23. Secondly, The ſlaviſh fear I ſhall ſuppoſe in the Diatribiſts notion to be ſuch as is in a wicked man, and then it muſt be either the fear of divine vengeance for ſin committed formerly, or for ſin at the time of committing it, or for ſin before he commit it; and I demand how any of theſe three fears can by a Chriſtian duly be called an exceſs, or with any propriety ſuperſtition ? For ought not the wicked man to fear puniſhment for his ſins paſt, when God affirms ſolemnly there is no peace, no peace to ſuch? be not the judgments of God gone out againſt that man, and if that Lyon roar, ſhall not he fear, if vengeance be denounced from God againſt him, is it a ſeaſon for him to caſt off fear ? or if he doth, is not this carnal ſecurity ? and is not the contrary apprehenſion (i. e. fear) neceſſary to reduce him? in a word, are not the terrors of the Goſpel part of the Goſpel, and on purpoſe deſigned to bring ſuch a man to repentance, and can he be ſaid to believe the Goſpel, which believes not that part of it, or will they be motives of Reformation to him, if he do not apply them to himſelf, in reſpect of his preſent ſtate? and can he ſo apply them, who doth not fear the execution of them ?

24. So at the very point of committing any wilful ſin, ought he not to look upon it, as that againſt which the wrath of God is denounced, and can he do ſo, and believe God, and not fear that wrath may fall on him, and that as long as he remains under the power of ſuch ſin, he remains under the wrath of God ? Are all the evil abodes of an accuſing conſcience in a vitious perſon, exceſs ? nay is not the contrary the higheſt pitch both of preſumption and danger, the very root bearing gall and wormwood, to bleſs himſelf in his heart, ſaying, I ſhall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of my heart, Deut. 29. 19.

25. Laſtly, Before the commiſſion of ſin, when he enters into temptation, is not the fear of hell an uſeful reſtraint to him, is it not both his duty and his bridle, is there, or can there be any exceſs in that? ſhould he fear, or ſhould he not fear ? If he ſhould not, then what can keep him from running into all exceſs of riot ? ſhall love of God, or virtue ? but the wicked man, as wicked, is ſuppoſed to have none of that in his heart: But if he ſhould, if it be his duty to fear, and to fear hell, in caſe he ſhall thus go on, then ſtill how can it be an exceſs ?

26. The conſideration of theſe few things may perhaps give the Diatribiſt reaſon to change his mind concerning concerning ſlaviſh fear, and no longer to think it an exceſs of Religion, nor, as ſuch, capable of the title of Superſtition.

The truth is, what is amiſs in ſuch fear, is a defect, not exceſs, a want of love, not any unproportionable meaſure of fear; God is made up of goodneſs, as well as juſtice, and the Goſpel compounded of promiſes as well as threats, and the love of Chriſt ought to conſtrain us, as well as the terrors of the Lord to perſwade; and he that hath a quick ſenſe of one, and none of the other, he is not an exceeder in fear, but deficient in love; and ſo ſtill the mention of ſlaviſh fear in this place, and frequently in the firſt exercitation, is very unapplicable to the purpoſe, for which it is brought, as an inſtance of an exceſs of religion, or ſuperſtition. 27.

Some little thing more I ſhall perhaps be forced to ſay to it hereafter, but this ſhall not be repeated, and ſo muſt be remembred from hence. 28.

The fourth Conceſſion of the Doctors is obſerved to be this, that to affirm God to command, when he doth not, is granted to be ſuperſtition, under the notion of nimiety or exceſs, becauſe that man adds to the commands of Chriſt, §. 46.] To this I anſwer, that for them who are reſolved to have ſuperſtition taken in the ſenſe of nimiety, and in that ſenſe to be oppoſed to religion, as an extream to the mediocrity, I did aſſign this of impoſing commandments on God (and ſo obligations on our ſelves, and others) which he never gave, as an exceſs of fear, a being afraid of God, when we need not, and ſo proportionable to one notion of δεισιδαιμονία, ariſing from the conſideration of the word δείδω (which may ſignifie perhaps a trembling, and ſo cowardly fear, δειλία) in that compoſition; And if hereby I have gratified the Diatribiſt, and yielded the Dogmatizer a Superſtitious perſon, I wonder why this might not have been taken notice of in my behalf, and ſo ſaved him the pains of affixing this poſition on me, that exceſs in religion is not well called Superſtition, which 'tis viſible, and by himſelf now confeſt, that in this ſenſe, I affirm it to be; ſee that 46. §. of Superſtition. 29.

Mean-while the Doctors hypotheſis is ſtill ſecure; for this no way belongs to the bare uſing in the private man, or the Magiſtrates preſcribing Ceremonies in the worſhip of God, neither of them doing it upon pretence of Divine precept. 30.

The very ſame reply belongs exactly to my laſt conceſſion, vouched by him, that to place more virtue in things, than God or nature hath put in them, is granted to be an exceſs, becauſe it adds to the promiſes of Chriſt, and called Superſtition by me, §. 45.] For this is another particular, which I allow to be an exceſs, and, when it is not meer folly, fit to be comprehended under the ſtyle of Superſtition, for this farther reaſon beſides thoſe which I there mentioned, becauſe ſuch beliefs as theſe, are moſtly borrowed from the heathen δεισιδαίμονες, and are remainders of their practices, as S^t Auguſtine Ep. 73. ſpeaks of the ligatures, Execranda ſuperſtitio ligaturarum, in quibus inaures, &c. non ad placendum hominibus, ſed ad ſerviendum dæmonibus adhibentur, the accurſed ſuperſtition of ligatures, among which are the ear-rings, &c. uſed not for the pleaſing of men, but to ſerve devils. This teſtimony the Reader may ſubjoin, if he pleaſe, to the Supellex already prepared for him in this kind §. 26. of Superſt. and diſcern how far I have been from denying, what I am accuſed here to deny, and yet as far from yielding him any foundation of concluding, that the Ceremonies or Feſtivals of our Church are in the leaſt degree guilty of Superſtition. 31.

And ſo much for his ſecond diſcovery of cauſes of my (phanſied, not real) miſtakes. 32.

SECT. V.

The innocence of Will-worſhip. Analogie with voluntary oblations under the law. Seeming Contradiction. The authority of Chryſoſtom and Theophylact. The ſecond Commandment. Reducing all ſins to the Decalogue. Addition to the rule, Worſhip of Angels. Other ſins beſide that of Dogmatizing.

THE third part of his diſcovery of cauſes belongs peculiarly to that of Will-worſhip, thus; Numb. 1.

The third, ſaith he, is, that ἐθελοθρησκία or Will-worſhip, is nothing but voluntary worſhip, as innocent as the freewill offerings, &c.] which propoſition of mine I muſt ſuppoſe made up of theſe two parts, firſt, that Will-worſhip is nothing elſe but voluntary worſhip; ſecondly that being ſo, 'tis innocent, and as innocent as freewill offerings: And in which part of theſe, one or both, the miſtake lyes, I am not told, but both together indiſtinctly are propoſed, as my third fundamental miſcarriage. 2.

And then, as to the firſt, I cannot begin without ſome remark, that it ſhould be poſſible to be lookt upon by this Diatribiſt, as a paradox, or miſtake, or miſcarriage in any man, and ſuch as is meet to be noted, as the moſt fruitful mother of many more, that ἐθελοθρησκία or Will-worſhip ſhould be affirmed to be nothing elſe but voluntary worſhip. Where I have no farther appeal to make, than either to the ears of all men of common underſtanding, or to the Gloſſaries and Interpreters of words. For is there any the niceſt difference imaginable betwixt Will-worſhip and voluntary worſhip, ſave that in the latter [voluntary] is of a latter origination, from voluntas, voluntarius; but [will] though perhaps from the Latin originally, is yet more antiently infranchiſed among us of England? I ſhall make ſhort work of this, if it be taken for any part of the miſtake, by deſiring one favour from Mr. C. viz. that he will tranſlate either the Greek, ἐθελοθρησκεία, or the Engliſh, Will-worſhip, into Latin for me; will it not ſurely be voluntarius cultus, and is not that, being turn'd again into Engliſh, voluntary Worſhip? What can be more evident than this? 3.

But it may be hoped that this was not my miſtake, but what follows, viz. that this voluntary worſhip is as innocent as the freewill offering. But it is not poſſible, that ſhould be the miſtake neither; for freewill offerings under the Law, were certainly one ſpecies of voluntary worſhip, and ſo known by the title of ἑκούσια, voluntary, and therefore thoſe being innocent, 'tis certain that all the other fellow ſpecies of voluntary worſhip, bearing proportion with theſe, and having no circumſtance to defame them, which the other had not, muſt needs be innocent alſo. 4.

That thus it is, and this is the notion of the word in the only place where it is uſed in the New Teſtament, 5.

Teſtament, Col. 2. hath already been largely vindicated in the Tract of Will-worſhip, which the Reader is requeſted to reſort to, and the Annotation on Col. 2. where many more evidences are added to it, which make it ſuperfluous to add yet more in this place; Only I muſt ſecure it from the Diatribiſt's ἀντιθέσεις or objections: And the firſt is by way of velitation, that it ſeems a contradiction in adjecto, that voluntary worſhip and uncommanded ſhould be innocent.

6. There is no end of diſputing about appearances; That may ſeem to Mr. C. which doth not to other men; and Ammonius tells me, this is very ordinarily obſervable in this very matter, τινές εἰσιν αἱ δοκοῦσαι ἀντιφάσκειν ὲ μέντοι ἀντιφάσκουσι, many propoſitions ſeem indeed to be contradictory, but yet are not ſuch. But I ſhall ask, Is it what it ſeems, or is it not? If it be not, why was this mentioned by one, who can diſtinguiſh betwixt true and falſe, colour and varniſh, reality and appearance? If it be, I deſire to be inſtructed, what Logician hath ſo defined contradiction, as will any way accord to this expreſſion.

Εἰς τὸ περὶ ἑρμην. f. 89.

7. The only definition or deſcription of contradiction in adjecto that ever I heard of, is, when that which is added is contradictory to that which was firſt ſet; and contradictions, we know, are affirmations and negations of the ſame thing in the ſame reſpect, either formally, which the interpretcrs of Ariſtotle all διαγωνίως diagonial, μαχομένας πρὸς ἀλλήλας ἀντιφατικῶς, fighting one with another in direct form of contradiction, ὴ πᾶς, τῷ ὲ πᾶς, the enunciation [every man] to the negation [not every man] or interpretatively, i. e. by certain conſequence or implication, as if I ſhould ſay, Socrates is not a man, here were a contradiction in adjecto, becauſe in the ſubject of the propoſition, he that had the appellation of Socrates, was ſuppoſed to be a man, and yet in the predicate, that is denied of him. But certainly here is no ſuch thing, either formally, or by implication, in this propoſition, Voluntary, or uncommanded worſhip is innocent;] Of forbidden worſhip this were true, for innocence to be attributed to that, were contradiction in adjecto; but there is a wide difference betwixt forbidden and voluntary, as wide as between unlawful and lawful, all being lawful, which is not forbidden, elſe there were not univerſal truth in the Apoſtles maxim, that ſin is a tranſgreſſion of the Law.

8. I ſhall convince what I ſay, by this plain inſtance, Theophylact ſaith of many men ὑπερβαίνουσι πολλὰ τῶν ἐπιλαγμάτων, that they exceed or tranſcend many of the commandments; I demand, Do they offend and ſin, and are nocent in ſo doing, or did that holy man think they did? Tis evident he did not; for he, after his manner, borrows from, and tranſcribes * Chryſoſtom, and in ſtead of πολλοὶ many, he reads πνευματικοὶ the ſpiritual; They, ſaith he, do many things with deſire and appetite, and manifeſt it πῷ τῷ ὑπερβαίνειν τὰ ἐπιλάγματα, in that they do even exceed the commands; It appears therefore, that to theſe two holy and learned men, it ſeemed not, what to Mr. C. it ſeems, that there is contradiction in adjecto, in affirming voluntary and uncommanded worſhip to be innocent. A multitude of the like teſtimonies are put together in the Annotat. on Col. 2. which may be ſufficient to juſtify me from ſingularity, that I diſcern not the phanſied ſeeming contradiction.

* In. Rom. 8.

9. But this affirmation again of the Diatribiſt will not want its proofs; four, that pretend to that title, are here annexed.

10. For Firſt, ſaith he, It's expreſly againſt the Second Commandment, which forbids all worſhip not expreſly commanded by God. I muſt not complain of my eyes, or other faculties, becauſe they are the beſt that God hath given me; but I may wiſh for ſuch ſupplies as Mr. C. hath met with, for elſe I am ſure I ſhall never ſee the leaſt glimpſe of that which he mentions ſo expreſly out of the Second Commandment. What is expreſly againſt the Second Commandment, ſhould, methinks, oppoſe ſome expreſs words in it, and then it muſt follow, that there are ſuch expreſs words there, which forbid all worſhip not commanded by God; and this, not only as by worſhip are meant the ſorts and ſpecies of worſhip, but the very acceſſaries and ceremonies of worſhip, and all the expreſſions and emanations of the inward fulneſs of the religious heart. But my Optick Glaſs will not afford me any ſuch proſpect in the Second Commandment: All ſorts of Graven Images, and ſuch like, I have there a fair view of, and an expreſs ſevere interdict of worſhipping them; but for all kinds and all circumſtances of worſhip which are not commanded, kneeling, proſtrating the body to the inviſible true God, the times and degrees of ardency of worſhip, the abſtinences, ſelf-denyals attendant on it, ſure there is nothing ſaid expreſly there, either to command or forbid them; and for any general comprehenſive phraſe, that can rationally contain a prohibition of all which is not commanded, I can ſay no more, but that the firſt verſe of Geneſis or any other in the Bible, hath as much of this to my eye, as the Second Commandment.

11. The buſineſs we are all this while upon, is, the diſcovering of cauſes of miſtakes, and therefore I muſt be excuſed again, upon the ſcore of the example before me, if I once more attempt to ſhoot my ſhaft, and by this firſt argument paſs my conjecture of the cauſe of the prefacers miſtake in this matter. It is the ſolemn practice of ſome Caſuiſts, to reduce all ſins in the world to ſome or other of the Commandments of the Decalogue; wherein I am not ſure that they have aim'd aright; for ſeparate gluttony and drunkenneſs (as ſure they may be ſeparated, and yet continue to be ſins) from ſome accidental conſequences of them, as waſting of health, which may aſſign either of them to the ſixth Commandment, and the like, and you will hardly tell whither to reduce the intemperate uſe of the creature; And ſo for that ſort of lying or falſe ſpeaking which is no way hurtful, or deſigned to be hurtful to the neighbour, and many the like inſtances might be given. But on this I inſiſt not with any concernment, but leave it to prudent conſideration, what neceſſity there is, that all laws natural and poſitive divine ſhould be reduced to one or more of theſe Ten Commandments. This is not that which I meant to ſay, but farther to offer it to conſideration, whether it be not viſible, that thoſe Caſuiſts which have erred in judging the unlawfulneſs of ſome things, have not eaſily been induced to reduce them to ſome or other of the Commandments, as offences againſt the affirmative or negative part, and if not againſt the words or ſenſe, yet againſt the Analogie of it.

12. According to this practice it is moſt neceſſarily conſequent, that he that hath been poſſeſt of the unlawfulneſs of ceremonies and worſhip uncommanded, and hath not ſo far conſidered, as to rectifie his judgment in that matter (by weighing this one thing, that whatſoever is not forbidden is lawful, not, whatſoever is not commanded is unlawful) muſt whenſoever he ſhall write caſes of conſcience, or comment on the Decalogue, reduce this to ſome interdict under one of the ten heads, and all the other nine renouncing it, force it in by ſome appearance of analogie, to the ſecond Commandment; And then it falls out, that ſo many men, diſaffected to the Government and Ceremonies of the Church of England, have written on the Commandments, that it can be no more matter of wonder, that uncommanded worſhip ſhould be crowded into the ſecond Commandment (and there long agoe imbibed by the Diatribiſt, and never queſtioned ſince) than that Mr. Brightman ſhould find the Church of England of this age, among the ſeven Cities of Aſia in S^t^ Johns time, or that Mr. Parker ſhould make the uſing the croſs in Baptiſm, a breach of every one of the ten Commandments, and branch a book in folio, into the Atheiſm, as I remember, I am ſure, the Idolatry, the &c. till at laſt, the concupiſcence of the Croſs.

And then I ſhall but ask this Diatribiſt, whether he can heartily believe, that the uſe of that cere- 13.
mony was really guilty of all thoſe ſeveral tranſgreſſions of the Law of God; and if he ſhall ἀπέχειν, beſeech him to examine over again his own affirmation here, Firſt, Whether any one man hath ſaid ſo fully what here he hath, that voluntary and uncommanded worſhip is expreſly againſt the ſecond Commandment (they that only reduce it thither, fall ſhort of him.) Secondly, Whether they that have thought fit to refer it thither by reduction, have produced any cogent or ſatisfactory reaſon for ſo doing; and the next time he affirms this from them, annex the reaſon, ſuch as may juſtifie a moſt rigid concluſion to the conſciences of all others who may be concerned in it, either in order to their own practice, or the judging of others. And I ſhall not farther exagitate this his firſt proof.

The ſecond proof is the ſame we have had twice already, for the aſſerting the two former affirma- 14.
tions, voluntary worſhip is an addition to the rule of worſhip, and eo nomine Superſtition and that is ſinful.] But I have already ſhewed, that all additions to that rule, are not Superſtition, and that all that is by any called Superſtition, is not eo nomine ſinful; and ſo I am ſafe from that proof alſo.

So in like manner from the third, which is but another repetition, put in form of queſtion [Why is 15.
the worſhip of Angels and Saints criminal? but becauſe it was invented and added by the will of man?] This queſtion was anſwered long ſince, that the worſhip of all creatures is criminal; becauſe the command is poſitive and excluſive, that God, and none but the one God is to be worſhipped; and though the doing what is not commanded, is not a ſin, yet the doing what is forbidden, muſt needs be ſinful, and ſuch is the worſhipping of Angels, &c.

What he here adds in the cloſe of this third proof, that they (I ſuppoſe, who worſhip Angels) do 16.
not urge it as a commandment of God] was ſure very unneceſſarily inſerted; For I never doubted but there are other ſins beſides dogmatizing, and can now promptly ſuggeſt to him competent ſtore of inſtances; ſure the murtherer is a ſinner, though he teach it not for a doctrine from heaven, that it is lawful to kill his brother, &c. And then, why ſhould not the worſhipper of Angels, againſt expreſs precept (Thou ſhalt have no other Gods before me, Thou ſhalt not bow down nor worſhip) be a tranſgreſſer of that Commandment, though he oblige not, as from God, any other man to do the like?

His laſt proof is ab incommodo, If will-worſhip, ſaith he, be innocent, I cannot ſee how all that rabble 17.
of Superſtitious worſhip at Rome can be condemned, for they are not held out as Commandments of God, but traditions of men.] The anſwer laſt given to the appendage of the third proof is ſufficient to this alſo. Other faults there may be in worſhip, beſide holding it out as the Commandment of God. It may for the object of worſhip take in ſomewhat beſide God, or for the ceremonies it may multiply them unprofitably, ridiculouſly, or it may be, pretend more virtue in them, than really belongs to them, and many the like. But theſe I mention, becauſe if it be true, what is here ſuggeſted, that the worſhip at Rome, is really ſuperſtitious, and that there is a rabble of that worſhip there, as is ſuppoſed in the queſtion, the anſwer is already given by the very propoſal of it, and that without any violence to my hypotheſis, which undertook not to juſtifie all, or any other Churches in their worſhip, but only that of England, which is known to be free, where Rome, I add, where the Greek Church in as high a degree as Rome, is guilty. And this may ſerve for the third grand diſcovery of cauſes.

SECT. VI.

The Lawfulneſs of inſtituting the Chriſtmaſs Feſtival. Of Church Laws.

THE laſt ground of miſtake aſſigned by the Diatribiſt, is, that the Doctor takes for granted, That Numb. 1. a Church or particular perſon hath power to inſtitute and obſerve worſhip not commanded by God, which remains upon him to prove before he can vindicate his Feſtival (as he and others maintain it) from the double crime of Superſtition and Will-worſhip.

If this differ from the third (as in reaſon it ought, elſe why ſhould it be added to it?) then the 2.
miſtake is not only, or ſo much, that I affirm, as that I take for granted, when I ought to prove, that a Church or particular perſon hath power to inſtitute and obſerve worſhip not commanded by God. Now I ſhall at once prove my affirmation, and apply it to my Feſtival as he calls it, and ſhew that I have already proved it, and ſo not taken it for granted, as is here ſuggeſted.

For the former, I offer this probation, whatſoever is in it ſelf perfectly free or lawful by the Law of 3.
God, and that liberty no way retrenched, That a Church or particular perſon hath power to inſtitute and obſerve; But the Chriſtmaſs Feſtival or annual commemoration of Chriſt's birth, is in it ſelf perfectly free or lawful by the Law of God, and that liberty no way retrenched; Ergo.

Of the major I ſuppoſe there can be no doubt; if there be, theſe three conſiderations will clear it. 4.
Firſt, Becauſe whatſoever is perfectly free and lawful, that the Church or the Chriſtian hath power to do, unleſs that liberty be ſome way retrenched to him; Secondly, What every particular Chriſtian may freely do, that he may ſtill do, when it is by the Church preſcribed or inſtituted; elſe that act of the Church preſcribing, ſhall render that which it preſcribes unlawful, being perfectly lawful before that preſcription (and if upon the moſt Anarchical principles, that ſhould be ſuppoſed to have any reaſon in it, then ſtill that liberty is ſome way retrenched, the contrary to which is ſuppoſed in the major propoſition.) Thirdly, Becauſe the Church, meaning by that word the Univerſal Church of God, whether of the Apoſtles times, including them, chief paſtors thereof, or of the purer times ſucceeding, together with with the Governours of each Church ſucceeding the Apoſtles, hath the power of Stewards, noted by the Keyes intruſted to it by Chriſt, and conſequently may diſpoſe, order, inſtitute for her members, in thoſe things which ſhe ſhall judge to tend to the honour of God, and to edification, though it be not immediately commanded (ſo it be not any way prohibited) by God.

5. As for the minor, that the Chriſtmaſs Feſtival is thus free and lawful, doth alſo appear by the no prohibition of God's in force againſt it, by the lawfulneſs of praiſing God, and commemorating the gift of Chriſt on any day (one or more) in the year, and conſequently on the 25. of December, by the analogie of other Feſtivals among the people of God in all ages, and by the anſwer to all objections, to the contrary, and the evidence of the matter, that this liberty hath no way yet been retrencht by God, that gave it. And all this ſeverally cleared in the former diſcourſes, and the chief of them again vindicated here, by anſwer to the Diatribiſt's pretended diſcovery of my miſtakes.

6. On which that I do not now think my ſelf obliged farther to inſiſt, by addition of more evidences, the reaſon will be ſoon diſcerned, by taking notice of the one proof which he here ſubjoins to this his laſt ground, in theſe words. [Which I prove by this one argument, If all additions to the word in matter of worſhip be criminous and ſinful, as prohibited by God, Deut. 4. 2. and elſewhere, then no man or Church can without ſin add any worſhip to that commanded by God; But the firſt is true, Ergo.] Where it ſeems the whole matter is devolved to that one iſſue, whether the text, Deut. 4. 2. and the ſecond Commandment (for there is not any other [elſewhere] any other text by the Diatribiſt produced to that purpoſe) be ſufficient to prejudge the uſing or inſtituting any ceremony or Feſtival, which is not commanded by God; And I hope this ſuppletory to thoſe former diſcourſes, which hath conſidered thoſe two texts, hath ſufficiently convinced that; And ſo there is no more now needful to be added to this matter.

7. • Thus have I traced this Diatribiſt through every branch of his diſcovery of cauſes, and ſhewed, I hope competently, on which ſide the miſtakes ly, and if there be no more miſcarriages in thoſe three tracts of Superſtition, Will-worſhip, and Feſtivals, than this Preface, aſſigned to that work, hath diſcovered to me, I ſhall have no need farther to importune the reader with a Superfluous vindication, unleſs upon this ſcore only, that 'tis poſſible that the Diatribiſt may not have ſummed up his bill aright, that there may ſtill remain ſome particular miſtakes diſcoverable by the view of the particulars, which are here omitted in the foot of the account, and then I muſt not take advantage of falſe reckoning. And upon this ſlender account I muſt now ſtill attend his motions, and ſhall do it, in confidence, that what hath been here, in anſwer to his Preface, ſaid ſo largely, will not be exacted of me again at every turn, by way of Repetition. On which ground it is evident, that I am to make no return to the remainder, which is the recapitulating of this Preface.

CHAP. III.

Of Superſtition peculiarly. And firſt of his Prolegomenon on that Subject.

SECT. I.

Anſwer to §. 1. The method uſed to find the meaning of the word.

Numb. 1. IN his firſt Diatribe, that of Superſtition, §. 1. I may lightly touch and paſs over the diſlike of my method in writing of Will-worſhip before Superſtition, together with the reaſon, that being more general, this a ſpecies under it; for though it be certain, that I am not of his mind, that the former is a ſpecies of the latter, and ſo that I cannot admit of his reaſon of change, or that his is, as he ſaith, a more juſt methodical order of tractation, yet I ſhall not ingage in a diſpute of their precedence, but only reply to the latter part of his firſt §. which directs the manner of inquiring, what Superſtition is, not by ſearching into the monuments of heathen Authors Latin or Greek from the names or ſenſes by them given, as by the judgment of Divines, &c.

2. In anſwer to this I ſhall need no farther reply than to remind him, that as there is no better way to underſtand the full importance of words, than to examine them in their origination, and their uſage among the beſt Authors, Maſters of words, not only profane but ſacred, ſo ſure this is the very method I have taken, for δεισιδαιμονία (and Superſtition) viewing it in the antient heathens, in the parts firſt, then in the compoſition, and ſo alſo in the ſacred Scripture (which I hope is no heathen Author) as oft as it is found there, in Lactantius and S^t Auguſtine, which ſure knew what true Religion meant, whatſoever he is pleaſed to ſuggeſt of my way and Authors, and are as competent judges of Superſtition, as his later Divines, that have reduced the uſe of all ceremonies, not commanded by God, to the ſecond Commandment (and to Deut. 4. 2.) under the title of Superſtition.

SECT.

SECT. II.

Anſwer to §. 2. Ameſius's definition. The matter of the four firſt Commandments. The Affirmative part of the ſecond Commandment. The Diatribiſt's miſadventure about Duty in the midſt. No prohibition of other holy dayes in the fourth Commandment. Jeroboams act, 1 Kin. 12. 32. The Rubenites altar, Joſh. 22. Naaman's altar. Chriſtmaſs Feſtival parallell to it. The exceſſes in each Commandment.

IN the ſecond §. where he ſhews out of Doctor Ames, how Superſtition may be fitly defined by Aquinas, a vice contrary to Religion in the exceſs, viz. in order to the acts or external means of worſhip ſuperadded by the wiſdom or will of man, when a man tenders worſhip either to whom it is not due, or not in that manner which he ought] he knows this, in the obvious ſenſe of the words, ſuch as from Aquinas was lately cited, is perfectly agreeable to my affirmations, who make the worſhip of all but God, and the worſhip of God in any forbidden or aboliſht manner, to be ſpecies of Superſtition. But if by the equivocal phraſe [not in the manner which he ought] he mean [in whatſoever other manner, or rite, or circumſtance, which God hath not expreſly preſcribed, any appendant of worſhip inſtituted or appointed by man] (and not only any worſhip, as he cites out of Ameſius, p. 4.) there is no truth in his definition, nor agreeableneſs to Aquinas's ſenſe, as hath appeared formerly: 'Tis ſure, Aquinas, which is cited in the margent, hath not owned any ſuch interpretation of [non prout debet] to belong to all uncommanded rites. If Ameſius have (which I have not commodity to examine) then he was one of the Caſuiſts which I forementioned, as the derivers of this prejudice into the Diatribiſt, and if Urſine, Dr. Fulk, Mr. Perkins are rightly cited in his margent, and their words extended no farther than they deſigned them, then perhaps we have the full catalogue of them, and the Diatribiſt is now of age, to conſider whether they have proved, or only dictated in this matter. Numb. 1.

As for the grounds which are here laid by the Diatribiſt toward the evincing of it, they are no way qualified for ſuch a ſtructure. For when to the four Commandments of the firſt Table, he aſſigns theſe four things as the ſubject matter of them, a right object of worſhip, God alone, of the firſt; a right matter, commanded worſhip, of the ſecond; a right manner, with all reverence, of the third; a right time, his own appointed day, of the fourth; and thence concludes all exceſs in any of theſe, Superſtition; there is ſcarce any one minute part of ſound doctrine in all this. 2.

For in the firſt, which hath moſt of truth, yet this failing there is, that the right object of worſhip is not the principal matter of that Commandment, but the worſhip it ſelf, all the parts of that, having him for our God, treating him, addreſſing to him, as ſuch, and of this there is no criminous exceſs, which can be ſtyled Superſtition; the Superſtition forbidden in that commandment, is not any extream or exceſs of worſhipping the true God, but the taking in other rivals to that worſhip, which belongs to the true God incommunicably, and ſo, is the matter of the negative part of that precept, not the nimiety of the affirmative. 3.

In the ſecond, there is not a word to determine the matter of it to commanded worſhip, as hath been evidenced beyond all queſtion. The Subject of the ſecond Commandment is the prohibition of Idol-worſhip; And bending the knee to the true God and none elſe, obſerving of Chriſtmaſs, &c. are remote enough from that guilt. 4.

As for the third I had thought our Saviour, Mat. 6. had given us the ſum of it, Thou ſhalt not forſwear thy ſelf, but perform unto the Lord thy oaths, the negative and affirmative parts of it; and then, with what propriety can that be ſaid to denote the right manner of the worſhip, with all due reverence? Or if it ſhould be extenſible ſo far, then ſure all ceremonies that may expreſs that reverence, though not elſewhere preſcribed, will be here commanded, and then ſure not forbidden in the ſecond Commandment. 5.

Laſtly, For the right time, God's own appointed day (the Sabbath, I ſuppoſe, he means) though that be appointed in the fourth Commandment, yet ſure not ſo as to prohibit all others; we know there was a yearly Sabbatick faſt (the great day of expiation), ſo called, Iſa. 58. 13. and many other feaſts beſide that of the weekly reſt in the fourth Commandment, ſome of Gods own inſtitution, others, as the feaſt of dedication of the Altar, in memory of the purging by Judas Maccabæus, inſtituted by the Jews themſelves, and never mentioned in the Canon of the old Teſtament; and ſo the faſts of the fifth and ſeventh month, Zac. 7. 5. And under the new Teſtament, the firſt day of the week, that certainly was not the laſt, which the Decalogue preſcribed; and why the Apoſtles, that inſtituted that, proportionably to the weekly Sabbath, ſhould not (either they, or their ſucceſſors) inſtitute other days, feſtival or faſting, proportionable to the like among the Jews, ſure there is no manner of prohibition in the fourth Commandment, which commanding one day to be hallowed, and allowing the reſt for their ordinary labour, doth not yet interdict all others, or bind his own, or his peoples, and all Chriſtians hands from preſcribing or ſetting a part any other. 6.

And there being ſo little ſolidity in the grounds, how can it be expected, there ſhould be any in the concluſion, as he ſaith, anſwerably erected on them, that Superſtition may extend to the whole firſt Table, or that every exceſs which he will phanſie reducible to any of theſe, ſhall ſtraightway commence Superſtition? 7.

That he may farther perſwade this, one obſervation he commends to us fundamental to this diſcovery, but ſuch as I think never ſlipt from any man before him. His words are theſe, The Commandments of God, having every of them a negative and affirmative part (expreſſed or underſtood) the duties of Religion do ſtand in the midſt, as virtues between two extreams. Here I ſhall not queſtion the corner ſtone of this foundation, elſe I might demand, what is the affirmative part of the ſecond Commandment, or how can it be evidenced that there is any, or indeed any more than a prohibition of idol-worſhip appendant to the no other Gods in the firſt Commandment, which ſtill is but a negative, or an interdict, or if an 8.

affirmative be to be underſtood, muſt it not be bowing down to the true God, and ſo that will not prejudge, but juſtify all outward decent geſtures of adoration, aſſiſt, not oppugne our pretenſions?

9. But in ſtead of this nicer inquiry, and ſuppoſing with him that every of the Commandments, hath its negative and affirmative part, I only demand how he could think that the duties of Religion ſtand in the midſt? what I pray is the antecedent to which [in the midſt] relates? there is no other in the period, but [an affirmative and negative part of each Commandment] But do the duties of Religion ſtand in the midſt of the affirmative and the negative part of each Commandment, as virtues between two extremes? Then ſure the affirmative part of the command is one extreme, and the negative is the other; then, what is commanded in the affirmative part, that which is under precept, is an extreme, and ſo a vice, as far removed from virtue, as that which is forbidden in the negative; the worſhip of one God, a vice, as well as the worſhipping of many; paying to God our oaths, a vice, as well as perjury; perfect chaſtity, a vice, as well as the moſt proſtitute adultery, and ſo in the reſt of them: what could have been ſaid more unluckily than this?

10. I would fain believe that the Diatribiſt did not mean thus, and therefore would attempt to affix ſome other poſſible meaning to his words, as thus (without any retroſpect toward the former part of the period) that the duties of Religion ſtand in the midſt between two extremes, as virtues ſtand in the midſt between two extremes. But then to what purpoſe was the mention of the two parts, affirmative and negative, of the Commandments, premiſed? for this I am ſtill to ſeek, and therefore muſt miſdoubt my σοφὸν φάρμακον, that it is not ſo fit for the malady as I could have wiſht, and yet I have no better to ſucceed it.

11. The beſt of it is, he hath not purſued this obſervation, nor made this Superſtructure in his exemplification thereof; the groſſneſs of it would not permit that. But then to what purpoſe was his obſervation? ſure but to amuſe the reader and ſay ſomewhat demurely, which ſhould pretend to be a ground of his beloved concluſions, that all additions to the rule of worſhip are exceſs againſt the Second Commandment, additions of ridiculous Ceremonies or geſtures an exceſs againſt the Third, men's inſtituting other holy days and times, an exceſs againſt the Fourth. And truly what elſe he pleaſe, with as much appearance of truth, or ſolidity of argument, as theſe are inferred from either the letter of thoſe Commandments, or from the ſolemn obſervation concerning the affirmative, and negative parts of them, and the duties of Religion in the midſt.

12. Tis true, all worſhipping of Idols is forbidden in the Second Commandment; but how come all uncommanded rites to be Idols? All perjury (and (by Chriſts πλήρωσις) voluntary ſwearing at all) is forbidden in the Third Commandment; but how come rites and ceremonies and geſtures, though never ſo ridiculous, to be either oaths or perjuries, or to bear any analogy with, or by what means to be reducible to them? In the Fourth Commandment, the not obſerving Gods deſigned Sabbath, was a defect; but what words of that Commandment conclude againſt inſtituting other holy days and times, as an exceſs, and that criminous, not admittable among Chriſtians.

13. If any, it muſt be [ſix days ſhalt thou labour] but ſure that is not the meaning of them, but the explication is to be fetcht from the other part of the period [and do all that thou haſt to do] i. e. all thy labour, and all that thou haſt to do, ſhall be finiſht, as God's was, in ſix days, and no other day muſt be ſo ſet apart, as to take off from the ſeventh days reſt or Sabbath: but for ſuch celebrations as are reconcileable with that, there is no word nor appearance to the prejudging of them.

14. But the unlawfulneſs of this laſt, is confirmed by the ſinfulneſs of Jeroboams act, 1 Kin. 12. 32. He ordained a feaſt like unto the feaſt that was in Judea. But the Diatribiſt cannot but know what it was that made that criminous in Jeroboam, his appointing this feaſt to be kept with ſacrifices at Bethel, which, beſide the ſacrificing to calves which he had ſet up, was alſo quite contrary to the expreſs word of God, which had commanded that all ſacrifice ſhould be offered, and conſequently feaſts kept at Jeruſalem, and no where elſe, ſee Deut. 12. 5, 6. 11. 13, 14. 26, 27. and Joſh. 22. 16. 19. 29. and Joh. 4. 20. This ſure was the ſin of Jeroboam, to ſet up Calves in Dan and Bethel, to keep the people from going up to Jeruſalem, 1 Kin. 12. 28. 30. to make a houſe of high places, and Prieſts which were not of the ſons of Levi. v. 31. and ſo in like manner, a feaſt like unto the feaſt which is in Judah; and upon that feaſt day to offer ſacrifice upon that Altar, which he had made in Bethel, v. 33. All contrary to that command of making Jeruſalem the only place of ſacrifice and publick ſolemn worſhip to all Iſrael.

15. Nay, had that ordaining of a feaſt by Jeroboam, been ſeparated from that appendant ſin, of ſacrificing elſewhere than God had commanded, and drawing away the people from the worſhip of Jeruſalem, which was ſo ſtrictly under precept, I ſhall deſire to know, why that might not have been as blameleſs as the Rubenites erecting an Altar by Jordan, Joſ. 22. which though it were lookt on by their other brethren as an horrible thing, whilſt it appeared to be a violation of that Law, v. 12. and 16, 17. yet when it was truly repreſented to them by Remonſtrance, that this Altar was not built to divert them from Jeruſalem, or to offer ſacrifice on, v. 23. but only for a memorial to their children, that they belonged to the Lord God of Iſrael. v. 24. 27, 28. and a means to keep up Religion in their childrens hearts, v. 25, 26. then it was juſtified in the ſight of all Iſrael, the thing pleaſed the people, and they bleſſed God, &c. v. 33.

16. And why may not a Chriſtian feſtival, inſtituted in like manner as a memorial, not to draw off any mans heart from any part of God's preſcribed worſhip, be as innocent as this? And ſo our jealous brethren, the Diatribiſt and thoſe of his perſwaſion, that came out to diſpute againſt us, imitate them, and lay down that deſign, and go back to their houſes in peace?

17. To which purpoſe one thing more may yet fitly be added, that Jeruſalem being the place of worſhip, preſcribed by expreſs precept to all the Jews, but not ſo to all other pious people of the world, though even to them alſo, to all people, it was a houſe of prayer, if they would make uſe of it (and accordingly we read of heathens that came to Jeruſalem to worſhip) yet this precept, which, as ſuch, lay on the Jews, being not obligatory to the Gentile proſelytes, we know, Naaman built him an Altar in his own country, and there offered unto the God of heaven, and was ſo far approved in this, that the Prophet himſelf allows him the mules loads of earth to be carried out of Judaa to the erecting of it, it, And I am perſwaded the analogy will hold exactly, as to the matter in hand, to a Chriſtian feſtival inſtituted in the Church of Chriſt which was never bound up to any preſcript number of days for the worſhip of Chriſt, whatſoever can be deemed of the Jews, who, though required to do all according to the pattern in the Mount, had yet the liberty of inſtituting a day for God's ſervice, as is evident by the ἐγκαίνια.

And ſo whatſoever the Diatribiſt can phanſy in the concluſion of his ſecond Section of the poſſibility [that there may be Superſtition in or againſt all the Commandments of the firſt Table in the exceſſive part, and that it were eaſie to obſerve, that many (Divines eſpecially) do call the exceſſes of any Commandment by the name of Superſtition] yet I hope the obſerving of a few blameleſs, decent, uſeful ceremonies, inſtituting a Chriſtian feſtival for the commemorating the birth of Chriſt (deſcenſum venerabilis Dei ad humana conſervationis rerumque mortalium gratiam, the deſcent of a venerable God for the ſaving of mankind, could a * Philoſopher ſay upon the obſervation of the ſtar at his birth) will not actually prove to be any of thoſe exceſſes. And then I ſhall not need enquire what thoſe Reverend Divines are, who have been ſo liberal of the odious title of Superſtition, as to impoſe it (very diſcreetly and charitably) upon the exceſſes of any Commandment. 19.

* Chalcidius in Plat. Tim. p. 219.

By the way, I am not ſure that in every Commandment of the Ten, there are ſuch exceſſes; I ſhall ſuppoſe chaſtity the duty of the ſeventh Commandment, and allowing fornication, adultery and ſodomy to make up the extream on one ſide, either in the exceſs, or in the defect, I ſhall give the Diatribiſt leave to chuſe which it ſhall be, and ſuppoſing it muſt be the defect, (the want, not the abundance of chaſtity) I ſhall deſire to know what is the exceſs or other extream, and whether that be, by the forenamed Divines, placed under the head of Superſtition, or indeed whether ſomewhat otherwiſe criminous; Thus it muſt be, if the exceſſes of any Commandment be ſo to be called, and if in every Commandment, not only in thoſe of the firſt table which had been dilated on before, there be ſuch exceſſes, (and however, the analogie holds for theſe of the ſecond table as well as for them.) Of theſe he hath oft told us, that the duty is in the midſt of the two extreams, how duly, will be diſcerned by anſwer to this queſtion, and others, which will be ſoon ready, when he pleaſes to call for them, of the ſame kind. 20.

SECT. III.

The ſpecies of Superſtition. Idolatry belongs to the ſecond Commandment. Superſtition to the firſt. It differs from Will-worſhip. The meaning of Illegitimate worſhip in Aquinas. His opinion of Eccleſiaſtical rites. Barbarous ceremonies of Baals worſhip belong not to the ſecond Commandment. Holy days before Popery. Two antient Teſtimonies for them. The Jews ſcrupuloſity in not reſiſting on the Sabbath day.

IN his third Section ſome few things may be briefly noted, Firſt, That he wrongs Aquinas in ſaying he makes but three kinds of Superſtition, Idolatry, Illegitimate worſhip, and Divination, whereas it is moſt evident to any that will turn to the place in Aquinas, ſecunda ſecundæ qu. 92. art. 1. and art. 2. in corp. that he adds a fourth, Superſtitio quarundam obſervationum, citing out of S^t Auguſtine the Ligatures and ſuch like; And I cannot gueſs to what purpoſe this was miſreported thus. Numb. 1.

Secondly, Where he ſaith of Divines, that they refer Idolatry to the firſt Commandment, the Divines he means muſt needs be thoſe that put the firſt and ſecond commandment into one (ſuch I ſuppoſe was Aquinas, and I had well hoped the Diatribiſt had not been of that perſwaſion) for elſe theſe words [Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelf any graven image, &c.] being ſuppoſed to make a diſtinct and ſecond Commandment, no Divine can be ſo irrational, as to deny Idolatry properly ſo called to belong to, and to be prohibited in that. And if it were true, what the Diatribiſt adds, that Divination is the worſt kind of Idolatry, ſure that muſt be forbidden under the ſecond Commandment alſo; But in this I ſuppoſe Aquinas was in the right, that made it a ſpecies of Superſtition, not of Idolatry, and ſo it muſt more fitly belong to the firſt Commandment, and ſo muſt Illegitimate worſhip, being an offence againſt the due manner of Gods worſhip. But theſe are niceties that we are but little concerned in. 2.

Thirdly, This quarrel to his own Doctor Ameſius for reſtraining Superſtition to one Commandment, which he will have ly common to all the four, is certainly cauſeleſs; For the worſhip of many Gods (together with Divination, &c.) and the undue worſhip of the true God, do certainly belong to one Commandment, viz. the firſt, which by commanding to have no other Gods but that one true God, excludes the δεισιδαιμονία or damon worſhip, and by commanding the worſhip of that one, forbids all undue manners of worſhip. That he underſtood by the word Superſtition no more but the tendering undue worſhip to God, was indeed an error in Ameſius, ſufficiently prevented, and diſproved, by Aquinas, and by the nature of the Greek and Latin words, and ſo likewiſe that he confined it to the ſecond Commandment, when in all reaſon it belonged to the firſt; But that being acknowledged his error, this other of not extending it to many Commandments is no way imputable to him. 3.

Fourthly, When of that ſpecies of Superſtition, which he defines by the vice of undue worſhip tendered to God, he affirms that it is more properly Will-worſhip, this is but an unproved and improbable affirmation, quite contrary to Aquinas and his own Authors (as far as I can diſcern) Ameſius himſelf, and a confounding of things very diſtant. 4.

Fifthly, When of Aquinas's illegitimate worſhip he gives his own gloſs, that he means that which is not commanded by God, but inſtituted and appointed by men] this is great injury to that School-man; What he means by that phraſe, will be beſt learnt from * Aquinas himſelf, who ſets it down diſtinctly by diſtributing it into two parts; For thus that 93. queſtion De illegitimo Dei cultu, Of the illegitimate worſhip of God, begins, Et ſuperfluitate & pravitate vitiatur divinus cultus, &c. The worſhip of God is vitiated both by ſuperfluity, and by pravity; by ſuperfluity, if to the worſhipping of God, ought be aſſumed, which neither by Divine nor Eccleſiaſtical appointment belongs to the glory of God, nor to the ſubjecting esther of the body or ſoul to the Creator; by pravity, if the external ceremony contain any thing of falſity in it; 5.

* Secunda ſecundæ, qu. 93.

which may fall out, ſaith he, two ways, either by the diſagreement between the ceremony and the thing denoted by it, or by the publick miniſters uſing any ceremony contrary to the cuſtom of the Chur[illegible] Thus far are the words of Aquinas: and what could have been more deſtructive to the Diatribiſts pretenſions, than this deſcription and branching of illegitimate worſhip, if either here or before, when Aquinas was cited, this ſenſe of his, thus expreſt, had been conſidered?

6. That he may never cite Aquinas again in this matter, I ſhall deſire him to remember from that School-man theſe four things, his undoubted affirmations, by way of Axioma, Firſt, That illegitimate, is vitiated worſhip, and ſo more than uncommanded, certainly that which is prohibited, (and this according to the propriety of the word illegitimum, which ſignifies not without, but againſt Law. Legitimum, ſaith * Chalcidius, eſt id quod legem ſequitur, legitime is that which follows the Law, or as † Plutarch defines νόμιμον, πείσαγμα νόμε, and ὑπὸ τῦ νόμε δειδὲν, the command of Law, or that which is determined or commanded by Law, adding, that thoſe good things which yet are not under precept, are not to be called νόμιμα legitime; And ſo in Leo ſerm. 1. de jejun. 7. menſ. legitima are oppoſed to voluntaria, as commanded to ſpontaneous. Now what is Law, ſaith * Chalcidius, niſi juſſum ſciſcens honeſta, prohibens contraria, but a command requiring honeſt things, and prohibiting the contrary? And conſequently, illegitimum being the direct contrary to legitimum, will ſignifie, in the contrary ſenſe to that which is commanded, that which is prohibited by Law.) Secondly, That the ſuperfluity of it, conſiſts not in being ſuperadded to God's commands only, but to the Churches appointment; and ſo, that which is ordained by the Church, though not by God, comes not under that ſtyle of ſuperfluous or illegitimate upon that ſcore. Thirdly, That what tends to the glory of God, or to the ſubjecting of the body as well as the ſoul to the Creator of both, is neither ſuperfluous nor illegitimate, ſo it be ordained by the Church. Laſtly, That the Miniſters publick uſing any ceremony contrary to the cuſtom of the Church (ſuch is his ſitting at the Sacrament, and the like) is a pravity, and that is worſe than a ſuperfluity in the worſhip of God. I ſuppoſe this may now be ſufficient to arm the Reader againſt the fallacies, to which the frequent citations out of Aquinas might ſubject him.

* p. 248.

7. Sixthly, That it is not to me imaginable how or why the barbarous ceremonies of Baals Prieſts, &c. ſhould be an exceſs againſt the third Commandment, or a taking Gods name in vain, which we know is by Chriſt rendred forſwearing ones ſelf, and when they that cryed nothing but O Baal hear us, from morning till night, never uſed the name of God at all (for ſure Baal and God are not Synonyma's) and ſo cannot be affirmed in vain to uſe it or take it.

8. Seventhly, That dedicating holy days to Saints (though Chriſt, whoſe Feſtival we treat of, be more than ſuch) is neither fitly parallel'd by the Diatribiſt with Jeroboam's feaſt day at Bethel (as we competently evinced in the laſt Sect.) nor appropriated by him to Papiſts, when we know ſuch days were dedicated to the memory of Martyrs, long before the name or errors of Papiſts were come into the world.

9. A competent evidence we have † formerly given from the Epiſtle of the Church of Smyrna, written on occaſion of the Martyrdom of Polycarp, S^t Johns Auditor, where having deſcribed the paſſages of his ſuffering, they conclude with their wiſh and hope, that God will now permit them to meet together with exultation and joy, to celebrate τὴν μαρτυρίαν αὐτῦ ἡμέραν γενέθλιον, the birth-day or natalitia (ſo 'twas ſtyled) of his Martyrdom, adding the two great ends of ſuch obſervations, εἴς τε τὸν τῶν ἠθληκότων μνήμην, καὶ τῶν μελλόντων ἄσκησίν τε καὶ ἑτοιμασίαν, for the commemorating of ſuch Champions conſtancy, and the exerciſe, and fitting of others for the future. The circumſtances of that Epiſtle make it clear, that ſuch celebrations and dedications of days were then of uſe before Polycarp's death, and that they now expected that this of his ſhould be added to that number, and that ſo it was, I ſhall now add a ſecond undoubted proof or teſtimony of Primitive Antiquity, antienter than that of Polycarp, in the Martyrdom of Ignatius, written by them which were preſent at it, who ſetting down the day and time of his Coronation, ſay, they do it ſo preciſely, * ut ſecundum tempus Martyrii congregati communicemus athletæ, that aſſembling together on the Anniverſary of his Martyrdom, they may communicate with his Martyrdom; commemorate his ſufferings and bleſs God for him, &c.

* Martyrium Ignat. p. 8.

10. Theſe authorities may, I hope, be of ſome credit with him, who can found arguments on paſſages in Aquinas and Ameſius; and if Apoſtles, as equitably as Martyrs, may thus be commemorated, the Church of England I hope (whatever become of the Papiſts) may be vindicated from all Superſtition, or exceſs againſt the fourth Commandment.

11. And then when I have added eightly, that the Jews ſcrupuloſity in obſerving their Sabbath, ſo that they would not ſtand up to defend themſelves in that day, is none of the exceſſes we are guilty of; and that this being by the Diatribiſt ſtyled exceſs of Religion, and that againſt the fourth Commandment, and juſtly called Superſtition, there is no need of making any more ſpecies of that exceſs, or forcing in all dedication of holy days, into that place; I ſhall not need look any more narrowly to ſpy out greater ſtore of infirmities in that third Sect.

SECT. IV.

The Diatribiſt's method and caution in ſetting down the ſpecies of Superſtition.

Numb. 1. BUT becauſe all the former methods were imperfect and unſufficient (even before they were confuted) to erect ſuch a modelled notion of Superſtition as would ſerve the Diatribiſts aims, he muſt now in his fourth Sect. become humble, in ſtead of Magiſterial, implore the courteous Readers pardon, if he be not ſo logically accurate, to ſet down (what he is reſolved is not eaſie to diſcover) all the kinds and wayes whereby this ſin of Superſtition is committed in particular.

2. And to what purpoſe all this modeſty is deſigned, will be eaſily gueſt, viz. to leave the word Superſtition in the clouds, to involve, inſtead of explaining it, that it may continue uſeful to him, as a mor-

mo, whenſoever he hath a mind to affright men out of their obedience to the Church, to which purpoſe it could not be ſo commodious, if it were once defined or limited to one or any ſet number of more Commandments. And though in the ten following Sections he reckon up pretty ſtore of ſpecies of it, yet he muſt here before-hand make ſure of a reſerve, proteſt his liberty to add more, whenſoever he ſhall have need of them [we ſhall, ſaith he, labour to expreſs ſome of them, as we find them held out by Divines and others] where it ſeems Divines, ſuch as Ameſius, Urſine, Mr. Perkins, &c. have not held out enough, but he muſt have a ſupply from others, which are not Divines, (and it would be an odd queſtion to be anſwered, who thoſe others are, when the monuments of heathen authors, Latine and Greek have been ſo ſeverely diſclaimed in his §. 1. and then none but the judgement of Divines thought fit to be appealed to in this matter) and §. 14. when he hath completed a large Catalogue, he concludes with [Laſtly to add no more] intimating that there are ſtill more to be added; of which he will ſerve himſelf, when he ſees good.

What now follows in the ten enſuing Sections, I ſhall reſolvedly paſs over, though there be many things very fit to be noted in them, partly becauſe he promiſeth they ſhall ſoon recurr again, and partly becauſe they belong to the other tracts, that of Will-worſhip and Feſtivals, where ſure we ſhall meet with them, and partly becauſe they have been ſpoken to already, and beſides, ſome of them are the enumerating of thoſe very ſpecies of Superſtition which I have ſet down in that treatiſe, as ſuch. And therefore ſo much (after his Preface) for his Prolegomena. 3.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Particular exceptions of the Diatribiſt to the Tract of Superſtition.

SECT. I.

Confidente of innocence, no argument of guilt.

I Am now more immediately ſummoned and called into the liſts by this Diatribiſt §. 15. and the ſeveral Sections of the Treatiſe of Superſtition muſt be brought to a ſtrict examination, and I hope they will not be unable to bear it. Numb. 1.

In my firſt Section there is nothing diſliked, but only that I will not acknowledge my ſelf or our Church guilty, before the trial, and to that purpoſe I am told [commonly thoſe that are moſt Superſtitious, are moſt confident of their innocency and piety, and no marvel if they underſtand Superſtition as the Dr. doth.] 2.

But to this I anſwer, that I hope this his prudent Aphoriſm is not ſimply convertible, viz. That they which are moſt confident of their innocency and piety, are moſt Superſtitious (for if it be, I muſt not be ſo unkind to wiſh, or ſo uncharitable to believe of the Diatribiſt, that he hath a good conſcience, nor any longer rely on that Apoſtle that hath taught me Gods method of judging of us, by the verdict of our own accuſing or excuſing conſcience) and ſo long 'tis poſſible that I may be free from that guilt, though I am never ſo confident. Mean while I that allow the Diatribiſt one ſpecies, that of Negative Superſtition for his portion, have his leave to conclude from hence, that this is the reaſon why he is ſo confident of his innocence. 3.

As for the ſecond part, my underſtanding of the notion of the word Superſtition in that Treatiſe, if I cannot juſtify it to be as good as Mr. C. his ſuper ſtatutum, I ſhall very much accuſe my ſelf, and in the interim be comforted with his confeſſion, that if I have not erred in the notion of Superſtition, of which he is no competent Judge, being a party, then both I and our Church (for the Romiſh I ſhall not be ſo ſollicitous) are far enough from this crime. 4.

SECT. II.

The nature of the word. Exceſs of fear among the Epicureans, Superſtitio from ſuper and ſto, not ſtatuo. Aquinas miſreported.

THE next or Sixteenth Section conſiders the notion by me given of the Latine Superſtitio, Superſtitum cultus, and having yielded it to be ſo defined by the heathens, yet he cannot think that I will ſay, that this is the only Superſtition to be found in the world, becauſe I acknowledge an exceſſive fear of the Deity to have been another kind of it among the Heathens, and other kinds alſo among Chriſtians, adding that ſome there are, and they no mean ones, that derive it from ſuper and ſto or ſtatuo, as ſupra ſtatutum, worſhip inſtituted by men above the Statute Law of God, but he rather reſts in the definition of the Schools, that it is a vice contrary to Religion in the exceſs, which may extend to the other commandments, whereas this limits it to the Second. Numb. 1.

To all this I need no farther to reply, but Firſt That my Second Sect. was not deſigned to give any complete definition of Superſtition, but to ſearch how much was to be concluded from the Latine word, as in the following Sections how much more from the Greek, and then to make uſe of all other proper means, the uſe of the word in Scripture and Fathers, to collect the full importance of it; and conſequently, if what I vouched out of the Latine origination be true, there is no more to be expected of my Second Sect. Secondly, That I no where grant an exceſſive fear of the Deity to have been another 2.

kind of Superſtition, among the heathens, but only that ſome heathens, eſpecially the Epicureans which denyed all providence and judgment to come, and ſcoft at all fear of puniſhment for ſin, affixt to this the name as of Superſtition, ſo of Religion alſo, whereupon I thought it reaſonable that we ſhould not (not that we ſhould) take our notion of Superſtition from them, which yet it ſeems the Diatribiſt is content to do, and ſo with the famiſhing prodigal to herd himſelf among the Epicureans.

3. Having thus ſecured my ſelf (as far as pertains to this Section) I may now be allowed to conſider the Diatribiſt, and then I find in theſe few words a competent number of infirmities. Firſt, That mentioning their Etymologie of Superſtition, who will have it ſuper ſtatutum, he makes them derive it indifferently from (ſuper and) ſto or ſtatuo, as if thoſe two were Synonyma, whereas certainly [to ſtand] is competently diſtant from [to make laws or ſtatutes] and if it be derived from the one, it is not from the other.

4. Secondly, That deriving it from ſto, he doth not diſcern that this is my way of derivation, for ſure ſuperſtes is from ſuper and ſto, and ſo he confirms my origination of the word, whilſt he thinks he confuteth it, abſolves very frankly, whom he ſat down on purpoſe to condemn.

5. Thirdly, That his forſaking the etymon from ſuper ſtatutum to which ſo oft he had expreſt kindneſs, was again on an undirect aim, that he might get more advantage to his hypotheſis by that means, not moved with the abſurdity of the derivation, but meerly that he might have more liberty to range in, by ſerving himſelf on a notion of Superſtition qualified to extend it to all the Commandments of the firſt table, which how thoſe (no mean ones) whom for his own ends he hath now deſerted, will take at his hands, I leave him to conſider.

6. Fourthly, That having rejected the derivation from ſuper and ſto, or ſtatuo, he hath ſubſtituted no other, and ſo left a rivulet without a ſpring, a compound derivative without an original, a monſter in art, as well as nature.

7. Fifthly, That making uſe of the Schoolman's definition, he extends it much farther than he knows that Schoolman extended it; This he formerly confeſt §. 3. naming this Learned Schoolman as the firſt, who came ſhort in aſſigning the ſpecies of Superſtition, and here he more than confeſſeth it, extending Superſtition to all the four Commandments of the firſt table, when he knows Aquinas made it a breach peculiar to the firſt of them.

SECT. III.

Δεισιδαιμονία among the heathens for Religion, ſo in Heſychius and Phavorinus.

Numb. 1. THE queſtion of the ſeventeenth Sect. concerning δεισιδαιμονία, what kind of fear or dread of a Deity was among the heathens noted by it, I have anſwered already, even that which the Epicureans would have driven out of the world, as making the Gods cruel, tyrannical, &c. and accordingly in Cicero, Superſtitione liberare, to free men from Superſtition, and in Lucretius, Religionibus, from all Religion and obligation of duty, is explained by metum omnem Deorum pulſum eſſe, to have all fear of the Gods baniſht from us.

2. If there be any other minute difference obſervable, it is this, that it is ſuch a fear of the Deity as wicked men are in reaſon to have, (and that ſure, though a great trembling, was yet no exceſs, no
* L. 2. p. 779. more than was very equitably the portion of ſuch) ſo ſaith * Diodorus Siculus of Bomilcar, δεισιδαίμονίς εἰσι οἱ μάλιστες ἐγχειρῶν ταῖς παρανόμοις καὶ μεγάλαις πράξεσι, they that are about to undertake any notable wicked actions, are generally afraid of the Gods or Dæmons; and ſo ſtill that will yield our Diatribiſt no aid toward the ſupport of any of his hypotheſes; ſure the inſtituting of our Chriſtmaſs Feſtival, was no act of ſuch a juſt dread of vengeance for ſin, nor effect whether immediately or remotely produced by it.

3. As for his affirmation that the former part of the word δεισιδαιμονία doth not ſignifie worſhip, but fear, and not that fear which is oft put for the whole worſhip of God, but ſlaviſh fear, &c. this is a clear miſtake; 'Tis true indeed it doth ſignifie ſometimes a trembling fear (ſuch as I ſaid was the wicked mans portion and due lot, and ſo not an exceſs, or unproportionable to his ſtate) as when Plutarch ſaith of him, he wiſheth there were no Gods; but it doth not always ſignifie thus, but ſimply φόβος θεῶν καὶ δαιμόνων the fear of Gods and dæmons; and accordingly, as Phavorinus in the Epicurean notion of it, renders it περὶ τὸ θεῖον δειλία, a cowardly fear toward God, ἢ ὁ ἄλογος πρὸς θεῶν, or an irrational fear of the Gods, ſo Heſychius renders it φοβοθεία fearing God, or Religion in univerſum, and the ſame Phavorinus explains δεισιδαίμων by εὐσεβὴς, Superſtitious, by devout or pious, and adds, ὡς ὁ θεῖος Παῦλος, as Saint Paul uſeth the word Act. 17. 22.

SECT. IV.

Falſe worſhip is not Will-worſhip. Impoſition of hands.

Numb. 1. HIS eighteenth Sect. being but an approbation of my concluſion, that δεισιδαιμονία refers to the Poetical Gods, Angels, or dead men, or indeed any thing but the only true God, muſt not be reſiſted by me; I am glad I have once gratified him.

2. But when he adds, that this clears what he had ſaid, that this is rather idolatry againſt the firſt Commandment, which is Polytheiſm, than any kind of Superſtition, which is the giving of falſe, i. e. uncommanded worſhip to the true God againſt the ſecond Commandment, this is but a heap of incongruities; for firſt

Idolatry,

Idolatry, as hath been evidenced, is a ſin againſt the ſecond Commandment, though Polytheiſm be againſt the firſt.

Secondly, Though Superſtition be the giving of falſe worſhip to the true God, as well as worſhip to falſe Gods, Damons and Superſtites, the ſouls of men departed (or a dread, which is not a worſhip, to the true) yet this falſe worſhip is unfitly explicated by uncommanded worſhip; For certainly all ſuch is not falſe, as out of Aquinas was cleared, eſpecially if the word Worſhip be extended, as this Diatribiſt extends it, to rites and obſervances, as well as to the ſubſtantial parts of worſhip; ſuch were impoſition of hands in benediction among the Jews, continued alſo for many uſes among Chriſtians, yet never preſcribed or commanded by God; and many the like elſewhere mentioned. 3.

And this therefore Thirdly cannot be truly affirmed to be againſt the ſecond Commandment, which alſo being ſpent upon the worſhip of Idols (all for the interdicting of that) cannot be properly ſaid to conſider the worſhip of the true God, (unleſs it be the external part that of bowing down, &c. in the affirmative branch of it) which had been the ſubject of the firſt Commandment; and to that in all reaſon all falſe worſhip of the true God muſt be reduced, and not to the ſecond. 4.

SECT. V.

Δεισιδαιμονέστερους Act. 17. 22. (The Athenians the moſt devout of all the Greeks.)

WHat he ſaith by way of dilemma Sect. 19. concerning the uſe of the word δεισιδαιμονέστερους more Superſtitious, of the Athenians, Act. 17. 22. [If, ſaith he, they were ſo called becauſe they worſhipt more Gods, then they were Polytheiſts; If becauſe they were devout or pious, rather impious in worſhipping the true God ignorantly in a falſe manner, then their ſin was againſt the ſecond Commandment] though true, in ſome ſenſe, is yet nothing gainful to his deſign, which can thrive by no other means but by getting δεισιδαιμονία or Superſtition to denote all uncommanded rites in the worſhip of the true God. Numb. 1.

This it no way ſignifies in that place of the Acts, but only their worſhipping a multitude of Gods, more than any other nation did, and the ἄγνωστῳ θεῷ, or unknown God, for one, and ſo their being more pious in their courſe, than other their heathen country men were, or indeed than the Romans, or any elſe. 2.

That this is the truth, and the whole truth, hath ſufficiently been evidenced in the Treatiſe of Superſtition, Sect. 11. and I now add three teſtimonies more, to that heap, one out of Joſephus, l. 2. Contra Ap. Ἀθηναίους δ' Ἑλλήνων εὐσεβεστάτους ἅπαντες λέγουσι, All men affirm the Athenians to be the moſt pious of the Greeks. A ſecond out of Sophocles, Oedip. 3.

Ὅθ' ὅντιν' ἔστι γῆν θεὸς σέβισμα
Τιμαῖς σεβίζειν, ἥτις τῶνδ' ὑπερφέρει,

If any know how to worſhip the Gods with honours (ſacrifices and offerings to their Temples) Athens excels them all; The third even now intimated out of Phavorinus, but here more fully to be expreſſed, who having explicated δεισιδαίμων ſuperſtitious by εὐσεβὴς pious, ſubjoins this teſtimony of the Acts, ὡς ὁ θεῖος Παῦλος, δεισιδαιμονεστέρους ὑμᾶς θεωρῶ, as S. Paul ſaith, I ſee that you are more Superſtitious, the very place which we have now before us, brought by that learned Grammarian as an inſtance, that the word is there taken in a good, not ill ſenſe, yet not of any uncommanded worſhip of the true God, but a pious, though Ethnick devotion toward the multitude of their falſe, ſuperadded to the one true God; which though in a Chriſtian ſcale or judgment it cannot be approved, becauſe it is Polytheiſm, yet in compariſon with other heathens (which was S. Pauls buſineſs in that place) it was truly by him lookt on as a greater meaſure of devotion, than the reſt of the heathen world were guilty of, and that is all that was meant by that phraſe, and ſo 'tis not at all uſeful to the end, to which the Diatribiſt would have inclined it.

SECT. VI.

Ζητήματα περὶ τὴν ἰδίας δεισιδαιμονίας, Act. 25. Feſtus's ſcorn falls on the Jews, not on Paul. Τῆς ἰδίας his own, not theirs. Ζήτημα an accuſation. Jeſus put under the notion of a δαίμων by Feſtus. Ἀνάστασις taken for a damon. τεθνηκότος. ἔφασκε ζῆν. The Diatribiſts objections anſwered. Superſtition for Religion ſimply.

HIS twentieth Section is an arraignment of Section 12. of Superſt. concerning the place, Acts 25. 19. ζητήματα περὶ τὴν ἰδίας δεισιδαιμονίας, &c. which I had rendred, queſtions or accuſations concerning his own Religion or Superſtition or Worſhip, and (to explain what was meant by the word δεισιδαιμονία) of one Jeſus that was dead, whom Paul ſaid to be alive, putting him under the notion of a dead Heros, and ſo meaning the worſhip of him by δεισιδαιμονία. Numb. 1.

Againſt this the Diatribiſt excepts in three particulars. Firſt, It is like, ſaith he, Feſtus ſpake in ſcorn, not of Pauls only, but of the whole Jewiſh Religion, as, ſaith he, the words may import, and are tranſlated by ours. Secondly, That what I ſaid of putting Jeſus under the notion of a dead Heros or δαίμων, is a ſtrein of Criticiſm, compounding things which are in the Text diſtinct, for Feſtus ſayes (ſaith he) they had many queſtions both concerning their own Superſtition, and alſo concerning one Jeſus, &c adding 2.

ding (to confirm this) that he was accuſed of queſtions of their Law, c. 23. 29. and of ſedition, ſeducement, profanation of the Temple, 24. 5, 6. Thirdly, That Paul affirmed Jeſus to be alive, not in part, as the Dæmons were ſuppoſed, but in the whole man, as raiſed from the dead.

3. To theſe I briefly anſwer, and firſt to the firſt; For the ſcorn, it no way appears to be meant by Feſtus againſt S. Paul or his Religion; for Feſtus is at this time ſpeaking in favour of Paul, and ſlighteth the Jews accuſations of him, as matters of no conſiderable moment, and ſo, if there be any thing of ſarcaſme in the ſpeech, it falls on the Jews, not on him, and ſo cannot ſet any ill character on the δεισιδαιμονία, in caſe that be S. Paul's, and not theirs

4. As for the Diatribiſt's phancy, that the ſcorn ſhould fall not on Pauls only, but on the whole Jewiſh Religion, that cannot hold; for when he ſpeaks of the Jews charge againſt Paul, he cannot ſpeak of that wherein Paul and they agreed, but wherein they differed, and that muſt either be their way, which Paul oppoſed, or Paul's way, which they now accuſed him of.

5. Now which of theſe two it was, is not determinable by the words in Greek, for the ἡ ἰδία may either be rendred his own or their own: Yet that it muſt be interpreted his, I offer this reaſon to perſwade, (whereas the Diatribiſt pretends to none for the contrary, but only that ſo the words may import, and that our Engliſh hath ſo tranſlated) The Jews accuſation or charge againſt S. Paul is plainly mentioned in this place; That is the meaning of ζητήματα εἶχον πρὸς αὐτὸν, they had queſtions or laid charges againſt him; the word ζήτημα ſometimes ſignifies a charge, complaint, inditement, ſo c. 18. 15. εἰ δὲ ζήτημά ἐστι περὶ λόγου, but if the accuſation or charge be of a word; Thus Satan, who is ſo called, as ἀντίδικος an adverſary in foro, διάβολος an accuſer, is ſaid ζητεῖν to ſeek, 1 Pet. 5. 8. (and Luk. 22. 31. ἐξαιτήσασθαι to require) i. e. to accuſe and charge men, that ſo they may be delivered up to him as an executioner, to winnow, in one place, and to devour, in the other. So to queſtion a man among us vulgarly ſignifies to accuſe him, and that ſo it ſignifies here, appears by v. 18. οἱ κατήγοροι οὐδεμίαν αἰτίαν ἐπέφερον, the accuſers brought no accuſation of the things which I ſuppoſed, ζητήματα δέ τινα, but ſome queſtions, that muſt be accuſations again, αἰτιάματα, v. 7. &c.

6. Whence, I ſuppoſe, it will follow, that the ἰδίᾳ δεισιδαιμονία περὶ ἧς of which he was charged, which is the matter of the accuſation, or that wherein the offence conſiſted, was his, not their Superſtition, for how could their own Superſtition be the matter of their charge againſt him?

7. To the ſecond, that what I ſaid of Feſtus putting Jeſus under the notion of a dead Heros though it be of that nature that I ſhall not, becauſe I need not, make it a matter of controverſy with any, yet I had this conſideration to incline me to it, the immediate ſubjoyning of one Jeſus whom Paul ἔφασκε ζῆν contended to live, to be ſuperſtes, as of their Dæmons Feſtus and thoſe of his perſwaſions ordinarily affirmed. To which purpoſe I remembred what the Athenians ſurmiſed, when Paul preacht to them Jeſus and the Reſurrection, Act. 17. 18. He ſeems, ſay they, ξένων δαιμονίων καταγγελεὺς εἶναι, to be a proclaimer of ſtrange or new Dæmons, where S. Chryſoſtom judges it ſo manifeſt that thoſe Grecians thought Jeſus to be a Dæmon, that he adds, καὶ γὰρ τὴν ἀνάστασιν θεόν τινα εἶναι ἐνόμιζον, ἅτε εἰωθότες καὶ θηλείας σέβειν, they took alſo Anaſtaſis (Reſurrection) for ſome Goddeſs, as being accuſtomed to worſhip females alſo. And then why Feſtus, an heathen likewiſe, and which underſtood none but heathen Theology, ſhould not thus mean in words of ſo near an importance that will bear it ſo fitly, I can yet ſee no reaſon to doubt.

8. Of this I am ſure, that in the one proof offered to the contrary, the Diatribiſt hath ſtrained more, than I have in my Criticiſme; For Firſt, When he thus reads the text, they had many queſtions, that ſo he might make it neceſſary to diſtinguiſh the queſtion concerning his Superſtition from that of Jeſus, he hath inſerted the word many, there being neither in the Greek nor in our Engliſh any ſuch word, but only τινὰ ζητήματα ſome or certain accuſations. Secondly, When (on the ſame deſign) he again reads [both concerning their Superſtition, and alſo] there is no ſuch word, nor any thing, either in the Greek or our Engliſh, anſwerable either to [both] or to [alſo] but only thus, περὶ—καὶ—concerning his own Superſtition or Dæmon worſhip, and one Jeſus, which was, or had been dead, ſo τεθνηκότος ſignifies, whom Paul affirmed to live; and Thirdly, When he adds that he was accuſed of queſtions of their Law, c. 23. and of ſedition, &c. c. 24. this proves nothing, which the Diatribiſt would have, for though the Jews had thus accuſed him, yet he had anſwered for himſelf in the latter part of c. 24. and cleared himſelf perfectly from thoſe two charges, from the firſt, v. 12. and from the ſecond, v. 18. and ſo again, c. 25. 8. and ſo ſtill it remains that in Feſtus's judgement (to which Paul appeals for the knowledge of it, telling him that he knew he was guiltleſs from having done any wrong to the Jews, v. 10.) Paul was not guilty, nor ſtood charged of any thing, but only of his own Religion, and one Jeſus, i. e. I ſuppoſe by way of explication (as [καὶ and] is frequently exegetical) of believing and proclaiming Jeſus and the Reſurrection, c. 24. 15. which laſt alſo being common to him with the Jews, as there he conteſts, could not by them duely be charged upon him, and ſo the whole charge, and that which is the characteriſtick, diſtinctive note of his Religion, is his contending that Jeſus was alive, who had died, which how agreeable it is to Feſtus's notion of a Dæmon, I ſhall not need farther to declare.

9. As to the laſt, it is evident that he that affirms Jeſus to be alive, both ſoul and body, doth to a heathen ear as much define him to be a Dæmon, as if he ſaid nothing of his body: However all that Feſtus here ſaith is, that ἔφασκεν ζῆν, he affirmed him to live now after he had been dead; and if to that we add, that Paul preached his aſcenſion to heaven, what could a heathen, according to his perſwaſions conclude from thence, but that he had attained his ἀποθέωσις, which was all that they required to his being a Dæmon. And ſo much for theſe objections.

10. Meanwhile, if all were granted that is here deſired by the Diatribiſt, that the Superſtition ſpoken of, was not S. Pauls, but the Jews, this could no way incommodate me, or hinder my pretenſions, in order to the main; for then, ſay I, it ſhall ſignify the Jews Religion ſimply, without any character of ill or good laid on it, as in * Quintilian, Primus Judaicæ Superſtitionis author, the firſt author of the Jewiſh Superſtition or Religion, and in * Ulpian, that Severus and Antoninus permitted thoſe to be capable of dignities, qui Judaicam Superſtitionem ſequuntur, who follow the Jewiſh Superſtition or Religion, and many the like.

SECT. VII.

The method of ſearch for the original notion of the word. Mr. Cawdries collections from the heathens. Among them Superſtition all one with Religion. Plutarch of the Sabbatick reſt. Sacrificing children to Moloch, was not to the true God, Jer. 32. 35. Lev. 20. 2. nor a bare uncommanded worſhip. The gloſſes of the Etymologiſt and Phavorinus.

THE 21. Section is a ſhort diſpatch of all that I had ſaid of the uſe of the word among other Authors from Section 14. to Section 27. All which Sections, though intirely deſigned to the diſcovering the true notion of the word, by that norma loquendi, the beſt rule to judge of words, the uſe of it among writers of all ſorts, are ſhortly cenſured as [a great deal of reading and learning to little purpoſe, except to cloud the buſineſs, to lead men away in a miſt from the true and proper ſenſe of the word among Chriſtians.] Numb. 1.

It ſeems they which receive benefit by being in the dark, are apt to miſtake light for miſts, and the Apoſtle hath given the reaſon, ἐλέγχονται ὑπὸ φωτὸς, they are reproved by the light. 'Tis certain the Chriſtians took the word whether Greek or Latin, from the heathens, which were before them; and accordingly, to judge of the propriety of the uſe of it, I thought my ſelf obliged to ſearch to the original, i. e. to the uſe of it among the heathens; and finding the Scripture uſe of it exactly agreeable to their acception of it, from whom the Scripture had it, and ſo likewiſe the Chriſtian Gloſſaries, that of Heſychius, Suidas, Phavorinus, the Etymologiſt and others, I thought this had been to ſome other purpoſe than only to cloud the buſineſs; And becauſe I continue ſtill in the ſame opinion, I refer the judicious Reader for three eminent teſtimonies more to the ſame purpoſe (out of Diod. Siculus of Iſmeto, out of Heraclitus, περὶ ἀπίστων, out of an edict of Tiberius ſet down by Joſephus) to the Annotations on Act. 17. By which, and thoſe already produced in the Sections, here thought fit to be deſpiſed by the Diatribiſt, it is moſt evident, that Religion and Superſtition were by them who were guilty of dæmon worſhip, or when uſed of them by others, taken, as exactly Synonyma, words importing the ſame thing. 2.

But againſt this the Diatribiſt conceives himſelf out of theſe very Sections to have gained ſomewhat to object, "It ſeems, ſaith he, the heathens did oft take the word in an ill ſenſe, and branded Reli- "gions which they did not like, by that name. Plutarch taxes the Jews for their Superſtition in "two things remarkable. Firſt, That when invaded, they would not riſe from their ſeats on the "Sabbath day, which was exceſs againſt the fourth Commandment, and groſs Superſtition. Second- "ly, Their killing and ſacrificing their children to Moloch, which being an horrid Superſtition, was "(as the former) intended as a worſhip to the true God, and yet was interpreted no better than ſa- "crificing to devils, Pſal. 106. 37. which though in other reſpects it was againſt the firſt Command- "ment groſs Idolatry, ſo in making it a worſhip of the true God (when he commanded it not, nei- "ther came it into his heart, as ſomewhere he ſayes) it was a kind of Superſtition againſt the ſecond "Commandment; concluding in a word, that the Etymologiſt ſpeaks fully his ſenſe, the word among "the heathen is taken for a good thing, but among Chriſtians for impiety. 3.

How ſolid this way of objecting is, will now ſoon be diſcerned, Firſt, By remembring in the gene- ral, that at the beginning of the Section the teſtimonies brought by me in thoſe Sections, were judged to be to little purpoſe but to cloud the buſineſs, and lead men away in a miſt, and yet now he can expreſs kindneſs to ſome of the teſtimonies, as thinking they may be uſeful to his pretenſions; which aſſures me, all the other might have been capable of the like favour and friendly reception from him, if they could any way have been perſwaded to do him ſervice. 4.

Secondly, To the heathens taking the word in an ill ſenſe, the anſwer is moſt obvious, ſo they did Religion too, and indifferently either, when either they that ſpake were Epicureans, enemies to all Religion, or when the Religions they ſpake of, were diſliked by them; and ſo ſure that proves nothing for the Diatribiſt. 5.

Thirdly, This is the anſwer alſo to what is obſerved from Plutarch, for he ſpeaks of the religions which he diſliked; the Jewiſh was one of them, and particularly their obſervation of Sabbatick reſts to the ruining their City, which he thought their Religion had bound them to, and never dreamt that they had miſtaken their Religion, or that their fourth Commandment allowed them greater liberty. 6.

Fourthly, That Plutarch mentions the killing and ſacrificing of children, he took that alſo for a part of ſome mens Religion, and thought he had reaſon to be diſſatisfied with it, and to make it an inſtance of the Quantum Religio potuit, how much evil Religion did in the world, ſtill making no diſtinction betwixt Religion and Superſtition. But here by the way the Diatribiſt hath a little miſtaken, in thinking that this bloody worſhip in ſacrificing their children to Moloch, was, as the former (i. e. as that of the ſtrict Judaical reſt in time of invaſion) intended as a worſhip to the true God. 7.

Certainly Moloch was no true God, but a falſe, the abomination of the children of Ammon, 1 Kin. 11. 7. and 2 Kin. 23. 13. thought by learned men to be a deified King of the Ægyptians, and ſo a dæmon, placed among the ſtars, the ſame that others make the planet Mars (ſee Kircheri Prodromus, Coptic. 1. 5.) and that ſacrifice, was the giving their ſeed to Moloch, that falſe God, Lev. 20. 2, 3, 4. or the making their ſons and daughters paſs through the fire to Moloch, Jer. 32. 45. and ſo no way intended to the true God. 8.

And whereas he ſaith this was interpreted no better than ſacrificing to devils, Pſal. 106. 37. 'tis ſtrange he ſhould not ſee or acknowledge that it was a downright ſacrificing to Moloch, a Dæmon, and not as to the true God; but then he could have had no pretence to make it an act of uncommanded worſhip, and ſo ſuch a kind of Superſtition as is chargeable on our Chriſtmaſs Feſtival; and then he had loſt all the advantage which this inſtance was to bring in to him. 9.

Toward this he thought to reap ſome benefit by that text of Scripture, He commanded it not, neither 10.

came it into his heart, as he ſomewhere ſayes] But why did he not tell us where God ſaith this? If his memory had failed, his Concordance would ſoon have helpt him to ſet down the place. But it was not for his turn it ſhould be examined. The place is Jer. 32. 35. and again Jer. 7. 31 and truly, belongs to theſe ſacrifices to Moloch; but then, God's not commanding, &c. ſignifies not only uncommanded worſhip, but by the figure μείωσις, ordinary in the Scripture, worſhip directly forbidden, under threat of exciſion, Lev. 20. 2. Whoſoever he be that giveth any of his ſeed to Moloch, he ſhall ſurely be put to death, the people of the land ſhall ſtone him with ſtones, and I will ſet my face againſt him, and cut him off from among his people, v. 3. And if the people of the land do any way hide their eyes from the man, when he giveth of his ſeed to Moloch, and kill him not, then will I ſet my face againſt that man and family, and will cut him off, and all that go a whoring after him, v. 4. and accordingly we ſee it in the Execution, Jer. 7. 31, 32. The valley of Tophet where they burnt their ſons and daughters in the fire, ſhall be called the valley of ſlaughter, for they ſhall bury in Tophet till there be no place.

11. And ſure this was not the manner of proceeding againſt thoſe that obſerved any feaſt or ſacrifice to the true God, which was not commanded or preſcribed by God; they that kept the Encænia were not thus judged; and therefore this was very little to the Diatribiſt's advantage, as now appears by examining the place; it is pity Mr. C. would not conſider it.

12. Laſtly, For the words in the Etymologiſt, which he ſaith are fully his ſenſe, 'tis again a miſtake, they are directly the contrary, Ἰσέον ὅτι παρὰ μὲν τοῖς Ἕλλησι, &c. It muſt be known that the word Superſtition is among the Gracians (or Gentiles) taken ἐπὶ καλῷ for a good thing, but among us Chriſtians ἐπὶ δ' ἀσεβείας for impiety, i. e. evidently the heathens and the Chriſtians uſe it for the ſame thing, the worſhip of dæmons, but that the Gentiles commend and account good, who uſe it, but we Chriſtians juſtly deem it the greateſt impiety.

13. Agreeable hereto again is that of Phavorinus a Chriſtian alſo. Δεισιδαιμονία τὸ πάντα σέβειν καὶ μὴ σεβάσμια, Superſtition is the worſhipping all things, even thoſe which are not to be worſhipt, and that δεισιδαίμων ſignifies ἀμφίβολος περὶ τὴν πίστιν, ἢ καὶ ὁ δεδιὼς τοὺς δαίμονας, one that is dubious concerning faith (as the Iſraelites betwixt God and Baal; or as Tertullian ſaith, if there were conceived more Gods than one, cultura ejus in anceps deduceretur, he ſhould not know whom to worſhip, whether one only or both, adv. Marc. l. 1. c. 5.) or he alſo that fears (or worſhips) dæmons, as the Aſſyrians in Samaria, that feared the Lord and ſerved their own Gods. And ſo ſtill this is as contrary to the Diatribiſts pretenſions as might be. And ſo much for that Section.

SECT. VIII.

Superſtition always ill, but not always exceſs. Probations from the uſe of words among heathens. The Quære of Divorce vindicated. Superſtitions not reproacht in the Romans by Polybius. Ignorance not preſently Superſtition. Ἀγνοοῦντες ἐυσεβεῖτε, Act. 17. The Iſraelites worſhipping the Calf. Δεισιδαιμονεστέρους ὑμᾶς θεωρῶ. Superſtitioſus noting exceſs.

Numb. 1. THE twenty ſecond Section makes a leap from the fourteenth to the twenty ſeventh, over twelve not very brief Sections; I ſuppoſe it is, becauſe he hath no leaſt objection to make againſt them (being not elſe very ſparing in this kind) and yet in them is contained my enumeration of all the notions, wherein the word Superſtition is or can be taken in the antient heathens, Scriptures, and Chriſtian gloſſaries, and the premiſſes on which the ſubſequent concluſions are founded, and cannot be denied while the premiſſes are granted, and the whole matter made clear, that none of the notions of the word is applicable to the benefit of the Diatribiſt's pretenſions.

2. Now in Section 27. it ſeems ſome flaws are to be found, as firſt, When I ſay 'tis inconſequent that Superſtition ſimply and abſolutely taken ſhould be reſolved in all Authors to ſignifie ſomewhat that is ill, particularly falſe worſhip, this, ſaith he, is not the queſtion, but whether in Scripture and Orthodox Divines it do not always ſignifie ſomething evil, particularly exceſſive and falſe worſhip. To this the anſwer is eaſie, that I am far from doubting that Superſtition is an ill thing, and therefore never meant to make that the queſtion; This appears of me, becauſe I every where acknowledge the word, Greek and Latin, to ſignifie the worſhip of dæmons or falſe Gods; only I could not but obſerve in the firſt place, that the heathens who are known to worſhip ſuch dæmons, and not to think that a fault in themſelves, did mean no new ill by that word (whether exceſs or other the like) either more or worſe than they ordinarily meant by Religion, this being indeed their Religion to worſhip many Gods.

3. This they muſt have done, if they had by that word underſtood an exceſs of Religion; and by their taking it in a good ſenſe, as Synonymous with Religion, it appears that this of exceſs was not eſteemed the due notion of it.

4. This I thought uſeful to be ſaid, that the very title of Superſtition might not defame every thing as an exceſs in Religion, and criminous, to which it was affixt, unleſs it might otherwiſe appear that there was really any ſuch evil in it; and this I ſaid πρὸς ἔνστασιν (to ſhew the abſurdneſs of their concluding, who taking the word Superſtition for a word of an univerſal ill ſavour, as ſignifying exceſs of Religion, firſt affix it to innocent ceremonies and inſtitutions, to which it no way belongs, and then infer them nocent, as being Superſtitious, without proving any charge of malignity againſt them) and as preparative to the diſcovery of the following miſtakes, rather than that I ever imagined Superſtition truly ſo called, to have no ill in it.

5. And therefore of this, any otherwiſe, than as I now ſay, and then meant, I ſhall make no queſtion, and on condition he will never apply the word Superſtition any otherwiſe, than the Scripture and antient Chriſtian writers apply it (i. e. to dæmon worſhip, or to undue worſhip of the true God, in the notion of indebitus or illegitimus cultus in Aquinas, not to each ſuch Super ſtatutum as he will call an exceſs, the uſing of each uncommanded ceremony and the like) I ſhall acknowledge the word always to ſignifie that, among all good writers, Heathen or Chriſtian, which we Chriſtians juſtly deem evil, and that was clearly the Etymologiſt's meaning, as we ſhewed in the laſt Section and againſt that, there is no colour of argument offered in all this long Sect.

For what if the vulgar tranſlation (which he ſets as the only inſtance of Popiſh Commentators) render δεισιδαιμονία by Superſtitio? what if the Papiſts pretend it not to be taken in a good ſenſe (whom I ſuppoſe far enough from yielding themſelves to be Superſtitious) doth that prove that Feſtus meant any exceſs by that word, or indeed any more than Religion? 6.

Next when he makes his obſervation, that in all my large diſcourſe I bring only heathens to ſhew the meaning of the word, and not one Divine, Greek or Latine Father, &c. who take it in a good ſenſe] this is neither true in the affirmation, for I bring the Scripture and the Chriſtian gloſſaries to teſtify all that I pretend to; nor yet in the application, for I do not pretend the word to ſignify that which a Chriſtian counts good, but among the heathen the worſhip of many Gods, which none but heathens can think to have no ill in it, and conſequently I pretend it only of them, and of thoſe that ſet down the uſe of words among them, and of S. Paul when he is not a finding that fault in them, Act. 17. 22. and ſo ſtill this is ſufficient to prove that the word originally ſignifies not any exceſs of Religion or any other evil, abſtracted from that of the Dæmon worſhip, &c. which was all that I had in deſign to conclude. 7.

And in making this uſe of heathen Authors, ſure I have done nothing which I ever blamed in any man elſe, as the Diatribiſt's margent accuſeth me, citing the Quære of Divorce, Section 58. where I thought it unreaſonable that all the antient Chriſtian writers ſhould not be as competent to give us the ſignification of πορνεία as Demoſthenes and Philo (and yet made no ſcruple to acquieſce in the notion, which either Demoſthenes or Philo gave us, Section 57.) 8.

For if he pleaſed to mark, there is here no difference between the heathen writers and others, Scripture and antient Chriſtians, concerning the meaning of the word Superſtition, all yielding it equally to ſignify the worſhip of many Gods (whereas there that other perſon whom I oppoſed, profeſt a contrariety, and then preferred the one before the other) To which yet it is neceſſarily conſequent, that in another inquiry, whether Superſtition were among Authors taken in a good ſenſe, ſome difference ſhould be obſerved between Authors heathen and Chriſtian, becauſe it is certain the heathen worſhip is by us Chriſtians moſt juſtly lookt on as an ill thing, being the worſhip of creatures, but by the heathens thought well of, as the Diatribiſt here confeſſeth, practiſed and commended, and ſo not lookt on any otherwiſe than Religion it ſelf, ἐπὶ καλῷ λεγόμενον, in the Etymologiſt, uſed for a good thing; conſequently, the thing which I conteſt, is not this, that the worſhip of Dæmons is or ever was true or lawful, but that beſides this, ſuppoſed by Chriſtians but denyed by heathens, to be evil (adding the like of illegitimate worſhip) there is nothing elſe which hath been lookt on as ſimply bad in Superſtition, particularly not the exceſs, as that ſignifies unpreſcribed uncommanded worſhip, which is the only matter of the preſent conteſt with ſuch as the Diatribiſt. 9.

And he doth but perplex and diſturb the matter when he ſaith the queſtion is, whether it doth not always in Scripture and Orthodox Divines ſignify exceſſive and falſe worſhip, for he muſt ſet the queſtion, as elſewhere he doth, of exceſſive, as that ſignifies no more than uncommanded worſhip, without the addition of being falſe, it being evident that I defend not falſe worſhip of any kind to be good, but that ceremonies or inſtitutions not commanded by God, may yet be perfectly lawful and blameleſs, and that that is the only queſtion between us. 10.

For the text of the Acts, c. 25. 19. I have anſwered already, and evidenced that Feſtus meant nothing ill by Superſtition; and the Doctors words cited from Sect. 24. of the ordinary practice of every Sect to diſlike the diſtant worſhip of others, and defame it under the title of Religion, doth no way prejudge this; becauſe it is certain Feſtus was no way factious for the Jews againſt Pauls Religion; No more doth the marginal citation from Sect. 22. where I have ſaid that Superſtition was made matter of reproach to the Romans; where Firſt, It was not Superſtition ſimply, but the μὴ καλαλιπεῖν ὑπόβολῆς, not coming ſhort of exceſs, of which that was ſaid that it was παρὰ τοῖς ἄλλοις ὀνειδιζόμενον, reproached by others, and yet as much commended by the Author Polybius in that place, and Secondly, That the old rule in Logick will always hold, there is no ſyllogizing from particulars, nor can this ever be formed into a regular ſyllogiſm or valid probation, ſome there were that reproacht the Romans Superſtition, therefore Feſtus reproacht Paul's Act. 25. 19. or ſpake of it by way of defamation. 11.

What remains of this Sect. belongs to the place Act. 17. 23. of which I had ſaid, Firſt, That the Apoſtle ſpeaking of thoſe whom he calls δεισιδαιμονίστερους, more Superſtitious than other men, tells them that they did ἀσεβεῖν worſhip the true God though ignorantly, Secondly, That he ſtiles them more religious than other men, meerly in relation to their worſhipping the unknown (which was the true) God, which others worſhipt not, and ſo meant no more by that phraſe than that they were more religious than other men, no way appearing to accuſe them of that as of their fault, but preparing thereby to declare to them that true God whom they worſhipt ignorantly. 12.

To this many things are here objected, Firſt, That their worſhipping the true God ignorantly with their own deviſed worſhip, was a Superſtition juſtly to be condemned, it being groſs Idolatry and ſinful Superſtition in the Iſraelites to worſhp the true God in the golden Calf.] 13.

I anſwer, their ignorance of the true God was juſtly to be condemned, according to that of Minutius Felix, Non minoris eſt ſceleris Deum ignorare quàm ladere, it is as great wickedneſs to be ignorant of God as to hurt him; or that of Triſmegiſtus (as I remember) ἄγνοια μανίας ἐστὶν, Ignorance of God is a ſpecies of madneſs, and in another of the ancients ſtyle, τις μέθη a kind of drunkenneſs of the ſoul; But that being granted, Firſt, This ignorance was not the thing that denominated them Superſtitious but their worſhipping many Gods, Secondly, their worſhipping the true God, though they knew him not, was no new ſpecies of Superſtition, wherein they exceeded others, Thirdly, Their worſhipping him with their own deviſed worſhip, was not it which is meant by their worſhipping him ignorantly, the words in the original are ὃν ἀγνοοῦντες ἐυσεβεῖτε, literally whom ye not knowing, or being ignorant of him, worſhip, i. e. worſhip him whileſt ye know him not, which no way refers to the manner of their worſhip, as deviſed by themſelves, but only to their ignorance of the God whom they thus worſhipt, which therefore the Apoſtle applies himſelf to cure, and accordingly it follows, him declare I unto you. 14.

Laſtly, Their worſhipping him as dwelling in Temples made with hands, i. e. in little Chaplets, or Shrines 15.

or Images, &c. v. 24. is not their Superſtition but Idol-worſhip, and is very much more than the uncommanded ceremonies will amount to, and ſo cannot be a proper inſtance of their own deviſed worſhip, in the Diatribiſts notion of the phraſe for all uncommanded worſhip; and ſure the Iſraelites worſhipping the true God in a golden Calf, is as little pertinent to that buſineſs; for if it be true, that they worſhipt none but the true God, then was that only Idolatry againſt the ſecond Commandment, not Superſtition or dæmon worſhip againſt the firſt; or if they worſhipt the Gods of the Ægyptians, or any one of them, Apis in that figure, then what was that to the worſhipping of the true God in an ignorant, or by themſelves deviſed manner?

16. Secondly, He ſaith my rendring the place more religious than other men, in relation to their worſhipping the unknown God, which others worſhipt not, is my gloſs, begs the queſtion, is againſt the text it ſelf, I perceive that in all things ye are too Superſtitious, both in their worſhipping many falſe Gods, and in their ignorant worſhip of the true, and in their vitious rites of worſhip, adding that this ſenſe the Doctor himſelf gave Sect. 11. I conſider and behold you in all things (or in all that I ſee of you) as men more Superſtitious than others.

17. Here I perceive my words are miſtaken, and therefore ſhall firſt anſwer to that; then, to the former parts of the objection. The Greek is διὰ πάντα ὡς δεισιδαιμονεστέρους ὑμᾶς θεωρῶ, literally, in all things, or in all reſpects, I look upon you as more Superſtitious, i. e. (I take it, and I thought I had ſufficiently expreſt it before) conſidering all the altars and inſcriptions, i. e. the names of your deities, which I ſee or behold, I conclude that you are more Superſtitious or religious, worſhip more Gods or dæmons, than other men.

18. That this is the ſenſe, I am inclined to believe by the reaſon of his ſpeech rendred in the next, διερχόμενος γὰρ, &c. for paſſing through and contemplating your worſhips, i. e. the Gods which you worſhip, I found alſo an altar on which was inſcribed, To the unknown God. The ſum of which is, that in the ſurvey of their altars, which contained the names of their Gods, he found one altar remarkably more, than is uſual among other people, that to the unknown God, the true God of heaven, which others in their πολυθεότης or worſhip of many Gods, did not worſhip; which being the proof or reaſon (expreſt by the γὰρ for) of the former ſpeech, muſt needs give me authority to interpret it in proportion thereto, that conſidering all that he had ſeen of them, peculiarly that altar to the unknown God, he concluded them more Superſtitious, i. e. worſhippers of more Gods than other folks.

19. That the Athenians truly were ſo eſteemed, appears evidently by what was ſaid in the Treatiſe of Superſtition, Section 11. and hath here formerly been added to that head, and therefore that will very fitly be the notion of the word, not too Superſtitious, but literally more Superſtitious than others; eſpecially if it be remembred, that the bare addition of the worſhip of the true God (however unknown to them) to their other δεισιδαιμονία or worſhip of many Gods, cannot be a new fault in them, diſtinct from the other, or a ſuperaddition to the guilts of other men.

20. All which being conſidered, it now appears, Firſt, How far from truth it is, which is here ſuggeſted, that Pauls ſpeech of δεισιδαιμονεστέρους θεωρῶ (however rendred) belongs both to their worſhipping ſo many falſe Gods, and to their ignorant worſhip of the true, and to their vitious rites of worſhip; when it clearly belongs but to one, their worſhipping the unknown God, which others worſhipt not. Secondly, How far my words Section 11. were miſtaken or perverted by him; Thirdly, How far my interpretation hath been from oppoſing the text it ſelf, being the clear importance of the text conſidered with S. Pauls reaſon, as the key by which to enter into the true meaning of it; and laſtly, how far this is from any begging the queſtion, when I proved ſo largely whatſoever I ſaid, and when no anſwer is here offered to thoſe proofs, and yet, if there were any need, here have been added farther convincing confirmations of the ſame thing, if yet they may deſerve to be taken notice of.

21. And this is all that is in the leaſt degree needful to be ſaid to this Section 22. unleſs I yet add, that thoſe words in the cloſe of it, cited from me, that Section 31. Superſtitioſus in the poſitive ſignifies exceſs more than in the comparative, are not very intelligible, which they would ſurely have been, to me at leaſt, if they had rightly reported my ſenſe.

22. That which I ſaid is no more than this, that Superſtitioſus by force of the termination, oſus, may ſignifie an exceſs, and that ſo Religioſus may alſo; but what is that to the uſe of the word, whether in the poſitive or the comparative, when it is the bare rendring of the Greek δεισιδαίμων, as here it is, which no way ſignifies thus?

SECT. IX.

The Diatribiſt's conceſſion of the innocence of unpreſcribed ceremonies, and ſo of all that is demanded. His cenſure of himſelf and Chamier. Authority in a Church to inſtitute Ceremonies. Abſtaining from ceremonies, becauſe commanded by men, or abuſed by Papiſts.

Numb. 1. THE next or 23. Section is very brief, but yet ſeems to me to be very conſiderable, and that in ſuch a degree, that it might well make an end of this debate betwixt the Diatribiſt and me; for having exactly ſet down a ſecond inconſequence (by me noted and concluded to be ſuch, from the opening of the Greek and Latin words) viz. "that the uſe of ceremonies or rites in the worſhip of God, "if not diſtinctly preſcribed by the example or precept of Chriſt, ſhould be called Superſtition, and "for that condemned] he anſwers no more but this. [I believe this is a miſtake; none that I know, "make ſuch a conſequence, but rather thus, that what rite or ceremony ſoever is made a part of "worſhip, without ſuch example or precept of Scripture, is Superſtitious and therefore con-"demned.

2. I ſhall not here indeavour to perſwade the Diatribiſt, that he knows ſome who condemn uncommanded rites as Superſtitious, becauſe Super ſtatutum, ſuch as kneeling at the Euchariſt, uſing the croſs in baptiſm, bowing at the name of Jeſus; but taking him at his word, I beſeech him to tell me, why then he

he undertook the confutation of the Treatiſe of Superſtition, which, he muſt know, contended no more than this, being deſigned to this only end, the averting that envy and calumny, that was then frequently but unjuſtly caſt upon our Church, upon the account of ceremonies, and which was ſince in the Tract of Feſtivals, no farther applied, than as that analogie would juſtly bear, which was betwixt uncommanded rites and uncommanded dayes of worſhip, betwixt unpreſcribed geſtures, and times, both which are known to be but circumſtances and acceſſories, no eſſential parts or branches of worſhip.

This truly were very ſtrange for him to be ignorant of; As it is, 'tis the yielding me the whole 3.
cauſe, and I have no more to contend for, but only peace, and what by perfect analogie from one circumſtance of worſhip to another, will irrefragably be concluded from that which is here granted by him.

'Tis now pitty that we that are thus ſuddenly pieced, ſhould ever fall out again; Nay we are like- 4.
ly, if words may be believed, to be yet more firmly knit together and conſolidated, for Section 24. in anſwer to the third inconſequence noted by me ["that men on pretence and in the name of piety, "ſhould abſtain from ſome obſervances (indifferent) as Superſtitious, either becauſe commanded by "lawful authority, or abuſed by Papiſts] he ſpeaks clearly that it is a worſe miſtake, and that he be- "lieves I cannot give an inſtance of one underſtanding Chriſtian, that ever did abſtain from obſer- "vances indifferent, becauſe commanded by lawful authority, but rather that they were thought not "indifferent, but obtruded on them as parts of worſhip, and ſo likewiſe for the other, that they "have been uſed by Papiſts, is not all, but that by them they have been abuſed and counted parts of "worſhip, and may eaſily return to be ſo accounted by others.

But to this I muſt reply, leſt by ſilence I incur the guilt of ſcandal of having wronged others, and 5.
of writing all that hath been written on this Theme, without any adverſary to provoke me to it. Firſt then, I profeſs to be able to give inſtance of many, that were baptized into our common faith, and ſo were Chriſtians (how deeply underſtanding I pretend not to judge) who have abſtained from the uſe of ceremonies meerly upon this ſcore, becauſe commanded by their Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Superiours, the King and Biſhops, by Canon Eccleſiaſtical; This, ſaid they, was laying more burthens on them than God had laid, and ſo uſurping on their Chriſtian liberty. And in ſtead of naming thoſe men, without their conſent, for that muſt now be the vilifying them, the involving them under the Diatribiſts cenſure, that they are not underſtanding Chriſtians, I ſhall name one on whom he may paſs what judgment he ſhall pleaſe, having full power to do it, this very Diatribiſt himſelf, p. 31. Where firſt, He hath theſe words, If men may be Judges what are fit for number and wholeſomeneſs, every after comer will think himſelf as wiſe as he that went before, till they have loaded the Chriſtian above the Jew. Secondly, That the learned Chamier hath well obſerved, that there may be many miſchiefs in a few ceremonies, if the authority to inſtitute them be in the Church, or any man or men.

The former of theſe ſpeeches is pretty home to the point in hand, for if the objection to the number 6. or wholeſomneſs of ceremonies be this, that men are judges of them, as they always are when men command them, then ſure it is the power of the lawful magiſtrate (for he is a man or men) to command; which is the ground of the quarrel; and they that quarrel thus, and abſtain from indifferent ceremonies upon this ſcore, muſt abſtain becauſe commanded by lawful authority. As for example, I ſuppoſe bowing when Jeſus is named in the publick worſhip (or when Chriſt, or when the Holy Ghoſt) to be in it ſelf lawful or indifferent, becauſe no where forbidden by God; I ſuppoſe farther, that being ſo, this and a few other ſuch ceremonies may very ſafely be uſed by a Chriſtian, though they were not commanded; I now demand, may a few, namely, three or four ſuch ceremonies be lawfully preſcribed or commanded by the Supream power in any Church to all under that authority? And may all under that authority ſafely obſerve ſuch ceremonies ſo commanded? If they may, then men may be judges what ceremonies are fit both for number and wholeſomeneſs, which is contrary to the direct words of the Diatribiſt, in the former part of this ſpeech; If they may not, then it ſeems what was before lawful and indifferent, is now, ſince it was commanded, and by no other change, become unlawful, which was the inconſequence I pointed at, and it ſeems miſtook not in thinking ſome body (it now ſeems this Diatribiſt) to be the very perſon guilty of it.

But then the latter ſpeech is as punctual to it as could be well imagined (and if the Diatribiſt have 7. cited duly, Chamier and he are both of this opinion) For it being certain, that nothing can be commanded by lawful authority, unleſs the authority of inſtituting it be either in the Church, or man, or men; it muſt neceſſarily follow upon the aſſerting of the many miſchiefs in a few ceremonies, if the authority to inſtitute them be in the Church, or man, or men, that there muſt be many miſchiefs in their being commanded by lawful authority; and then, no underſtanding Chriſtian can think it fit for him by obſerving ſuch commands to be acceſſory to or guilty of the introducing thoſe miſchiefs, and ſo muſt abſtain on that one account of the Churches exerciſing ſuch an authority, which was the very thing I deemed, and noted to be ſo inconſequent.

Nay the very words of the Diatribiſt in this place, when he charges me of miſtake, being theſe 8.
[that they that abſtain from indifferent obſervances, do it becauſe they were thought not indifferent, but obtruded on them as parts of worſhip] are either a calumny againſt the Governours of our Church, or elſe they aſſert what he diſclaims ſo ſolemnly.

For I ſhall demand, Is his meaning this, that the Governours of the Church thought the ceremonies 9.
ſimply neceſſary and not indifferent, antecedently to the command of the Church, i. e. neceſſary by the Divine Law, though the Church had never commanded them? If that be his meaning (as ſeems moſt probable by what follows [obtruded on them as parts of worſhip] for all parts of worſhip are neceſſary by divine Law, though never commanded by man) then this is a direct calumny againſt the Governours of the Church, who never thought all ceremonies to be preſcribed by God's Law, and therefore preſcribed them by Canon Eccleſiaſtical, which argues that they eſteemed them not as Divine but Human Laws, never obtruded them as parts of worſhip, but as ceremonies for uniformity and decency, and as uſeful toward aſſiſting, inciting, and expreſſing of piety outwardly.

But if his meaning be, that being in themſelves indifferent, they became neceſſary and not indiffe- 10.
rent by the intervening of the Churches command, and ſo were obtruded on men as parts of worſhip (as that may poſſibly ſignify with him parts of obedience or duty to God by virtue of his command to obey our Superiors) and if this were the thing diſliked in the ceremonies preſcribed by the Church, then again tis evident that their being commanded by lawful authority, is the only objection to them, and ground of abſtaining from them, in the judgment of this Diatribiſt, at the very point of time, when he ſo ſolemnly diſclaims it.

that

11. So likewiſe may be ſaid to his account of thoſe things which are abſtained from, becauſe they have been uſed by Papiſts, This, ſaith he, is becauſe they have been by them abuſed and counted parts of worſhip. But truly I cannot with truth thus affirm of the Papiſts, that any of the ceremonies which we uſe from them, were ever by them accounted parts of worſhip, but only as uſeful wholeſome ceremonies appointed by the Church.

12. Of the difference between parts of worſhip, and circumſtances of time, place, geſture, acceſſaries, of worſhip, I have ſpoken at large, c. 2. §. 3. And though hereafter §. 28. this difference be fully conſented to by the Diatribiſt in theſe words [ſome rites and ceremonies of worſhip are rather called circumſtances of worſhip, time, place, geſture, which are common adjuncts of Religious and Civil affairs, than properly Religious, much leſs to be accounted parts of worſhip] yet by what hath here been ſaid by him, it appears that all his skill lies in managing that one fallacy, putting all ceremonies and inſtitutions of the Church under that one ambiguous phraſe, uncommanded worſhip, perſwading himſelf or others that we introduce new parts of worſhip, and ſo do contrary to God's command, who hath ſet down the rule of worſhip, i. e. preſcribed all the parts and ſpecies of worſhip; whereas he cannot but know, that all that we ſay in aſſerting whether of Ceremonies or Feſtivals, is no more but this, that each of theſe, not as parts of worſhip, but as decent attendants of it, though not inſtituted by God, have yet been lawfully and orderly appointed and obſerved by the Church of God in general, and are to us become matter of obligation, by that means, and as preſcribed by the Governors of our particular Church, to which our obedience is due, and ſo that there is no degree of Superſtition in us in doing that which is thus required of us, nor in thoſe that require it, in laying this obligation upon us.

13. And ſo much for his animadverſions on the three inconſequences, from which if he would really and in earneſt clear himſelf, theſe debates were certainly concluded.

SECT. X.

Strictures on ſome particulars in the remaining Sections. What exceſs Divines mean by Superſtition. What S. Auguſtine. Obligation to performance, without being parts of worſhip. Obſervers of order more Religious, more acceptable than others. The reaſon why Jewiſh ceremonies are interdicted. The Church of England ſparing in Ceremonies. Ceremonies not foreſhewing Chriſt, lawful to be retained by Chriſtians. The abſtinence from blood, long continued in the Church. The Saturday Sabbath. Negative wholſomeneſs not ſufficient to recommend Ceremonies. All folly in worſhip, is not Superſtition. The opinion of the Antient Church worth conſidering. No duties appointed for the circumſtances ſake. Time or place inſtituted by God, is a circumſtance, as well as when by man. Apoſtolical Divine.

Numb. 1. THAT which follows Section 25. &c. is for the moſt part but revolving the ſame things again that have hitherto been ſpoken to, or the hiding himſelf in thoſe obſcurities which have now been explained, ſometimes granting all that I aſſert, ſometimes denying it in ambiguous phraſes; as, that all exceſs in worſhip not preſcribed, is a nimiety and culpable Sect. 25. that rites be they never ſo few, if introduced as parts of worſhip, are Superſtitious v. 28. and the like; And the Reader muſt not be condemned to the penance, of having all that hath been ſaid on theſe heads, repeated again, and therefore I am both in juſtice and charity obliged to omit particular replies κατ' ἀδρα to the remaining Sections, yet ſhall read them over as carefully as I can, and obſerve whatever I diſcern may be thought pertinent to his cauſe, which hath not hitherto been ſpoken to.

2. As Firſt, When he ſaith Section 26. that all Divines generally condemn it; I anſwer, they condemn Superſtition, but mean not by it, every exceſs in worſhip not preſcribed, as that phraſe comprehends all ceremonies and feſtivals not commanded by God; and thoſe Divines that condemn this under the name of Superſtition, are the men of whom only my words are to be underſtood, that they are ſo few and ſo modern, and of ſo ſmall authority, that they were ſcarce worth producing, no antient writer having ever condemned all ceremonies and feſtivals, which are not commanded by God, under the title of Superſtition; and that * Aquinas's words are no way appliable to it, hath been already ſhewed.

* Secunda ſecundæ qu. 92. art. 1.

3. As for S. Auguſtines place produced by me Section 33. from whence he collects that an inſtitution of worſhip by men may be Superſtitious, I anſwer, that that Father ſpeaks there of thoſe qui inſtituerunt Deorum ſimulachra, who inſtituted images of Gods, which the Diatribiſt could not but ſee, if he had pleaſed, and of ſuch inſtitutions I grant that they not only may be, but are Superſtitious, but our ceremonies and Feſtivals are no Deorum Simulachra, images of the Gods, and ſo ſure not lyable to his cenſure.

4. Secondly, When Section 29. he affirms of uſages in themſelves lawful and allowable, that if they were taught or practiſed as neceſſary, or as making the obſervers more Religious than others, or more acceptable to God, then they would be parts of worſhip] (and then I muſt ſuppoſe by his tenure of doctrine, Superſtitious) I anſwer. Firſt, That decency, or uniformity, or obedience to Superiors may be a competent ground to turn lawful ceremonies into neceſſary, and on thoſe grounds joyned together, I may kneel and teach kneeling at the taking of the Euchariſt to be neceſſary, viz. not by any neceſſity of divine precept terminated immediately in this geſture, but by ſuch neceſſity as Humane Laws, by force of the fifth Commandment, and πείθεσθε ἡγουμένοις, obey thoſe that are placed over you, lay upon me; and this is far from making this kneeling a part of worſhip, when we know it is but a geſture, and circumſtance of it. Secondly, That they which pray reverently and decently, obſerve uniformity, obey the lawful commands of the Church, are in ſo doing more Religious and more acceptable to God than others, who cæteris paribus, do it not; pray irreverently, act undecently, obſerve not uniformity, diſobey the lawful commands of their Eccleſiaſtical Superiours, or than they which perform the ſame things upon their own choices. So ſaith Leo de jejun. 7. menſ. Serm. 3. Divinarum namq; reverentia Sanctionum inter qualibet ſpontaneæ obſervantiæ ſtudia habet ſemper privilegium ſuum, ut ſacratius ſit quod publica lege celebratur, quàm quod privatâ inſtitutione penditur. The reverence of the Divine, i. e. Eccleſiaſtical ſanctions have always this priviledge among ſpontaneous obſervances, that whatſoever is performed by publick law, is more ſacred, than what is done upon private inſtitution. This I hope I ſhall not need farther to prove; and if not, then ſure the teaching this or acting on theſe grounds, will not make my allowable action criminous or Superſtitious.

Thirdly, When Section 31. he finds fault with men for ſaying that the ſole reaſon why old Jewiſh ceremonies are interdicted us Chriſtians, is, becauſe the obſerving thoſe which foreſhewed Chriſt, and teaching the neceſſity of them, would be the denying Chriſt to be come, parallelling this with an anſwer of Bellarmine's, and rendring an account from Chamier, that there was another reaſon of their abrogation, becauſe they did load the conſcience with a yoke of a multitude of ceremonies, and that this is common to thoſe, and to the traditions of men] I anſwer, Firſt, That it is one thing for Jewiſh ceremonies to be interdicted Chriſtians, another for them not to be impoſed; the weight of the yoke, was the reaſon why they were not to be impoſed, and to that the Diatribiſts reaſons in the concluſion of Section 31. do all belong; but my ſpeech was evidently of their being interdicted, and that meant not only of the multitude of them, but of every or each of them, and the ſole reaſon of that was this which I aſſigned; for if the weight of the multitude were at all conſidered in that, then any one of them, which ſure was not a multitude, would have been lawful, by name circumciſion, or ſacrificing, or the like, againſt which yet the Chriſtian interdict lies, as well as againſt the whole number. 5.

Secondly, 'Tis certain that in the application of this inſtance to ceremonies (not preſcribed by God in a Chriſtian Church) there is great difference betwixt the Church of which Bellarmine was an advocate, and that which I undertook to defend. In the Church of Rome there is a great multitude of ceremonies and feſtivals, which may be capable of the title of weight and yoke, but the Church of England is far more ſparing, and I had fully conſented to the rule of paucæ & ſalubres, few and ſalubrious, and was now diſputing for the lawfulneſs of ſome ceremonies, uncommanded by God, not for the expedience of near ſo many, as other Chriſtians both of the Weſtern and Eaſtern Churches have received into their Canons, and proportionable to that, was any one, or never ſo few old Jewiſh ceremonies, for the abrogation of which I was therefore obliged to give ſuch an account, as was not founded in the multitude of them, and conſequently could not take either Chamier's or the Diatribiſt's advice, to render any other than what I rendred, as I thought, from ſuch like plain words of the Apoſtle, We have an altar, of which they have not power to eat, that ſerve the tabernacle, Heb. 13. 6.

In this matter the Diatribiſt asks a ſubtle queſtion, Whether if a Chriſtian had obſerved ſome Jewiſh ceremony, which did not foreſhew Chriſt to come, but ſignificant only of ſomething paſt (though they had not taught it neceſſary) the Apoſtle would not have blamed them for that as ſuperſtitious; and ſo for any new rites and ceremonies? To which I anſwer confidently, and to the latter firſt, that he would not, and the very asking or queſtioning it in that form, as if it could not be denied but the Apoſtle would have blamed them, is the known fallacy of begging the queſtion: For the whole matter of controverſy betwixt me and the Diatribiſt is this, whether every deviſed rite or ceremony not commanded by God, be ſuperſtitious? 7.

And to the former part of the queſtion I anſwer as confidently, and ask him firſt, what he thinks of the abſtinence from things ſtrangled, and all eating of bloud, was not that a Jewiſh ceremony? and was not that obſerved by Chriſtians, Act. 15. and did the Apoſtles blame it as ſuperſtitious? Certainly they did not. Nay, did not this obſervance continue among Chriſtians for many ages? Ne animalium quidem ſanguinem in epulis habemus, ſuffocatis & morticinis abſtinemus, we have not the bloud of any living creatures in our feaſts, we abſtain from things ſtrangled, and that die of themſelves? ſaith Tertullian, Apol. c. 9. And Lucian tells us how his Peregrinus was rejected by the Chriſtians, ὤφθη γάρ τι, ὡς οἶμαι, ἐδίων ἀπορρήτων ἀυτοῖς, for eating ſome of their forbidden meats, which ſure belongs to this matter; and in Euſebius's Hiſtory, l. 5. c. 1. Biblis thus vindicates the Chriſtians from the accuſation of eating of children, becauſe, ſaith ſhe, μηδὲ ἀλόγων ξώων αἷμα φαγεῖν ἐξὸν, we count it not lawful to eat the bloud of unreaſonable creatures. If this be not perfectly home to his queſtion, I ſhall then proceed, and alledge for my inſtance the known practice of the Chriſtian Church of the Apoſtles and pureſt time, who as they celebrated the weekly Lords day on the firſt of the week, in commemoration of Chriſts reſurrection, ſo they continued the obſervation of the Saturday Sabbath on the laſt day of the week, in remembrance of the Creation of the World. The cuſtom appears in Tertullian de Monogam. and was continued to the time of the Laodicean Council, which orders that not only the Law, as Act. 15. 21. but the Goſpel alſo ſhould be read that day. And the words of Balſamon are clear, παρὰ τῶν ἁγίων πατέρων ἐξισώθησαν δὲ ὅλως χαρὶν τοῖς κυριακοῖς τὰ σάββατα, the Sabbaths were by the holy Fathers almoſt quite equalled to the Lords dayes: and a great deal more to the ſame purpoſe, as is elſewhere ſhewed in the Expoſition of the fourth Commandment. 8.

Fourthly, When Section 32. he ſo reports my words as to conclude me to affirm, that if ceremonies be but harmleſs, or negatively wholeſome, there cannot be too much of them, This is a plain changing of my ſenſe into that which is moſt contrary to it; For my words are plain, without his gloſs, that if they be poſitively wholeſom or tending to edification (not contenting my ſelf with negatively wholeſom or harmleſs, or with any thing leſs than poſitive wholeſomneſs) then there will be little reaſon to accuſe them of exceſs, then they will rather help devotion than incumber it, the fear of which was the main objection againſt the multitude of them. 9.

Fifthly, When Section 35. he pretends to prove all folly and vanity in the worſhip of God, to be ſuperſtition, by demanding what Superſtition is, but folly and vanity?] this is a meer paralogiſm never reducible into a Logical mood and figure) by ſuppoſing things to be convertible, which are not, as, if I ſhould prove a particular ſubſtance (for example, the ſoul of man) to be a body, becauſe every body, is a ſubſtance, The anſwer would be eaſie, by ſaying every body is a ſubſtance, but every ſubſtance is 10.

not a body; ſo in like manner, every ſuperſtition is folly, and vanity, but every folly and vanity, even in the worſhip of God, is not ſuperſtition, This was a little too groſs a Sophiſm to impoſe it ſelf upon the Diatribiſt, and he now ſees a ſmall meaſure of ſubtilty was ſufficient to enable me for the diſcovering of it.

11. Sixthly, When Section 34. on occaſion of my ſpeaking of that one kind of exceſs, of placing more virtue in ſome things than belongs to them, he demands what I mean by [or in the eſtimation of the purer ages of the Church] and whether the purer ages of the Church, after the Apoſtles, had power to put virtue into things which they had not either naturally or by the rule of Gods word? I anſwer, that I never thought of any ſuch thing, that my meaning is plain enough, if he would pleaſe to ſee it in the end of Section 45. viz. that the thing, there mentioned, the ſign of the Croſs and the parva Evangelia, and the like, had not either naturally or by the rule of Gods word, or in the eſtimation of the purer ages of the Church, that force or virtue in them, which in the latter impurer ages they were thought to have: and I wonder what difficulty there was in underſtanding, or fault in affirming this, which hath no more dangerous intimation, than that the opinion or eſtimation of the pureſt ages of the Church, i. e. the firſt and neareſt to the Apoſtles times, were, in any ſuch controverſie as this, very fit to be conſidered in their due place, i. e. next after the Apoſtles themſelves.

12. Seventhly, When Section 30. concerning holineſs, or ſeparation to holy from common uſes, he promiſes to ſpeak ſomewhat conſiderable, and under that head tells us that there is this difference between times and places ſeparated by God, and thoſe which are ſeparated by men, that the former require holy duties to till them up, i. e. that the duties are appointed for the time or places ſake, but the latter are to wait upon holy duties, the time or place are appointed for the duties ſake] I muſt ſtill challenge his promiſe, whereby he is yet our debtor of ſomewhat conſiderable. For certainly prayer and faſting and ſacrifices among the Jews, all duties appointed by God (as in ſtead of the laſt, the offertory or alms among Chriſtians) were not appointed for time or places ſake; holy dayes and holy places, the weekly Sabbath, and the annual day of Expiation, and the tabernacle and Temple at Jeruſalem, were never the end for which prayer, &c. were inſtituted, nor is it imaginable how they ſhould, when each of thoſe duties, viſibly prayer and ſacrifice, were appointed and practiſed before there was any ſuch thing, as Tabernacle or Temple inſtituted by God.

13. Again, the time or place, when inſtituted by God himſelf, is as truly a circumſtance of worſhip as when inſtituted by man, and duty is equally the ſubſtance: and it can with no probability be affirmed, that the ſubſtance is appointed for the circumſtances ſake, or (as he is pleaſed to ſpeak) to till up the circumſtances, any otherwiſe than he would ſay, ſubſtances were created to till up accidents, the body for the colours ſake.

14. As for his charge at the end of Sect. 39. that I make difference betwixt Apoſtolical and divine inſtitutions, and therein vary from my reſolution of the firſt Quære, Section 22. It is ſoon diſpatcht by acknowledging I do not think that the Apoſtles were God, and thereupon for perſpicuity ſake, I made theſe ſeveral heads of inſtitutions, ſome by Chriſt, ſome by the Apoſtles, inſpired, and commiſſionated by Chriſt; the former I called Divine, the ſecond Apoſtolical, as that is not perſonally and immediately divine, yet not at all doubting, or giving any cauſe of doubt, whether the latter were not of divine original and obligation alſo, wherein ſure I ſpake after the example and manner of men, and that in order to diſtinctneſs and perſpicuity, not foreſeeing ſuch cavils as this, when I thus ſpake.

15. Eighthly, What follows of Will-worſhip in the end of this Exercitation, muſt be reſerved to the next Exercitation, which is the place deſigned for it; and for the Diatribiſt to take it here for granted, as he doth, that my voluntary oblation is an eminent Species of Superſtition, againſt which, puniſhment is denounced in the ſecond Commandment; when he knows that whole Tract of Will-worſhip undertakes to demonſtrate the contrary; what is this but a meer begging of the Queſtion, and that a prime ſort of fallacious arguing, the ſolemn refuge of thoſe which are deſtitute of all other?

SECT. XI.

A Vindication of the Tract of Superſtition from uncharitableneſs.

Numb. 1. THeſe few things being thus ſhortly replyed to, by way of Stricture, there remains now no more on this firſt head of diſcourſe, but to vindicate and approve my charity to the Diatribiſt, as I have hitherto done my doctrine againſt him. And as this is by his concluſion impoſed on me as my task, ſo I doubt not but to find it an eaſy one, if he will weigh my actions in the ſame balance which he uſeth for his own, nay I wiſh he could as eaſily clear himſelf, who hath thus judged me.

2. His words are theſe, Section 43. by way of concluſion of that firſt Exercitation, "And now the "Doctor may be pleaſed to review, and if he will, recal his bitter falſe uncharitable concluſion, Sect. "57, 58. unbeſeeming both his piety and gravity. For now it will appear that the charge of Super-"ſtition on ſome men is no Mormo, nor yet unjuſt, but what is avowed by himſelf and party to be "their opinion and practice, and what is proved to be really Superſtitious according to the true no-"tion of the word Superſtition among Reformed Orthodox Divines.

3. In obedience to his admonition, and in a ſolemn dread of having ſaid any thing bitterly, falſely, and uncharitably, and without any manner of incitation againſt the Diatribiſt, who uſeth this language (which if it be not found to have perfect truth in it, muſt be acknowledged to be very uncharitable, I need not add, bitter toward me) I have warily and ſuſpiciouſly reviewed thoſe Sections, and I ſhall deſire the indifferent Reader to do ſo too, and to tell me what ſyllable or minuteſt part of them there is, which can any way deſerve from any diſpaſſionate perſon, the title either of falſe in any degree, or of uncharitable or bitter in relation to any man then or now living.

4. For this I muſt premiſe, that the ſevereſt Satyre againſt a vice, and not a perſon, which carries perfect truth and juſtice in it, that repreſents a damnable ſin in the ugliеſt colours, and no otherwiſe reflects flects upon the perſon of any man, than as his own conſcience ſhall be thus awakened with a ſight of his own guilt, is ſo far from either uncharitable or bitter, (unleſs in the notion wherein the wholeſomeſt Phyſick or moſt neceſſary Chirurgery muſt undergo the ſame cenſure) that it is the greateſt and moſt obliging Chriſtian act of mercy, and kindneſs, and ſovereign charity, that piety and gravity can ſuggeſt to any. And unleſs it aſperſe (by affixing ſuch vices to) particular perſons, eſpecially thoſe who are not guilty of them (as here the Diatribiſt hath in plain words affixt that foul ſin of Superſtition on the Doctor perſonally, and inlarged it to his party, which he knows muſt involve all the obedient ſons of the Church of England, for the Doctor cannot with any tolerable charity be ſaid or thought to be of any other party) there is no ground of charge of the leaſt aſperity in this.

And then it is moſt certain that thoſe two Sections can no wiſe fall under this cenſure, the ſumm of 5.
them being no more but this, that if the crime of Superſtition were faſtned on none but thoſe on whom the Scripture directs to faſten it, all that have oppoſed our Church in point of rites and ceremonies, and branded the innocent as guilty of no leſs crime than Superſtition, muſt be obliged to return to peace and charity, and perſwaſions of kindneſs toward us; whereas the contrary humor of thoſe who oppoſe and malign our Church, daily inflames and advances into that diabolical ſin of calumniating, and accuſing the moſt innocent obſervances of thoſe, whom they have undertaken to oppoſe, and never conſiders or looks on thoſe many groſſer crimes, ſpiritual pride, uncharitableneſs, faction, nay ſacriledge and profaneneſs it ſelf, with ſo much expreſſion of averſion or diſlike, as on the uſage of a few and wholeſome ceremonies.

This is, as near as I can briefly paraphraſe it, the ſenſe of thoſe two Sections, and all the aſperity 6.
that is there diſcoverable, is but this, that enemies and calumniators have learnt two of the Devils attributes, Σαλανᾶς or ἐχθρὸς ἀνὴρ, and διάβολος or καλήγορος, τῶν ἀδελφῶν, and as long as this hath palpable truth in it, and when I applied it not (ſo much as in my thoughts) either to this Diatribiſt, whoſe name I think I had never heard of, nor to any other particular perſon, and as long as it was viſible that there was ſuch enmity abroad in this nation, which thus fortified it ſelf by calumniating others, and it being certain that it was perfect duty of charity, to indeavour the deterring and preſerving brethren and fellow Chriſtians from ſuch guilts and dangers, and that the pointing at other ſins that much more juſtly deſerved cenſure, might be uſeful to that end, by way of but neceſſary diverſion, I can with perfect peace of mind review thoſe Sections, not diſcerning any man, or virtue, moral or Chriſtian, any branch of either part of my duty, againſt which I have offended; And I now deſire the Diatribiſt, if he be not fully of my perſwaſion, that he deſcend to the particularity, and tell me the man in the world to whom I was in thoſe Sections uncharitable or bitter, and firſt to whom uncharitable; and then for the falſeneſs, that hath by all this reply to this Diatribe, been, I hope, ſufficiently conteſted.

And having ſaid thus much in vindication of my ſelf, I can very well abſtain from making uſe of 7.
the advantage, which is here viſibly given me, of more than recriminating; I am ſo well ſatisfied with my own innocence, that I cannot be farther gratified with the contemplation of others guilts.

And ſo much for his firſt exercitation, having I hope competently ſecured the obſervance of the 8.
rites and ceremonies of our Church from being the introducing of any new worſhip, or criminous exceſs againſt any of the Commandments of the firſt table, and conſequently from the charge of Superſtition in any juſtifiable notion, or Etymologie, or acception of the word, not taking that of Super Statutum to be ſuch.

CHAP. V.

Of Will-worſhip.

SECT. I.

The ſtate of the Queſtion. Will-worſhip diſtinguiſht from the circumſtances of it. The matter of mans will of three ſorts The ſix ſeveral poſſible notions of Will-worſhip. The application of them to the matter in hand. The vanity of the Diatribiſts diſtinction. The ſcope of the ſecond Commandment.

IN the Diatribe of Will-worſhip, the firſt complaint is, that the Doctor had not (as it became him) diſtinguiſhed the words ἐθελοθρησκεία in Greek, or Will-worſhip in Engliſh, before he began his defence of them] and to repair this unbecoming defect on the Doctors part, the Diatribiſt is pleaſed to do it for him, by aſſigning it a double notion, Firſt, For voluntary, ſpontaneous or willing worſhip, i. e. willingneſs or freeneſs in worſhip commanded by God,) and then they were to blame, ſaith he, that put an ill notion upon them, or Secondly, For worſhip deviſed by the wit and appointed by the will of man, as contradiſtinguiſhed to the will and wiſdom of God, and then it was not ſo much the ill fortune as the juſt puniſhment of them to paſs under an ill notion, &c. For the ſcope of the ſecond Commandment in the affirmative part being this, God muſt be worſhipped with his own preſcribed worſhip, and in the negative, to forbid all deviſed worſhip of God by the wit or will of man, the very name of will (of man) put to worſhip of God, as oppoſed to the will of God, the only rule of worſhip, is as a brand in the forehead of it, to characterize it as condemnable in all. Numb. 1.

This his firſt Section I have thus fully ſet down, as the foundation of his diſcourſe on this ſubject, 2. and very fit for my direction how to proceed in the reply to it; For if I ſhall now punctually obey his admonition, and having, in his opinion, formerly failed of my duty, ſpeedily indeavour to repair it, Firſt, By diſtinguiſhing the Greek and Engliſh word (though by giving it the exact limits in that one place, where it is uſed in Scripture, I had hoped well that I had formerly performed all that was neceſſary in this kind) and telling him clearly in what ſenſe I take it, defending it to be no way reprovable; and ſecondly, By ſhewing the unfitneſs of his diſtinction here premiſed, and the fallaciouſneſs of the reaſon, or proof annexed to it; methinks this ſhould ſet me on a good way toward the end of this ſecond Stage, and ſo do that which is moſt deſireable to the Reader and my ſelf, confer much to our expedition in this journey.

3. For the firſt then, I ſhall diſtinguiſh, as formerly, betwixt θρησκεία worſhip, whether the theological virtue, or ſome act thereof, together with the gradual intenſion and extenſion, the degrees and alſo the frequency or number of thoſe acts, on one ſide, and the external ceremonies or circumſtances of it, on the other ſide, which are not parts but accidents of worſhip; As in any other habit, that of juſtice particularly, may be exemplified, It may beſide the virtue of juſtice, ſignify Firſt, ſome act of that virtue, or Secondly, the degree thereof, and frequent repetition (more or leſs) of the acts of it, but for the circumſtance of time or place attending on any act of it, they will never be called juſtice with any propriety.

4. Secondly, For [will,] the other ingredient in the compoſition of the word, meaning thereby the will or choice of man it may be of four ſorts, diſtinguiſhable by the matter which is will'd or choſen, Firſt, When the thing thus will'd by man is forbidden by God, or Secondly, when 'tis commanded and under obligation, as far as the force of affirmative precepts extends (of which the rule is true, that obligant ſemper, ſed non ad ſemper, they oblige us always, but yet do not oblige us to be always exerciſing ſome act of the virtues ſo commanded) and ſo when it is done, it is done in perfect concord with, and agreeableneſs to the precept, but yet for that time, or in that degree, it lay not under particular precept, but might without diſobedience or ſin, have been omitted. Thirdly, When the thing will'd, is left free and indifferent, neither commanded nor forbidden by God. Fourthly, When although it be not indifferent, much leſs forbidden, but good in an high degree, yet it is not under particular precept, and ſo may be omitted without ſin, and when it is done, it is highly rewardable by God. I ſhall give an example of each of theſe branches alſo; Of the firſt, when a man himſelf commits, or teacheth others to commit adultery, adultery being forbidden by God, and ſo his action or teaching, an act of his will oppoſed to the will of God. Of the ſecond, when I give to the poor, yearly, or weekly, ſuch a proportion out of my eſtate, which I am able to give (and ſo offend againſt no office of juſtice in giving) and yet am not obliged to give by any precept of Gods which laies it as a duty upon me. An inſtance of which, is ſet down at large in the Tract of Will-worſhip Sect. 32. which together with other exemplifications of the point in hand, very neceſſary to clear my ſenſe, and yet in no reaſon here to be repeated, I muſt deſire the Reader to fetch from that place Sect. 30. and ſo forward. Of the third, when I walk or ſit ſtill, laugh or weep, the law of God leaving it perfectly free for me to do, or omit, either of theſe as I ſhall chooſe. Of the laſt, all writers, Jewiſh, Heathen, and Chriſtian, give us frequent examples. Maimonides among the Jews * More Nevoch. par. 3. c. 17. mentions it as the common ſaying of the Jewiſh, Doctors, that Reward is by God given to him that doth any thing uncommanded. Among the Heathens one for all, Plutarch who inſtances in Acts * of fortitude, freeing the city from Tyrants doing any great thing, which (ſaith he) are not νόμιμα, or ὑπὸ νόμου ὀφειλόμενα, required or commanded by Law. For (ſaith he) εἴπερ ὁ νόμος προστάττει, πῶς οὐκ ἂν ἀπειθοῖεν καὶ παρανομοῖεν ὅτε μὴ ἀνδρίζοιντο, &c. if the Law command ſuch things, then all muſt be counted παράνομοι diſobedient and breakers of Laws, which deſerve not reward in war, which let the Tyrants live an hour, or which do not ſome of thoſe other things which are accounted excellent, and by conſequence all ſuch muſt be puniſhed as offenders. So Nazianzen of the Chriſtian Law, τὰ μὲν ἀναγκαῖα τοῖς ἐπιτελοῦσιν, ἃ καὶ μὴ φυλάττουσι κίνδυνον, τὰ δὲ οὐκ ἀναγκαῖα, ἀνάγκην δέ, ἃ φυλάττουσι μὲν τιμὴν καὶ ἀντίδοσιν, μὴ φυλάττουσι δὲ οὐδὲν ἔγκλημα κίνδυνον. Of our Law ſome things lay neceſſity on them to whom they are given (i. e. ſaith the Scholiaſt, Ἡμῖν Χριστιανοῖς, on us Chriſtians) and danger to them who obſerve them not. Others impoſe no neceſſity, but are left to choice, bring honor and reward to the obſervers, but no kind of danger to them that perform them not, adding that as he that doth not deſerve puniſhment, doth not preſently deſerve praiſe, ſo neither doth he that doth not deſerve praiſe, preſently incur puniſhment: So among the Latins, Tertullian ſpeaking both of continuance and of abſtinence, in his book de cultu Fœmin. (long before he was under any ſuſpicion of Montaniſm) c. 9. Multi propter regnum Dei ſortem & utiq; permiſſam voluptatem ſponte ponentes. Many there were which for the Kingdom of God voluntarily and of their own accord parted with that great and lawful pleaſure of women. And again, Quidam ipſam Dei creaturam ſibi interdicunt, abſtinentes vino, animalibus exultantes, quorum fructus nulli periculo aut ſolicitudini adjacent, ſed humilitatem animæ ſuæ in victus quoq; caſtigatione Deo immolant. Some interdict themſelves the creature of God, abſtain from wine, and living creatures, the uſing of which is perfectly free and ſafe, and ſo by chaſtiſing of the body, ſacrifices to God the humility of the ſoul. So S. Hierom ad Demetriad. ſpeaking of Chriſts words of ſelling and giving to the poor, Non cogo (ſaith he in Chriſts name) non impero, ſed propono palmam, præmia oſtendo, Tuum eſt eligere, ſi volueris in agone & certamine coronari. Chriſt doth not command it or compel to do it, but propoſeth rewards, and thou if thou wilt be crowned, muſt make the choice. And ad Pammachium, Non tibi imponitur neceſſitas, ut voluntas præmium conſequatur, No neceſſity is impoſed on thee, that thy will may obtain reward. And adverſ. Helvidium, Of Virginity, Virgo majoris eſt meriti, dum id contemnit, quod ſi fecerit, non delinquit. A Virgin is of greater worth, while ſhe contemns that, which if ſhe do, ſhe offends not. And adverſ. Jovinian. Ideo plus amat Virgines Chriſtus, quia ſponte faciant quod ſibi non fuerat imperatum, Therefore Chriſt loves them more, becauſe they of their own accord do that which was not commanded them. So Chryſoſtom formerly produced on Rom. 8. Οἱ πνευματικοὶ πάντα ἐπιτελοῦσιν ἐπιθυμίᾳ καὶ πόθῳ, καὶ τοῦτο δηλοῦσι τῷ καὶ ὑπερβαίνειν τὰ προστάγματα. The Spiritual do what they do, with appetite and deſire, and demonſtrate it in that they alſo exceed commands. So Caſſian Chryſoſtoms ſcholar, Coll. 22. c. 30. Perfecti ſub gratiâ evangelii conſtituti, voluntariâ legem devotione tranſcendunt, &c. They which are perfect now under the grace of the Goſpel, do tranſcend the law by voluntary devotion. And c. 29. he ſpeaks of worldly men, qui nihil Deo voluntariè offerunt, who have no free-will-offering for God. And ſo Gregory Moral. in Job. Quidam præcepta legis perfectione virtutum tranſcendunt, Some men tranſcend the precepts of the law by perfection of virtues.

To

To apply all this apparatus to the preſent matter, the ſtating of the queſtion in hand, the word ἐθελοθρησκεία Will-worſhip, as terminated in the one God, the object of worſhip, cannot be imagined to denote any more than ſome one of theſe ſix things, 1. The performing any ſort of worſhip to God, which is forbidden by him, which yet is not truly but equivocally called worſhip, as when the Phariſees perſecuting the Apoſtles, was by them ſtyled the doing God ſervice, and the like. 2. The uſing any ceremony in the worſhip of God, which either is particularly forbidden by God, or bears analogy with thoſe which are certainly forbidden, as among Chriſtians ſacrificing of beaſts, &c. 3. Burthening the worſhip of God with many whether ridiculous or unprofitable ceremonies, which though they are no where forbidden ſeverally by God, yet by their multitude become an hindrance to devotion, or a yoke too heavy for Chriſtians. 4. Uſing or inſtituting one or more ceremonies, no way forbidden, and yet no where commanded by God, but yet ſuch as the inſtitution or uſing any of them, is founded in ſome pious or prudential conſideration, whether of decency, as when any geſture of bodily reverence or humility is uſed or appointed, or for edification, as when feaſts not preſcribed by God, are ſet apart by the Church, and ſo by men, for the commemoration of any eminent mercy of God, for the propoſing ſome exemplary virtues to others, &c. and withal, that care is taken, that they are no way offenſive by the number of them. 5. Offering to the ſervice of God any thing of which God hath any way revealed that he will accept of, and reward, if it be duly performed, though he do not by any law exact it from every man, as dedicating himſelf to the miniſtery, doing it without any hire or payment here, vowing vows of building Hoſpitals, Churches, &c. and moſt eminently martyrdom, when it may poſſibly, and without ſin be avoided by flight, &c. but yet the man thinks it may much tend to Gods honour in the good of ſouls, if he thus ſeal and publickly teſtifie his obedience to Chriſts commands by his bloud, and accordingly chooſeth to do ſo. Laſtly, When either for the degree or frequency of repetition of any known act of worſhip, a man doth more than he is by Gods law ſtrictly required to do, prays oftner every day, faſts oftner (ſuppoſing he no way hurt himſelf, or omit the performance of any other duty, by ſuch frequency in either of theſe) gives a more liberal proportion out of his eſtate to pious and charitable uſes, than any precept of Chriſt obligeth him to do, and the like. 6.

As for that of a chearful and ſo voluntary performance of any act of commanded worſhip, I take not this in at all, ſuppoſing that in the commands of God, not only the action, but the chearfulneſs of the performance is in like manner commanded by God, and ſo neceſſary, not voluntary, as that refers to the will of man, diſtinguiſht from the command of God. 7.

Now for the two firſt of theſe, it is by me moſt readily acknowledged, that they are criminous, and of theſe I plead not the cauſe in the leaſt, either here, or in the tract of Will-worſhip, nor do I apprehend that either of theſe are truly and properly capable of that title of will-worſhip, or called by it in that one place of Scripture, Col. 2. 8.

Of the third ſort alſo I acknowledge my diſlike, but yet again think it not applicable to the notion of the word in the Apoſtle, but rather to that by Epiphanius uſed of the Phariſee, ἐθελοπερειασοθρησκία, exuberance, or ſuperfluity of Will-worſhip, where ſtill the fault is the multitude and unprofitableneſs of theſe ceremonies, not ſimply the uſe of any one, and ſo of each of them, the ſuperfluity, and not the uncommandedneſs of them. 9.

Of the fourth ſort, though I muſt affirm that it hath nothing culpable in it, but rather commendable, as referrable to the Apoſtle's command of decency, &c. yet becauſe it is not worſhip it ſelf, but an extrinſecal attendant of it, I need not allow that the title of Will-worſhip neither, nor apply to it the Apoſtles uſage of the word, Col. 2. but refer it to thoſe circumſtances of worſhip, for which or againſt which, no command or prohibition of the word hath interpoſed, of which I oft ſpake in the head of Superſtition, and vindicated it from that title. 10.

Of the fifth it is, that I formerly ſpake, and compared it with the voluntary oblations under the Law, and of that there is all reaſon to interpret the word in the Apoſtle, and that in a notion of good and commendable (no way of vitious) if it be truly ſuch as it pretends to be; and if it be not really ſuch, it may yet have an appearance of that, and ſo far an appearance of Piety or Wiſdom. 11.

And ſo again for the ſixth, or laſt, I have affirmed of it, and I hope made it clear, that it is firſt lawful, then commendable, and rewardable by God, above a lower degree, or leſs frequent exerciſe of the ſame ſort of worſhip, and yet is not under particular precept, as appears by this, that at that time, and in the ſame circumſtances, when it is thus laudable to give ſo much more, the giving ſomewhat leſs is not a ſin, as is manifeſted in the tract of Will-worſhip. 12.

And ſo now I hope I have exactly obeyed the Diatribiſt's directions, diſtinguiſht the words, and ſet the whole queſtion before him as diſcernibly as he could wiſh, and therein laid grounds for that juſt defence of a blameleſs word, which was at large pleaded in the tract of Will-worſhip. And then I need add no more to ſhew the impropriety and vanity of his own diſtinction or double ſenſe of Will-worſhip, firſt, For ſpontaneous freeneſs in worſhip commanded by God, or ſecondly, For worſhip deviſed by the wit and appointed by the will of man, as contradiſtinguiſht to the will and wiſdom of God. For as to the former branch of the diſtinction, as it is reſtrained to worſhip commanded by God, ſo it can be no Species of that Will-worſhip, which reſpects the will and choice of man, without any neceſſity particularly impoſed by God; and accordingly I have excluded it out of my Scheme, not out of any unkindneſs to it, but becauſe it neceſſarily belongs to another head, the chearfulneſs and the worſhip being both ſuppoſed to be commanded by God, and ſo uncapable of this diſtant title of Will-worſhip. So that at the beſt imaginable, he hath branched Will-worſhip into but one part, and that was not the way of diſtinguiſhing that tearm. 13.

Then for the other member, it is ſo ſet, that it hath many improprieties in it, and in brief, is that great fallacy to which Ariſtotle refers moſt others, fallacia plurium interrogationum (and I remember the * Jews have a rule of their Urim and Thummim אין שואלין על שני דברים כאחד they ask not of two things at once) confounding and putting together things that are moſt diſparate, as hath already appeared by the ſeveral Species here ſet down, which were to be diſtributed into their ſeveral claſſes, ſome contradiſtinguiſht indeed to the will and wiſdom of God, but none of thoſe defended by me, others only not particularly commanded by him, or impoſed ſub periculo animæ, but very conſonant and agree- 14.

able both to Gods will and wiſdom; and ſo ſtill μηδὲν ὑγιὲς, I have very little to thank him for, in his diſtinction.

15. As for his ſum and ſcope of the ſecond Commandment, with the name of S. Auguſtine and the Doctor in the margent, it already appears how little force it hath againſt my pretenſions, it being evident that the words there cited both for the affirmative and negative part of the Commandment, belong to eſſential parts of Gods worſhip, thoſe only being preſcribed and particularly appointed by God, not to each circumſtance thereof, whether of time, or place, or geſture, which among us 'tis certain are not particularly preſcribed by God, and yet we can ſo far judge of his will, by many indications of it, that he no way reproves or diſlikes our voluntary obſerving, or the churches appointing of ſuch, and to theſe only he knows this controverſie here belongs, as applied to the Ceremonies or Feſtivals of our Church.

SECT. II.

The method of explicating difficulties in the new Teſtament. Θρησκεία in a good ſenſe: and when ſuch a bad, no prejudice to ἐθελοθρησκεία.

Numb. 1. IN his ſecond Section where he profeſſeth not to care how oft or how ſeldom the Greek word is uſed in other Authors, or the tranſlators of the old Teſtament, when the thing ſignified, deviſed or impoſed worſhip by the will of man, is ſo decryed in Scripture; I ſhall to his faſtidious deſpiſing my method propoſed, return my reaſon of retaining it, and to his reaſon, a brief demonſtration of the vanity of it.

2. For the firſt, the reaſon of my method in that, as in other diſcourſes, was, the great affinity and conſent betwixt the Greek of the Old and New Teſtament, the writers being of the ſame nation, Jews by birth, which had acquired ſome skill in the Greek Language, and yet not ſo much exactneſs therein, as wholly to aſſume the dialect or character of ſpeech obſerved by native or Learned Greeks, or to deveſt themſelves of the idioms of their own language.

3. Upon this ground I ſuppoſe it moſt conſequent, that for the explaining all verbal difficulties in the New Teſtament, reſort ſhould firſt be had to the Greek Tranſlators of the Canonical Books, or the writers of the Apocryphal, of the old, and then in the ſecond place to other good Authors, from whom any light can be fetcht, and when theſe fail in their expected aids, then to make uſe of other ſupplies, analogie of phraſes or matter, with what we find in the Old Teſtament, circumſtances of the context, and the like.

4. And if the Diatribiſt deſpiſe this method of ſearch, it were but neceſſary charity in him, to diſcover the faults of it, and direct us to a better, which having not here done, he leaves us to ſurmiſe, that it was not his judgment, but his care to ſerve his own hypotheſis, which infuſed theſe diſlikes into him; for otherwiſe, the reſult of my way of ſearch being only this, that the word ἐθελοθρησκεία being but once uſed in the whole Bible, Col. 2. 23. the notion of it in that one place, muſt in all reaſon be reſolved to be that which properly belongs to that place, eſpecially if it proves to be ſuch as agrees exactly with the נדבה or freewill offerings in the Old Teſtament, I ſee not what infirmity it was which could render it up to his deſpiſing.

5. However, this wholly removes and evacuates all force of his reaſon of diſlike, it being evident by that one example of freewill offerings, but much more ſo, by other evidences, both there and here added, that there may be many acts of worſhip, many circumſtances of worſhip, yea and many heights of Chriſtian heroical virtue, which may bear proportion with worſhip, that are not under obligation, from any particular command of Gods, and ſo remain to be acts of the will or choice of man, which are perfectly lawful, acceptable, yea ſome highly rewardable by God, and ſo, far from the guilt which Mr. C. affixes, of high indignity or affront to the divine Majeſty.

6. What he adds of the ſimple word θρησκεία and θρησκεύω, that they are but twice apiece uſed in the Book of Wiſdom, and alway in an ill notion, which ſaith he, is but little to the credit of the compound ἐθελοθρησκεία] might ſure have been ſpared, it being as certain and viſible to him, that the ſame word is uſed by St. James, c. 1. 27. in as good a ſenſe as could be wiſht, with the epithets of καθαρὰ καὶ ἀμίαντος pure and undefiled before God, added to it, and v. 26. for the profeſſion of Chriſtianity, though for want of actions, bridling the tongue, and the like, that becomes μάταια vain; And as plain, that the word is in it ſelf equally applicable to the true as to the falſe, indifferently to any religion, to St. Pauls religion among the Jews, Act. 26. 5. the ſtricteſt ſect of our religion, to the worſhip of Angels, Col. 2. 18. and ſo to the worſhip of Idols in the Book of Wiſdom, which yet can no more tend to the diſadvantage of the compound ἐθελοθρησκεία, when that is not terminated on any prohibited object, than the uſe of the Latine cultus ſometimes for the worſhip of falſe Gods, can prejudge voluntarius cultus, voluntary worſhip, when either the object is not ſpecified, or the mention of the one true God is added to it. It being confeſt and ſuppoſed by both parties in this conteſt, that the ſimple θρησκεία or worſhip it ſelf is not culpable, ſave only when the other part of the compoſition, the ἐθελο, i. e. the interpoſition of the will (or as he will ſtyle it, the device or appointment) of man, hath an influence upon it.

SECT.

SECT. III.

His entrance on the view of Col. 2. anſwered. The difference betwixt Commands of Magiſtrates, and impoſition of dogmatizers. What 'tis, which is ſaid to have λόγον σοφίας.

HIS third Section is his entrance on the view of Col. 2. where only the word Will-worſhip is to be found; and in ſetting down his grounds of interpreting it, Firſt, He citeth Beza and Biſhop Davenant, whoſe words are preſently anſwered, by adverting to the diſtinction formerly given between the eſſentials and circumſtantials, the parts and the ceremonies of worſhip. Numb. 1.

Secondly, He pretends to diſcover a miſtake in me, in that I obſerve from v. 22. that S. Paul ſpeaks not of commands, but doctrines, not of the prohibition of the Magiſtrate, but of falſe teachers impoſing them as the commands of God; Whereas, ſaith he, the Apoſtle ſpeaks expreſly of theſe impoſitions, that they were after the Commandments and doctrines of men, v. 8. after the traditions of men to worſhip God by the obſervation of them.] Of which words of his, if there be any ſhadow of force in them by way of exception againſt me, the meaning muſt be, that the Apoſtle there ſpeaks of the commands or prohibitions, of Magiſtrates in things of themſelves perfectly indifferent, and cenſures thoſe commands under the ſtile of Will-worſhip. 2.

But then, this hath no degree of truth in it; for Firſt, The matter of the commands is no lawful matter, but either the worſhip of Angels (and that is criminous, as the worſhipping of a creature) or the reducing of antiquated rites of Judaiſm, which ought not to be reduced, being once cancelled and nailed to the Croſs of Chriſt. Secondly, The commands were not commands of Magiſtrates, but of men which had no authority to preſcribe any thing, eſpecially ſo contrary to the doctrine which the Apoſtles had planted among them, the Chriſtian liberty from the Judaical yoke. Thridly, The manner of impoſing them, was quite diſtant from that of the Magiſtrates giving laws Eccleſiaſtical or Civil; thoſe are by way of Canon, as of things indifferent, in order to decency, and the like, without ever pretending them to be in themſelves neceſſary, as commanded by God; theſe are impoſed as from God, when they are not ſo, and that is the known ſin of dogmatizing, to which I formerly applied the place; And the word ἐντάλματα commands, ſignifies no more than ſo, being joyned with, and explicated by διδασκαλίαι doctrines, i. e. ſuch things as falſe teachers require all men to do in obedience to God, or as if they were now commanded by him, when ſome of them, as abſtinencies, &c. having once been required by God, are now aboliſh't by Chriſt, and the other, the worſhip of Angels, though it pretend not ever to have been commanded, but only to be acceptable to God, is clearly forbidden by him. 3.

So that here is a palpable miſtake in the Diatribiſt, who obſerves them to be commands (meaning, as he muſt, if he cenſureth or oppoſeth me, commands of Magiſtrates) and not only doctrines of falſe teachers, when indeed commands and doctrines are all one, both joined together to ſignify theſe dogmatizers, pretending the things which they taught to be in force by Divine command, by virtue of the Law given to Moſes, and not only ſuch as would be accepted by God, as of the worſhip of Angels I ſuppoſe was pretended by thoſe falſe teachers. 4.

For this is to be remembred here once for all, that the ſeducers ſpoken of in that Chapter, were the Gnoſtick hereticks, who made up their Theology of Judaical and heatheniſh additions to the Chriſtian truth; from the Jews they had many abſtinences, ſuch as were now aboliſht by Chriſt, and thoſe they impoſed as commands of God, when they were not; and from the heathens the doctrine of the Æones or Angels, as creators of this inferior world, and ſo ſuch as might, with Gods good liking, be worſhipt by us. 5.

Laſtly, Thoſe commands of theirs are not cenſured by the Apoſtle, as acts of Will-worſhip, or blamed, or put under any ill character for being ſuch, any more than for being acts of humility, which is ὃ σωφρίζει joyned with Will-worſhip in that place v. 22. but as intrenchments on that liberty purchaſed for them by the death of Chriſt. v. 20. which had cancelled theſe Judaical ordinances to all that were dead with him, i. e. to Chriſtians, and had turned all Damon worſhip out of their hearts, but had no way bound up the hands of his Apoſtles or their ſucceſſors the Governors of the Church, from inſtituting ceremonies or feſtivals among Chriſtians. 6.

When the Diatribiſt adds of Will-worſhip, that it had a ſhew of wiſdom but no more, tis but a begging the queſtion, or if it pretend to be concluded from that text, it is without all ground ſo pretended; for if I ſhall grant λόγον σοφίας to ſignify only a ſhew, no reality of wiſdom, yet it is not of Will-worſhip that that is affirmed, any more than of humility (and I hope, humility, which is an acknowledged Chriſtian virtue, hath more than a ſhew of wiſdom in it) but of the retrenchments of their Chriſtian liberty, their δογματίζεσθαι v. 20. ſubjection to the doctrines and impoſitions of falſe teachers, which had λόγον σοφίας, ſome either ſhew or reality of wiſdom ἐν ἐθελοθρησκείᾳ καὶ ταπεινοφροσύνῃ in Will-worſhip and humility, which they could not have, if either or both thoſe, when really belonging to any, had no more than a ſhew of wiſdom in them. But of this I have ſaid enough in the Tract of Will-worſhip, §. 12. 7.

SECT. IV.

The Magiſtrates power acknowledged. Inventing new ways of worſhip. Davids appointing the Levites to wait from twenty years old, an act of a King, not of a Prophet. Davids laſt words.

Numb. 1. IN the fourth Section the main of this which I have now vindicated, is acknowledged by Mr. C. for ſaith he, the Apoſtle hath here no reflexion on the Magiſtrates making Laws in indifferent things (and if ſo, why was it judged a miſtake in the Doctor, when he ſaid, the Apoſtle doth not ſpeak of commands, but doctrines, i. e. not of the prohibition of the Magiſtrate, &c. Certainly if the Doctor were then miſtaken, the Diatribiſt is now, who confeſſeth the ſame thing, which ſo lately he had reproved) All his quarrel is to the Magiſtrates inventing a new way of worſhipping God, and then I am ſure he hath no real quarrel to me, after all this pompous ſhew of writing exercitations againſt me, for I never was advocate for thoſe who invented new ways of worſhipping God, and if, as he ſaith, the Papiſts lie under that guilt, I have taken no fee from them, am under no obligation to plead for them, they are of age, let them anſwer for themſelves.

2. No more am I entertained of counſel for thoſe falſe teachers, who any way impoſe antiquated worſhip on God's people, ſuch are ſacrificing, ſabbatizing, circumciſion, and the like; and ſo all this while the Diatribiſt fights with the air, and confeſſes as much as his adverſary deſires of him, and then all that I have to complain of, is the ad quid perditio hæc? To what purpoſe was all this waſte of words and paper? I wiſh there were no more yet behind.

3. But in this fourth Section he is pleaſed to take notice of one inſtance of mine, that of David who appointed Levites to ſerve from the age of twenty years, whereas God by Moſes had appointed it but from 25. years old, &c. And I wonder what can be replyed to this my inſtance, to hinder it from concluding the lawfulneſs of making human Laws, in ſuch circumſtances of Gods worſhip, and thoſe different from the Laws of God, Why, firſt ſaith he, 'tis impertinent, for he brings it as an inſtance of the Magiſtrates power in a thing indifferent, whereas this was in a matter of religion, and more than ſo, in a matter formerly commanded by God.

4. Having given this firſt anſwer under form of a firſt, I was in reaſon to expect a ſecond to ſupply the defects, but the Reader will eaſily diſcern with me that there is no ſuch, and therefore this firſt muſt bear all the weight. And to it I reply, Firſt, From his own confeſſion, that if it was in a matter of Religion and more than of Religion, then by the argument à majori, he muſt needs have power in the leſs, i. e. in a thing indifferent, and then ſure my inſtance from David was more than home to my purpoſe (i. e. pertinent) it proved more than I pretended from it; and if the Diatribiſts arguments would do ſo too, I aſſure him, I ſhould be convinced by them, I will never object to them that they have abundantly proved his poſition; but ſuch acts of Supererogation he may well condemn (and will not probably be guilty of) who writes Diatribæ againſt all actions that exceed, as well as thoſe that come ſhort of the Commandment.

5. But then, ſecondly, His anſwer to the inſtance of David being this, that this action of David was againſt a former command of Gods, an altering of Gods appointment, and no way to be ſalved but by Davids being a Prophet, inſpired by God or directed by ſome other Prophet, and not imitable by any Magiſtrate now] What is it again but a remarkable inſtance what δυλεύειν ὑποθήκαι can do?

6. 'Tis true indeed David was a Prophet, inſpired by God in things belonging to that office, and yet as true, that he was a wiſe and prudent King, and that he made this alteration upon prudential conſiderations ſet down in that place, 1 Chron. 23. 25. and 28, &c. viz. becauſe the burthens being not now ſo heavy, as formerly when they were to carry the Tabernacle, and all the inſtruments thereof, conſequently the full ſtrength of years was not ſo neceſſary to the undergoing them, and beſides, by this means there might be more Levites to ſerve in the Tabernacle, than formerly there had been.

7. And it is not imaginable why in a matter of this nature, in ſuch a meer circumſtance of the worſhip or ſervice of God, and that ſo far from a contrariety to God's command (for he that layes it upon the Levites from twenty years old, no way oppoſeth him that had impoſed it only from twenty five, and he that commanded it from twenty five no way excluded thoſe of twenty from being added to the ſervice) David might not have power, as a King, or why any other Magiſtrate might not do the like, command what God had not before commanded, in a thing ſo perfectly indifferent as was the age of the Levites, wherein to begin and end officiating.

8. As for his proofs, that David made this change by the Spirit or inſpiration of God, as a Prophet, firſt from 1 Chron. 28. 19. All this the Lord made me to underſtand in writing by his good hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern, aſcribing it to the Spirit of God, v. 12, 13. Secondly, By comparing, 1 Chron. 23. 27. with 2 Sam. 23. 2, 3. where, as by the laſt words of David the Levites were numbred from twenty years old, in the former place, ſo in the latter place it was ſaid of the laſt words of David, the Spirit of the Lord ſpake by me, &c. Theſe are but a heap of miſtakes. For as the former place belongs only to the pattern of the Temple which Solomon was to build, deſcribed there particularly in the ſeverals of it, from v. 11. and that pattern affirmed, v. 12. to be had from the Spirit of the Lord, and ſo the [all this] confined to that pattern, and with no equity, or ground in the text, to be farther inlarged, or applyed to Davids numbring the Levites from twenty years old; ſo the laſt words of David, 1 Chron. 23. 27. are clearly Davids laſt Will and Teſtament, but the laſt words, 2 Sam. 23. 1. are the laſt words of prophecy that he delivered, it being evident that he ſpake many other words after that, as appears in the Chapter, and the Book following, 1 Kin. and of his prophecies it is, and not of his other words, that it there follows, the Spirit of the Lord ſpake by me.

SECT.

SECT. V.

Col. 2. 22. εἰς φθορὰν. Ἀποχρήσει. δογματίζεσθε. στοιχεῖα κόσμου. Placing worſhip. Chriſtian liberty. Marriage. The Gloſſes put on the commands of men.

HIS fifth Section is an examination of what I have ſaid for the interpreting of [ἃ ἐστι πάντα εἰς φθορὰν τῇ ἀποχρήσει] Col. 2. 22. This phraſe I have thus rendred and paraphraſed, Theſe commands of abſtinencies (Touch not, taſte not, handle not, v. 21.) are all to deſtruction, or deſtructive, by the abuſe of them, i. e. by impoſing them on Chriſtians, as commands of God, now when they are aboliſht by Chriſt; and for this I thought I had produced ſufficient authority, to vindicate the interpretation from the cenſure of ſingularity, the plain words of S. Auguſtine, and S. Ambroſe, or whoſoever it is that wrote the Comments which bear his name, Sunt in interitum, &c. they are to deſtruction and eternal perdition to them that believe them neceſſary to ſalvation, and ſunt omnia in interitum & corruptionem per abuſionem, &c. they are all to deſtruction and corruption by abuſe, &c. Numb. 1.

But without adverting to the commodiouſneſs of the interpretation, or the authority of thoſe ancient Fathers, or giving any anſwer to what is ſaid to recommend this interpretation, he is pleaſed to take a much eaſier way, to ask ſome queſtions, and offer ſome exceptions, Firſt he asks, why I refuſe our tranſlation of thoſe words? 2.

To this queſtion I anſwer, by rendring my reaſons, Firſt, Becauſe I think this other preferrable, and I doubt not but when the Diatribiſt finds it uſeful, he will do the like in this or any other controverſie; Secondly, Becauſe [ἐστὶν εἰς φθορὰν] cannot by any propriety of ſpeech, or analogy of the like phraſe, ſignifie [are to periſh] but either in an active ſenſe [are to corruption] as that in falſe teachers may denote corrupting or ſeducing of others to their hereſie, and particularly to thoſe abominable ſins, which by deteſting of marriage the Gnoſticks brought in, expreſt often in theſe Epiſtles by the word φθορὰ corruption, or elſe in a neutral ſenſe, ad interitum, to deſtruction. Thirdly, Becauſe though ἀποχρῆσις may poſſibly ſignifie uſe, as well as abuſe, yet it is as eaſily replyed, that it ſignifies abuſe as well, nay more properly and frequently than uſe; In the Bible it is an ἅπαξ λεγόμενον, never uſed either in the verb, or in the ſubſtantive, but in this place; but in other authors 'tis vulgarly uſed in oppoſition to χρῆσις uſe, Ἀποχρωμένων μᾶλλον ἢ χρωμένων ὑπὸ Λακεδαιμονίων, in Plutarch of Alcibiades, the Lacedemonians rather abuſed than uſed him, and in Apophtheg. that great men have good and ill friends, εἶτα οἷς μὲν χρῆσθαι, οἷς δ' ἀποχρῆσθαι, they uſe ſome, and abuſe others, and many the like. Fourthly, Becauſe the Notion which the Diatribiſt from the civil Lawyers, out of Eſtius, gives of the Latin abuſus, is that of conſuming uſe, whereas it is both improbable that S. Paul ſhould take it from the civil Law, (much more probable that he ſhould take it in the ſenſe, in which we find abuſio ſometimes among Divines for ἀποχὴ abſtinence or not uſing at all: So Proſper de vit. contempl. l. 2. c. 22. veraciter abſtinentes eſcarum non naturas ſed concupiſcentias damnent, ac voluptates ſuas deſiderati cibi vel potus abuſione mortificent, which ſenſe alſo the words here would bear well enough, and be a more punctual character of the Gnoſticks abſtinence from marriage, by which they brought in all abominable villanies) and if he did, it would as fitly comply with mine as with his notion of it, for thus it ſignifies abolition or wearing out, ἀποχρῶμαι, uſu attero & obſolefacio, and to that agrees Phavorinus, rendring ἀποχρήσατο by διέφθειρεν, and Suidas by ἀπέκλινε, deſtroying, and then this would be the rendring, Theſe impoſitions of [Touch not, &c.] which were once in force under the Jewiſh ſtate, but now aboliſht under Chriſt, are thereby to deſtruction, or to ruin of ſouls; as when the Apoſtle tells them in one place, of theſe ceremonies, that they are ἐγγὺς ἀφανισμοῦ, Heb. 8. 13. nigh to vaniſhing away, to abolition, and upon that account in another place, that if they look upon them as things ſtill in force among Chriſtians, Chriſt ſhall profit them nothing: But this I do not really think to be the notion of Ἀπόχρησις, becauſe thoſe that render it [uſing] generally apply it to the meats, which are conſumed by eating (and by the way, Oecumenius, that underſtood it in this ſenſe, read it not ἀποχρήσει but ἀποκρίσει, a word which denotes caſting out of excrements) which yet moſt evidently belongs to the δόγματα doctrines of abſtinence, not to meats, and indeed the antecedent (to which ἃ πάντα, all which, refers) is, Touch not, taſte not, handle not, which denotes other abſtinencies, beſide that of meats, particularly that of marriage, which theſe Gnoſticks prohibited, and taught to be abominable, and that is not capable of this notion of ἀποχρήσει, by uſing, for ſure marriage doth not periſh by uſing. And the like may be ſaid of unclean things, the leper, the dead, that Judaizers would not touch, which yet did not periſh, were not conſumed by uſing. 3.

And though in the next place the Diatribiſt leave it indifferently betwixt meats and ordinances of abſtaining (which are contrary enough) yet the notion of uſing is no way applicable to the latter; for what the Diatribiſt ſets for the interpretation of it [now being out-dated they periſh with the uſing, without any ſpiritual advantage] is ſure very ſhort, it being evident by other places of Scripture, that the impoſing theſe out-dated obſervances, is not only not advantageous, but moreover hurtful, thoſe being as the Fathers generally reſolve, not only mortua, dead, and ſo profitleſs, but alſo mortifera, deadly, deſtructive; and ſure that is the meaning of [εἰς φθορὰν to periſhing, or deſtruction] whether it denote damnation it ſelf, or thoſe horrible or unnatural ſins, and the ſeduction of the Gnoſticks, which certainly induce it. 4.

In the third place he quarrels with my interpretation, for ſuppoſing that theſe abſtinencies were impoſed and taught by the falſe teachers as divine obliging precepts, whereas, ſaith he, there is little or nothing in the text to import that. What will with him, when produced againſt his ſenſe and intereſts, be accounted great, I know not; but that there is ſomething in the text, to incline it this way, will ſoon be evident, Firſt, By the word δογματίζεσθε, v. 20. That δόγματα and διδασκαλίαι, doctrines, ſignifie thoſe things which are taught as from God, Mat. 15. 9. hath been formerly ſhewed, and is evident from the form of ſpeech, in vain do they worſhip me, διδάσκοντες διδασκαλίας ἐντάλματα ἀνθρώπων teaching for doctrines the commandments of men, where the commands of men are taught, not as ſuch, but 5.

as doctrines of God; From hence the active δογματίζειν to dogmatize, ordinarily denotes teaching those things to be divine precepts, and so obliging conscience, which are not; and accordingly the passive δογματίζεσθαι must needs denote the having such weights thus imposed upon them, being subject to ordinances, (or doctrines) as we rightly render it. Secondly, These are in the beginning of that 20. v. called στοιχεῖα τῦ κόσμυ, the elements of the world, whether of the Jewish or Gentile service, both nailed to his cross by Christ, cancelled in his death, but such as were incumbent on the ζῶντες ἐν κόσμῳ, those that lived in the world, being under those elements, or initial ordinances, though Christians were not. Thirdly, These are specified what they were, Touch not, taste not, handle not, abstinences from meats, and from marriage; that of meats evidently a precept of Gods to the Jews, and the Gnosticks divinity being in part compounded of Judaism, there is no reason to doubt but they taught these abstinences, as the Jews taught them, i. e. as divine obliging precepts, and joined abstinence from marriage to that of meats, in the same form, i. e. as under precept also.

6. As for that which the Diatribist adds to confirm his objection, viz. that in the next verse they are called the commandments and doctrines of men] it hath no force in it, for so really they were, and not of God, but yet were by the false teachers imposed under a more honourable gloss, as commands not of men, but of God, and therein their false teaching consisted, And it is strange the Diatribist could say of such false doctrines, that they could not be pretended, much less imposed as a divine command] 'Tis as if he should say, False teachers could not teach false, hypocrites and deceivers could not pretend the authority of Scripture for their errors, the Devil could not put on the appearance of an Angel of light.

7. So again 'tis with equal truth, that he saith, the traditions were not pleaded to be the commandments of God, but expresly called the commandments of men, Mat. 15. 9. when 'tis evident that those commandments of men, were by the Pharisees taught as διδασκαλίαι doctrines and so commandments of God, though by Christ affirmed in truth to be opposite to Gods real commands, v. 3. 6. it being very ordinary with hereticks, and hypocrites, to pretend that to be the will and command of God, which is most extremely contrary to it. And in that, the Pharisees sin and hypocrisy consisted.

8. Fourthly, he would ask me another question, whether the placing the worship of God in the observation of those ordinances, though not taught or imposed as God's commands, were not an abuse of them, and εἰς φθορὰν; And I answer, First, By asking what he means by the worship of God; if such as man may justly prescribe or practise, either ceremonies perfectly lawful, but not prescribed by God, or more than so, that which is sure to be accepted by him, though yet it be not under divine precept, then 'tis certain 'twere no abuse; but if he mean the commanded worship of God, then his question implies a contradiction, for whatsoever this worship of God is placed in, that is taught, as command of God, for else it were not Gods prescribed worship, which yet it is supposed to be. Secondly, That these abstinences being of such a nature, that Christ removed all ordinances requiring them, and purposely designed that they should be left free to men, no humane authority could lawfully impose them, no man can forbid marriage to Christians, and so any such command were an abuse of authority if given by lawful superiors; (or if given by others, an act of intrusion and usurpation, for who made them judges or dividers of tasks to their brethren?)

9. But then this may not be extended to all ceremonies and circumstances of the worship of God, times, gestures, &c. for Christ never expresst any absolute dislike to all such, nor can the imposing of such, with prudence in respect of choice, and moderation in respect of number, be by any analogy reducible to those abstinences of which the Apostle there speaks. Nay even for those, particularly abstinence from marriage, tis certain that it may be lawfully practised by him that can bear it, and that all the error is in imposing it on others, contrary to that liberty which Christ hath for weighty reasons allowed, and required to continue allowable and honorable among Christians.

10. Lastly, He argues from the following words, v. 23. where the Apostle says, they have a shew of wisdom, in Will-worship, not as the commands of God, and thence he concludes their abuse to be, not that they imposed them as divine commands, but as parts of divine worship; But I answer, that that verse is not the setting down the abuse, or the defining wherein it consists, but at the utmost, a description of the fair glosses, those abstinences and false-worships were capable of, viz. a double shew or appearance of piety; one in Will-worship, offering to God a free-will offering, for such is every uncommanded, if lawful abstinence, but such was not this, and therefore 'twas but a shew of piety; and another in humility, worshipping Angels as the ministers of God, humility indeed a most Christian virtue, but this no justifiable humility, (To which also a third is subjoyned, that of self-denial or austerity, of the same kind with the former) and so still 'twas but a shew, no reality of wisdom or piety, which consisted in this.

SECT. VI.

The Diatribist's way to make the Doctors words witness against him. Τί δογματίζεσθε κ τ λ. &c. Placing worship, an equivocal phrase.

Numb. 1. BUT the Diatribist is so fixtly resolved on his way, that the criminousness and danger of these abstinences, shall consist in their being devised or willed by men, and not in the Gnostick dogmatizing or teaching them to be commanded by God, that in his sixth Section the Doctor himself shall (again, according to his method taken up in his preface) be brought in to testify for him; to which purpose these words are cited from him, that the danger consists in imposing on men humane Ordinances or Doctrines, and then saith he, stay there a while, viz. that he may from those words, taken alone, conclude that then they did not impose them as commands of God.

2. But I know not what obligation lies either on the Reader or me, to make a pause, upon his command, in the very midde of a period, when the words which are behind, make these that are cited, utterly uncapable of the sense which he puts upon them; For thus the words lay in the period, before he had the dismembring of them, [which words point out that wherein the danger doth consist, viz. imposing on men humane mane ordinances or doctrines, i. e. thoſe things, which though they are commanded by God, are yet by men affirmed and pretended and taught (though, as we ſay, magiſterially and without proof) to be ſo commanded.]

It is not poſſible any words ſhould be more expreſly contrary to the Diatribiſts concluſion, than 3.
theſe, which he thought fit to ſollicite to bear witneſs on his ſide, and to that end cut them in the midſt, and then, after the manner of the ſerpent, that fed upon it ſelf, ſuborned and inſtructed one end to devour and eat up the other.

This he ſaw, and therefore in the end of that ſixth Section he mentions theſe latter words, as the 4.
Doctors gloſs of his own former words, and ſaith, they will now prove his own, i. e. ſingular. And truly if they ſhould prove ſingular, i. e. if no man in the world ſhould be found to have ever ſaid the like, but the Doctor, they would yet be ſufficient for the turn to which they were deſigned, to explicate the Doctors own meaning, and to ſecure the beginning of his period, from being brought in judgment againſt him, and ſo might have ſaved the Diatribiſt the pains of this Section. For ſure no man was ſo fit to explain his own words, or to give his full ſenſe in them, as he whoſe words they were, foreſeeing that poſſible, which now hath happened, that otherwiſe they might be miſtaken.

But then ſecondly, I ſhall not acknowledge my gloſs a ſingular one, but that which the Apoſtles 5.
word will own as a natural and perſpicuous paraphraſe, Τὶ δογματίζεσθε--- κατὰ τὰ ἐντάλματα καὶ διδασκαλίας τῶν ἀνθρώπων (reading the middle as in a parentheſis, ſpecifying what δόγματα he means, and the ſpecious gloſſes which they put upon them) why do you permit ſuch abſtinences preſcribed and taught you really by men, and not by God, to be impoſed on you as doctrines commanded by God, juſt as when the Phariſees taught their own traditions, as the doctrines of God. That this is the very literal importance of δογματίζεσθαι, to be ſubjected, or to pay obedience as to a δόγμα or command of Gods, hath already been ſhewed, And if that be granted, there can be no farther doubt of the whole expreſſion, nor conſequently of the propriety of my gloſs or paraphraſe on it.

As for the placing worſhip in thoſe abſtinences, that equivocal phraſe was very lately examined, and 6.
muſt not again return to exerciſe us. If they placed worſhip in them, in this ſenſe, that they did or taught them as parts of God's commanded worſhip, 'tis the very thing wherein I placed the danger; If they delivered them as their own doctrines, and not as the doctrines of God, they did not then place any part of God's commanded worſhip in them; If they taught them as ſuch things, which, though not commanded by God, would yet be acceptable to him, ſtill, after they were aboliſht by Chriſt, then they taught that which had no truth in it, for ſuch kinds of abſtinences are not now valued by God, but more real acts of ſelf-denyal ſet up in their ſtead, mortifying of luſts, and the like, which thoſe falſe teachers were far from being guilty of. As for ceremonies of decency and order, and Feſtivals, really deſigned to ends of piety and edification; they are neither of them parallel, nor bear any analogy with theſe which are here cenſured.

SECT. VII.

Of Petitio Principii. Of Λόγῳ σοφίας being capable of two rendrings. The danger from miſtake on the Diatribiſts ſide. My interpretation not ſingular. His no way probable. Μὲν a particle of extenuation, no διτιολογικόν. *No ſhew of wiſdom in reſpect of the folly that is in it. The Will-worſhip parallel to the humility. HIS ſeventh Section is the arraigning of what my ſeventh had ſaid concerning v. 23. Ἅτινά ἐστι λόγον μὲν ἔχοντα σοφίας ἐν ἐθελοθρησκείᾳ, &c. And all that he there ſaith, will loſe all force, if theſe two things may be obſerved or remembred, Firſt, That the oppoſers of the ceremonies of our Church, againſt whom that tract was prepared, founded their concluſion on theſe two premiſes, Firſt, That Will-worſhip was a ſin. Secondly, That the uſing of ceremonies not commanded by God, was Will-worſhip. And therefore to our vindication it was ſufficient, if upon ſurvey of that one place of Scripture where that word was uſed, it ſhould be found capable of ſuch an interpretation, which ſhould affix no ill, but contrariwiſe a good character on it; For herein the task lies on the opponent to prove his affirmative, that Will-worſhip is criminous, (and not on me to demonſtrate the negative) and that he can never do from this text, if in this text by a commodious interpretation, it be capable of a good ſenſe. Num. 1.

This I here premiſe, becauſe he ſo oft reminds me in this place of begging the queſtion, when I deny 2.
the word to be taken in an ill ſenſe, Of which Elench I cannot be guilty, unleſs it were incumbent on me to prove and demonſtrate the negative, his affirmative being ſufficiently avoided, by my ſhewing that the contrary is poſſible, and not improbable, which therefore was all that was here required of me, and I hope is competently performed.

Secondly, That if the words be capable of ſeveral rendrings, and either of theſe will free Will-wor- 3.
ſhip from the neceſſity of an ill ſenſe, then again this is ſufficient for my turn, for then ſtill he hath not unanſwerably aſſerted his concluſion: This I ſay, to give an account, why I ſet down two poſſible rendrings of λόγον σοφίας, either rationem ſapientiæ vel pietatis, reality of wiſdom or piety, or elſe only Speciem ſapientiæ, a ſhew, or bare appearance of wiſdom; For of this it is certain, that λόγῳ ſignifies ratio as well as Species, and much more ordinarily the former, and in caſe it ſhould here ſignifie the former, then 'tis unavoidably evident, that Will-worſhip muſt be taken in a good, not ill ſenſe; Mean while as I pretend not that both thoſe rendrings are true, for if it be only a ſhew of wiſdom, then it is no reality, ſo I profeſs to yield ſo much to the authority of the ancient interpreters, as to pitch upon the latter only, that of χῆμα ἐν ἀληθείαν, a ſhew of wiſdom, not the truth, and even then, as hath been ſhew'd, the Will-worſhip there, is capable of a good notion, for how can thoſe abſtinences or doctrines have ſo much as a ſhew of wiſdom in Will-worſhip and humility, if Will-worſhip hath nothing of wiſe or good, but only of wickedneſs (and that we know is folly) in it?

4. Having premiſed theſe two things, it is now very eaſie to diſcover the fallaciouſneſs of all that is brought againſt me in this or the enſuing Sections; For as to the interpretation of the verſe, which he propoſeth and prefers before mine, but without any convincing proof of the truth of it, this is on his part a begging the queſtion, which even now was charged on me, with much leſs reaſon; and when he ſaith, mine may prove a miſtake, 'tis ſufficient to reply, and ſo may his, and the danger far greater from the miſtake on his ſide, than on mine; For if mine ſhould be ſuch, yet will it not follow, that the Ceremonies and Feſtivals of our Church are ſuch criminous Will-worſhip, the uſing of theſe bearing no analogy with the dogmatizing of the Gnoſticks, or their reviving the aboliſht Judaical abſtinences among Chriſtians; whereas if his interpretation ſhould prove falſe, and mine true, his whole fabrick muſt utterly be demoliſht, and his major and minor having both failed, the one affirming Will-worſhip to be criminous, the other, our uſing ceremonies and Feſtivals to be Will-worſhip, his concluſion is not likely, I hope, to hold out long after, unleſs it ſhall pretend to that miracle which is fanſied of Callimachus (and denominated him an ἀθάνατος πολεμιστὴς an immortal warrier, and ἀτείρης Ἄρεος εἰκών the ſtatue of Mars) who is ſuppoſed to ſtand and fight after he was dead; And then 'tis time to retreat from this combatant, with the Epigrammatiſt, Λύε κυβερνήτα, νεκύος περφυγῶμεν ἀπειλάς.

5. But then ſecondly when he vilifies mine, reſolving it ſingular without any precedent, ancient, or modern, Proteſtant, or Papiſt; Firſt, This hath no truth in it, as will anon ſufficiently appear; At the preſent, I ſhall only remind him, that within two years after the Treatiſe of Will-worſhip was printed, came out Grotius's poſthumous notes on the Epiſtles, and thoſe are clear for this interpretation, and ſo though they could not be my precedent then, will now ſecure me from ſingularity.

6. Secondly, The Diatribiſt's interpretation is ſo far from being demonſtratively true, that it hath arrived to no degree of probability: It is this, that v. 23. contains a reaſon of the danger and deſtructiveneſs of thoſe abſtinences, viz. becauſe they were no other, nor better than Will-worſhip with a fair pretence of wiſdom, becauſe the worſhip of God was lately placed in them, and they carry a great pretenſion of humility and ſelf-denial in abſtaining from things pleaſing to the body.

7. But I demand firſt, How doth it appear that this verſe contains a reaſon of the deſtructiveneſs of thoſe abſtinences? 'Tis not ſo much as introduced with a γὰρ, for, or any other form of proof, but ἅ τινα μὲν, which things indeed have a ſhew, &c. which is a form of extenuation (as the Diatribiſt acknowledgeth in this Section, ſpeaking of ᾧ) and then cannot reaſonably be a proof of the deſtructiveneſs of them, but the conceding ſomewhat, ſpeciouſly at leaſt, in favour of them, that they have indeed a ſhew of wiſdom in them.

8. Secondly, What words are there in that verſe, which can bear, or give any pretence to that paraphraſe, that theſe abſtinences are deſtructive, becauſe no better than Will-worſhip? The words in the Diatribiſts own rendring are no more but this, which things indeed have a ſhew of wiſdom in Will-worſhip and humility; But can this bear or induce this concluſion in any mood or figure, Therefore they are deſtructive, becauſe no better than Will-worſhip?

9. Is it not much fairer and more reaſonable, which I concluded, they have ſome ſhew of wiſdom in Will-worſhip, therefore Will-worſhip, if it be truly ſuch, hath ſome reality of wiſdom in it? for elſe that which hath but a ſhew of wiſdom in it, cannot have that ſhew in reſpect of Will-worſhip; Adultery being it ſelf folly, 'tis abſurd to ſay of any man, or doctrine, that it hath a ſhew of wiſdom in adultery, or in reſpect of the adultery that is in it, for that were to affirm it to have a ſhew of wiſdom in no other reſpect but that it is fooliſh.

10. I acknowledge indeed, that as it was but a ſhew of wiſdom which they had, ſo it was but a ſhew of Will-worſhip, or voluntary offering to God, and ſo a ſhew of, not a true humility; but ſtill that doth but the more confirm (not confute) my concluſion, that Will-worſhip truly ſo called, and humility, that real virtue, are branches of Chriſtian wiſdom, or elſe, the having but a ſhew of them, would not give them ſo much as the ſhew of wiſdom.

11. Thirdly, When the former part of his paraphraſe is [they are no other nor better than Will-worſhip] how can that be coherent which follows in the ſecond place, that they carry a great pretenſion of humility and ſelf-denial? when thoſe two are regularly joined with Will-worſhip [ἐν ἐθελοθρησκείᾳ καὶ ταπεινοφροσύνῃ, καὶ ἀφειδίᾳ, in Will-worſhip, and humility, and not ſparing the body] Certainly as the humility is, ſuch muſt the Will-worſhip be; if the humility be only in pretenſion, then ſo muſt the Will-worſhip be alſo, in pretenſion, not in truth; and then ſtill the fault or defect will be in the bare pretending, not in the Will-worſhip, as it is not in the humility or ſelf-denial, by the Diatribiſts own confeſſion, but in the falſe pretending them. How much then is it more reaſonable to do what I did, viz. to allot to Will-worſhip and humility, and ſelf-denial, to all three, the ſame ſtate, whatſoever it be, whether of virtue, if they be really what they pretend, or of hypocriſie, if they be bare images or appearances of them? And on this I inſiſt, as on the main ground of inforcing mine, and invalidating his interpretation, that Will-worſhip, humility, and ſelf-denial being here placed together in the ſame claſſis or ſeries, they cannot be ſo ſeparated, as that one ſhall be a vice, when the other two are acknowledged virtues in a Chriſtian, one really what it pretends, and the other only feignedly, or in pretence, without any reality in them. When the Diatribiſt ſhall anſwer this argument, he may then tell others of miſtaking, but till then, the miſtake may much more probably be on his ſide.

12. Thirdly, What the Diatribiſt adds of σοφίας wiſdom, which I took in the ordinary notion of piety, is ſure more ſtrange in him, than what he cenſures in me; in the Proverbs and elſewhere he acknowledges it muſt ſignifie piety, but here it muſt not, but literally wiſdom, to which purpoſe he cites Biſhop Davenant, who expreſſes it to denote ſome excellent doctrine rather brought from heaven, than found out by men; But if that be the meaning of it, then ſure, as ſuch, thoſe falſe teachers taught it, i. e. as coming from heaven, and that is, as a doctrine of God, and that was even now denied, when I affirmed it: Secondly, How can thoſe abſtinences have a ſhew of coming down from heaven in Will-worſhip, and yet Will-worship signify worship devised by the wit and will of man? 'Tis as if he should say, they pretend to come from God, in that they come only from men; whereas in the notion of wisdom for piety, the words run very currently and intelligibly, they pretend to have piety in them, viz. such as is discernible in Will-worship or free-will-offerings, in humility, in self-denial, &c. Well, that σοφία signifies piety in this place, I appeal to S. Chrysostom, δοκεῖ γὰρ εὐλαβής τις εἶναι, saith he, by way of Paraphrase of ἔχει λόγον σοφίας, he appears to be (though really he be not) pious, religious; And Theophylact in the same words.

As for his proofs of the contrary, they are of no validity. 13.

The first is from the context v. 8. where the Apostle calls it philosophy; But first, v. 8. hath no contexture with v. 23. Secondly, φιλοσοφία is not λόγῳ σοφίας, the philosophy there spoken of, the joyning of the Αἰῶνες or Angels with God, the Gnostick Theology of the συζυγίαι, out of the Platonick and Poetick Theology of the heathens, had not so much as a shew of any excellent doctrine brought from heaven, as the Diatribist even now from Bishop Davenant expresst σοφία to signify, at least not such as of which S. Paul could affirm, that it had any image or shew of such. 14.

Thirdly, 'Tis confest on both sides that the things here spoken of, and said to have a shew of wisdom in Will-worship and self-denial, are the δόγματα of abstinences from meats and marriages; and those, abstracted from the error of dogmatizing, have indeed a shew of piety in those two respects, that he which abstains voluntarily, shall seem to practise a special piece of self-denial, and to offer to God a free-will offering of abstinence from meats and marriage. 15.

As for that of worshipping of Angels, which I suppose a corollary of the philosophy, v. 8. that also hath a shew of piety in humility, in worshipping the officers and ministers of God, as not daring to approach immediately to God himself; But then this, as it rather confirms the notion of wisdom for piety, than confutes it, so it cannot have any such influence on the other branch of abstinences, as to qualify them to have any shew of divine doctrine in Will-worship and humility, especially if Will-worship continue to signify, as the Diatribist will have it, worship devised by the wit and will of man, for then, as was said, they must have a shew of coming from heaven, in this very respect, that they come not from heaven, but from the wit and will of men. 16.

His second proof is, because v. 18. the worshipper of Angels is said to be puft up in his fleshly mind, i. e. in a carnal conceit of his own wisdom, in finding out that way of worship, and to that purpose Irenæus is cited, not as an approver of this interpretation of σοφία (for in the place cited he speaks not a word to that matter, not so much as reflects upon that text) but to * testify, that the fictions of men are by them counted wisdom. 17.

* Sapientiam unusquisque eorum dicit, quam à semetipso adinvenit. Ir. l. 3. c. 2.

But to this I answer, First, That this proof extends not to the doctrines of abstinences, which we know are the immediate antecedent, and the principal thing here spoken of. Secondly, That what is said of the worshippers of Angels, that they are vainly puft up in their fleshly minds, is there set as an aggravation of their crime, and as the cause of their assuming to know what they understand not; whereas this of having a shew of wisdom, being introduced with the μὲν, which was by the Diatribist confest to be an extenuating particle, cannot be designed to aggravate their sin, nor consequently to be parallel to that of v. 8. And so indeed to have a shew of wisdom in some respects, differs very much from being vainly puft up in their fleshly mind, the one placing that shew in somewhat that is really good, though falsely pretended to, the other placing it in their own carnal minds which have nothing good in them. As for the place in Irenæus directed to in the margent, it speaks quite of another matter, mentioning neither of these verses, 18. or 23. and so cannot be vouched for an authority to prove that they are parallel one to the other. 18.

What he adds, that it may very well be parallel to that place, 1 Cor. 2. 4, 5, 6. will be soon dispatched by any reader that shall compare the places, for he will certainly find, that there is no kind of agreeableness betwixt them, the one speaking of the arguments, miracles, &c. by which the truth of the Gospel was confirmed to men, and not by Topicks of humane perswasion, the other of the shew of wisdom which the Gnosticks doctrines of abstinence had in them, which sure are things competently removed from any possibility of corresponding one with the other. 19.

But saith he, to assert those abstinences as a worship of God, to have somewhat of real wisdom or piety in them, is a plain begging the question now betwixt us.] To this I have premised the answer in the beginning of this Section shewing how far I am from a possibility of begging the question, whilest I do but answer to the argument drawn from this text, and shew that it may well (I need not prove, that it needs must) have some other importance than that in which alone their argument against Will-worship is founded. But then Secondly, I shall freely gratify the Diatribist, and having mentioned that of τινὰ λόγον σοφίας for some reality of wisdom or piety, only as possible, I shall gladly yield, that it doth not so signify here, but rather some shew of wisdom or piety; and then I hope I do not beg, but grant, give him the utmost in this, which he desires, not crave any favour from one, who will no more willingly afford it. 20.

What follows of my denying Will-worship to be here condemned, but not proving it, is a little strange, when he knows I solemnly propose the reasons of my contrary assertion Section 11, &c. which being certainly as yet not answered, or so much as taken notice of in this place, I wonder I should be again so soon accused of petitio principii, begging the question without proof. 21.

As for my presumption in mentioning, (for I did no more) the ἄ τινα for ἅτινα, I desire his pardon, for truly I did not expect it should be so fastidiously cast off (the use of it being as fit for his rendring, τινὰ λόγον some shew, as for mine, τινὰ λόγον quandam rationem) or that the bare taking notice of it as possible, not presuming it as certain, or offering it so much as my conjecture, should so seriously have provoked him; As it is, the advantages are so slender which I aimed at by it, that I shall very contentedly lay it aside, and no farther sollicite his patience for it, though 'tis sure enough that many more considerable changes have by sober men been proposed in explicating that Book. 22.

As for the μὲν, quidem, indeed, for which I am charged that I leave it out (though if I did, what greater fault have I committed, than S. Hierom had done, who, saith the Diatribist, thinks the particle 23.

ticle μὲν is redundant? yet) I guess not upon what grounds it should be affirmed, when it is visible in the beginning of Section 7. that I keep it in, and by what hath now been said, that it is mine, not his interest to keep it in; All the appearance he can have for thus affirming is, that in proposing that reading of ἅ τινα in two words, I set it down thus, ἅ τινα δὴν ἔχοντα λόγον --- but as there I leave out μὲν, so I leave out σοφίας and all the rest of the verse, and only set down so many words as are sufficient to express what I mean by dividing ἅ τινα into two words, without any thought (if I may be believed) of leaving out μὲν or seeking any advantage by so doing, or of ought else than what I now declare to have been designed by me.

22. But for the particle δὲ adversative, which he next considers, I profess not to divine his meaning, there being no such particle in the verse, as far as any of my copies or my eyes can direct me.

SECT. VIII.

The abstinences how taught by the Gnosticks. Their pretences for them, no realities. Abstinences may be free-will offerings, and self-denials. Such may Fasting duly qualified. Such may virginal Chastity. Pauls judgment of it. Chrysostom of things ὑπὲρ ὠτολήν. Abstinences positive acts. And yet, if negative, may be acceptable. These abstinences not commanded.

Numb. 1. TO his eighth and ninth Sections there is little for me to reply, which hath not been cleared sufficiently already; Only in the end of the ninth he saith there is a great mistake in comprehending these abstinences under free-will offerings; for, saith he, both the free-will offerings were something positive, and these abstinences were negative, rather not offering than offering, touch not, taste not, &c. and all these abstinences were commanded by special Laws, but free-will offerings, the Doctor saith, were not required of them by obligation of particular Law.

2. Of this my supposed mistake, I must give some account, thus; The abstinences here spoken of, I suppose to be of two sorts, from meats, and from marriage, both which were now perfectly lawful to be freely used sine discrimine, by Christians; Those therefore that taught them to lie now under interdict, were dogmatizers and false teachers; This therefore was a great fault in them, contrary to the clear Christian doctrine of liberty from Judaical observances, (of which sort were those abstinences from meats) and of the honourableness of marriage among all, when the Gnostick detesters of marriage, making it damnable, and the abstinence necessary to salvation (and so in the words of the Apostolick Canon, abstained and taught that abstinence ἐ δι ἄσκησιν ἀλλὰ δια βδελυείαν, not as an exercise, but out of detestation of marriage) brought in all the ἄτιμα πάθη dishonourable, vile affections, and practices instead of it.

3. This double error being noted and censured by the Apostle, he yet shews the pretences, whereby it was recommended by the false teachers, to those seducible persons corrupted by them, viz. that these abstinences were acts of voluntary worship and self-denial, and so could not fail to be acceptable to God. That they were truly such, I never imagined; but that they pretended to be such, had some shew at least of piety in these two respects, pretending on one side to voluntary worship, on the other to self-denial, but then had really no more of these, than of the piety which they pretended to have; If they had the least degree of piety in them (reading τινὰ λόγον σοφίας, and rendring it quandam rationem somewhat of wisdom or piety) then that was in this respect, that there was somewhat of voluntary oblation and self-denial in them; If they had not the least reality, but only a shew, (and τινὰ λόγον some shew agrees as commodiously to that) then still that shew was in these two respects, that they had also a shew of Will-worship or voluntary oblation, and of self-denial. And so still I am free enough from any necessity of acknowledging his charge of comprehending abstinences under free-will-offerings, when I only affirm that they were recommended by false teachers under those specious colours.

4. Yet now ex abundanti, and to gratifie the Diatribist, by throwing a μύλον λειὸν before him, I shall not doubt to affirm, that such the abstinences may be, and so they may be recommended by the Orthodox Church (which is far enough from these foul Gnosticks) that they may very safely and fitly be comprehended under the head either of free-will-offerings or Self-denials. Of the latter there can be no doubt; for fasting and virginal chastity are certainly acts of Self-denial, denying our selves the enjoyment of those satisfactions, which might most lawfully be enjoyed: And if to this of Self-denial, be farther added the designing of this to the honour or service of God, fasting in order to Christian ends, either as an outward effect and expression of Godly sorrow, or as an instrument of bringing the body into subjection, fitting my self for more leisure and ardor in prayer, acting revenge upon my self for the intemperances of the former life, and, as to the very Self-denial, looking on it as that which will be acceptable to God, though not (to every possible act) commanded, sub periculo animæ, and as such, dedicating it to God, this sure will be a נדבה or voluntary free-will-offering, and so properly comprehended under that head.

5. And the same is as visible of virginal chastity, which is no where commanded by Christ or his Apostles to any, but yet recommended to them which are able to bear it, he that can receive it, let him receive it, and the advantages of it, under the title of τὸ συμφέρον profitable, 1 Cor. 7. 35. set out by S. Paul, in order to the advancing of some Christian ends, purity of body and Spirit, caring for, or minding more intently the things of the Lord, being without solicitude, in times of distress, when the cares of the world may very much incumber all, and probably insnare many; Upon which grounds the Apostle, that out of his fatherly care would have them aspire to the greatest perfection, and so wishes them this ἀμεριμνία, doth also profess it his judgment, that he that thus abstains from marriage doth better, even when he that marrieth doth well, and consequently proposes this whole matter not as ἐπιταγὴν Κυρίου any command of Christs, for he professeth to have no such, but as his opinion or judgment, v. 25. and 40. which what is it, but the very notion of free-will-offering, such as of which S. Chrysostom saith, Τὸ δὲ ἑκὼν ἡμῶν προαιρέσεως κατόρθωμα, it is an act of my own will, in opposition to the τὸ μὲν δὴν ἐπιτάγμα, ταγμα, a precept, or command, precedent, or ἃ μὲν ὑπὲρ τὴν ἐντολὴν γίνεται, πολλὴν ἔχει τὴν μισθὸν καὶ τοῦτο, ἃ δὲ ἐν ἐντολῆς τάξει ὑποστῶσι, Thoſe things which are done above the precept, have in this reſpect great reward, but thoſe which are in the rank of precept, not ſo much.

As for the reaſons produced by the Diatribiſt, certainly they will be of no force againſt this evi- 6.
dence; for why may not virginity, or faſting deſerve to be accounted poſitive things? is it not as truly a poſitive action to conquer as to ſatisfie, to ſubdue as to glut my appetite? and if ſelf-denials be negative things, and yet acceptable to Chriſt, what prejudice will it be to theſe abſtinences, though they ſhould be deemed negative alſo? Are not all the obediences that are performed to negative precepts, compliances with thoſe negations, and ſo negative alſo, as not killing, not committing adultery, &c. And ſhall not the ſame be ſaid of all abſtinences? If Adam had not taſted the forbidden fruit, this had been but negative, yet an act of obedience to God, and that preferred by God before all burnt-offerings and ſacrifices, preſcribed, or voluntary; And then what diminution could it be to an abſtinence, or prejudice to its being a free-will offering, that it is a negative act? So wide is this kind of arguing from proving any thing.

And as wide is his ſecond proof, that theſe abſtinences were commanded by ſpecial laws, when he 7.
knows that abſtinence from marriage was never commanded by any law of Moſes, or Chriſt, and that that other from meats, was now left free by Chriſt, thoſe ſpecial laws under Moſes given to the Jews, being now caſſate and cancelled by Chriſt. This ſure is enough to his preſent velitations, what he hath of reſerve for a weightier impreſſion, ſhall then be warded when I ſee it approach, and therefore ſo much for theſe two Sections.

SECT. IX.

Compliance with Papiſts. The Diatribiſts inconſtancy.

HIS tenth Section being an introduction to his ſurvey of my ſix reaſons for the taking Will-wor- Numb. 1.
ſhip, Col. 2. in a good creditable ſenſe, begins with a general, but that poſing, confounding note, that taking the word in a good ſenſe, the Doctor complies too much with the Papiſts (moſt of them taking it in an ill) who uſe to take off the force of the Proteſtants objection from this place againſt their Will-worſhip. by anſwering, that it is taken here in a good ſenſe, for voluntary religion or worſhip.] To which I confeſs my ſelf unable to give any anſwer, as not gueſſing wherein the objection lies, whether in my complying, or not complying with the Papiſts.

The words expreſly tell me, that taking it in a good ſenſe I comply with the Papiſts, and yet there 2.
are other words as expreſly pronouncing, that moſt of the Papiſts take it in an ill ſenſe: The only expedient to me imaginable to reconcile theſe contradictions (which yet I have no pretence of imputing to the Printer, or to any but the Author) is this, that though moſt of the Papiſts take it in an ill ſenſe, yet ſome, though ſmaller number of them, take it in a good, and ſo defend their many traditions of worſhip (as he calls them) and anſwer the Proteſtants objections (the Diatribiſts and his partners) from that text, Col. 2. and then, that I differ from thoſe Proteſtants, and comply with thoſe Papiſts.

And if this be the meaning, then as firſt, I can truly ſay, that I borrowed not this interpretation of 3.
that word or text from any Popiſh writer, but from the weighing the text it ſelf, and the characters I found in it (the ſame that Hugo Grotius hath diſcerned alſo, as was ſaid) and accordingly ſet thoſe down for the reaſons of my interpretation; ſo if I ſhall truly be found to have complied with any Papiſt herein, yet firſt, I ſhall never ſtartle at the interpretation, upon that account, many Papiſts having given the true ſenſes of many places of Scripture; and ſecondly, I ſhall with much more juſtice be able to retort this argument on the Diatribiſt, if I may believe himſelf, the ſenſe which he hath given, viz. the ill ſenſe, being owned by moſt of the Papiſts, as he here himſelf confeſſes. And then ſure, he that is acknowledged to comply with moſt of the Papiſts, and not he which is but accuſed to comply with ſome few of them muſt needs be moſt guilty of that crime, whatſoever 'tis fanſied to be, which conſiſts in ſuch compliance.

Nay 'tis not long ſince he affirmed of my interpretation of this verſe, that he believes it is ſingular 4.
without any precedent, either ancient or modern, Proteſtant or Papiſt; and then I have little reaſon to be- Diatr. p. 44.
lieve his bare general ſuggeſtion againſt his own belief, that the Doctor herein complies with the Papiſts; eſpecially when out of Chamier, he here adds, that that learned and acute man, Panſtrat. l. 3. c. 6. Sect. 5. profeſſes he never ſaw the good ſenſe in any interpreter of the place.

So then this general note is not likely to tend much to our prejudice, I proceed then to his more 5. particular anſwer to my reaſons.

SECT.

SECT. X.

A reply to his anſwer of my two firſt reaſons for the good ſenſe. Humility and Will-worſhip aſſociated, either both real or both pretended. Popiſh laniations why culpable. Σωματικὴ γυμνασία, 1 Tim. 4. πρὸς ὀλίγον ὠφέλιμος, ὐ ὀλίγῳ, ἐπ' ὀλίγον. Faſting a Λατεία far from hurtful or abominable; wherein the profit of it conſiſts. The true ſenſe of 1 Tim. 4. 8. wherein the illneſs of it conſiſts. Ἄσκησις and βδελυγία. Abſtinence becauſe of abuſes. For Religion. Marcionites. Durand. A ſhew of Piety in Will-worſhip. All ſhew of good in reſpect of ſomewhat that is good. The Diatribiſts fallacious inſtances and queſtions.

Numb. 1. AND my firſt reaſon being taken from the joining of Will-worſhip with humility, one undoubted Chriſtian virtue, and not ſparing, or, as Calvin, mortifying of the body, To the former his anſwer is, that by my favour, humility here is not the true and laudable Chriſtian virtue, but a meer counterfeit, a pretended humility fit for a pretended Will-worſhip.

2. And I reply, that if it be ſo, it fits my turn very well; for ſtill Will-worſhip and humility are aſſociated, the pretended Will-worſhip, he ſaith, with the pretended humility, and conſequently, that as the fault is not in the humility, but in the pretending of it, when it is not true, the falſeneſs and counterfeitneſs of it, and that an evidence that the humility, if it were truly ſuch, were a Chriſtian virtue, becauſe the fault is in the feignedneſs of it; ſo by the analogy of reaſon, it muſt hold of Will-worſhip, that when that is truly ſuch, it is a Chriſtian virtue, and that the only fault is, that it is not what it pretends to be; and ſo that is ſtill a valid argument for the good ſenſe of the word, Will-worſhip, though not of the diſguiſe and falſe appearance of it; the bare ſhew, even of divine worſhip it ſelf, being acknowledged to have nothing of good in it, which yet certainly the reality of it hath.

3. As for that of the Self-denial, it is, ſaith he, not only a counterfeit, but an impious miſtaken mortification, viz. when 'tis made a worſhip of God; and he inſtances in the Romiſh ridiculous Penances, Pilgrimages, &c. and asks what 'tis that makes them impious miſtaken mortification, not their being held forth as commands of God, for that they deny, it muſt be then, ſaith he, becauſe they make them worſhips of God, voluntary worſhip.] Here again the former reply is in force; if it be the counterfeitneſs and impiety of the mortification that defames it, then ſtill the ſelf-denial and mortification, truly ſo called, is a Chriſtian virtue, and then that will conclude the Will-worſhip to be ſo too, if it be truly what it pretends to be.

4. As for his inſtance, and queſtion founded on it, it anſwers it ſelf; for as it is not their holding it forth as the command of God, ſo neither is it their making it the worſhip of God, that renders it culpable, but the ridiculouſneſs of it which he mentions, the unfitneſs or inordinableneſs to that end, to which it is deſigned; ſuch laniations of our own bodies being on that account, and by their affinity to the bloody ſacrifices under the Law, deprived of all appearance of being acceptable to God, and ſo for all other ſorts, which are not either regular effects of Godly ſorrow or deſigned as expedients to make it ἀμέλαμέλητος μετάνοια a laſting and durable repentance (as ἐκδίκησις revenge, 2 Cor. 7. 11. is defined to be) For whatſoever is truly ſo, I muſt not be ſo injurious to it, as to doubt of the acceptation with God, or to cenſure it either as impious or ridiculous.

5. My ſecond reaſon for the taking Will-worſhip in a good ſenſe, was this, becauſe theſe abſtinences are ſaid to have λόγον σοφίας, whether that be ſome ſmall reality, or elſe a bare ſhew of wiſdom in reſpect of the Will-worſhip diſcernible in them, neither of which they could be ſaid to have, if Will-worſhip had paſt with St. Paul for fooliſh or impious; for how can a thing be ſaid to have ſo much as a ſhew of piety in reſpect to any ſin, as luſt, or rage, diſcernible in it? To this his anſwer is long and perplext. Firſt, By rejecting that notion of λόγον σοφίας for any degree of real wiſdom; And to this I that did not really adhere to that, will not be ſo far concerned in it, as to make any reply, or at all to indeavour to defend it, or to add of it farther than this, that the bare poſſibility that it might ſo ſignifie, ſuperſedes all demonſtrativeneſs of proof from this text, for the criminouſneſs of Will-worſhip.

6. But upon this occaſion he takes liberty to conſider the Apoſtles words of bodily exerciſe, 1 Tim. 4. 8. and of that affirms, when it is ſaid to be πρὸς ὀλίγον ὠφέλιμος, profitable for a little, the meaning is, 'tis profitable for nothing, nay hurtful and abominable.

7. To this πάραεργον I muſt interpoſe, that this is a very ſtrange and groundleſs interpretation of πρὸς ὀλίγον ὠφέλιμος profitable for a little, i. e. for nothing, and even leſs than ſo, hurtful and abominable. It is, as if when Agrippa tells Paul ἐν ὀλίγῳ με πείθεις χριστιανὸν γενέσθαι, a little way thou perſwadeſt me to be a Chriſtian, he ſhould interpret it, that Agrippa was not at all perſwaded by him toward Chriſtianity, but on the other ſide was more confirmed in his Gentiliſm.

8. To this purpoſe it is obſervable, that although the bodily exerciſe in that text, be by ſome of the antients underſtood of bodily labour, yet they which do ſo, render πρὸς ὀλίγον ſo, as to ſignifie ſomewhat, ὀλίγον ὠφέλησε τὸ σῶμα ἢ πρὸς καιρὸν, it profits the body a little and for a while, ſaith St. Chryſoſtom and Theophylact, (and ſo we know it doth) and St. Hierom in like manner, ad breve tempus in carnali proficiunt ſanitate, they are for a ſhort time profitable in reſpect of bodily health, and ſo likewiſe thoſe others of the Antients, Ambroſe, &c. who underſtand it of faſting, (ſo doth Leo alſo Serm. de jejun. 7. menſis, ſometimes in that phraſe of corporum labor, the labour of bodies, Serm. 2. ſometimes of exercitatio continentiæ, quam ſibi quiſque proprio arbitrio indicit, the exerciſe of abſtinence which every one by his own choice lays on himſelf, Serm. 3.) conceive πρὸς ὀλίγον to denote ſome degree of profit, utilitatem cujuſdam portionis, ſaith Leo, though not ſo great as belongs to that which is underſtood by piety in the next words.

9. Thus the phraſe מעט יכבן ſignifies among the Rabbins, that which is in ſome degree profitable, but within certain bounds; and ſo alſo among the Greeks, as when Plato ſaith of Socrates, Σωκράτης ἐπ' ὀλίγον θεωτικέον, ἀληθείας δὲ πολύ, Socrates is a little to be conſidered, but truth a great deal; and proportionably here the compariſon lyes, bodily exerciſe is profitable for a little, but godlineſs is profitable for all things.

As

As for his cenſure, that by conſequence to this interpretation, he faſtens on bodily exerciſe, in this notion, taking it for abſtinences from meats and marriage, without relation to that of the Dogmatizers teaching and requiring that abſtinence as from things forbidden by God, i. e. (in effect) on bare voluntary faſting and celibacy (when they are only uſed πρὸς ἄσκησιν, for exerciſe, ἢ πρὸς βδελυρίαν not with deteſtation of marriage or meats, as the antient Canons have it) viz. that they are hurtful and abominable [I need ſay no more, but that it is an ungrounded and unwary affirmation, no way to be juſtified or excuſed, unleſs ſtill he relieve himſelf at the dead lift with the ſuppoſition, that they are made the worſhip of God.] 10.

And then again as that cannot be applied to abſtinence from marriage, in his notion of worſhip (for even they that make that a thing acceptable to God, and a ſtate of perfection, do not count it a worſhip, unleſs in a general ſenſe, as every virtuous act performed to God, may be ſtyled worſhip, and ſo this, being not under precept, but commended, a Will-worſhip) ſo being applied to abſtinence from meats, it can be of no very good conſequence. 11.

For Faſting hath long been numbred among the ſorts of Chriſtian ſacrifice, and is ſo ſet down by * Aquinas from that of S. Paul of offering up our bodies a ſacrifice to God, Rom. 12. which, ſaith he, is done by faſting, continence, martyrdome; Leo calls it continentiæ libamen, the ſacrifice of abſtinence. And † S. Hierom ſpeaking of it, uſeth this ſtyle, quicquid ſupra juſtitiam offertur Deo, making it an offering to God, though not under precept; and before him * Tertullian, ſpeaking of abſtinence, Humilitatem animæ Deo immolant, they ſacrifice to God the humility of the ſoul. And li. de Reſur. Carn. c. 8. Sacrificia Deo grata, conflictationes dico animæ, jejunia, & feras & aridas eſcas, Faſting a ſacrifice acceptable to God. And yet higher, is the expreſs ſaying of S. Luke concerning Anne, that ſhe did λατρεύειν ſerve God in faſtings and prayers, Luke 2. 37. And agreeable to this it is, that our Saviour mentions it together with prayer and almſgiving, Mat. 6. and promiſeth it a reward, v. 18. 12.

* Secunda ſecundæ qu. 85. art. 3.

† Ad Celantiam Ep. 14. Tom. 1. p. 31.

* De cultu fœmi. c. 9.

That the other two are ſpecies of worſhip, and the ſolemn Chriſtian ſacrifices, ſo ſtiled by the holy writers, there is no queſtion; and then why, or how ſhould Faſting which is the third, if it be qualified as it ought, be degraded from the honour, and for no other crime, but only for being taught to be what really it is, i. e. an acceptable worſhip of God, become hurtful and abominable? 13.

By the way, would this be affirmed by the Diatribiſt of hearing Sermons, in caſe it ſhould be taught, or aſſume to be a part of God's worſhip? would it preſently be caſt out as hurtful and abominable? And yet ſure, bare hearing of Sermons is not any acknowledged branch of worſhip. 14.

Something, I acknowledge, of difference there is, betwixt this of Faſting, and thoſe other two of Prayer and Almſgiving, to which Chriſt annexeth it; Faſting receives the chief of its virtue and eſtimation, not from the act it ſelf, which is but a ſelf-denial, but either as an effect of piety, as flowing from godly ſorrow, and ſo joined with [a] prayer for pardon, or as an [b] help or expedient toward piety, whether by ſubduing of carnal deſires, by [c] humbling the ſoul, &c. or by fitting and gaining us leiſure and ability for [d] prayer, and for [e] almſgiving; and if it be the bare abſtinence from meat, abſtracted from all of theſe, it is [f] no ſuch eminent or acceptable worſhip of God, Hæc enim virtus adjumentum eſt, non perfectio ſanctitatis, this virtue is an help, not the perfection of ſanctity, ſaith [g] S. Hierom, ad Celantiam; But then ſtill, ſuch a help it is, and that to more ends than one; For ſpeaking of Chaſtity, he adds, non huic tantummodo, ſed omnibus omnino virtutibus abſtinentia opitulatur, faſting is helpful not to that only, but generally to all virtues; And ſo S. Chryſoſtome, φάρμακόν ἐστιν ἡ νηστεία, faſting is a medicine, but that uſeleſs, if it be not uſed as it ſhould be. 15.

So that ſtill looking on it but as ſuch, it is I hope more capable of the titles of uſeful and profitable for ſomewhat, than of hurtful and abominable. As it is an inſtrument of good, a help, or medicine, ſo ſure 'tis profitable εἰς ὀλίγον, in ſome lower degree, in order to thoſe uſes; And what if by our faults, διὰ τὴν ἀπειρίαν τῶν χρωμένων, ſaith Chryſoſtom, becauſe of the unskilfulneſs of thoſe that uſe it, it become ἄχρηστον uſeleſs, yet ſure this is no defamation or prejudice to it; The moſt generous medicaments may thus be rendred uſeleſs and inoperative, yet are in themſelves very apt to work cures; and ſo prayer it ſelf may become utterly unprofitable, by the like miſcarriage of ours; And more eſpecially, hearing the word, which is very proper for excellent uſes, for inſtruction, admonition, &c. doth yet in the event very frequently prove unprofitable, and yet this is no prejudice to the inſtitution. 16.

By this, I ſuppoſe, the exact importance of the phraſe may be collected, as bodily exerciſe is not oppoſed to, but compared with godlineſs, and [profitable πρὸς ὀλίγον, for a little] to [πρὸς πάντα for all things, having the promiſe of this life, &c.] viz. that ſuch exerciſes as theſe, faſting particularly, is a very good inſtrument in a pious mans handling, profitable and advantageous in its degree, in order to mortification, &c. to teſtify our ſorrow and repentance, to aſſiſt in the deprecating of Gods wrath, to qualify us for relieving of others, for ardent intenſe prayer, &c. but yet muſt not be magnified above its proportion, being compared with univerſal piety, which is profitable to all things, and hath the promiſe of this life and of another. This falls very low in that high compariſon, it is but πρὸς ὀλίγον ὠφέλιμος, profitable for a little, whether in extent of matter, profitable for fewer things than piety, which is profitable for all things; or in extent of time, as πρὸς ὀλίγον ſometimes is rendred πρὸς καιρὸν, profitable for this time of life, wherein all thoſe benefits are to be reapt, to which faſting is profitable, humiliation, mortification, &c. but eſpecially in the former notion of this extent, profitable for ſome few things, in compariſon. And ſo much ex abundanti for the vindicating that text of the profitableneſs of bodily exerciſe. 17.

Before he leaves this, he adds that the Doctor ſeems to place the illneſs of theſe bodily exerciſes in this, 18.

this, when they are taught as neceſſary, to the defaming of meat and marriage; But—— I anſwer,

19. That I did ſo place their illneſs, I thought I had done it on very good authority, that of the ancient Canons, particularly of the 51. Apoſtolical, εἴτις ἐπίσκοπος γάμου καὶ κρεῶν καὶ οἴνου, οὐ δι' ἀσκησιν, ἀλλὰ διὰ βδελυείαν, ἀπέχεσθαι, ἐπιλαθόμενος ὅτι πάντα καλὰ λίαν ἐποίησεν ὁ θεὸς, ἀλλὰ βλασφημῶν διαβάλλει τὴν δημιουργίαν, ἢ διορθούσθω, ἢ καθαιρείσθω, &c. If any Biſhop or Clerk abſtain from marriage, fleſh, wine, not for exerciſe, (abſtinence or continence) but for deteſtation, he forgets that God created all things very good, male and female, &c. and blaſphemouſly calumniates the creation, and therefore muſt either reform or be depoſed. 'Tis viſible here, wherein that fault conſiſts, not in the abſtinence, but looking on meats and marriage as unlawful things, which they could not be, but as they are ſuppoſed to be forbidden by God; And Zonoras's comment on it is very natural, τὸ μὲν δι' ἐγκράτειαν ἀπέχεσθαι, ἀποδεκτέον, Abſtinence for the virtues ſake is to be allowed and commended: τὸ δὲ ταῦτα βδελυττεσθαι καὶ ὡς βλαβερὰ πρὸς ψυχὴν ἀποστρέφεσθαι, οὐκ ἀνέγκλητον, but abominating thoſe and rejecting them as hurtful to the ſoul, this is it which is criminous and cenſurable. And Balſamon adds, that as they ſhall be cenſured which abſtain from them διὰ τὸ γενέσθαι παραίτια κακῶν τοῖς κακῶς παραχρωμένοις αὐτοῖς, becauſe they are cauſes of ill to thoſe that abuſe them, inſtancing in Bogomilus which did ſo; ſo he that abſtains διὰ εὐλάβειαν for religion or piety, οὐ κατακεισθήσεται ſhall not be cenſured. As cautious a prevention of this Diatribiſts doctrine, and as ſeaſonable an advertiſement to him, as could have been imagined.

20. To theſe teſtimonies I might farther add that of Tertullian, who affirms that among the followers of Marcion and Tatianus (though not, ſaith he, of Montanus) were found men qui perpetuam abſtinentiam præcipiunt ad deſtruenda & dejicienda opera creatoris, who commanded perpetual abſtinence to the deſtroying and caſting down the works of the Creator, de jejun. c. 15. And the like intimations of the opinion of hereticks we meet frequently in the Fathers, who give their cautions againſt this, Non rejiciendis generibus ciborum quaſi pollutis. Auguſt. de mor. Eccl. Cath. l. 1. c. 33. & eſcarum non naturas ſed concupiſcentias damnent. Proſper de vit. contempl. l. 2. 22. And many the like. And among the Papiſts, no meaner perſon than Durand ſpeaks much to this ſenſe, that thoſe old hereticks did, (though the generality of the Papiſts ſeem not to approve or follow him) God, ſaith he, curſed the earth, and from thence it is, that in faſting 'tis unlawful to eat any fleſh that is upon the earth, beaſts and birds, &c. Rat. divin. Off. l. 6. c. 7. But this by the way.

21. Next then, taking the words λόγος σοφίας to ſignify only a ſhew of piety, he cannot but wonder at my queſtion [How abſtinences can have ſo much as a ſhew of piety in Will-worſhip, if Will-worſhip paſs confeſtly for fooliſh and impious?] bidding me ask all interpreters, who render the words, a ſhew of wiſdom in ſuperſtition or affected religion, how this can be.

22. But before I ſhall ask them, I muſt have ſome aſſurance from this Diatribiſt, that all interpreters do ſo render it; for otherwiſe my queſtion will be loſt in the air, and never bring me home any anſwer; But of this I am well enough adviſed, that all interpreters do not thus render it; I ſhall inſtance, as even now I did, in the learned Grotius, as valuable, I believe, as any that will be brought for the Diatribiſt's interpretation, and beſides, any one aſſerter of mine interpretation (and certainly Grotius is one) confutes his aſſertion of all interpreters.

23. However, unleſs I can be farther aſſured, that he or they whom the Diatribiſt takes for all, doth alſo take notice of, and render ſome anſwer to my queſtion, what ſhall I gain by asking them? And if they do anſwer it, why would not the Diatribiſt be ſo kind as to recite it from them? But this I am ſure he hath not done, by asking me again, Cannot a thing have a ſhew of wiſdom or piety, which is confeſſedly fooliſh or impious, and if ſo, may it not be ſo in reſpect of the Will-worſhip in it?

24. I anſwer, that if I take the queſtion in the terms wherein it is propoſed, it is no way of anſwering my queſtion, but the diverting to a very diſtant matter, For when he asks, may it not be ſo in reſpect of the Will-worſhip in it? the plain importance of his words is, may it not be fooliſh or impious in reſpect of the Will-worſhip that is in it? not, may it not have a ſhew of wiſdom or piety in reſpect of the Will-worſhip? for it is viſible that [be ſo] refers to [is fooliſh] and not to [have a ſhew.] And then there is a fair fallacy put upon the Reader, the terms of my queſtion, and of the text, quite changed, and others ſubſtituted in ſtead of them; and then I confeſs, that ſuppoſing Will-worſhip as ill, as the Diatribiſt would have it, a thing may be fooliſh or impious in reſpect of Will-worſhip.

25. But let the queſtion be fairly ſet, cannot a thing that is fooliſh and impious have a ſhew of wiſdom in reſpect of Will-worſhip? And then as I ſhall anſwer, it may: ſo I muſt add, that then that Will-worſhip muſt be taken in a good ſenſe, for elſe that fooliſh thing could not have a ſhew of wiſdom or piety in Will-worſhip. If a fool have any ſhew of wiſdom in him, it muſt be ſure not in reſpect of his folly, but of ſome particular or other, which is by him that ſpeaks accounted wiſdom, and that he muſt have in him either in reality or in appearance, or elſe how can he have any ſhew of wiſdom; If Satan have the ſhew or appearance of an Angel of light, it muſt be in reſpect to ſomething which he doth, or pretends to do, which is Angelical.

26. As for the inſtances with which he proſecutes this, it muſt be a ſtrange ſhortneſs of diſcourſe, if he can think they evince his concluſion; He exemplifies in the Baalitical lancing, and the Popiſh penances, and ſuppoſing the former impious, and the latter not only ridiculous but heatheniſh, yet theſe, ſaith he, had a ſhew of piety. But what if they had, was it ever denyed or queſtioned by me, but that impious perſons or actions might have a ſhew of piety? for ſure I always knew there were hypocrites in the world; but my queſtion he knows was, how any thing can have a ſhew of piety in reſpect of that very thing which is impious? This was the only queſtion that belonged to the affair betwixt us, and certainly the Diatribiſt's inſtances are very remote from that; for the Baalites ſhew of piety conſiſted not in their bloody lancing of themſelves, nor the Papiſts in their as bloody penances, but either in the reality or appearance of that deteſtation of ſin, and that zeal, which makes them ſubmit themſelves to ſo much ſmart.

27. It was very neceſſary then for him in the purſuit of this, when he again recites my queſtion, [But (ſaith the Doctor) can any thing be repreſented to me as having ſo much as a ſhew of piety, in reſpect of luſt or rage diſcernible in it?] to tell the Reader that this compariſon is ill laid. For if this be well laid, then ſure his ſetting of the queſtion is foully out of the way. But why is it ill laid? is it not directly a way of tryal, whether will-worſhip be ſet by the Apoſtle in an ill notion? For if it be, then ſomewhat elſe which is acknowledgedly ill (and θύμος and ἐπιθυμία rage and luſt, the two principles of ſenſuality, were the fitteſt I could think on of this ſort, to inſtance in) being put in the ſtead of it, the Apoſtles words would ſtill continue to have truth and congruity in them, viz. that ſuch a thing hath a ſhew of piety in it, in reſpect of luſt or rage. This it ſeems was too groſs for him to ſwallow, and therefore (and upon no other reaſon, but becauſe it made the truth moſt palpable) the compariſon, ſaith he, was ill laid.

But 'tis yet more ſtrange, if we conſider his reaſon of excepting againſt this compariſon, For rage, 28.
ſaith he, and luſt are for kind confeſſedly wicked things. (And truly that was the reaſon why I inſtanced in them, to ſhew that a thing cannot have a ſhew of good, in reſpect of that which is confeſſly bad, which I could not have ſhewed in thoſe inſtances, if they might have been good as well as bad) but worſhip, ſaith he, may be true or falſe. I ſhall then only ask, whether Will-worſhip may ſo too? for that, he knows, is the word we contend about.

If it may not, but is always falſe, then ſtill it is directly parallel to luſt and rage, in this, wherein 29.
the compariſon was made, thoſe always ill, and this alſo: But if Will-worſhip may be true, as well as falſe, then as I acknowledge a thing may have a ſhew of piety in reſpect of Will-worſhip, meaning the good or true Will-worſhip, and ſuppoſing S. Paul ſo to have meant, and not any falſe or impious will-worſhip; ſo by this one conceſſion of the Diatribiſt after all this contention and ſcrupuloſity and niceneſs, the whole queſtion is yielded me, for it ſeems Will-worſhip may be true as well as falſe, and ſo, good as well as bad, and here not confeſtly falſe or bad, quod erat demonſtrandum.

What now follows, ſhewing that impious and falſe worſhip may have a ſhew of wiſdom and piety to na- 30.
tural men, is evidently impertinent to our debate or queſtion, which conſiſts only in this, whether that which hath a bare ſhew of piety or wiſdom, can have it in reſpect of that which is confeſtly impious and fooliſh; and therefore when he hath full ſcope, to put it a little more home to me, as he ſaith, and yet can do no more but ask, Whether zeal may not have a ſhew of true zeal, and yet be nothing but rage and madneſs? it is ſtill to as little purpoſe, equally beſide the queſtion; And ſo when he asks, Whether the Devil transforming himſelf into an Angel of light, muſt have ſomething really of light or piety in him, or elſe cannot have ſo much as a ſhew of piety? 'Tis evident he may, without having any reality of piety in him, and yet it is as evident, that if he have that ſhew of piety, in reſpect of humility or charity, or any thing elſe, that humility or charity, or whatſoever elſe, muſt be of the number of thoſe things that are accounted good and pious, for otherwiſe his having the appearance or bare ſhew of them, would not conclude him to have the appearance of piety. The matter is evident enough, if he will pleaſe to open his eyes, I cannot have a ſhew of piety in Will-worſhip unleſs Will-worſhip be a branch of piety, and ſo by proportion a ſhew of Will-worſhip a ſhew of piety.

His concluſion of this copious anſwer is yet more obſervable (and according to his directions, I 31. ſhall note it once for all) that the words are not, which things have a ſhew of wiſdom and Will-worſhip, &c. for then, ſaith he, as wiſdom was good and taken in a good ſenſe, ſo might the reſt be taken, and the fault be, that they had only an appearance, not the truth or power; but the words are, they have a ſhew of wiſdom in Will-worſhip, &c. and if they were faulty becauſe they had only a ſhew of wiſdom, they will be more faulty that they had but a ſhew of piety, or worſhip, or humility. All which I ſhall very eaſily grant, and as in the latter part I ſhall fully comply with him, that thoſe doctrines of abſtinences, Col. 2. were faulty, becauſe though they had a ſhew of Will-worſhip and humility, yet they had not the reality of thoſe virtues in them; ſo from the former part of his words I have all reaſon of analogie to conclude, that Will-worſhip is taken in a good ſenſe, by its being evidently joined with humility and ſelf-denyal, for thoſe ſure are good things alſo, as well as wiſdom, and that all the fault was, that the doctrines of abſtinences had only the appearance of thoſe virtues, not the truth or power of them. How inevitably this concluſion is founded on theſe very premiſes given me by the Diatribiſt, is ſo evident, that I hope I ſhall not need farther to enlarge to ſhew it. By the ſame reaſon that Will-worſhip muſt have been concluded good, if it had been joined with wiſdom, in this form [a ſhew of wiſdom and of Will-worſhip] it muſt certainly follow that Will-worſhip is good, becauſe it is joined with humility in this form, [in Will-worſhip and humility] humility being as confeſtly good, as wiſdom is ſuppoſed to be, and the fault of the abſtinential doctrines ſtill equal, that they had only the appearance, not reality of all theſe.

Once more, the utmoſt force of all is yet reſerved for the cloſe of the concluſion, The words ἐν ἐθε- 32.
λοθρησείᾳ, &c. ſaith he, do no more inforce us to take it in a good ſenſe, than when we ſay, Judas made a ſhew of love to Chriſt in his traiterous kiſs, and the Papiſts devotion in bowing to ſtocks and images. But I deſire that he ſet the words of his example ſo, as may be exactly parallel to the words, Col. 2. 23. (the leaſt change may have an influence on the matter) and then it muſt be thus, Firſt, Judas had (not made) a ſhew of love to Chriſt in his traiterous kiſs, and the Papiſts have a ſhew of devotion in bowing to ſtocks and images. And ſecondly, inſtead of traiterous muſt be placed ſome word, which ſhall no more vary the kiſs, than the addition of Will varies the worſhip, (for that the uncommandedneſs of worſhip makes it traiterous, or ſo much as ill, muſt not be ſuppoſed here, where it is the only queſtion.)

Having premiſed this, I now anſwer to the example as it is by him ſet, that as the words in the 33.
Apoſtle were certainly true, ſo theſe words, as they are now ill ſet, are as undoubtedly falſe; for conſider the kiſs, with that ſo diſtinctive contrary adjunct, as a traiterous kiſs, (which addition as it is neceſſary to make it ill, ſo it deprives it of all appearance of love) and then Judas had no ſhew of love to Chriſt in this, viz. in his traiterous kiſs. If indeed he had ſaid, Judas had a ſhew of love to Chriſt in kiſſing him, or ſaluting him friendly, then it had been true, and then the concluſion had been evident, that a kiſs or friendly ſalute is an act or indication of love, an hearty kiſs of an hearty love, and a feigned kiſs of a feigned love; or if the addition of traiterous kiſs, had made no greater a change, than the addition of will or uncommandedneſs to worſhip, then again it had been true; But ſuppoſing the kiſs to be a traiterous kiſs, viz. a kiſs given as a σύσημον or watchword, whom (and when) the Souldiers ſhould apprehend, then ſure he had no ſhew of love to Chriſt in that kiſs. And ſo in like manner, if the propoſition had been, The Papiſts have a ſhew of devotion in bowing, it had been true, becauſe adoration or bowing is a ſpecies or indication of devotion; but becauſe Idolatry is neither of theſe, and bowing to ſtocks and images, is Idolatry, there can therefore be no truth in that propoſition, ſet, as by the Diatribiſt it is ſet, and ſuppoſed to be delivered by any Orthodox pen (for ſuch ſure was the Apoſtle's to his Coloſſians) but the direct contradictory will be true and clear to all that count bowing to ſtocks and images a ſin. For to them, the Papiſts have no ſhew of devotion in bowing to ſtocks or images, no ſhew of piety, but only of impiety, in Idolatry.

34. And thus, I hope, I have at length vindicated this Second argument for the good ſenſe of the word, from all the evaſions and χρησφύγελα (and truly there have been good ſtore of them, and I believe this Section his maſterpiece of dexterity, and therefore I have ſo punctually and χρ πόδα inſiſted on it) from all the ſubtile refuges of this Diatribiſt.

SECT. XI.

The Greek Fathers acception of ἐθελοθρησκία. An argument of goodneſs, that 'tis pretended by hypocrites. Religion in a good ſenſe. Will-worſhip not worſe than falſe worſhip, not abominable. All deviſed worſhip is not Idolatry, doth not pretend to more wiſdom than Gods. The Latin Fathers cited by Mr. C. The vulgar Tranſlator, and the followers thereof. Δογματίζεσθε by the vulgar rendred decernitis. The authority of Bellarmine and Daillè for the good ſenſe. The teſtimonies out of Ambroſe, Theodoret, Salmeron, Eſtius, Auguſtine, Thomas, examined.

Numb. 1. MY third reaſon being taken from the Greek Fathers underſtanding of the place, who though they interpret λόγον only of appearance, yet paraphraſe Will-worſhip by words of good ſavour, εὐλαβῆς, pious, religious, &c. The Diatribiſt begins with a triumph and ovation, Firſt, ſaith he, this is well, that the Greek Fathers agree with us in expoſition of the firſt words, a ſhew (not, as he, ſomewhat real) of wiſdom, &c. they expreſly oppoſe againſt it power and truth, and can that which hath neither power nor truth in the worſhip of God, be taken in a good ſenſe? And do not the Fathers imply as much, Chryſoſt. δοκεῖ γὰρ εὐλαβὴς τις εἶναι, &c. ἀλλ' οὐκ ἔστι γε, he ſeems to be religious, but is not ſo, Oecumenius ὑποκεινομένων εὐλάβειαν, pretending religion in worſhip. And is there any goodneſs in hypocriſy?

2. Here truly it is not to be reprehended but cheriſhed in the Diatribiſt, that he is ſo very much rejoyced to hear the news, that the Greek Fathers and he are of a mind, in any the leaſt particular; I hope it will incourage and ingage him to a more familiar converſation with them, and then I am perſwaded no body will have reaſon to repent of it.

3. All that I am to complain of at the preſent, is, firſt that their interpreting λόγον a ſhew, ſhould be deemed an agreement with him, more than with me, who he knows have produced them, and never expreſt any diſlike to that interpretation. All the difference between us being but this, that the Greek λόγον being capable of two rendrings, rationem and ſpeciem, I that deſired to proceed on ſure grounds, propoſed them both, and, which ſoever ſhould be adhered to, ſhewed the neceſſity of ἐθελοθρησκία being taken in a good ſenſe. 'Tis true indeed, if λόγῳ ſhould be there taken for ratio, the argument for the good ſenſe would proceed moſt irreſiſtably; But ſuppoſing it with the Fathers to ſignify ſpecies, a bare ſhew or appearance, yet the argument holds very firmly, thus alſo the Gnoſtick doctrines cannot have ſo much as a ſhew of piety in Will-worſhip, unleſs Will-worſhip real be piety real, and the appearance of Will-worſhip, a foundation of an appearance of piety. And this being the ſenſe of the Fathers, which rendered λόγον a bare ſhew, this ſure was fit to be confronted to the Diatribiſt's pretenſions, as a third argument.

4. And is not now a ſtrange way of anſwer to this argument, to ask, as he here doth, Can that which hath neither power nor truth in the worſhip of God, be taken in a good ſenſe? I reply, by demanding what it is, of which the Fathers ſay, that it hath neither power nor truth? Sure the doctrines of abſtinence, and not the Will-worſhip; And yet his anſwer proceeds as if they ſuppoſed it of the Will-worſhip, and without that, hath no appearance of force in it. And is not this a ſtrange perverting of plain words? Chryſoſtom ſaith, the falſe teacher ſeems to be pious, but is not, and Oecumenius, that he ſimulates piety, and from hence Mr. C. concludes that Will-worſhip is not taken in a good ſenſe. But I pray, is not piety taken in a good ſenſe even when the hypocrite ſimulates piety? Nay, would he pretend to it, if it were not good? Doth a hypocrite pretend to that which is acknowledgedly ill? This were ſure to appear what he is, and that is contrary to his being an hypocrite. The product is plain, Will-worſhip is rendred by piety, not by appearance of piety, and unleſs piety it ſelf can be taken there in an ill ſenſe, Will-worſhip muſt be taken in a good ſenſe; Certainly I need add no more ('tis pity I ſhould be required to ſay ſo much) of this matter.

5. But on occaſion of the interpreter of Clemens, who renders ἐν ἐθελοθρησκείᾳ, in religione, from whence I thought I might conclude it that mans ſenſe, that Will-worſhip ſignifies religion, and ſo that it was not taken in an ill ſenſe, he is pleaſed to ask, [Why, Is not religion it ſelf of various ſenſes? The ſimple word ſignifies falſe religion, as well as true; but the compoſition makes it worſe, and alters the ſenſe, becauſe it adds the work of mans will to worſhip, which is abominable to God.]

6. What depth there is in this queſtion will ſoon appear; For Firſt, What if both religio and θρησκεία be of various ſenſes, and ſignify falſe religion as well as true, heathen, or Judaical, as well as Chriſtian? Is there any appearance of reaſon to determine it to the former, in this place, or in that interpreters acception of it? If there be, then there is an account of the words being taken in an ill ſenſe, without any influence of the ἐθελο, mans will upon it; if there be not (as he is obliged to affirm there is not, ſaying p. 69. that the Apoſtle brands them as deſtructive, becauſe they are but Will-worſhip, not becauſe they are outdated or Judaical; much leſs then, becauſe they are any more dangerous ſort of falſe worſhip, ſuch as was uſed among the heathens) then what matters it, what in other places it ſignify, whenſoever the adjuncts or context ſo determine it, unleſs it do (or can be pretended to do) ſo here?

This being premiſed, that which follows is yet more ſtrange, that (θρησκεία ſignifying falſe religion 7.
as well as true) the compoſition makes it worſe; worſe than what? than falſe religion? This is fairly to reſolve, that the uſe of any thing uncommanded in the ſervice of the true God, is worſe than falſe religion indefinitely, i. e. than Idolatry or Superſtition; and the reaſon annext is of the ſame temper, [adding the work of mans will is abominable to God.]

Here indeed is a foundation of charge of Idolatry, or whatever is moſt abominable on this poor Church 8.
of ours, for the bare uſing of any moſt innocent ceremony; But this all the while incumbent on the Diatribiſt to prove; and as it will not be granted for asking, ſo it is not ſo nearly approaching toward truth, as to want any farther anſwer, than the reciting of it; I cannot yet be ſo uncharitable to Mr. C. as to imagine it his ſerious opinion, that kneeling in prayer or thanksgiving to God, on purpoſe to expreſs our lowly reverence to him, or bowing at the name of Jeſus, in token that we believe him to be the eternal God, in oppoſition to the ancient or modern Arians and Socinians, is abominable to God, and worſe than falſe religion.

And though his following queſtion confirms this to be his opinion [Do not all Idolaters pretend wiſ- 9.
dom in their inventions, citing in the margent, Pſal. 106. 39. went a whoring with their own inventions], yet 'tis not to be believed, that he can in earneſt thence conclude, Therefore all inventions of men are Idolatry, and worſe than Idolatry; If he can, 'tis ſufficient to reply, that though all Idolatry be invented and deviſed worſhip, yet all inventions of men are not Idolatry; though every beaſt be a living creature, yet every living creature is not a beaſt; And ſo, that though Idolatrous Will-worſhip be abominable to God, yet all Will-worſhip is not Idolatrous.

Once more he preſſeth this argument, Doth not, ſaith he, this pretence (of wiſdom) make it more 10.
odious to God, as taking upon them to be wiſer than he, and more devout than he requires?] But it may ſuffice once for all, that he that uſeth an uncommanded ceremony in the ſervice of God, doth not take upon him to be wiſer than God, but walking regularly in obedience to the divine rule, whereſoever there is any particularly given, acts according to reaſon and the more univerſal rules of Decency, &c. where God hath not particularly preſcribed any thing. And ſo again in acts of uncommanded devotion; doing that voluntarily out of love to God, which God requires not ſub periculo animæ, and ſo, which is not extorted by fear, either of offending or ſuffering, this is again no elevating our own wiſdom above Gods, but our making uſe of thoſe advantages and thoſe liberties which God in his wiſdom choſe to afford us, that there might be ſomewhat for us freely to exerciſe his graces upon, and ſo for him as freely to reward in us. And of this there is no fear, that it ſhall ever be counted any irregular acting, and having God's promiſe to be rewarded, it is ſafe from being odious or abominable before him.

Thus I hope I have vindicated the good ſenſe of the word as far as in my third Reaſon I pretended 11.
from the Greek Fathers concurrence with me.

As for the Latines and later interpreters, to which the Diatribiſt now calls me, and asks me why I 12.
did not tell him, how they rendred the word? To this I anſwer, that as I have not commodity to examine all thoſe interpreters in this matter, ſo I did not think my ſelf obliged to do it, having never pretended that the notion which I give, is univerſally received by all Expoſitors; I acknowledge, that all men have not rendred the word in a good ſenſe, particularly that the vulgar Latine reads it Superſtitio (though in what acception of that word I know not, moſt probably in an ill ſenſe) but ſure this with no more truth or analogy for ſo interpreting, than is for their interpreting the Paſſive δογματίζεσθε by decernitis, v. 20. which is no leſs than to change ſubjection into command, undergoing a yoke, into impoſing of it, one contrary into another.

However from thence 'tis nothing ſtrange that the ill ſenſe ſhould be transfuſed into thoſe Expoſitors 13.
which follow and never depart from that Latine tranſlation, neither examining the original word, nor the context, to reform that tranſlation by it. This was the task which I then undertook, and having found the context to incline it to a good ſenſe, and the Greek word to bear it very well, and the Greek Fathers to concur with me in their notion of it, I thought I might lawfully queſtion the authority of the vulgar Latine, and thoſe who had been lead by it, (and ſo we know are the Papiſts, and from them others alſo, who do not take notice who 'tis that leads them) and attempt that here, which I ſaw ordinarily practiſed by all other ſorts of men, the Learned Papiſts themſelves (and, I doubt not, by this Diatribiſt, when he conceives himſelf to have reaſon for it) i. e. depart from their words and conduct, as in other ſo in this particular.

In ſo doing I now ſee without any ſearch, that I have ſuch a concurrence as will ſecure it from any 14.
cenſure of ſingularity. Beſide the Greek Fathers forementioned, the * Diatribiſt tells me I have Bel- * p. 69.
larmine's conſent (adding ſome other Papiſts alſo) and I hope his authority alone were conſiderable enough, if there were not alſo ſome others, to weigh in the balance with Salmeron and Eſtius, which are all the modern Expoſitors here cited by him.

And among the Proteſtants, to Hugo Grotius, already cited, I now add Monſieur Daillé in his late 15. tract de Jejuniis, written ex inſtituto againſt Bellarmine, and yet in this place of St. Paul conteſted l. 1. c. 7.
between them, he expreſly acknowledges with Bellarmine, the very thing that I concluded, viz. that thoſe falſe teachers had a threefold colour of wiſdom, Firſt, In Will-worſhip, Secondly, In humility, Thirdly, In auſterity to the body, for which three things they admire theſe their doctrines of men; defining ἐθελοθρησκεία cultum ſponte & voluntariè aſſumptum nulla cogente Dei lege, a worſhip undertaken voluntarily and of their own accord without any law of God conſtraining them, and again, that by the whole diſcourſe of the Apoſtle it appears, that they commended and ſet off their doctrines of abſtinence by this, that voluntarily ex quadam zeli & ſanctificationis abundantiâ ſuſciperentur, they were voluntarily undertaken out of an abundance of zeal and holineſs. And ſo in his opinion, if abundance of zeal and holineſs were taken in a good ſenſe, Will-worſhip muſt be reſolved to be ſo taken.

And ſo this Expoſition of that learned man, who will not be deemed partial to me againſt the Dia- 16.
tribiſt, may now deſerve to be conſidered by him, as ſoon as the contrary of any modern Expoſitor produced, or, I believe, producible by him.

For as to thoſe antient Latine Fathers, whom he hath already produced, they are but three, Am- 17.
broſe, Hierom, and the vulgar Latine, and thoſe three may be reduced alſo, and in fine will amount to little more than the one ſingle vulgar Tranſlator. This is generally ſuppoſed to be St. Hierom (and if it be not, 'tis certainly ſomebody whom St. Hierom followed, St. Hieroms ſhort notes on the Epiſtles being affixt to that tranſlation) and ſo St. Hieroms name is no addition to that, only ſerved the Diatribiſts turn, as in a falſe muſter, to bear two names, to appear twice, and fill two ſpaces in his catalogue.

18. And for the only Father now remaining, St. Ambroſe, if thoſe Comments be his, which go under his name, they will bring no great prejudice to our pretenſions, for by paraphraſing [ἐθελοθρησκείᾳ] by ſimulatione religionis, all that can be concluded is, that thoſe doctrines of abſtinence had not any reality, but only a falſe guiſe of religion in them, and ſo it follows there, Hinc ſe ſapientiæ rationem habere putant, quia traditioni humanæ nomen religionis applicant, & religio appellatur cum ſit ſacrilegium, Hence they think themſelves to have ſome appearance of wiſdom, becauſe they apply the name of religion to humane tradition, and it is called religion, when it is ſacrilege; And this I may eaſily grant, and conſequently that the Will-worſhip here, and ſo likewiſe the humility, were not either of them truly ſuch, and ſo offended in this, that they were not what they pretended to be, and would not have been criminous, if they had been really ſuch; which ſtill devolves all the fault on the doctrines and on the hypocriſie, not on the Will-worſhip, or Religion, whoſe name would never have been pretended to by hypocrites, if it had not been good. See Section 7. of this ch. n. 10.

19. Mean while I gueſs not how Theodoret, which is acknowledged to be a Greek Father, came to be ranked among the Latines, and a Latin interpretation of ἐθελοθρησκεία cited out of him; However I never pretended, that all either Greek or Latin, or particularly that he concurred with me in this ſenſe, and therefore am not obliged to give any farther account of his interpretation; Only this I am ſure of, that 'tis not the uncommandedneſs of the worſhips, that he finds fault with, but firſt, Their teaching thoſe for Gods commands, which are their own; (That is the meaning of ἴδιον εἰσφέρουσι δόγμα, their introducing their own ordinances, τῶν ἄκαιρον αὐτῶν δικαιοσύνην, their unſeaſonable Judaical doctrine) and ſecondly, Their bare ſhew of piety and humility, without the truth of either (σχῆμα περιποιούμενοι, οὐκ ἀλήθειαν) whereas by his concluſion, it is moſt evident, that the abſtinences without the doctrines, would not have been deemed by him reproveable, and ſo not the bare uncommandedneſs of the worſhip; for thus we have it in the cloſe, γνώμῃ γὰρ ἀπέχεσθαι δεῖ, οὐχ ὡς βδελυκτῶν ἀλλ' ὡς ἡδίστων, For abſtinences ought to be by counſel, not as from deteſtable, but as from the moſt delectable things. Which is the very thing, which all this while we have endeavoured to conclude from that place.

20. After theſe his Latin Fathers, he haſtens to later interpreters, and thoſe are two, Salmeron and Eſtius, and thoſe two are one again, the one taking from the other as the manner is, without any conſiderable difference. But to give his Teſtimonies their full weight, we will view them diſtinctly.

21. Salmeron begins with obſerving, that whereas the Vulgar Latin reads, in Superſtitione & humilitate, & non ad parcendum corpori, the Greek hath only three, words, ἐθελοθρησκεία, ταπεινοφροσύνη, ἀφειδία σώματος, which three, ſaith he, ſunt tres colores oſtendentes rationem & ſpecimen ſapientiæ, are three colours ſhewing a ſpecimen (which by the way is more than ſpeciem, or bare ſhew, ſome real evidence) of that wiſdom (to which thoſe doctrines of abſtinences pretended.) And the firſt of theſe, ſaith he, ſignifies cultum ſpontaneum, ſive voluntariam religionem, à ſpontaneous worſhip, or voluntary religion, pro arbitrio cujuſvis abſtinendi à cibis, of abſtaining from meats as every man ſhall think fit, and afterwards, illâ voce alludit ad voluntarias oblationes legis quæ nedaboth dicuntur, Deut. 16. and Amos 5. By this word he alludes to the voluntary oblations of the Law, which are called נדבות. And then I ſhall deſire the Diatribiſt to conſider, how fitly Salmeron was called out to give teſtimony againſt me, (he, and one more, in the name of all later interpreters) when it is evident from theſe words, that he ſaith the very ſame thing, which all this while I contend for, if I could have thought fit to have defended my ſelf from ſingularity, by his Teſtimony.

22. 'Tis true indeed he conceives the words to allude to v. 18. volens in humilitate & religione, and ſo goes along with Eſtius, and others in that miſtake, which I had taken notice of in them, and that might have eaſily led him into farther miſtake, if the evidence of the truth, or ſome other better guide had not rectified him; But as it is, I have no reaſon to complain of him, as to the word ἐθελοθρησκεία which is now before us.

23. Somewhat more he adds of the word ταπεινοφροσύνη which ſignifying, ſaith he, the virtue of humility, is here uſed for a feigned humility, which is contrary to the Goſpel, becauſe by it the Judaizers Evangelio legem admiſcebant, mixt the law with the Goſpel; And as this is alſo perfectly concordant to my notions, ſo to this it is, that he brings the teſtimonies of Auguſtine and Thomas, and not for the notion of ἐθελοθρησκεία, as the Diatribiſt cites them out of Eſtius.

24. However to manifeſt my care of profiting by all his animadverſions, I ſhall view thoſe teſtimonies alſo. The one thing which Salmeron cites from both of them, is this, that omnis ritus colendi Deum qui à Deo non eſt, nec à Spiritu ſancto per Eccleſiam traditus, ſed voluntate hominum inventus, ſuperſtitioſus eſt, every rite of worſhipping God, that is not delivered from God, nor from the holy Ghoſt by the Church, but is invented by the will of man, is ſuperſtitious. Where it ſeems, that which is delivered by the Church, being by him ſuppoſed to be from the holy Ghoſt, doth in no degree fall under this cenſure; And then the Diatribiſt hath free leave to make his beſt advantage of this citation.

25. As for Eſtius, his main endeavour in the interpretation of the verſe, is to evince that λόγος ſignifies ſpeciem in genere, ſive veram ſive falſam, a ſpecies in general, whether true or falſe, which is very little for the Diatribiſts advantage; for granting it to ſignifie ſpecies, if that ſhould prove a true one, then that is perfectly deſtructive to his intereſts, for ſuch a ſpecies of wiſdom nothing could have in Will-worſhip, if Will-worſhip were ſuppoſed to be impious and fooliſh; And if it ſhould prove a falſe ſpecies, and ſo a bare ſhew of wiſdom, yet is that very reconcileable with the good notion of Will-worſhip, as hath oft been ſhew'd.

26. What follows in him, is, ſaith he, ſecundum Auguſtinum & Thomam, according to Auguſtine and Thomas, that theſe abſtinences have rationem ſapientiæ non veræ, ſed ejus quæ fita eſt in ſuperſtitione & humilitate, quæ falſa eſt ſapientia, not true wiſdom, but that which is placed in ſuperſtition and humility, which is falſe wiſdom. But where Auguſtine or Thomas give him authority to pretend their accord with him, him, he cites not. In all reaſon this defect muſt be ſupplied by Salmeron, who cited in the margent, Auguſt. lib. de verâ rel. & lib. 2. de doctr. Chriſt. c. 25. and Thomas, ſecunda ſecundæ qu. 93. art. 1.

What place in Auguſtines book de vera relig. it is, to which he refers, we have no direction, and 27.
ſo are left to gueſs, that it is cap. 55. Non ſit nobis religio in phantaſmatibus noſtris, Melius eſt enim qualecumq, verum, quàm omne quicquid pro arbitrio fingi poteſt, Let not our religion be placed in our fantaſmes, for any thing which is true, is better than whatſoever can be feigned at our own pleaſure. And as to the truth of this poſition, I give full conſent, that all fictitious falſe worſhip is to be avoided, not only (as he contents himſelf to ſay) unfit to compare with true; ſo I no where undertake to be advocate for any falſe or fictitious, or fantaſtick religion. The commemorating the birth of Chriſt on the 25th of December, I hope, is not ſuch, nor any Ceremony admitted into uſe in our Church.

The other place out of the Second de doctr. Chriſt. c. 55. ſtands thus; Having at the 20. Chapter 28.
defined Superſtitioſum ſuperſtitious, to be whatſoever was inſtituted by men, for the making or worſhipping of Idols, and that either belonging to the worſhipping any Creature, or part of a Creature as God, or to conſulting or making any pacts with Devils, &c. and having fallen on the ſeveral ſorts of divinations c. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. he begins his 25. ch. quibus amputatis atq; eradicatis ab animo Chriſtiano, deinceps videndæ ſunt inſtitutiones hominum non ſuperſtitioſæ, i. e. non cum dæmonibus, ſed cum ipſis hominibus inſtitutæ, The former being lopt off, and eradicated from a Chriſtians mind, let us farther view ſuch inſtitutions of men as are not ſuperſtitious, i. e. are not made with Devils, but with men themſelves. And having added ſomewhat of ſuch vain inſtitutions (which ſure no way concern the matter now in hand) he comes to thoſe which are uſeful to humane ſociety, and reſolves that ſuch are not to be avoided by a Chriſtian, imò etiam, quantum ſatis eſt, intuenda, memoriæque retinenda, but in a competent manner to be obſerved and retained, and this, how little it belongs to the preſent purpoſe to the proving ἐθελοθρησκεία to be here uſed in an ill ſenſe, is already ſo apparent, that I need add no word more to the clearing of it.

As for the place of Aquinas, ſecunda ſecundæ. qu. 93. art. 1. It is the very ſame, which long ago, 29.
we conſidered in the former part of this Tract, ch. 3. §. 3. n. 5. and to the view of it, there preſented, I refer the reader, finding nothing more in that whole place art. 1. which was not there punctually conſidered, unleſs it be a citation out of the Gloſs Col. 2. quòd ſuperſtitio eſt, quando traditioni humanæ religionis nomen applicatur, that it is ſuperſtition, when the name of religion is applied to the tradition of men, which words have nothing in them, which I am not ready to acknowledge, being ſufficiently aſſured, that dogmatizing is a ſin, and conſequently that ſo good a name as religion ought not to be pretended for, or applied to it.

What he adds by way of anſwer to my fourth reaſon, hath, I think, nothing of moment in it, but 30.
what hath oft been ſpoken to already, unleſs it be that he ſaith, he hath not obſerved any ſuch difficulty or obſcurity in that text Col. 2. 20, &c. but dares ſay, the Doctors expoſition makes the greateſt obſcurity that ever he met with: But of this there is no diſputing; I muſt not expect that he ſhall acknowledge my interpretation to be clear, when he diſlikes it, or diſcern the involutions or difficulties of that other which he hath eſpouſed, when, if he did, he were obliged to forſake it.

SECT. XII.

The fifth reaſon vindicated. Ἐθελοθρησκεία. Heſychius corrected twice. Ἐθελουσίως adverbially. Ἐθέλημος. Ἐθελοκωφῶν. Ἐθελοπεξίνος. Heſychius's Gloſſary concordant to the Scripture uſe. Εὐλογελία, Eph. 5. 4.

TO my fifth reaſon taken from Heſychius's rendring it by ἐθελοσέβεια voluntary piety or worſhip, Numb. 1.
and the notion which he had of ἐθελο in compoſition, to ſignify that which a man did ἐθελούσιος voluntarily, and ἑκὼν of his own accord, agreeably to which the נְדָבוֹת free-will-offerings are rendred by the Septuagint ἑκούσια voluntary performances, his anſwer is brief that this is no advantage to my cauſe, for the words may both ſignify will-deviſed worſhip in an ill ſenſe. And though in humane authors the derivatives and compounds of this word expreſs the Free-willingneſs of the perſon, yet that will not help the Doctor who doth not underſtand ἐθελοθρησκεία in reſpect to the willingneſs of the perſon in a commanded worſhip of God, but voluntary worſhip, i. e. worſhip not commanded by God, but offered to him by the free will of man.

To this I reply, Firſt, That I willingly confeſs ἐθελοσέβεια as capable of an ill ſenſe, as ἐθελο- 2.
θρησκεία, i. e. that when the worſhip is forbidden or falſe, then being ill, the voluntarineſs of it, can infuſe no goodneſs into it, as when it is of it ſelf good, the uncommandedneſs cannot make it ill.

And therefore Secondly, this was not it, on which I laid the weight, (only I thought ἐθελοσέβεια had 3.
not been ſo likely to hear ill with gainſayers, as this other which I ſaw was fallen under great prejudice with ſome) but rather that which followed of the other compounds of ἐθελο which ſignify no more but doing ſomewhat voluntarily, or of their own accord, without any neceſſity to do it.

Thirdly, Then I ſay that acknowledging it my notion of the word, to ſignify worſhip not command- 4.
ed by God, the authority of Heſychius and the other Greek Gloſſaries which concur with, or follow him, is clear and home to confirm that to be the meaning of it.

If that which is ſaid already be not ſufficient to lay the parallel directly betwixt Will-worſhip and 5.
voluntary oblations, or performances of things not commanded, then add Firſt, from Heſychius again, that ἐθελουσὶς ſignifies ἑκούσιος, αὐτοβούλητος, voluntary, proceeding from his own will, and that ſure is diſtant enough from the will or command of another. The words in Heſychius are certainly falſe printed (as much of that book is) ἐθελουσὶς ἑκουσίως, αὐτοβουλήτως. It muſt queſtionleſs thus be mended, either ἐθελουσὶς, ἑκούσιος, αὐτοβούλητος, or elſe in ſtead of ἐθελουσὶς we muſt read ἐθελουσίως adverbially, for ſo Suidas fetcheth that word out of approved authors; and which way ſoever it is, the ſenſe is the ſame, that ἐθελουσὶς ſignifies one that doth any thing from his own, not anothers will or command; command; whereas the word to ſignifie πρόθυμος voluntary in performing commands, is by him ſet ἐθέλημος, not ἐφελοντὴς, for ſo thoſe two words muſt be read together (and not ſevered, as they now are in the vulgar copy) ἐθελήμοι, πρόθυμοι, as immediately after, ἐθελήμως προθύμως.

6. So again of the two words formerly cited by me ἐθελοκωφῶν, and ἐθελοπρόξενος, the former certainly ſignifies the freeneſs of the matter, not of the perſon, one that is willingly deaf or diſobedient, θελήσει παρακόων, which ſure cannot be phanſied a doing that freely or willingly which is commanded, for no man is commanded to be diſobedient, and in like manner the latter is rendred by Suidas, ὁ ἀφ' ἑαυτῦ γενόμενος καὶ μὴ κελευσθεὶς ὑπὸ πόλεως, he that is made ſuch by himſelf, and not commanded by the city, adding οἱ γὰρ πρόξενοι κελευόμενοι ὑπ' ἐαυτῶν πόλεως ἐγίνοντο, ſetting ἐθελοπρόξενος directly in oppoſition to κελευόμενος πρόξενος, voluntary, to commanded by another, and Phavorinus repeats the very ſame words, only with the change of the Gender ὁ ἀφ' ἑαυτῆς γενομένη, καὶ μὴ κελευσθῆσα ὑπὸ πόλεως, adding alſo (as ſeldom he omits to do) what Heſychius had ſaid, ἑκὼν πρόξενος. The ſame may appear again by ἐθελοκακήσας, ἑκουσίως τὸ κακὸν ἐκλεξάμενος, he that chooſeth ill voluntarily, i. e. he which of his own accord chooſeth the evil, both in Phavorinus and Suidas; where ſure that which he chooſeth voluntarily, is not firſt commanded by God, being ſuppoſed to be evil. And ſo ſtill theſe compoſitions from ἐθελο ſignifie all of them in perfect accord with my notion of Will-worſhip, i. e. a performance voluntarily taken up, without any command of God.

7. And indeed 'tis a little ſtrange that this Diatribiſt, who takes it here in an ill ſenſe, and places the ill in this, that it is an uncommanded worſhip, ſhould yet here diſpute againſt this ſignification of ἐθελοθρησκεία, for voluntary worſhip, uncommanded by God, and phanſie that I pretend no more but the free-willingneſs of the perſon in a commanded worſhip of God.

8. What he adds in the end of that fifteenth Section, that though the word in other authors be taken for voluntary worſhip, and be but once uſed in Scripture, yet the Spirit of God uſeth words in a ſenſe clearly different from other authors, inſtancing in ἐυτραπελία, Eph. 5. 4. taken for a vice, which in Ariſtotle is taken for a virtue,] will ſoon receive anſwer; For firſt Heſychius being the author now peculiarly under conſideration, and his Gloſſes having a ſpecial propriety to the explicating of words in Scripture, what is ſaid by him, is not ſo much the ſenſe of other authors, as of the Scripture it ſelf, and ſo cannot reaſonably be thought diſtant from it.

9. Secondly, Though ſome words are taken in the Scripture in a ſenſe different from other authors, this is not applicable to all words of Scripture, ſome are uſed in ordinary vulgar ſenſes, and by much the greater part of words there, and from thence to conclude of ἐθελοθρησκεία, that it is taken in a different ſenſe, is to conclude and ſyllogize from particulars, which is againſt all Laws of Logick.

10. Thirdly, Whenſoever a word in any place of Scripture is affirmed to be uſed in ſuch a different ſenſe, that muſt be concluded either by the circumſtances of the text, which ſo inforce it, or elſe by comparing it with other places of Scripture, where that ſenſe is neceſſary; as when ἐυτραπελία is concluded to be a vice, Eph. 5. 4. 'tis manifeſt by the context it muſt do ſo, for to it is immediately annext, τὰ μὴ ἀνήκοντα, which are (not only not convenient, but, as that phraſe denotes) very inconvenient, nay as the companions of it there, πορνεία, ἀκαθαρσία, ἀισχρότης, μωρολογία in force, filthy, noiſome, unſavory, ſo as folly oft ſignifies uncleanneſs, and ſo this is a viſible reaſon alſo, why the word is taken in an ill ſenſe, when Ariſtotle, meaning only cleanly, not beaſtly jeſting, takes it in a good ſenſe: But of ἐθελοθρησκεία this no way appears in this one place where 'tis uſed, but on the contrary, the ſociety in which 'tis found, humility and ſelf-denial or auſterity, determine it to the good ſenſe, as certainly, as the company of ἐυτραπελία determine that to an ill. And ſo much for my fifth Reaſon.

SECT. XIII.

M^r C. his diſtinction of voluntary. Spontaneous. A work of love. The Teſtimony of Socrates. Worſhip true or falſe. Nothing unlawful which is not forbidden. Voluntarineſs no way forbidden. The ſecond Commandment.

Numb. 1. TO my laſt reaſon [becauſe things done in the ſervice of God are not therefore ill becauſe ſpontaneous, but on the contrary, that when out of a pious affection a man ſhall do any thing elſe beſide what God hath commanded by any particular precept, this action of his is ſo much more commendable and acceptable to God,] he thinks it ſufficient to diſtinguiſh of voluntary, either as it denotes the manner, or the efficient cauſe of worſhip; in the firſt reſpect that is voluntary, ſaith he, which yet is neceſſary, viz. commanded by God, in the ſecond, that only which is done by the will of man contradiſtinguiſht to the will of God.

2. But this diſtinction is very far from anſwering my reaſon. For of the ſecond, it is, he knows, that I underſtand the word, and that I might prevent all want of this or the like diſtinction, I ſpeak moſt plainly, uſing the word Spontaneous, not voluntary, on purpoſe to denote that which was done by mans will on his own accord, without any command of Gods; for ſo ſure Spontaneous ſignifies (however the Diatribiſt here confounds it with voluntary, and ſo involves, in ſtead of extricating, mixes, when he went to diſtinguiſh) that which is ſuâ ſponte from a mans own incitation, not from any external impellent, whether command or puniſhment attending it, for this indeed being done thus freely, is perfectly a work of love, and that renders it ſo extreamly grateful, and rewardable by God. I ſhall give you the deſcription of it in the words of * Socrates ſpeaking of Eccleſiaſtical rites; Ἐπειδὴ οὐδεὶς φέρει τότε ἔγγραφον ἔχει δεῖξαι παράγγελμα, δῆλον ὡς φέρει τότε τῇ ἐκάστου γνώμῃ καὶ προαιρέσει ἐπέτρεψαν οἱ Ἀπόστολοι, ἵνα ἕκαστος μὴ φόβῳ μηδὲ ἐξ ἀνάγκης τὸ ἀγαθὸν κατεργάζοιτο, Seeing no man can ſhew any written command for this, it is manifeſt that the Apoſtles left this to every mans judgment and will, that every man might do good, neither by fear nor of neceſſity.

* Hiſt. Eccl. l. 5. c. 22.

3. When he adds, that in worſhip deviſed by man the will bears all the blame, and then the more voluntary, the

the more abominable] I anſwer, that worſhip is either falſe or true, bad or good, Heathen or Chriſtian; His rule is perfectly true in unlawful, wicked worſhip, all the blame thereof lyes on the will of man; but it can have no place, where the worſhip is lawful, for then no blame is due at all, but the more free it is, 'tis ſo much the more commendable. Now it is of lawful and Chriſtian worſhip that we here ſpeak, as he knows well enough, or elſe it were not imaginable we could take it in a good ſenſe, and of this he muſt needs underſtand us alſo; or elſe he could not place all the blame of it in mans will or deviſing, as he doth.

And that a worſhip, in it ſelf, and materially lawful, i. e. whilſt it is abſtracted from the conſideration of Gods commanding it, or not, ſhould by not being commanded by God, become unlawful, this is to confound things moſt diſtant, forbidding and not forbidding; For the Law and Will of God being the rule, in agreement with, or oppoſition to which, lawful and unlawful conſiſts, it is as impoſſible that any thing ſhould be unlawful in reſpect of Gods Law, which is not forbidden by it, as that any thing ſhould be lawful which is forbidden. 4.

When therefore he proceeds, affirming (but offering no proof) that the voluntarineſs of an action is the ἀνομία or irregularity of it; firſt, this is a begging the queſtion; Secondly, 'Tis ſet in ſuch terms, that it hath not the leaſt appearance of truth in it, for how can the voluntarineſs be the ἀνομία or irregularity, unleſs the Law forbid voluntarineſs, which certainly it no way doth, as was formerly evidenced from hence, becauſe there is no univerſal negative command in Scripture, prohibiting all acts and degrees of acts, beſide what are in particular commanded. 5.

That there is no ſuch, ſufficiently appear, by the one inſtance, which here he thinks fit to mention, that of the ſecond Commandment, which, ſaith he, forbids all things, i. e. all worſhip and all degrees of that worſhip, beſides what are particularly commanded. Which though it be as far from all appearance of truth as any thing affirmable by any (for what word is there in that Commandment, which can ſound that way? Certainly none, unleſs every ceremony deviſed by man, and every degree whether of charity or devotion, which is not particularly under precept, be preſently metamorphoſed into a graven image) hath not yet any the leaſt proof to back it, and ſo ſtill is the meaneſt begging of the main queſtion imaginable. And ſo having more largely ſpoken of this before, this is ſufficient alſo to be ſaid here in the vindication of my laſt reaſon. 6.

SECT. XIV.

The firſt occaſion of miſtaking ἐθελοθρησκεία for ill. The vulgar tranſlator and Mr. Calvin. The Diatribiſts three exceptions to this, ſhewed to be of no force. Will-worſhip diſtant from Superſtition. Θρησκεία only in a good ſenſe among Chriſtians. Three miſtakes of the Diatribiſt. All uncommanded is not forbidden.

THIS next poſt or Stage is made up of an examination of thoſe things to which I conceived the miſtake and abuſe of ἐθελοθρησκεία imputable. The firſt of which I aſſigned to be the vulgar tranſlations rendring it Superſtitio, that being moſt probably S^t Hieroms, and his words being found agreeable to it in ſome places, and from thence Mr. Calvin hath affirmed it, Superſtitio Græcis dicitur ἐθελοθρησκεία. Numb. 1.

That this was fit to be inſiſted on, as a firſt occaſion of the miſtake, will be evident enough to any, who conſiders how ordinary it is for the Romaniſts on one ſide without farther inquiry or conſideration to follow the vulgar tranſlation, and for the reformed on the other to follow the ſteps of Mr. Calvin, and not always to examine his grounds of affirming, which certainly were very far from ſolid in this matter, it being evident to all that know any thing of words, that δεισιδαιμονία is the Greek for Superſtition, and not ἐθελοθρησκεία, nay that ἐθελοθρησκεία being but once uſed in Scripture, and not found in any author, but ſuch as may be reſolved to have uſed it from thence, Mr. Calvins words, that Superſtitio is called by the Greeks ἐθελοθρησκεία, cannot probably ſignifie any more than that the Greek word in that one place is by the vulgar tranſlator rendred Superſtitio. And then this is an evidence of that which there I affirmed, that the occaſion of taking ἐθελοθρησκεία in an ill ſenſe (which I muſt be allowed to deem a miſtake) is the vulgar tranſlators rendring it Superſtitio. 2.

Now to this, three things are here objected, though not to the main of the obſervation (for no word is replied to that) yet to the mention of the Greek words δεισιδαιμονία, &c. Firſt that a man may ſay as much for δεισιδαιμονία it ſelf as the Doctor ſaith for ἐθελοθρησκεία, and bring the Doctor for his voucher who ſaith that δεισιδαιμονία ſometimes is taken in a good ſenſe. 3.

But I reply firſt, that the Doctor never ſaith that δεισιδαιμονία is taken in a good ſenſe among Chriſtians, who ſure never allowed the worſhip of Dæmons, but only among heathens, who do allow it. Secondly, That if it were ſometimes taken in good ſenſe, yet that were not ſufficient to conclude, that it were all one with ἐθελοθρησκεία; all good things are not the ſame, no nor all ill; and therefore in whatſoever ſenſe the words are taken, whether both in good or both in ill, the one in good, the other in ill ſenſe, yet ſtill the nature and importance of the words is diſtant, and ſo ought not to have been confounded either by the vulgar tranſlator or by Mr. Calvin; and being ſo unduly confounded, the Diatribiſt cannot from thence raiſe any more ſolid argument for the ill ſenſe of the one, than I can (which I pretend not to do) for the good ſenſe of the other. 4.

Secondly, He objects, that θρησκεία, as the Doctor knows, is taken alſo ſometimes in an ill ſenſe, as well as a good, why then, ſaith he, may they not both equally ſignifie ſuperſtition? eſpecially when applied to falſe or men-deviſed worſhip. I anſwer, that θρησκεία when ſpoken of Chriſtians, is never taken in an ill ſenſe, unleſs by virtue of ſome Epithet joined with it, which it ſelf is ill, as ματαία θρησκεία in S^t James, vain religion, and then alſo 'tis the vanity which hath the ill ſenſe, not the religion. And again, that vain or ill religion, is not ſuperſtition neither, but an unagreeableneſs of the Profeſſors practice to his religion. Now he knows it is of Chriſtians that now we ſpeak, and ſo there could be no 5.

place for this exception, nor for any thing to be founded in it, nor plea from hence that either the ſimple or the compound ſhould be rendred ſuperſtition; As for the men-deviſed worſhip, that that ſhould be ſynonymous with falſe, that is the old artifice of begging the queſtion, inſtead of ſaying ought for the gaining of it.

6. His laſt exception is, that Superſtition or Will-worſhip is more general than δεισιδαιμονία, that's but one ſpecies of ſuperſtition, if taken (as the word imports) for Dæmonum cultus. But all falſe worſhip is ſuperſtition, and the rather becauſe it is ſpontaneous, voluntary, i. e. Will-deviſed worſhip.] Here is a fair proportion of miſtakes, without any tender of proof for any, no leſs than three in theſe ſo few words.

7. Firſt, he begins with a preſumption that Superſtition and Will-worſhip are all one; and that, he knows, is now the one thing denied by him, with whom he is diſputing; and he cannot be ignorant, how illogical an argument that is; we have oft minded him of that fallacy.

8. Secondly, he affirms that either of theſe is more general than δεισιδαιμονία, whereas 1. Superſtitio being ſuperſtitum cultus, is directly all one with δεισιδαιμονία which is dæmonum cultus, the Superſtites and δαίμονες being the ſame in ſeveral languages; and the other notion of Superſtition (that in Aquinas for prohibited or illegitime worſhip) that is but a branch of the former, ariſing by analogy with it, and is not any oppoſite Species to it; and for Will-worſhip, if that be more general than δεισιδαιμονία, that very thing will prove it 1. not to be all one with δεισιδαιμονία, a ſubſtance, which is the more general, is not all one with a body, which is a Species of ſubſtance; The truth is, that the generical Will-worſhip, as that comprehends all worſhip uncommanded by God, hath ſeveral Species under it, Jewiſh out-dated, and ſo now uncommanded worſhip, heatheniſh forbidden, and ſo uncommanded worſhip, and finally Chriſtian acceptable, yet not commanded acts, or circumſtances or degrees of worſhip; And as the genus is not all one with any one Species, ſo Will-worſhip in general is not any one of theſe, but all of them together. And 2. It implies the word to be capable of a good as well as of an ill ſenſe, and ſo indeed it is, being taken in a latitude, Will-worſhip, or as he will ſtile it, men-deviſed or Will-deviſed worſhip, may be of two ſorts, (as the generical word Worſhip, may) either true, or falſe, heathen or Chriſtian, and as the one is ill, ſo the other is certainly good.

9. But then what is that to the Will-worſhip in this text, which is not the generical, as that is common to good and bad, but that which is in the Diatribiſts underſtanding, a wicked and falſe, and in mine a good and a Chriſtian Will-worſhip, and which ſoever of the two it is, it is certainly not both, and ſo ſtill but a Species of the generical Will-worſhip, and ſo not the genus it ſelf.

10. Laſtly, when he ſaith, all falſe worſhip is ſuperſtitious, and the rather becauſe it is ſpontaneous, this is a ſtrange involution again: For the whole truth of that propoſition [All falſe worſhip is Superſtition] conſiſting in this, that all worſhip of falſe gods, or forbidden worſhip of the true God, is wont to be compriſed under that name, the former according to the literal ſenſe of the word Superſtitum cultus, the latter as reducible, or by analogy agreeable to that; it is very unreaſonable to ſuperſtruct upon this, that that falſe worſhip is the rather ſuperſtitious, becauſe it is ſpontaneous, It being certain, that if it offend not ſome other way than by being ſpontaneous, i. e. if it be not in reſpect of the matter of it, falſe worſhip and ſo forbidden, it is not ſuperſtition at all; and if it be falſe worſhip, in it ſelf forbidden, then ſure it is more than ſpontaneous, for ſo muſt all be that is actually forbidden. So that there is not the leaſt degree of appearance of truth in that laſt affirmation.

11. That which is indeed falſe worſhip, is more than ſpontaneous (the uncommandedneſs of it, is precedent and inferior in order of nature, to its being forbidden, and its being forbidden is an addition to its not being commanded) the falſeneſs conſiſts in its being deviſed by mans will, not ſimply, but in oppoſition to Gods, i. e. when 'tis forbidden, and it would not otherwiſe be falſe worſhip, if it were not fordidden, either directly, or by analogy with ſomewhat which is directly forbidden, and what is forbidden is more than not commanded, and ſo more than ſpontaneous, and ſo the ill of it cannot be increaſed by being ſpontaneous, and ſo it is not the rather ſuperſtition (or any other kind of evil) for being ſpontaneous.

12. On the other ſide, that worſhip which is ſuppoſed not to be forbidden, is conſequently thereto, to be reſolved not to be falſe, and if it be not falſe, it cannot be Superſtition (for ſuch only is falſe worſhip) and if ſo, then again the voluntarineſs or Spontaneity of it, cannot make it more falſe or more Superſtition, than before it was, becauſe it was neither falſe nor Superſtition before, and the bare uncommandedneſs cannot render it either, Gods not commanding implying his permiſſion, and ſo a liberty allowed by God, and that is ſo far from being all one with prohibited, that it is in effect the very contradictory to it, this being permitted by God, whereas all that is prohibited is not permitted. And ſo here is a competent number of infirmities in very few words.

13. And yet there is ſtill one behind, the great impertinency of this, and of the two former anſwers to the point in hand, the occaſions, to which it is imputable that Will-worſhip came to be taken among many in an ill ſenſe, which without queſtion (at leaſt without any word of exception from this Diatribiſts three branches of this 18. Section) is the vulgars rendering ἐθελοθρησκεία Superſtitio, and Mr. Calvin's following the vulgar.

SECT.

SECT. XV.

The ſecond occaſion of taking ἐθελοθρησκία in an ill ſenſe, vindicated. The deſign of the Treatiſe of Will-worſhip only for ceremonies, not for new kinds of worſhip. Whether all ceremonies be forbidden, which are not commanded. The various reading of Philoſtorgius. Sitting at the Goſpel forbidden. Chryſoſtomes Teſtimonie. Τελεώδηεον not τελεώδυεον. Θεῖος θεσμὸς for Eccleſiaſtical Canon. Diſpeoplunga Will-worſhip.

THE ſecond cauſe of miſtaking this word I had ſet down at large, Section 19. to be the reflexion on the Judaical θεοκρατία, where, in the building of, and officiating in the Temple, all was to be done according to the pattern in the mount, from which ſome may have made a ſhift to conclude, that ſo it muſt be in the Chriſtian Church, no rite, no circumſtance, no degree of worſhip to be uſed there, but what hath Chriſt's example or precept to authorize it. To this he replyes, Firſt, That I much miſtake the queſtion, for it is not about a rite or circumſtance or degree of worſhip commanded, but of the worſhip it ſelf, and herein Chriſtians are equal with the Jews, we muſt not vary from the preſcription on the mount in the ſecond Commandment to conſtitute any part of worſhip, but what we have the authority of Chriſt for in the New Teſtament, adding the ground, for this, both the ſecond Commandment, and this text, Col. 2. to juſtifie that aſſertion. Numb. 1.

To this I haſten this brief reply, Firſt, That this is not, in any word, to the point now in hand, the occaſion of taking Will-worſhip in an ill ſenſe; and 'tis evident that though all were true which here is ſaid, that I miſtook the queſtion, and that no part of worſhip may lawfully be ſet up among Chriſtians without the example or precept of Chriſt, yet this of the Jewiſh obligation to do all according to the pattern in the mount, may be occaſion to give men prejudices to all that is not under particular command, or according to pattern of Chriſts, and his Apoſtles, which was all I aſſumed in that Section. 2.

But then ſecondly, 'Tis moſt certain, that I do not miſtake the queſtion, nor can I miſtake it (who had the ſetting it my ſelf) unleſs I firſt ſet it one way, and then handle it another. And this certainly I do not. For the very deſign of that Treatiſe was to inquire, whether the obſervation of ceremonies uſed and preſcribed in our Church of England were criminous, only upon this account, becauſe they were not commanded by God; And in this I was then ſure that I had adverſaries enow, who concluded it ſo, upon this one way of probation, becauſe all Will-worſhip was criminous, and the uſe and impoſition of all uncommanded ceremonies were Will-worſhip. 3.

And if this Diatribiſt be not in the number of thoſe adverſaries, then hath he done himſelf and me and the reader very great injury, in diſputing againſt that concluſion which he doth not oppoſe, then hath he moſt prodigally miſpent and laviſht out all his pains, in confuting (or exerciſing himſelf upon) this tract, of which this was the only deſign, not to plead for any new kind or parts of worſhip, but to juſtifie the uſe of uncommanded ceremonies and circumſtances, and ſuch are days of worſhip, and to ſhew that being unforbidden as well as uncommanded, they were therefore lawful and free to be uſed by Chriſtian people or preſcribed by Chriſtian Magiſtrates. And if he hath nothing to reſiſt in this, then why ſhould he delight in this impertinent ſeverity, arraign and triumph over a poor innocent Tract, that never thought to provoke any, which allowed the uſe and obſervance of uncommanded rites, and days of worſhip, never attempted in the leaſt to bring any new part or kind of worſhip into the Church? Upon this, and other viſible reaſons, it will ſure be needleſs here to examine again his two grounds, which we have formerly been ſo oft acquainted with, the ſecond Commandment and Col. 2. 23. It was no ſmall infirmity of diſcourſe in this place to mention them. 4.

The ſecond part of his reply, is, that in worſhip that is condemned which is not commanded.] But firſt, What is that again to the point in hand, that particular occaſion of taking Will-worſhip in an ill ſenſe? Secondly, I ſhall demand, is that propoſition univerſally true, ſo as to extend to every ceremony in worſhip? If it be, then it ſeems, I miſtook not the queſtion (as very lately I was told) nor my adverſary neither, this Diatribiſt being directly contrary to me herein, if he thus affirm, that in the worſhip of God every ceremony is forbidden which is not commanded. 5.

To the place in Photius's ἐκλογαὶ out of Philoſtorgius, which I propoſed and explained, he acknowledges he hath little to ſay, yet ſomewhat he is willing to note for his own advantage, viz. that I ſeem to make it a fault to ſit at the reading of the Goſpel, which the Eccleſiaſtical Canons did not command, and yet make it no fault to add a Will-worſhip of a mans own which θεῖος θεσμὸς the divine law doth forbid. 6.

To this I anſwer, that the Diatribiſt ought in all reaſon to have markt, what there I ſet viſible before his eyes, and then he could not poſſibly have mentioned this. For 'tis evident in that place, Firſt, That I had taken notice of the reading of the Manuſcript in the Oxford Publick Library, which hath ἐπεκράτει, inſtead of ἐπλάτυνε in Gotofred's Printed Copy, and ſecondly, That as this latter reading imported it a fault to do that which the Canons commanded not (for which very cauſe I examined, and then ſaw reaſon to reject that reading) ſo the former and right reading, to which only I adhered, implied no more than this, that it was a fault to act contrary to Canon, to do many things ὧν μὴ θεῖος θεσμὸς ἐπεκράτει which the Eccleſiaſtical Canon did not admit or permit, or which was not in uſe with the Church of God, but the contrary, viz. that of ſtanding up at the Goſpel. 7.

If there need proof of this, the plain words of * Chryſoſtome (or whoſoever was the Author of the Oration εἰς τὸ ἱπποδρόμιον) will be ſufficient, τῆς διακόνου ἀνοίγειν μέλλουσης τὸ τῆς εὐαγγελίου τετράθυρον (ſo it muſt be read, as appears, p. 974. l. 20. where we find τὸ εὐαγγελίου τετράθυρον ἅρμα, not τετράθυρον, as it is now Printed) πάντες ἀνὰ πόδα ἀτενίζομεν, ἡσυχίαν παρέχοντες, καὶ ὡσπερεὶ τῷ ἅρματι τῷ ἀναγνώσεως ἀρξηται, εὐθέως διανιστάμεθα ἡμεῖς, ὑπομένοντες, ἀλλὰ δόξα σοὶ Κύριε, When the Deacon is about to open the Goſpel (that Chariot drawn with four horſes) we all look very earneſtly upon him and are ſtill, and when he begins to 8. * Edit. Savil. Tom. 6. p. 975.

read (and so to run his race in that Chariot) presently we stand up and use this acclamation, Glory be to thee, O Lord.

9. Certainly the Diatribist never expected that his Exercitations should be examined by any, or but compared with the plain words of the Treatise to which they related, when he thought fit to observe this.

10. He is pleased also to retain that rendring of θεῖος θεσμὸς divine Law, which he must needs discern to have been there cleared by me to signifie not the Law or word of God, but the Canons or unwritten customs of the Church, as there appeared by Nicephorus reciting that place of Philostorgius, and reading ἐκκλησιαστικὸς, in stead of θεῖος, and by many other evidences from Epiphanius and Athanasius and Pseudo-Clement, and Nicephori Constantinop. στιχομετρία, superadded to the former store, in the Annotation on Col. 2. published since that Treatise. To all which I now add Leo, who having mentioned * Divinarum Reverentia Sanctionum, the reverence of divine sanctions, soon explains his meaning first by quod publicâ lege celebratur, then by quod universa Ecclesia suscipit, that which was observed by publick Law, that which the universal Church received.

* Ser. 3. de jejun. 7. mens.

11. Another parallel mistake also I there mentioned in our Anglican Councils, Can. 60. Sub Edgaro, where πιλεοπραγία is translated fictæ ad libitum adorationes, but should be rendred fontis adoratio, not Will-worship but Well-worship, for which I refer the Reader to the former place in the Annotations.

SECT. XVI.

The third occasion of the mistake cleared. Worship of Angels forbidden, not only not commanded. The reviving Judaical worship not called Will-worship, Col. 2. 23. Maimonides's words wrested to a distant sense by the Diatribist. Original of Angel-worship. Vain worships. Clemens confounding of Col. 2. 18. with 23. Worship of Angels, &c. a forbidden Will-worship. The imposing of virginity and abstinences, as from God, the only crime, found fault with by S. Paul and the ancient Catholicks. Alcibiades his using, and remission of austerity. The like of Spiridion and Marcianus. Cyrill of meats, 1 Tim. 5. 23. explicated.

Numb. 1. A Third occasion of the mistaken ill notion of ἐθελοθρησκεία I had taken notice of to be the confounding of two verses very distant, the eighteenth and twenty third of that second Chapter to the Colos. the voluntary humility and worshipping of the Angels in the one, and the shew of wisdom in Will-worship and humility in the other. To which end I at large cleared the difference between those two phrases. To this he replies, that the distance pretended between them is so little, that they may easily be reconciled, that respecting a new devised worship only, and this the reviving an old out-dated worship.

2. To this I answer, first, that the worship, v. 18. being expresly the worship of Angels, that sure is much more than Will-worship in the Diatribists notion hitherto expressed of it, and therefore 'tis strange he should now labour to perswade us they are all one, or easily reconciled. Will-worship, as he hath hitherto defined it, is bare uncommanded, will-devised, or men-devised worship, and that he hath still pronounced unlawful upon that one account, because not commanded. But can he think the worship of Angels to be such? Is not that distinctly forbidden in the first Commandment? Certainly it is; And if it be, hath it no other guilt by being so forbidden, above that which is only not commanded? Secondly, The Will-worship, v. 23. is not truly affirmed to be the reviving old out-dated worship; For first, The abstinences from marriage there spoken of, as well as those from meats, had never been commanded among the Jews. Secondly, 'Tis not there affirmed of one or other abstinence, that it was Will-worship, Only those doctrines of abstinences of both sorts are said to have a shew of wisdom in respect of the Will-worship discernible in them, and so likewise they are said to have in respect of the self-denial, and the worship of Angels in respect of the humility, that either is, or is pretended in them. And yet I hope it will not be said that humility or self-denial is the reviving of Judaism.

3. But however some advantage he resolves to get by that Section, and having no other means to acquire it, he will have it out of some words which I had cited out of Maimonides, the words are these, that the greatest part of Idolatry came into the world, existimando hanc varietatem esse Dei voluntatem, by the opinion that God was honoured by the worship of his Angels or Officers, and that it was his will to have men exercised in this variety of worship. From hence the Diatribist subsumes, that the error that brought the greatest part of idolatry into the world was, that men conceived and taught that vain worships and superstitions were the will and pleasure of God.

4. Here I must demand what he means by vain worships? doth he mean bare will-devised, uncommanded worships, which have in his opinion no other crime in them, but their uncommandedness? If so, then hath he much misapplied Maimonides's words, as must be visible to him, those clearly belonging to the worship of Angels (and others beside the one God) which all men are strictly forbidden to worship. And then what a confusion of things most distant, what an injustice is this?

5. But if by vain he designed false forbidden worships, such as are by him fitly joined with superstition, and such as the worship of Angels was, then indeed he knows, or must in charity believe, that 'tis as much mine interest and inclination, as his, to fasten an ill character upon them, and to believe as much of the danger and criminousness of affirming them acceptable to God, as Maimonides could teach, or the Diatribist wish me to believe. I shall not fail therefore, I hope, to obey his admonition, if it be really such, and be abundantly cautious neither to justifie nor imitate, what I so much dislike and abhor in them that are guilty of it.

6. What he next adds of Clemens Alexandrinus confounding those two, the 18. and 23. verses, was by me produced and willingly confest, and made an evidence of the point there in hand, that some have (though without all reason) confounded them, and it is not imaginable how this which so evidently proved proved what I brought it to prove (evidencing the occaſion of the miſtake) ſhould be ſo ſpeedily mentioned to the diſproving of it, or be farther argumentative againſt me, than I had before acknowledged by producing it: For ſure the Diatribiſt cannot pretend that Clemens his reading was the true, Μηδεὶς ὑμᾶς καταβραβευέτω ἐν ἐθελοθρησκείᾳ ταπεινοφροσύνης, καὶ ἀφειδίᾳ σώματος, if he can, all our copies of the New Teſtament will abundantly confute him. And then it is no very good indication of the truth of his cauſe, which is fain to catch hold on ſuch ſupports as this; which is acknowledged a miſtake in him, from whom it is produced, and ſo in all reaſon will cauſe miſtake to any that borrows it from him.

But the Diatribiſt inlarges in two long Sections more to enervate what I had ſaid to ſhew the difference betwixt thoſe two verſes; And I need make no farther reply to them, than to refer the reader to the two parts of the obſervation (Section 22. and 23. of the Tract of Will-worſhip) to which his anſwers are applied, the ſecond of them clearly anſwering all that he hath objected to the firſt (if he would but have had patience to have lookt ſo much forward) and as clearly preventing what he hath ſaid to the ſecond. 7.

The ſhort of it is, that the worſhip of Angels being not only not commanded but forbidden by God, the voluntary worſhipping of them is acknowledged by me to be a fault, but that reſulting from the unlawfulneſs of the matter, which is under interdict in the firſt Commandment of the Decalogue, not from the voluntarineſs or uncommandedneſs of it. And the ſame I ſhall not doubt to yield of the abſtinences from meats and marriages; Chriſt hath give perfect liberty for the uſing of both, and they that dogmatize and impoſe either or both thoſe abſtinences on Chriſtians as from God, are falſe teachers, and ſo that is their fault in impoſing, and the like in thoſe who δογματίζονται ſubject themſelves to thoſe ordinances; And yet for all this, a ſpontaneous abſtaining from meats, at ſome time, δι' ἄσκησιν, ἢ διὰ βδελυγίαν, for exerciſe, not for deteſtation (in a religious faſt, not out of opinion of the unlawfulneſs of meats) being in it ſelf perfectly lawful, and ſo likewiſe celibacy or virginity in him that can receive it, there is no pretence from the uncommandedneſs of either, or both of theſe, that they ſhould be deemed culpable, or made parallel to that other ſort of uncommanded worſhip, where the matter is under interdict, the worſhip of Angels or impoſing of Judaical abſtinences. 8.

The matter is clear to any that ſhall but obſerve S. Pauls doctrine in ſeveral places, and the arguings of the Catholicks againſt the Montaniſts. S. Paul, who reſolves marriage to be honorable among all, and ſo brands them for hereticks who forbid to marry, doth yet not only allow but recommend virginity; and ſo for meats, he profeſſeth all to be lawful to all, and that no queſtion is to be made for conſcience ſake, and accordingly cenſures the Gnoſticks that they commanded to abſtain from meats, and yet the ſame Apoſtle was himſelf frequent in faſtings, and certainly had not the leaſt diſlike to thoſe performances. 9.

So in like manner the Catholicks or orthodox Chriſtians of the Primitive Church, which objected it as a fault to the Montaniſts, that they impoſed faſting, and made it neceſſary (as may appear by the character of Montanus given by Apollonius in * Euſebius, that he was ὁ ὑπείας νομοθετήσας one that required and exacted faſtings as by the law of the Paraclete, for ſo he ſtyled himſelf, and the ſame is evident by Tertullian in his Tract, De jejuniis, when being turned Montaniſt he pleads their cauſe againſt the Orthodox under the name of Pſychici) and which anathematized the Marcionites and Encratites, &c. for deeming meats unlawful; do yet every where commend and preſs the uſe of faſting, as hath formerly been ſhewed in part, and as it is known to all that have but lookt into their writings. 10. * Eccl. hiſt. l. 5. c. 18.

The paſſage of the * Epiſtle of the Chriſtians of Lyons and Vienna to the Aſiaticks concerning Alcibiades, is remarkeable; he had lived, ſay they, παν' ἀυχμηρῶς, very auſterely, uſing nothing but bread and water, and when he was by the perſecutors caſt in priſon, he attemped to continue this ſtrict diet, but Attalus, who was in priſon, and had once been carried out into the amphitheatre, adviſed him to leave it, ἀπεκαλύφθη, ſay they, having received a Revelation, that he ſhould not do well not to uſe the creatures of God, adding that he would by that means, ἄλλοις τύπον σκανδάλου ὑπολείπεσθαι, leave an example of ſcandal, of ſnare, of ſtumbling to others, whereupon ſay they, he eat freely and gave God thanks. Here it ſeems his former courſe of auſterity and ſevereſt abſtinence was no way diſliked (and had long been practiſed by that Holy Martyr) only at this time it was thought not to be ſo fit to be continued, whether in reſpect of the combat which he was now to undergo, (ἀγῶνα ἐν ἀμφιθεάτρῳ, a combat in the amphitheatre, and if he macerated himſelf too much he might not be ſo fit for ſo weighty and difficult an undertaking, and others alſo if they ſhould follow his example might weaken themſelves overmuch, and ſo be enſnared by that means) or in ſome other reſpect, wherein his abſtinence might by the example be hurtful to others. And upon theſe conſiderations he intermitted it; an example both of the practice of the ſevereſt abſtinences, and of the free uſe of meats according to the doctrine of Chriſtian liberty. 11. * Euſeb. hiſt. Eccl. l. 5. c. 3.

The ſame is yet more viſible in the known paſſage of * Spiridion, one of the Biſhops that ſat in the Council of Nice, who though with his family he obſerved Lent moſt ſeverely, yet on occaſion of a weary gueſt, made no doubt to break his cuſtomary rules, and his gueſt being more ſcrupulous than he παραιτήσεσθαι καὶ λόγον χρίσταυδν ἑαυτὸν, ſaying he was a Chriſtian, Spiridion replied, ταύτῃ μᾶλλον ὁ παραιτητέον, he was the rather not to ſcruple, becauſe he was a Chriſtian, the Scripture it ſelf affirming that all things are pure to the pure. And the ſame we have in the paſſage of Marcianus to Avitus, in * Theodoret, giving his reaſon for the breaking his aſcetick Laws of faſting, that charity was more honourable than faſting, τὸ γὰρ τῆς θείας ἔργον νομοθεσίας, τὸ δὲ τῆς ἡμῶν αὐτῶν ἐξουσίας, the former being a work of Gods preſcribing, the latter of our own freedom. 12. * Sozomen. l. 1. c. 11. * Tom. 3. p. 791.

The words of Cyrill of Jeruſalem Cat. 4. may conclude this matter. Πολλοὶ οὖν τὰ βρώματα πταίουσιν, &c. Many offend in this matter concerning meats, ſome eat indifferently all kind of meats, that which is offered to Idols, &c. others abſtain, and condemn all that eat, and ſo the ſoul is diverſly polluted in this matter of meats, by not knowing the profitable cauſes of eating and not eating; when we faſt, we abſtain from fleſh and wine, not hating them as abominations, but expecting our reward, that contemning ſenſible delights we may injoy the ſpiritual and intellectual Table, and that now ſowing in tears, we may reap in joy in the world to come.. Deſpiſe not therefore thoſe that eat, and partake, becauſe of the weakneſs of their 13.

bodies, neither find fault with (ἔλεγχε the Barocian MS. reads not ψόγε) thoſe that uſe a little wine for their ſtomack, and frequent infirmities, neither condemn them as ſinners (the Barocian MS. adding to the Printed Copies, καὶ μήτε αὐτὸς οἱ ἁμαρτωλὸς κατακείνης) nor hate fleſh as ſtrange (or unfit for a Chriſtian) for of ſuch the Apoſtle took eſpecial notice, ſaying, they forbid to marry, and abſtain from meats, from ſuch keep thy ſelf, and abſtain not from meats as deteſtable things, if thou doſt thou haſt no reward, but ſuppoſing them good, omit to make uſe of them διὰ τὰ προκείμενα (ἐλπιζόμενα the Barocian Copy reads) νοητὰ καλλίονα, becauſe of the intellectual better things which are ſet before thee, or which thou hopeſt to receive.

14. Where it is evident, how faſting and abſtinences being freely and ſpontaneouſly uſed, and not as neceſſary, or the contrary unlawful, but perfectly ſpontaneous and uncommanded abſtinences, are yet ſo far from being ſinful (if they be not joined with condemning of others which eat) that they are highly rewardable by God. Nothing could be ſaid more dilucidly and fully to this whole matter.

15. This place of Cyrills will by the way give us a fuller underſtanding of that exhortation of S^t Paul to Timothy, 1 Tim. 5. 23. Drink no longer water, but uſe a little wine, &c.] than formerly I had taken notice of in the Annotation on that place, in relation to the words precedent there, Lay hands ſuddenly on no man, neither partake of other mens ſins, keep thy ſelf pure, drink no longer water, &c.] Thus; thoſe that by the Gnoſticks infuſions and falſe doctrines, c. 4. 1, 2, 3. have been ſeduced into error and by that means fallen under thy cenſures, are not to be over favourably uſed, nor too ſpeedily abſolved, and then (on that occaſion, as in a parentheſis) be ſure thou fall not thy ſelf into their ſnares, thoſe errors, or faults conſequent thereto, which thou art to cenſure in others; And theſe errors being ſpecially two, the commanding to abſtain, from marriage and from meats, for the former of them, be ſure, that as thou abſtaineſt from marriage, ſo thou preſerve thy ſelf perfectly pure from all the Gnoſtick pollutions conſequent to their doctrines of hating marriage, (that is the meaning of ἁγνὸν σε τήρει) and for the latter, though thou uſeſt auſterities and faſtings, which may be uſeful to virginal Chaſtity, yet do not this to the hurting of thy body, but in conſideration of thy infirm habit of body, thy frequent indiſpoſitions, give thy ſelf the uſe of lawful liberties, take wine ſometimes in a moderate proportion, and keep not thy ſelf ſo ſtrictly to water-drinking, as perſons of auſterity uſe to do.

16. All this (and much more might be added of the ſame nature) makes it moſt evident, that uncommanded performances (ſuch ſure were virginity or faſting) had no ill character faſtned on them by thoſe ſame Orthodox Fathers, who yet would not indure to have them impoſed on Chriſtians, as from God, but brand all ſuch, as attempt it, for falſe teachers.

SECT. XVII.

The laſt occaſion of the ill ſenſe. Ἐθελοθρησκεία in Epiphanius. Of the Phariſees appellation. Περισσόν. Dogmatizing and diſcriminating. Epiphanius's words cleared. Wherein their hypocriſie conſiſted. Ἐκστατιζόμενοι τῷ νόμῳ, 1 Mac. 2. 42. Aſidei חסד ἐκστασιασμὸς turned into ἀνάγκη, the fault.

Numb. 1. THE laſt occaſion of the ill ſenſe of ἐθελοθρησκεία, which I took notice of, was Epiphanius's mention of ἐθελοπερισσοθρησκία, as the denotation of the Phariſees name, in reſpect of the voluntary performances wherein they pretended to exceed other Jews. And I leave the Reader to view in that place, Section 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. what I thought fit to note on that word, which when he hath done, I ſhall have ſome confidence, that he will need no farther reply of mine to demonſtrate the invalidity of all this Diatribiſt's exceptions againſt thoſe Sections.

2. For there he will find, Firſt, That the περισσὸν, as that may denote the ſuperfluity of either noxious, or ridiculous, or but (for number) many and ſo burthenous ceremonies, is not pleaded for by me; and that is anſwer to his twenty fourth Section.

3. Secondly, That what was blameable in the Phariſees, was not their bare uſing of ſome lawful, indifferent, or elſe good, and commendable things, not commanded by God; but their teaching ſuch for doctrines, and laying them as burthens on others, and what was conſequent to this, their diſcriminating themſelves proudly and faſtidiouſly from other men, upon this account; and that prevents his twenty fifth Section.

4. Thirdly, That I no way plead for the Phariſees, but affirm them generally to have been ill men and hypocrites; Only I ſay, that when they impoſed that name of Phariſee upon themſelves, ſure they meant not to reproach themſelves by ſo doing, and that Epiphanius ſaith they thus impoſed it, on purpoſe to denote their ἐθελοπερισσοθρησκεία, by that, meaning ſome performances of theirs, wherein they conceived themſelves to exceed all others; which again was the preventing of all that he adds Section 26. And leſt there ſhould remain any doubt of this (the Diatribiſt ſetting it quite another way, and affirming that Epiphanius calls the hereſie of the Phariſees by that name; as offending both in Will-worſhips of their own deviſing, and alſo in the abundance and ſuperfluity of them) I ſhall ſet down here the words punctually as they are found in Epiphanius, and leave the Reader to judge on whoſe ſide the truth lies in this particular. Ἐλέγοντο Φαρισαῖοι, * ſaith he, διὰ τὸ ἀφωρισμένους εἶναι αὐτοὺς ἀπὸ τῶν ἄλλων διὰ τὴν ἐθελοπερισσοθρησκείαν παρ' αὐτοῖς νενομισμένην, φαρὲς γὰρ κατὰ τὴν Ἑβραΐδα ἑρμηνεύεται ἀφωρισμός, They were called Phariſees for being ſeparated from others, becauſe of the abundant Will-worſhip whether preſcribed or cuſtomary (ſo νενομισμένην frequently ſignifies) among them, for Phares in Hebrew is interpreted Separation.

* l. 1. Hær. 16.

5. In which words what is there I pray, which can give the leaſt ground for the Diatribiſts gloſs, either that Epiphanius calls the hereſie of the Phariſees by that name, when he only ſets it down as the interpretation

tion of that name of Phariſees, long before Epiphanius, impoſed on them; or that this name was given them as a character of their offending both in Will-worſhips and in the ſuperfluity of them? Certainly neither of theſe hath the leaſt appearance of foundation in Epiphanius; I wonder the Diatribiſt could think fit to cite them from him.

Fourthly, That though hypocriſie were the Phariſees chief crime, and withal the fewel to their pride and deſpiſing of others, yet their doing ſome things which were not commanded, was no part of this their hypocriſie, but on the contrary, either their ſaying but not doing, or their doing the lighteſt and neglecting the weightieſt duties, or their preferring their own traditions before the commanded duties, and making the obſervance of the one (as in Corban) their commutation and excuſe for neglecting the other; and this indeed was far more likely to inflame their pride and deſpiſing of others, than the real Chriſtian neceſſary performances would have been; the lighteſt things aſcending higheſt, and appearing moſt viſibly, whileſt the weightier ſink down and lie hid. 6.

But ſtill this is no prejudice to thoſe real performances of more ſtrictneſs than the law exacts, faſting twice in the week, and the like, ſuppoſing, as we here ſuppoſe, that they are not uſed to the ſupplanting of neceſſary duties (but go along very friendly with the practice of them) and offend in no other reſpect, but that they are uncommanded performances. And this avoids all his artifices in Section 27. 7.

Fifthly, That ἐκουσιαζόμενοι τῷ νόμῳ, 1 Mac. 2. 42. ſignifies more than a well mindedneſs to the law, meaning by that, the precepts of God; moſt evidently, a ſpontaneous performing of ſome things which the law required not. Let the place be there viewed, and theſe two things will be evident, Firſt, That that phraſe ἐκουσιαζόμενοι τῷ νόμῳ is ſet to denote the Aſidæi by way of periphraſis; Now of them 'tis certain that they were ſo called from חָסִיד which we ordinarily render mercy, but ſignifies ſaith * Kimchi יתרון הטובה excellence of goodneſs, † others פלנת הטובה abundance of goodneſs, and in Maimonides, * exceſſum & ſupremum gradum in one place, the exceſs and higheſt degree of any performance eſpecially of charity or beneficence, and in † another, benignitatem erga aliquem cui nihil planè debes, vel erga eum qui beneficio dignus eſt, at non tanto, benignity to him to whom you either ow nothing, or not ſo much as you afford him; by which it is manifeſt, that the name Aſidæi denotes not only willing but ſpontaneous agents, which keep not themſelves within the line of the law, as to do nothing which is not commanded, but have their ἑκούσια voluntary performances to offer to God, above that which the משרת הדין the line of law, as the * Rabbines ſtyle it, exacts of them, and ſo are properly ſtyled ἐκουσιαζόμενοι τῷ νόμῳ volunteers in or to the law, as that is oppoſed to preſt or hired ſouldiers of it. 8.

* In Pſal. 36.
† Rabbini in Prov. 22. 28.
* In Pirke Avo.
† More Nevoch. Part. 3.

* Rabbi Iſmael in Beracoth. c. 1.

The ſecond thing is, that the men that are there particularly mentioned in that place of the Maccabees, are thoſe that liſted themſelves voluntarily under Mattathias to defend the law by arms, which was no where required of all men that were Jews, but was the act of the Zelots, at that time, and ſo again an ἐκουσιασμὸς a ſpontaneous and uncommanded performance, above or beſide the law; and ſuch as theſe were far from being blamed, being every where commended in thoſe men. And the Diatribiſt will never be able in the leaſt degree to make good againſt Scaliger (what he undertakes Section 28.) that our Saviour condemned them. 9.

Laſtly, That all the Fault was, when the ἐκουσιασμὸς was turned into ἀνάγκη, when what they undertook and acted laudably, whileſt ſpontaneouſly, they at length impoſed on others, as neceſſary; and for that it is, that (beſide their hypocriſie of ſeveral kinds) the Phariſees are juſtly cenſured in this matter, and not for the uncommandedneſs of their actions; and this with the former, are a full anſwer to Section 28. 10.

CHAP. VI.

Of Free-will Offerings.

SECT. I.

The uſe of them in this queſtion. The Diatribiſts diſcourſe of them. His Κρησφύγετον. The Leviticalneſs of ſpontaneous offerings aſſerted by him, in order to denying them among Chriſtians. Arguments againſt this conceit. Allowance of days as well as of worſhip among the Jews. Allowance acknowledged by the Diatribiſt to be as good as commands.

TO make it evident that all things which are not commanded, are not yet unlawful or prohibited in the ſervice of God, and conſequently that all uncommanded ceremonies and circumſtances (and under that head, Feſtivals, i. e. Times) of worſhip are not prohibited to a Chriſtian, I thought it neceſſary in that Tract of Will-worſhip to reflect on the נדבות or free-will offerings of the Jews, which being ſpontaneouſly, and without any obligation of divine law preſented to God, were ſo far from being deteſted or diſliked, that they were accepted and rewarded by him. Numb. 1.

And on this head I inlarged in that Treatiſe, conceiving the ἐθελοθρησκεία once mentioned in the New Teſtament, Col. 2. and taken in the notion of ſpontaneous performances, to be directly parallel to thoſe ἑκούσια, voluntary or uncommanded oblations among the Jews; and from thence concluding, as I thought, irrefragably, that the uncommandedneſs of a few decent rites, or uſeful ſeaſons ſet apart for the worſhip of God, could not upon that one account, their being uncommanded, become preſently unlawful and criminous, when even under the θεοκρατία they were allowed and accepted. And if in any other reſpect there were difference betwixt the things thus compared, yet I was ſure there was none in that, 2.

wherein I compared them, both agreeing evidently in this, that they were equally not commanded or preſcribed by God, and ſo though the obſervation of rites or ceremonies or feſtivals arrived not to that excellency of being parts, but only circumſtances of worſhip, yet they would by thoſe precedents be ſecured from being abominable or criminous in the ſight of God upon that one account of uncommandedneſs, for if ſuch they were, then the נדבות would be ſo too, and being ſuppoſed to be uncommanded, either ſtand together, or both fall under the ſame condemnation.

3. And to this part of my diſcourſe he at length proceeds Section 29. and finding fault with me for not ſetting down or ſhewing wherein the formality of a free-will offering conſiſted, he is pleaſed to ſpend ſome leaves on this task.

4. But as I had not offended in that kind, nor needed this ſupply of his, there being evidently no more required to the formality of a free-will offering, but that firſt it were not particularly commanded by any law of Gods, and ſo were ſpontaneous (not neceſſary) to offer, or not to offer; ſecondly, that it were offered to (and graciouſly accepted by) God, as being of thoſe kinds which are known to be allowed by him; and both theſe being evidently ſet down by me in that Treatiſe Section 29. I have little to thank him for, in his diſcourſe on this ſubject, finding the greateſt part of it to concern the preſcribed, commanded ſacrifices, and the willingneſs firſt, and ſecondly ſome lower degree of freeneſs obſervable in them, both which are certainly nothing to our purpoſe, who ſpeak only of thoſe oblations which were not commanded, and might freely not have been offered (to which none but the laſt member of his diſtinction appertains, libertas exercitii) and yet were graciouſly accepted by God when they were offered, which one ſort of oblations (medling not with any other that were any way commanded) make it viſible, that even under the θεοκρατία, that government of the Jews where God preſided immediately, and gave lawes preciſely for the very manner of his worſhip, ſome things were yet left to mens free-power and choice; if they offered, they ſhould be accepted, if they did not offer, they ſinned not; which is the perfect image and clear interpretation of that ἐθελοθρησκεία or Will-worſhip, for which that Treatiſe undertook to plead, that it was not criminous in a Chriſtian.

5. Now of theſe freewill offerings, defined by him, p. 91. juſt as I now, and then defined them, there is but one thing only which he obſerves by way of præcognoſcendum to his anſwer to that Treatiſe, and I muſt here take a particular view of it, becauſe I ſuppoſe it that, on which all his contrary hypotheſis muſt be founded; It is this, that the formality of a freewill offering, as contradiſtinguiſhed to the offerings commanded by the Law, conſiſting in this, that it was left free for a man to offer or not to offer, beyond what was poſitively required by the Law, here, ſaith he, the Leviticalneſs or Ceremoniality ſeems to ly, whereby (he pronounceth that) they are now aboliſhed. And afterwards oft to the ſame purpoſe, that they were parts of the worſhip of God in thoſe times is true, p. 92. intimating that thoſe times differed from theſe times in this reſpect; and this inference, ſaith he, hath too much of the λόγῳ σοφίας ſhew of wiſdom, but neither ſubſtance, power, nor truth in it. It was ſo in the Old Teſtament, therefore it may be ſo in the New, p. 93. and Divines reſolve that the worſhip of God then, was far different from the worſhip of the Goſpel, and conclude the contrary. It rather follows, that they are not parts of worſhip now, becauſe that Levitical worſhip was aboliſhed, p. 94. And this is his principal engine of battery to demoliſh all that I had ſaid from that parallel between thoſe freewill offerings and the ἐθελοθρησκεία in the New Teſtament.

6. I ſhall therefore, I ſay, make ſome ſtay here to examine and conſider this reſerve of his, for if it ſhall fail him, it is evident he hath no other refuge to retire to.

7. And firſt I ſuppoſe it ſufficiently reſolved between us, that the kind of the worſhip (that by bloody ſacrifices, &c. among the Jews) was indeed Levitical, no longer to continue than the Jewiſh Prieſthood of the Tribe of Levi continued, and ſo is long ſince aboliſhed by Chriſt; and accordingly I never meant (and I hope he cannot think I meant) to conclude that the ſame kinds of freewill offerings which were acceptable then, that of ſlaying a Bullock or a Ram, &c. do now continue acceptable among Chriſtians.

8. Secondly then, the only queſtion muſt be of the ſpontaneouſneſs of the oblations, whether that being confeſtly lawful and acceptable under the Law, it be now unlawful under Chriſt; or in plain terms, whether Gods acceptance of uncommanded oblations, when the matter of them is confeſt to be ſuch as is acceptable to him, be to be deemed Levitical, and ſuch as being peculiar to the Moſaical œconomy, is not now to be lookt for, being aboliſhed under Chriſt?

9. The queſtion thus plainly ſet, his affirmation is too far from the leaſt ſhew of probability, and ſo utterly deſtitute of all proofs, either from reaſon or Scripture, as far as he hath here diſcovered himſelf (and ſo but a begging of the queſtion in him that thus affirms) that there is no need of my pains in diſproving it; Yet ſhall I offer a few conſiderations to this purpoſe, and the firſt ſuch as may be of force ad hominem, to this Diatribiſt.

10. And it ſhall be the reminding him of his three ſpecial proofs, which he hath brought in his Preface and in his Diatribe, to infer the ſinfulneſs of Will-worſhip, viz. the ſecond Commandment, the ſum of which is, as he oft ſaith, Gods preſcribed worſhip, and all deviſed worſhip, an exceſs and ſo ſin againſt it; The words of Deut. 4. 2. where all additions to the word are prohibited; And (to the particular of Feſtivals) the fourth Commandment, againſt which, ſaith he, it is an offence in the exceſs, to obſerve any other holy day, but that one of the Weekly Sabbath. Now of theſe three it is plain, that they are all taken out of the words of the Judaical Law, and conſequently, if they were fitly urged to Chriſtians, then muſt it needs follow, Firſt, That they were thus of force againſt all uncommanded ſervices in the Old Teſtament; and ſecondly, That by way of analogy they ſtill hold under the New Teſtament, which if they do, then is this the direct contradictory to both the Diatribiſt's preſent pretenſions; to his allowing unpreſcribed uncommanded worſhip under the Old Teſtament, for how can that be, when his proofs againſt uncommanded worſhip are all fetcht from the Old Teſtament? to the aboliſhing in the New Teſtament what was allowed in the Old, for if ſo, how can the analogy hold betwixt the Old and the New, in which his three proofs were founded, as to the application of them to Chriſtians?

11. Which being ſo, the great evidences on which he had founded his hypotheſis, proving ſo irreconcile- able with his preſent pretenſion, I ſhall ſtill give him his choice which part of his method he will adhere to, the former or the latter; The former he cannot (the force of thoſe places in the Moſaical Law) for it is manifeſt by the free-will offerings, and now confeſt by the Diatribiſt, that uncommanded worſhips were allowed, and ſo lawful, among the Jews; And the latter he cannot, having formerly ſuppoſed in his arguing, that the analogy holds in this matter between the two Teſtaments.

So that I may now form a Syllogiſm, the premiſes whereof ſhall be both fetcht out of the Diatribiſt, 12.
the Minor from his very words, the Major from that on which his arguments are founded, thus, Whatſoever was lawful under the Old Teſtament, is lawful under the New; But free-will or uncommanded offerings were lawful under the Old Teſtament; (and then having given me my premiſes, 'twill be great unkindneſs to deny my concluſion) therefore, uncommanded offerings are lawful under the New Teſtament; Quod erat demonſtrandum.

A Second argument againſt his affirmation ſhall be, the conſideration of the liberty, and advan- 13.
tages which reſult to Chriſtians from the abolition of the Moſaical Law. That liberty muſt conſiſt, in the taking off, not in the impoſing of weights and interdicts, whereas, by this Diatribiſts affirmation, there ſhall by this abolition of what was Levitical, i. e. by this liberty, come in a multitude of unprofitable burthens, which never lay upon the Jews; Whenſoever I ſhall do any thing in the ſervice of God, which I am not particularly commanded to do, I am preſently enſnared, guilty of an abominable ſin whereas a Jew might, by his confeſſion, bring a thouſand free-will offerings, and in each of them be accepted. This ſure muſt be directly againſt one main part of the deſign of Chriſt's coming, and therefore is not to be admitted in the ſecond place.

Thirdly, It is ſufficiently known, and by the Apoſtle affirmed, that they were δόγματα, poſitive or- 14.
dinances, and νόμον τῶν ἐντολῶν ἐν δόγμασι, Eph. 2. 15. A Law of Commandments in ordinances, which Chriſt did by his death καθαιρεῖν, cancel, and nail to the Croſs; and indeed nothing elſe is capable of abolition or cancelling; But this of the free-will offerings, among the Jews, is not any Law of Commandments or Ordinances, but rather a negation of all thoſe, (for ſuch is a bare allowance to be deemed) and therefore ſure this, as to the voluntarineſs of them, was none of the things which were aboliſhed by Chriſt.

Fourthly, If it were true, which is here ſaid by the Diatribiſt, that the Leviticalneſs or Ceremonia- 15.
lity of the offerings ſeems to ly here, viz. in the uncommandedneſs or freedom to offer or not to offer (wherein he truly ſaith, that the formality of a free-will offering conſiſts, as that is contradiſtinguiſhed to the commanded offerings) then ſure the Leviticalneſs, &c. would not extend to the commandedneſs of the other offerings, and conſequently the commanded offerings under the Law would not be Levitical; Which as it is palpably falſe, and contrary to plain Scripture, Heb. 9. 1. 20. and elſewhere frequently; ſo it will farther conclude alſo, that the commanded offerings are ſtill in force, for by the Leviticalneſs and Ceremoniality, ſaith he, it was, that thoſe other are ſuppoſed to be now aboliſhed.

Fifthly, Againſt his concluſion I thus argue, Whatſoever was lawful before the Moſaical Law to 16.
mankind, and remained lawful under the Moſaical Law, and is not now prohibited by Chriſt or his Apoſtles under the Goſpel, that certainly is now perfectly lawful and free to Chriſtians; But ſuch are free-will offerings, Ergo. Of the Major I ſuppoſe there will be no doubt; And the Minor conſiſting of three branches, is manifeſt in the firſt of them, among many others by Abel's oblation, which the Fathers generally obſerve not to have been by way of precept from God, and 'tis affirmed by the antient Author of the Διαλέξεις, the Pſeudo-Clement, c. 22. (I ſay not how truly) that before the Jews idolatries and high provocations, ſacrifices themſelves were not impoſed on, or commanded the Jews, but only left to their free power, ἐὰν ποιῇς, If thou wilt do it; but upon their provocations impoſed, ὅπως πιεζόμενοι ὑπὸ ζυγοῦ ἀγχόμενοι ὑπὸ πολυθέου πλάνης ἐκσῶσι, that being conſtrained and compreſt by this yoke, they might be kept from idolatry. In the Second branch, it is granted by the Diatribiſt; And for the Third, it muſt ly upon him to ſhew any prohibition of Chriſts or his Apoſtles, which forbids to do any the leaſt thing in the ſervice of God, which is not particularly commanded: Now this he hath not yet attempted to do (no not here, where it was moſt ſeaſonable and neceſſary to do it, the whole weight of his cauſe being divolved upon it) and though it be not incumbent on me to prove a negative, yet having all Chriſts prohibitions before my eyes in the New Teſtament, where this would be diſcernible, if there were any ſuch, and being ſure that I cannot diſcern the leaſt glimpſe of any ſuch, and withal remembring upon what grounds the Diatribiſt affirms it, viz. upon the Leviticalneſs and ceremoniality of theſe free-will offerings, which hath already been competently diſproved, and how ſuſpicious and cautious he was in affirming that the Leviticalneſs ſeems to ly there, not daring to affirm any more, than that ſo it ſeemed, (and that I muſt ſuppoſe only to himſelf, no concurrence of any other mans judgment appearing with him) I doubt not but that I may with ſobriety aſſume, that there will never be produced by him any ſuch prohibition; and then there can be no way of ſuperſeding the concluſion, that uncommanded performances in the ſervice of God are ſtill lawful.

But leſt this ſhould ſtill ſeem but a leſs perfect, being only a negative probation, I muſt (to add 17.
yet more force to it) refer the Reader to the many poſitive inſtances, in the New Teſtament, of ſuch free-will performances, as contra-diſtinguiſht to thoſe which are under precept, ſet down in that Treatiſe of Will-worſhip, §. 30, 31, 32, &c. and much more largely in the Annotation on Col. 2. And then this will abſolutely ſuperſede all that he hath thought fit to obſerve here procemial to the inſtance of the Judaical free-will offerings, or to reply to my three obſervations of them.

For as to that which he ſpecially inſiſteth on, and which only hath the leaſt ſhew of force in it, 18.
viz. Gods promulgate allowance of thoſe free-will offerings among the Jews, without which he conceives it had been unlawful to the Jews to offer them, Firſt, That allowance being no command, is an irrefragable proof that acts of uncommanded worſhip may be allowed and accepted by God: and Secondly, it muſt be ſome poſitive prohibition which is required to make any thing unlawful, the want of a declared allowance will not do it: and Thirdly, there are many evidences under the New Teſtament of the like allowances for thoſe things, which are not under precept, yea, and ſometimes of more than allowance, of Gods accepting and rewarding of them.

And

19. And if, as he deſires to have it obſerved, thoſe voluntary oblations were a part of Gods worſhip, then, though I am not obliged to make good the parallel ſo far, as that every rite and feſtival ſhall be a part of Gods worſhip alſo, yet certainly I may conclude firſt, that ἐθελοθρησκία, Will-worſhip is ſuch, and that is the whole matter of our preſent debate; ſecondly, that the voluntary (I mean uncommanded, ſpontaneous) uſe of theſe rites, &c. is now as lawful, as it would have been, if they had been parts of worſhip, both by force of the argument, à majori ad minus, (parts of worſhip, are much more conſiderable, and more ſpecially taken care for by God, than rites and other ſuch circumſtances, the reaſons of which may be temporary and uncertain, upon ſome new or accidental emergents, whileſt the reaſons of performing, or inſtituting parts of Worſhip, are moſt conſtant and certain) and alſo becauſe among the ſame Jews, as we have uncommanded offerings, ſo we have uncommanded days of worſhip, both feſtival, the feaſt of Purim, and of the Dedication of the altar, and faſting, that of the fourth and fifth, and ſeventh and tenth month, in Zachary, and all theſe allowed by God among them, at leaſt approved, when uſed without any precedaneous ſpecial allowance.

20. And then, if it have any truth in it (which the Diatribiſt, when he thinks it for his turn, ſaith expreſly) that a ſpecial allowance of God was as good, and equivalent to a command; then, Firſt, So Gods approbation will be alſo; and ſecondly, I ſee not how he can avoid the inference, that then, it ſeems, theſe other feſtivals and faſts ſtood by as good an authority as did the weekly Sabbath of the fourth Commandment, or the great yearly Sabbath, the day of Expiation. But this by the way; what influence it will have on his whole ſcheme of Phænomena, I leave him to conſider.

SECT. II.

A firſt inſtance of uncommanded Pieties, Davids intention to build the Temple. Vindicated from the three anſwers of the Diatribiſt.

Numb. 1. HIS thirtieth Section proceeds, after theſe preluſory ſkirmiſhes, to adapt anſwers to the ſeveral inſtances, which I had given of performances uncommanded, and yet accepted by God; and the firſt is that of David, whoſe intention to build God a Temple, exceeding Gods command, 2 Sam. 7. 5. 7. was yet very acceptable to God, 1 King. 1. 18. and ſo appears to be, by Nathans meſſage to him, in that place of Samuel. To this he hath returned three branches of anſwer, I ſhall take a brief view of them.

2. The firſt [that this is one of Bellarmines arguments for their religious vowes, and is fully anſwered by Chamier, firſt, that it was in time of the law, when free-will offerings were allowed, but the times of the Goſpel give no ſuch allowance] is already anſwered in the laſt Section, where the Leviticalneſs, and ſo, abolition of that allowance of free-will offerings, was competently examined and confuted. Yet ex abundanti I here add, that the allowance that was expreſt in the law, belonging to ſacrifices, did not expreſly pertain to the building of Temples; and if ſtill, by the analogy or parity of reaſon it may be extended to ſuch other things, which were not expreſt in the allowance, and yet which were not meerly ceremonial, viz. to Davids intention of building God an houſe, when God had never expreſt any ſuch command or deſire, I deſire to hear ſome ſatisfactory reaſon, why the parity of reaſon may not in like manner extend the ſame allowance to uncommanded acts of piety under Chriſt, in caſe no ſuch allowance ſhould appear to be expreſt in the Goſpel.

3. This firſt anſwer therefore having ſo little of ſolidity in it, it was meet that it ſhould be introduced with a proœme, which might caſt a prejudice upon the Argument, viz. that it was one of Bellarmines for religious vowes, and fully anſwered by Chamier. But firſt every Argument is not invalid, which Bellarmine hath once uſed; I do not believe him ſo ill a manager, that a ſharp weapon taken into his hands would preſently be blunted. Secondly, Bellarmines uſing it to another purpoſe, that of religious vowes, ſuppoſing it fully anſwered, as to that, can have no influence on my uſing it to prove the lawfulneſs of ſpontaneous performances of piety; It might not come home to ſuch vowes, and yet might and doth come home to reſolutions or intentions.

4. And therefore if this be the truth of the matter, as it lies betwixt Chamier and Bellarmine, if it concern only the buſineſs of ſuch religious vowes, of building a Temple, before Gods pleaſure be known concerning it, and the like, then this Diatribiſt hath not done well to inlarge Chamiers words to this other ſo diſtant matter, and to vouch his authority both here and formerly, for the abolition of free-will offerings under the Goſpel. It cannot be a good cauſe, which needs ſuch aids as this.

5. His ſecond anſwer is, that God doth not abſolutely deny that he had commanded, but ſaith he had not commanded it to David, or any before him, not becauſe he would not have it done, but becauſe not yet, and therefore foretels that Solomon ſhould do it. To this I anſwer firſt, that here is very nice diſtinguiſhing betwixt abſolutely denying that he had commanded, and ſaying, he had not commanded. Can conſcience ever be ſatisfied of the ſinfulneſs of voluntary oblations, or the charitableneſs of judging a Church ſuperſtitious for uſing uncommanded rites, upon ſuch anſwers as theſe?

6. But ſecondly to diſinvolve this intricacy, and take aſunder this ſubtile fabrick, I demand, did God ever command David, or any governor before him to build him a Temple, or did he not? If he ſhall ſay, he did; Then is that expreſly repugnant to the plain words of Nathan, 2 Sam. 7. 5. Thus ſaith the Lord, ſhalt thou build me an houſe to dwell in? the queſtion implies, that he ſhall not, and v. 7. Spake I a word with any of the tribes of Iſrael, ſaying, Why build ye not me an houſe of Cedar? and ſo forward to the ſame purpoſe; But if he ſhall acknowledge that God never did thus command David or any before him to build him a Temple, then it is clear, his intention to build, was a free-will offering, under no command of Gods, and yet that intention accepted and commended by God; which was all I undertook to conclude in this inſtance.

7. Thirdly, What he adds, that God ſaith this, not becauſe he would not have it done, but becauſe not yet, &c. is evidently nothing to his advantage; for ſtill it is confeſt God would not have it done by David, vid, which was all I contended; and then, Davids deſigning to do it, was without command, and ſo a freewill offering; As for the prediction, that Solomon ſhould do it, Firſt, That is no intimation in the leaſt of any command to David; and ſecondly, It followed David's reſolution of doing it, and was God's anſwer to David, v. 13. on occaſion of his reſolving to build God a Temple, v. 1, 2. and ſo that is only a farther evidence, that what David reſolved to do, was, without any the leaſt command, only that which the dignity of the matter ſuggeſted to a pious ſoul, v. 1, 2. and accordingly was approved by Nathan, v. 3. Go do all that is in thy heart, and alſo by God, 1 Kin. 8. 18. though he were not permitted to actuate this pious reſolution.

His third anſwer is, that the houſe that David would build was not to be a part of worſhip, but by accident, as the houſe of Obed Edom, or the place where David ſetled the Ark, and our Churches now, only a circumſtance of worſhip. I anſwer, Firſt, So is a Feſtival now, a time, as that a place, and ſo equally a circumſtance of worſhip. And ſecondly, It being already evident that voluntary oblations were then lawful, and that thoſe are parts of worſhip, 'tis viſible that this had equally been lawful, if it had been a part, as it is now, being but a circumſtance of worſhip. 8.

But then thirdly, The intention of building this place, was ſure a pious intention, an act of reverence and love to God, whoſe houſe it was deſigned to be, and ſo that being uncommanded, muſt needs be an ἐθελοσέβεια, and ſo directly parallel to the ἐθελοθρησκεία, to which I thought fit to compare it. 9.

And ſo ſtill there is no other virtue in theſe anſwers, ſave only to evidence his diſtruſt in his σοφὸν φάρμακον, and to aſſure us, that he could not heartily believe, that voluntary oblations were now aboliſhed under the New Teſtament; for if really they were, having rendred that for his firſt anſwer, he could not have wanted or ſatisfied himſelf with ſuch evaſions as theſe. 10.

SECT. III.

A ſecond inſtance, and that under the New Teſtament. Paul's taking no hire from the Corinthians; This, no action of common life, nor yet a due debt. Καταχρήσασθαι for uſing, 1 Cor. 7. 31. 1 Cor. 9. 17. explained. The authority of Auguſtine, Chryſoſtom and Theophylact.

MY ſecond inſtance was that of S^t Paul, who might have received hire for his labour among the Corinthians, but would not, and counts and calls this matter of boaſting. This, ſaith he, is as little to the purpoſe, if not leſs, for it is not in an action of worſhip, but an action of common life as himſelf ſpeaks, and it is alſo a miſtake to call it a free-will offering, when it was a due debt. Numb. 1.

But firſt, 'Tis certain that I no where ſaid that this was in an action of common life, the Reader, if he will view the place at the top of p. 17. will find that it is miſreported, and truly I ſhould have been to blame to think the Apoſtle's preaching and officiating among the Corinthians, in which this was, to have been an action of common life; And I ſhall appeal to this Diatribiſt himſelf, whether he can really doubt, whether an Apoſtle's exerciſing his office, be not an act of worſhip, and conſequently any (but) circumſtance thereof, a circumſtance of worſhip, and this over and above, an act of ſacred alms, and ſo, of piety. And if it be ſo, then this inſtance of S^t Pauls not receiving hire, was either an action, or in an action of worſhip, or both, and ſo ſurely a נדבה or free-will offering. 2.

Secondly then, for his aſſertion, that it was a due debt (for which he cites Chamier) I ſhall make my appeal no farther than to the text it ſelf, and the notion, which the Fathers had of it. 3.

The matter is ſet down at large, 1 Cor. 9. The preaching of the Goſpel, ſaith the Apoſtle, was committed to him, and was under precept, and ſo no free-will offering of his; That is his meaning, when he ſaith, For if I do this willingly, v. 17. ἑκών, as a volunteer (ſo ſaith * Theophylact, εἰ μὴ ἑκὼν ἐνεχειρίσθην τὸ κήρυγμα, ἀφ' ἑαυτῆς δὲ τοῦτο ἐποίουν, If I had not been commiſſionated to preach, but had done it of my ſelf, If I did preach the Goſpel without any command, and ſo, neceſſity to do ſo, if of my ſelf, ſpontaneouſly, μισθὸν ἔχω, I have the reward, this would be rewardable in me, i. e. the very preaching would, without any other honourable circumſtance to inhanſe it; εἰ δὲ ἄκων, but if involuntarily, i. e. εἰ ἐνεχειρίσθην, ſaith Theophylact, if I am commiſſionated to preach, and ſo my preaching be an act of obedience to a plain command, and ſo, neceſſary, v. 16. (and woe to me if I do it not) then all that can be ſaid of me is, that οἰκονομίαν πεπίστευμαι, being intruſted with a Stewardſhip, I diſcharge it, σφόδρα λοιπὸν ὅτι οὐκ ἀφ' ἑαυτῆς τοῦτο ποιῶ, ἀλλὰ δεσποτικὴν ἐντολὴν πληρῶ, τοῦτο γὰρ ὅτι τὸ ἄκων, it is manifeſt that I do it not ſpontaneouſly, but I perform my Lords command, for this is the meaning of involuntary; And ſo there is nothing of excellence in this, ὁ φιλοτιμία τὸ πρᾶγμα, this will bring me in no reward; Upon which it follows, Τί οὖν μοί ἐστιν ὁ μισθός; What reward then ſhall be to me? i. e. What in this whole matter ſhall bring me in any reward? To which the Apoſtle anſwers, ἵνα ἀδάπανον θήσω, that preaching the Goſpel, I do it freely, without making it chargeable to the auditors, εἰς τὸ μὴ καταχρήσασθαι τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ, ſo that I make not uſe of (not as we render it, abuſe not) my power or liberty that I have in the Goſpel, i. e. the power of receiving maintenance from others, whether by hire from them to whom he preacht, (the labourer being worthy of that) or by way of aid from other pious perſons (ſuch as Phœbe and the like, intimated by the ἀδελφὰς γυναῖκα, ſome Chriſtian women that attended and miniſtred to them, v. 8.) without putting my ſelf to bodily labour to earn neceſſaries, v. 6. 4.

The doing of this thus, was that which would yield him the reward, And although this was not obſerved by Cephas and other Apoſtles, v. 5. yet ſure Cephas is not conceived to have ſinned thereby, but 'tis poſitively ſaid that 'twas lawful for all, v. 7. 11. 14. for as for Cephas and others, though only Paul would not uſe it, v. 12. and accordingly both there, v. 15. and after, 2 Cor. 11. 9, 10. he diſtinctly counts and calls this, matter of rejoycing or boaſting, in reſpect to the reward which he was allowed to expect from God for it. 5.

And ſo, nothing can be more plain than that this was a נדבה a voluntary act of piety in that Apoſtle toward 6.

* In 1 Cor. 9.

toward his Corinthians; and ſo ſure it was conceived by S^t Auguſtine, Potuit Beatus Paulus ex Evangelio ſibi victum quærere; quòd maluit operari, amplius erogabat; Bleſſed Paul might have had his food for his preaching; that he choſe rather to labour for it with his hands, was a greater liberality than he was bound to. And * S. Chryſoſtom, οὐκ εἶπεν ὅτι κακὸν τὸ λαβεῖν, ἀλλὰ βέλτιον τὸ μὴ λαβεῖν he ſaid not thoſe words, Act. 20. 35. becauſe it was ill to receive, but becauſe it was better not to receive. And † again, that it is τέταρτος βαθμὸς, the fourth and higheſt degree of munificence, κηρύττοντα καὶ ἐξουσίαν ἔχοντα λαμβάνειν, μὴ λαμβάνειν, for one that preacheth, and hath power to receive, yet not to receive. And on the place to the Corinthians, τὸ μὲν ὄν ἐπίταγμα, τὸ δὲ ἐκ προαιρέσεως καλόρθωμα, One was a precept, the other a virtuous action of his own choice, ὑπὲρ τὸν ἐντολὸν, above the Commandment; and κατὰ τοῦτο, in this very reſpect, πολὺν ἔχει μισθὸν, it hath a plentiful reward; And again, of the word ἀνάγκη neceſſity, he ſaith, that it pertains to the command by which it became neceſſary, πρὸς ἀντιδιαστολὴν τῆς ἐλευθερίας τῆς ἐν τῷ λαμβάνειν in oppoſition to the freedom in receiving (i. e. the power to receive from the Corinthians, v. 12.) forementioned. So again Theophylact, Τὸ γὰρ εὐαγγελίζεσθαι, ἐπίταγμά ἐστι, καὶ ἐὰν πληρῶ τοῦτο, οὐδὲν κατόρθωμα, &c. preaching the Goſpel is a precept to me, and ſo a debt from me, and if I do it, there is no great matter of excellence in it; τὸ δὲ ἀδαπάνως κηρύσσειν, προαιρέσεως φιλοτιμία, καὶ διὰ τοῦτο καύχημά ἐστι, but to preach without charging them, is the honour of my will, and in that reſpect there is place of boaſting, in this I may fitly rejoice.

* In Act. 21. Tom. 4. p. 860. l. 12.
† Ibid. lin. 20.
See alſo To. 1. p. 559.

7. This I have ſet down thus largely, to clear all difficulties or doubts in this matter, and to ſhew how punctually home it comes to the matter for which it was brought, to ſhew not only the lawfulneſs, but acceptation of ſuch uncommanded performances now under the Goſpel, as well as the נדבות under the Law.

8. The only exception he offers againſt this, is that from v. 18. where what he doth, he ſaith was done that he abuſe not his power in the Goſpel; But ſaith he, to abuſe power is to ſin, &c. But that is already anſwered, that καταχρήσασθαι ſignifies to uſe to his own advantage, and not only to abuſe; Thus in Lyſias, ταύτας λαβὼν κατεχρήσατο, he took and uſed them; and in Iſocrates in Panegyr. ἐν καιρῷ καταχρήσασθαι, to make a ſeaſonable uſe of other mens actions, by way of example: in Plato, οὐκ ὀρθῶς κατεχρήσατο δωρεᾷ, Ep. 8. he hath not rightly uſed the gift. And ſo 1 Cor. 7. 31. χρώμενοι τὸν κόσμῳ ὡς μὴ καταχρώμενοι, uſing the world as if they uſed it not, ſo it muſt be rendred in proportion to what goes before, weep as though they wept not, rejoice as though they rejoiced not, buy as though they poſſeſſed not, and ſo the vulgar reads, tanquam non utantur, as if they uſed not. And ſo Chryſoſtom on Act. 21. in the place even now cited, doth thus paraphraſe it, ἐξουσίαν ἔχοντα λαμβάνειν, μὴ λαμβάνειν, not to receive, what he hath power to receive; and ſo here Theophylact expreſly interprets it, ἵνα μὴ καταχρήσωμαι, τουτέστιν ὅλως χρήσωμαι, τῷ γὰρ ἁπλῶς χρῆσιν καταχρησιν ὠνόμασεν, the word ſignifies ſimply to uſe; δεικνὺς ὅτι οὐδὲ οἱ λαμβάνοντες ἡμάρτανόν τι, ſhewing that they which received, ſinned not a whit; which is the direct contrary to the concluſion of this Diatribiſt from the ſame premiſſe; And ſo Chryſoſtom alſo, δεικνὺς ὅτι οὐδὲ οἱ λαμβάνοντες ἐγκλημάτων ἄξιοι, by this expreſſion he ſhewed, that they which received, are not worthy of accuſations, guilty of any fault; which they muſt be, if they are bound by any ſpecial call, as the Diatribiſt cites from Chamier (but againſt the whole contexture of the place) to do what they did. And ſo this may ſuffice for the ſecond Inſtance, ſo particular, and that in the New Teſtament.

SECT. IV.

The third, of Paul's going up to Jeruſalem: this under no precept. No refuſing to ſuffer, no retarding of the Goſpel. The example of Chriſt and S. Paul at other times; the teſtimony of Origen, and confeſſion of the Diatribiſt.

Numb. 1. THE third inſtance was taken from Paul's going up to Hieruſalem, Act. 21. when, being told by a Prophet, v. 11. that bonds expected him there, he might lawfully have avoided that danger, and gone ſome other way, and been juſtified by Mat. 10. 23. and yet in this conjuncture, when he might have abſtained, he would yet needs go up, v. 13. and ſo that was his נדבה. Now to this, ſaith he, the like may be anſwered, viz. that it was no free-will offering, for though by the general allowance he might have fled, yet if he ſhould have refuſed to ſuffer, with the retarding of the Goſpel, he had ſurely ſinned.

2. To this anſwer the reply may be brief, that Pauls not going to Jeruſalem at that time, did in no wiſe imply either his refuſing to ſuffer, or retarding the Goſpel: Firſt, The not going, when he knows, that if he goes, he ſhall ſuffer, is not refuſing to ſuffer; it is only the diverting at that time, the not caſting himſelf upon apparent danger, which we find ſometimes exemplified by Chriſt, Mat. 12. 15. upon knowledge of the Phariſees deſign to kill him, though ſure he never refuſed to ſuffer, but eſteemed it a prime part of his miſſion.

3. Upon this occaſion, it was * Origens obſervation, ὃ διὰ φόβον θανάτου, &c. Chriſt did not this, for fear of death, i. e. refuſing, or being in the leaſt degree unwilling to ſuffer; giving thereupon this univerſal axiome, ὃτι ἀγεννές ἐστι τὸ μετ' οἰκονομίας φευξάμενον τοὺς κινδύνους μὴ ὁμόσε ἀνιόντας χωρεῖν, 'Tis no degenerous thing, to avoid dangers prudently, and not to go among them.

* Contra Celſ.

4. And ſure it would have been the ſame in S. Paul, who was not obliged to run into danger here, any more than to go unto the multitude, or into the Theatre, Act. 19. 30, 31. both which when he was willing to have done, he yet abſtained from both, upon the intreaty of the diſciples, and the Aſiarchæ that were kind to him; And accordingly we know at other times he made uſe of the ſame liberty, and induſtriouſly avoided the perſecutors hands, 2 Cor. 11. 33.

5. And Secondly, his not going up, was no way the retarding the Goſpel, only the reſerving himſelf to do Chriſt more ſervice upon earth, in preaching the Goſpel and confirming the Churches; For of this there is no queſtion, that the Goſpel might be advanced by his life, as well as by his death; and

as it appears in his Epiſtle to the Philippians, it might be better for the Chriſtians committed to his charge, that he ſhould continue to live and labour among them; and accordingly the pious Chriſtians here beſought him that he would not go up, and, I hope, were not guilty of deſigning treachery to the Goſpel in ſo doing, and ſo to the Diſciples, v. 4. who had by the Spirit, i. e. by the gift of Prophecy received knowledge of his danger, adviſed him alſo. Not that I think the Spirit, either by them, or by Agabus, diſſwaded his going, for then it had been an act of obedience to the Spirit, and ſo of duty, not to go; but that the Spirit made known his hazard, which there he ſhould run, leaving it free to him to go, or not to go, and that there were Spiritual reaſons on both ſides, and for not going, over and above, motives prudential, in regard of his own ſafety, and no command to deſpiſe theſe, nor conſequently ground of neceſſity or obligation to go up, only an intuition of ſome things that ſeemed to be more excellent, exerciſing of many admirable graces, of courage, and conſtancy, and confeſſion of a perſecuted Chriſt, every of which received luſtre from the certain foreſight of his danger, and theſe, it ſeems, weighed down the ballance with him againſt all the importunities of his friends, ſuperadded to the contrary motives, and accordingly he choſe that which was moſt noble, moſt excellent, moſt contrary to fleſh and blood, made not uſe of that liberty which God had given him, and in that reſpect this is directly parallel to the former, that of refuſing of hire, μὴ καταχρησάμενος τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ, he made not uſe of the power which he had, and ſo ſtill, his נדבה his voluntary, ſpontaneous oblation of himſelf even to martyrdom, without any command or obligation for it at this time.

Origen ſhall conclude this, in his Books againſt Celſus, Κἂν φεύγῃ ὁ Χριστιανὸς, ὁ διὰ δειλίαν φεύγει· ἀλλὰ τηρῶν ἐσολὴν τῆ διδασκάλε, καὶ ἑαυτὸν φυλάτων καθαρὸν ἑτέρων ὠφεληθησομένων τῇ σωτηρία. Though a Chriſtian fly (and yet that is more than not going up here) yet he flies not for cowardiſe, but obſerving the commandment of his Maſter, (and then ſure he offends not, much leſs betrays his Maſter) keeps himſelf pure, that others may be profited by his preſervation; and ſo ſtill this is not the betraying, but rather advancing of the Goſpel. 6.

That there was no ſuch command to S. Paul or others, binding to be bound, beaten, ſtoned, is here acknowledged by the Diatribiſt, and from thence I conclude, therefore it had not been ſin in him not to go up, when he knew he ſhould be bound, for ſin is a breach or tranſgreſſion of a law. This Diatribiſt therefore denying it to be a free-will offering, that he choſe the danger, when he might have preferred his ſafety, ought in all reaſon to have ſhewed the ground which rendred his going neceſſary; which having not attempted to do, but only in ſtead of it, affirming, that if he had refuſed with the retarding of the Goſpel, he had ſurely ſinned (which is equivalent to acknowledging that his bare not going to Jeruſalem had not been ſin, in caſe it had not been (as certainly it might not have been) to the retarding of the Goſpel) 'tis certain there remains no appearance of reaſon for his negation, nor conſequently of objection or pretence, why this ſhould not be a נדבה as well as the former, or any thing which is moſt ſpontaneous. 7.

The vulgar anſwer of ſome, that this was an inſtinct or motion of the Spirit, is not here adhered to by the Diatribiſt, and therefore I ſhall not ſpeak to that, being alſo ſure, that no ſuch thing doth here appear in the Story, and therefore muſt not be ſuppoſed, without all proof. 8.

SECT. V.

The fourth, of the more liberal almes-giving. Sadduces and Aſidæi. Righteouſneſs. Mercy. Paul's advice without command, 2 Cor. 8. 2. The Diatribiſts anſwer ſatisfied. Alms, the Chriſtians ſacrifice in the offertory. Allowance no command. A latitude of degrees in the middle rule. The Apoſtles direction of giving as God hath proſpered. Of the circumſtances of giving.

THE fourth inſtance is in the almſgiving or works of mercy, where the quotum (what proportion of the whole every rich man ſhould ſet apart for this purpoſe out of his yearly revenue) being left free, and not particularly defined by God, there is evidently place for voluntary oblations, above that which is under command or neceſſary, as is ſet down undeniably in that Tract. §. 32. Numb. 1.

To what is there ſaid, I now add theſe two conſiderations, for the evidencing of it; the firſt from the very denotation of the names, Saducæi and Aſidæi or Eſſeni among the Jews: A proportion there was of charity and liberality, which was by Law required of all, and this was called their צדקה righteouſneſs, and from hence I ſuppoſe the Sect of the Sadduces, called Tſadikim, firſt derived their title, they that obſerved the whole righteouſneſs of the Law, did all that by the Law they were required to do, and ſo tranſgreſt not in this reſpect; But beſide this, there was חסד that which exceeded this neceſſary proportion, יתרון הטובה abundance of goodneſs or mercy, as hath formerly been ſaid, and from thence the Eſſeni had their title חסדים Chaſidim or Aſidæi, and they were ſuppoſed to have their ἐπίμετρα τῷ νόμῳ, their over-meaſure, performances, more than the Law exacted from them, and ſo that is an example of what I now ſpeak of, the free-will performances of mercy. 2.

The Second ſhall be from S. Pauls language, 2 Cor. 8: 2. where ſpeaking of the Corinthians equalling the Macedonians in liberality to the poor Jews, he gives them no command to do ſo, (κατ' ἐπιταγὴν λέγω, I ſpeak not by way of precept, v. 8.) but only his advice or opinion, his γνώμην, juſt as in the caſe of ſingle life, 1 Cor. 7. 25. ἐπιταγὴν οὐκ ἔχω, γνώμην δὲ δίδωμι. I have no commandment of the Lord, but I give my advice; And if the Corinthians did obſerve and practiſe according to this advice, if they did give in proportion to the Macedonians, or (in caſe they did not) yet ſtill the Macedonians themſelves, which certainly were thus exemplarily liberal, and that, αὐθαίρετοι of their own accord, v. 3. without any obligation of precept lying upon them, and yet farther ὑπὲρ δύναμιν, above what they were well able to do; are again an inſtance of doing more in this kind, than either all men at all times, or they at this, were obliged to have done; and ſo this was a נדבה in them. 3.

Now to this inſtance of works of mercy, he firſt reſolves, that it may be anſwered in part, that it belongs not to the queſtion, which is of worſhip, not of actions of civil life.] But to this I reply, Firſt, That 4.

an anſwer in part, is no ſatisfactory anſwer; and ſo this, profeſſing to be no more, needs not be conſidered. Secondly, That the parity of reaſon holds from one act of Chriſtian performance to another, that if in duties of charity between fellow Chriſtians, there may be an ὑπερεχον τῷ νόμῳ, ſomewhat above the commands of the law of Chriſt, there may alſo by analogy be the ſame in matters of Chriſtian worſhip, there being neither reaſon nor revelation of Chriſts will, not yet of his allowance, to one more than to the other. But then thirdly, This of works of mercy is generally defined to be, in a Chriſtian performance of it, an act of worſhip, ſet in the front of ſuch by Chriſt, Mat. 6. 1. appointed to be exerciſed on the Lords day (as a work of the day) 1 Cor. 16. 2. and accordingly interpreted by Chriſt to be done to himſelf, Mat. 25. 40. and ſo by S^t Paul ſtyled θυσία and δεκτὴ θυσία, a ſacrifice, an acceptable ſacrifice, Phil. 4. 18. Heb. 13. 16. And yet fourthly to remove all ſcruple, I wiſh that after the cuſtom of the Primitive Apoſtolick Church, this almes be preſented to God, in the offertory at the Sacrament, and then, as it will certainly be a branch of Chriſtian worſhip, ſo my inſtance ſhall be ſet particularly to that ſort of almes, and it will certainly hold in that, as exactly as in any other.

5. But this imperfect anſwer being not confided in, he is pleaſed to add more, Firſt, That the queſtion is not of a degree of an act of obedience, commanded, as Almes-giving is, but of the act it ſelf, if not commanded nor allowed in the ſpecial nor in the general. But this anſwer cannot be of any manner of uſe to the Diatribiſt. For firſt, The queſtion being certainly this, Whether Ceremonies and Feſtivals in a Church are criminous, if they be not commanded by God; and Ceremonies and Feſtivals, being geſtures and times, and ſo circumſtances not acts of worſhip, 'tis viſible that the queſtion is not only of the act it ſelf. Secondly, The reaſon being the ſame of circumſtances and of degrees, of one acceſſory and of another, it follows, that if uncommanded degrees, may be lawful, uncommanded circumſtances muſt be lawful alſo. Thirdly, Though almes-giving in general be commanded, yet as long as the degrees be uncommanded, the argument from the lawfulneſs of thoſe degrees, will hold to the juſtifying of Ceremonies or Feſtivals; becauſe as almes-giving is commanded, ſo praying to, and praiſing of God, is commanded alſo, and theſe ceremonies and Feſtivals are as viſibly circumſtances of prayer and praiſing, as theſe degrees are of almes-giving. Nay fourthly, To take away all poſſibility that this anſwer ſhould be uſeful to him, the inſtance which I ſet of almeſgiving, is of an uncommanded act; for ſuppoſing the utmoſt degree of the uncommanded mercy to be once defined and determined, and ſuppoſe me to exceed that proportion in giving, 'tis evident that that exceeding is an act firſt, and then an uncommanded act; an act, for ſo is every exerciſe or work of mercy, and this giving is ſuch an exerciſe; and an uncommanded act, for ſo is all which is not under precept, and ſo this is ſuppoſed to be, and herein it is perfectly anſwerable to the free-will offering among the Jews; Sacrifice or offering was a determined and commanded duty, and every exerciſe of that, above what was commanded, was a free-will oblation, and as ſuch accepted by God; and ſo it is here.

6. As for his cautious reſtriction added in the cloſe of that anſwer, which pretends that the queſtion is of ſuch acts, which as they are not commanded, ſo neither are they allowed in ſpecial or in general, he muſt needs know that this is an impoſing on the reader; For firſt, The queſtion being of the lawfulneſs of uncommanded acts; and allowance, whether general or ſpecial, being yet no command, for no man is bound to do all that he is allowed to do; 'tis evident that the acknowledging the lawfulneſs of allowed acts, as they muſt needs be lawful, if they be allowed, is the acknowledging the lawfulneſs of ſome uncommanded acts; for ſuch are they which are no more than allowed.

7. Secondly, For the clearing of this, I ſhall offer the Diatribiſt this Dilemma; Are theſe high but uncommanded degrees of mercy allowed either in general or ſpecial now under the Goſpel, or are they not? If they are not, then this cautionary clauſe was very impertinently added, and my inſtance, though it proceeded of degrees which are not thus allowed, yet proceeding of degrees which are not commanded, was a valid inſtance. But if they are allowed, as I ſuppoſe by his caution he will affirm, why then, it ſeems, there is either general or ſpecial allowance ſtill under the Goſpel for uncommanded acts, and then there is as much for them under Chriſt, as there was under Moſes for freewill offerings; and ſo the Leviticalneſs of the freewill offerings conſiſted not in this, that they were thus allowed, and then this was no part of that Levitical Law, nor conſequently of that which was aboliſhed, as * before he had affirmed; and ſo the Diatribiſt's whole ſcheme is demoliſhed, or rather fallen aſunder of its own accord, as all infirm fabricks are apt to do.

8. What follows in the ſecond place, as if it were an anſwer to the inſtance, is but an attempt or two of the Diatribiſt's, out of my words to gain ſome advantage, and thereby to conclude, that there is ſome middle rule that binds men ſo, as that whatſoever is more or leſs than that, offends either by way of exceſs or defect.] But both this and all the other artifices were exactly prevented in the manner of my ſetting of the inſtance, of a proportion exceeding that, whatever it is, which can be defined our duty, and yet not offending againſt any other ingagement of the givers. For if that which is done, be more than that which we are any way bound to, 'tis impoſſible it ſhould tranſgreſs in the defect; and yet being no way forbidden to give ſo much, not being guilty of neglecting any other part of duty incumbent on us, 'tis on the other ſide as impoſſible that there ſhould be any exceſs. Nay there being, in the New Teſtament, a viſible allowance, of ſelling all and giving to the poor, of laying that all at the Apoſtles feet, and S. Paul commending the Macedonians who had been ἀυθαίρετοι ὑπὲρ δύναμιν, willingly liberal above their power, 1 Cor. 8. 3. and the like, our greateſt liberalities if they be prudently ordered and ſeaſonably placed (and there is no neceſſity, that he that is moſt liberal or merciful, ſhould be a fool) are competently ſecured from offending on that ſide.

9. And therefore the Diatribiſt, that from the poſſibility of falling into extremes, was willing to collect a middle rule, and from thence a debt, ſhould in any reaſon have aſſigned that rule, and produced his authority for it in the New Teſtament, and then the weakneſs of his anſwer would ſoon have been viſible. For I ſhould immediately have aſſigned ſome proportion exceeding that middle, and made my inſtance of that, and ſo have proceeded as formerly. But the truth is, ſuch a middle cannot be produced; And if it cannot, then is this an evident proof, that there are no ſuch middle points quos ultra citráque nequit conſiſtere rectum, the variation from which is always criminous; Nay if it were not ſimply impoſſible, and yet cannot eaſily be done by every man for himſelf, or by the teacher for all, then ſtill it is evident that this obligation is not univerſally revealed, and ſo no duty univerſally obligatory; and then my inſtance ſhall be ſet to ſuch a perſon, to whom it is not obligatory.

But,

But, as I ſaid, there is no ground in the Goſpel for defining or determining the middle rule, which conſtitutes a debt. The truth is, that this middle rule conſiſts not in any indiviſible point, but in a latitude, wherein there are many degrees, but all within the rule of allowance, though not all within the rule of precept, he that obſerves the duty in any degree of the latitude, doth well (for if not, then that was too great parſimony, and ſo no obſervation but a breach of the rule) and he that goes yet farther, but not beyond the latitude, doth better; for ſo he muſt, unleſs he go too far, which if he do, then he is prodigal, and that is a breach of the rule again on the other ſide. 10.

By this it appears, that as there is allowance not only for ſome one point, but for every degree within the latitude, ſo every degree of that latitude doth not bind every man, ſo as to make that degree a debt or duty in that man; No nor the general rule of giving according to God's proſpering them (the only thing which the Diatribiſt hath ſtill behind.) For beſides that rule, 1 Cor. 16. 1. ſeems to have a propriety to that particular time, in conſideration of the great diſtreſs and famine in Judæa, and conſequently is not a rule for all other times; Beſides this, I ſay, it is manifeſt, that they which do obſerve that rule, i. e. offend not in the defect againſt it, may yet be able to exceed the proportion, which that rule ſtrictly required, and then not only do well (as they muſt, if they offend not againſt any other rule) but alſo do better, for ſuch muſt all that be, which is more than well, and yet degenerates not into ill. 11.

For ſuppoſe a man, in deſire to obſerve that rule of giving as God hath proſpered him, to give the tenth of his profits weekly or yearly, and ſuppoſe him to do well in ſo doing, i. e. not to offend againſt the rule, as it is ſet and meant by St. Paul; or if the tenth be not a fit proportion, let any other be aſſigned which is fit; and then ſuppoſe that man yet to give more, ſo that ſtill he offend not againſt any other precept by exceſſive giving, and then you have the inſtance of the נדבה the uncommanded yet acceptable work of mercy, ſtill the ſame, as formerly, though ſomewhat more explicitely ſet, and ſo a more manifeſt evidence, that nothing is by this Diatribiſt (I may ſay, can be) produced as a valid exception or objection againſt it. 12.

For as to that of the circumſtances of time and place and perſons in regard of the neceſſities of the poor, the caſe which I ſet, is not capable of thoſe conſiderations, my inſtance being not laid in any particular almes, terminated in a particular perſon (though that alſo would admit of a latitude; I might give as much as were my duty to that particular perſon, and then I might exceed that, give more to him, and that would be my נדבה) but in a weekly or yearly conſecration or ſetting apart of ſome more liberal proportion for pious and charitable uſes, not foreſeeing particularly what they are, and withal not reſtraining my ſelf from giving more, if objects offer themſelves to my charity, above what my aſſignation will extend to. This ſetting the caſe, evidently prevents all thoſe difficulties ariſing from circumſtance of time and place and perſons, by remaining abſolutely looſe and abſtracted from all theſe, and thus the caſe was (and is to be) ſet, and will not doubt to ſecure it ſelf from all objections by this means. 13.

SECT. VI.

The fifth inſtance vindicated. Circumſtances of Prayer acknowledged free. Difference between placing worſhip in geſtures, &c. and pleaſing God by them. So in Feſtivals.

MY fifth inſtance was in ſecret prayer, firſt of the adjoining bodily worſhip to it, any ſuch as is moſt humble, and yet not under command, as proſtration, &c. Secondly, Of the frequence of it, ſeven times a day, with David, or ſome other proportion above that which is by the evangelical law ſuppoſeable to be required of us. To this he anſwers briefly, that Prayer indeed is a worſhip of God, but for the manner, geſtures, times, frequency, they are not properly worſhip, but circumſtances, rites, &c. left to the liberty of every perſon, and ſo though free, not parts of worſhip. Numb. 1.

This anſwer is very brief indeed, but needed not to have been larger, being in theſe few words a yielding of the whole cauſe; For is it not evident, that if geſtures and times be free, then ceremonies and Feſtivals are ſo too? and if they are, then are they lawful at once and uncommanded, for freedom comprehends both thoſe, being free to be done and ſo lawful, free to be left undone, and ſo uncommanded. I need add no more, ſure, of that. 2.

What follows in that Section is on purpoſe deſigned to involve this plain matter, and reduce it into an intricacy: And the way to do it, is to confound or ſhuffle together, theſe two things, placing the worſhip of God in them, and pleaſing God by them. But to this I anſwer, that theſe are two diſtant things, and ſo in all reaſon to be ſevered. He that juſtifies or defends the uſe of the humbleſt geſtures in the ſervice of God, and affirms them to be more acceptable to God, than either the leſs humble geſtures, or thoſe which have no humility at all in them, doth not yet place worſhip in them, but willingly acknowledges that God may be worſhipt without them. 3.

So he again that undertakes the defending of other Feſtivals annually commemorative of the birth and aſcenſion of Chriſt, &c. beſide the weekly commemoration of the reſurrection, and affirms it to be acceptable to God that we obſerve theſe alſo, and that the thankful pious obſervation thereof is more acceptable to God than the contrary whether negligence or contumacy, doth not yet place the worſhip of God in theſe Feſtivals, but in the prayer and thanksgiving which are offered to God in thoſe Feſtivals. And the ſame will certainly hold in all other particulars, to which either the Treatiſes arraigned by this Diatribiſt, or this defence have attempted to extend it. Such are the frequent, daily, and conſtant hours of prayer, either publick, or private, ſuppoſing as ſtill I do, that they do not interfere with, or ſupplant any other duty, or run out all into formality, &c. 4.

Of this laſt, frequency of Prayer, he would fain perſwade us that it is not a נדבה (but a debt) and to that end tells us firſt of pray continually, that the ſcope of it is to command frequent prayer every day, and ſecondly, that it hath reſpect to the frequent occaſions and neceſſities of men every day, and ſo binds to 5.

pray

pray as oft as need ſhall be, with ejaculatory prayers at leaſt. And yet in the midſt of this, ſpeaking of the particular number of ſeven times a day, he is content to acknowledge it true what I ſay, i. e. that it is no debt. And if ſo, then is that all that I contend for, ſuppoſing a man to pray as oft as that precept [Pray continually] obligeth, and withal to uſe ejaculatory prayers as need ſhall be, and yet farther to have more frequent daily returns to the ſolemn performance of that duty, than that precept is pretended to require, then ſtill this is under no precept, and yet no doubt acceptable, and ſo ſtill as exact a נרבה as could be pitcht on.

SECT. VII.

Of the difference betwixt a precept and a grace. The proportionable return to grace is in a latitude. The higheſt no exceſs. A poſſibility for grace to be given in vain.

Numb. 1. HIS next branch of diſcourſe is deſigned to diſcover my miſtake in making the difference ſo great betwixt a precept and a grace; And my ſetting down of that difference conſiſting of many degrees, of which each ſuperadds to the former, and not any one ſingle, but all taken together are a perfect ſtating of it, the Reader is deſired to review the whole matter Section 39. and by ſo doing he will ſoon find that every of the Diatribiſts objections to the former degrees, was perfectly prevented and anſwered in the following, ſave only the laſt of them, and therefore that only remains to be now examined.

2. The objection is p. 103. that ſure as grace it ſelf, ſo any meaſure or degree of grace being a talent alſo, requires a proportionable return to that degree, as to whom more is given, of him is more required. But to this alſo my anſwer hath formerly been intimated, viz. that as in the middle rule of almes-giving there is a latitude, ſo here in the proportionable return to any degree of grace, this proportionable return is not ſo placed in any indiviſible point, that as he that comes ſhort of that point, offends in the defect, ſo the exceeding that point in the leaſt degree, ſhall be an offence alſo, but, as I ſaid, in a latitude, wherein there may ſtill be a variation, and yet all the degrees of that within the latitude.

3. And therefore as it may be true of two men that have the ſame grace in ſpecie, that both may uſe it well, and yet one make better uſe of it than another, ſo it is ſuppoſeable of the ſame degree of the ſame grace, for though to that degree of grace, there be ſome degree alſo of return proportioned, that who ſo fails in that, offends by defect, yet it doth not follow from thence, that whoſo exceeds that minimum quod ſic, that leaſt degree that was proportionable, ſhall preſently offend by way of exceſs, but indeed the contrary will be moſt viſible, that he that thus exceeds, is more acceptable and more highly rewardable.

4. He that had ten talents intruſted to him to occupy withal, and having gained other ten, was accepted and rewarded, had he been yet more induſtrious, and brought in his Maſter more profit, gained eleven or twelve talents by thoſe ten, 'tis not imaginable but this would have been acceptable alſo to his Lord, and yet more highly rewardable.

5. Paul laboured more abundantly than all the Apoſtles, and this by the grace of God that was in him, and by ſome eminent meaſure of that grace, and ſuppoſing that meaſure to have been no greater in him than it was either in John or Peter, yet would this certainly have been accepted by God, and more richly rewarded, and not uſed like the Giants on Procruſtis his bed, all the exuberance cut off and caſt away, I mean, required to come down to that lower degree of return, which either of thoſe other diſciples did make, or to loſe his reward of that higher degree. And ſo this is full anſwer to all his exceptions againſt the difference by me aſſigned between Precept and Grace.

6. As for his incidental wonder at my expreſſion when I ſaid [it is the deſign of grace only to ſtrengthen and incline, which he that makes uſe of as he ſhould, is promiſed a reward] upon which he cries out, This is ſtrange divinity; doth God give grace only to ſtrengthen and incline, and leave men free to uſe it or not to uſe it? ſo grace might be given in vain.] To this I briefly anſwer, firſt from the words of Scripture, Heb. 12. 28. that men are exhorted to have grace, i. e. I ſuppoſe to make uſe of it, as when to him that hath, Chriſt promiſeth it ſhall be given, and he ſhall have abundance, 'tis evident it ſignifies, to him that makes uſe of the grace which he hath, and certainly that exhortation were in vain, if the contrary were not poſſible; and ſo likewiſe when he which hath not (makes not due uſe of it) is threatned with the auferetur, & ejicietur, taking away from him his talent, and caſting him into utter darkneſs, ſure 'tis ſuppoſed poſſible, that ſome man may not make uſe of his talent, or elſe theſe threatnings muſt be in vain, or men both deprived and caſt out without any demerit.

7. Again, doth not the Apoſtle exhort, that we receive not the grace of God in vain, that we grieve not, quench not (as elſewhere there is mention of reſiſting) the Spirit?) Doth he not tell us of ſome that did abuſe the grace of God unto wantonneſs? and can none of theſe be done? Is it not poſſible, through our own corruption and ſinful negligence and default, to reſiſt, to grieve, to quench the ſpirit, be it of prayer, of faith, of charity, &c. to abuſe it to wantonneſs, or not to uſe it through idleneſs? What then is the meaning of laying up the talent in the napkin, that was ſo puniſht? Did not he receive the talent, the grace in vain?

8. But as generally it falls out, that thoſe that reprehend this kind of Divinity moſt demurely, if they be a while obſerved, need no other evidence to confute them, but what their own words will yield us, they that leave nothing to mans will, do yet often exhort and reprehend men, which muſt certainly be vain and ridiculous, unleſs they that are exhorted, be in ſome poſſibility by Gods grace to do what they are exhorted to do, and they that are reprehended, in the ſame poſſibility to have done otherwiſe; ſo hath it happened to this Diatribiſt; He that juſt now thought the Divinity ſo ſtrange, that grace might be given in vain, adds in the very next words, that S. Matthew ſaith, take him and caſt him into utter darkneſs for not uſing his talent, which certainly is that identical ſtrange thing, with grace being given him in vain, as to all fruit, or uſe he made of that grace. And in the very next words again he adds, Is he not threatned with loſs of his talent for not uſing it?

But 'tis poſſible, the ſtrange divinity here cenſured, may have been ſomewhat elſe, not my ſuppoſing 9.
that it was left phyſically free or poſſible for man to uſe or not to uſe grace, but that it was morally free, i. e. lawful, or that which included no ſin, and then Gods not giving of grace in vain, muſt be his not giving it ſo as that it ſhall be no ſin not to uſe it; And if that be his meaning, then, as his expreſſions were very ſtrange, much more than my divinity, ſo ſtrange that I, whoſe divinity it was, could not underſtand it, as it was thus diſguiſed by him, (for who would ſay that to give grace without any deſign of laying obligation ſub periculo animæ to make uſe of it, were to give grace in vain? Is there no other poſſible uſe of grace but to condemn them, and render them unexcuſable? this indeed is another branch of no very old Divinity, though theſe days have not made it ſtrange with ſome men) ſo I ſuppoſe I have already given anſwer to this in the former part of this Section, and muſt not now ſo ſoon repeat it.

The ſhort is, though grace bring obligation with it, and that to ſome return proportionable to that 10.
grace, yet ſtill this proportionable return conſiſts in a latitude, which hath ſeveral degrees in it, and as the loweſt of theſe are under obligation, ſo the ſuperiour are not, but yet ſuch as will be accepted and rewarded by God, to him that arrives to them. And ſo much for that of the difference between the grace and precept, which he thought would have yielded him ſo great advantage.

SECT. VIII.

My anſwer to a firſt head of objections vindicated. Prudence loſt by mans own ſin, recoverable by grace. The puniſhments of Adams ſin, are not our faults. Perfection of innocence capable of degrees. So perfection of the Judaical law, and of the Chriſtian. So mercifulneſs to ability. Κατὰ δύναμιν ἀνθαίρετοι, 2 Cor. 8. 3. Merciful as God is merciful, belongs not to the degree. Gods righteouſneſs puniſhes not where there is no law. Intuition of reward in Chriſtian performances, no Popery. Proofs of this from Scripture, from the nature of Hope, Faith, Gratitude. Not always prudent to undertake the higheſt. Martyrdom no conceited Popiſh perfection, yet under no precept to all. S. Hieroms words examined. Two notions of the word Perfection. Some perfection poſſible in this life, and yet capable of growth. The law, as it ſignifies the condition of the firſt Covenant, is not now in force with believers. Of Chriſts perfecting the law. Every man is not bound to do what is beſt, 1 Cor. 7. 3. 8. καλῶς ποιεῖ of moral good. The ſaying of Gregory explicated.

WHat remains now in that Tract of Will-worſhip, was by me added for the preventing of miſtakes; To which end, three heads of objections I propoſed, the firſt ariſing from the obligation that prudence ſeems to lay upon us, to do always that which is fitteſt and beſt; the ſecond, from the general precept of loving the Lord with all the heart, &c. the third, from the ſeeming favourableneſs of our doctrine to the Romaniſts works of ſupererogation; and to each of theſe I gave particular anſwers, which muſt be viewed in that Tract from Section 40. to the end. And to theſe anſwers, what he now oppoſes, I ſhall now examine κατὰ πόδας. Numb. 1.

And firſt, ſaith he, Every man is bound to be prudent to that degree of prudence which he loſt by ſin. 2.
To this I anſwer, that if he ſpeak of the mans own actual ſins, whereby he hath any way infatuated himſelf, there is then truth in his affirmation; but 'tis not appliable to the matter in hand, viz. to ſuch an high degree of prudence as now I ſpeak of, for of that he may come ſhort, without any degree of actual ſin as ſhall thus infatuate and deprive him of prudence; and beſides, ſpeaking, as I do, of a pious, merciful, and ſo of a regenerate man, I may ſuppoſe him by the inlightning wiſe Spirit of God, returned to that ſtate of prudence from which his own actual ſins may have degraded him, and in caſe he be ſo, then, as he is as prudent as by this rule of the Diatribiſts thus underſtood, he is bound to be, ſo certainly he is yet capable of growing in that, as in other graces, and ſo of being yet more prudent, and if he do ſo, and thereby obey that exhortation of St. Peters, Grow in grace and in the knowledge — he is ſtill free from ſin in this reſpect, though he have not yet arrived to the higheſt degree of prudence that humane, but lapſt nature is capable of.

But if by ſin, he means not actual but original ſin, and ſo thinks that every man is bound to be prudent 3.
to that degree of prudence that Adam loſt by his fall, this ſure will be found to be a miſtake; For this loſs of Adams was a puniſhment of Adams ſin, and when it is inflicted by God on his poſterity, muſt be lookt on as a puniſhment, and he that is puniſht, cannot be obliged not to be puniſht; No man is now obliged to be as prudent as Adam was in his integrity, any more than to be as healthy, i. e. in effect to be immortal; Nay ſuppoſing Adam to have ſinned, and ſo to have tranſgreſt the Law in that, it cannot be imagined, that it is over and above that, a new or farther act of ſin in him to be leſs knowing, prudent, or healthy, than he was; all theſe, without any new act of his will, nay contrary thereto, falling upon him by Gods decree or punitive juſtice; and if it were not ſin in Adam himſelf, then ſure it cannot be ſuch in his poſterity, and ſo a man now, one of his poſterity, cannot be bound to that degree of prudence which Adam once had, any more than to be born in the ſtate of innocence and perfection, when yet he is neceſſarily ſuppoſed to be born after the image of the lapſt imperfect Adam, which he could not be, if he were born in this perfection.

And when in the ſame place he adds, that every man is bound to be pious in the higheſt degree, proving 4.
it by this, that the law requires perfection of holineſs, and the Goſpel (ſaith the Doctor) yet greater perfection, and every man is bound to be merciful to his ability, as our heavenly Father is merciful (which ſure is the higheſt degree) this is but an heap of paralogiſms, no one of the proofs belonging to the higheſt degree of piety or mercy, which was the one thing which was to be inferred from them.

For Firſt, the perfection of holineſs which the law required, was but either ſincere and upright, or 5.

at the moſt, but unſinning obedience, and neither of thoſe includes the higheſt degree of piety, which is poſſible

6. If by the law, be meant the Covenant made with Adam in innocence, then indeed 'tis true that the perfection which that required was unſinning obedience, and if Adam had performed that, 'tis yet evident that he had been capable of higher degrees of piety than that law required, there being in unſinning obedience, a latitude, and ſo, many degrees, of which the loweſt denominates it unſinning, and ſo, perfect in that ſenſe, and all the ſuperior degrees are additions, and to each of thoſe higheſt, the Law cannot be thought to bind, when it is ſatisfied with the loweſt.

7. This will be plain by the inſtances formerly given, of frequency in prayer, &c. wherein it is viſible that Adam in innocence might have exceeded any proportion which Gods law will be ſuppoſed to have required of him: And in a word, if Adam had never ſinned, yet might his ſtate have been a ſtate of proficiency, by which it is evident that the perfection required of him, was not the higheſt degree of piety, for then he had ſinned by any lower, and ſo innocence and growth in him had been incompetible; Beſide, there is no reaſon to doubt but that Adam and his poſterity ſhould have been rewarded according to their works, and ſo have been capable of different degrees of rewards; in caſe they had continued in innocence, which yet had been impoſſible, if every man had been bound to be pious in the higheſt degree, and had ſinned as oft as he did not arrive to it.

8. But this is but ſpeculation; and by the law, I rather ſuppoſe he meant the law of the Jews, and then the perfection of holineſs which that required, muſt, I ſuppoſe, ſignify truth and ſincerity of holineſs, ſuch as was in Zac. Lu. 1. 6. and in reſpect of which, he was ſaid to be juſt and blameleſs in all the Commandments of the Lord— Now 'tis as certain that this perfection is as capable of degrees alſo, and that all that are thus perfect, are not yet ſo in the higheſt, or in the ſame degree; Tis certain Zachary and Elizabeth were both thus perfect, but no way probable that they were arrived juſt to the ſame degree of it, one might very reaſonably be deemed to excel the other.

9. This may appear of the Judaical Law, by that which we have oft cited out of the Law, that there was one degree of mercy which was called צדקה their righteouſneſs, that to which they were obliged by the Law; another ſtyled חסד abundance or excellence of goodneſs, χρηστότης, ἀγαθότης, which the Law did not command, ſub periculo animæ, require or exact from them: This is ſo plain I need ſay no more of it.

10. Secondly, That greater perfection, which Chriſt required, is yet but a higher degree of the ſame perfection, but not the higheſt that is poſſible; Suppoſe there be eight degrees as of heat in nature, ſo of zeal or piety, or perfection, and ſuppoſe a Jew required to have ſo many of them as would denominate him perfect, i. e. at leaſt five of them, and a Chriſtian to have more than a Jew, ſuppoſe ſix, yet 'tis viſible that he that hath all that is required of a Chriſtian, is yet capable of having more, than is ſo required, viz. ſeven, and yet not to arrive to the higheſt that is poſſible, i. e. to the eighth degree.

11. But beſide this, there is in every ſuch degree a latitude alſo, and in it, as it were, fractions of each degree (and all this ſubdiviſion little enough to bear proportion with the great difference of the works of pious men here, or with the difference of the degrees of their glory hereafter) and he that hath the loweſt fraction of the ſixth degree, hath the ſixth degree, but not in ſo high a meaſure, as he that attaineth to an higher, viz. to the ſeventh degree, or to another fraction of the ſixth, and ſo 'tis evident in the hypotheſis or application, that every Chriſtian may be obliged to exceed a Jew in piety, mercy, &c. and yet nothing hinder but that one Chriſtian may exceed another in every of theſe.

12. Thirdly, Though every man be bound to be merciful to his ability, yet firſt, That mercifulneſs which is according to ability, is not placed in any indiviſible point; Two men that have the ſame abilities, and the ſame opportunity and occaſion requiring mercy from them, may very lawfully give or be merciful one more than another; For ſuppoſing any ſum that in all thoſe circumſtances both are bound to give, yet certainly one may lawfully exceed that ſum, give more than he was thus obliged, and yet not do beyond his ability; and ſecondly, In caſe he do yet give more, even beyond his ability, i. e. deny himſelf lawful injoyments on purpoſe to inable himſelf for this higher liberality, yet ſure this will not be ſinful in him, but on the contrary, more acceptable and commendable, as it was in the Macedonians, of whom St. Paul teſtifies that they were ὑπὲρ δύναμιν αὐθαίρετοι, thus liberal of their own accord beyond their power, and as ſuch, are propoſed for an example to the Corinthians, 2 Cor. 8. 3.

13. Laſtly, The precept of being merciful as our heavenly Father is merciful, is not (the Diatribiſt well knows) applicable to the degree of mercy which is in God, for finite creatures cannot attain to that; but only to the kind of it, mercy to enemies as well as friends; and ſo, could not with any colour be brought for a proof of his objection. And indeed after all this, the Diatribiſt hath let fall a few words in the cloſe of this fourth Section which ſhew, he had no belief in the force of it; For having ſet the caſe ſo as is the moſt for his advantage that he could wiſh, all circumſtances ſo concurring that a man ſhould be bound to give ſo much as will ſupply anothers wants, and to give leſs were neither prudent nor pious, yet he dares not pronounce it an offence againſt either of thoſe virtues, to go beyond this, but breaks off abruptly with theſe words [whatever it were to give more.] From which in-confidence of his, I ſhall not doubt to infer, that in that very caſe, ſo clothed with all thoſe circumſtances, he cannot deny, but that as I am bound to ſupply his preſent wants, ſo I may make proviſion alſo againſt his future neceſſities, and be far from ſinning, do that which is more acceptable to God in ſo doing.

14. His next return to a ſecond degree of my anſwer, is taken from his old Topick, of virtues conſiſting in a middle point between two extremes, from which if it ſwerve to either extream, it is a fault, though not obſerved, perhaps obſervable by men, yet juſtly puniſhable by a righteous God. But to this though much might be ſaid afreſh, from the conſideration of that righteouſneſs of God, which doth not uſe to puniſh thoſe facts which have no Law obſervable by man to forbid them, but firſt ſhews men his will, and what is good, and then requires obedience to it; yet becauſe ſo much hath already been ſaid, both to that of all virtues being placed in the middle, and to the latitude and not indiviſible point of that middle, I ſhall not now give farther reply to that; Any more than to the next branch of it, of prudence in our created nature, requiring to do what was fitteſt, for to that I have ſpoken already in this Section.

Under

Under this head of prudence, one farther degree of objection, I foreſaw, viz. that Prudence knowing 15.
the greateſt perfection to be moſt gloriouſly rewarded, would bind a man to aſpire to perfection, and not to content himſelf with any thing but the beſt. Upon the firſt ſight of theſe words the Diatribiſt is ſtartled, and diſclaims making any ſuch objection. But to this I anſwer, that he well knows I had no intelligence with him, and conſequently could not divine his pleaſure, but as well as I could, propoſed all objections I foreſaw poſſible from him, or any man elſe, of the moſt different perſwaſions.

But then till he ſhall pleaſe to propoſe other which have more force in them (as all this while he 16. hath not propoſed any, but ſuch as thoſe from the Second Commandment) I might expect that this my ſervice ſhould not be ſo very ill interpreted and faſtidouſly caſt off, with a [we ſhould not have framed ſuch an objection.

The crime which was thus to be averted, was it ſeems, a leaven of Popery, in thoſe words wherein 17.
I had propoſed the objection; And Firſt, If it were ſo indeed, I wonder, what error I had committed, or why Papiſts may not be permitted to make objections, or how the Diatribiſt came to have the monopoly of making them. But then, Secondly, What was the ſuſpicious phraſe which I had uſed? Why forſooth, that I mentioned glorious rewarding, This, ſaith he, ſeems at firſt ſight to touch upon the mercenary and meritorious way of Romaniſts.

This is not to the buſineſs in hand, yet I cannot but make ſome ſtay, and behold this rarity. For Firſt, 18.
Is the mercenary way all one with the Romaniſts doctrine of merits? If it be, it is to be feared, that David was a Romaniſt, for certainly he affirms it of God, that he rewardeth every man according to his works, even when he depredicates the mercy and free grace of God, and makes this the prime evidence of it, that he thus rewards men. Nay what is Chriſt, when he minds them of their great reward in heaven that ſuffer for him, Mat. 5. 12. That give, and pray, in ſecret, Mat. 6. 2. 5. of a prophets reward and a righteous mans reward, Mat. 10. 41. and S. Paul, of ſuch works peculiarly as were not under precept, 1 Cor. 9. 18. and a multitude of the like nature every where in the Scripture? Is not this reward, merces, and is not all that obedience which is performed in intuition of the glory which ſhall be revealed, this very mercenary way? and being ſo, is it preſently the meritorious way of the Romaniſts? Is there not merces ex pacto, reward by the tenure of Chriſts promiſe, as well as merit either of congruity or condignity? and is it as unlawful to look at and expect the performance of Gods promiſe, as to challenge heaven as the merit of our works?

Again, hath not Chriſt propoſed his rewards on purpoſe to allure us to come unto him? and is it 19.
not lawful for us to come that very way which God hath called us? Is not hope a Goſpel grace, and ſuch as ſets us a purifying, 1 Joh. 3. 3. and is not the future reward, the object of that hope, and ſo, that which regularly ſets a Chriſtian about his work? Nay is not that Faith which juſtifies, in this Diatribiſt's opinion, the belief of the promiſes? and may not a Chriſtian then look at thoſe promiſes, which yet he muſt believe?

But, ſaith he, he muſt firſt look on the commands of God, and beauty of holineſs, and ſeek that firſt for 20.
it ſelf, and by and by it is but carnal prudence, adviſing only or firſt to look at the perfection of glory. But to this I anſwer, Firſt, That the form of my objection was not ſuch as ſuppoſed prudence to look either only or firſt on glory, but on the greateſt perfection (of virtue here) as the way to the moſt glorious reward (hereafter;) And therefore to inſert the word [only] was that to which he had no kind of temptation.

Nay for the priority of order, looking firſt on the reward, it is viſible that I had not given the leaſt 21.
intimation of it, but contrariwiſe I had ſaid diſtinctly, that prudence would adviſe to aſpire to perfection, and to the beſt, meaning evidently the perfection of virtue (not of glory) to which the moſt glorious reward was proportioned. And yet after all this, ſuppoſe I had ſpoken of ſome man (in my objection) who looks firſt at the perfection of glory, and in order to that laſt end, purſues virtue as the one way to it, could he juſtly ſay this were carnal prudence in him and ſinful?

The beauty of holineſs is a thing ſeldom diſcerned but by the experience and practice of it, and in 22.
that caſe ſure there is need of promiſes to excite and attract to that practice (yea and of terrors to drive) and the Goſpel makes uſe of both theſe, and ſo doth Faith, which is the Spiritual, not carnal prudence. And indeed, if the beauty of holineſs may firſt be lookt on, and that is one promiſe, but that a leſs perfect one, and to be enjoyed in this life; then why may not the τελείωσις or eternal reward, which is alſo the beauty of holineſs, and that a perfect beauty, a purity from ſin, as well as immunity from burthens and miſeries, a wiping away ſpots, as well as tears, be firſt lookt on alſo?

Briefly I ſhall demand of the Diatribiſt, whether gratitude in a regenerate man who hath received 23.
from Chriſt the great benefits of election and redemption and juſtification, may not be allowed to incite and ſtir up duty? If it may, I demand again, whether the reward decreed to him in his election, be not lookt on by him, and whether that do not excite this gratitude? If it do, whether this be a carnal gratitude, and the mercenary way of the Romaniſts?

But I muſt not allow my ſelf farther to expatiate on ſuch digreſſions: The Diatribiſts divinity in 24.
this point is but ſuitable to what formerly he gave us a taſte of, in the paſſage of ſlaviſh fear, and both together are exemplified to us by the woman that went about the City with a firebrand in one hand, and a baſon of water in the other, ſaying, that one was to burn up heaven, and the other to quench the fire of hell, that neither hope nor fear, promiſes, nor terrors, might have the leaſt influence on her, but pure æthereal love do the whole work. And all that I ſhall need add, is only this, that ſtill there is an Heaven and Hell in Scripture (and all duty is not quite rarified and converted into this love) and many good Chriſtians there are, which make uſe of both theſe, and offend againſt no precept of Chriſt in doing ſo.

But I have at large handled this point of looking at the promiſes in our obedience, not only in a Ser- 25.
mon on 1 Cor. 7. 1. but more punctually in an addition to the Pract. Catech. now in the Preſs, p. 416, [1655.]
&c. and ſo ſhall not here any farther inlarge upon it.

My anſwers there to the forementioned objection are fitter for the Diatribiſt to combat with. I 26.
proceed therefore to conſider what replies he makes to them.

26. To my firſt anſwer, which was this, That though prudence doth adviſe to this of aſpiring to perfection; yet doth it not lay any command, ſo as not to obey it will be preſently ſinful] (a thing which had oft been proved formerly, by the example of S. Pauls advices when he had no commands, for ſure Prudence may well imitate S. Paul herein, and do ſo too) To this I ſay, he replies by bare affirming, but not proving or offering the leaſt proof for the contrary, only when he mentions the perfection of virtue, he adds [required by the commands of God] as if the higheſt degree of virtue were under command, which he knows is the thing which through this whole debate is denied by me, and the proofs and reaſons of my denying it, given at large, and then what a begging of the queſtion is it, to affirm it here, without any tender or overture of probation?

27. To my ſecond anſwer then, which was by conſidering the want of ſtrength in ſome men, which makes it not prudent in them to undertake the ſteep way of the greateſt perfection, founded in the words of Chriſt, He that can receive it, let him receive it,] He replies by asking what perfection I mean which will be dangerous to undertake as a ſteep way? that which is required in the commandments of the Law and Goſpel? I anſwer, 'twere a contradiction and madneſs in me, when I ſpeak of perfection, which is not under command, to mean that which is required in the commandments; It is certain I mean uncommanded degrees of virtue, the undertaking thoſe courſes, be it of virginity, auſterity, abundant labourings, Martyrdom it ſelf, when either I am not competently furniſhed with ſtrength from God for the going through with them, or have not any reaſon to perſwade my ſelf that I ſhall be ſo furniſhed. For then, if indeed I have not ſtrength, the very undertaking ſuch heights, may prove treacherous and precipitious to me. And that this is my meaning, he at laſt takes notice, and fills his margent with proofs of it, both from this, and from another Tract, and when he hath taken all that pains to find out my meaning (which I profeſs to be it, and thought it had been obvious to any man before) he fairly takes his leave of it again, hath nothing to ſay to it, but returns to that perfection of holineſs which, ſaith he, is the duty of all; and all that I need return to him, is this, that if it be ſo, it is not that perfection I ſpeak of, viz. virginity, &c. for that, I hope, is not every mans duty, but at the utmoſt, his, who can receive it.

28. This he is reſolved not to take notice of, and accordingly proceeds, and when I ſay, that even the precept of God may ſometimes interpoſe and make it unlawful for us to aſpire to the moſt perfect ſtate (meaning evidently virginity, martyrdom, &c.) he ſaith this is as ſtrange (and again in the rear, by way of exclamation, What ſtrange divinity is this) demanding whether Gods precepts croſs one another—— when he cannot but ſee that my whole diſcourſe and proceſs is founded in the ſuppoſition of that evident truth, that theſe ſtates of perfection are not under any precept of Gods, and ſo that the precept which ſhall croſs the undertaking of them, is far from croſſing any precept of God.

29. After this repeated exclamation and wonderment, he is content at length, as he ſaith, to hear me ſpeak and explain my ſelf. And my explanation being by ſuppoſition of a duty of our calling awaiting us on the one ſide, and an opportunity of martyrdom on the other, and that exemplified by S. Cyprian's caſe, that then obedience is better than the richeſt ſacrifice] here he finds place for triumph and ovation. By this 'tis evident, ſaith he, he means not perfection of holineſs according to the commandments of God, but a conceited perfection of martyrdom, as Papiſts do.

30. That I who ſpeak through that whole Tract of uncommanded acts, ſhould not mean that perfection which is according to (as that ſignifies required by) the Commandments of God, is too evident to be any ſpecial εὕρημα or diſcovery at this time, now toward the concluſion of his view of that Diſcourſe. Of that therefore he hath my free confeſſion; But if by perfection according to the Commandments, he will allow me to mean (as the words literally import) that ſort and degree of perfection which the Commandments of the Goſpel allow of very well, though they require it not of every man, or lay it under precept, then I ſhall not doubt to approve the perfection which I inſtance in, viz. that of martyrdom, to be ſuch, (unleſs when ſome diſcharge of known duty, or yet greater good, calls us another way) and if this be the doctrine of Papiſts, I hope yet that all Proteſtants are not therefore bound to diſclaim it, I never heard that our old Engliſh Reformation, which I thought had been ſealed by the blood of many martyrs, had lookt on martyrdom as a conceited Popiſh perfection; And if this be the privilege of the preſent deformation, to exclude martyrdom out of the catalogue of virtues, as the Martyrs and Saints out of our Kalendars, if this Diatribiſt be now one of that Triumphant Church, which hath thrown all croſs from their ſhoulders, and diſclaimed all pretenſions to this conceited perfection, and reſolved all to be Papiſts which ſhall thus communicate with the ſufferings of Chriſt, and obſerve this conformity with the image of Gods ſon, Rom. 8. I ſhall only tell him, that I ſhall be very well pleaſed to be guilty of this piece of Popery, and to ſuffer from this ſword of the Tongue, till God pleaſe to call me to any higher trials: Mean while, when the Apoſtle and the Church which hath tranſcribed his ſtyle, have uſed the phraſe τελειοῦσθαι διὰ παθημάτων, being perfected by ſufferings, and called martyrdom τελείωσις perfection, I cannot retract that ſtile, what envy ſoever fall on me for the uſing it.

31. What now follows in purſuit of this matter, Does God call all men at all times to martyrdom? Is there any command for all men to be martyred, &c.] is directly the evincing my aſſertion againſt himſelf; for upon that very foundation it is, that I ſuperſtruct, therefore Martyrdom which is the higheſt degree of perfection, is not under any command, Quod erat demonſtrandum.

32. In my third anſwer, which was, that perfection here had degrees in it and conſequently ſuppoſing men bound to be perfect, Mat. 5. 48. yet it follows not that they are bound to the higheſt degree of perfection) his anſwer is, he will grant this, and yet deny my voluntary oblations ſtill,] But how can that be, when that higher degree of perfection is ſuppoſed to be under no precept, and ſo to be free, and ſo when arrived to, a voluntary oblation? But his grant, it ſeems was only conditional, for it follows in his words [For we ſay there are degrees of, or rather to perfection here, upon condition that he will grant that every degree, even the higheſt, is required by the law of God, and what is ſhort of that higheſt is ſo far culpable] This condition I confeſs I cannot perform, and ſo muſt loſe the advantage of his grant; And truly to require it of me, is to grant my premiſes, and require me to renounce my concluſion; For from that conceſſion, that there are degrees in perfection, and there may be perfection, where yet there is not the higheſt degree of perfection, it infallibly follows, that the higheſt degree of perfection is not under obligation of that precept, which requires no more than that we be perfect; as when the precept binds to no more, than to be merciful in ſome degree, it is evident, that it binds not to be merciful in the higheſt degree, and conſequently, that the higheſt degree of mercy ſhall be ſtill free, under no obligation of precept.

In this matter he deſires to ſpeak his own ſenſe in S. Hieroms words, Charitas quæ non poteſt augeri, 33.
&c. citing Ep. 62. for it. But this citation is ſure miſtaken, there is no ſuch thing in that Epiſtle. The place ſure is in S. Hieroms Epiſtle to S. Auguſtine, where he deſires his ſenſe of thoſe words, Jam. 2. Tom. 9. p. 159.
10. He that keeps the whole Law, and offends in one point, is guilty of all. On which occaſion he diſcourſeth a great while, how one virtue may be found in them which yet are guilty of other ſins, and ſo from one thing to another, not by way of defining, but by raiſing of difficulties to provoke S. Au- guſtines ſolution of them.

And on theſe terms he propoſes his notion of virtue, that it is the loving of that which is to be loved, 34.] and is in ſome greater, in ſome leſs, in ſome none at all, and then adds Pleniſſima verò, quæ jam non poſſit augeri, quamdiu homo hic vivit, eſt in nemine; quamdiu autem augeri poteſt, profectò illud quod minus eſt quàm debet, ex vitio eſt. Ex quo vitio, non eſt juſtus in terrâ qui faciat bonum, & non peccet, &c. But the moſt full virtue, ſuch as cannot be increaſed, is in no man as long as he lives here; But as long as it may be increaſed, that which is leſs than it ought to be, is faulty, whereby it is that the Scripture ſaith, that there is not a juſt man on earth, which doth good and ſinneth not; and, in thy ſight ſhall no man living be juſtified; and, if we ſay we have no ſin, we deceive our ſelves, &c.

By this view of the place it is evident, that the virtue, which, on occaſion of the place in S. James, 35.
he ſpeaks of being an univerſal, impartial obſervation of the whole Law, and conſequently every failing in that, a vice (for to that, all the proofs belong, that there is no man but ſinneth ſometimes) there is no reaſon to extend his ſpeech any farther than to this, and then it will in no wiſe be appliable to our buſineſs, which is only of the degrees of this or that particular virtue, which it is certain that man may have, who yet is guilty of ſome ſin in other particulars.

This therefore I willingly acknowledge, that he that fails of any part of his duty, is therein faulty, 36.
or this is ex vitio in him, and if of that only S. Hieroms words [quamdiu augeri poteſt] be underſtood (as it is moſt reaſonable they ſhould, whether we judge by the occaſion, or the proofs of his ſpeech, or by the expreſs words, quod minus eſt quàm debet, ex vitio eſt, that which is leſs than it ought, i. e. leſs than he is bound to do, is faulty) then as I fully conſent to the truth of them, ſo when that is granted, no man can hence infer, therefore every regular act of obedience which comes ſhort of the higheſt de- gree of perfection, is a ſin; for beſide many other inconveniences formerly noted, this freſh one will be obſervable from S. Hieroms own words, that then every act of virtue in this life is a ſin, for as for that fulleſt perfection which cannot be increaſed, the beginning of this teſtimony acknowlegeth, that it is not to be found in any man in this life.

In a word, the word Perfection is capable of two notions, either it may ſignify the perfect obedience 37.
of never ſinning, and of this only S. Hierom ſpeaks, both when he ſaith, it is not attained in this life, and when he adds, that whatſoever is leſs than this is ſinful. Or elſe it may ſignify any higher degree of exerciſe of any particular virtue, chaſtity, mercy, fortitude, &c. And of this only it is, that I ſpeak (and S. Hierom in the words cited from him, appears not ever to have thought of it) and to this only my affirmation belongs, that there are degrees in that perfection, and that he that hath attained to any of thoſe degrees, ſins not againſt Chriſts precept of perfection, though he was not arrived to the higheſt degree.

But, ſaith he, the Doctor goes on, If there be any perfection attainable in this life, 'twill be capable 38. of degrees and growth alſo] and then he adds, whether he be of their mind who hold perfection poſſible in this life, I cannot ſay, but this I can ſay, he ſpeaks contradictions, for perfection admits of no degrees or growth.

Here I ſee the Reader may be abuſed, if I do not give him a true narration of my words in that 39.
place, Section 46. Having mentioned one interpretation of the perfection which Chriſt commands us to aſpire to, Mat. 5. 48. viz. that it ſignifies mercifulneſs, Luke 6. 36. I add, if that ſenſe will not be ad- mitted, yet if it be any perfection acquirable in this life, 'twill be capable of degrees and growth alſo. Now by a ſlight change of [if it be] into [if there be] this ſenſe is quite altered and made lyable to ſuſpi- cion, that I teach perfection (I ſuppoſe he muſt mean the unſinning perfection ſpoken of by S. Hierom) poſſible in this life, and to the charge of ſpeaking evident contradictions, that I can talk of growth in ſuch perfection.

Truly there was little of juſtice in this; I hope he will be ſenſible of it. The perfection which 40.
I there ſpeak of, be it love and mercy to enemies, or be it any other Chriſtian duty ſet under precept by Chriſt, is certainly in ſome degree attainable in this life by them which have ſinned, and do ſtill ſin through infirmity, in other things, and perhaps in ſome circumſtances of this, and then I hope there can be no hereſy in this, to ſay that by the grace of Chriſt one may obey ſuch a precept of Chriſts, love his enemies, &c. when S. Paul profeſſeth unlimitedly he can do all things through Chriſt that ſtrengthened him.

And then, what contradiction can there be in affirming, that in this virtue of loving enemies, of 41.
mercy, &c. there are degrees and conſequently, poſſibility of growth; Of mercy it hath oft been ex- emplified that it is ſo; and whatever particular virtue it be, that can be phanſied to be meant by Chriſt by τελειότης perfection, I doubt not but it will be as viſible, when that virtue is named. But the Diatribiſt attempts nothing that way, only miſtakes perfection for ſome other thing, either for a ſin- leſs perfection, or for ſuch a ſtate as cannot be increaſed, knowing well enough that that is not attain- able in this life, and certainly is not the matter of Chriſt's precept, Mat. 5. and as certainly is not the perfection that there I ſpeak of

Once more, what I ſaid in this matter [that if the perfection (ſpoken of in the objection) be not 42.
acquirable in this life, 'tis certainly not under Evangelical precept now, citing that of Mat. 11. of Chriſts light and ſupportable burthen, and his commands not grievous, i. e. poſſible to be performed by us] falls under his very ſharp diſcipline, This, ſaith he, is ſtrong and ſtrange confidence.

43. His language I ſhall not only willingly bear with, but thank him for it; I ſhall only examine the reaſons which he offers for thus accuſing me. They are three, Firſt, Becauſe the Law requires perfect obedience of Chriſtians, as the rule of eternal righteouſneſs, adding, that all Orthodox Divines have maintained this againſt the Church of Rome, Only the Doctor is of the Church of Romes mind, and charges the Law with imperfection, citing it from Pract. Cat. p. 94.

44. Here are many miſadventures; I ſhall but name them. Firſt, That the Law requires perfect obedience of Chriſtians, meaning by that, the Moſaical Law, for that only, he knows, it is, which the Doctor chargeth with imperfection. The Law indeed ſometimes ſignifies the Covenant of exact unſinning obedience, and of that Law or that Covenant, it is moſt true, that it required perfect, as that ſignifies unſinning obedience. But then firſt, This was the firſt Covenant, and is not now in force with faithful penitent Chriſtians, who are not under this Law, but under grace, i. e. under a ſecond Covenant which requires not innocence but repentance, ſincere, not perfect obedience: And therefore ſecondly, It cannot truly be ſaid, that this Law requires this perfect obedience of Chriſtians, nor conſequently, that it is the rule of Evangelical righteouſneſs, i. e. of that righteouſneſs by which believers are now ſaid to be juſtified: I ſhall not inſiſt on the proving of this here, becauſe it is but a digreſſion in this place, and is abundantly explicated elſewhere, in the Pract. Cat. concerning the two Covenants.

45. Secondly, That he makes this doctrine of the Law's requiring perfect obedience of Chriſtians, to be one of the Doctrines maintained by the orthodox againſt the Church of Rome, when it is indeed but a contention of words, that the Diatribiſt (it ſeems) and ſome others have eſpouſed againſt I know not what adverſary.

46. Thirdly, That the Doctors charging the Law with imperfection, is a thing wherein he complies with the Church of Rome; when 'tis evident in that place of the Catech. that firſt, The words of Chriſt that he came πληρῶσαι νόμον, to fill up the vacuities of the Moſaical Law, and ſecondly, The many expreſs examples of his doing ſo, in that fifth of Mat. his additions to the Law in ſo many particulars introduced with [It was ſaid of old—But I ſay unto you] and laſtly, the uniform ſuffrage of all antiquity joining in this interpretation of Chriſts words, was the ground whereon I built my affirmation; and if in this, the Church of Rome were of my mind (as I do not find it is, making ſome of thoſe additions, Mat. 5. counſels, not all of them precepts) I ſhould never diſclaim the doctrine upon that account, any more than the articles of the Creed, which the Church of Rome is acknowledged to believe with us.

47. His ſecond proof is, that the Goſpel calls for the perfection of the law, Be ye perfect as he is perfect, Mat. 5. and be ye holy as he is holy, 1 Pet. 1. 15, 16. I anſwer, Firſt, This proves not his propoſition, viz. that it was ſtrong and ſtrange confidence in me, to ſay, that if the perfection be not acquirable in this life, 'tis not now under Evangelical precept; Acquirable perfection may be (and ſome degree of it is) under precept; but unacquirable perfection is not. Chriſts eaſie yoke is not now made up to us of impoſſible precepts. Secondly, That perfection in one of the places mentioned by him, appears to be mercifulneſs, and the holineſs in the other, that of S. Peter, being oppoſed ταῖς πρότερον ἐν ἀγνοίᾳ ἐπιθυμίαις, to the former luſts, when they were in ignorance, reſpects either that ſort of purity particularly, or however that more univerſal purity, which is now more ſeverely required of all Chriſtians, in an higher degree, than it had been under the Jewiſh œconomy; and of either of theſe I never doubted, but they are now under Evangelical precept. But then ſtill that is nothing to the higher degrees of thoſe, or other Chriſtian virtues, which all this while we ſpeak of. No more is that which follows from the Doctor himſelf, ſaying that Chriſt came to perfect the Law. So he might do, and yet leave ſome degrees of mercy, &c. free and not under precept, as hath oft been ſaid.

48. I ſhall not now take leaſure to examine, with what truth he adds, that that perfection which Chriſt came to add, is ſtill the perfection of the Law; It is true, it was the requiring of what the law had not required, and ſo the adding more to it, and perfecting it, as a law, requiring all that ever ſhall be required of men by law, or precept. But this concludes nothing againſt higher degrees of this very perfection, being ſtill left free, and not under law, the only thing which now he contends againſt.

49. His third proof is taken from the account I give in the Pract. Cat. p. 95. of the lightneſs and ſupportableneſs of Chriſts burthen, firſt in taking off the burthen of unprofitable ceremonies, ſecondly, in taking away the damning power of every leaſt ſin, &c. thirdly, in giving greater ſtrength. From whence he concludes, It was not then, that he required not perfect holineſs under the Goſpel. I anſwer firſt, πρὸς ἔνστασιν, that this concluſion can with no Logick be thus deduced being à teſtimonio negativé. It is very poſſible there might be other reaſons, beſide thoſe I there named, My mention of three being ſufficient for the matter then in hand, did no way prejudge or exclude more. But then ſecondly, I grant that this now mentioned, neither was, nor well could have been any part of my account of the eaſineſs and ſupportableneſs of Chriſt Evangelical burthen, above that legal of Moſes, becauſe it was common both to the law of Moſes and of Chriſt, that there were ſome degrees of perfection, which were by neither of them under precept, Moſes's law had place for free-will offerings, as well as Chriſts; nay Chriſts hath put ſome things under precept, as I conceive, which were not under precept by Moſes's law; in this one reſpect, there lies more weight on a Chriſtian, then did formerly on a Jew, but that is abundantly recompenſed by other reſpects, which this is not a ſeaſon to inlarge upon.

50. Having thus anſwered all his objections in this matter, it will I hope be conſequent, that he hath not yet demonſtrated the truth of that aſſertion, which from what he hath ſaid, he aſſumes to be apparently and viſibly true, viz. that every man is bound to do that which is beſt, becauſe the law and the Goſpel alſo require perfection of obedience in every commandment; For to this I have oft replied, that both of them require perfect obedience to all, that either of them requires, which notwithſtanding, there are ſtill נדבות under both, which no precept either of law or Goſpel requires, or puts under neceſſity of obligation to any.

51. The falſeneſs of that propoſition, that every man is bound to do that which is beſt, I had formerly evidenced by two means, firſt, the words of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 7. 38. he that marries doth well, but he that marrieth marrieth not doth better; ſecondly, by this, that the beſt being a ſuperlative, ſuppoſes the poſitive, which is lower than that, to be yet good, &c.

To theſe he will now apply anſwer; To the firſt, that well and better there, do not refer to moral goodneſs but worldly good, for the preventing of troubles in thoſe afflicted and perſecuting times. But this anſwer will be ſoon ſhaken aſunder, firſt, by conſidering that as the well and better do certainly belong to the ſame kind of good, ſo it is viſible that the well cannot belong to the worldly but moral good, and then conſequently, the better muſt do ſo too. That the καλῶς ποιεῖ, doth well, belongs to moral goodneſs, is evident by v. 28. where adviſing them that are looſed from marriage, not to marry, he adds ἐὰν δὲ καὶ γήμῃς, οὐχ ἥμαρτες, but and if, or, though thou do marry, thou ſinneſt not, and if the Virgin marry, ſhe ſinneth not. What can be more clear, than that the doing well is not ſinning? and ſure that is a moral, not only a worldly good. 52.

Nay ſecondly, the Apoſtle is as expreſs that the marrying is quite contrary to the worldly good, for having ſaid, that they that marry ſin not, he adds immediately, v. 28. θλῖψιν δὲ τῇ σαρκὶ ἕξουσιν οἱ τοιοῦτοι, but ſuch ſhall have trouble to the fleſh; and what can be more contrary to worldly good? But yet farther, thirdly, the Apoſtle ſets down the advantages of not marrying, v. 32. the unmarried careth for the things of the Lord how he may pleaſe the Lord, and the unmarried woman in like manner that ſhe may be holy both in body and ſpirit, v. 34. whereas the married man cares for the things of the world how he may pleaſe his wife, and the woman in like manner how ſhe may pleaſe her husband; And then, are not theſe ſpiritual (not barely worldly) advantages, and is not the holineſs of both body and ſpirit, and the caring for the things of the Lord, a greater moral or rather ſpiritual good, than the bare caring for the things of the world, to pleaſe a yoke-fellow? I hope I need ſay no more on this; nor ſure on that which he next adds, that if the perſon have not the gift of continence, it is then not only good but neceſſary for him to marry; for he knows, that as S. Paul ſpake of him that had that gift, when he ſaith he doth better, ſo I that only cited S. Pauls words, muſt be reſolved to ſpeak alſo. But as long as of him that hath that gift, i. e. hath power of his own will, it is true, that if he marry, he doth well, i. e. ſinneth not, but yet doth better if he do not marry, it is evident that I have all that I pretend to, and certainly this is given me by S. Pauls words. 53.

To my ſecond argument that the beſt being ſuperlative, ſuppoſes the poſitive to be good, he replies [I hope the Doctor will not deny but works done by Faith are good, and yet that they are not perfect in this life, i. e. come ſhort of what we are bound to by the Goſpel, will he now ſay they are evil?] I anſwer, I will not ſay they are evil, but they are good, though not perfect from all poſſible mixture of ſin. And what now he can gain from this his queſtion thus anſwered by me, as he expects I ſhould anſwer it, it will not be eaſie for any man to imagine; For ſure, this is the confirming, not the diſproving of my argument; For by his own ſetting it, it is manifeſt, that thoſe things are not evil, which yet are capable of a greater perfection, and then the perfection being the ſuperlative, the poſitive is ſuppoſed to be good, and not evil; and yet evil it muſt have been, if every thing which is inferiour to the moſt perfect, were ſin, or if the higheſt perfection were under Precept. 54.

What he adds out of Gregory, that all humane juſtice is convinced to be injuſtice, if it be ſtrictly judged] is firſt contrary to his former queſtion to me [will he now ſay they are evil?] whatſoever the Doctor think, the Diatribiſt it ſeems will ſay they are convinced to be injuſtice, and that, I muſt ſuppoſe, is evil, (and is not this great inconſtancy in him?) Secondly, It is of no force againſt my pretenſions; for when I ſaid, ſuch a thing is good, and another beſt, I never meant that either of them is not convincible by Gods ſtrict judgment to have ſome mixture of evil, but that the evil which is or may be adherent to it in ſome other reſpect (as of all humane actions is acknowledged) being pardoned by God in Chriſt, the lower degree being good, i. e. an act of obedience to Chriſts command, that which is higher and ſo better than that, may yet be ſomewhat which he hath not commanded, and ſo ſtill a נדבה in a Chriſtian. And thus much on occaſion of the ſeveral degrees, and paſſages of my anſwer to the firſt objection, which I foreſaw, that which was taken from the conſideration of what Prudence might adviſe and ſeem to require of us; which hath proved a buſineſs of ſome length. 55.

SECT. IX.

My anſwer to a ſecond ſort of objection, vindicated. Loving God with all the heart. Adam's love in innocency capable of degrees. Perfect love that caſts out fear, to be had in this life. Chriſt more intenſe in prayer at one time than another, an argument that all is not ſin that is leſs than the higheſt.

TO the ſecond objection from thoſe large comprehenſive words, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, &c. I anſwer'd thus; that that phraſe [with all, &c.] denoted only two things, Firſt, The ſincerity of this Love of God, as oppoſed to partial, divided love, (to which I now add for farther explication, that what we do according to the precepts of Gods Law, we do out of love toward God, not hypocritically, or as by conſtraint;) and ſecondly, not admitting any thing elſe into competition with him; this ſincere love of God, mean while being capable of degrees, ſo that it is very poſſible for two men to love God with all the heart, and yet one to love him more intenſely than another (as was exemplified among the very Angels) nay for the ſame perſon, which ſo loves him, to love him, and expreſs that love more intenſely at one time than another, as appeared by the example of Chriſt, Lu. 22. 44. Numb. 1.

Now to this he replies; that theſe two are there required, but not only theſe, but perfect love, ſuch as caſts out fear, 1 Joh. 4. 18. ſuch as was in Adam in innocency; To which I need ſay no more than what hath formerly been ſaid, that even that perfect love which was in Adam in innocence, conſiſted not in any indiviſible point, but had a latitude, and conſequently ſeveral degrees of that perfect love. But then withal it muſt be remembred, that the perfect love, 1 Joh. 4. 18. is not all one with that which Adam had in innocence, for that he confeſſeth is not acquirable in this life, whereas the love in S^t John that 2.

caſts

casts out fear, is in every Confessor, and Martyr for Christ, and is elsewhere styled, ἀγάπη ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ, love of Christ in sincerity, Eph. 6. 24. in the notion wherein perfection is all one with sincerity; But then this also is capable of degrees, one Martyr or Confessor may be more zealous, and express more intense and fervent love, than another doth.

3. What he adds, and confirms out of Hierom, was in one part answered before, and must not now be repeated; As for the other, it may answer it self, one part being directly contrary, if not contradictory to the other; For when he hath admitted and allowed of the supposition, that sincere love is capable of degrees either in one man at several times, or in two men at the same time, and so both obey the precept, yet, saith he, those degrees argue love not to be perfect, and so far faulty in vitio,] But sure if those of whom the supposition is made, do both obey the precept, then they do not offend against it; if they do not offend against it, then is not this faulty, or in vitio, for sure every fault or vice must be a transgression of the Law. The evidence of the matter may, it seems, extort some few words of truth from a gainsayer, though to acknowledge it intirely and constantly, it must not be expected.

4. In the next place he passeth to the inforcement of my argument from what we read concerning Christ himself, that he was more intense in prayer at one time than another, when yet the lower degree was sure no sin; and prepares to make answer to it, viz. that Christ was above the Law, and did more than the Law required, but men fall short many degrees of what is required.

5. But sure this answer is nothing to the matter now in hand, for the evidencing of which, that example of Christ was brought by me, viz. that sincere love is capable of degrees; This was first shewed in several men, and in the same man at several times, in the several ranks of Angels, and at last in Christ himself, more ardent in one act of prayer than in another; wherein what is affirmed of Christ is common to Angels and men, and so still may be, though he differ from them in other things, to wit, that he is perfect and never sins, though men be imperfect and faulty, the best of them; For still it must be remembred, that it is not the sinless perfection we speak of, when we say it consists in a latitude, and hath degrees, but sincerity of this or that virtue, expresst in this or that performance, and as this, though it excludes not all mixture of sin in the suppositum (the man in whom it is) yet may by the grace of God in Christ exclude it in this or that act (for it is certain that I may in an act of mercy, give as much as any Law obligeth me to give, and so, not sin in giving too little) so to this, his answer belongs not at all, nor shews any difference or reason why such sincerity may not in any pious Christian, be capable of degrees, as well as in Christ himself, and the lowest of them be sinless, and all the Superior, voluntary oblations, more than the strict Law required of us.

6. Suppose a man should in one ejaculation, pray to God sincerely and ardently, to avert an evil from him, I shall ask whether he commit any sin in respect of ardency? If it be answered, yes, he doth, in case it be possible for him, or any man else, or Adam in Paradise, to pray more ardently, I shall then hope I shall have refuted his answer, by the example of Christ, who when he prayed ardently, did not sin, though he fell short of that higher degree, which after that we find he used.

7. As for that which alone he adds in this matter, that the example of Christ holds forth, that great pressures call for inlargements of affections, not as voluntary oblations, but as duties. I shall only ask, whether they did so call for that very degree of inlargement, which Christ at last used; If it did not, then it seems this addition was little to the purpose; If he shall say it did, then how could he even now say, that Christ did supererogate in this particular, and that it was not appliable to men?

SECT. X.

My answer to the last objection, of Supererogation. A place in S. Cyprian vindicated from the Romanists reading. Imputare. An act of mercy in God that our works are rewarded. Supererogation wherein it consists. The Diatribist's Etymology of the word disproved. Erogare. Erogatio. The Diatribists ways of Supererogating. Pride, Glorying. More reward for eminent uncommanded excellencies superadded to duty. The Diatribsts charity, and confession of us. His censure of the Bishops unjust.

Numb. 1. NOW follows my answer to the last objection, freeing this doctrin of voluntary oblations, or of doing somewhat which is free and uncommanded, from all lyableness to the suspicion of being favourable to the doctrine of Supererogation among the Romanists, which is founded in their opinion that a man may by these performances make satisfaction for his own and other mens sins, which I that no way believe or acknowledge, cannot be charged as guilty of that opinion.

2. And to what is there said, I must suppose with some evidence, §. 51, 52, 53. I shall here add, and apply one considerable saying of S. Cyprian's in the Epistle ad Lapsos, telling them that Qui in Ecclesiâ semper glorioſe & granditer operati sunt, opus ſuum Domino nunquam imputaverunt, Those which have through all times wrought gloriously and heroically in the Church, yet never thought their Master beholden to them. That is the meaning of imputare, to reckon their layings out, and charge him with whom they reckon, to be in their debt. For want of understanding of which (or from some worse principle) the latter edition of S. Cyprian by Pamelius leaves out the word [nunquam, never] which the old Basil edition doth retain, and the sense evidently requires in that place.

3. By this (which is my full sense in this matter) and by what is already said in that treatise, that objection is wholly superseded; for I do not pretend that God becomes a debtor to any man for any of his most bountiful spontaneous oblations but that 'tis an act of infinite mercy in God, as the Psalmist saith, that any the most excellent work of ours is rewardable with him. And that partly because we being sinners, the utmost we can ever do, can never make satisfaction for our sins; and partly because whatsoever degree of perfection either by doing or suffering we can aspire to, First, It is still a work of God's good grace and strength in us, (for what hast thou, which thou hast not received? and then, what place for glorying?) and Secondly, It is in no degree meet or worthy to be compared, bears no proportion to the glory which ſhall be revealed; and partly again, becauſe God wants neither our obedience, nor our richeſt performances, we only are like to receive the benefit of them, and ſo we only are debtors to our ſelves, and can claim nothing from him, ſave only on the account of meer mercy.

Now in his reply, the firſt thing that he objects, is, that this diſtinction betwixt doing more than is 4.
commanded, and doing ſomething which is not commanded, is new, and ſometimes co-incident, for he (ſaith he) that doth ſomewhat not commanded, doth alſo ſomewhat more than is commanded. And becauſe he cannot but know my notion there, of doing ſomething more, viz. doing all, and more than all, he therefore preſſeth it farther, that in this ſenſe the Romaniſts in their ſupererogation do not ſuppoſe that he which ſupererogates hath done all that is commanded him.

To this I anſwer, by yielding that the Romaniſt is not ſo groſs, as to affirm him that ſupererogates, 5.
not to have ſinned, And therefore I never defined that to be the Romaniſts doctrine, or that our doctrine was by that one diſtinction, differenced from theirs, but having by way of foundation laid that diſtinction (as will appear to any that ſhall view the place, Section 51.) I make the notion of ſupererogation to be founded in one of theſe two, either in having paid all that is due (i. e. having never ſinned) or ſecondly (having been a debter, i. e. a ſinner) in paying that debt by ſatisfaction; And the latter of theſe two it was, and not the former, wherein I placed the Romaniſts opinion, and wherein I conceived the doctrine of freewill oblations under the Goſpel to differ from their doctrine of ſupererogating, as appears Section 52. And this he ſees, and ſets down in his next words; It was but the multiplying of my lines, and his own, that he could not earlier take notice of it.

To this ſecond then at length after ſome proœme he will proceed; that ſtill I cannot free my doctrine 6.
from ſome kind of ſupererogation, for, ſaith he, ſuch works have not their denomination from ſatisfaction made by them, but they are therefore called ſatisfactions, becauſe they are ſomething more than the law required, ſupererogare is as much as ſuper quod erogavit lex.

By this at length appears what bottom all this Diatribiſts ſtructure is built on, the extraordinary ety- 7.
mology which his fancy, or ſomewhat elſe hath ſuggeſted to him, of the word ſupererogation, which if it ſhould hold, I (after all this debate thus far prolonged) am obliged to yield the cauſe to the Diatribiſt, thus far at leaſt, that I were a friend to one word made uſe of by the Romaniſts. But I am ſo well aſſured of this Diatribiſts failings in this kind, by the experience of his ſuper ſtatutum, from whence he would have ſuperſtition deduced (and loſt his chief hold, when that origination of the word was wreſted from him) that I may be allowed again to queſtion his skill in that faculty. That erogare ſignifies to lay out (and not to require) is evident enough; erogare pecuniam in claſſem, to lay out money upon the navy, is Cicero's phraſe, pro Flacco; erogare pecunias ex ærario, in his Oration in Vatinium; erogare in oleum, in Plinie, Ep. 240. joined with conferre in operibus balnei, unde in eos ſumptus pecunia erogaretur, in Livie l. 1. and the ſubſtantive, erogatio, for expending or laying out, erogatio pecuniæ in Cicero ad Atticum l. 15. 32. Tot impendiis, tot erogationibus, ſaith Pliny in his Panegyrick, and in Suetonius 'tis explained by largitio, and profuſio pecuniarum.

And accordingly, ſupererogo is to lay out all and more, and from the opinion of pious mens doing ſo, 8.
the Romaniſts have clearly raiſed their treaſure of the Church, as the bank into which theſe payments are made. I could not have expected that there ſhould be any queſtion made of this; As it is, I hope this will ſatisfie it. And then alas, what a remote, unhappy etymologie hath this Diatribiſt fallen on, ſupererogare is as much as ſuper quod erogavit lex! Had he been pleaſed to have engliſhed this latine, the miſtake had been too viſible, and therefore that was more prudently omitted; For what can erogavit ſignifie in that period of his? Required? (ſo he renders it in the following period, works, ſaith he, may be ſaid ſupererogare, when men think they have done more than the law required.) But firſt, that is in no wiſe the meaning of the word, as hath already been manifeſted; Secondly, Whatſoever it ſhall be reſolved to ſignifie, yet in this way of etymology, the erogavit belongs to the law, whereas we know in the uſe of the word among all Romiſh writers, it is the man or the works (not the law) which erogates, i. e. lays out his money, pains, life, &c. and proportionably, which ſupererogates. Thirdly, (and which is yet more groſs) the ſuper muſt in this etymologie be aſſigned to the man, as the erogating to the law, and ſo the one word be divided betwixt them, the law muſt be ſaid to erogate, the man to ſuper, and what is that? either nothing, or elſe to ſupererogate, and yet that he cannot do in any ſenſe wherein the law could be ſaid to erogate. Thus (beyond all either reaſon or grammar) incongruous, and inconſiſtent is this etymology.

And this being ſaid concerning the nature of the word, all that remains of his exercitation, being 9.
built upon this miſtake, is perfectly ſuperſeded; yet I ſhall attend him κατὰ πόδα.

In many reſpects, ſaith he, ſuch works may be ſaid to ſupererogate, Firſt, With reſpect to the law it ſelf, 10.
when men think they have done more than the law required, which makes not ſupererogatory, but derogatory from the perfection of the law of God, and lays imperfection upon it (as the Doctor hath plainly done above.) To this I anſwer, Firſt, That by his own confeſſion theſe which he now mentions, are not ſupererogatory works, but the contrary; why then doth he ſet them as a firſt inſtance of the many reſpects in which ſuch works may be ſaid to ſupererogate? Secondly, When he knows, that that treatiſe of mine, on which he exerciſes his diſcipline, doth not defend the thinking a mans ſelf to do more than the law requires, but preciſely (in diſtinction from that) to do ſomewhat which the law doth not require, why ſhould he ſtill confound things thus ſevered, and lay that to my charge which he knows I am not guilty of? Thirdly, There is no truth in his ſuggeſtion, that this doctrine as it is taught by me, is derogatory to, or layes imperfection to the law of God.

For if by the law of God, he mean the Moſaical law, then though from Chriſts own words I con- 11.
clude that he came to fill it up, or perfect it, and ſo that it had in it before vacuities and imperfections, yet the doctrine of the treatiſe of Will-worſhip, is no way founded or concerned in that; As for the law of Chriſt, under which, as well as under the law of the Jews, ſome things are left free and uncommanded (and conſequently I affirm it poſſible for a Chriſtian to do ſomething which is not commanded him) I never accuſed that of imperfection, but do without all doubting ſuppoſe it to be a perfect codex of commands, to which God will never add more; and when I have done ſo, I found this doctrine of the Chriſtians voluntary oblations, in this perfection (not imperfection) of this law, viz. that even in the greateſt perfection there is a latitude, and the higher degrees of that latitude are not under precept.

12. A ſecond way of ſupererogating he mentions in reſpect to other men, as the Phariſee that ſaid with ſcorn and pride enough, I am not like other men, I faſt twice a week, &c. To this I anſwer, firſt, that this as little belongs to the true, as it doth to his falſe notion of ſupererogating. For in neither of them doth the ſuper include or intimate ſuperiority above other men; and ſecondly, that he that thus ſcorns and exalts himſelf above other men, is far from doing more herein than is commanded; 'tis evident he comes ſhort of very duty in an eminent moſt rewardable virtue, that of humility, wherein he that ſtrives not to exceed as much, and more, as in any voluntary oblations, 'tis evident that he is no good Chriſtian, and I never undertook to plead for ſuch Phariſees, but of all others, think Chriſtians obliged to uſe all diligence to avert this ſhipwrack.

13. And yet thirdly the Apoſtle himſelf both by his doctrine and practice, allows of a καύχησις, that ſignifies literally a glorying, but it is certainly an humble rejoicing, in having done things which he knows are eminently acceptable to God, and elſewhere, rejoicing in his own work; and as this is no way increaſable to a Chriſtian, by comparing it with other mens defects or ἀτήματα, for his charity makes him paſſionately wiſh, and his humility really think all others better than himſelf, ſo it is very far from that ſcorn and pride in all Phariſees, which makes them diſcriminate themſelves from other men.

14. The third way he mentions is, with reſpect to the over-pleaſing and acceptance of God, when they that think they can do ſomething not commanded, expect to find more acceptance from God than they themſelves or other do for doing only what is commanded. To this I anſwer, Firſt, That ſtill this is nothing to the notion of the word ſupererogating, (which ſure ſignifies not over-pleaſing.) Secondly, That if one caution be taken in, viz. that uncommanded works can never ſatisfie for diſobediences, and conſequently that it is perfect impiety and folly to neglect any duty, on one ſide, and then to think to compenſate that, by doing more than is commanded, on the other ſide: If, I ſay, this caution be premiſed, and proportionably, the earlyeſt and principalleſt care be taken to ſecure duty, to make good obedience, it cannot be amiſs in the next place to ſuperadd this other care of the moſt eminent heroical (uncommanded) performances, and he that ſhall have obſerved this method uprightly, eſchewed evil, in a ſtrict mortifying of luſts, &c. in abſtaining from ſin, and doing all that is commanded (as,

> Virtus eſt vitium fugere, & Sapientia prima > Stultitiâ caruiſſe ———)

and whenſoever he hath failed, ſecured his retreat by an early humiliation, confeſſion, begging of pardon in Chriſt, and ſincere reformation, and then laboured induſtriouſly to ſuperſtruct doing of good works of the more eminent (I mean uncommanded) degrees of virtue, I ſhall not doubt to incourage him, to think confidently, and expect from our great βεβαιωτὴς and ἀγωνοθέτης, more and greater acceptance (I ſhall add, reward alſo) than the ſame perſon could in reaſon expect for doing only what is commanded.

15. And though it be not beſt for him in this caſe to compare himſelf with other men, the poſſible hazard of that, exemplified by the Phariſee, perſwading the contrary, yet of the truth of the ſucceſs, there is no reaſon to make queſtion, or ſuſpect, but that of two men which have been equal in obediences, one exceeding the other in acts of uncommanded perfection, the more perfect ſhall have the richeſt reward, as is moſt evident whether by conſidering the degrees of glory in heaven, or the rule by which God diſtributes them ſtill under the Goſpel, by way of reward to every man, ſecundum opera, according to his works.

16. What he adds of Papiſts thinking they can merit with God by ſuch works for themſelves and others, though ours, ſaith he, are not come ſo far yet] is an eſſay of his charitable opinion of us; and I ſhall take it by the beſt handle I can, and conclude from it, then, by his own confeſſion, we are not Papiſts yet, and then I do not (after all that tract of Will-worſhip) maintain works of Supererogation yet; and then I need only add, that 'tis no way uſeful for him to loſe his pains and his charity by confuting thoſe, of whom he only divineth, that they may hereafter fall into falſe doctrine, which yet I hope I ſhall not do, having no temptation from all this Diatribiſt's Exercitation, and the arguments therein contained, to fly to any other Sect of Religion to furniſh my ſelf with anſwers for him.

17. What now remains in the ſhutting up this ſecond Exercitation, is wholly ſpent either in proving it to be my doctrine (which I willingly and expreſly grant it to be) that the voluntary oblations are more acceptable and rewardable with God, or in repeating his own ſenſe, the more voluntary the more abominable (wherein it ſeems we are already at diſtance enough, a man need not fly to the Papiſts doctrine of Supererogation, to make the breach the wider) or in charging on this doctrine, that it makes Superſtitious Will-worſhippers and Formaliſts to overlook others with abundance of contempt and inſolence, adding Characters, by which we may diſcern who they are to whom he is pleaſed to affix theſe titles.

18. To which my anſwer is, Firſt, With S^t Paul, Rom. 14. that as thoſe which freely do thoſe things which others account unlawful, ought not to deſpiſe thoſe which do them not; ſo on the other ſide, thoſe which do them not, ought in no wiſe to judge or condemn thoſe which do them; and conſequently, that if our Biſhops, whom he ſeems to tranſlate, thoſe who did overlook others, had really been guilty of contempt and inſolence toward them, yet had not this been more criminous in them, more contrary to St. Paul's direction, than this which is here viſible in this Diatribiſt, in calling them Superſtitious Will-worſhippers, and Formaliſts, which firſt preſumes all uſe of uncommanded ceremonies to be Superſtition firſt, and then Formality; and ſo is a double untruth; and ſecondly charges thoſe two great ſins upon his own Lawful Superiours, and ſo is a double uncharitableneſs, attended with diſobedience to, and ſeparation from them: I delight not now to compare theſe ſins, and affirm, which is more culpable; If his own plain words or conſcience do not accuſe this Diatribiſt in any of theſe, neither ſhall I accuſe him, but rather implore God's pardon for him; And only add ſecondly, That I have reaſon to hope and believe that the Governours of our Church, and thoſe who lately preſided in it, did not make their own voluntary performances, the foundation or occaſion of any degree of contempt or inſolence towards others which uſed them not; If any did, I neither intended nor now deſign any defence for them: And ſo much for the Second Exercitation.

CHAP. VII.

Of Chriſtmaſs and other Feſtivals.

SECT. I.

The obſervance which is due to the Cuſtom of a Church. The Teſtimonies of Ambroſe, and Auguſtine, and Iſidore.

IN our entrance on the diſcourſe of Feſtivals, I had thought that the cuſtomary practice of the univerſal Church of Chriſt, and particularly the perpetual immemorial uſage of the Church of England, continued, as far as we can diſcern, from the firſt plantation, without any interruption, to the time of writing that treatiſe, might have had ſome weight with any that were not contentious, if it were but upon the account of S. Pauls argument thus drawn from the cuſtomary practice of the Churches of God. Numb. 1.

On occaſion hereof the Diatribiſt falls preſently into the examination of that place where S. Paul uſeth that argument 1 Cor. 11. 16. and inquires what inferences naturally ariſe from the words of the Apoſtle. But I who deſigned to conclude no more from that reference, but only this, that the cuſtom of the Church ought to be of ſome force and weight with any meek ſon of the Church, have no need of following him into that inquiry, if the looſeſt conſideration and very firſt view of thoſe words do not prove that, neither ſhall I farther contend for it. 2.

Paul argued from cuſtom, and I propoſed the like argument, and ſo made a reference to S. Paul, whoſe example I thus far tranſcribed; and if in other reſpects the analogy held not, it matters not, ſo it held in this, that cuſtom was conſiderable in circumſtances of religion, ſuch was covering or not covering the head in the ſervice of God there, and ſuch is the obſervation of a Feſtival here; And this is all that I need reply to his Firſt Section. 3.

Yet I ſhall ex abundanti add one or two teſtimonies for the confirming the weakeſt part of that conſideration, viz. the reaſonableneſs of complying with, (ſo as not to oppoſe) the cuſtoms of any particular Church, though they be no more than ſo, though they pretend not to be derived from the Apoſtles, whether by inſtitution or practice, ſuppoſing withal that they are no way contrary thereto. 4.

And Firſt, We have the words of S. Ambroſe, ſufficiently known. Ad quamcunque Eccleſiam veneritis, ejus morem ſervate, ſi pati ſcandalum non vultis aut facere; To whatſoever Church ye come, obſerve the cuſtom thereof, if you will neither receive nor give ſcandal. 5.

Secondly, The (as clear) words of * S. Auguſtine, Ego te illud breviter admonendum puto, traditiones Eccleſiaſticas (præſertim quæ fidei non officiunt) ita obſervandas ut à majoribus traditæ ſunt, nec aliorum conſuetudinem aliorum contrario more ſubverti. I would briefly admoniſh you, that Eccleſiaſtical traditions (eſpecially ſuch as offend not the faith) are ſo to be obſerved as they are delivered by our Anceſtors, nor muſt the cuſtom of ſome be ſubverted by the contrary cuſtom of others. And yet higher in the ſame Epiſtle, Unaquæque provincia præcepta majorum leges Apoſtolicas arbitretur, Let every Province eſteem the precepts of their Anceſtors as Apoſtolical Laws, i. e. certainly, pay obſervance to them, though they be not of Apoſtolical inſtitution. So ad Januar. Ep. 118. Una in his obſervationibus ſaluberrima regula tenenda eſt, ut quæ non ſunt contra fidem nec bonos mores, & habent aliquod ad exhortationem vitæ melioris, ubicunq; inſtitui videmus, vel inſtituta cognoſcimus, non ſolam non improbemus, ſed etiam laudando & imitando ſectamur, ſi aliquorum infirmitas non ita impedit ut amplius detrimentum ſit. 6. * Ep. 28. Tom. 1. p. 69.

So Iſidore, l. 2. de Eccl. Offic. c. 43. Nec diſciplina in his melior eſt gravi prudentique Chriſtiano, niſi ut eo modo agat quo agere viderit Eccleſiam ad quam devenerit. There is no better rule in ſuch things for a grave and prudent Chriſtian, than to do in that manner as he ſees the Church do to which he comes. 7.

Store of ſuffrages might be heaped up on this occaſion; theſe few may ſuffice to juſtify all that I had ſaid in that Firſt Section. 8.

SECT. II.

Heathen adherents a proof of the firſt Antiquity.

THE Second Section had propoſed one argument for the antiquity of this uſage among us, founded in the adverſaries ſuggeſtion againſt it. The adverſaries generally accuſe the Chriſtmaſs Feſtivity for ſome heatheniſh mixtures retained in it; From which, if it were true, or however from the conceſſion of thoſe that affirmed it, I conceived an argument might be drawn, that therefore it was to be taken as granted, that this uſage was continued among us from the time of our firſt converſion from heatheniſm. Numb. 1.

2. And I cannot yet see, how this inference can be avoided; For how can any heathen usage adhere to this Festivity, if all heathen customs were laid aside long before this Festival were observed? Can it be imagined, that after the ejecting of heathenism, and the solemn abolition of all their feasts, Saturnalia and the like, when Christianity had gotten the possession, there should still continue among them those adherent rites of their Heathen Feasts, so many accidents without their subjects? Or that Christians that had long since renounced heathenism, and at length received this Christian feast, should ransack their heathen rituals for ceremonies wherewith to adorn it?

3. But this, it seems, is of no force, or (as he saith) no way constringent with this Diatribist; For saith he, they might be added some good while after the first conversion of some part of this Island, the better to win the rest to a liking of Christian religion, by conforming to them in the celebration of festivals. As the like was done to win the Jews in observing the old Sabbath, Pentecost, &c.

4. But sure there is little force in this evasion; For First, It is by this answer confest that as to some parts of this Island, my argument is of force, and that in those, this festival was introduced as early as their Christianity; and if that may be granted me, I shall contend for no more by this medium, but think I have gained a very fair confession for the antiquity of this usage in this Church, that this festivity was thus early introduced among us, even as soon, if not before Christianity had gotten possession of this whole Nation.

5. Meanwhile, that the Nation was not converted the several parts of it together, I mean not every person of every part, but some of all) or that there was any such interstitium or interval considerable betwixt the conversion of some part of this Island and the rest of it, this is incumbent on the Diatribist to prove, or else the argument remains in full force to the whole Nation, as well as to any part of it. And for this, he hath offered no proof, and so hath yielded the force of my argument, when he went about to refute it.

6. Secondly, The example of the Christians complying with the Jews, will stand him in as little stead; for when was it, that the Christians thus complied with the Jews, or that they retain'd their old sabbath, out of that design of compliance with them? Was it not at the time of the first conversion of the Jews to Christianity? Can it be imagined that the Jews were a good while before converted to the faith, and to the doctrine of the abolition of the sabbath, and then, some good while after that their conversion, the observation of their sabbath should be reduced, ex postliminio?

7. Would not this be a constringent argument to any gainsayer, to prove that baptism was introduced at the first beginnings of Christianity, because baptism is known to be a custom taken from the Jews? And so sure of the sabbath, and the like; If any space or interval had come in after the planting of Christianity among the Jews, it is no way probable that the sabbath once laid aside, as a ceremony nail'd to the cross of Christ, would ever after have been recalled, and observed among Christians; only at the first conversion or plantation of the faith, such things might from the Jewish state adhere unto the Christian, though they were not taught by Christianity, and so some others from the heathen also, tis possible and imaginable; but tis no way supposeable after the space of many years, when heathenism with all its rites and adherents had long ago been cast out.

8. And let this serve for his second Section, The matter is not so weighty (being but an argumentum ad homines) as to deserve any greater length of discourse to vindicate it.

SECT. III.

Of Crescens coming into France, and Simon Zelotes into England. The difference of keeping Easter in the West and East. Testimonies for our conversion in the Apostles times, Before King Lucius. The Diatribists suggestion disproved. Britain not converted from Rome.

Numb. 1. CONcerning the first planting of Christianity in this Nation by some Apostle or Apostolical person, what was said with competent probability out of our histories, is considered by the Diatribist in the next place, but nothing said or offered to be proved by him, which may exact answer from me, the whole matter especially being but a πάρεργον to the business of Festivals: only some passages of his, must be shortly noted.

2. As First, When from my saying that Crescens his being in France, removes all improbability from those histories, that record the plantation of Christianity in these Islands in the Apostles times] he seems to believe it my opinion that Crescens came over hither, (for so, saith he, the Doctor would have it, and proves it out of Scripture) which very thing he knows I absolutely disclaim, and only conclude it as credible, that some other Apostle or Apostolical person should so early come over hither and plant the Faith, as that Crescens, should come into France in S. Pauls days, which yet the French generally believe that he did, and have received it by tradition, and the words of Scripture may very fitly be so interpreted as to affirm it (and I do not believe that Estius hath, or that this Diatribist can demonstrate the contrary, I am sure he hath here produced nothing toward it, but the bare name of Estius)

3. That Joseph of Arimathea, or Simon Zelotes, was the person that first planted the faith here, I receive from our Stories by tradition, and accordingly satisfy my self therewith, and never attribute it to Crescens or any other, but particularly express my reasons why I cannot imagine it to be Crescens, and therefore am very much misreported in this matter.

4. All that I had to do with Crescens in that place was this, that from the authority of the relations of Crescens's coming so early into France, I thought I might conclude against the improbability of Josephs or Simons coming hither, the latter being perfectly as credible as the former, and the passage from France to England so short and easy, that there can be no difficulty or disparity in the matter, that one should be believed by the French, and the other be incredible to us. This was set down intelligibly enough in that treatise, if the Diatribists haste or somewhat else had not cast the cloud over it.

Secondly,

Secondly, when from the time of celebrating Eaſter anciently in this Nation, I conclude that neither Peter nor Paul nor Creſcens did firſt bring the Faith into this Iſland, and the Diatribiſt thinks he hath thereby gained an advantage, and that the ſame reaſon is of force againſt Joſeph and Simon Ztlotes alſo, this is an evident miſtake in him. For it is ſufficiently known, that as the Weſtern cuſtom of keeping Eaſter was deduced from S. Peter and S. Paul, ſo the contrary Eaſtern obſervation pretended to tradition from other Apoſtles, particularly from S. John. Now, as to the former of theſe it is conſequent, that none of the aſſociates or attendants of S. Paul or S. Peter were the planters of the Faith here (and ſo not Creſcens, who was ſuch, 2 Tim. 4. 11.) becauſe of thoſe it is not imaginable that they ſhould vary from the cuſtom received from thoſe two Apoſtles, as 'tis apparent the firſt Chriſtians here did, in the celebrating of Eaſter; ſo it is no way concluſible of all others, which related not to thoſe two Apoſtles, and ſuch I ſuppoſe Joſeph and Simon Zelotes were, it being very poſſible that either of theſe might comply with the Jewiſh account, and accord with S. John, and the Eaſtern Church in this celebration. 5.

And accordingly as by this indication it appears, that the words of Metaphraſtes concerning Simon Peters preaching the faith, and conſtituting Churches, &c. in Britain in the 12. of Nero, cannot be deemed to have truth in them, ſo if it may be ſuppoſed that Metaphraſtes, receiving his intelligence from ſome more ancient author or tradition, miſtook Simon Peter for Simon Zelotes, I ſee not what could be objected againſt the probability of the relation, either in reſpect of the perſon of that Simon, who is by very good Authors deemed to have been the planter of the faith here, or in reſpect of the earlineſs of the plantation, in or before the 12. of Nero, i.e. within 34 years after Chriſts aſcenſion. 6.

To this matter of the antiquity of the faith in this Iſland, and that particularly by this Simon Zelotes, I ſhall now add ſome few conſiderations: Firſt out of the * words of Theodoret in his Therapeut. Ser. 9. περὶ Νόμων, where having compared the Apoſtles of Chriſt, under the title of † ἡμέτεροι ἁλιεῖς καὶ τελῶναι our Fiſher-men and Publicans, with the Lawgivers of the Grecians and Romans, he affirms that whereas theſe latter did not perſwade or gain upon their next neighbours to live according to their laws, thoſe former wrought upon not only Grecians and Romans, but ἅπαντα τὰ βαρβάρων τάγματα, all the nations of the Barbarians (among which we know the Britains were vulgarly contained) and brought them to embrace the Evangelical law; and if this be yet too general, he then adds the enumeration of the ſeverals, and among them by name ſpecifies the Britains, οἱ ὑπὲρ ἡμέτεροι ἁλιεῖς, καὶ οἱ τελῶναι, καὶ ὁ σκηνοβόμος ἅπασιν ἀνθρώποις τὸν εὐαγγελικὸν πρεσβεύσασι τρόπον καὶ ὁ μόνον Ῥωμαίους καὶ ὑπὸ τούτοις τελοῦντας, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ Σκυθικὰ καὶ τὰ Σαυρομάτικὰ ἔθνη, καὶ Ἴνδους καὶ Αἰθίοπας, καὶ Πέρσας, καὶ Σῆρας, καὶ Τζκάνους καὶ Βακτριανοὺς καὶ Βρεττανοὺς, καὶ Κιμβρους, καὶ Γερμανούς, καὶ ἁπαξαπλῶς πᾶν ἔθνος καὶ γένος ἀνθρώπων διδάξαντα τὸν σταυρωθέντος τοὺς νόμους ἀνέπεισαν. A clear teſtimony that the Apoſtles themſelves in perſon paid this obedience to Chriſts command of going to all nations, none excepted, and that with ſome kind of ſucceſs every where, particularly here in Brittain. 7. * See Sir H. Spelman De Exord. Chriſt. Rel. in Brit. p. 2. † p. 123. p. 125.

Secondly, From the expreſs words of * Nicephorus Calliſtus, who ſetting down the ſeveral plantations of the Apoſtles, hath theſe words of Simon Zelotes, Μετὰ γὰρ τὸν ἐπιφοίτησιν τοῦ παναγίου πνεύματος ἀποδημίησιν, Αἰγύπτῳ, Κυρήνῃ τε καὶ τῇ Ἀφρικῇ προσβαλὼν Μαυρεταν[illegible], καὶ ὅσον ἡ Λιβύης ὅση, τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ διαδρομὼν, καὶ πρὸς Ἑσπέριον Ὠκεανὸν εἰσβαλὼν καὶ τὰς Βρεττανικὰς νήσους εὐαγγελισάμενος πολλοῖς τε σημείοις καὶ θαυμάτων ἐπιδείξεσι, θεολογίᾳ τε καὶ διδασκαλίᾳ χρησάμενος ὡς χρεὼν ἀνυμνήσας, ἀπείρους ἔτι θλίψεων ἐξελαθεὶς τέλος καὶ τοῦτο ἡ διὰ σταυροῦ θάνατον, ἀλύκτῳ τινὶ χαρᾷ εἰσδεξάμενος, πρὸς ἃ αὐτὸν διδάσκαλον μετεχώρησεν. After the coming of the holy Ghoſt upon him, he betook himſelf to Ægypt, and Cyrene, and Africk, and paſſing through Mauritania and Libya in the preaching of the Goſpel, and adventuring on the Weſtern Ocean, and preaching the Goſpel to the Britiſh Iſlands, and depredicating Chriſt as was needful both by many ſigns and wonders, and by divinity and doctrine, and being tried with many afflictions, at laſt with endleſs joy embracing the death of the croſs he departed to his Maſter. Which laſt paſſage of his death, that it belonged to theſe Iſlands alſo, is affirmed by Dorotheus, who adds that he was ſlain and buried here, and thereto accord the Greek Liturgies in their Menology, though Baronius and others diſſent in that particular of his death. 8. * Hiſt. Eccl. l. 2. c. 40.

Thirdly, That Gildas Brito or Badonicus, who affirms that Chriſt was preached to Britanny (under the name of glaciali frigore rigenti Inſulæ) ſummo Tiberii Cæſaris, in the laſt year of Tiberius Cæſar, i. e. in the fifth year after Chriſts reſurrection, is by Sir Hen. Spelman cited as author gravis & eximiæ fidei, a grave author and of great fidelity, anciently ſtiled Sapiens, The wiſe, and ſo agreeing with theſe former teſtimonies, may deſerve to be heeded by us, and not caſt off, as by the Diatribiſt he is, magiſterially dictating, that his affirmation was meer tradition and far from probability, but not adding the leaſt proof of it, but only that no authors of any credit lay it ſo high, with what truth, doth now competently appear, and is yet farther confirmed by a former teſtimony brought by Mr. Fox out of Gildas Albanicus in his Book of the victory of Aurelius Ambroſius, where he affirms Britanny received the Goſpel in the reign of the Emperor Tiberius. To this accordeth alſo the Vatican MS. one of which Baronius placeth the reception of the Faith in this Iſland about the year 35. which is two years earlier than the laſt of Tiberius. 9. p. 107.

For other paſſages to the ſame purpoſe, eſpecially for the relations of Joſeph of Arimathæa in Guil. Malmesbur. I refer the Reader to that worthy Antiquary, Sir Henry Spelman, de exord. p. 4, &c. And whatever the Diatribiſt ſuggeſts, I ſee not indeed in any or all of this, the leaſt degree of either impoſſibilty or improbability; For of thoſe Apoſtles that immediately after Chriſts aſcenſion took their journeys to ſeveral corners of the world, to publiſh and propagate the Goſpel, what difficulty is there in believing, that in the ſpace of four or five years, ſome one either by himſelf, or by his miſſive, at leaſt that the tidings of that bleſſed news, ſhould find the way hither into this Iſland? I ſhall now add no more of this. 10.

Laſtly, when in the ſetting and tranſlating the ſuppoſed words of Eleutherius to King Lucius, the Diatribiſt chargeth me for leaving out or not tranſlating nuper (which the Latine in my margent retained) adding that I did it wiſely (I ſuppoſe on ſome deſign to aſſiſt my cauſe) and leaving others to judge why it was done; this is but a calumny all this while. 11.

For Firſt, having (as he acknowledges) ſet down the word nuper in the margent, that was a fair evidence 12.

evidence to any charitable person that there was no treachery designed the Reader, for it being certainly foreseen by me that my Readers would easily understand so much Latine as the rendring of nuper would amount to, I had been by any such design engaged to conceal the Latine also; the setting down that, was the certain way of discovering any such supposeable treachery, and so sure no artifice or master-piece of wisdom (which the Diatribist imputes to me) but at once an act and punishment of folly, such as I heartily desire may always attend such enterprises.

13. But I need not such preludorie answers as these, the matter is plain to any man that hath eyes in his head; My English translation was not verbum verbo, yet by way of paraphrase perfectly answerable to the Latine, the Latine is, Suscepistis nuper miseratione divinâ in regno Brittanniæ legem & fidem Christi, and the English is as explicite to every minute part of it, that before that writing of his (is not that the full paraphrase of nuper, without defining what is not there defined, how long, or how little while ago this was, but only before the writing of Elutherius's Epistle) the kingdom of Brittain had received by Gods mercy the law and faith of Christ. I see there is no hope of approving my self to this Diatribist; If there were, I should not have fallen thus causelesly under his severest discipline, for such I must esteem this his suggestion, and the insinuations accompanying it.

14. And yet after all this, if I had done the utmost which he can suppose, viz. not rendred nuper at all, on purpose that this conversion of the Island might be thought to be long before the time of Lucius and Elutherius, which was above 140. years after Tiberius's decease, I hope it is by this time plain by what hath here been said of our conversion by some Apostle, particularly by Simon Zelotes, that I should not much have abused the Reader. That the faith was not first preacht in Lucius's days, but revived after the death of the first planters of it, I refer the Reader to learn from Sir Henry Spelman, p. 12. out of our ancient records: And for the truth of the passages between Elutherius and Lucius, as I never had ingaged my self, so if from thence, as the Diatribist pretends, any inconveniences be now found consequent toward the support of the Romanists plea to our subjection, it will be his (not my) concernment to fence himself against them, having here thus far acknowledged the truth of the story, that Lucius sent to Elutherius for some to baptize him and his people, withal from hence concluding that Christianity was not here planted from the Apostles times.

15. And here let me add in reference to his Sixth Section, that if I should yield what here he doth, that this Nation, first received Baptism not from any Apostle or Apostolical Planter, but in Lucius's days from Elutherius Bishop of Rome, it could not well be imagined how our ancient Brittish should be found so different from the usages of Rome in the celebration of Easter, &c. as it is known they were before, and at the time of Augustines coming hither. For certainly the Western manner was conveighed to all who had their Christianity or Baptism from Rome.

16. And indeed, as to the other concernment, what would it avail us to prove that we had not our Christianity first from Rome in Augustines time, if we be yielded to have had it first from Rome in Elutherius's time? I desire the Diatribist, which even now foresaw the danger, will now see to it.

17. What to this he saith (viz. that the Eastern Christians which kept their Easter after the Jewish manner, kept it not so in the Apostles times) is neither proved to have any truth in it, nor if it had, would it give any account of the reason of the Brittish retaining the Jewish and Eastern custom, in case they had their baptism from Elutherius, for as to the latter of these, though this difference were granted to be of a later original than the Apostles times, yet what possibility were there that the Brittish should have the Eastern Jewish custom from Rome, when the Romish was constantly the contrary, or that receiving Baptism from Rome, we should have our most ancient rites from Greece, quite contrary to the usages of Rome.

SECT. IV.

The keeping of Easter in the Apostles times. Polycrates's Epistle to Victor. The Asiatick way from Philip and John. From Philip derived to Britanny. Ἐορτάζωμεν. Κυριακῇ. The testimony of Socrates against Festivals, examined.

Numb. 1. AS for the truth of his negation §. 6. that the Eastern Christians which kept their Easter after the Jewish manner, kept it not so in the Apostles times] It will deserve considering a while, and the rather because this of Easter being certainly a Christian Festival, the annual commemoration of the resurrection of Christ, and that observed by the Asiaticks on any day of the week on which the quartadecima Lunæ should fall, and not only on the Lords day, if that shall be found to be so kept by any of the Apostles themselves, this will be no small prejudice to the Diatribists pretensions, who will not, must not allow any other festival among Christians, but that of the weekly sabbath or Lords day, as 'tis by him deduced from the fourth Commandment. And accordingly in his reasoning here against it, his arguments proceed not only against the Jewish manner, but against the feast it self being observed in the Apostles times, as will presently appear.

2. Now then for the clearing trial of this negation of his, on which his cause so much dependeth, I appeal to the history of that question or controversy betwixt the Eastern and Western Church, as it is set down with very little difference by Eusebius l. 5. and Nicephorus l. 4.

3. And first, 'tis Eusebius's affirmation of it, that all the Provinces of Asia observed it on the fourteenth
l. 5. c. 24. day, ὡς ἐκ παραδόσεως ἀρχαιοτέρας, as from a more ancient tradition, and again as τὸ πάλαι παρ' ἑτέροις ἐθος παραδοθὲν ἦν, a custom long before delivered to them; which, considering the time wherein this question was agitated, at the end of the second Century, can amount to little less than Apostolical.

4. But I need not lay weight on this, his 24. Chapter gives us the full debate of it in the Epistle of Polycrates to Victor.

5. This Polycrates was the eighth Bishop of Ephesus, and was then 65. years old, which reacheth up very very high, within 30. years of S. Johns time, and he * ſet down and manifeſted the tradition to be Apoſtolical, expreſly deducing it from two of the Apoſtles, Philip one of the twelve, which, ſaith he, died at Hierapolis, and John the beloved diſciple of Chriſt, who lived and died at Epheſus, adding to theſe Polycarp Biſhop and Martyr of Smyrna, and Thraſeas Biſhop and Martyr of Eumenia, Sagaris of Laodicea, Papyrius, and Melito of Sardis, All which, ſaith he, obſerved, the fourteenth day χτ τὸ ἐναγγέλιον, according to the Goſpel, μηδὲν παρεκβαίνοντες, ἀλλὰ χτ ἡ κανόνα τ πίστεως ἀκολουθοῦντες, keeping exactly the Canon of faith, and no way varying from it.

* Τλιὰ Ἀποστολικὴ παράδοσιν καὶ αὐθεντίαν ἔχει ὃ καὶ ἡμεῖς αὐτὸν ἀληθῶς παρακολουθοῦντες. Niceph. l. 4. c. 37.

Here it is undeniably evident, that the Aſiatick cuſtom was by Polycrates (and all the Biſhops of Aſia συνευδοκήσαν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ, conſented to this Epiſtle of his) fetcht from two of the twelve Apoſtles, S. Philip and S. John. And if that which † our ſtories tell us of Philips being in France, and ſending Joſeph of Arimathea and others into Brittain, be to be underſtood of Philip the Apoſtle, as ‖ Gildas Albanicus expreſly affirms, then have we a clear account of the derivation of this cuſtom of keeping Eaſter in this Nation from Philip to our firſt Chriſtians, juſt as Polycrates in Aſia deduces it from the ſame Philip. 6.

† See Guil. Malmesb. de Antiq. Glaſton. Eccl. ex Freculpho l. 2. c. 4. Et Baron. Tom. 1. an. 35. num. 5.

And that affords us an irrefragable inſtance of the obſervation of Chriſtian feſtivals among us, not only from the firſt plantation of Chriſtianity among us, but even from the practice of the very Apoſtles themſelves, which was the utmoſt that I could pretend to in this matter. 7.

And it is farther obſervable, that Pope Victor of Rome, though he was willing to have proceeded with greater rigor againſt the Aſiaticks, even * ἀπολύμενον τὰς Ἀσίας πάσας ἅμα ταῖς ἐμβρέγεις ἐκκλησίαις παρεικίαις, to cut off or excommunicate all the Provinces and Churches of Aſia, ὡς ἑτεροδοξούσας, as heterodox, yet never queſtions the truth of Polycrates's affirmations, concerning his receiving the cuſtom from thoſe Apoſtles; And indeed the other Biſhops aſſembled, were not for ſuch ſeverity, but for peace, and unity, and charity with theſe fellow Chriſtians, and reprehended Victor ſeverely for his thoughts of ſeverity. 8.

* Κεφ κε.

And the * Epiſtle of Irenæus to Victor is very conſiderable to this purpoſe, who though he reſolved on Victors concluſion for the keeping it on the Lords day only, yet he is abſolutely againſt excommunicating the Aſiaticks, upon this very ground, that theſe Churches of God did ἀρχὴν ἔθους παραδοσιν διατηρεῖν, obſerve the tradition of ancient or original cuſtom, and he farther tells him that the Biſhops before him had never broken peace with any on occaſion of this difference, inſtancing in Polycarp who came to Rome in Anicetus's time, and as Anicetus could not perſwade him to leave his cuſtom, ἅτε μετὰ Ἰωάννου τοῦ μαθητοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν, καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν Ἀποστόλων οἷς συνδιήτριψεν ἀεὶ τηρήσαντα, as having obſerved it always according to the practice of John the diſciple of the Lord, and the reſt of the Apoſtles with whom he had converſed. So neither could Polycarp perſwade Anicetus to leave his way, and yet they communicated one with another; Here again by Irenæus his own confeſſion, who was for the Weſtern cuſtom, the Eaſtern was practiſed by John and the reſt of the Apoſtles (ſure more than one) with whom Polycarp had converſed. 9.

In unâ fide nihil officit ſanctæ Eccleſiæ conſuetudo diverſa. Gregor. l. 1. Ep. 41.

* Κεφ κε.

Laſtly, There is no doubt all this while, of that which the Weſtern pretended for their cuſtom, that they had it ἐξ ἀποστολικῆς παραδόσεως, by Apoſtolical tradition, ſaith Euſebius, ἀποστολικαῖς παραδόσεσιν ἄνωθεν ἐπόμενοι, following the Apoſtolical tradition downward, or from the beginning, ſaith Nicephorus, and that expreſly from S. Peter the Apoſtle, which ſtill leaves the matter moſt evident and irrefragable, that this feaſt of Eaſter, which ſure is a Chriſtian feſtival (and all others are to be rated by that ſtandard) was obſerved and celebrated by the Apoſtles, and ſo is the evincing of all that I need to pretend to, for the vindicating of that Reſolution of the Quære concerning the Feſtivals of the Church. 10.

l. 5. c. xv. l. 4. c. 36.

What now can be invented by way of reply to this argument thus inforced, I profeſs not to be able to foreſee; what he hath thought fit to offer for the proof of the contrary, I ſhall now very briefly conſider. 11.

And Firſt, ſaith he, there is no mention of the inſtitution or obſervation of it in Scripture, nor any ground to found it on; But to this. Firſt, It is ſufficient to anſwer, that there is ſmall virtue in this argument from Scripture negative. Secondly, That the Apoſtles word ἑορτάζωμεν, let us keep the Feaſt, which by circumſtances is applied to the feaſt of Eaſter, is ſome (be it acknowledged a leſs weighty) ground in Scripture for the obſervation. Thirdly, That the mention of κυριακὴ the Lords day, Rev. 1. is ſome farther ground, whether that ſignify the weekly or annual Lords day; If it be the annual, there is then a clear evidence for the obſervation of it in the Apoſtles days; and if it ſhould be the weekly, yet in any reaſon, the annual day of the reſurrection was the foundation of this weekly day. which we know is to commemorate the reſurrection, as it is evident that the weekly friday faſts in the Church had their foundation in the annual great faſt on the day of Chriſts death in the Paſchal week. 12.

Fourthly, If the Scripture ſhould give us no kind of mention of this, yet ſeeing it hath otherwiſe appeared from the moſt ancient and undoubted records of the Church, that Eaſter was obſerved by the Apoſtles, by Peter and Paul in one manner, by John and Philip in another, what place of doubt or queſtion can there be in this matter? 13.

What he adds in the cloſe of his firſt reaſon that the Apoſtles were ſo far from inſtituting theſe as Chriſtian feaſts, that they do expreſly repeal them and cry them down, hath not the leaſt degree of truth in it, as hath formerly appeared in the view of Gal. 4. 10. 14.

His Second proof is from Socrates the Hiſtorian ſaying that the Apoſtles were not ſolicitous to appoint any feſtival days at all, therefore not this of Eaſter. To this I anſwer, that Socrates's words do not at all deny this to have been the practice of the Apoſtles, only his conceit is, that neither Chriſt nor his Apoſtles * νόμῳ τοῦτο παραγγέλλειν παρήγγειλαν, commanded to obſerve this by any law, and again that they intended not ἑορτασικῶν νομοθεσίαν, to make laws of feſtival days, referring the original of them to cuſtom, which varied in ſeveral regions, as appeared to him by that difference betwixt the Aſiatick and Weſtern Chriſtians, from whence his concluſion, or (as in the ſame matter he ſaith, τεκμαίρομαι his conjecture was, that ἡ τοῦ πάσχα ἑορτὴ παρ' ἑκάστοις 15.

ἑκάστοις ἐκ συνηθείας τινὸς ἐδιάζουσαν ἕσχε τὴν παρατήρησιν, διὰ τὸ μηδένα Ἀποστόλων μηδενὶ νενομοθετηκέναι περὶ αὐτῆς, the feaſt of Eaſter among all ſorts of people had a peculiar different obſervation from ſome cuſtom, becauſe none of the Apoſtles had made any law concerning it.

16. The ſhort is, Socrates ſaw that ſeveral Nations had their ſeveral cuſtoms of keeping Eaſter, ſome, ſaith he, from John, others from Peter and Paul, ſetting down the very ſtory, as we have given it, out of Euſebius, and from thence he collects (how truly it matters not) that no Apoſtle had given any binding law to all Chriſtians concerning it.

17. And ſo I that ſpeak only of the practice Apoſtolical, and not at all of their νομοθεσία commanding it by law, am no way incommodated by this teſtimony, And for any more than ſo (practice and cuſtom Apoſtolical) it will be hard for the Diatribiſt to produce any evidence for the weekly Chriſtian ſabbath or Lords day; ſure the New Teſtament hath no where any νομοθεσία giving of law concerning it.

18. His third proof taken from the difference of the obſervation of it in the Eaſtern and Weſtern Church, which, ſaith he, makes it evident that it was not inſtituted by the Apoſtles] hath ſure now been competently anſwered, for though that difference conclude againſt the νομοθεσία or appointment of the day by univerſal law, yet it no way prejudgeth the practice Apoſtolical, or the derivation of the ſeveral cuſtoms from this original.

19. How true, or pertinent to his purpoſe that is which follows, that the obſervation of Eaſter hath better antiquity than this of Chriſtmas, though not Apoſtolical, doth already ſufficiently appear, the Apoſtles practice for the one being ſo evident on all hands, by the confeſſion both of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Chriſtians, (the ſeveral practices being derived from ſeveral Apoſtles) that there can be no doubt in that matter; And then the analogy holding, and the argument proceeding in full force from one Chriſtian feſtival commemorative of Chriſts reſurrection, to another commemorative of his birth, or his aſcenſion, will certainly juſtifie the lawfulneſs of the obſervation, though the antiquity ſhould not equally be pleadable for it.

20. And ſo I hope I have fully cleared and vindicated the concludency of this argument.

SECT. V.

Midwinter-day. The Winter Solſtice. Julius's Calendar.

Numb. 1. NExt he proceeds to view the argument drawn from the title which our ancient records give Chriſtmaſs day, calling it Midpintpa-dæg Midwinter-day (and as I now find in other Saxon monuments, Midpintpæg-mærre Midwinter-maſs or feaſt) and with this he is pleaſed to refreſh himſelf and to be cheerful [How ſweetly all agree, &c.] and then to make offer of ſome anſwer; But the truth is, he hath not made any the leaſt diſcovery by thoſe anſwers, that he adverted at all to that one thing, wherein alone all the force of the argument was placed; I ſhall therefore repeat it again for him.

2. The Winter ſolſtice falling now many days earlier than the 25th of December, the acknowledged day of Chriſts birth, we are in reaſon to believe, that at the time when that title of Midwinter-maſs was beſtowed on this feſtival, the Sun entred into Capricorn (i. e. the winter ſolſtice fell) if not upon, yet very near to the 25th of December. And then this will drive it very high, up to the Apoſtles and our Saviours time, at the year of whoſe birth though as the learned exactly calculate it, the Sun entred Capricorn on the 24th of December at Rome, yet 'tis certain that Julius Cæſar ordering the Calendar 43 years before that, and believing that in his time it was as Hipparchus had ſaid (viz. that the ſolſtices had anticipated eight days, for ſo in his time Hipparchus had obſerved) he placed the ſolſtices on the eighth of the Calends, i. e. on the 24th of June, and 25th of December: In conſonance whereto, the difference being yet not great, the firſt Chriſtians might well call this feaſt Mid-winter maſs, being indeed ſo near the ſolſtice then, though the farther we deſcend from thoſe firſt times, the leſs exactneſs of truth we ſhall ſtill find in that appellation.

3. Now to this Mr. C. is not pleaſed to make the leaſt word of reply, and ſo hath not qualified himſelf to expect any ſyllable of return from me to his ſeventh Section. Only I ſhall tell him for his utmoſt ſatisfaction, Firſt, That my argument no way depends on the falling of John Baptiſts day on Midſummer day, and only mentioned it to ſhew the agreement betwixt them. Secondly, That if Chriſtmas day were not celebrated till the end of the ſecond Century, it could not with any propriety be called Mid-winter maſs, for An. 200. the Winter ſolſtice was certainly at a pretty diſtance from the 25th of December. Thirdly, That though now Mid-winter day be a fortnight ſooner than the 25th of December, yet in the Apoſtles times it was not ſo, and ſo that is an argument for, not againſt the obſervation of it, in, or near the times of the Apoſtles, for elſe it could not with any truth be called Mid-winter day.

4. By this time I hope the Diatribiſts eyes may be opened to diſcern ſome force in this argument, and how nothing he hath replied to it.

SECT. VI.

Feſtivals not Romiſh. The primitive Churches pure from the Hereſies that ſollicited them; The Romiſh corruptions not fetcht from them.

Numb. 1. IN the next place he proceeds to my two inferences, the former of which being only this, that the antiquity or immemorial uſage of any feſtival in our nation, doth no way argue that it hath any of the corruptions of the Roman See adhering to it, but the contrary, It is freely granted by him: And then I may for once congratulate the unexpected ſucceſs of that Paper. For it ſeems the uſe of Feſtivals is not

Romiſh

Romiſh and Antichriſtian, on the ſcore of which he certainly knows ſome who have caſt them out, and I foreſee not how he will ever approve himſelf to them again, after this one confeſſion.

However he will make no delay to make ſome reparations, For though feſtivals have none of the 2. corruptions of the Roman See adhering to them, yet, ſaith he, they may have too much of the corruption of thoſe Churches wherein they were firſt invented, corruptions which crept into thoſe Churches not long after the Apoſtles days, and the Romiſh Religion is a bundle of moſt of thoſe corruptions.

To which I anſwer, that nothing could be more unjuſt at once and improbable, than what is here 3. without either proof or diffidence ſuggeſted againſt the moſt ancient Primitive (and next to Apoſtolical) Church.

That there were many foul and dangerous errors which very early, even in the Apoſtles days, ſoli- 4. cited and infeſted the Church, there is no doubt; that impure deteſtable ſink of the Gnoſticks, and the ſeveral ſorts of hereticks which all joined together under that title; But then 'tis moſt evident, that the Governours of each Church, by the ſtrength of that depoſitum committed to them by the Apoſtles, uſed all care to ſecure their flocks from ſuch peſts as theſe, and were by Gods bleſſing ſucceſsful in it, noted, branded, expulſt theſe hereticks, and kept the Catholick Church intire from their corruptions.

And then as it is moſt incredible that thoſe Churches that cenſured theſe corruptions, ſhould be in- 5. fected with them, ſo nothing can be more unjuſt, as well as uncharitable and impious, than to affix that character on the Churches, which belonged only to the hereticks that diſturbed and were ejected out of thoſe Churches.

By this account the Apoſtolical Churches themſelves, whileſt the Apoſtles preſided in them, might 6. be blaſted alſo, for we know there was in their very time a myſtery of iniquity, πλάνοι deceivers and Impoſtors, Antichriſts, and falſe teachers good ſtore; but, as St. John ſaith of theſe, that they went out from us, ſeparated from the Churches, and ſo diſcovered that they were not of them; So it was alſo after the Apoſtles death, the hereticks and ſchiſmaticks infuſed not their corruptions into the Church, and ſo they cannot with truth be imputed to thoſe that were preſerved pure from them, the corruptions of the enemies of the Church, unto the Churches.

And however the Doctor have been accuſed ſometimes of complying with the Papiſts, I am confident 7. he never let any thing fall which yielded them ſo true and ſolid advantage, as this one affirmation of the Diatribiſt, that the corruptions, of which the Romiſh Religion is a bundle, are thoſe which crept into the Churches not long after the Apoſtles days: For what is that, but an agnition, that the moſt accuſed Romiſh practices now adays, are the ſame which were delivered to them from the Primitive Church. For my part I proteſt my diſſent (and ſo ſure doth the whole Church of England, and every true ſon thereof) to this concluſion.

SECT. VII.

The grounds why this Feaſt may not be aboliſht among us. The Diatribiſts miſtake of the queſtion.

MY ſecond inference now follows, that any ſuch ancient uſage of this particular Church, if it had Numb. 1. no other ground to ſtand on (as its foundation) or concurrence of all Chriſtian Churches (as Pillars) to ſuſtain it, were a very competent authority for the preſent continuance of ſuch a practice in the Church, and that upon this ſcore, becauſe the Anglicane Church being one of thoſe which by its foundation is αὐτοκέφαλος ſubject to no foreign Patriarch, is conſequently inveſted with unqueſtionable power to inſtitute Ceremonies for it ſelf, which conſequently may not without great temerity be changed or aboliſhed by any.

To this, becauſe I ſee there are ſome pages of objections inſerted by the Diatribiſt, before I read 2. them over, I deſire it may be adverted, wherein the force of my inference conſiſts, viz. in theſe three things, Firſt, That this particular Church of ours being firſt planted by ſome either Apoſtle or Apoſtolical perſon, was thereby conſtituted αὐτοκέφαλος of abſolute power within it ſelf, as that excludes ſubjection to any other foreign power.

Secondly, That in all probability this feaſt was ſet up, or celebrated here, by thoſe that firſt plan- 3. ted the faith among us, i. e. by ſome Apoſtle or Apoſtolical perſon, by Simon Zelotes, or by thoſe twelve which were ſent hither by Philip the Apoſtle, and Joſeph of Arimathea one of thoſe.

Thirdly, That what was by ſo good authority introduced, having no equal reaſon to ſuperſede it 4. (ſuch as was the contrary tradition of other Apoſtles in the buſineſs of Eaſter) may not without temerity now be aboliſhed by any; not by any other perſon or perſons, Pope, or Conſiſtory, becauſe no other hath power over a Church which is αὐτοκέφαλος founded by the Apoſtles, and not ſubjected by them to any; not by the Church it ſelf, which cannot now be ſuppoſed to have any ſuch perſons in it, as may be fit to compare with the firſt founders of it, at leaſt, not without ſome greater reaſon for the changing and aboliſhing, than they may appear to have had for the uſing of it.

Upon theſe grounds my inference being built, as is there apparent by the premiſſes, and the very ex- 5. preſſions cautiouſly uſed in ſetting it down, let us now ſee what the Diatribiſt hath to object; And firſt, that it is αὐτοκέφαλος by its foundation, he willingly grants, ſubordinate to no foreign Patriarch; I ſhall only demand whether it be ſubordinate to its own ſons, or to any but the legal Fathers of it? I hope it will be as reaſonable for me to to preſume it is not, as it was for the Diatribiſt to grant the former; for elſe M. C. a ſon of this Church, by diveſting the Pope of his authority, ſhall only have removed and veſted it in himſelf, and ſuch as he, tranſlated it from the Papacy to the Presbytery, which I hope he will not profeſs to do, leſt that be the very crime which was charged on our Biſhops, that they aſſumed to themſelves the Papal power, or the power of ordaining ceremonies, which ſure is no greater than that of aboliſhing them.

Having made this grant of the αὐτοκεφαλία of this Church, it is obſervable what he preſently inter- 6. poſeth, Yet, ſaith he, we juſtly queſtion whether it be inveſted with ſuch unqueſtionable power to inſtitute

what

what ceremonies it pleaſe, which may not upon good reaſons be changed and aboliſhed. In which very form of propoſing his queſtion or exception, 'tis viſible what change he hath thought fit to make in my inference, when I ſpake of the power of this Church to inſtitute ceremonies for it ſelf, I never affirmed of thoſe ceremonies once inſtituted that they might not upon good reaſons be changed and aboliſhed, for I doubt not but the ſame power which may on good reaſons inſtitute, may on good reaſons aboliſh alſo; But firſt I deſired to examine the preſent reaſons of abolition of this Feſtival, whether they were as important as thoſe whereon this Feſtival was ſuppoſed to be inſtituted, viz. that of the pious and thankful commemorating the birth of Chriſt; and withal Secondly, whether thoſe reaſons pretended for abolition, were not feigned reaſons, as thoſe taken from the heads of Will-worſhip, and Superſtition, have, I muſt hope, been evidenced to be: or again Thirdly, whether they might not otherwiſe be ſatisfied, as that of the riot (charged only as a conſequence accidental to the Feaſt) by care and exerciſe of diſcipline.

7. To which conſiderations may Fourthly, be farther added this reaſonable aphoriſm of Chriſtian policy, that what was thus brought in on ſuch grounds by the governers of a Church, ſuppoſing them but ſuch as are of an ordinary rank of governours, and not the Apoſtolical founders of the Church (to whom certainly more reſpect is due) may not be caſt out by ſons of the Church, or indeed by any other than the authority of the ſucceeding Governors.

8. And theſe few conſiderations I ſuppoſe, may competently evidence the unreaſonableneſs of this changing the terms of the queſtion, if not of his plea for the abolition of the Feſtival.

9. And therefore whereas, upon this occaſion, he enters into a large diſcourſe concerning the power of the Church to inſtitute ceremonies, I ſhall take take leave to paſs it over untoucht, it being certain that the two branches of the one propoſition, for which I contend, are no way concerned in any part of his ſtate of this queſtion, nor indeed any thing with the leaſt probability ſuggeſted againſt either, viz. Firſt, That a National Church planted by the Apoſtles or their ſucceſſors, may lawfully uſe a feſtival for the commemorating the birth of Chriſt, and on it pray to, and praiſe God in the ſolemn aſſembly, reach out the word and Sacraments, exhorting all good Chriſtians to partake thereof, and to lay aſide their ordinary labours, that they may be vacant for ſuch holy exerciſes; and Secondly, That when ſuch a pious uſage hath gained a reception, either from the time of the firſt planting of the faith among us, or however by immemorial cuſtom (all other Churches in the world for very many hundred years, and for ought we can diſcern, from the very Apoſtles practice, concurring with us) it ought not to be declaimed againſt, as Antichriſtian, or laid aſide, or covenanted againſt by this Diatribiſt or others, perſons not in but under authority, upon no weight of ſolid reaſons, but upon ſome cauſleſs ſuggeſtions, that it is criminous, under the head of Will-worſhip and Superſtition.

10. This was ſo plainly ſet down before, to be the whole matter in debate betwixt me and any gainſayers, that there was nothing left to the Diatribiſt, but briefly to point at the weak part, if there appeared to be any ſuch in either branch of this propoſition, and having nothing from him to this purpoſe, I ſhall now omit to take notice of the infirmities of which this diſcourſe of his is as full as from any writing of no greater length may well be expected, and haſten to his following Sections in hope of ſpringing ſomewhat more pertinent to our controverſy.

SECT. VIII.

The Reformation in this Kingdom. No imperfection in it in point of Feſtivals. The States joyning in it, no diſadvantage to the Church.

Numb. 1. MY Tenth Section proceeded to ſome few conſiderations, the adverting to which, might render this change or abolition of the Chriſtmaſs Feſtival more unreaſonable; As Firſt, That this obſervation was an undoubted part of that eſtabliſhment which the Reformation in this kingdom enacted for us, and that by act of Parliament, and not only by Church-Canon.

2. To this he anſwers two things, Firſt, That the Reformation was not ſo full as the Reformers themſelves could have wiſht; Never conſidering how far this is from being applicable to the point in hand, For I ſhall demand, Did all or any of the Reformers, to whoſe piety and temper we ow our eſtabliſhment, ever expreſs their wiſh that all Feſtivals, particularly this of Chriſtmaſs ſhould be aboliſhed? or did they not? If it ſhall be ſaid, they did, I then preſs that the Record may be produced, by which this hath been notified to the Diatribiſt; But if he confeſs they did not, or offer no proof, that they did, then what is it to this matter of feſtivities, wherein only our preſent debate is concerned, if in other things of a quite different nature, as that of bringing all notorious ſinners to penance every Lent, mentioned in the office for Aſhwedneſday, they wiſht, and expreſt their wiſh, that the Reformation were more perfect? The rule in law is ſeaſonable to be here applied, Exceptio firmat in non exceptis, Their expreſſing their wiſh that other things might be more perfect, gives us aſſurance, that they wiſht not any farther change in this particular of feſtivals, than that which they made in the Romiſh Calendar.

3. This anſwer therefore had little of advantage for him, and yet his only Reſerve is, that Secondly, this ſeems to grant that the Reformation was made by the State and not by the Church, which now is pleaded for.

4. And I pray what is that to the diſadvantage of the Church that the State joined with it in the Reformation, confirming and eſtabliſhing it by Act of Parliament? or Secondly, why is that the fitter to be aboliſhed which ſtands by Statute law, as well as by Eccleſiaſtical Canon, and Cuſtom immemorial? or Thirdly, how doth the Parliaments confirming the Liturgy, and therein the feſtivals, infer that this feſtival was not firſt introduced by the Church, when it is moſt evident that the Feſtival was in the Church long before that Act of Parliament?

5. Theſe indeed are all the anſwers we can have to an argument, which ſeemed to have been of ſome force with a friend of Parliaments or eſtabliſhed laws: and therefore we muſt content our ſelves with them

SECT.

SECT. IX.

The Lutheran Churches accord in this. Morney's wiſh. The Helvetian confeſſion. Rivets cuſtom of preaching on the day.

MY ſecond conſideration was, that this and other feaſts of Chriſt are retained in the reformed Lutheran Churches; and where they are taken away, wiſht for by ſober members, as Ph. Mornye Du Pleſſis, and approved by the confeſſions of thoſe Churches as the Helvetian, and in other places the day of Chriſtmas afforded the ſolemnity of a Sermon. Numb. 1.

To this he anſwers, that the Lutheran are not reputed the beſt reformed Churches, nor by the Doctor, he believes, thought fit to be compared with England, and ſo not fit precedents for our Reformation. 2.

But ſure he might have marked that the Lutheran Churches concurring with the Engliſh in this of Feſtivals, 'tis no way to the diſparaging of my argument, that I do not compare the Lutheran Churches with that of England; 'Tis certainly ſufficient if they and the Church of England together may be able to compare with all other reformed Churches which have caſt out all feſtivals as ſuperſtitious or Antichriſtian; And thus I ſhall, without much inſolence, adventure to make the compariſon. 3.

As for the little regard he is pleaſed to give to ſuch private perſons wiſhes, as that of Ph. Morney Du Pleſſis, I may reaſonably reply, that how faſtidiouſly ſoever he reject it, it may very well be allowed to keep the practice of the Church of France from being any example or precedent to us, when the prime members of their own Church have expreſt their diſlikes of it. 4.

And I pray, why was not the Helvetian confeſſion worth his taking notice of? that was no bare wiſh of a private man, but the approbation of a Church, which Mr. Calvin thought fit to write to for their judgment and ſuffrage to his new erected model at Geneva. 5.

As for the paſſage of giving Sermons to Chriſtmas day, I ſee it is miſtaken by him, and applied to, as ſpoken of himſelf and ſuch as he in their former practices, and upon that miſpriſion it is, that he is ſo much concerned to have their prayers as good and as large as the Liturgies, (by the way, if they be not much better, and ſure always to be ſo, why muſt the Liturgy be aboliſhed?) whereas all this while I never thought of him, or ſuch as he, which it ſeems, kept fair with Chriſtmas (from whence I am in charity to believe, they thought it not Superſtition) till they had an advantage of ejecting it, and then made all ſpeed to cloſe with the opportunity; but of ſome other preachers in other Churches, where this Feſtival was not obſerved, ſuch as Andrew Rivet in the Low Countries, who, as I have been informed, conſtantly preacht on that day to his auditors, which was a civility fit to be mentioned to thoſe that will now perform that office on any day of the week, rather than on that. 6.

SECT. X.

Ejecting Feſtivals. Separation from the pureſt times, even thoſe of the Apoſtles. Our Churches departure from Rome, unjuſtly parallel'd with the departure of ſons from our Church.

MY third conſideration was, that the raſing this Feſtivity out of the Calendar is an act of ſeparation from the Church of England, and the univerſal Church of all ages, eſpecially of the firſt and pureſt times. Numb. 1.

To this he anſwers by denyal of both parts, Not the latter, having proved, as he ſaith, that the firſt and pureſt ages of the Church did not obſerve it, Not the former, unleſs I yield that the Reformation of the Church of England was a diviſion and ſeparation from the Church of Rome, or the reformation in Luthers time a ſeparation from the Catholick Church, as Papiſts ſay it was. 2.

But for the former of theſe, it is ſufficient to reply by way of demand, where it is that he hath ſo proved this of the firſt and pureſt ages not obſerving feſtivals, that he can affirm it certain that this of diſuſing or laying them down is not ſeparation from the Church of thoſe ages? Truly my eyes or my memory very much fail me, or he hath not as yet proved it in any degree, much leſs ſo demonſtrated it, that a Corollary deduced from thence, and depending on that probation, ſhould deſerve to be pronounced certain. 3.

Nay ſure there hath yet been no occaſion offered him (at leaſt made uſe of by him) to attempt ſo impoſſible a thing, as is ſuch a negative probation. Of this I am ſure, that for this Feſtival and that other of Eaſter the reaſon muſt be the ſame, and I have already made it as clear as the day, that that was obſerved by the Apoſtles of Chriſt, by Philip and John on the Jewiſh day, and by Peter and Paul on the annual Dominical; And if through the dimneſs or want of ſtories of thoſe times, this be not ſo evident of this particular Feaſt of Chriſtmaſs, yet the analogy holding directly betwixt the one and the other, the argument remains as firm, that the laying aſide either this or that feſtival, is a ſeparation from the Apoſtolick, and thoſe ſure are the firſt and pureſt times. 4.

Beſides, I have as clearly ſhewed, that the ſolemnities and feſtivities commemorative of the Martyrdom of Ignatius and Polycarp, two Biſhops that lived in the Apoſtles times, were obſerved from the very times of their deaths, and that in compliance with other the like feſtivals of the Church before them, which muſt needs come home to the obſervation of feſtivals in the Apoſtles days. 5.

And then how can this Diatribiſt flatter himſelf, that he hath proved the contrary to this, when he hath not ſo much as offered either the leaſt anſwer to theſe, or any the leaſt reaſon or proof of his negation? 6.

For the latter, I reply, that there is no analogie betwixt the Church of Englands departing from Rome, and the Diatribiſts departing from the Church of England; I might inſtance in many, 'twill be ſufficient 7.

ſufficient that I ſhew it in two particulars, Firſt, The Church of England in the Reformation departed not from their lawful ſuperiours, being, as the Diatribiſt acknowledges, ἀντοκέφαλον, and owing no ſubordination to the Church of Rome, when ſhe departed from her, whereas the perſons then ſpoken of by me, and the Diatribiſt for one, were certainly members that ought a Chriſtian obedience to the Church of England, as inferiours to ſuperiours, and ſo departed from their lawful ſuperiours, wherein Schiſm doth principally conſiſt, as hath elſewhere been ſhewn.

8. Thoſe things wherein the Church of England reformed, and departed from the Romiſh opinions and practices, were none of them ſuch as this of feſtivals now appears to be, i. e. common uſages of the Univerſal, ancient, eſpecially of the Primitive pureſt Church, but innovations unduly brought in by them, and impoſed on all Chriſtians.

9. And as even now, ſo again this Diatribiſts confeſſion here, is more to the advantage of the Romiſh Church, than any thing that he could likely have ſaid, no way clearing his fact from Schiſm, nor offering the leaſt colour to it, and yet acknowledging that the Church of Englands reformation, and ſo Luthers reformation alſo, was as truly an act of Schiſm from Rome, as is theirs from the Church of England. But I muſt put in my proteſtation of diſſent to this propoſition alſo, and that is all I need to ſay to that anſwer.

SECT. XI.

The profaneneſs objected to the Feſtival. Caſting out the Creeds.

Numb. 1. HIS anſwer to the fourth conſideration is ſo ſlight, and therein ſo little on which to faſten any reply, that I may ſafely intruſt the Reader with it, and only mind the Diatribiſt, Firſt, That till he hath more ſolidly proved the obſervation of this Feſtival among us to be ſuperſtition, than hitherto he hath done, 'twill be great uncharitableneſs thus to accuſe it, and greater injuſtice to deſtroy the innocent for this (if it were true, yet but) accidental and removable crime imagined to be adherent to it.

2. And ſecondly till he hath written as full a tract of profaneneſs, as he hath done of Superſtition, and been more ſucceſsful in his evidences that this Feſtival is guilty of it, ſhewed that that is derived from ſuper ſtatutum alſo, or evinced the ſame thing by ſome more ſenſible way of probation, 'tis but a pitiful begging of the queſtion, thus irrationally to accumulate crimes on innocency, to add the Profaneneſs to the Superſtition, to ſuppoſe the Feſtival able to work miracles, to reconcile the moſt contrary extremes (as if in the vein of declaiming, he ſhould call the ſame man firſt Papiſt, then Socinian) for ſuch he knows are Superſtition and Profaneneſs.

3. Inſtead of which, it were much more ſeaſonable for him ſadly to inquire, which is moſt liable to the charge of profaneneſs, the ſetting apart a feſtival from common uſes to the commemorating the birth of Chriſt in Prayer, Praiſes, Euchariſt, hearing the word read and preached, and profiting by all theſe; or the faſtidious refuſing to join with the Church of God in all or any of theſe offices at that time, following the Plough, or attending the Shop inſtead of it.

4. And I ſhall with the ſame ſeriouſneſs deſire him to review his words, p. 147. Where in anſwer to my mention of diſuſing the Creeds and Catechiſm, he ſaith, in a parentheſis, that the Creed is ſtill to be retained in and with the Catechiſm] and demand whether he doth not know, that the ſame Tempeſt that carried away the Feſtivals, ſwept away (more than one) the three Creeds received from the ancient Church and retained in our Liturgie, and together with them the Church Catechiſm, of which, he knows, I ſpake?

5. And then what truth can be in his parentheſis, unleſs it be only this, that theſe are ſtill retained in our Books (which they have joined to condemn) though they be not retained in their offices, but ſolemnly ejected by them? Such equivocal anſwers or reſponſes as theſe, he knows from what oracles they were wont to be delivered, and therefore ſhould not be imitated.

SECT. XII.

The Diatribiſts change of my words, his cauſleſs practiſe of himſelf, and cenſure of others.

Numb. 1. HIS fourteenth Section is ſomewhat of the ſame making, for when I ſpake of that deeper knowledge of ſome, which was ſome degree above the vulgar ignorance, and yet was obſervable to be impatient of ſound doctrine, to be ready to imbrace any thing that was novel, and contrary to the ancient Faith and Principles] he anſwers, that the impatience of ſound doctrine, and readineſs to imbrace any thing that is novel, is not to be found in thoſe of deep or ſound knowledge.

2. But why ſhould he there inſert the word [ſound] can he imagine that I ſpake of thoſe of ſound knowledge, when I ſpake of impatience of ſound doctrine? 'Twas viſible enough that I ſpake of thoſe, which while they leſs ſeemed to want ſuch helps as Chriſtmaſs ſervices and ſermons to teach them the ſound doctrine of Chriſt, did yet moſt really need them to cure the vanity of their own minds, and their itch of any thing that was novel.

3. By this 'tis alſo manifeſt, how little temptation he had to break out into thoſe Eulogies of himſelf and his friends, to which certainly I never conſtrained him by thoſe words that belonged not to the Paſtors, but only to their auditors, who when they have attained to ſome meaſure of knowledge above the more ignorant, are yet experimented to be very fickle and apt to fall off into new doctrines.

4. However, let him not flatter himſelf as he doth, that thoſe that ejected theſe Feſtivities under pretence of Reforming abuſes of ſuperſtition and profaneneſs, are the men only or chiefly that propugn and maintain maintain ſound doctrine, when, as he goes on very glibly, thoſe that were the greateſt favourers of thoſe Feſtivals, are fallen into Arminianiſm, &c. or do little appear to maintain the truth.

I wonder what a Phariſee could have ſaid more in his ſolemneſt Magnificat; He, forſooth, and ſuch 5.
as he, are the men that only or chiefly propugn and maintain ſound doctrine, and who can doubt it, when he hath thus affirmed it of himſelf? and all others are but as this Publicane, for ſo this new ſtyle of Arminian bears proportion with that antient; and whoſoever will not think as this Diatribiſt doth, that Feſtivals are forbidden in the ſecond and the fourth Commandments, that will favour ſlaviſh fear, or mercenary obedience, or ſuſpect that grace may be received in vain, muſt preſently fall under that condemnation; and then, the beſt that can be ſaid of them is, that they do little appear to maintain the truth.

SECT. XIII.

His ſecond change of my words. Gedeons golden Ephod not appliable to Feaſts.

SO again when I had mentioned the deſigns of this ſolemnity, no other than to teach us what we Numb. 1.
have received in Chriſt, and aſſiſt us to render God a pious publick acknowledgment of it, He is pleaſed not to underſtand this, but to interpret it (contrary to the expreſs words) of the deſign in the firſt inſtituters of this piece of ſervice to Chriſt Jeſus.

And to what purpoſe was this change? why, to make the example of Gedeon's golden Ephod appli- 2.
cable to it, in the making of which, ſaith he, though Gedeon's deſign was very fair, to leave a monument of his victory, yet it proved a ſnare to him and his houſe and all Iſrael.

From which notable example, no doubt, it follows that every Feſtival, or what ever elſe is deſigned 3.
as a publick pious acknowledgment of the Chriſtians thankfulneſs to God, is to be lookt on as a ſnare to all the people of God, and ſo upon all reaſons of piety, to be aboliſhed.

And there were no way of reſiſting this concluſion thus inferred, if our common notions, or Logick 4.
had not warned us, that particular premiſes would never induce a concluſion, and that examples are not always argumentative, For then indeed the Lords day which is ſuppoſed to have been deſigned for all theſe good ends, muſt upon the ſame account be aboliſht alſo.

SECT. XIV.

Strictures on his ſixteenth Section. Our Feſtivals unfitly compared with the Romiſh. How obſervation of Feſtivals may be a duty of the fifth Commandment. The fourth Commandment no way contrary to Chriſtian Feſtivals. Venial ſins. All miſtakes not ſins. Chemnitius not producible againſt me.

HIS ſixteenth Section is long, in making good his charge of Superſtition and Will-worſhip againſt Numb. 1.
this Feſtival, And it is certain that I have been large enough on theſe ſubjects already, as far as any thing that he could ſuggeſt, appeared to have the leaſt force either againſt ceremonies in general, or particularly this of Feſtivals, and therefore I ſhall not ſtill bind my ſelf and the Reader to that ungrateful penance of drawing the ſame Saw for ever, Yet if any thing ſhall now be afreſh objected, I ſhall not omit to take notice of it.

As firſt, When to free it from all appearance of Will-worſhip, I ſay that thoſe that retain the uſage, 2.
obſerve it in obedience to the Laws of the Church, he hath great diſpleaſure to this, Firſt, Becauſe I ought firſt to have proved that they which inſtituted that Feſtival had a Lawful power to do it, adding, that the Papiſts may uſe the ſame argument for obſervation not only of their Holy days, but of their invocation of Saints, adoration of images, and the Maſs it ſelf.

But to this I anſwer, Firſt, That my not proving of this, was founded in my ſuppoſing it. And the 3.
reaſon of that ſuppoſition elſewhere competently explained, that as Magiſtrates in general, ſo particularly the Governours of a Church have an inveſtiture of power from Chriſt to the Apoſtles, whoſe ſucceſſors they are, to ordain and inſtitute ſuch circumſtances of the publick worſhip of God, as are times and place and geſture and the like, in order to decency, uniformity, and the benefit of their Churches.

And ſecondly, That this Diatribiſt can again think fit to compare this, with the Papiſts obſerving 4.
their own holy days, &c. is interpretable as a far greater kindneſs to them, than I have ever been guilty of; For the plain inference is this, Firſt, The Church may command in lawful things, therefore it may as well do ſo in unlawful. Secondly, There is no more unreaſonableneſs in beſainting all thoſe that are gotten into the Romiſh Legend and Calendar, and conſecrating ſeveral days to the commemorating of them, than in commemorating the birth of Chriſt himſelf. Thirdly, It is as lawful to invoke all the Romiſh Saints, as publickly to pray to and praiſe Chriſt on the 25th day of December. Fourthly, It is as ſafe to adore images, and the very bread in the Maſs, as to adore and commemorate Chriſt on that day. What could paſſion, or intereſt, or ἀμετεία ἀνθολικῆς, or τὸ δυλεύφ ὑποθέσιν, have ſuggeſted more unadviſedly than this?

His ſecond diſlike and exception is, that having formerly founded times or days deſigned to publick wor- 5.
ſhip, on the equity of the fourth Commandment, I ſhould now devolve the obſervation of this feſtival to obedience to the laws of the Church, and ſo reduce it as a duty to the fifth Commandment, and upon this, as an eſpecial advantage, he is pleaſed to expatiate.

But the matter is clear enough, and was ſo, till he had taken pains to involve it. The difference is 6.
very conceivable and intelligible betwixt time or times for Gods ſervice generally conſidered, and this or that particular time. That God ſhould have ſome times aſſigned for his ſervice is of the very law of Nature, and ſo much of morality there is fundamental to the poſitive precept of the weekly Sabbath in the fourth Commandment: Nay farther, the fourth Commandment being given to the Jews for the obſervin g one day in ſeven, as a fit and moderate proportion of time to be required of every Jew, it might equitably be inferred, that a Chriſtian ſhould at leaſt ſet a part one day in ſeven for our great Chriſtan purpoſes, the firſt day of the week on which Chriſt roſe from the dead. And accordingly I ſuppoſe it inſtituted by the Apoſtles of Chriſt.

7. But then as among the Jews beſide the weekly ſabbath required by the fourth Commandment, they had many other times of feſtivity, and faſting, ſome appointed by God himſelf in the time of the Θεοκρατία, others inſtituted by men, and yet conſtantly obſerved by Gods people and accepted by God, and ſome approved by Chriſt himſelf, and all this without any prejudice to the fourth Commandment, though not by any force of that; ſo now ſtill under the Goſpel nothing hinders, but that the Church of God, by the power left to, and depoſited with them, may ordain Chriſtian feaſts, and faſts, and obedience be paid thereto by all dutiful meek ſons of the Church, and this obedience be in them that are thus under authority, no act of Will-worſhip or ſpontaneity, but of honour and obſervance to this ordinance of the Church, and ſo a duty of the fifth Commandment.

8. As for that which he adds in this matter, that we Chriſtians are by Chriſt reduced to the fourth Commandment, as for one day of ſeven to be holy, ſo for our allowance of ſix daies for our own works, Firſt, It hath not the leaſt appearance of truth in it, for where did Chriſt reduce us to the fourth Commandment? and tis viſible what the conſequence muſt be in affirming it, even an obligation to the Jewiſh Sabbath, for that certainly was the ſubject of the fourth Commandment.

9. Secondly, It is no way pertinent to the matter in hand; for ſuppoſing Chriſtians allowed ſix daies for their own works, tis yet viſible that ſome of theſe ſix may by the free act of particular men be uſed, or by the power of the Chriſtian Church be ſet apart to Chriſtian uſes, as well as ſome days were (not only by God himſelf, but) by the Governors of the Jews, Judas Maccabeus, and others, ſet apart for the publick ſervice of God in the old Teſtament, at which time 'tis by all confeſt that the fourth Commandment was in force, in all parts of it.

10. A ſecond exception I ſhall note in this Section p. 157. when upon theſe words of mine concerning the poſſible miſtake of the day, that that will be pardonable in thoſe that verily think they are not miſtaken, and that in them that do perform the buſineſs of the day as compleatly on a miſtaken day as on the true, the excuſe of blameleſs ignorance will waſh away greater errors than this,] he preſently replies, Does not this ſound ſomewhat like the Papiſts doctrine of venial ſins? and upon that occaſion is put in mind of Bellarmines defence againſt the peril of Idolatry in the Maſs, in caſe the bread be not tranſubſtantiated: And then he asks, Can any ignorance be blameleſs againſt the Law of God, or waſh away any error without the blood of Chriſt?

11. But to this the anſwer is obvious, and the fallacy preſently diſcoverable, For Firſt, He that talks of venial or pardonable ſins, muſt not be preſumed to exclude the blood of Chriſt; thoſe ſins are pardonable under the Goſpel, for which that λύτρον was paid, and ſuch are all ſins that are reconcileable with true repentance, or the ſincerity of a regenerate ſtate.

12. But then Secondly, I am no way aſſured that it is a ſin ſo much as of ignorance, to miſtake in the day of Chriſts birth; every miſtake is not a ſin, but only that which is a breach of ſome law, and therefore I ſuppoſe it is, that the Diatribiſt was compelled to ſay, Can any ignorance be blameleſs againſt a law of God? But then I profeſs not to know any law of God, againſt which it is a ſin (though but of ignorance) to miſtake that day for the annual day of Chriſts birth, which really is not the day.

13. And I now deſire to be informed, of which of the ten Commandments, or any other law of Gods in the Old or New Teſtament, this is a breach. When he tells me this, I ſhall attend him more diligently to the remainder of this Section, and anſwer his inſtance of ſo weighty conſideration about the very day of the Jews paſſover, of which he acknowledges that the very day was as ſtrictly commanded as the buſineſs it ſelf, and ſo the error muſt be an error againſt a law, whereas he as certainly knows, that this day of Chriſts birth is by none ſo much as pretended to be ſo commanded.

14. What remains concerning Chemnitius's charge of Superſtition, on Papiſts obſervation of their holy days, is all anſwered before it be produced, by this one conſideration, that Chemnitius, as a Lutheran, is by the Diatribiſt confeſt to allow this and other Feſtivals; For then hath he granted all that I contend for, who undertook not to be advocate for the Legend or Calendar of the Papiſts.

SECT. XV.

Of riot. Chriſtian joyes no way contrary to our Feſtivals. Riot as ſeparable from Chriſtmas as the Lords day. Heathen cuſtoms cannot be objected. Gods judgments vainly urged for arguments. The charge of want of hoſpitality on thoſe that retain feſtivities. The hoſpitality at Chriſtmas a pledge of it all the year after. Reformation of exceſs, without abolition of the Feſtival. Attempt to reform, previous to abolition. The Agapæ no example for aboliſhing Feſtivals. Cures for diſeaſes; exciſions only for deſperate ſpreading evils. No cards on Chriſtmas day, as much ſtrictneſs on Chriſtmaſs, not more ſacredneſs than on the Lords day. No deſign of making the Lords day no inſtitution of the Apoſtles. Neither Superſtition nor hypocriſy in abſtaining from Cards on Chriſtmas day.

Numb. 1. WHAT now follows in the Seventeenth Section and ſo on to the 27. is all to the head of Riot, which I was careful to remove from this Feſtivity, And firſt having diſclaimed it as more intolerable in a Chriſtian than in a Jew, and that upon this account, that Spiritual joyes are his eminent if not only portion under promiſe, His anſwer is, that theſe are not limited to one or twelve days in a year, but are daily joyes, every day is a Chriſtmaſs to a godly heart, Rejoyce in the Lord always, &c.

2. But he that thus anſwered, could not but know, that the weekly Lords day is ſet apart for a Chriſtian Feaſt dedicated particularly to theſe Spiritual joyes; and that this was very reconcileable with the text that ſaid once and again, Rejoyce always, and how then can this be oppoſed to any annual Feſtival?

Beſides,

Beſides, all that I had to ſay, was, that the Chriſtian joys ſhould principally be Spiritual, and this 3.
not as a proof of the lawfulneſs of Feſtivals, but of the unlawfulnſs of riots, and the Diatribiſts anſwer is wholly to that other head, to which that was never deſigned as a medium.

To which I might thirdly add, that that text to the Philippians is an exhortation to rejoycing in tri- 4.
bulations, in the ſaddeſt as well as the cheerfulleſt ſeaſons, and ſo the always is to be limited by the context; And then the application of it here, was ſtill ſo much leſs pertinent.

In the Second place, my eighteenth Section being deſigned to ſhew how ſeparable all riot was from 5.
this Feſtival, by the nature of Chriſtian dainties, inſtruction, prayer, praiſes, alms, and the Sacrament of the Lords Supper (none of which were capable of luxury) and Feſtivity and Hoſpitality, which were clearly ſeparable from it; His anſwer is, Firſt, that theſe two laſt are thus ſeparable from riot, but very hardly; And I ſhall only demand, Are the leaſure and ceſſation from buſineſs on the Lords day, experimented to be more eaſily ſeparable from it? Is it more ordinary for the ſame men to be drunk upon Chriſtmas day, than upon all, or upon any one Sunday in the year? And have not preachers and magiſtrates been as induſtrious to caſt out this profane Spirit on the Lords day, and been as unſucceſsful in their indeavours? And ſhall this be any argument for the abolition of that day?

Next, ſaith he, the heathen uſages in it (almoſt yielded Section 2.) as they imply that the feſtival 6.
was inſtituted to gratify the heathen, ſo God to ſhew his diſlike of them, hath ſuffered them to be attended with two extreams of true worſhip, ſuperſtition and profaneneſs. But to this I ſay, firſt, that the heathen uſages were no way yielded Section 2. but only an argument uſed ad homines that ſo affirmed. Secondly, If there were heathen uſages in it, thoſe would no way imply the Feſtival to have been inſtituted to gratify the heathens; It was inſtituted to the honour of Chriſt, and the heathens were far enough from being gratified with that, and 'tis ſufficient if the converted heathens, among whom it was inſtituted by their converters, did of themſelves aſſume ſome of their Gentile cuſtoms by them thought innocent in the celebration.

Thirdly, 'Tis great preſumption and intruſion into Gods ſecreteſt Counſels, to ſay that Gods ſuffering 7.
this Feſtival to be attended with ſuperſtition or profaneneſs, was to ſhew his diſlike if not deteſtation of it; For who revealed this counſel of Gods to this Diatribiſt? Beſides, how eaſily might this argument be retorted on the Lords day by a Jew, and all the riot and unprofitableneſs of hearers on that day, be made an evidence of Gods diſlike, if not deteſtation of the ſetting apart of this day to his ſervice? What impiety of any Sect would want arguments to ſupport it, if ſuch as theſe might be admitted? Nay, laſtly, the matter of the preſent debate being only that of riot, what had ſuperſtition or profaneneſs (either or both) to do with that?

His ninteenth Section is the accuſing thoſe who keep up and cry up the cuſtom of the feſtivity, yet have 8.
taken liberty to lay aſide hoſpitality and charity not only at the time, but all the year long. To which it is ſufficient to anſwer, that then it ſeems, their hoſpitality is not the occaſion of riot to any, and that is a competent means of vindicating the feſtivity ſo far from that part of the accuſation, which now we have before us.

But then Secondly, It were perhaps worth examining, what degree of truth there is in the ſuggeſtion, 9.
and in what inſtances it is founded; ſomething like this, he had once ſuggeſted before, and I had then thought that it was not worthy taking notice of; But now the returning of it again more ſolemnly, makes me ſuſpect there may be ſomewhat in it; And having no other clue to introduce me into his ſecrets, and the charity and hoſpitality of thoſe that have caſt off the feſtivals, and with it their obedience to the Church, beyond thoſe that have retained both, having never been ſo notorious, that I could take cognizance of it, and the writing a Diatribe againſt all free-will oblations in a Chriſtian being no vehement indication that thoſe in whoſe defence it was written, were very eminent in the exerciſe of thoſe virtues, I began to pitch upon one thing that might of late have yielded ſome ſhew of truth to his obſervation, viz. that the condition of many mens worldly plenty hath been ſo changed of late, that the men have been forced to abate ſomewhat of the degree of that charity and hoſpitality that formerly they had both ability and will to exerciſe, and that theſe fall out to be the men that retain obedience to the Church of England, and ſo keep up and cry up the feſtivals of the Church, though they are not able to keep up the good cheer of it in that degree, which formerly they have done.

And if the Diatribiſt was willing to take notice of this turn of the tyde, and being himſelf one 10.
of the proſperous party, that had caſt off obedience and feſtivals, but retained hoſpitality and charity, was willing to compare himſelf with others who being deprived of all their revenues, were not likely to hold up their hoſpitality, then ſure this is a way of anſwer which might ſoon be retorted, if juſtice were allowed to take place, and every man were re-inveſted in his own again.

In the mean, thoſe that are deprived of ability, to be charitable on one ſide, as to be occaſions of 11.
riot on the other, if they muſt be reproacht for their defects in one, ſhould not in reaſon be accuſed for exceſs in the other: And that is all I ſhall reply to this anſwer.

Unleſs to the ſecond part of it I reply in a word, that the hoſpitality attendant on this Feſtival, 12.
was never by me defined or imagined, and is with no juſtice by him ſuppoſed to be a miſers feaſt, nor know I any the leaſt neceſſity that it ſhould be followed with a neglect of charity all the year after, but rather that it be lookt on as a copy which the whole life of a Chriſtian is to tranſcribe from this manner of ſolemnizing the birth of Chriſt, as a firſt-fruits of this duty then paid, as a pledge of the future harveſt, as a ſolemn entrance on that duty then, which in ſome degree is to be exerciſed all the year after.

In this twentieth Section, having in the firſt part of it deſired no more of me, than that in caſe of 13.
notorious abuſe I will believe there is place and ſeaſon for reformation (which I moſt willingly yield, being, as he knows, as inclinable and deſirous as he or any man, that all exceſſes ſhould be reformed, and never indured among Chriſtians, of all other men in the world) his concluſion hath very fairly taken in one term more than was in the premiſſes, and to reformation of exceſs, annexed of the Feſtivity it ſelf, meaning evidently, according to the modern ſtyle, abolition by reformation; For elſe, after all his dexterities, it will not do his buſineſs.

For that all exceſs ſhould be aboliſhed, that the Feſtivity ſhould be drained from all ſuch unchriſtian 14.
mixtures, and reformed in that meeker ſenſe, was viſibly the deſign of the Section to which this of his

was

was confronted; And that, it ſeems, will not ſerve the turn; but as if reformation were never reformation, unleſs like the breaking in of the Ocean, it ſweep and carry away all before it, as if our Dictionaries were to be changed, and that word were to be gloſſed by nothing but vaſtation and depopulation, all that I had ſaid of reformation of exceſſes ſignifies nothing with him, unleſs the Feſtivity it ſelf be reformed alſo, and that juſt as Epiſcopacy was to be reformed, by being turned out of the Church.

15. And all the reaſon which is offered for this (viz. becauſe the Feſtivity hath ordinarily been attended with ſuch miſchiefs without the leaſt attempt of reformation) if it have any the leaſt truth in it, is viſibly a reaſon for the contrary; For is it not madneſs to deſtroy the vineyard, before any the leaſt attempt hath been made to dreſs or manure it, to cut down the tree before ever it was once digged about? were it reconcileable with any tolerable ſobriety, to aboliſh the Lords day upon any, much more upon ſuch an account as this of riot and drunkenneſs ordinarily attending it, without ever giving the offender the firſt or ſecond admonition, without ever attempting to reform it? Certainly the rules of ſober diſcipline are directly the contrary, to attempt and diligently indeavour the reformation of the exceſs, and never to proceed to ſeverer remedies, till the evil is experimented to be not only obſtinate but deſperate, and yet then too, to divide betwixt the nocent and guiltleſs, and not involve both in the ſame condemnation; And arguments muſt ſure be very ſcanty, when thoſe come to be uſed for the affirmative, which were proper only for the negative; And yet thus is it at this time with the Diatribiſt.

16. But his twenty firſt Section offers us an example of this deſtructive, exterminative reformation, S^t Paul's diſcipline on the feaſts of charity by way of deſtruction and abolition, when they began to be abuſed to ſurfeiting and drunkenneſs, 1 Cor. 11. 17. But herein are good ſtore of miſtakes; For firſt, If that place to the Corinths be examined, it is moſt evident that it was the Lords Supper, into which that exceſs was crept, and accordingly, as he tells them, v. 20. that this is not to eat the Lords Supper, ſo for the reforming of what was amiſs, he tells them what the inſtitution of Chriſt was in it, and there expreſly ſets down the firſt inſtitution of the Lords Supper, In the night he was betrayed he took bread, v. 24. &c. And then I muſt demand, did St. Paul deſtroy and aboliſh this feaſt wherein theſe abuſes were obſerved? if he did, he aboliſht the Lords Supper, and then here is indeed an inſtance home to his purpoſe: But if he did not, why did the Diatribiſt tender us this inſtance, when he knows that drunkenneſs and moſt unworthy behaviour at the Sacrament, never ſuggeſted to the Apoſtle the leaſt thought of aboliſhing or diſuſing the Sacrament.

17. But then ſecondly, To grant him the utmoſt that he can wiſh in this matter, viz. that there were two parts of this δεῖπνον κυριακὸν, Lords Supper, one in taking a morſel of bread, and taſting the wine, in commemoration of Chriſt's body and blood, another in eating and drinking together more liberally, after the former was done, and that this latter is it, which is meant by Agapæ in St. Jude, and that this latter was taken away out of the Church, upon the too common unreformable abuſes of it; yet ſtill this is nothing of advantage to the Diatribiſt; For ſtill this will but conclude, that the carnal external part of the Feſtivity, the eating and drinking part, ſhould fall under this diſcipline, not the Spiritual more Chriſtian part, and 'tis evident one of theſe is as ſeparable from the other, as the Sacrament from the Agapæ.

18. And thus much was willingly yielded to his hands in that Section to which his inſtance of the Love-feaſts was oppoſed, and 'tis certain no more can rationally, by any analogie, be concluded from it.

19. Nay thirdly, It was not poſſible any inſtance could have been brought more fitted for my turn (and ſo I hope, not for his) than this of the Agapæ. For when this diſorder at Corinth had brought this attendant on the Chriſtian feſtival, under ſome cenſure, it was thus reformed, (as appears in Juſtine Martyrs Apologie, where he ſets down the whole courſe of the office.) The offerings were not leſſened by this means, but otherwiſe diſpoſed of, and that which was not eaten at the Lords Table, was kept in a common bank for the poor, the Stranger, the Fatherleſs and Widow, and a very competent proviſion was made for all by this means.

20. And ſo truly in like manner, if upon a juſt inquiry it be found that the Chriſtmaſs liberality and hoſpitality ſtill ends in riot, and that there is no hope of reſtrain to be laid upon it, as it runs in that channel, It is moſt obvious and eaſie for every ſober Chriſtian to turn the ſtream another way, to lay aſide for relief of the poor, that which was uſually laid out in the extraordinary entertainments at this time, and as that is the utmoſt, to which the ſeverity uſed on the Agapæ can extend, or ſuggeſt, ſo it is the very thing which was propoſed Section twenty, but it ſeems cannot yet ſatisfie this Diatribiſt.

21. What in the twenty ſecond Section he cenſures in me as pretty untempered mortar, will not, I believe, be found ſo, in any ſober judging. 'Tis only this, that though the eating and ſporting part of this feſtivity be ſtrictly to be kept within bounds, and as ſtrictly to be reformed wherein it hath been diſcerned to exceed (this had been ſet down before, and was now ſuppoſed) yet for abolition of all hoſpitality and recreation, or ἄνεσις remiſſion (as Nazianzen ſtyles it) at theſe times, it was to be looke on as a laſt remedy, and ſo not proceeded to, till the diſeaſe were univerſally ſpreading and obſtinate againſt all cure, for whileſt it were lower than ſo, it was ſtill but the ſeaſon of reformation.

22. From whence that the Diatribiſt ſhould think fit to infer it my ſenſe (that he might accuſe me) that leſs or leſs general abuſes need no reformation, there can be no tolerable account rendred, but only this, that his ears have been ſo accuſtomed to the new dialect, that of exterminative reformations, that he cannot think the word ſignifies any thing elſe, by whomſoever it is uſed, but (that which indeed it never ſignifies in any propriety of ſpeech) extirpation and abolition. In a word, I think there is no neceſſity of exciſion, till the part begin to gangrene or corrupt and ſpread, yet I can admit of medicines long before, and heartily adviſe timely prudent applications, as ſoon as ever the patient begins in the leaſt meaſure to be diſtempered.

23. His twenty third Section is the accuſing of thoſe that uſed cards on the Lords day after the evening ſervice, and the upbraiding their ſuperſtition that they will not touch cards or dice on Chriſtmas day; and the anſwer is ſufficient, that as I ſpake not a word of them that did thus, ſo I never heard of any that thus made a difference betwixt Chriſtmaſs day and the Lords day, but that if they uſed that liberty on the the latter, they uſed it on the former too; However if by the Diatribiſt it were deemed criminous in the one, I ſhould have hoped he might have been gratified by hearing it was abſtained from in the other: For my own part I never allowed my ſelf the liberty on either, and know not that I ever ſaw it uſed, and therefore I am ſure there is nothing farther to be replied to by me in that Section. I as heartily wiſh a devout, conſcientious, profitable obſervation of the Lords day, as of any other Feſtivity, and cannot juſtly fall under the Diatribiſts cenſure for any thing I have ſo much as intimated in this matter.

And this I ſay the rather, becauſe Section 24. this is charged upon my doctrine as a crime, and a 24.
part of ſuperſtition, that the day hath been accounted more ſacred than the Lords day, and the proof brought out of my twentieth Section, where ſaith he, I call it moſt ſacred, and out of my twenty fourth Section, where I ſay it hath been kept if not much more, yet certainly as ſtrictly as any Lords day in the year.

But here is miſpriſion in each of theſe; The phraſe moſt ſacred Section 20. doth not at all belong 25.
to the day, (much leſs to the preferring it before the Lords day in reſpect of ſacredneſs) but only to a Chriſtian Feſtivity, as that is made up of prayer, praiſes, Euchariſt, charity, hoſpitality, &c. All which being put together, I hope I could not offend in ſtyling it moſt ſacred, ſuch as the extravagant, irrational riots of men ought not to aſſault and pollute.

And for the ſecond, there is no ſuch word as ſacred to be found in that twenty fourth Section, all 26.
that is ſaid is, that in this nation the day of the birth of Chriſt hath been kept (if not much more) certainly as ſtrictly as any Lords day in the year, and this interpreted moſt clearly by the following words) in frequenting the ſervices of the Church, in the uſe of the Liturgie, Sermon, Sacraments, &c. And I cannot imagine how this manner of ſtrict obſerving of it, can be criminous in it ſelf, or to the prejudice of the Lords day, on which 'tis no news to ſay that the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, which I make an ingredient in the ſtrictneſs of the celebration, and that which denominates it more ſtrict, is not conſtantly celebrated; and yet ſure no fault, that it is conſtantly celebrated on Chriſtmaſs day.

However the ſtrictneſs of obſerving is one thing, and the ſacredneſs is another; Any private faſt 27.
may be more ſtrictly obſerved, more, or more ſevere ſtrictneſs of duty allotted to it, than to the Lords day, and yet the Lords day, as ſet apart by the Apoſtles of Chriſt, in reſpect of that inſtitution, and of the reſurrection of Chriſt, to the commemorating whereof it was conſecrated, be eſteemed and lookt on as moſt ſacred. I need to ſay no more of that.

As for the ground which he pretends from his own knowledge, to aſſign of my thus ſpeaking; viz. 28.
that we may make the Lords day and Feſtivals to be founded on the ſame authority, viz. of the Church, this he muſt very much diſſemble his knowledge, if he confeſs not to be a miſtake alſo.

For in the margent he grants that I ſay that the Apoſtles inſtituted the Lords day §. 31. and ſo cer- 29.
tainly I do (though I know not in what words of Scripture that inſtitution is ſet down.) But, ſaith he, there be other words, §. 57. which ſpeak of the Lords day by the ſame authority appointed. To which I anſwer that the words there uſed [though the Lords day be by the ſame authority appointed] belong not at all to the ſtating of this queſtion, and being introduced in that form [though, &c.] they are not any affirmation that the Lords day is not inſtituted by any higher authority than Chriſtmaſs day, but only a conceſſion of what was asked by the Quæriſt, without ſo much as examining or inquiring into the utmoſt of the authority by which it ſtood. Of this I had ſufficiently expreſt my ſenſe, §. 31. as the Diatribiſts margent confeſſes from me, viz. that the Apoſtles inſtituted the Lords day, whereas in that fifty ſeventh Section, I ſpeak as plainly of Chriſtmaſs day, that it hath its authority from the inſtitution and uſage of the Univerſal Church; And if when the matter is ſo clear, and my meaning ſo expreſs both for the one and the other, I muſt yet be accuſed for the contrary, and this be affirmed from the Diatribiſts knowledge to be my ground, viz. a deſign to make the Lords day and Feſtivals to be founded on the ſame authority, and that by him ſpecified, viz. of the Church; 'Tis certainly moſt viſible, that either this is a calumny in the Diatribiſt, or elſe that the word Church muſt be ſo taken as to comprehend that part of it, of which the Apoſtles were rulers in perſon, and then what harm hath been in that ſpeech thus interpreted, the Church of the Apoſtles inſtituted the Lords day, and either they perſonally, or their ſucceſſors uſed and delivered down the other Feſtivals, the Feſtival of Eaſter being derived undoubtedly from the Apoſtles, Philip and John, Peter and Paul, as hath already clearly appeared out of the difference betwixt Victor and Polycrates; And other Feſtivals by the paſſages of the Martyrdom of Ignatius and Polycarp, i. e. by evidence of ſtory being demonſtrated to be little later, though of Chriſtmaſs this do not ſo expreſly appear to me as to be any where affirmed by me.

But there is yet more of this captious diſcourſe behind, upon my ſaying that 'tis not uſual to touch 30.
cards or dice on Chriſtmas day, and this muſt add either to our ſuperſtition or hypocriſie, our ſuperſtition, if they be lawful, in that they forbid them on that day, that God hath not forbidden them; Hypocriſie, if they be unlawful, in abſtaining then, and yet uſing them on other days. But we ſhall ſoon be extricated from the power of this Dilemma, by affirming, Firſt, That thoſe ſports uſed moderately, as diverſions, and no way abuſed by our inordinacy, are not by any argument that ever I met with, proved to be toto genere, or abſolutely unlawful, and ſo that they may be uſed for divertiſement on other days, and particularly on the following days of that Feſtivity; and yet ſecondly, that they are no way neceſſary, and ſo that no man offends, that abſtains from them on all other days, and employs himſelf better conſtantly.

From whence it is neceſſarily conſequent alſo, that he that hath fed on the body and blood of Chriſt, 31.
and conſecrated himſelf in an extraordinary manner to commemorate the myſterie of our redemption on Chriſtmaſs day, and agreeably thereto, deſires to ſpend it ſo much more ſtrictly than other days, as not to admit thoſe ſports (which are lawful on other days) to divide any part of that, can never be criminous in ſo doing.

As for any thing of riot (but ſuch is not all lawful divertiſement) on the following days, he knows 32.
they are no way pleaded for by me, and if any be guilty of them, as the ſhame thereof is due to the offenders, not to the feſtival, which is innocent and laudable; ſo 'tis too well known that the Lords day it ſelf hath not been ſecured from the ſame unhappy adherences.

And

33. And it might as well be charged on that, that the heathens worſhipt the Sun on that day, and that revelling upon it, are fitter for ſuch heathen feaſts than for Chriſtians, as the Diatribiſt could ſuggeſt in this place, that the Saturnalia were celebrated about the ſame time that Chriſtmas was, and that the exceſſes of the following dayes are ſervices fitter for the revels of Bacchus and Saturn, or the birth day of Herod, than for the feſtivity of a ſpiritual Saviour. All this is true, and equally granted by both parties, and ſo hath no propriety or pertinency to the diſpute between us.

SECT. XVI.

Chriſtmaſs, if of the ſame original with Eaſter, certainly Apoſtolical. However, of the practice of the Primitive Church. All rendring of motives no λόγῳ σοφίας.

Numb. 1. MY twenty ſeventh Section was introductory to a diſcourſe more general, to ſhew by what authority, feſtivals in general, and particularly this of Chriſtmaſs, pretends to ſtand in the Catholick Church, which I acknowledged not to be by any inſtitution of Chriſts, but to have had the beginning from the Apoſtles or the ſucceeding Church.

2. To the view hereof he now proceeds, and briefly ſets to it, to diſprove each of theſe originals, beginning firſt with that of the Apoſtles. And of this he thinks he need ſay no more, than to appeal to the ſame arguments which he had uſed againſt the Apoſtles inſtitution of Eaſter, §. 6. viz. Firſt, The no mention of ſuch inſtitution in the Scripture; Secondly, The expreſs words of Socrates, that neither Chriſt nor his Apoſtles commanded the feaſt of Eaſter to be obſerved.

3. But to both theſe it is certain that I owe no return, having now paid it ſo punctually in the fourth Section, where beſide clear anſwers to the Diatribiſts arguments, I added evidences undeniable that the feaſt of Eaſter was obſerved by the Apoſtles, And I cannot doubt but they will be of force with him, when he ſhall take leiſure to weigh them; And then if the caſe ſhall be acknowledged the ſame betwixt Eaſter and Chriſtmaſs, that of the reſurrection and this of the birth of Chriſt (as the Diatribiſt ſeems to acknowledge, in tendring no one argument more againſt the Apoſtolicalneſs of Chriſtmaſs, than he had before produced againſt the inſtitution of Eaſter by them) then it is evident my affirmation muſt aſcend higher than it ever meant to have done, and not proceed disjunctively, that this feaſt of the nativity is derived either from the Apoſtles or the ſucceeding Church, but leaving out the latter part of the partition, fix upon the former, that, being yielded to have the ſame original with Eaſter, it is certainly derived from the Apoſtles, from whence it appears that of Eaſter is derived.

4. To which purpoſe we have already produced ſome evidences which may juſtly pretend to ſome force, at leaſt ad hominem, to him that hath no more againſt this, than againſt all other Chriſtian feſtivals, viz. thoſe from the martyrdoms of Ignatius and Polycarp, written by thoſe that were preſent at them, and ſo lived ſoon after the Apoſtles.

5. That of Polycarps recorded in that famous Epiſtle of the Church of Smyrna, I have ſet down at large, and made my inferences from it, §§. 33. and 34. of that treatiſe of Feſtivals; To which I have here formerly added that other parallel teſtimony from the acts of Ignatius.

6. So that now I hope I may ſafely reſume my former affirmation, without all diffidence, that other Feſtivals beſide that of the weekly Lords day, were derived to us, ſome certainly from the Apoſtles, others from the Church immediately ſucceeding the Apoſtles; In one of which ranks though I have no reaſon to doubt but this of the Nativity of Chriſt is to be placed, yet becauſe we have not thoſe evidences of the fact which we have for Eaſter and others, I ſhall not build upon any degree of uncertainties, nor affirm more than what that treatiſe hath ſhewed out of the ancient Fathers, that this feaſt is deduced to us early from the firſt antiquity.

7. And againſt this I am ſure neither Socrates nor my Lord of Falkland (who is joined next to him) hath ſuggeſted any thing; and then what was thus done by them, muſt not in equity fare the worſe for my adding the mention of a motive or incitement that might reaſonably recommend it to them, which is therefore preſently ſtyled λόγῳ σοφίας, a ſhew of wiſdom, as if all reaſonable motives were to be blaſted under that title, as all uncommanded performances here are ſaid to be by the expreſs words of the ſecond Commandment, and Col. 2. 23. But ſure we have formerly ſpoken enough of this arguing.

SECT. XVII.

The Encænia, a religious feaſt inſtituted by the Jews, and approved by Chriſt, vindicated from all his exceptions. Marriage-feaſts. Religious feaſts cannot be unlawful, if civil be lawful. The feaſt of Purim a religious feaſt.

Numb. 1. THE twenty ninth Section proceeds to conſider what I had ſaid of the Encænia among the Jews, the feaſt of dedication not inſtituted by God in the Law, but in commemoration of the purging of the altar by Judas Maccabeus, and yet this obſerved by the Jews, and approved by Chriſts preſence at it, Joh. 10. 23.

2. To this the Diatribiſt anſwers, that there may be many miſtakes in this; And truly it matters not how many there may be, as long as there appears not to be any one.

3. Firſt then his anſwer is, that there were three feaſts of dedication, and I cannot but know that learned men men are divided of which it's here meant. But how can this firſt anſwer be of any avail, when I that took notice, as he confeſſes, of the three, made it evident that the place was meant of the third, that inſtituted in the Maccabees, and the Diatribiſt cannot deny but it's probable ſo it was, and offers not to anſwer the proofs, or to pretend ought for either of the two former againſt this.

His Second anſwer is, that granting it to be the laſt, yet there are reaſons to think it was not a religious 4.
Feſtival but a civil, as the feaſt of Purim ſeems to be, Eſth. 9. 21, 22. But it is not imaginable the Diatribiſt ſhould thus think, or be perſwaded by theſe reaſons.

His reaſon is from the words 1 Mac. 4. 59. They ordered it ſhould be kept yearly with mirth and glad- 5.
neſs, adding that though it be ſaid v. 56. they offered burnt-offerings, yet that was v. 53. according to the law, and ſo was worſhip commanded.

Now truly this I thought had been ſufficient proof, that this was a religious feaſt, and it was great 6.
ſurprize to me to ſee it brought to infer the contrary: For what greater evidence can there be brought of a religious feaſt, than this, of which out of the Story he hath ſet down a conſiderable portion, but lies in the Maccabees more completely thus.

Now on the 25th day of the Ninth Month (which is called the Month Caſleu) in the 148th year, they roſe 7.
up betimes in the morning and offered ſacrifice according to the law upon the new altar of burnt-offering which they had made; look at what time and what day the heathen had profaned it, even upon that was it dedicated with ſongs and citterns, harps and cymbals; Then all the people fell upon their faces worſhipping and praiſing the God of heaven who had given them good ſucceſs, and ſo they kept the dedication of the altar eight days, and offered burnt-offerings with gladneſs; and ſacrificed the ſacrifice of deliverance and praiſe, &c. and then v. 59. Moreover Judas and his brethren with the whole congregation of Iſrael ordained that the days of the dedication of the altar ſhould be kept in their ſeaſon from year by the ſpace of eight days from the 25th day of the Month Caſleu with mirth and gladneſs.

And now I ſhall ask the Diatribiſt, Is there any reaſon to think this was not a religious feſtival, 8.
nay is it poſſible for him to give any account, why in ſetting down the paſſages of it, he ſhould omit the peoples falling upon their faces, worſhipping and praiſing the God of heaven, and ſacrificing the ſacrifices of deliverance and praiſe, together with Judas and his brethren and the congregation (which is not God, as hath hitherto been pretended it ought to be, from the ſecond and fourth Commandment) ordaining that it ſhould be ſo kept for the future from year to year?

Do not thoſe paſſages take away all poſſibility of doubting, either of the religiouſneſs of the Fe- 9.
ſtival, or the inſtitution by man and not by God? And is there now againſt all this, any force in the words v. 53. [according to the law] which the Diatribiſt confronts to the mention of burnt-offerings, as an anſwer, or reaſon, why that which was kept with burnt-offerings, was yet no religious feaſt? May not burnt-offerings according to the law, ſuch as the Moſaical law approves of, yea and commands to be uſed for burnt-offerings, be uſed in a religious feaſt? what was ever ſuggeſted by any diſputer with leſs appearance of truth or probability? He knows that in the free will-offerings there were yet laws given by Moſes according to which they were to offer, and why ſhould it not be ſo in a feaſt ordained by Judas? would he imagine that illegal offerings ſhould have been ſought out for it, to conſtitute it a religious feaſt.

Here ſure was matter of conviction to the Diatribiſt, I ſhall not inquire why it did not prevail with 10.
him. Only of this I am ſure, that if this one inſtance had been permitted to appear, what indeed it is, and now is viſibly demonſtrated to be, a religious feaſt inſtituted by the Church of the Jews, and not by God, and yet approved by him, there can never need any farther evidence to confute and demonſtrate the vanity of all his three Diatribæ of Superſtition, Will-worſhip, Feſtivals, his ſuggeſtions from ſuper ſtatutum, from additions to the word, from the ſecond and fourth Commmandments, from Col. 2. whether as it mentions Will-worſhip or the Commands of men.

Our Chriſtmaſs Feſtivity, ſuppoſing the utmoſt that he can wiſh, that it was not obſerved by the 11.
Apoſtles, but inſtituted by the Church, be it two or three hundred years after Chriſt, being perfectly anſwerable to this of the dedication, and ſo demonſtrated, by analogy with that, to be approved by Chriſt.

And therefore it was but neceſſary that this evidence ſhould by all convenient means be rendred un- 12.
effectual; All the unhappineſs of it was, that the matter would not yield any ſuch, and ſo the Diatribiſt was to content himſelf with ſuch as we have now diſcovered.

And becauſe he could not but foreſee it poſſible, that they would be thus diſcovered, and that yet it 13.
will be (more than) ſaid that it was a religious feaſt and ſo obſerved, he therefore hath a third anſwer in reſerve, Then ſaith he, it may be fairly ſuggeſted that they went beyond their commiſſion in making this feaſt annual and perpetual, which neither Solomon nor Zorobabel did theirs for ought we read.

Here are again the clear ſymptoms of a deſperate cauſe, that fain would catch at ſome ſupports, but 14.
is forſaken of all. 'Tis evident Judas and his brethren and the whole congregation ordained that it ſhould be kept thus from year to year, 1 Mac. 4. 59. and as evident that it was ſo obſerved by the Jews even in Chriſts time, and as evident ſtill that Chriſt was preſent at that feaſt (and ſo approved of, and confirmed it) Joh. 10. 23. And yet ſaith he, it may be fairly ſuggeſted that they went beyond their commiſſion in making this feaſt annual; what again could have been ſaid more unluckily than this, more contrary to expreſs evidence in every degree of it?

Add to this ſecond, that even both of the two other feaſts of dedication, at the erecting the Temple 15.
in Solomons, and reedifying it in Zorobabels time, if they were annual, were fully parallel with this, and that they were ſo, was by this Diatribiſt affirmed to be the opinion of learned men, in this very page, who, ſaith he, interpreted the place of John 10. ſome of the one, ſome of the other of theſe, which 'twere ridiculous for them to do, if it were not annual.

Nay laſtly, ſuppoſing theſe two were never obſerved above once a piece, I ſhall now demand, why 16.
might they not as lawfully be celebrated often, or annually and ordinarily, as for one turn and extraordinarily? If the firſt offended not, by being ſuper ſtatutum, how could the ſecond or hundredth or thouſandth repetition render it criminous? 'Tis not imaginable what reaſon can be given for this, that what was lawful laſt year, ſhall be impious this year; what ground of ſo great difference, that one ſhould be approved, the other condemned, one not only innocent but commendable, and the other (i. e. the ſame received into conſtant annual practice) repudiated and rejected.

17. And yet in this, it ſeems, all the difference lies all this while, extraordinary days of thanksgiving for one turn ſaith he, he accounts lawful to be done by the higher powers, and ſo extraordinary days of humiliation; From whence I conclude, that if King Lucius 1400. years ago kept Chriſtmaſs day for one turn and no more, and ſo Good Friday alſo, he had the Diatribiſts leave to do it very freely and lawfully; But if when he had done ſo once, he ſhall offer to do it again, the next year, then Mr. C. muſt needs write Triplicem Diatriben againſt him.

18. What he yet farther adds as a laſt miſtake in me, will be ſoon found of the ſame rank with the former. Another miſtake, ſaith he, is this, that that feaſt was approved and confirmed by Chriſts preſence at it, whereas, ſaith he, the text produced ſayes no ſuch thing, but only thus, It was at Jeruſalem (mark that, not at the Temple) not elſewhere, the feaſt of the dedication, and v. 22. Jeſus walked in the Temple, ſo he did other days, any day when no feaſt was, &c.

19. I wiſh we were at an end of this kind of arguing, for it will not eaſily be parallel'd in any Diatribiſt; All that is by me affirmed from the text, is, that Chriſt was preſent at it, the reſt is my deduction from thence, and I hope I have not offended therein. For is not that an evidence of Chriſts approbation, and ſo confirmation of it? would Chriſt have been preſent at an unlawful, nay (as this muſt be by the Diatribiſts divinity) ſuperſtitious deteſtable feaſt, wherein the ſecond and fourth Commandments were directly violated by the very keeping of it, and never have reprehended it? would he not have ſcourged it and diſpatcht it out of the Temple, as he did that huckſtering cuſtom of buying and ſelling there, and expreſt as great impatience againſt ſuch ſuperſtitious violations, as thoſe other profanations of his Fathers houſe? would not his preſence at the Feaſt have had the ſcandal of ſuperſtition, if the Feaſt it ſelf had had that crime in it?

20. What now he appoints to be markt, that this Feaſt was at Jeruſalem, not at the Temple, is very ſtrange. For if it were a religious Feaſt (as hath already appeared it was,) from the ſtory of the inſtitution in the Maccabees) then ſure it was in the Temple, and ſo at Jeruſalem, where the Temple was. And what if Jeſus walkt in the Temple on other days, when no feaſt was, doth it therefore follow that now it was not the Feaſt, when he walked there, and when the text ſaith expreſly that it was the Feaſt? This is a new ſort of arguing ſtill, and this may be reiterated more turns than one, and yet nothing amiſs in it.

21. What hath thus far been ſaid by him of the Encænia, is appliable, ſaith he, to my ſecond inſtance among the Jews, the feſtivities of marriage. For marriage it ſelf, ſaith he, is a civil thing and not religious. But I ſhall not engage farther in new controverſies, having enow before me already (elſe ſure marriage might be approved to be religious) I ſhall only need to demand on this head of diſcourſe, what the difference is, between a civil, and a religious feſtivity? I ſhall ſuppoſe only this, that in the one the publick ſervices of the Church, among Chriſtians, prayers, Pſalms, Sermon, Euchariſt, (ſome or all of them) are uſed, as among the Jews, ſacrifices, &c. adding to theſe feſtival diet alſo, whereas the other is made up only of the latter.

22. And then ſuppoſing one of theſe (as the Diatribiſt granteth) lawful among the Jews, and ſo among Chriſtians at the celebration of marriages, I ſhall demand how it is poſſible, the other ſhould be unlawful? Can the ſervices of the Church being added, make that criminous, which was innocent before? 'Tis poſſible indeed for a profane mixture (ſuch as riot, &c.) to defame and pollute that, which is moſt ſacred; but have the ſacred offices of the Church that ſame accurſed force in them, to make that which was but civil before, ſacrilegious and impious? This is another rarity, that I had not formerly been acquainted with.

23. But before I leave this matter I muſt take in, what he hath in like manner affirmed of the feaſt of Purim among the Jews, of which though having made mention in the Practical Catechiſm, I added no more in the Treatiſe of Feſtivals, yet there cannot be any thing more pertinent to our preſent debates, this being without any direction from God, voluntarily inſtituted by the Jews not only for one turn, but as an eſtabliſhment among them, on the 14th and 15th day of the month Adar yearly, Heſt. 9. 21. Now of this he takes notice by the way, §. 29. (treating of the Encænia) and ſaith of it as of the other, that it ſeems not to be a religious feſtival, but a civil; But this again without the leaſt ſhew of probability.

24. I ſhall need go no farther than the text to demonſtrate it, Heſt. 9. There v. 16. the Jewes had reſt from their enemies, and thereupon v. 17. on the 13th day, and 14th of the month Adar reſted they, and made it a day of feaſting and gladneſs, and v. 18. The Jews that were at Shuſhan aſſembled together on the 13th day, and the 14th day thereof; and on the 15th they reſted and made it a day of feaſting and gladneſs, and v. 19. the Jews of the villages made the 14th day of the month Adar a day of gladneſs and feaſting, and a good day, and of ſending portions one to another; Here I cannot but ſuppoſe that a day of reſt, of aſſembly, of feaſting, and gladneſs, a good day (i. e. in their ſtyle, a feſtival day) a day of hoſpitality and charity, ſending of portions (μερίδες, ſuch as in a ſacrifical feaſt) will to any impartial reader paſs for an indication of a religious feaſt.

25. And as theſe days were obſerved for the firſt turn, ſo they are eſtabliſht for a yearly obſervation, v. 21, 22. And the Jews ordained, and took upon them, and upon their ſeed, and upon all ſuch as joined themſelves to them, ſo as it ſhould not fail, that they would keep theſe two days according to their writing, and according to their appointed time every year, v. 27.

26. What could be more expreſs for the religiouſneſs, and for the eſtabliſhment for continuance; and this ſtill a feaſt inſtituted by the Jews, and not by God himſelf, and ſo as clear an inſtance, on our ſide of the matter conteſted, as is imaginable.

SECT.

SECT. XVIII.

How the compariſon holds between the Lords day and Chriſtmas day. Inſtitution, uſage Apoſtolical for Feſtivals. No law in Scripture for the Lords day.

NOW follows his view of what I had ſaid of the Lords day, not inſtituted by Chriſt, or God himſelf, but by the Apoſtles, without any mention in the New Teſtament of any preſcription or law for the obſerving of it. Numb. 1.

To this he is very glad to proceed, hoping for ſome great advantage from it; let us ſee what the ſucceſs will prove. 2.

And firſt, ſaith he, there want not learned men who think that Chriſt did deſign the day. But I muſt demand whether he can imagine that thoſe learned men were in the right in this, or have herein expreſt any of their learning? If he cannot think they have, why doth he loſe time and gain nothing by the mention of them? If he can, why doth he not ſo much as offer their grounds of thus opening, when he knows nor Scripture nor antiquity ſaith any thing of it, and when it were as tolerable in any oppoſer to offer his opinion alſo, that Chriſtmaſs day was by Chriſt himſelf deſigned alſo. 3.

But then ſecondly, ſaith he, if the Apoſtles did inſtitute it, that's more than he dare ſay of Chriſtmaſs day. And what if it be? Doth that prejudge the obſerving of Chriſtmaſs, ſuppoſing it certain (as I do ſuppoſe) that it was either of the Apoſtles or the ſucceeding Church? Suppoſe ſome feaſts of the Jews inſtituted by God or Moſes, others by the Church of the Jews, and not by Moſes, as the Purim and Encænia, Are not theſe latter as lawfully to be kept to all poſterity of the Jews, as thoſe former? 4.

But then ſecondly the parallel that I ſet betwixt the Lords day and Chriſtmaſs day, was only this, that as neither of them was found preſcribed, or by law commanded in Scripture, ſo the want of ſuch law ſhould be no prejudice to the one, more than to the other, as long as by ſome other way it appeared of the one, that it was derived from the Apoſtles or the ſucceeding Church, as of the other, that it came immediately from the Apoſtles; It being evident, that if the Apoſtles uſage gave to one a divine authority, the uſage of the ſucceeding Church muſt be next to that, though not divine, and the latter lawful, yea and obligatory, as well, though not in ſo high a degree, as the former, as the Encænia were as lawful, as the Paſover, and were obligatory alſo, though not by the ſame authority. By this it appears that there is certain obligation for the obſerving of Chriſtmaſs, though there ſhould be no certainty of the Apoſtles inſtituting it. 5.

Next he demands, If the Lords day was inſtituted by the Apoſtles of Chriſt, do not their inſtitutions carry in them divine preſcription or Law? I anſwer, that if by inſtitution be meant giving Law for the obſervation of it, then there is no doubt of his propoſition, the predication being identical, inſtitution in this ſenſe, is preſcribing, or giving Law. 6.

But 'tis poſſible that inſtitution of the Lords day by the Apoſtles] may ſignifie another thing, viz. that the Apoſtles practice, aſſembling weekly on the Lords day, ſhould have the force of an inſtitution, or a Law with the ſucceeding Church, though indeed the Apoſtles gave no Law for it, or if they did, no ſuch Law appears from them. 7.

The examples of the Apoſtles are the only way of conveying ſome uſages to us without any their preſcript Law; And accordingly in this ſenſe alſo I conſent to the Diatribiſt, that their inſtitutions carry in them divine preſcription or Law, and ſo I ſhall no way contend with him in this matter. 8.

Only upon theſe grounds, I ſhall demand, that whatſoever elſe ſhall be in the ſame manner derived to us, through all ages of the Church, from the times of the Apoſtles themſelves, may be acknowledged alſo to carry a divine impreſſion upon it. And then, to omit Epiſcopacy (which he cannot but know, hath perfectly as much to be ſaid for it in every reſpect, as the Lords day) I ſhall inſiſt only on the feaſt of Eaſter, which hath been demonſtrated to be derived from the Apoſtles, and ſo is an inſtance of all that I pretend in the point of Feſtivals, leaving Chriſtmaſs day to the equity of proportion, and the other evidences that are produced for the antiquity of it. 9.

Next he proceeds to what I farther ſay, of the no Law, that appears in Scripture for the Lord's day. In order to which I ſaid, that if any thing of that nature be ſought there, it will rather appear to belong to the annual, than weekly feaſt of the reſurrection, naming 1 Cor. 5. 8. ἑορτάζωμεν let us keep the feaſt, and the mention of Κυριακὴ, the Lords day, Rev. 1. 10. by ſome thought to belong to the annual day alſo. 10.

Againſt theſe he urgeth ſome authorities of ſome ancient and modern writers, which, ſaith he, do not ſeem to underſtand theſe places thus. And though 'twere no impoſſible thing to anſwer thoſe teſtimonies, yet I ſhall never diſcourage him in that very reaſonable courſe of appeal to the judgment of the Fathers, and other ſuch Learned men, but yielding him all he deſires of both theſe places, I muſt only deſire him to remember, that this will no whit advantage him or prejudice me, unleſs he can bring out of the Scripture ſome other places, which are more apodictical evidences of Apoſtolical Law for the weekly Lords day, than theſe are for the annual; For the matter is clear, all that I was there to prove, was no more but this, that there was no Law in Scripture for either of them. 11.

SECT. XIX.

Aërius's hereſy that Feſtivals are unlawful. S. Auguſtine's teſtimony added to Epiphanius's. The Diatribiſts inconſtancy. The teſtimony of the Church of Smyrna, an evidence of keeping the days of the Apoſtles martyrdom. The Teſtimony from the Martyrdom of Ignatius according with it. Teſtimonies for the antiquity of Feſtivals.

Numb. 1. IN the thirty ſecond Section to Epiphanius's cenſure of Aërius as of an heretick, for affirming feſtivals unlawful, his anſwer is that all is not hereſie that Epiphanius calls ſo, nor all Aërius's opinions juſtly cenſured as heretical.

2. And ſo indeed the Diatribiſt is concerned to think, both in reſpect of this and ſome other intereſts, that eſpecially of Epiſcopacy. But for the averting of ſo great a crime, it would well become the accuſed to offer ſome reaſon for the clearing himſelf, and not only to have mentioned the name of Oſiander the Epitomizer of the Centuriators, whoſe words are not affirmed to belong to this particular of Feſtivals, and if they did, whoſe authority is ſure ſo incompetent to weigh with Epiphanius in ſetting down the ſenſe of the ancient Church, that in all reaſon ſome evidences ſhould have been annexed to add weight to him.

3. As it is, I muſt not think ſtrange, that they which tranſcribe that affirmation from Aërius, will not allow it to be hereſy in him; I will only demand whether S. Auguſtine be of any better account with him, Hær. 53. he knew what hereſy was, and what Aërius was guilty of, and whether elſewhere he may deſerve to be believed, when in conſort with himſelf and with Epiphanius, he ſaith, Rectè feſta Eccleſiæ colunt, qui ſe Eccleſiæ filios recognoſcunt, they that profeſs themſelves ſons of the Church do duely obſerve the feaſts of the Church, ſetting this of the nativity in the front of ſuch, where ſurely thoſe that do not obſerve them, muſt diſclaim their ſonſhip, and that is but a paraphraſe to expreſs thoſe, whom Epiphanius ſtyles hereticks.

Serm. 253. De Temp. Domin. 1. Adv.

4. If he ſhall bring any ſo fair evidences, that they that obſerve feaſts are ſuperſtitious, I ſhall think my ſelf obliged to do more than deny the accuſation.

5. For the feſtivities of martyrs mentioned by me in the ſame Section he acknowledges they began betimes, as ſuperſtition, ſaith he, ever attends religion and devotion, adding that though they were intended for good ends, yet they produced in time much ſuperſtition.

6. But ſure this anſwer is very unſufficient, and inconſtant; Unſufficient, for what if it were granted that in a proceſs of time theſe feſtivities did occaſionally produce ſome evil, ſo Chriſtianity it ſelf, ſo all things that ſhould have been moſt for our wealth, may through the vices of men be perverted into occaſions of falling; But what is that to the antiquity of Feſtivals, which is the only thing that theſe inſtances were required to teſtify?

7. And Secondly inconſtant, for at firſt theſe feſtivities are lookt on as ſuperſtition attending religion and devotion (and by the way, if that be applicable to theſe feſtivities, that will be a competent character of their antiquity, for religion and devotion, were brought in with Chriſtianity, and if the Feſtivities were the ſuperſtition that attended that, they will be pretty ancient) and yet in the latter part 'tis ſaid of them, that they produced in time much ſuperſtition, which latter if it be true, then the former which was contrary, is not true, and that is ſufficient to be replied to that anſwer.

8. As for his return to §. 33. which is of the ſame matter, that I preſume too much upon my own reaſon in concluding from the teſtimony of the Church of Smyrna, that the days of the death of the Apoſtles themſelves were ſolemnized thus early, i. e. before Polycarps death] Sure his cenſure is not over reaſonable; For when by thoſe expreſs words of that Churches Epiſtle it is firſt apparent, that Polycarps death was thus celebrated, ſecondly, That this Polycarp was immediate ſucceſſor to the Apoſtles, and lived in the ſame time with them, thirdly, That this commemoration of Martyrs was before this time uſed in the Church, and no new thing now to be done to Polycarp; what reaſon of doubting can there be, but that at this time the Apoſtles having received (many of them) this crown of martyrdom ſhould be thus commemorated ὲν χαρᾷ καὶ ἀγαλλιάσει, in joy and exultation, i. e. with a feſtivity, when this appears ſo expreſly of Polycarp, and that in accord to former practice, eſpecially when to that is added the inſtance perfectly parallel of Ignatius, yet more ancient than Polycarp, and the day of his death preciſely obſerved by thoſe that were preſent, on this very purpoſe, ſay they, ut ſecundum tempus martyrii ejus congregati communicemus athletæ, that they might aſſemble at the day of his martyrdom, and communicate with this champion.

9. That I produce not more or more expreſs teſtimonies for the feſtivals of the Apoſtles, need not ſeem ſtrange, the records being ſo few which remain of thoſe times, and my reading being ſo ſmall; For the preſent, theſe two may be conſidered being teſtimonies of competent antiquity, and force to prove what I pretend to prove, that Feſtivities were obſerved by the Church next ſucceeding the Apoſtles, and why Polycarp and Ignatius ſhould have that honour, when Peter and Paul were not allowed it, I ſtill profeſs not to diſcern reaſon, nor conſequently to make any doubt of it.

10. Mean while when the Diatribiſt is willing to form an argument from my not bringing of teſtimonies §. 33. it is remarkable that §. 34. is wholly paſt over in ſilence by him, which yet produceth the authorities of Gregorius Thaumaturgus, of Cyprian, of Tertullian, ex majorum traditione (and ſo of thoſe that were much more ancient than he) and ſo intirely made up of teſtimonies of the firſt antiquity concerning the memories of the Martyrs (which muſt ſure include the Apoſtles, as many of them as were thus crowned) before any Churches were built, wherein to aſſemble and celebrate their Feſtivals.

11. This ſhews that the Diatribiſt had little reaſon to complain of want, at that very time when he was thus overcharged with plenty of teſtimonies, and hath not a word to return to any one of them, any more than he doth §. 35. to the mentions of Origen, Cyprian, and Chryſoſtom, deducing the Chriſtmaſs feſtivity from the firſt antiquity.

SECT.

SECT. XX.

Strictures on §. 35. The author of the Conſtitutions a competent teſtifier when in accord with others. Juſtinus's Edict for Feſtivals reconcileable with the Apoſtolical uſage of them. The 20000. ſlain by Dioclesian on Chriſtmaſs day. Objections againſt the 25th of December anſwered. The controverſy in Chryſoſtom about the day, not the Feaſt. Ἀρχαία. ἄνωθεν. His words full for the Apoſtolicalneſs of both.

WHAT now follows §. 35, is ſo far from having weight in it, that I muſt not allot any ſolemn anſwers to it, the lighteſt ſtrictures will be more proportionable. Numb. 1.

As when of my mention of the Author of the Conſtitutions he ſaith, this will weaken my cauſe the more, becauſe they are generally accounted ſpurious; This ſure muſt be very unjuſt, that what was confirmed ſo newly from Origen, Cyprian, and Chryſoſtom, ſhould not only not gain, but loſe ſtrength by the addition of the Conſtitutions, which beſides that they are acknowledged ancient by all which leaſt believe them Apoſtolical, are known to be deſigned to imitate that antiquity they pretend to, and are never juſtly rejected, but when that which they affirm is found diſcordant to the affirmations of other writings of undoubted antiquity, which having no place here, there is as little room for the Diatribiſts cenſure. 2.

So what he concludes from Juſtinus's Edict (which I mentioned) that it was a proof that the Apoſtles did not inſtitute it, is already anſwered by ſaying that the Apoſtles practice being all that is pretended for the inſtitution, the edict of the Emperour for the Univerſal obſervation of it, is very reconcileable with that, (and ſo alſo with the uſage of the firſt ages after the Apoſtles in caſe it be devolved no higher than theſe) as the ſeveral decrees of Magiſtrates Civil and Eccleſiaſtical for an univerſal obſervation of the Lords day are ſure perfectly reconcileable with the Apoſtolical original thereof. 3.

And this was there evidenced by the 20000. Chriſtians that were burnt by Dioclesian on this day (ſure long before that Edict of Juſtinus (at which time ſaith the * Hiſtorian, πᾶν τὸ χρισάνυμον πλῆθος ἐκ πάσης ἡλικίας τῇ νεῳ ἤθροισε πανηγυρίζοντες τὰ γενέθλια, all that were called Chriſtians of all ages aſſembled in the Church to celebrate the nativity; And to that, it ſeems he hath no other return, but his advertiſement that Nicephorus ſaith it was Maximinus, that was thus bloody, Maximanus, I ſuppoſe he would have ſaid, who reigned with Dioclesian, and then it comes to the ſame paſs, and the truth is acknowledged, which ſoever the name were. 4. * Niceph. l. 7. c. 6.

So againſt reſolving the day of this feſtival to be Decemb. 25. his proofs are extraordinary; Firſt, from the Doctor himſelf, that it was called Midwinter day, which is a fortnight before. But that hath already been anſwered, the variation being evidenced to be from the want of exactneſs in our Calendars, not from any doubt of the day. 5.

Secondly, From the opinion of many Divines, that our Lord died when he was 33. and half years of age, or near unto 34, as ſaith he, the Doctor ſaith, Qu. 1 §. 10. What Divines theſe are that thus calculate, I am not told, nor how competent they are to be confronted to the cenſual Tables, from whence S. Chryſoſtom fetches the day of his birth: But the luck of it is, that citation from the Doctor was eaſily conſulted, and on view of the place, there is no more but this, that Chriſt preacht the will of his Father three years or four together, which I thought had ſignified no more than for ſome uncertain ſpace betwixt three or four years; And if he were born in December and died in April, what difficulty is there in this calculation? or what needed the Diatribiſt to have cited from the Doctor the words [near 34.] when he knows there is nothing to that ſenſe ſaid by him? 6.

The third thing (without which his undertaking to mention many, will be a faileur) which may make us doubt of the truth of the calculation, is the younger date of the Arabick Codex of the Councils; But when that Codex was dated, he hath not told us; And if it were later than I thought, it may yet poſſibly ſpeak truth, and ſo that will give us no reaſon of doubting. 7.

His laſt proof is, that the Doctor is upon Ifs, and 'Tis probable; And I heartily wiſh the Diatribiſt would but ſpeak probably, and till he doth ſo, that he would not have ſuch averſions to the Doctors Ifs, I mean, that he would uſe diffidence, when he pretends not to demonſtrate. 8.

I add nothing to his returns about the Epiphany, but leave them to be judged by the Sections to which they are oppoſed. 9.

And for the large view of the place in Chryſoſtom, and his diſpute againſt that Father, my anſwer is very brief, that all that I attempted to prove from Chryſoſtom, was the due timing of the feaſt on the 25th of December, and that being done beyond controverſy, I pretend not to derive other deciſions from that teſtimony, but leave them to ſtand on their own baſis. 10.

Only when from ſome words of Chryſoſtom, he at length concludes the authority of the Church in conſtituting, and celebrating this feſtival in all ages much ſhaken, I muſt remind him that that Fathers words which affirm it a queſtion at that time, belong not to the Feſtivity it ſelf, but only to the * particularity of the day, whether it were to be kept on the 25th of December or on ſome other day, and accordingly his proofs proceed, ὅτι ἔτός ἐστιν ὁ καιρὸς, that this is the very time; And though ſome doubted whether this were a new, or the ἀρχαία ancient day of the feſtivity, yet ſaith he, others defended it, ὅτι παλαιὰ ἡ ἀρχαία ἐστὶ, ἡ ἄνωθεν τοῖς ἀπὸ Θράκης μέχρι Γαδείρων ἁπάσι καλῶς ἡ διήμεγένετο, that it was old and antient (or original, ſo ἀρχαία from ἀρχὴ ſignifies, and is all one with * Tertullians quod ab initio, as that with quod ab Apoſtolis) and from theſe ancient, if not theſe firſt times (as ἄνωθεν commonly imports, and ſo again in * Tertullian, ordo ad originem recenſus) it hath been manifeſt and illuſtrious to all that dwell from Thrace to Gadeira, from Eaſt to Weſt, that ſure with him ſignifies, all the world over. 11. * Πολὺς περὶ τῆς ἡμέρας ταύτης γίνεται λόγος. * l. 1. contr. Marc. c. 5. * Ib.

And ſo ſtill this diſpute, which ſide ſoever was in the right, is founded in a ſuppoſition of the feaſt it ſelf being ἀρχαία and ἄνωθεν, original and from the beginning; And indeed if the firſt proof which he offers for it be conſidered, 'tis not imaginable how he ſhould ſay more to the aſſerting of the Apoſtolicalneſs both of the Feſtivity and the day alſo. 12.

That

13. That this is the ſeaſon, ſaith he, on which Chriſt was born, the firſt demonſtration is τὸ ταχέως οὕτω παι-ταχῇ περιαγγελθῆναι καὶ πρὸς ὕψος ἐπιδῦναι τοσοῦτον, καὶ ἀνθῆσαι τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, that the feaſt was ſo ſpeedily promulgate every where, and aſcended to ſo great an height, and flouriſht, adding that as Gamaliel ſaid of the preaching of the Goſpel, that if it were of men it would come to nought, but if of God, ye cannot diſſolve it, leſt ye be found fighters againſt God, the ſame he might ſay confidently ἐπὶ ἡμέρας ταύτης of this day (not of the Goſpel, as the Diatribiſt afterward ſaith, he thinks he means, but cannot really do ſo in this place, againſt ſuch * expreſs words) that ἐπειδὴν ἐκ θεοῦ ᾖ, διὰ τοῦτο οὐ μόνον οὐ καλύεται, ἀλλὰ καθ' ἕκαστον ἔτος ἐπιδίδωσι καὶ λαμπροτέρα γίνεται, ſeeing, or becauſe it is from God, therefore 'tis not only not diſſolved, but every year advances, and becomes more ſplendid, and yet farther adding (in the words recited by the Diatribiſt, and by omitting the former, rendred capable of being miſunderſtood) ἐπεὶ καὶ τὸ κήρυγμα ἐν ὀλίγοις ἔτεσι τὴν πᾶσαν καθέλαβεν οἰκουμένην, καίτοι σκηνοποιῶν, ἁλιέων, ἀγραμμάτων, ἰδιωτῶν πανταχοῦ διακομιζόντων αὐτό, ſeeing the preaching (of it certainly, i. e. of the day, or elſe it can have no coherence with the feaſt, or antecedents, and whole contexture) in a few years took poſſeſſion of the whole world, though tentmakers and fiſhermen, unlearned and idiots brought it amongſt them.

* Τοῦτο καὶ γὼ περὶ τ ἡμέρας ταύτης ἔιποιμι ἂν ῥᾴδιον.

14. How far this is now from doing prejudice to the Univerſal obſervation of this day in the Apoſtles times, I leave the Reader, (and, if he pleaſe, the Diatribiſt alſo) to conſider.

SECT. XXI.

The Diatribiſts anſwer to my concluſion. Strictures on ſome paſſages in it.

Numb. 1. WHAT now remains is by way of reply to my concluſion, that the faſtidious rejecting or not obſerving the Feſtivals of the univerſal Church muſt be looked on as an act of affected departure from the univerſal Church of Chriſt in all ages, and not only from the reformed Church of England.

2. This, ſaith he, is an heavy charge, if it can be proved. And for that I muſt now refer my ſelf to the premiſſes in that treatiſe and in this defence, nor indeed can it be reaſonable that I deſcend to any other way of probation or vindication, till this which I have uſed be invalidated; For a concluſion being (as this is) deduced from the premiſſes, what more can be required to eſtabliſh the concluſion, than the confirmation of the premiſſes?

3. And therefore as it is againſt all laws of Diſcourſe, for the Diatribiſt to confute or deny, or make anſwer to the concluſion, any otherwiſe than by refuting the media, which have inferred it; ſo muſt it be in me, to reply to ſuch offers of anſwer, which can never ſignify any thing, as long as my premiſſes ſtand in force, eſpecially if it proceed by denying thoſe things, which this vindication hath undertaken to prove, without offering anſwer (as without the ſpirit of divination it could not) to thoſe proofs.

4. For example, The Diatribiſt here begins with this affirmation, that I have not proved that the univerſal Church of the firſt age hath obſerved any of the Feſtivals; And I have here evidently proved that Eaſter was obſerved by Philip and John the Apoſtles, and from them received by the Aſiaticks, or Eaſtern Chriſtians and ſo likewiſe by the Weſtern from S. Peter and S. Paul, and ſo ſure there is no farther need of refuting this affirmation.

5. And the ſame might in like manner appear in each inſuing ſtep of his anſwer, and the rule by which he is content to be judged applied exactly to the condemning him in this very buſineſs of the Eaſter Feſtivity, which is of as much force, as if it equally appeared of every other of the great Feſtivals: But ſtill this were to repeat what hath here been already ſaid, and vindicated from all his exceptions.

6. In ſtead whereof I ſhall only gather up what hath any thing of news in it. And firſt, Let me admire his candor, when he will not ſtick to grant this rule to be good, that whatever doctrine or practice hath the concordant atteſtation of the Churches of the Apoſtolical time, while they were yet alive, it was Apoſtolical] but withal adds as if he had been too liberal, that the negative is a ſurer rule to judge by, (as if indeed any predication could be ſurer than that which is identical.)

7. Next his argument againſt the concordant atteſtation of the primitive ancients concerning Apoſtolical tradition, drawn from Papias's affirmation of the Millennium, had not, I confeſs, formerly been produced, but it falls out that I have * elſewhere ſufficiently cleared it.

* Qu. 1. §. 38. and in the Def. of L. Falklands Tract of Infall.

8. Thirdly, his citation p. 197. from the Pract. Cat. p. 181. that Chriſtmaſs was not univerſally ſolemnized till about 400. years after Chriſt, and after (a little more to his advantage) till at leaſt the 400. years, p. 201.] is both as to the words and as to the ſenſe very much miſreported; The place is ready to be ſeen, and lies thus. The authority by which this feſtival ſtands in the Church, is that of the practice of the Primitive univerſal Church, and this made appear, firſt, From the immemorial obſervation of it, ſecondly, From the ancient Fathers ſpeaking of it as an ancient uſage (in the notion of ἐθιζόμενα even now given,) thirdly, By the teſtimonies not only of the author of the Conſtitutions (ancient though not Apoſtolical) but of Origen, of Cyprian, of Ammianus Marcellinus, ſpeaking of Julian 1300. years ſince, and mentioning the Epiphany as a known feſtival of the Church, and ſo both that, and Chriſtmaſs of a far greater antiquity, than the time of Julian. Laſtly, by the words of Chryſoſtom, that though the particular day December 25. was not fixt at Antioch till his time, yet from Rome over all the Weſt it had been ſo obſerved from the moſt ancient records of Chriſtianity. Upon which my concluſion is, that it appears at leaſt to be an Eccleſiaſtical conſtitution very early received over all the Weſt, the far greateſt part of Chriſtendom, and within 400. years univerally ſolemnized, and this a very competent authority, when withal 'tis ſo probable, that it may be more, according to a * rule of the Fathers, That very ancient and general uſages, whoſe beginnings are unknown, may be reſolved to be of Apoſtolical inſtitution or practice, &c.

* In eis quæ ſcriptura nec jubet, nec prohibet, illud eſt ſequendum quod conſuetudo roboravit, quæ ſine dubio de traditione manavit. Tertul. de coron. milit. & Quod univerſa tenet eccleſia, nec concilijs inſtitutum, ſed ſemper retentum eſt, non niſi poteſtate Apoſtolica traditum rectiſſimè creditur. Aug. de bapt. con. Donat. l. 4. c. 23.

This

This I have thus tranſcribed from that place, to demonſtrate what fidelity there was in this citation, 9.
not only in applying that to the Feſtival, which belonged peculiarly to that particular day Dec. 25.
but alſo in affirming from me, that it was not univerſally ſolemnized till about 400. years and till at leaſt the 400. year (which leaves it free to be of a date yet later) when I ſay 'tis ſo probable that it was of Apoſtolical inſtitution or practice, that the feaſt of Epiphany was ſpoken of, as a known feſtival long before that time, and the feaſt of Innocents, attending this of Chriſtmaſs, affirmed by Origen to be by the holy Fathers according to the will of God commanded to be for ever celebrated in the Church, and only added, that it appears to be at leaſt an Eccleſiaſtical inſtitution very early received over all the Weſt, and the far greater part of Chriſtendom, and within 400. years univerſally ſolemnized.

What can be more viſibly unjuſt than this? or what heed can be given to teſtimonies thus tranſ- 10.
formed into ſhapes, which the writer never dream'd of, and yet from them concluſions deduced ſuch as here follow in this place of the Diatribiſt, that my raſh zeal hath carried me beyond the bounds of Reaſon and Religion.

To which expreſſion of his all that I have to ſay is, firſt, That my concluſion was inferred out of 11.
premiſſes, not dictated by zeal; ſecondly, That it affix'd no cenſure on any perſon, belonging only to thoſe who ſhould be found guilty of it, and ſo was wholly deſigned to ends of charity, to reform, not to reproach any: thirdly, That if there had been any thing of raſh, or bitter in it, it might have admoniſht the Diatribiſt μὴ ἐξομοιοῦσθαι, not to be ſo ſoon guilty of greater ſharpneſs; As it is, I muſt only infer, that it ſeems the guilty perſon hath the priviledge of accuſing and judging in any form of language, and ſo I ſhall not be ſo unſeaſonable as to admoniſh him of the injuſtice of it, at a time when it is ſo improbable he will reap profit by it.

There is now nothing behind but his faſtidious reflections upon three Queſtions which I had return'd 12.
to the Author of the ſixteen Quæres; But becauſe I ſee he likes not the Queſtions in my terms, and in his propoſing of four others, inſerts particulars, wholly rejected by me, as that of [parts of worſhip] adding [as it is propounded, §. 9.] (but I hope not by me ſo propounded) of abuſe to ſuperſtition and profaneneſs, &c. I ſhall be as little obliged to accept them in his terms or tempted by the nature of the task or by the probability of the ſucceſs of it with this Diatribiſt) to begin new diſputes at this time; It is not amiſs that we ſhake hands for a while and commune each with his own heart in ſtillneſs: And ſo I heartily take my leave of him.

OR THE

DEGREES of ARDENCY

IN

CHRISTS PRAYER

Reconciled with His fulneſs of HABITUAL GRACE.

In Reply to the Author of a Book, Intituled, A mixture of Scholaſtical Divinity with Practical.

Sect. 1. I Was very willing to hearken to the ſeaſonable advice of many, and wholly withdraw my ſelf à foro contentioſo, to ſome more pleaſing and profitable imployment; but diſcerning it to be the deſire of the Author of the Book, Intituled, A mixture of Scholaſtical and Practical Divinity, that I ſhould reply to his examination of one paſſage of mine againſt Mr. Cawdrey, I ſhall make no ſcruple immediately to obey him, not only becauſe it may be done in very few words, but eſpecially becauſe the doctrine, which he affixeth to me, ſeems (and not without ſome reaſon) to be contrary to the truth of Scripture, which I am to look on with all reverent ſubmiſſion, and acquieſce in, with captivation of underſtanding, and ſo not aſſert any thing from my own conceptions, which is but ſeemingly contrary to it.

2. The propoſition which he affixes to me, is * this; That Chriſts love of God was capable of farther degrees; and that he refutes, as being contrary to that point (a truth of Scripture) which he had in hand, viz. The dwelling of all fulneſs of habitual grace in Chriſt.

* Of the fulneſs of Chriſt, p. 258.

3. By this I ſuppoſe I may conclude his meaning to be, that I have affirmed Chriſts love of God (meaning thereby that habitual grace of divine Charity) to have been capable of further degrees, ſo as that capacity of further degrees, is the denyal of all fulneſs of that habitual grace already in him.

4. And truly, had I thus expreſt my ſelf, or let fall any words, which might have been thus interpretable, I acknowledge I had been very injurious not only to the verity of God, but alſo to my own conceptions, and even to the cauſe which I had in hand, which had not been ſupported, but betrayed by any ſuch apprehenſion of the imperfection of Chriſts habitual graces.

5. This I could eaſily ſhew, and withal how cautiouſly and expreſly it was fore-ſtall'd by me; But to the matter in hand, it is ſufficient, that I profeſs I never thought it; but deem it a contrariety to expreſs words of Scripture, in any man who ſhall think it, and in ſhort, that I never gave occaſion to any man to believe it my opinion, having never ſaid it in thoſe words which he ſets up to refute in me, never in any other that may be reaſonably interpretable to that ſenſe.

6. Firſt, I ſaid it not in thoſe words, which he undertakes to refute; Theſe are p. 258. of his Book thus ſet down by him.

"This point may ſerve for confutation of a paſſage in Dr. H. againſt Mr. C. to wit, That Chriſts love of "God was capable of farther degrees.]

7. Theſe words I never ſaid, nor indeed are they to be found in the Paſſage, which he ſets down from me, and whereon he grounds them; which, ſaith he, is this:

Dr. Hammond p. 222. In the next place he paſſeth to the inforcement of my argument, from what we read concerning Chriſt himſelf, that he was more intenſe in Prayer at one time than another, when yet the lower degree was ſure no ſin, and prepares to make anſwer to it, viz. That Chriſt was above the Law, and did more than the Law required, but men fall ſhort by many degrees of what is required. But ſure this anſwer is nothing to the matter now in hand, for the evidencing of which, that example of Chriſt was brought by me, viz. That ſincere Love is capable of degrees. This was firſt ſhewed in ſeveral men, and in the ſame man at ſeveral times, in the ſeveral ranks of Angels, and at laſt in Chriſt himſelf, more ardent in one act of Prayer than in another.

8. Here the Reader finds not the words [Chriſts love of God is capable of further degrees] and when by deduction he endeavours to conclude them from theſe words, his concluſion falls ſhort in one word, viz. [further] and 'tis but this,

That the example of Chriſt will never prove Dr. H. his concluſion, unleſs it infer, that Chriſts love of God was capable of degrees.]

This

This is but a slight change indeed, yet may be worthy to be taken notice of in the entrance (though the principal weight of my answer be not laid on it) and suggest this seasonable advertisement, that he which undertakes to refute any saying of another, must oblige himself to an exact recital of it to a word, and syllable; Otherwise he may himself become the only Author of the Proposition, which he refutes. 9.

The difference is no more than by the addition of the word [further.] But that addition may possibly beget in the Readers understanding, a very considerable difference. 10.

For this proposition [Christs love of God was capable of further degrees] is readily interpretable to this dangerous sense, that Christs love of God was not full, but so far imperfect, as to be capable of some further degrees than yet it had; And thus sure the Author I have now before me, acknowledges to have understood the words, and accordingly proposeth to refute them, from the consideration of the all-fulness of habitual grace in Christ, which he could not do, unless he deemed them a prejudice to it. 11.

But those other words; which though he finds not in my papers, he yet not illogically infers from them [that Christs love of God was capable of degrees, more intense at one time than at another] are not so liable to be thus interpreted, but only import that Christs love of God had in its latitude or amplitude several degrees, one differing from another, sec. magis & minus, all of them comprehended in that all-full perfect love of God, which was always in Christ so full, and so perfect, as not to want, and so not to be capable of further degrees. 12.

The Matter is clear; The degrees of which Christs love of God is capable, are by me thus expresst, that his love was more intense at one time than at another; but still the higher of those degrees of intenseness, was as truly acknowledged to be in Christs love, at some time, viz. in his agony, as the lower was at another, and so all the degrees, which are supposed to be mentioned of his love, are also supposed, and expresly affirmed to have been in him at some time or other; whereas a supposed capacity of further degrees, seems at least (and so is resolved by that Author) to infer, that these degrees were not in Christ (the direct contradictory to the former Proposition) and so that they were wanting in him, and the but seeming asserting of that want, is justly censured, as prejudicial to Christs fulness. Here then was one misadventure in his proceeding. 13.

But this is but the proœmial part of my Reply, there is another more material branch of it still behind, which may yet seem necessary to be added, viz. to mind him of (what he well knows) the distinction between habits and acts of virtues, or graces; and that love the Genus doth equally comprehend both these species, and that his discourse of all fulness belonging to the habitual grace of Christ, I speak distinctly of another matter, viz. of the degrees of that grace discernable in the several acts of it. 14.

This distinction I thought legible enough before, both in the Tract of Will-worship, and in the Answer to Mr. Caw. 15.

In the former the * Refuter confesseth to find it, reciting these words of mine, It is possible for the same person constantly to love God above all, and yet to have higher expressions of that love at one time than another. Where the expressions at one time, and at another, must needs refer to the several acts of the same, all-full habitual love. Only I guess not what temptation he had to choose that expression, which he there makes use of, viz. 16. * Pag. 259.

[That there Dr. H. minceth the matter, and speaketh more cautelously] adding [that what he there saith is nothing to the matter now in hand.]

Whereas first those of Will-worship being the First papers written on that subject, are sure very pertinent to ascertain him of the meaning of the latter, written in defence of them; and secondly, the early cautelous speaking there, might have made further later caution unnecessary: and thirdly, I could not be said to mince (which to vulgar ears signifies to retract in some degree what I had said before,) and again, speak more cautiously, when that was the first time of my speaking of it.

Mean-while it is manifest, and his own confession, that there these were my words, and those so cautious, that this sense of the words which he undertakes to refute, could not be affixt on them. And this I should have thought sufficient to have preserved my innocence, and forstalled his Use of Confutation. 17.

But the answer to Mr. C. which occasioned it, was, I think, as cautious also, First, In the words recited by the Refuter, viz. that Christ himself was more ardent in one act of prayer than in another. Secondly, In the words following in that answer, but not recited by him, viz. that the sincerity of this or that virtue expresst in this or that performance, is it we speak of, when we say it consists in a latitude and hath degrees; where the [this or that performance] are certainly Acts of the virtue, consisting in a latitude, and the having degrees (viz. in that latitude) no way implies him that hath that virtue in that latitude (viz. Christ) to want at present; and in that sense to be capable of farther degrees. 18.

I am willing to look as jealously as I can on any passage of my own, which falls under any mans censure; and therefore finding nothing in the words (set down by him as the ground of the Refutation) which is any way capable of it, I have reviewed the whole section, and weighed every period, as suspiciously as I could; to observe whether I could draw or wrest that consequence from any other passage, not recited by him. 19.

And I find none in any degree liable, except it should be this in the † beginning of the Sect. Where setting down the argument, as it lay in the Treatise of Will-worship. I say 'tis possible for the same person which so loves God (i. e. with all the heart) to love him, and expres that love more intensely at one time than another, as appeared by the example of Christ. 20. † Pag. 221. n. 1.

If this be thought capable of misapprehension, by reason of the [and] disjoining love from the expressions of it, and so the expressions belonging to the acts, the love be deemed to denote the habitual love; I must only say, that this is a misapprehension, for that by loving with all the heart, in the first place, I certainly meant the sincere habit of Love, by love in the latter place, the inward acts of love, and by the expressions of love, the outward expressions of those inward acts, and of those acts only I speak, and of those expressions, when I say they are more intense at one time than another. 21.

The word love, as I said, is a genus, equally comprehending the two species, habitual and actual 22.

love, and equally applicable to either of the species, to the acts as well as habit of love. And so when I say love is capable of degrees, the meaning is clear, The generical word love restrained to the latter species, i. e. considered in respect of the acts of love, gradually differenced one from the other, is in that respect, capable of degrees, both inwardly and in outward expressions; that act of love, that poured out, and expresst it self in the more ardent prayer, was a more intense act of love, than another act of the same habitual love, which did not so ardently express it self.

23. I shall explain this by the Refuters own Confession. The death of Christ, saith he, was an higher expression of Christs love of us, than his poverty, hunger, or thirst. To this I subjoin that such as the expression was, such was the act of inward love, of which that was an expression, it being certain that each of these expressions had an act of internal love, of which they were so many proportionably different expressions; And from hence I suppose it unavoidably consequent, that that act of internal love, expresst by his dying for us, was superiour to those former acts, which only expresst themselves in his poverty, and so the same person that loved sincerely, did also love, and express that love more intensly at one time than at another, which was the very thing I had said in another instance. But this I have added ex abundanti more than the Refuters discourse required of me. Pag. 259.

24. It now only remains, that I consider whether this Refuter have in the process of his discourse added any thing, wherein I may be any whit concern'd.

25. And first, saith he, the falshood of such an assertion is evident from the point there handled and confirmed, the absolute fulness of Christs grace, which by the general consent of the Fathers and School-men, was such, as that it excluded all intensive growth.

26. But to this the reply will be easily foreseen, from the premisses, that as the point by him handled and confirmed was distinctly the all-fulness of habitual grace in Christ, so his proofs of it by the consent of Fathers and School-men belong still to that fulness of habitual grace.

27. Witness one for all, Aquinas Ser. 3. qu. 7. art. 12. ad secundum, licet virtus divina possit facere aliquid majus & melius quàm sit habitualis gratia Christi, non tamen --- though the divine power may make somewhat greater and better, than is the habitual grace of Christ, yet --- so 'tis plain he speaks of the fulness of the habitual grace. And ad tertium. In sapientia & gratia aliquis proficere potest dupliciter; uno modo secundùm ipsos habitus sapientiæ & gratiæ augmentatos, & sic Christus in eis non proficiebat. Alio modo secundùm effectus, in quantum aliquis sapientiora & virtuosiora opera facit, & sic Christus proficiebat sapientia & gratiâ, sicut & ætate, quia secundùm processum ætatis perfectiora opera faciebat,--- & in his quæ sunt ad Deum, & in his quæ sunt ad homines. One may increase in wisdom and grace two wayes, one way according to the habits of them increased, and so Christ increased not; another way, according to the effects, when any doth more wise and virtuous works; and so Christ increased in Wisdom and grace, as he did in age, because according to the process of his age, he did more perfect works, and that both in things belonging to God, and men also.

28. And thus are the Schoolmen understood by the Refuter himself, in his producing their testimonies, as appears by the express words [habitual grace, p. 260. lin. penult, and holiness, and the Image of God in him] p. 261. lin. 13. And so 'tis most clear, their consent belongs not, even in his own opinion, to the matter I had, and have in hand, no way denying but asserting a capacity of degrees among the acts of Christs love of God, and the expressions of it.

29. Secondly, He will hear the Doctors objection, and consider of what weight it is.

Objection? against what? against the fulness of habitual grace in Christ? sure never any was by me urged against it. And he cannot now think there was. The degrees of intenseness observable in the several acts of Christ's love, his praying more ardently at one time than another, was all that I concluded from that text, Luke 22. 24. and that is nothing to his habitual love.

30. But even to this he is pleased to frame answers (though I hope his doctrine of the fulness of Christs habitual grace be no way concern'd in it) and to these I shall briefly attend him, as my last stage in this no very long voyage.

31. And first, saith he, the vulgar translation renders ἐκτενέστερον, prolixius; and if this version be good, then there is no place for the Doctors objection.

* Paulus Fagius, Præf. in Vers. Chal. Paraph. in Pentat.

But though I seek no advantage by that vulgar reading, yet thinking it a duty of reverence to that version, to take leave civilly, whensoever I depart from it (wherein I shall have the suffrage of Protestants as learned in both the Languages * Hebrew and † Greek, as any) and that I may to the utmost observe the Refuters steps, I shall not utterly reject it.

32. 'Tis certain ἐκτενὴς doth primarily signifie extension, and that properly belongs to length, and so the comparative ἐκτενέστερον to a greater degree of that length. And if it be granted, that it so signifie here, there will yet be place equally for my conclusion.

33. For in every act of Prayer, be it but the shortest ejaculation, sent out by Christ, I suppose (and my Refuter must not doubt of it) there was some degree of ardency or intension; And then sure according to the multiplying of those acts, lengthening that prayer, there must still in Christ (I say not in every one of us) be a proportionable multiplication of those degrees, and so parallel to a greater length; a greater intension.

34. This is clear, and I need not add (what else I might) that the very multiplication of more acts of any virtue, supposing it equally sincere in the habit (and such is the length of Prayer, when it is in Christ) is more valuable in the sight of God (and that argues it more excellent) than the smaller number of those acts would be, and proportionably more abundantly rewarded by him, who rewardeth every man not only according to the sincerity of his heart, but also secundùm opera, according to the multiplied acts or works, the more abundant labour proceeding from this sincerity. And so that will suffice for his first Answer.

35. But then, 2. saith he, suppose we stick unto our own translation, yet the place may fairly be so interpreted, as that it may no ways advantage the purpose of the Doctor. For ἐκτενέστερον, more earnestly, may be considered in reference unto either the object unto whom he prayed, God; or the matter, against which he prayed, the evils with which he conflicted in his agony.

First then, saith he, he did not in his agony pray more earnestly than at other times, if we consider his prayer

prayer in reference unto the object, unto whom it was, God. The Religion, and inward worship of his prayer, was for degrees always alike equal. His trust and dependance upon God, love of, zeal and devotion towards God, from which all his prayers flowed, were not at one time more intense than at another.

But now secondly, He prayed more earnestly in his agony than at other times, in regard of the matter, against which he prayed, the evils which he encountred with, which if they were not greater, than those that he deprecated in the former prayer, v. 42. yet at least they made a greater impression upon his humane nature; for they put him into a bloody sweat. Being in an agony, he prayed more earnestly, and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood, falling down to the ground.

These are the words of his second answer, and they are in the second part, the very distinct confession 36.
of all that I pretend in this matter (and therefore I need not make any reflections on the first part of them.) For whatsoever, or how great soever the occasion of the increase of his intension was (which I am willing to believe proportionable to the degree of the intension, a very weighty occasion that thus inflamed his ardency) yet still, 'tis confest, that on this occasion, he now prayed more earnestly than at other times, that which now approached made a greater impression on his humane nature; which what is it, but a proof of the point by me asserted, that Christ himself was more ardent in one act of prayer (this in his agony) than in another.

As for the greatness of the occasion, so confest-ly great as to cast him into that prodigious sweat, falling 37.
ὡσεὶ θρόμβοι αἵματος, as it were drops of blood, that may testifie, but it cannot prejudge the ardency, which was occasioned thereby.

'Twas not in Christ (he will easily suppose with me) as it is oft discernable in many of us, that 38.
those which have really no sincerity of love or zeal to God, can yet like the Mariners in the tempest, by some pressing fear or danger be awaked to but formal, and, be they never so loud, but hypocritically zealous prayers.

The ardency in Christ was sincere ardency, accompanied with acts of love and trust of the same tem- 39.
per; and the heightning it ἐπίτασιν, was an addition of degrees to that act of ardency, and so of prayer, and proportionably of love and trust in God, above either what there was, or what there was occasion for, at other times.

Of this I shall hope it is possible to find some instances among men (of whose graces it can be no 40.
blasphemy to affirm, that they are capable of degrees) suppose we a sincerely pious man, a true lover of God, and no despiser of his poor persecuted Church, and suppose we, as it is very supposeable, that at some time the seas roar, the tempest be at its hight, and the waves beat violently upon this frail brittle vessel, may it not be a season for that pious mans ardency to receive some growth? for his zeal to be emulous of those waves, and pour it self out more profusely at such, than at a calmer season? I hope there be some at this time among us, in whom this point is really exemplified; if it be not, it is an effect of want, not fulness of love. But I need not thus to inlarge; It is not by this Refuter denied of the person of Christ, and that is my intire ὅπερ ἔδει δεῖξαι in reference either to Mr. C. or to him, the utmost that I undertook to demonstrate then, or to justifie now.

And so I shut up this hasty paper, hoping that he which invited, and promised it a welcome, in case 41.
it were given him in a fair and Scholastical way, having nothing to accuse in it, as to the first Epithet, will abate somewhat in reference to the second, and allow it a friendly, though being unqualified, it pretend not to a more hospitable reception.

ΕὐΣΧΗΜΟΝΩΣ, ΚΑΙ ΚΑΤΑ ΤΑΞΙΝ:

OR, THE

GROUNDS OF UNIFORMITY

From 1 Cor. 14. 40.

Vindicated from Mr JEANES's Exceptions to One paſſage in the View of the DIRECTORY.

1 Cor. 14. 40.

Εὐσχημόνως, καὶ κατὰ τάξιν.

Decently, and according to appointment.

Numb. 1. SINCE the publiſhing that Anſwer to Mr J. concerning the degrees of ardency in Chriſt's prayer, I am advertiſed of another paſſage in that volum, in which I am concern'd, relating to ſome words of mine in the view of the Directory pag. 19. on the head of Uniformity in Gods ſervice, and particularly reſpecting my rendring of the Apoſtle 1 Cor. 14. 40. Let all things be done εὐσχημόνως, καὶ κατὰ τάξιν.

2. Theſe indeed I thus rendred [decently, and according to order, or appointment] and affirmed the importance of that place to be, that all be done in the Church according to cuſtom, and appointment, rendring this reaſon of the former, becauſe it was implied in εὐσχημόνως decently (cuſtom being the only rule of decency, &c.) and of the latter, becauſe the words do literally import this, κατὰ τάξιν, i. e. according to order or appointment.

3. To the former of theſe he makes his firſt exception, thus [He dares not affirm that this is the immediate ſenſe of the place, but only that it is implied; It cannot be denied but that decency doth imply ſuch cuſtoms, the omiſſion of which neceſſarily infer indecency, but that the omiſſion of ſuch ceremonies as ours doth infer undecency, the Doctor and all his party can never make good; What undecency can the Doctor prove to be in the adminſtration of Baptiſm without the Croſs, as alſo in publick prayers and preaching without a Surplice? But of this ſee farther in Ames in the places but now quoted; The Doctor may perhaps look upon him as an inconſiderable adverſary. But we ſhall think his Arguments conſiderable, until the Doctor, or ſome other of his party give a ſatisfactory anſwer unto them. In the mean while let us examine the proof that the Doctor brings for this ſenſe: and it is, becauſe cuſtom is the only rule of decency.

This propoſition, though very ſtrange, is prooflеſs; and therefore we might as well reject it, as the Doctor dictates it. But I ſhall add a confutation of it from theſe following arguments.

Firſt, If cuſtom be the only rule of decency, then nothing elſe can be a rule thereof beſides cuſtom; but this is falſe, for the light and law of nature is alſo a rule thereof, and that infallible.

Secondly, Nothing can be undecent, that is agreeable unto the only rule of decency. But divers things are undecent, which yet can plead cuſtom; and this is ſo evident, as that I will not ſo much undervalue the Doctors judgment as to endeavour any proofs thereof. It is impoſſible that the only rule of decency ſhould be undecent: But yet it is very poſſible that many cuſtoms ſhould be undecent, and therefore I ſhall conclude, that cuſtom is not the only rule of decency.

Thirdly, Laſtly, unto cuſtom, as you may ſee in both Ariſtotle and Aquinas, the frequent uſage of a thing is required. But now there may be decency or handſomeneſs in the firſt uſage of a thing; and of this decency, cuſtom is not the rule, and therefore it is not the only rule of decency.

4. The firſt thing here charged on me is timidity, that I dare not ſay, what I ſaid not, and this attended with a conceſſion (in a limited ſenſe) of the truth of what I did ſay; the ſecond, is the impertinence, or unſufficiency of that, in that limited ſenſe, to prove what he conceives I would have from it, viz. that the omiſſion of our ceremonies doth infer indecency; And the proof of this charge twofold, firſt, By way of queſtion, founded in two inſtances, the Croſs in Baptiſm, and the Surplice in publick prayer and preaching; ſecondly, By reference to Ames, and reſolving to think his arguments conſiderable, till a ſatisfactory anſwer be given them. And his third charge is, my uſing an unſufficient proof to prove my interpretation, viz. this, becauſe cuſtom is the only rule of decency] which he confutes by three arguments.

5. Theſe three charges I ſhall now very briefly examine, and if I miſtake not, clearly evacuate. The firſt, by aſſuring him, firſt that I did dare to ſay, and indeed ſaid (as I then thought, perſpicuouſly) the the full of what I meant; but that it was no way incumbent on me, to ſay either what I did not mean, or what Mr. J. or any other ſhould be juſtly able to charge of want of truth in the leaſt degree. And ſecondly, if what I ſaid, cannot, as he confeſſes, be denied, to have truth in it in one ſenſe, I demand why muſt it be a not daring (which is wont to ſignifie timidity or cowardice) that I affirmed it not in another ſenſe, wherein he doth not conſent to it?

To make ſhort, and prevent all poſſibility of his, or any mans farther miſtaking my words, I ſhall 6.
haſten to tell him the full of my meaning in that paſſage, that [εὐσχημόνως decently] implies [according to cuſtom] viz. that in ſuch things as theſe, of which then I ſpake, geſtures, habits, and the like circumſtances of Gods publick ſervice, wherein the Apoſtle preſcribes care of decency, 'tis neceſſary to obſerve the cuſtoms of the place wherein we live: This I then thought ſufficiently explicated by exemplifying in mens wearing long hair, which the Apoſtle proved indecent, by its being againſt φύσις, i. e. ſaith Suidas, χρονία συνήθεια, a cuſtom of ſome continuance in that place (which yet in women there, and in men in other places, where that cuſtom prevail'd not, had nothing indecent in it.)

But this exemplification of my meaning he thought fit to conceal from the Reader, and ſupply that 7.
vacuity only with an &c. yet reciting at length, to a word, what was immediately before, and after it. His deſign in ſo doing I judge not, but ſhall endeavour to undeceive the Reader for the future, by farther inlarging on it.

All people, I think, in the world have ſome outward ſignifications, and expreſſions of Reverence; 8.
but all have not the ſame, but according to Topical cuſtoms, ſome different, ſome contrary to others. We of this, and all our neighbour Nations, expreſs reverence by uncovering the head; the Turks do the contrary. Again, among Chriſtians, 'tis cuſtomary for men ſo to expreſs their Reverence, but for women, ſaith the Apoſtle, it is not, but the contrary; and ſo ſtill it is among us. Nay it was once among ſome hethens (that worſhipt Mercury) an act of the higheſt reverence, even of adoration, to throw ſtones at their God; among others, to cut themſelves with lances, when they were a praying to him. And it can be no news to Mr. J. that theſe cuſtoms were not obſerved by other countreys; the Jews that threw ſtones at Chriſt, and the Dæmoniack that cut himſelf with them, were neither of them interpretable to worſhip him.

This therefore was no dark, but viſible foundation of what I ſaid; In aſſigning any rite or ceremony 9.
for the ſervice of God, decency, ſaith the Apoſtle, was to be obſerved; the only rule to judge of that, is, ſay I, to conſider the cuſtoms of that particular place, of which we conſult. Where bowing the knee, or kneeling on the ground, is cuſtomarily uſed as a token of reverence, where putting off or keeping off the hat, there the choice of ceremonies muſt be made with reſpect to thoſe particular cuſtoms; Here 'tis evident that I mean not the frequent uſage of that ceremony, in oppoſition to a firſt uſage of it, as Mr. J. is willing to miſtake me, and found one of his arguments on that miſtake, but the ſtanding cuſtom of the place, by which, as by an argument or evidence, ſuch a ceremony is demonſtrated to be a reverential reſpect, and ſo (for the ſervice of God to whom all reverence is due) decent in that place, though in Nature, or in the eſtimation of all other men, it be not ſo.

Certainly this is ſo evident in it ſelf, and ſo undeniably the importance of my words, that there can 10.
be no need farther to inlarge on it, much leſs to examine the weight, or meaning of his conceſſion, that it cannot be denied but that decency doth imply ſuch cuſtoms, the omiſſion of which neceſſarily infers indecency.]

This ſaying of his ſome Readers may look on with Reverence, as not readily comprehending the 11.
importance of it; others may chance to deſpiſe it under the appearance of a tautology. But upon pondering, it will appear that the Author had a meaning in it, which he deſigned ſhould bring in ſome advantage to his cauſe, and without which, he was not likely to advance far, or ſucceed in it.

Some cuſtoms we know there are, which are ſo highly decent, as that the omiſſion of them neceſſarily 12.
infers indecency; But what are they? why, ſuch as the law of (at leaſt Lapſt) nature preſcribes, covering of nakedneſs, and the like; of which 'tis evident among all that have not learnt of Carneades induſtriouſly to raſe out all natural meaſures of honeſt and diſhoneſt, that the omiſſion of them infers indecency, yea and neceſſarily infers it, this ſort of decency being natural to all men, that ever were, or ſhall be in the world, born and educated in what nation, or inured to what cuſtoms ſoever, and this the very firſt hour after our firſt parents fall, before any cuſtom had been contracted which might recommend it to them.

And as of theſe his Rule is true, that the omiſſion of theſe, neceſſarily infers undecency, ſo it is in a 13.
manner proper to theſe, and belongs not to any other ſort of things, whoſe decency flows but from ſome poſitive command though it be of God, or cuſtome or command of men. To ſuch things whoſe decency flows from any command either of God or man, this rule cannot be fully applied, for that command might have been not given, or there might be a ſpace before it was given, or a people to whom it was not given, and then in any of thoſe caſes, the omiſſion would not be indecent to whom the law was not given; and ſo it doth not neceſſarily and abſolutely, but only dependently on that law, and conditionally, infer indecency; ſo in like manner the Rule holds not in thoſe things, whoſe decency is introduced only by cuſtom, for that, as Mr. I. truly ſaith, ariſing from frequency of actions, it muſt again be granted, that there was a time when that which now is cuſtom, was new, and ſo not cuſtom, and again there are, or may be nations, with whom that cuſtom (whatſoever can be inſtanced in) hath not prevailed, which prejudges ſtill the neceſſity ſpoken of, that ſuch omiſſion ſhould infer indecency.

And ſo we ſee the ſum of Mr. J. his liberal conceſſion, viz. that decency implies natural decency, or 14.
ſuch cuſtoms, which are naturally decent, and ſo the omiſſion of them naturally indecent; and if the Doctor or his party do not prove, or make good, that the adminiſtration of baptiſm without the croſs, is againſt the law of nature, that the preaching without the ſurplice bears analogy to the diſcloſing of Nakedneſs, he is utterly refuted by Mr. J. in his interpretation of εὐσχημόνως, or notion of decency.

That this is indeed his meaning (though ſomewhat darkned in that his expreſſion) will appear but 15.
conſequent to the two things, which he hath premiſed in this matter, from Ameſius his notion of decency, p. 64. in Marg. 1. that decency requires not that any ſacred things be inſtituted de novo, but only that thoſe things which are inſtituted by God, be uſed in that manner which is agreeable to the dignity of them; ſecondly, ſecondly, that as order ſo decency belongs to civil offices, as well as ſacred things, in which, indecorum eſt vitium oppoſitum debito illi modo, qui requiritur ad eorum juſtum finem & uſum conſequendum, indecency is a vice oppoſed to that due manner, which is required to the obtaining the juſt end and uſe of thoſe things. Now if in the former of theſe, the mode, he ſpeaks of, as agreeable to the dignity of thoſe things which are inſtituted, be it ſelf ſuppoſed by him to be inſtituted by men, then muſt he acknowledge humane power of inſtituting ceremonies, which being ſo contrary to his deſign, I muſt reſolve not to be intended by him; but rather that as the ſacred things are inſtituted by God, ſo the mode, which is conſentaneous to their dignity, is inſtituted by God alſo, and that nothing is decent in ſacris, which is not ſo inſtituted. And ſo likewiſe on the ſecond head, that of civil offices. For that indecency, which is a vice or ſin, muſt be contrary to ſome law of Gods, and ſo alſo that which is oppoſed to the due manner which is required, and ſo is neceſſary either neceſſitate medii, or præcepti alſo, to obtaining a juſt end, this ſure is more than the omiſſion of an indifferent cuſtom, which may or may not be continued without any offence againſt nature, even the omiſſion of ſtrict univerſal duty, either natural decency, or ſomewhat that bears proportion with it.

Now this being thus far explained, it is time to cloſe with Mr. J. and mind him, what he cannot but know, that the decency which I ſaid implied cuſtom, is certainly another thing from natural decency, and hath place only in thoſe things, the omitting of which doth not neceſſarily infer indecency. That omiſſion which neceſſarily infers indecency, infers it in all that ever did, or ſhall omit it; we know in logick, that no propoſition is neceſſary, which is not καθ' ἑκαστα, true in the whole ſpecies, of all, and every one, and I leave it to his judgment, whether he think the Dr. and his party (i. e. Prælatiſts, I ſuppoſe,) do conceive, that Adam (whether in, or out of paradiſe) Noah in, or out of the Ark, &c. were obliged to pray in Surplices, under pain of indecency? And ſo (in his other inſtance) that John Baptiſt, that Chriſt, or (becauſe the text ſaith, that he baptized not, but his diſciples) that thoſe diſciples, even before the death of Chriſt, might not baptize any without the ſign of the Croſs, but under the ſame penalty?

16. Nay 'tis already paſt queſtion, that Mr. J. in his firſt argument againſt my dictate (as he calls it) ſaith, that the light and law of Nature is alſo a rule of decency, and ſo not only cuſtom: And if ſo, then cuſtom is a rule of decency alſo, and not only the Law and light of Nature, and where cuſtom, and not the light of Nature is the rule, there the omiſſion of that, doth not neceſſarily infer indecency. And of ſuch decency alone it is evident that I ſpake, on the head of Uniformity, (and could not ſpeak ſenſe, if I ſpake, either of any other, or of the General notion of Decency, which is competible to any other) and from thence it follows demonſtratively, that of that Decency of which I ſpake, (though not of that, of which it is certain I ſpake not) ſtill Cuſtom is the only rule of decency.

17. This therefore I hope may ſerve in anſwer to his firſt charge, that of my timidity, that I dared not ſay, what I ſaid not; together with a view of his conceſſion of the truth of what I did ſay, and the wary limitation of that conceſſion.

18. Secondly then to his ſecond charge, the unſufficiency of that limited truth (which is the utmoſt he will yield my propoſition) to prove what I would have from it.] It will ſoon appear of how little force it is, when firſt, my meaning was quite another thing from what he affixt to my words, or yielded me in his limited conceſſion, as hath already been largely manifeſted; and ſecondly, my concluſion is regularly conſequent to that which was alone my meaning. This latter, the addition of a few words will clear alſo.

19. My concluſion deſigned in that Section, was the juſtifying of Uniformity of ceremonies in the ſervice of God, and one of the grounds to ſupport that, the decency of thoſe ceremonies, wherein all ſhould join, and that decency ruled, and judged of by the cuſtom of the place, in which ſuch or ſuch a ceremony was an uſual indication, and expreſſion of that reverence, which being due from all inferiours to their ſuperiours, is much more due from all Chriſtians to God.

20. In theſe it is certain, cuſtom is the rule and the only rule of decency; Neither Nature nor Gods Law obliges all mankind to this, or that expreſſion of reverence. Several Nations have their ſeveral manners of doing it; Only Nature tells us, that the moſt reverent manner of treating is beſt becoming God, and that it cannot be decent, to treat God in that manner as we would not do any ſuperiour beſide; and Gods own expoſtulation about the offering polluted bread upon his altar, and of ſacrificing the lame and the ſick, Mal. 1. 8. is a confirmation of that, Offer it now, ſaith God, unto thy governour, will he be pleaſed with thee?

21. Apply this to a particular caſe, to a Nation, where 'tis cuſtomary to addreſs to Kings, kneeling, and there the Analogy will hold exactly, (but not where that is not cuſtom.) Among ſuch I may ſay, Did ever any man that had his limbs and health, offer a petition to his Prince in the geſture of ſitting, or lying along upon a table? and if he did not, then I muſt, I ſuppoſe, regularly conclude from cuſtom, the one rule of decency in ſuch matters, that according to Gods arguing, it cannot be decently done in his ſervice, which is the tendring our petitions or requeſts to that infinite Majeſty. And ſo proportionably in other things.

22. This I did not there apply to the Croſs in Baptiſm, and the Miniſters uſing of the Surplice, as being not pertinent to that place. Another head was ſet apart for thoſe, and proceeded to Section 28. the Croſs expreſly named, and the Surplice implied under the title of other ceremonies, of which it may there be ſeen, what my concluſion was, not what is here deem'd incumbent on me to prove, that the omiſſion of them infers indecency, but that ſtanding on thoſe grounds, whereon they are known to ſtand, Conſcience duly inſtructed cannot think it neceſſary or tending to edification to caſt them cauſleſly out of this Church, or the whole Liturgy for their ſakes.]

23. And yet if Mr. J. ſhall now deſire to know what the grounds of thoſe two Eccleſiaſtical rites are, which alone he is pleaſed to name, on perſwaſion, I ſuppoſe, that they were as fit, if not fitter than any others, for the diſproving my poſition, of [cuſtom being the only rule of decency.] I ſhall now render him a brief account of them, ſuch as may in ſome degree confirm the truth of it.

24. And firſt for the Croſs in Baptiſm. Firſt, 'Tis known to all, that our Chriſtian courſe is a ſpiritual warfare under Chriſt our Great General; Now it is, and always hath been cuſtomary over the world, that in a Militia there ſhould be ſome banner, or Enſign, to which every one ſhould reſort and fight under it. This hath cuſtom made decent among all; and ſuppoſing that cuſtom, the omiſſion of it in an army, is indecent, yet not ſo, as things diſhoneſt, or breaches of the Law of Nature, are indecent.

that

And the Croſs on which Chriſt was crucified, the Emblem alſo of that ſtate that every Chriſtian enters into, a conſtant courageous patience for all afflictions, was by the primitive Chriſtians thus uſed, as their * ſymbol or Enſigne, and every man that is inrolled in the Chriſtian Militia, is by him that inrolls him, ſigned with it; and this practice being thus founded, and received in the Church, S. Auguſtines words are worth remembring, and cannot be denied to have truth in them, † Signum crucis niſi adhibeatur, ſive frontibus credentium, ſive ipſi aquæ quâ regeneramur, &c. nihil rite perficitur, unleſs the ſign of the croſs be uſed either to the foreheads of the believers (who are Baptized) or to the water it ſelf by which we are regenerate, it is not duly performed, i. e. with ſuch ceremonies, as by cuſtom of the Church, the Rule of decency, belong to it; and, Crucis ſigno in fronte hodie tanquam in poſte ſignandus es, omneſque Chriſtiani ſignantur (de Catechiz. rud. c. 20. tom. 4. p. 915.) thou muſt be ſigned now in the forehead with the ſign of the Croſs, as the Iſraelites on their door-poſts, and ſo muſt all Chriſtians. Secondly, the uſage of this ceremony of ſigning with the Croſs, was, we alſo know, frequent in the Church (while the gifts of healing continued) in * curing diſeaſes, and caſting out Devils, ſo that Athanaſius frequently affirms of it, † τῷ σημείῳ τοῦ σταυροῦ πάσα μὲν μάγεια παύεται, πᾶσα δὲ φαρμακεία καταργεῖται, καὶ πᾶσα μὲν τὰ εἴδωλα ἐρημοῦται, καὶ καταλιμπάνεται, by the ſign to the croſs all magick and witchcraft is brought to nought, all the Idol Temples laid waſte and empty. 26.

And then for the Surplice: It is no news I hope for ſeveral ſorts of men to have ſolemn garments for ſolemn actions, which they do not uſe at other times. The Judges upon the Bench, or the Lords at their coming to Parliament, are a ſufficient evidence of this, who wear not thoſe robes in common occaſions which there they do, as betokening their quality and the imployments they are about. And then what is thus cuſtomary in civil matters (viz. to difference perſons and imployments, yea and days by diſtinction of garments) and is allowed to be decent therein, this by analogy undeniable, is as fitly and decently from thence derived to ſolemn ſacred actions alſo, ſuch are the publick offices of the Prieſt; and the commands of our Superiors being added to this decency of the matter, τάξις to εὐσχημόνως, it is, I am ſure, more than undecent for inferiours to be obſtinate, and deny obedience to them. In the choice of the garment there hath hath been alſo, as near as may be, a reſemblance obſerved of thoſe garments, which in Scripture are mentioned for the like ſolemnities, long, ſhining, i. e. white robes, or garments; And if the conſtant uſage of other Churches beſide this of ours, Eaſtern as well as Weſtern for ſo many centuries together, be conſidered, it will be competently able to eſtabliſh an Eccleſiaſtical cuſtom alſo, which, in things of this nature, mere external ornaments, and formalities, is a more rational ground, and rule or meaſure of decency, than any Mr. J. (or Ameſius to boot) will readily be able to produce for the rejecting of them, or breaking and caſting away thoſe bands, which tied no harder a yoke than this upon their ſhoulders. 29.

In this caſe I believe (though not in the garments themſelves) there is place for that decency, the omiſſion of which neceſſarily infers indecency, and for ſuch order the breaking of which muſt ſoon end in ἀκαταστασία (which Mr. J. ſaith S. Paul oppoſes to τάξις) viz. down-right confuſion. 30.

Having ſaid thus much ex abundanti, above what was incumbent on me, I ſhall flatter my ſelf, that I may now ſpare any larger pains, in ſurvey of Ameſius's arguments, which Mr. J. is reſolved to think conſiderable and to ſpeak very magnificently of them, as proving that the text 1 Cor, xiv. 40. rightly underſtood doth not only not authorize any humane inſtitution of ceremonies, but on the contrary plainly condemns them, and this, ſaith he, was ſo well managed by him, that he hath quite beaten out of the field Biſhop Morton and his ſecond, Dr. J. Burges. 31.

Here is triumph indeed. And I ſuppoſe the Reader already diſcerns, what are the grounds of it, viz. that Ameſius acknowledges nothing decent, but that, the omiſſion of which neceſſarily infers indecency, i. e. as hath been ſhewed, nothing but natural decency, the omiſſion of which is a vice contrary to that, by conſequence, that there is no ſuch thing, as an indifferent geſture or garment, which either 32.

civil,

civil, or Eccleſiaſtical cuſtom, or obedience to our lawful ſuperiours may render decent; that whatſoever ſome eternal Law of Nature commands not, the doing of that, if it be but wearing ſuch a garment, which the Canons of any Church preſcribe, nay, by parity of reaſon, a cloak or a button'd doublet, is abſolutely unlawful by force of 1 Cor. xiv. 40.

33. This being the bottom of thoſe arguments of Ameſius, I may ſafely tell Mr. J. that they could no otherwiſe beat either Biſhop Morton, or Dr. J. Burgeſs out of the field, than that they thought them utterly unworthy their making replies to; He that thinks there is nothing indifferent, nothing lawful, the omiſſion of which is not ſin, doth certainly uſe other dictionaries than we do, diſcerns no difference betwixt lawful, and neceſſary; and as the Aſſertors of Fatal production of all things, will not allow a cauſe to be ſufficient to produce any effect which it doth not produce, and ſo produce, that it cannot not produce it, which is to tell me that I ſit, and walk at the very time, when I ſtand ſtill, it being certain, that I am equally able to do both thoſe, when yet I really do the third only; ſo he will not allow any thing morally poſſible, which is not morally neceſſary, which is certainly the giving new laws to words (making the word [lawful or poſſible] which was wont to be interpreted that which may or may not be done, to ſignifie only that which muſt be done, and may not be omitted) and not new reaſons to confirm old paradoxes.

34. This argument of Ameſius againſt things indifferent, that learned Biſhop was well acquainted with, by his familiar conferences with Mr. Hynde and Mr. Lapthorne, two vehement diſputers againſt ceremonies, and whom the Biſhop thought fitter to refute by trifling inſtances, of unbuttoning, and buttoning his caſſock; than by more ſerious attempts of conviction, i. e. in plain terms, to deſpiſe and ſmile at, than to dread; and if Mr. J. have really read Mr. Hooker, whom he ſomewhere intitles our Patron of ceremonies, he may in him remember a diſcourſe of laws, which will ſuperſede all neceſſity, or benefit of my farther inlarging on it.

35. Mean while, to the reproach of my great ſtupidity, I willingly acknowledge, that it cannot enter into my underſtanding, what ſenſe that text is capable of, which with the beſt (poſſible) managery can be taught plainly to condemn all inſtitution of ceremonies in the Church, i. e. by what proſyllogiſms, or ſupplies or advantages of art this Enthymeme ſhall be rendred concludent, The Apoſtle commands that all things be done decently and in order: Ergo, He condemns all inſtitution of Ceremonies for Gods worſhip. He that can maintain this conſequence not only to be true, but (as Mr. J. affirms of him) plain and evident, will be a formidable adverſary indeed, much better deſerving that title, than one whom he knows not, and therefore honours with it.

36. His third and laſt impreſſion now remains, wherein he undertakes to prove by three arguments that cuſtom is not the only rule of decency; and his firſt argument is, becauſe the light and law of nature is alſo a rule of decency. To this I anſwer, that in thoſe things, whereof alone he knows I there ſpeak, in the Section concerning Uniformity, i. e. in things indifferent, geſtures and other ceremonies in Gods ſervice, the Law of Nature is no rule at all, and, I ſuppoſe, he cannot think, I am ſure, he pretends not to prove, or ſo much as affirm, it is; and therefore though not ſimply in all ſorts of things, of which I ſpake not, nor can by any rules of diſcourſe be ſuppoſed to have ſpoken, yet as to the matters then before me, wherein Eccleſiaſtick Conformity conſiſted, cuſtom and only cuſtom was the rule of Decency.

37. His ſecond argument is wholly deceitful, and muſt be diſcovered to be ſo, by reducing it to rules of art. 'Tis by him variouſly formed into two ſeveral Syllogiſms. The firſt is this.

Nothing can be undecent, which is agreeable to the only rule of Decency.

But divers things are undecent, which yet can plead cuſtom. The concluſion now muſt be, Therefore cuſtom is not the only rule of decency.

38. But this is no regular Syllogiſm, 'tis in no mood or figure, nor readily reducible to any, and therefore 'twas his only way to preſume it evident, and never to endeavour any proof thereof.

39. But he hath thought fit to vary this ſyllogiſm, and give it in other terms, and then one might hope it would be exactly form'd. 'Tis thus,

It is impoſſible that the only rule of decency ſhould be undecent.

But yet it is very poſſible that many cuſtoms ſhould be indecent.

Therefore he ſhall conclude that cuſtom is not the only rule of decency.

40. But this is no ſyllogiſm neither, being far removed from the meaſures that Logicians exact, and ſuch as by which I will prove any thing true, that is the moſt diſtant from it. For example, it is a granted truth, that Law is the only rule of Juſtice, yet this I ſhall diſprove by a ſyllogiſm exactly formed by Mr. J. his model, Thus,

It is impoſſible that the only rule of juſtice ſhould be unjuſt.

But yet it is very poſſible that many Laws ſhould be unjuſt.

Therefore I ſhall conclude that Law is not the only rule of juſtice.

41. To diſcover this deceit then, the ſyllogiſm which is now no ſyllogiſm muſt be ſomewhat better form'd, according to the rules of Logick, and reduced, as near as it can, into a true ſyllogiſm. Thus,

Whatſoever is it ſelf undecent, cannot be the only rule of decency.

But cuſtom is it ſelf undecent.

Therefore cuſtom cannot be the only rule of decency.

Here before it can be defin'd whether this be a regular ſyllogiſm, or no, it muſt be demanded, quanta eſt minor, is the aſſumption Univerſal or particular? If it be particular, then either the concluſion muſt be particular alſo, or elſe 'tis a falſe ſyllogiſm. And if the concluſion be particular, then it infers no more than that ſome undecent cuſtom cannot be the only rule of decency, which is willingly granted by me, who do not at all affirm it of undecent cuſtoms; But if the minor be Univerſal, then 'tis a falſe propoſition, for certainly all cuſtoms are not indecent. The ſhort is, Nature may be the rule of one ſort of decency, and cuſtom the only rule of another; yet if the cuſtom be in it ſelf indecent, then of ſuch indecent cuſtom it is not pretended, that it is either only, or at all the rule of decency. And ſo ſtill my propoſition may ſtand good, which as it belonged not to natural decency, ſo much leſs to what is by Nature,

Nature, or in it ſelf undecent, never imagining it reaſonable, that what geſtures were againſt thoſe Laws of Nature, or Scripture, or any other Law of decency, or rather of natural comlineſs and honeſty, ſhould by pretence of any cuſtom whatever, be introduced into Gods worſhip; 'Tis ſufficient that ſome cuſtoms may be decent, or in themſelves not indecent, and that all decency in the ſervice of God, is to be regulated and judged of by conformity with them: For I ſaid not that all cuſtoms were the rule of decency, but that ſome were, and that there was no other rule, but cuſtom. This, I hope, hath diſcovered the invalidity of his ſecond argument.

His laſt argument [becauſe there is decency in the firſt uſage of ſome things] falls upon that miſtake of my words, which I diſcourſed of, and cleared at the beginning; for I never ſaid, that a thing muſt be cuſtomary, before it is decent in any kind, (knowing unqueſtionably that there is a natural decency) but that the decency of any ceremony in Gods ſervice, wherein God and Nature have preſcribed nothing particularly, muſt be regulated according to thoſe meaſures, which the cuſtoms of any place do allow to be reverential among them; Or, in yet plainer words, the civil cuſtoms of any Nation, by which this or that ſort of geſture is rendred a token of reverence, are the only rule, by which the decency of indifferent geſtures, &c. is to be judged of, in order to God's ſervice. And ſo much for the laſt argument alſo, and conſequently for the firſt part of his exception, that againſt my interpretation of εὐχημόνως decently. 42.

But there is yet a ſecond charge behind againſt my rendring of κατὰ τάξιν, according to appointment] which he hath managed in theſe words. 43.

As for the other part of the words, let all things be done in order, Ames in the place forementioned ſheweth that order requireth not ſuch ceremonies as ours, and he giveth this reaſon, becauſe order requireth not the inſtitution of any new thing but only the right placing and diſpoſing of things which are formerly inſtituted: and this he makes good from the notation of the word, from the definitions of order, which are given by Philoſophers and Divines, &c. from the context of the chapter, and from the uſage of the word elſewhere. But the Doctor, that the words may give ſome countenance unto our ceremonies, adventureth upon a new interpretation of them. 44.

The words κατὰ τάξιν (ſaith he) literally import according unto appointment, τάττειν ſometimes ſignifies to appoint, as Mat. 28. 16. Act. 22. 10. and 28. 23. And we may hereupon argue à conjugatis, that τάξις may be ſometimes rendred appointment. But becauſe it may ſometimes be rendred appointment, will it therefore follow that it muſt be ſo rendred in this place?

We may ſay as well as the Doctor, that the words κατὰ τάξιν literally import according unto order, as order is taken ſtrictly for the right placing or ranking of things one before, another after, and this we have confeſſed even by Dr John Burgeſſe in his rejoinder unto Ames, p. 78. a Book publiſhed by the ſpecial command of the late King. Moreover this ſenſe is favoured by the coherence, for v. 31. we have a particular inſtance of order in this acception of the word, ye may all propheſie one by one, &c. and not all or many ſpeak at once. Secondly, We have the oppoſite of order taken in this ſenſe, 1. v. 33. confuſion. Let all things be done in order, then, is as much as, let all things be done without confuſion. And I hope confuſion may be avoided in the worſhip of God without ſuch Ceremonies as ours.

But we will for once ſuppoſe, though not grant, that the clear importance of the words, is, that all be done in the Church according to cuſtom and appointment. Yet the Doctor hath a hard task to perform, before he can come nigh his concluſion, that the words of Paul are a proof of the more than lawfulneſs of preſcription of ſuch Ceremonies as ours in a Church: For he muſt prove that cuſtom and order here are taken in ſuch a latitude, as that they include not only the cuſtoms and appointments of the Apoſtolical Churches, but alſo of all the Churches of God in ſucceeding Ages: and the performance of this he will find not to be ſo eaſie, as he may imagine.

I am ſenſible that I have by this diſcourſe provoked a very learned and formidable adverſary, but it is only love of the truth hath ingaged me in ſo unequal an incounter, and therefore I hope the Doctor will pardon and excuſe my boldneſs. If he can by dint of argument prove the truth to be on his ſide, I ſhall not be ſorry or aſhamed to be overcome by him.

To this my anſwer will be very brief, Firſt, By giving the reaſon of my rendring, Secondly, By evidencing, that if the vulgar were acknowledged the righter rendring, yet my concluſion would very regularly follow thence, and that therefore I have no need to contend with any gainſayer, about my rendring. 45.

For the firſt, it is manifeſt to any that knows but the Elements of Greek, that κατὰ τάξιν literally and properly ſignifies [according to ordination or appointment] κατὰ ſignifies [according to] not [in] and τάξις or διάταξις [an ordinance or conſtitution] millions of times in authors, and εὐτάκτως orderly, or in order] lying more conſonant with εὐχημόνως, no reaſon can be rendred, why if that had been the deſigned meaning, that word ſhould not have been uſed there. 46.

That it may ſo ſignifie, Mr. J. acknowledges, and ſo I have obtained all I ſeek in my firſt propoſal, which was not, that it muſt neceſſarily thus ſignifie, but that this being the literal regular rendring of it, I had ſufficient reaſon to render it thus. 47.

I proceed then to the ſecond thing, that if what he pretends to be poſſible alſo, were indeed the only poſſible, or (by way of ſuppoſition, but not conceſſion) if κατὰ τάξιν] did really import no more than [in order] as that is oppoſed to diſorder or confuſion, yet I ſay, it will ſoon appear, that the Apoſtles commanding ſuch order or orderlineſs, and forbidding all confuſion in eccleſiaſtical affairs, muſt by conſequence be interpreted to command the inſtituting and obſerving uniformity of ceremonies in a Church. This I thus deduce. 48.

Firſt, There is no poſſibility of worſhipping God externally and publickly, without uſe of ſome Ceremonies or circumſtances of time, place, and geſture, &c. Secondly, There is no poſſibility of order in a multitude, without uniformity in the ſame circumſtances; Thirdly, There is as little poſſibility of Uniformity among many, without either agreement one with another, or direction of ſome ſuperiour to them all, what ſhall by all be uniformly performed. Fourthly, The agreement one with another, if it be only voluntary, and ſuch, as by which none are obliged, no way ſecures the end; but if it be ſuch an agreement, that every ſingle perſon is obliged to obſerve, then ſtill is that a law of that body, as 49.

of a Council, &c. and as truly ſo, as the conſtitution of a ſingle Prelate can be thought to be. And ſo the concluſion regularly follows, that to the preſerving but of order, or orderlineſs in a Church, it is neceſſary, there be appointment, what ſhall by all be uniformly performed; confuſion unavoidably coming in, where no certain rules are preſcribed for Uniformity.

50. What can be denied in this proceſs, I foreſee not; yet when 'tis granted, one reſerve Mr. J. hath ſtill left him. For, ſaith he, if it were granted that τάξις ſignifies appointment or ordination, yet ſtill it will be incumbent on the Doctor to prove, that this extends not only to the cuſtoms and appointments of the Apoſtolick Churches, but alſo to the Churches of ſucceeding Ages. And my anſwer to this, will conclude this whole debate.

51. Firſt then I acknowlege, that it is not here neceſſarily ordained by the Apoſtle, that all the Churches of God in ſucceeding Ages ſhould inſtitute ceremonies in worſhip; for, provided thoſe ceremonies were once inſtituted, all that this text inforces, is uniform obedience to them.

52. But then ſecondly, when for many circumſtances of Gods worſhip, there is no order particularly taken by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, as in what geſture publick ſupplication ſhall be addreſt, in what, lauds and hymns, and confeſſion of the faith, &c. and yet the rule is given by them, that all ſhall be done accaccording to appointment, and moreover in other places, that obedience be paid to thoſe ſuperiours which watch over our ſouls; and when thoſe rules are not given only to the perſons that then lived in the Church of Corinth, &c. but to all that ſhould ever live in that, and all other Churches, it cannot then be deemed, either that there were no ſuperiours deſigned to ſucceed Chriſt, and his Apoſtles in the ordering of his Church, or that they ſhould not ἐπιδιορθῶν τὰ λείποντα, ſet in order the things that were wanting, ſuch as the Apoſtles had left undiſpoſed of, or that inferiours ſhould not be bound to obey them uniformly when they thus gave orders to them.

53. When we are commanded to obey our Parents, civil as well as natural, by a law given by God to Moſes, or by Chriſt to his diſciples, can it be ſtrange, that we that lived not in either of thoſe Ages, ſhould thereby be obliged, when God in his providence hath given us fathers of both kinds (as well as them) regularly preſiding over us, and making uſe of that liberty that is preſumed in all Parents, viz. to give commands, and expect obedience from their children? Certainly it cannot; and as little can it be doubted, either whether our Eccleſiaſtical Parents have power to inſtitute in things omitted, and thereby remitted to their care by the Apoſtles, or whether we their obedient children, that are commanded to act κατὰ τάξιν according to appointment, ſhould from time to time be diſobliged, and free to diſobey them in whatſoever they appoint us.

54. 'Tis granted him, if he pleaſe, that what Chriſt, and his Apoſtles have already preſcribed, ſhould not be repealed by thoſe that thus ſucceed them; ſhould they raſhly aſſume that power, they would not in ſo doing act κατὰ τάξιν, whether regularly, or according to appointment; but for the τὰ λείποντα in which they have made no rules, but left order to Titus, &c. (i. e. by parity of reaſon, to the Biſhops in every Iſland) to make them; here, what power is left them, may certainly with perfect ſafety be exerciſed by them, and that neceſſarily infers our obligation to yield obedience to their exerciſes of them.

55. This is all the obſervance Mr. J. ſeems to expect of me at this time, unleſs his intimation to all admirers of Mr. Hooker, that they ſhould vindicate their great Patron of Ceremonies, may paſs for an admonition to me, who acknowledge my ſelf a thankful adorer of Gods graces in that Godly learned man, and ſo exact a few lines more above the regular account.

Pag. 144.

56. This will detain me no longer than whileſt I mind the Reader that in a diſcourſe of the benefits which we receive from Chriſt in the Sacrament, and otherwiſe, Mr. Hooker undertakes to ſet down how Chriſt in his human nature is communicated to to us, and ſo preſent with us; To this end three things he ſhews at large, firſt, that as nothing created can be unlimited, or receive any ſuch accident from any as may really make it infinite, ſo neither the ſoul nor body of Chriſt, nor Chriſt as man, nor according to his human nature, can poſſibly be every where preſent, no nor the ſubſtance of the body of Chriſt, which neither hath nor can have any preſence but only local. Secondly, That this cannot be rendred poſſible either by the grace of Union with Deity, nor by any other poſſible means, as he at large excellently deduceth it, pag. 300, 301, 302. Thirdly, That it may peradventure be well enough granted in ſome ſenſe, and after a ſort, that Chriſt is every where preſent, as man, viz. Firſt, in reſpect of the conjunction of the humane nature with the Deity, which conjunction is extended as far as the Deity, the actual poſition being reſtrain'd and tied to a certain place, and ſecondly by cooperation with Deity, and that in all things.

Eccl. Pol. l. 5. Sect. 55.

57. Now on this third head, (without reflecting on the two former, which aſſure us of the authors meaning in it) two paſſages Mr. J. takes hold of, which, if he know any thing in either philoſophy or ſcholaſtical divinity, are both guilty of a groſs miſtake, and cannot be ſufficiently wondred at by him, that they ſhould fall from ſo learned a pen.

Pag. 139. Pag. 140.

58. But I ſuppoſe there is no great skill in either of thoſe learned faculties, required, to diſtinguiſh betwixt that which truly and properly is, and that which may in ſome ſenſe, and after a ſort, and in two reſpects only (neither of which belong to the propriety of being) be well enough granted, and that with a [peradventure] alſo, to have influence on all theſe.

59. And what ſeverity is this, to require of every learned man, that hath moſt largely refuted an adverſary, to be ſo averſe from all thoughts of peace and reconciliation with him, that he may not allow him to ſpeak truth, or but perhaps to ſpeak truth in a ſort, and in ſome ſenſe, and in two only reſpects? all which are ſtill more than intimations, that he thinks him to be abſolutely (and in ſimplicity and propriety of ſpeaking) in a groſs errour, impoſſible even to the power of God to have truth in it.

60. If any ſhould chance to ſay of an eloquent man, that you might hear an Angel ſpeak in him, and I ſhould reply, that it might peradventure be well enough granted in a ſort, or in ſome ſenſe, that when he ſpake you might hear an Angel, aſſuring you at large of my opinion, that no bare man can truly be an Angel, nay that it was impoſſible for God himſelf to bring to paſs, that at the ſame time he ſhould be an Angel, and not an Angel, a man, and not a man, or which is all one, a bare man, and yet an Angel; or (in fewer words) when Chriſt ſaith he is a door, and a vine, if I ſhould ſay, that in a ſort and in ſome ſenſe, and that in two reſpects, each of theſe had truth in them, would Mr. J. think think fit to leave his ſubject, and let looſe for three leaves together, and pawn all his Philoſophy and Scholaſtical (not conſidering what the conſequence alſo may be to his practical) divinity, to accuſe and wonder at, and never to give over wondering, and withal ſolemnly to refute this or that improper figurative ſpeech, ſo perfectly acknowledged by the ſpeakers to be ſuch?

If he have that great leiſure, and any prevalent temptation thus to lay it out, I ſhall only aſſure him that I have not ſo much of either, as to attend theſe his motions, nor any other lover or admirer of Mr Hooker, that I know of, and therefore beſeech him contentedly to reſt in this general return to his charge of that learned man, without expecting any more explicite or particular ſurvey of it. And ſo much for Mr. H. alſo. 61.

I have thus without any other obligation, than what my deſire to undeceive the Author and his Readers, laid upon me, paid him now this my ſecond obſervance; And may be allowed to think it time, that he who hath been ſo liberal of his uſes of publick refutation of others words, ſhould find ſome vacancy for one uſe of more private (if not reprehenſion, yet) examination of his own actions; And then I ſhall offer to his conſideration, how much more agreeable to the laws of brotherly kindneſs or candor it had been, to have propoſed his exceptions in ſuch a manner of friendly addreſs, as might have brought him home the ſame ſatisfaction, and ſaved others the importunity of theſe uſeleſs, becauſe perſonal debates. When he hath ſincerely obſerved in himſelf the motive of his other diſtant choice, I have obtained the end of my charity in mentioning it to him, and have no more to return to him at this time. 62.

THE END.
